Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Foundation Chennai

INDIA TODAY

VOL. 11
1986
No. 1 — 12
Pt. 1

G. K. V.
Haridwar

078 630

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

078 630

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AT-0193

CONGRESS CENTENARY CELEBRA

INDIA TODAY

JANUARY 15, 1986 Rs 6.00

THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

6L

P & I

ASSAM

COMING OF AGE

Home Minister Brighu Phukan and Chief Minister Prafulla Mahanta

ALSO

SPECIAL REPORT: ARMIES OF THE NIGHT

INVESTIGATION: THE RAIDERS AND THE RAIDED

THE ARTS: THE LEGEND OF [illegible]

पुस्तकालय
कांगड़ी विश्वविद्
हरिद्वार

RC
3

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THERE IS ONLY ONE ORIGINAL

India's best...the world's finest from ITC

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Coming of Age

The victory of the Asom Gana Parishad, formed a mere 67 days before the elections, has ushered in a new era of hope and change in Assam, but with the polarisation of vote along communal lines the future of the Assam accord is uncertain.

COVER STORY.....22

Congress(I) Woes

Last fortnight's by-elections to seven Lok Sabha and nine assembly seats left the Congress(I) badly bruised. With its margins being slashed in all but two contests, the party's humiliation has raised the Opposition's hopes.

CURRENT EVENTS.....36

Raiders of the Lost Tax

The spate of income tax raids across the country has angered the business community as some of the biggest industrialists have found themselves in the net. A report on the raids, the mechanics of a raid and the rights of the raided.

INVESTIGATION.....72

Centenary Celebrations

The Congress' centenary celebrations in Bombay were a curious mixture of glitter, sycophancy and confusion with over one lakh delegates attending. But behind the facade, the party was confronting disturbing questions about its future.

SPECIAL FEATURE.....80

Surprise Ruling

In a dramatic reversal of a Bombay High Court verdict, the Supreme Court cleared the Government, the LIC and the Reserve Bank of wrongdoing in the Escorts case. But the case is still open and corporate raider Swraj Paul has a long way to go.

BUSINESS.....100

Legend of Bharata Natyam

Celebrating its golden jubilee, the Kalakshetra Academy established by Rukmini Devi Arundale has been largely responsible for giving Bharata Natyam its status as a leading dance form. A report and an interview with Arundale.

ARTS.....154

CONTENTS

COMMENT.....11
VOICES.....14
INDIANOTES.....19
COVER STORY
Assam: Coming of Age.....22
CURRENT EVENTS
By-elections: Congress(I) Woes.....36
Punjab & Haryana:
Discord over the Accord.....39
Madhya Pradesh: Ending an Inquiry.....44
Andhra Pradesh: Strained Relations.....49
Karnataka: Politics of Language.....55
Tamil Nadu: An Elusive Catch.....61
Chandigarh:
Fears and Uncertainties.....64
Kerala: Truce Time.....71
INVESTIGATION
Raiders of the Lost Tax.....72
SPECIAL FEATURE
Congress Centenary Celebrations.....80
GUEST COLUMN
Congress Centenary:
Missing an Opportunity.....89
STATENOTES.....93
CRIME
Orissa: Temple Loot.....94
TRADE WINDS.....99
BUSINESS
Escorts: Surprise Ruling.....100
Fiscal Policy: Easing the Burden.....102
Tourism: Bracing for a Boost.....106
Banking: Wheeling and Dealing.....108
Shriram Foods & Fertilisers:
On the Firing Line.....115
Blade Industry: Sharp Conflict.....121
The Economy Monitor.....122
The Markets: Spirits Soar.....125
GLOBE-TROTTING
London School of Economics:
Low Key Leadership.....126
SPECIAL REPORT
Bihar: Armies of the Night.....130
NEIGHBOURS
Indo-Pak Relations: Getting into Gear.....137
MEDIA
Hum Log: The Final Flourish.....142
LAW
Supreme Court: Tug of War.....144
CINEMA
Malayalam Films: New Heroes.....146
BOOKS
Howzzatt!.....151
THE ARTS
Kalakshetra:
Legend of Bharata Natyam.....154
Mysore Antiques: Rich Haul.....160
EYE CATCHERS.....164

078630

Cover photograph by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Mudra/A/RTI/2927

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In all the colours of a woman's world...

Sweet Memories

VIMAL®
A RELIANCE PRODUCT
Sarees
Dress Material

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cappuccino ...
a creation from Transasia—
the fashion house of carpets

Woolmark
(वूलमार्क)

PURE NEW WOOL PILE

Woolmark. The internationally recognised symbol guaranteeing the matchless qualities of pure new wool—exceptional durability and easy maintenance, looks that last for years and rich colours that never fade.

TRANSASIA

TransAsia Carpets

in collaboration with Besmer of West Germany.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XI NUMBER 1
FOR THE FORTNIGHT JANUARY 1-15, 1986

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

MANAGING EDITOR — SUMAN DUBEY
SENIOR EDITOR — T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR — RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR — INDERJIT BADHWAR
ASSOCIATE EDITOR — DILIP BOBB
ASSISTANT EDITORS — PRABHU CHAWLA, AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT — RAMINDAR SINGH, SUMIT MITRA
NEW DELHI — SHEKHAR GUPTA, PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
AHMEDABAD — RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE — RAJ CHENGAPPA
BOMBAY — JAGANNATH DUBASHI
CALCUTTA — INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH — GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD — AMARNATH K. MENON
JAIPUR — SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
MADRAS — S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA — FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM — SREEDHAR PILLAI

NEW YORK — MADHU TREHAN
LONDON — RAMESH CHANDRAN

NEWS COORDINATOR — RADHIKA ROY

DESIGN CONSULTANT — AUROBIND PATEL

CHIEF OF PRODUCTION — SHIRLEY JOSHUA, ANURADHA KAPOOR

COPY DESK — ANUPAMA GOPAL, SIMRAN BHARGAVA, ANN NINAN

CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER — BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHER — PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CARTOONIST — AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER — B.K. SHARMA
LAYOUT ARTISTS — LOKESH BHARGAVA, ANUP GUPTA, PEALI DUTTA GUPTA

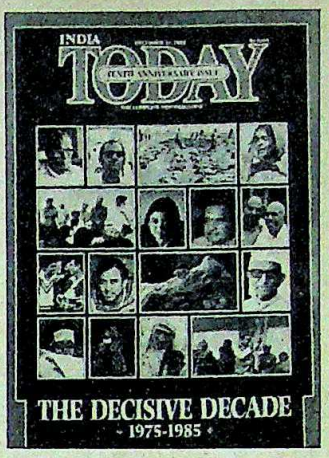
MARKETING DIRECTOR — MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY — NEENA MONGIA
DELHI — NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA — MEERA PAUL
MADRAS — R. ANAND
BANGALORE — ANITA BAVEJA

GENERAL MANAGER — CHANDER RAI

● EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-40 CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI ● SUBSCRIPTIONS:INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT, POST BOX 69, FARIDABAD HARYANA ● TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER, F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIRCLE, NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-62614 INTOIN ● ADVERTISING OFFICE: 28 A & B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE:2026152, 2029326, 2029435. TELEX 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BOMBAY ● 13-K CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 312841, 312070, 321776. TELEX: 31-5308 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI ● PAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477 188 477 770 CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS ● 74/1ST. MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 568448, 579037, 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BANGALORE ● 12C EVEREST 46 C CHOWRINGEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398, 447726. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, CALCUTTA ● COPYRIGHT 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD, FARIDABAD HARYANA ● INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL ●



DECISIVE ISSUE

Simply a superb issue (December 31). No words can express how good it was. Will look forward to more such good issues in the years to come.

Secunderabad — E.S. BADRINARAYAN

■ It was fun going through your tenth anniversary issue on sale as the "The Decisive Decade, 1975-85". But decisive for whom—yourself? To those who have a sense of history, all years, decades and centuries of recorded history have somehow been decisive if not lack-lustre. INDIA TODAY is certainly the best magazine on the stands today, but for you to say so for yourself, reminds me of France's Louis XIV, the Sun King, who is supposed to have said, "The state? Well, I am the state." No autocracy please, we are democratic.

Bombay — K.N. NINAN

OVERBLOWN ANALYSIS

Your analysis of the trend of films ("The Fading Glitter", December 31) and the response of viewers to them seems to have over-emphasised the Amitabh and other contemporary doyen phenomenon, discarding the impact of the 'art movies' following the sensational release of Ardh Satya, a landmark in the history of art movies. This film not only gave a new dimension, it evoked much needed interest in the public towards art movies by registering an unprecedented success for an art movie to do so at the box-office.

Satna — JAIDEEP MITTRA

MISSED OUT

Though the article "Where are they now?"(December 31) featuring prominent men and women was very interesting and well-written, it had people like Mansur Ali Khan Pataudi, Siddhartha Shankar Ray and Milkha Singh missing. One looks forward to reading about these people who were at the peak at one time or another.

Jamshedpur — BHUPEN BOSE

DOUBLE STANDARDS

It is very obturating to learn that the Bhagwan still condemns and gibes at Mahatma Gandhi and Mother Teresa, not to mention Jesus Christ and Gautam Buddha ("Paradise Lost", December 15). Has anyone reverberated his own qualities to Rajneesh? He is a deceiving sex maniac and a man having double standards. He used to extol America when he was sheltered there and now he eulogises India which he used to mock when everything was well in America. The Indian Government should not allow him to start a commune here.

Bangalore — K. CHIDANAND KUMAR

■ Rajneesh ridiculed all religions and called all those who believed in God congenital idiots and imbeciles, but declared himself as "Bhagwan" who lived the most luxurious life in the world and made no sacrifice for any cause. For all his incredible crimes, he spent only a few days in the US jail. He ridiculed the institution of marriage and pleaded for free sex life.

Now who are the congenital idiots and imbeciles? Those who believe in God and in religion — Hinduism, Islam, Christianity or Buddhism, or the one million followers of Rajneesh, the fraud, the criminal and the debauchee who has now pleaded guilty to all the charges levelled against him and withdrawn all his civil suits against the US Government to secure leniency in punishment. Has history produced a greater coward than this Rajneesh over which the world press wasted tons of precious newsprint?

Ahmedabad — SMITA BANKESHWAR

■ Your cover story vividly describes the history of the Rajneesh commune and their return to India. But the media does not reveal anything about the customs clearance at the Palam airport. It is unbelievable that he and his crew carried no dutiable items. Did the customs people give special concessions to Rajneesh being a "Bhagwan"?

Baghdad — JAMES MATHEW

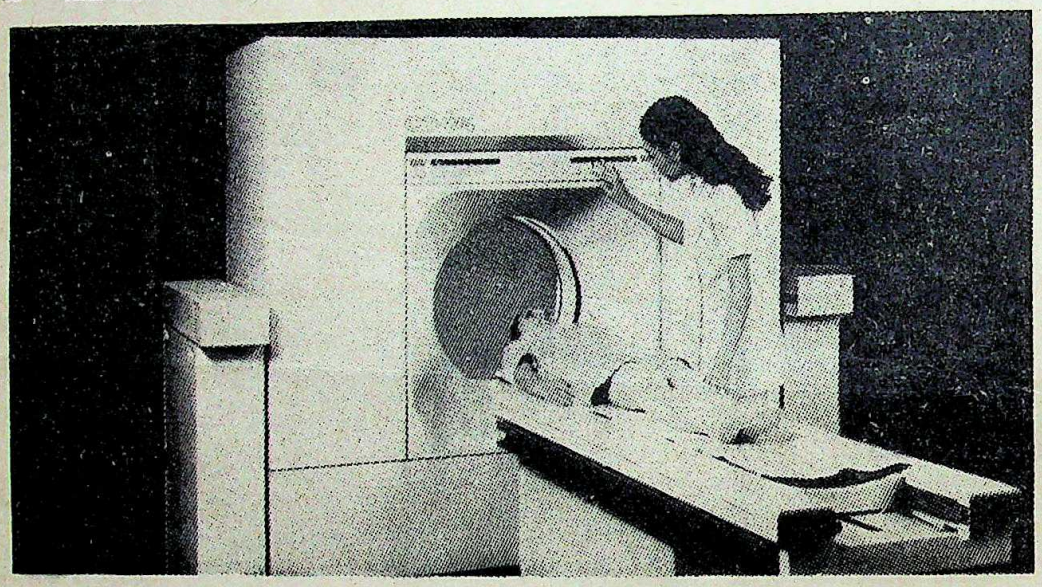
■ Your title of the cover story was very appropriate. It is true that Rajneesh has lost his paradise, but not on his return

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

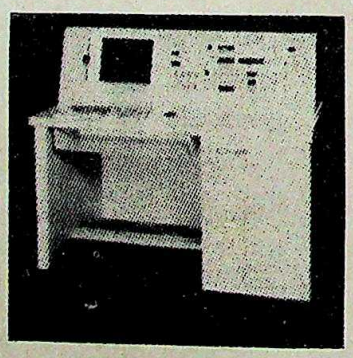
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A determined step forward in the fight against Cancer...

A.D.S.DIAGNOSTIC



Sets up modern Diagnostic Centres equipped with the most sophisticated medical facilities with advanced technology



Such integrated equipment under one roof for the FIRST TIME IN INDIA A cherished dream comes true!

A.D.S DIAGNOSTIC LIMITED

B-22, Kailash Colony,
New Delhi 110 048.

Cancer – it is a deadly scourge that threatens the happiness of our people, and A.D.S DIAGNOSTIC is devoted to the task of controlling it.

A.D.S. DIAGNOSTIC is now establishing a network of Diagnostic Centres with the most advanced facilities –  Cancer Detection by Whole Body C.T. Scanner * Cancer Radiotherapy Planning System * Cancer Treatment by Linear Accelerator * Cobalt Therapy * Complete Physics & Dosimetery * Ultrasound. They will inaugurate a new era of therapy in this country by providing services for cancer cure through Radiotherapy Planning System wedded to Body Scan and therefore based on C.T. images. The equipment is being supplied by the world leaders in the field – Hitachi Medical Corporation, Japan and Mitsubishi Electric Company, Japan.

The Centres will be among the most sophisticated in the continent and will cater not only to Indians but also to patients from other countries in West and East Asia. Free treatment will be given to economically backward persons, to the extent of 25% of the total number of patients.

Initially, three fully equipped Diagnostic & Treatment Centres are being opened in Northern India. Other such Centres will be eventually set up in major cities nationwide.

We'll soon bring more good tidings and a fabulous investment opportunity!

Committed to the conquest of Cancer.

Mercantile-ADS-1-85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

from the US, he lost it on the day he started the cult—Rajneeshism, an open invitation to prostitution. The Indian Government should make every effort to stop the spreading of the so-called religion lest India loses its ideals represented by our great ancestors.

Ladnun, Rajasthan — S.R. KAZMI

■ Your cover story contains many interesting facts about Rajneesh and his ashram. However, India has gained a paradise by Rajneesh's home-coming. His decision to stay in India for the rest of his life is a boon to his admirers who have longed to see such a day.

Bhubaneswar — DHANANJAY PATRO

■ I fail to understand how the US Administration could treat the Bhagwan at par with the ordinary criminal? The Americans do not know what they have done, they have committed a mistake that they will regret when they miss the opportunity to go to 'paradise'.

Bombay — AMAL BASU

■ It is surprising how Rajneesh should feel allergic to dust and temperature above 17 degrees C. Any real 'sanyasi' and that too a self-styled 'Bhagwan' according to the shastras, should be above joy and sorrow, pain and desire, likes and dislikes and particularly heat and cold. But anyone who teaches the know-how of Adam-and-Eve technique in the name of "dynamic meditation", where a man and woman are called to copulate, while others are watching can neither be a sanyasi nor a bhagwan.

Instead of renouncing mundane pleasures, such as money-spinning, these synthetic saints with five-star culture, have indeed brought disrepute and disgrace to our ancient religion and Hindu philosophy.

Madras — A. SESHAGIRI RAO

■ In the interview Rajneesh says: "It is good to see a man like Rajiv in power... He has no political background. One can hope that something good may come out of him." Barely four months ago, the very same man had said: "If you see Rajiv Gandhi, tell him that he will be responsible for India's poverty. Half the country is starving—but he wants a nuclear plant. Tell him that this is not a child's game. Tell him: you better go and become a pilot again, that is your place." Juxtaposed, these two contrary statements make only one thing— waste of precious newsprint.

Muzaffarpur — KUMAR VIVEK

PRIME TIME IMAGE

Your Comment ("Overblown Images", December 15) truthfully mirrored the prevalent practice of idolatry through which we presume that we are paying the highest in the way of homage to someone. You have echoed the voice of the general public by saying that "an excessive dose" of the prime minister will prove counterproductive. All India Radio and Doordarshan are competing with each other and the press also seems to be awestruck by him.

Amravati — VASANT HEBBAR

■ The cartoon accompanying the editorial most appropriately depicts the public reaction to the recent programmes and other information now being telecast on the Doordarshan.

Moradabad — V.S. GARG

■ It must be admitted that it is not the prime minister who has created this position for himself. In fact, quite often, he has stated that projection of his image over Doordarshan should be curtailed. It may be that these agencies have to give prominence to important national events and in the process, events connected with the prime minister get priority. Nonetheless, it is true that a certain amount of restraint has to be affected.

Bangalore — T.S. SHANKARAN

SEXUAL IGNORANCE

The erudite assembly at the World Congress on Sexology observed that there has been a cognisable liberation of attitudes in India, on matters of sex and morality ("The Changing Scene", December 15). Victorian prudism has given way to a modern and rationalistic outlook towards the biological and psychological indispensability of sex. It is being widely felt that sex is fundamentally beautiful, made ugly by ignorance.

But tragic is the fact that such realisation is restricted to only a section of so-called educated people. Even the pace of reform is sluggish. As it stands today, the topic of sex abounds with contorted percepts. It brings with it concepts of perversion and obscenity. But what is actually obscene is corruption, hypocrisy, pseudo-culture, war, violence and a repressive society. More than anything else, India needs to smash its taboos on sex, so that a generation of emotionally and ideologically balanced citizens evolves.

Delhi — PRASHANT K. THAKUR

■ Your article quoted a learned American professor as saying that India is only 10 years behind the United States (in sexual liberation). The current sexological scene in that country is one of growing casualness towards sex and almost complete acceptability of unwed teenage motherhood, or 'children's children'. Do we then expect that in 10 years time, we in India shall accept our own daughters and nieces carrying illegitimate babies? Maybe, by then, we won't be able to even call them illegitimate! And with leading luminaries like Sarika and Zeenat Aman around, this movement will not be short of capable leadership at least!

Delhi — ANIL K. MAHESHWARI

■ Your article hardly stresses the fact that the real sexual revolution concerns both sexes—women and men. If sexual attitudes are to be changed, old values—especially those regarding women's submissive and passive role—have to be eroded. The sexual revolution is not so much concerned with kissing, petting and making love, but and most important, with the mutual understanding men and women have for each other, that men and women are equal and women are able to lead a life of their own. Sexual permissiveness causes a lot of problems. The Americans and the Europeans are desperately trying to compensate for the consequences of a sexual permissiveness that is based on an assumption of women's subordination.

Essex, England — CHRISTINE KHAKHAR

■ Your special feature on the sexual revolution in India uses just two lines from an hour-long conversation your correspondent had with me. The quote certainly doesn't convey the gist of what I said. I didn't say that the circulation of Debonair has increased from 40,000 to 1,02,000 just because of better pictures (I wish it were so easy!). I speculated about several other possibilities: reading material of a kind which differs from other magazines, better lay-outs and printing, certainly a more efficient distribution system. Plus of course the national tendency to buy more magazines, including yours, to push up sales.

Bombay — ANIL DHARKER

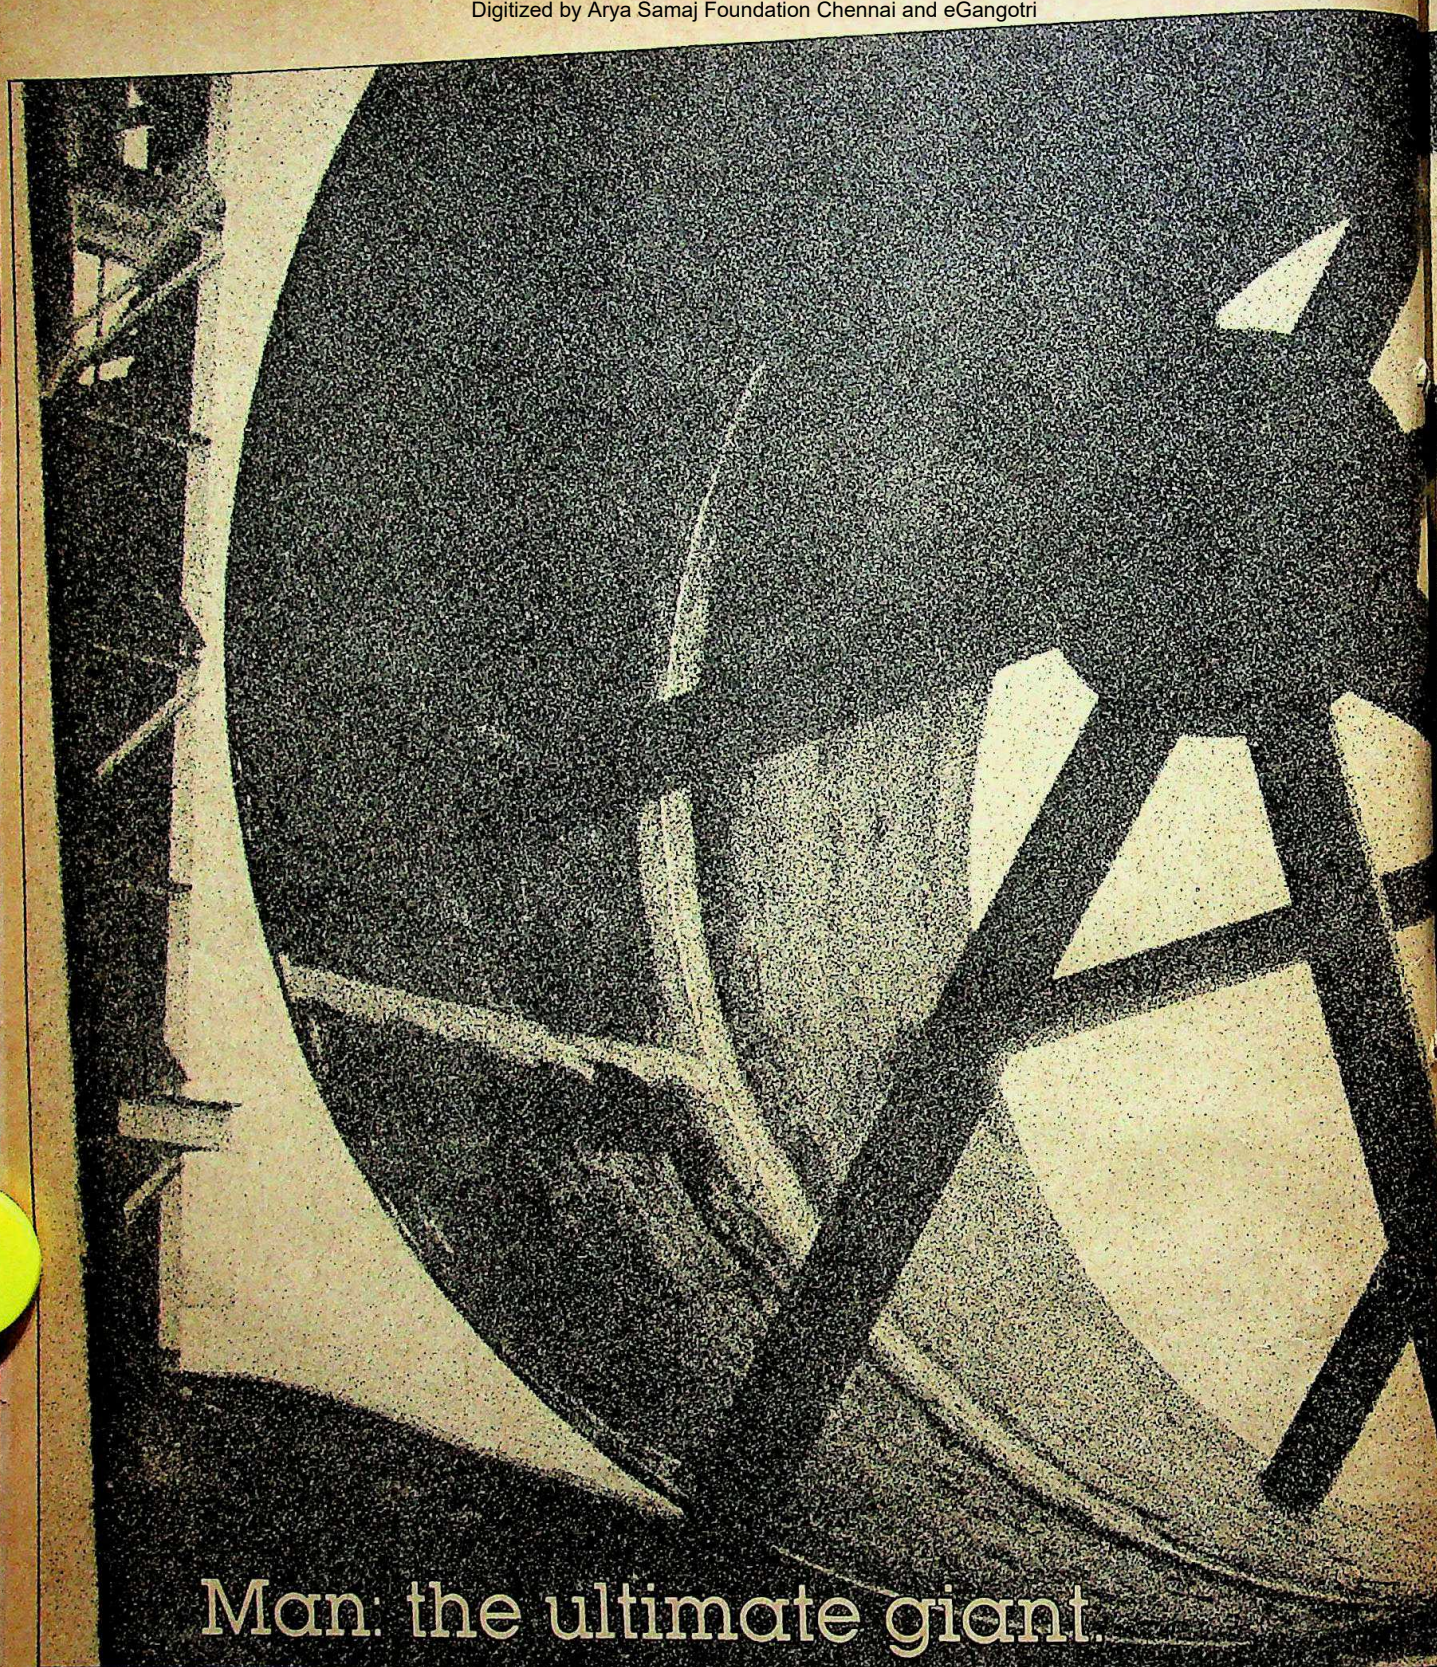
USHA'S MEASURE

Apropos "P.T.Usha: My Fair Lady" (December 15), gold purity should now be measured in Ushas instead of carats.

Pune — SHANMUGAM MUDALIAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Man: the ultimate giant.

Towering steel structures thrusting into the sky...thermal power stations turning night into day...giant cement plants helping build entire cities...mammoth bulk material handling systems doing the work of a hundred men in a fraction of the time...

The world is full of the marvels of heavy engineering.

But the greatest engineering miracle of all is man himself.

For his is the intellect that created the vast tracery of steel that girdles the earth.

One company stands eloquent testimony to the giant that is man.

Buckau Wolf—a Krupp collaboration.

A company with over 28 years of heavy engineering experience.

Krupp—world pioneers in open cast mining and bulk material handling, as well as world leaders in the manufacture of cement and sugar machinery.

A fusion of technologies that has made Buckau Wolf a giant in heavy engineering.

Specially in India's core sectors.

It is here that Buckau Wolf has take lead. In three vital and demanding fi

Sugar. Cement. Bulk Material Hand

On turnkey basis.

From design, through to fabrication erection and commissioning.

By a highly skilled work force of ov 1200—each an end unto himself.

Ably complemented by a wide ra modern and sophisticated machines

Buckau Wolf has commissioned 35 plants throughout India—with more

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri cution.

assive fully-automated bulk material dling equipment for open cut mines thermal power stations.
ergy-efficient cement plants with acities upto 1 million tonnes per annum.
nd that's not all.
ckau Wolf expertise is quite at home oad too.
omplete sugar plants and vital chinery to Bangladesh, El Salvador, egal, Thailand, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya,
Malaysia, Uganda.

Earning valuable foreign exchange for India

Buckau Wolf indeed has come a long way in the last 28 years.

So has India's core sector.

When it comes to heavy engineering, there are no guarantees that cover quality, reliability and timely delivery schedules.

Except the name Buckau Wolf.

KRUPP BUCKAU WOLF

PIMPRI, PUNE 411 018

Engineering projects to engineer the future

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Dazzal/BW/E-03

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA FOILS LIMITED

NEEDS

25 Nos. MANAGEMENT TRAINEES

We are a professionally managed multi-national company and the largest manufacturer of aluminium foils in India. We are at present in the process of modernising, expanding, diversifying our production facilities and require a number of technical personnel/engineers. Applications are invited from fresh engineers/technical persons/final year Engineering or Applied Science students for the position of Management Trainees.

QUALIFICATIONS

Graduate in Mechanical, Electrical or Electronic Engineering or B.Tech/ M.Tech in Applied Physics/Applied Chemistry.

AGE

Below 25 years

PERSONAL QUALITIES

Strong personality and leadership quality, high IQ, clarity of thought and expression, preparedness to work hard, ability to learn fast and ability to set his own goals and achieve them.

TRAINING PERIOD

The training will be comprehensive in various aspects of Works Management including exposure to accounting system, EDP, Personnel Management, Production Planning & Control, Project Management, Maintenance Management and Production Management. The duration of the training period will be 2 years. During the training period the incumbents will be required to work in shifts (including night shifts) and to take specific responsibilities of sections/activities and should be able to demonstrate their abilities.

STIPEND & ALLOWANCES

First year Rs.1900 (including allowance)
Second year Rs.2100 (including allowance)

The trainee will be entitled to leave and leave travel assistance during the second year.

Medical expenses for self and transportation from the city to the factory and back will be provided.

OPPORTUNITY OF CAREER PROGRESS

The Management Trainees after successful completion of the training period will be absorbed in the Management cadre of the company in different functional areas. At present there exists a substantial age gap between Senior Managers and Management Trainees and many of Senior Managers will retire within the next few years. Besides the Company is going for substantial expansion and diversification of its activities. A number of vacancies will be created at Senior Manager levels. The Management Trainees therefore have excellent opportunity of self development and career progress within a short period.

Interested candidates are requested to send their applications within ten days to publication of this advertisement to the following address :

General Manager (Administration)
INDIA FOILS LTD.
4 Mangoe Lane
Calcutta 700 001

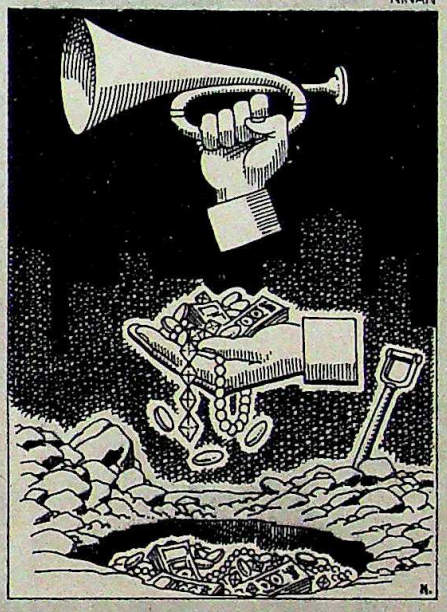
PRESSMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Trial by Publicity

ONE OF the basic tenets of civilised law is that an individual is presumed innocent until he is proved guilty. This principle seems to have been shelved in the explosion of publicity surrounding the wave of income tax raids that have been unleashed by Finance Minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh in his quest for a cleaner, above-board business and fiscal environment. Reports of raids on this prominent businessman or that glamorous film star are being beamed at high pitch to a public gleefully lapping up all the sordid details of how much liquor, gold and what not has been recovered from which raid.



Let's make no mistake about it. The Government is duty-bound to unearth illicit wealth. It would be failing in one of its fundamental tasks if it did not vigorously go after tax evasion and didn't come down hard on those who practise it. But it must pursue these goals, as governments must do in all their dealings with the public, with a sense of justice and fair play. What is happening to businessmen is not unlike what over-enthusiastic policemen have for decades been doing to petty criminals: holding them in their thousands as undertrials. Businessmen and others who are the target of raids are being presumed guilty long, long before they have had a fair trial.

One can sympathise with the Government's dilemma. It needs to demonstrate that it means business. It has provided a whole host of much needed incentives to get the economy moving. At the same time, it cannot risk letting its revenues drop. So, it is necessary to wield the stick even as it holds out the carrot, and whether or not the finance minister admits it, the high publicity given to the ongoing raids cannot but be a warning: pay your taxes or suffer the indignity of public humiliation.

There are other compulsions at work. By its pragmatic, liberal, growth-oriented policies, because of the lack of resources with which to launch programmes that would make a direct assault on poverty, the Rajiv Gandhi Government has acquired an unwelcome pro-rich, anti-poor image. And what better way of disproving this than going for the bad boys of big business?

But images don't metamorphose with this kind of tinkering. Just as Garibi Hatao boomeranged because poverty couldn't simply be made to vanish, putting a few people in jail is hardly likely to unearth black money in large quantities or prove that the Government is not showing undue consideration to the wealthy. Moreover, it could prove to be counter-productive. When public expectations get aroused, it is necessary to somehow meet them. And if the raids do not lead to swift convictions, their purpose will have been defeated.

If the past is anything to go by, few of the guilty are likely to be brought to book. Petty businessmen apart, there aren't too many instances of the really big fish being netted for tax evasion and business malpractice of the kind the raids are setting out to unearth. Often, it has taken commissions of inquiry—not ordinary courts—to see that justice was done. And, in comparison with the growing list of prominent persons whose offices and homes have been the subject of these searching investigations, the names of those who actually went to jail can be counted on the fingers of one hand.

So if the means are not to become an end in themselves, the Government should think again about the way it is going about doing things. Its cloak-and-dagger agencies need to work away from the glare of publicity. Instead of tossing names about at the time of a raid, which is after all basically a weapon to collect evidence, they would be better served filing cases and earning public acclaim by bringing the guilty to book. Discretion is sometimes the better part of valour: the Government knows it is dealing with people with resources at their disposal, who can bring the best legal brains to side with them. The Government's credibility will take a knock with each businessman, branded a tax evader in the public eye, who gets away in a court of law.

The problem of unaccounted incomes and wealth doesn't end with these tax raids, of course. The Government has taken steps to stem the creation of black money with an impressive range of steps from legalising donations to political parties to arming itself with the right to acquire property and more reasonable tax rates to not penalising individuals who come clean within a specified time. All these are sensible and welcome. But black money is generated not only through property transactions and unconcealed incomes, it emerges from commodity transactions, from commissions and cuts on contracts, from unregistered income-generating units, and most of all when corrupt officials are willing to turn a blind eye to some obvious wrongdoing—for a price.

The unaccounted economy thrives in countries as diverse as the United States and Italy on one side and China and the Soviet Union on the other, so it isn't a problem that will be easily solved. But it is one that will respond to painstaking, thorough and unrelenting effort. If the finance minister changes his emphasis from well-publicised raids to getting and publicising convictions, he will serve the community better. It is when individuals and businessmen know that tax evasion isn't just a matter of public indignity but of the guilty being punished, when they realise that the Government is setting its own house in order, and that the risks associated with wholesale tax evasion are no longer worth the candle, that the black economy will begin to come under control.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tamil Nadu Government and LIC jointly introduce a unique Social Security Scheme for the weaker sections of society.

For just Rs. 10 a month

Beneficiaries:

Workers in the unorganised sector such as farm labour, small and marginal farmers, building workers, loading and unloading workmen, hand cart pullers, washermen, barbers, carpenters, masons, tailors and others.

The Tamil Nadu Government and LIC join hands in providing savings and security through 'Insurance-cum-Retirement Benefit Scheme.'

All that a person has to do is to pay Rs. 10/- as his monthly contribution to the plan. From the amount thus collected by the Government, LIC will provide a life cover of Rs. 5000/- against a nominal premium of Rs. 3.75. The balance amount will be kept as a deposit by the Government.

If the member dies before the age of 58, his nominee will receive the insurance amount of Rs. 5000/- along with the accumulated savings amount in the member's account with interest.

If the member survives up to age 58, he will receive the entire sum standing to his credit in his savings account with interest. The insurance cover will cease to operate from this date.

Nearly 4,00,000 persons have ennrolled themselves so far in this scheme. Many more will join the scheme in the days to come.

Tamil Nadu Government and LIC have set the pace.

योगक्षेमं वहाम्यहम्

Life Insurance Corporation of India

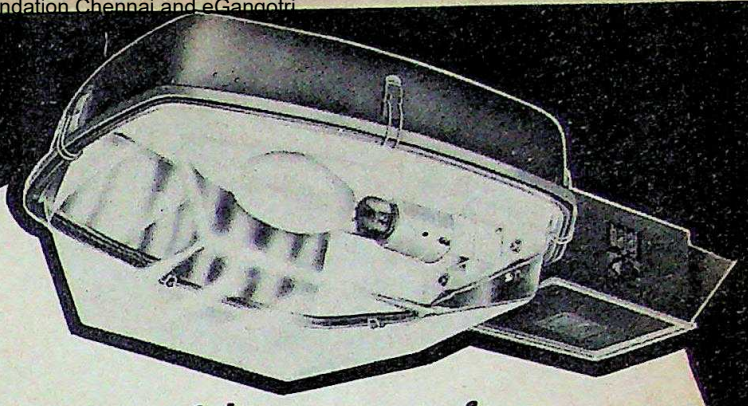
a commitment to the growth of security.

RADEUS/LIC/8/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

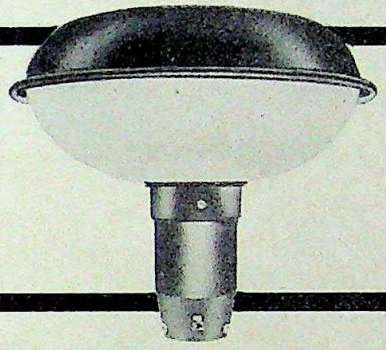
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

bajaj

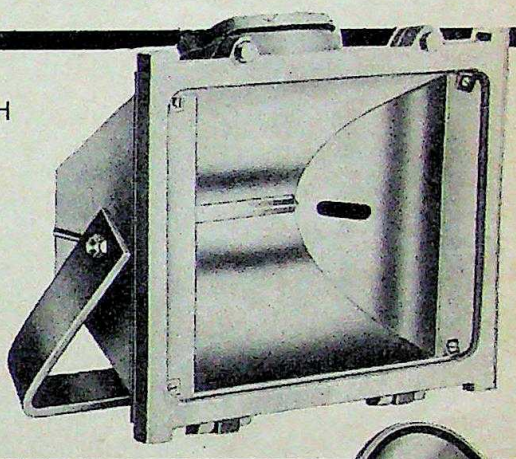


brings you a wide range of energy-saving Outdoor Luminaires.

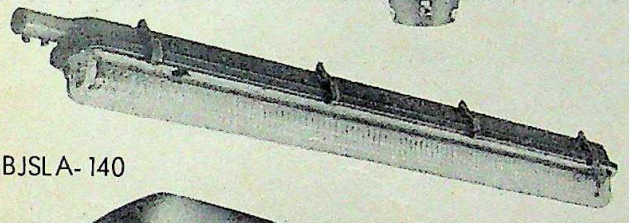
BJPTI-80-125



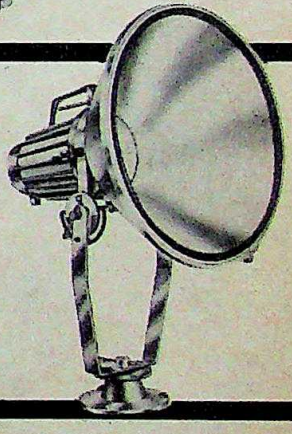
BJEF-1000 H



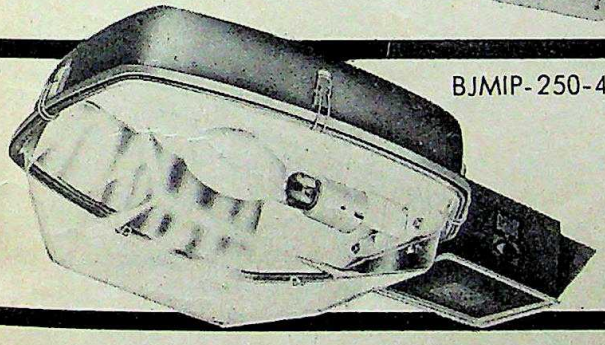
BJSLA-140



BJEF-21 (S)



BJMIP-250-400



Suitable for Fluorescent, HPMV, HPSV Lamps, Bajaj Streetlighting Luminaires are designed for the wide and uniform illuminance of roads and traffic junctions — and to withstand all extreme weather conditions.

The other outdoor luminaires include Post Top Lanterns for entrances, parks, campus lighting, HPMV/HPSV/Halogen Floodlights for general area lighting, marshalling yards, airport apron lighting, sports, monument landscaping, etc.

Bajaj offers a total integrated lighting service from the designing to the electrification and installation of lighting fittings on a turnkey basis for any indoor/outdoor location.

For details write to:

Lighting Project Services
Bajaj Electricals Limited
45-47 Veer Nariman Road, Bombay 400 023.

Heros' BE-779 B

bajaj

The lighting people since 1938.

RADEUS/LIC/8/85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ CODE _____

COUNTRY _____

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs_____ payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ CODE _____

COUNTRY _____

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 185
BANGLADESH
BHUTAN
NEPAL

Rs 345
AFGHANISTAN
BURMA
MALDIVES
PAKISTAN
SRI LANKA

Rs 385
BAHRAIN
CHINA
HONG KONG
INDONESIA
IRAN
IRAQ
KUWAIT
MALAYSIA
OMAN
PHILIPPINES
QATAR
SAUDI ARABIA
SINGAPORE
TAIWAN
THAILAND
U.A.E.
YEMEN

Rs 485
AUSTRALIA
EGYPT
ETHIOPIA
FRANCE
W. GERMANY
GHANA
GIBRALTAR
IRELAND
JAPAN
KENYA
SOUTH KOREA
LEBANON
LIBYA
MALAWI
MALTA
MAURITIUS
SEYCHELLES
SIERRA LEONE
SOUTH AFRICA
SUDAN
SWITZERLAND
SYRIA
TANZANIA
U.K.
ZAMBIA
ZIMBABWE

Rs 585
BAHAMAS
BARBADOS
BRAZIL
CANADA
FIJI
GUYANA
HAWAII
JAMAICA
NEW ZEALAND
PANAMA
U.S.A.

NH 943

The Times of India

● The law of the land must be over everything else, everyone else—no more, no less. Do you think the law should change according to what your residential address is?

■ V.P. SINGH, Union finance minister, on raids on big businessmen in The Telegraph

● Even if we do rig the elections, we are not going to issue a public statement saying so.

■ CHANDRASHEKHAR SINGH, former chief minister of Bihar, in The Telegraph

● You must understand the Assamese psyche, Assamese society. It is a society where you keep your mistresses, I keep mine.

■ D.K. BAROOAH, former Congress president, in Sunday

● The present position is that we are not making a bomb even if Pakistan has it, but this does not bind us in the future.

■ BALI RAM BHAGAT, external affairs minister, quoted in Current

● I don't think it (the language issue) can bring down my ministry. I feel language is a people's problem. It cannot be settled on the streets in a democracy. It will be solved in the legislature by legal means.

■ PRATAPSING RANE, Goa chief minister, in Sunday

● Parties like the AIADMK can be almost called the 'adopted opposition'.

■ MADHU DANDAVATE in The Sunday Observer

● We have offered (the victims) care and comfort beyond anything they had known before. Union Carbide would have put them in the Indian middle class for the rest of their lives.

■ BUD HOLMAN, Union Carbide lawyer, in Time

● I want people to know, through my autobiography, what I have gone through—the setbacks and humiliations. They couldn't digest me going up. Jealousy, you see. But I'm like wine—getting better and better over the years.

■ SYED KIRMANI in the Express Magazine

● Today's Congress has little in common with the Congress I knew. In the pre-Independence Congress, one gave. In the post-Independence Congress, one took, and not very honourably at that.

■ MINOO MASANI in The Sunday Statesman

● (I write) because I like to invent, I like to lie.

■ SALMAN RUSHDIE in The Times of India Sunday Review

● I am certainly not bitchy. In fact, I am very critical of women who use their womanly charms to get things done. This creates a very sexist attitude.

■ SMITA PATIL in The Hindustan Times Sunday Magazine

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HIGH FLYING

Uniform Material

Entyce®

Reflects good taste. At affordable prices.

'Entyce' fabrics include a variety of uniform material. In cotton, blends and polyester.

'Entyce' uniform fabrics are produced on the most modern machinery with sophisticated technology, and rigorous quality tests at every stage.

'Entyce' is the most used uniform fabric by quality conscious users like Defence Services, Transport Corporations, Police, Posts & Telegraphs, Air India, Indian Airlines, BHEL, IOC, IPCL and several industries and almost all leading educational institutions, specially in Polyester blended fabrics.

However small the requirement may be, 'Entyce' offers a choice of fabrics and material.

For your complete requirements, write to
The Director (Commercial)

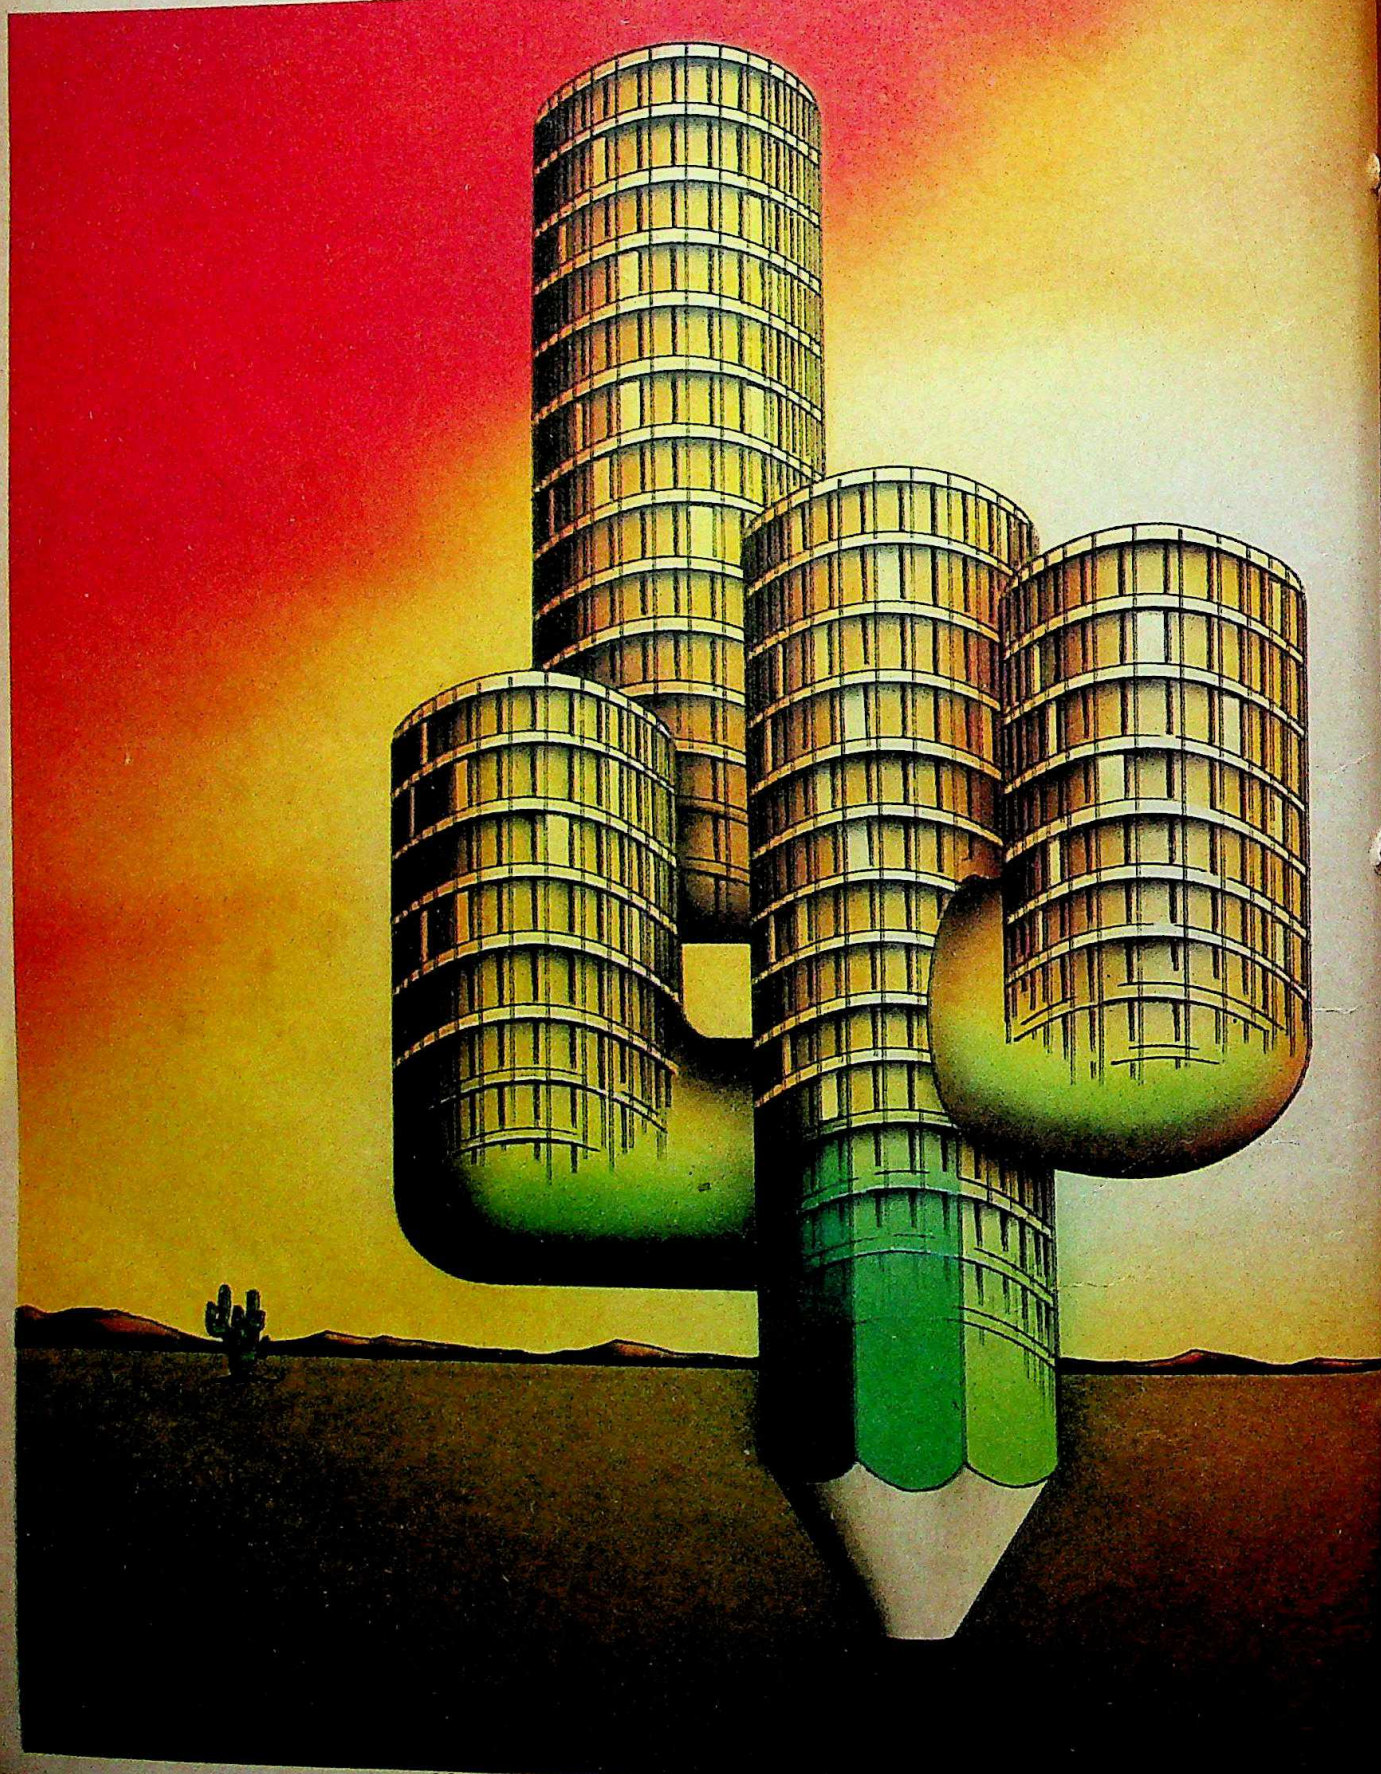
national textile corporation (TAMIL NADU & PONDICHERRY) LTD
A GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ENTERPRISE

10/64 SOMASUNDARAM MILLS RD, COIMBATORE 641 009
TELEPHONE-37665 (5 LINES) TELEX-ENTYCE-CB 345

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

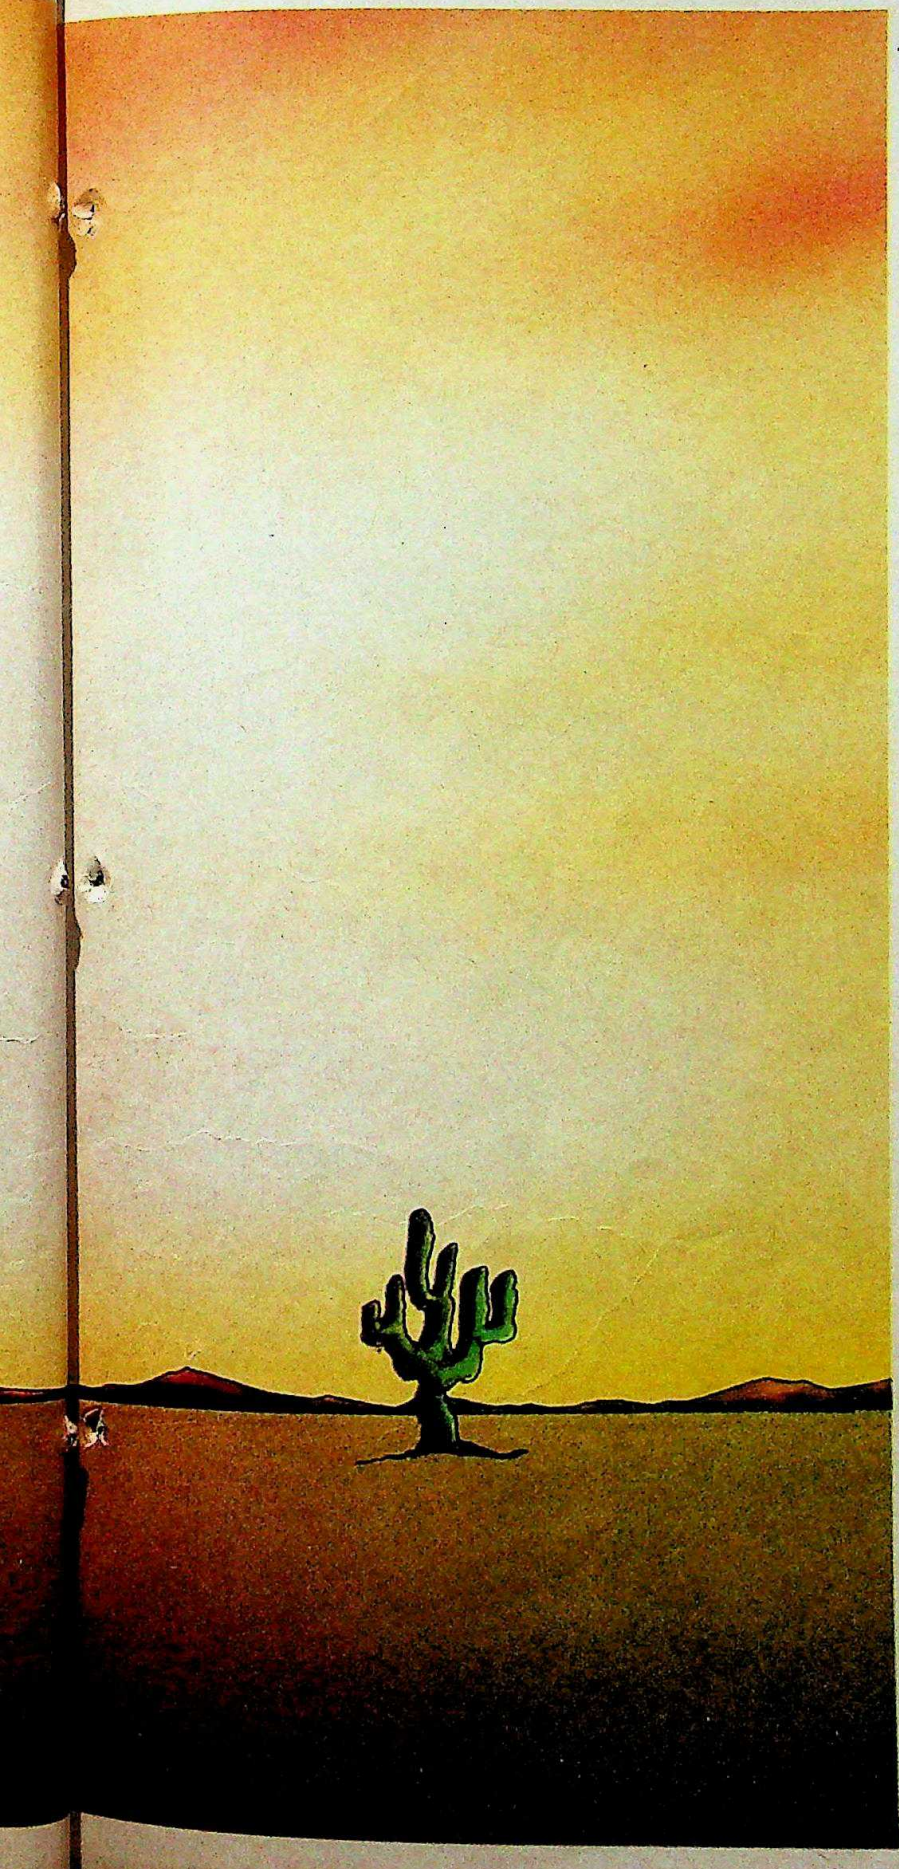
Demanding international clients are turning to an Indian company for the most challenging assignments in construction engineering



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, ...

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A company called Unitech



Unitech set up shop in 1970. And almost from day one, it has come to mean quality and dependability. So no matter how complex or simple the project is, international clients are increasingly turning to Unitech.

In Libya, Saudi Arabia, and Africa, Unitech has constructed radio stations, transmission lines, power stations, sports stadia, housing complexes...

In India, Unitech has put up hospitals and hotels, power stations, chemical plants, bridges, flyovers...

All these clients come to Unitech for sound reasons. Track record is one. The calibre of its people is another. Plus, and this is very important, Unitech doesn't believe in missing deadlines. Never has, never will.

Needless to say, all this has paid off for Unitech.

In the 80s alone, Unitech's turnover has grown almost 450% to Rs. 35 crores. Its net worth, which was a meagre Rs. 50,000 in 1970, today stands at an astonishing Rs. 12 crores. It has projects in hand worth Rs. 180 crores. And among construction companies, it is one of the leading foreign exchange earners in the country.

The Unitech group's activity areas include construction engineering and real estate, manufacture of cold formed sections, installation and erection of transmission towers all over the world, and the manufacture of metal bodies for light commercial vehicles like Swaraj-Mazda and DCM-Toyota.

Unitech. It's the story of a great company. Unlike most stories, it doesn't have an ending. The best is yet to come.

Unitech.

UNITECH
LIMITED

Unitech House, 6 Community Centre
Saket, New Delhi-110 017

The state-of-the-art in construction engineering

ULKA-D-947(C)-UTC

...ri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

While this gentleman is very much at sea level behind his smile is an aircraft flying 25,000 feet high!

That's overnight Skypak service for you!

There are times, often enough, when we do visualize the reassured and smiling face of a customer whose valuable and urgent document is speeding to its destination on time. And it gives us a lot of satisfaction. Especially when we recall his worried, anxious face when he enquired with us whether it was really, physically possible to meet his deadline!

Speed and dependability. That's the essence of any courier service. And our hallmark. TNT Skypak is one of the largest and most trusted courier service companies in the world. With 26000 people on their toes, in 48 countries!

But being large and resourceful doesn't mean we take things for granted. We still depend on basic human qualities like efficiency and accountability. And care. It's your urgency that seems to lend us wings!

SKYPAK

when it's wanted yesterday!

203 Jolly Bhavan No 2, 7 New Marine Lines, Bombay 400 020 Phone: 253703, 294454
Telex: 011 3339 SAI IN

• Ahmedabad: 443053 • Bangalore: 568862 • Baroda: 552285 • Bhubaneshwar 53456/55164 • Bombay: 294454/6320881 • Calcutta: 443532 • Cochin: 69012 • Delhi: 6414830 • Gandhidham: 3414 • Hosur 2373 • Hyderabad: 38237 • Kandla: 7437 • Madras: 474569/ 475091 • Mangalore: 24444 • Mapusa: 2440 • Margao: 2477 • Mysore 24444 • Pune: 54595 • Panjim: 5763 • Ranchi: 20055 • Trivandrum: 65261 • Vasco: 2403 • Visakhapatnam: 62223.

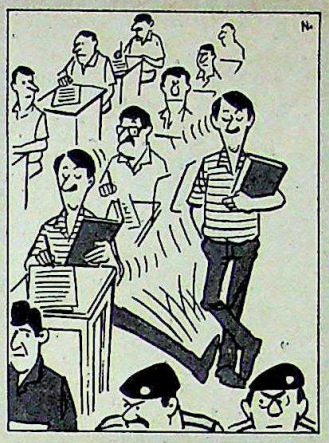
TNT SKYPAK
THE WORLDWIDE COURIERS

Please note: We don't carry non-commercial and personal material.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Vishwavidyalaya

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BOLD BROTHER



■ 'Exemplary courage under fire.' That's how most citations given to army officers and men run. But facing a hail of bullets is one form of courage: there could be other dangers which you face, as Ivanhoe would put it, as it behoves a bold brother. Ivanhoe will probably find his soul-mate in a middle-aged gentleman of Lucknow.

This man walked into an examination hall last month—aspiring lawyers were being grilled on their knowledge of torts, among other things—and decorated his desk with various books and 'keys' upon which he read slowly through the question-paper, looked through his books, chose the answers and got to work, transferring the contents on the books to his answer book.

The real test came a few minutes later when the Lucknow University checking squad hove into sight a few rooms away and the examinees frenziedly hid their notes. All except Mr Cool, who gathered his books under his arm and started pacing the floor. That was how the squad found him, to be told that everything was in order. When the eagle-eyed guardians left, the 'invigilator-for-a-minute' went back to his books. Now is that courage or isn't it?

RUM DOINGS

■ Arre Yaar, what to tell? Why am I here in this rotten cell, you ask. What did I do to have that fat lump of a policeman haul me in here last night? Well, I'll tell you yaar...No, I don't want any rum, thanks, no I don't want any rum, d'you hear me...?

Actually, you know that Vaishali Gramin Bank in Rampuhar Mohalla in this our Muzaffarpur. I thought I'd make myself a little money, things aren't too easy nowadays. So I got down there two nights ago, very quickly and easily picked the lock and opened the ... and ... ooh ...all that money? Yaar, it was heaven.

You will understand that a spot of celebration was certainly in order and I had brought along my trusty Triple X with me. So I drank and drank and drank and like that black fellow—yes, I've been to school—drank wisely but not too well, and the result was that when the manager opened the door in the morning, he found me lying on the table, sleeping away, with all that lovely money still in the safe, and Triple X sloshing around in my stomach and brain. Sad, isn't it. And now you know why I've stopped drinking.

SHORT-HANDED

■ Until sometime ago, India was the land of scarcity. Those skimpy days are over, but in one commodity at least, the pinch is still felt, although in a localised fashion: bridegrooms. The small Kashmiri Brahmin community is particularly hard hit in this respect and many a girl's father is wringing his hand in despair at the shortage. In such circumstances it is only to be expected that they should resort to tactics which are not exactly comme il fault.

A young widower in Delhi was conducting the tenth-day rites of his wife by the river, with the family priest droning on. The man was lost in contemplation, and few near him cared to intrude upon his thoughts. However, he had to come back to reality when a relative hailed him, and motioned toward two elderly gentlemen standing nearby. He said that the two had an important issue to discuss with the young man.

The widower hurried up to the two gentlemen. They looked him over, and without so much as batting an eyelid one of them offered him his daughter's hand in marriage. Needless to say it was refused, but the young man was doubtless the sadder and wiser for the experience.

CUT DOWN

■ Politicians like two things: cutting throats and cutting inaugural ribbons. Stop them doing any of these two things and they will sulk for hours. That is what P.C. George, MLA, did when a link road for four panchayats in Kottayam was opened.

The reason why P.C. George, MLA, was sitting all by himself in a corner muttering to himself is that his ego had received a severe blow. He wanted so badly to inaugurate the road, that he had commissioned a local stone carver to fashion a suitable monument with his name graphically inscribed on it. Somebody else had thoughtfully got invitation cards printed and distributed.

But Kurumba, 105, yes 105, beat him to it. It appears that a few hundred spoilsports, not particularly inclined to George, persuaded Kurumba to cut the ribbon. She did it not with the usual pair of scissors, but with the classical rural person's tool, the scythe. A slash with practised 105-year-old fingers and the ribbon was down. And over the cheers of the crowd, one could hear sobs! Somebody, for once, had made P.C. George, MLA, cry.

—compiled by JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The day your dad and aunty put on their best clothes and got fully exposed at the studio fiftyfive years ago.

Master Chamanlal Keshavjee and Miss Sarda Shah photographed in 1930 at Madras.

The memory still lives on vividly. Thanks to B&W photography.

Thumb through your family photo album.
There are those glorious old photographs that bring fond memories.
In black and white. Sharp and clear even after thirty, forty or fifty years and more.
The choice is quite clear.
When you shoot pictures for keeps, shoot them on Black and White film.
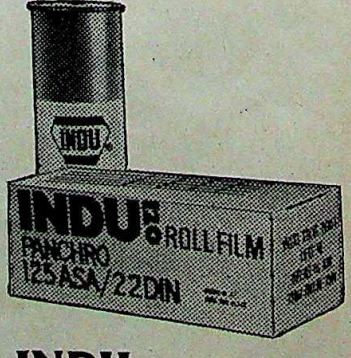
You'd be glad you did.

Memories may fade with time. Not Black & White pictures.



इन्दु
INDU

INDU
B&W roll films and bromides

Sista's HPF.401.85. L

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When you are selecting excavators would you bank on...

Great expectations or ACTUAL EXPERIENCE ?

Add up the advantages:

- Simple design eliminating multi-stage gear reductions. Less moving parts, easy maintenance.
- High performance hydraulic system using high torque, low rpm motors.
- High pressure hydraulic system reduces dead weight.

RESULT

Higher all-round productivity. Over 300 owners are profiting from these benefits.

L&T-Poclain machines are manufactured by L&T in collaboration with Poclain S.A. of France—the world's largest manufacturer of hydraulic excavators.

पुस्तकालय
02863.0..
विश्वविद्यालय हरियाणा

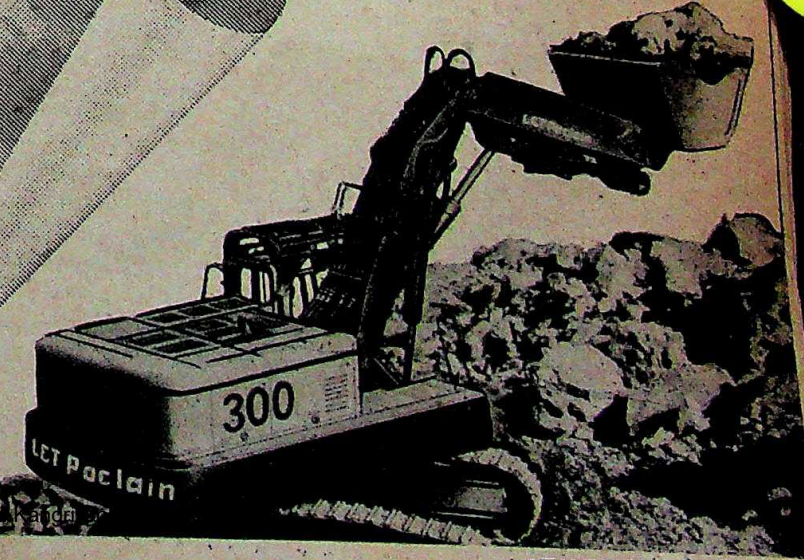
Poclain

Earthmoving Machinery Division

LARSEN & TOUBRO LIMITED

Laxminarayan Complex, Palace Road
Bangalore 560 052

L&T-POCLAIN for PROVEN PRODUCTIVITY

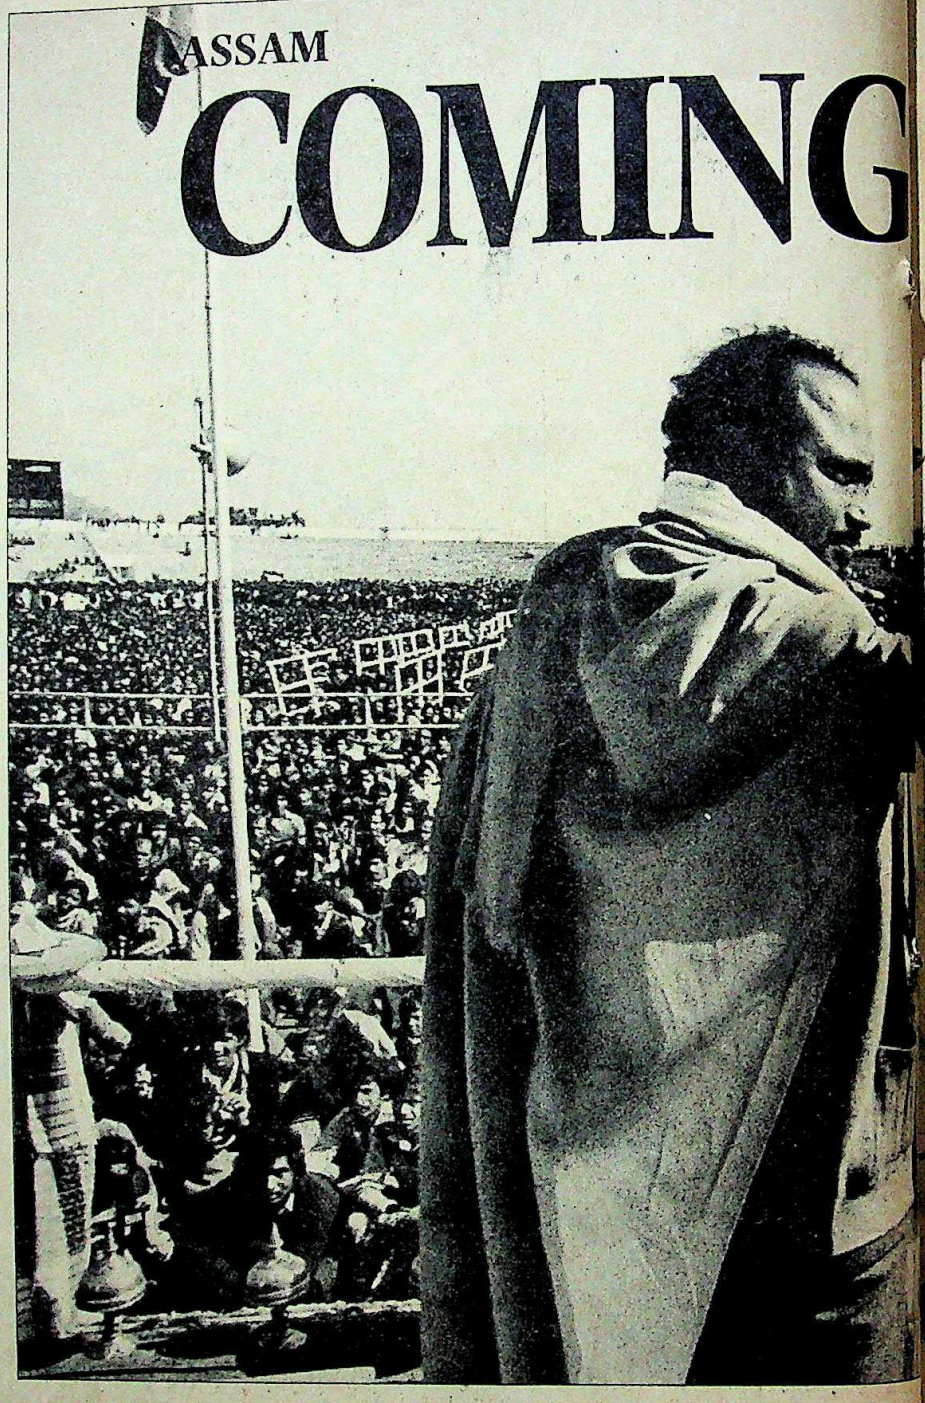


CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri

L&T/ADV Dept. EMD 50

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ASSAM COMING



Prafulla Mahanta at swearing-in rally: mass euphoria

"To tame a wild elephant you have to ride an elephant yourselves first."

WHEN Prafulla Kumar Mahanta said this in Jorhat in January 1983 he could hardly have imagined how prophetic he was to prove. Last fortnight he finally rode that metaphorical pachyderm into the chief minister's chamber at Janata Bhawan, the one-time tea warehouse that serves as the Assam Secretariat at Dispur. The elephant was the election symbol of his new party, the Asom Gana Parishad (AGP) which had just now performed a political kheda, rounding up 68 seats in the 126-member assembly, consigning the Congress(I) to merely 25 inconvenient perches in the Opposition benches in a remarkable reversal of electoral fortunes.

This was the moment of truth. A chief minister at 32, a cabinet with an average age of less than 40 and, most mind-boggling of all, a mass euphoria of the kind never seen before in India's independent history at his back. Throughout the vast expanse of Brahmaputra valley, its water-logged paddy fields green with the winter crop, tumultuous drum-beats ushered in an entirely new era of hope. Where once blood had flowed from tribal and agitational violence and state repression, where six years of political manipulation and uncertainty had left people listless, indignant and cynical, there was now an ultimate release, as if an umbilical cord had been sheared separating the cathartic present from a torrid past.

The December 16 revolution of the ballot-box, vindicating once again the voice of democracy, was a vital turning point. For a people nursing an often self-inflicted sense of hurt and alienation from the rest of the country which resulted in the historic 1979 oil blockade and then the bloody resistance to the 1983 election, this was at last a chance to preside over their own destinies. And in Guwahati where half-a-million people had come out on the streets to the call of "olahi aao" (come outside) defying curfew on April 19,1980, as the Government tried to break the oil blockade, this was victory at last. Last fortnight, people were out in the streets again but now the mood was festive. They lustily chanted songs of the Bihu festival, many of them suitably modified to match the occasion. Hundreds danced in the Dispur residential complex around the houses of the beaten and dispirited Congress(I) ministers busy packing up their belongings for an inglorious retreat, singing: "When our elephant wakes up it runs over all that comes in its way—it has already chewed up your hand."

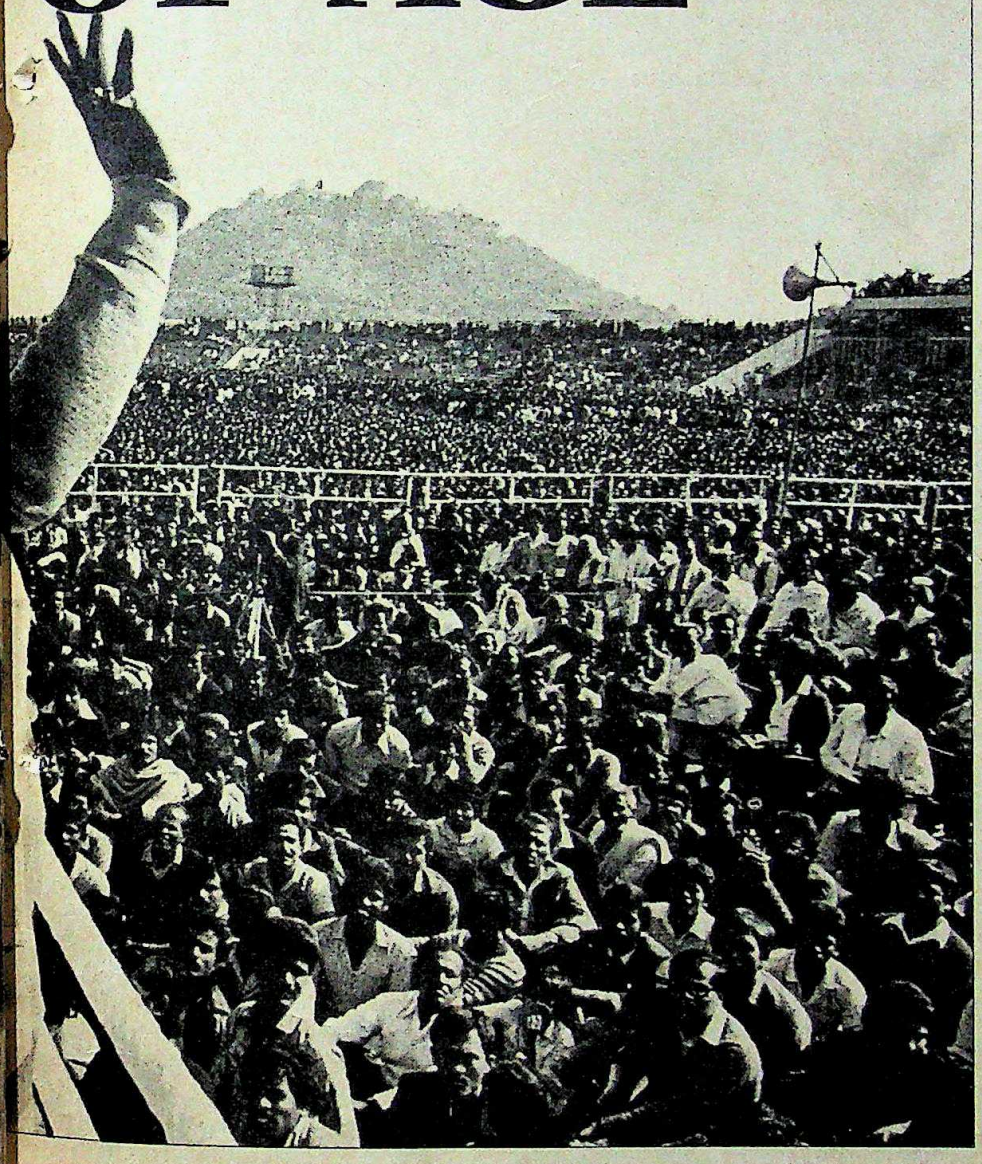
And chew it did. Forty-eight of the 64 assembly seats the AGP won were snatched from the Congress (I). Sixteen members of Hiteswar Saikia's 26-member cabinet, installed after the farcical election of February 1983, fell by the wayside as the AGP wave swept the valley. Saikia himself somehow survived a high-voltage election at Nazira in the Sibsagar district of Upper Assam where his party lost the remaining 16 seats. The Janata Party, which had 97 members in the 1977 assembly was now left with none; its state president and former chief minister Golap Borbora was trounced in Duliajan. Over 40 constituencies where less than 25 per cent people had come out to vote in 1983 after the agitators' boycott call now notched up an over 80 per cent voting percentage. Indeed, for the Assamese partisan the election was seen as the only hope of stemming the tide of illegal immigrants. "The battle of Saraighat, our last chance against the invaders," was how Bipul Chandra Goswami, a bank employee in the long queue at the Barakhat

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

OF AGE



polling booth outside Dispur, put it. To the ethnic Assamese, particularly the Hindus, this indeed was a replay of the legendary battle on the banks of Brahmaputra when Assamese warrior Lachit Barphukan decisively defeated the Mughals to end a series of bloody invasions.

For the striplings spearheading the AGP campaign this was also the consummation of all they had fought for. Two years ago, taking stock of the situation following the violence and killing that accompanied the February 1983 election, they had apprehensively decided to take on the "wild elephant", the political challenge from the Congress(I). Their shift in emphasis was well conceived. Replicating the feat of N.T.Rama Rao, the Asom Gana Parishad, formed a mere 67 days before the election, grabbed power trouncing the Congress(I) in what had long been its last stronghold in the North-east. The campaign was bitter, and saw Mahanta and his deputy Phukan address over a score of meetings a day reaching out to the corners of the valley, the river islands, minority pockets and the tea-gardens ignored even at the height of the movement. And as results trickled in, a sense of joy and relief was palpable in the AGP camp. Phukan capped it with an instinctive: "Oh, it's over now. We are very hungry," hastily dipping into the mound of boiled rice and sweet-sour Assamese fish curry at the house of Rameshwar Bora a long-time sympathiser of the agitation.

Ironically, the new leaders had their first taste of the problems that come with power even before they were sworn in. If the AGP was a party of the youth with an unusual political style and a fresh new approach to electioneering, it shared at least one thing with older, well established parties elsewhere: internal wrangling. And the conflicts that had first come to the fore during the ticket distribution were now sharpened as the stakes rose. With a victory behind them, everybody seemed to be making a claim for a place in the Cabinet. So much so, Mahanta and Phukan and their close advisors were mired in acrimonious confabulations that went into the early hours of December 24 before a reasonably acceptable cabinet could be cobbled up. Left out were Joy Nath Sarma, the fiery, controversial former chief of the AASU volunteer force and Biraj Kumar Sarma, a former convenor of the All Assam Gana Sangram Parishad and one of the signatories to the Assam accord. Biraj Sarma refused to take the slight quietly, first organising a procession of sorts in his stronghold of Uzan Bazar in Guwahati and then abstaining from the swearing-in ceremony on December 24.

But such isolated show of ire and dissidence could not queer the popular pitch that morning as over a lakh of people jostled their way into the massive Nehru Stadium, that soon took the form of a huge coliseum with wildly cheering crowds at the public swearing-in ceremony much in the NTR style. And the 'gladiators' were all there, reading out the oath of office and secrecy administered in Assamese rather fittingly by Bhishma Narain Singh, at 52 the youngest governor in the country. There was Prafulla Mahanta wrapped in a saffron shawl that P. Upendra, the Telugu Desam leader had brought on behalf of NTR and Phukan still dressed in a very college-like blue blazer. The ceremony turned into an impromptu public meeting and thousands cheered lustily as columnist Arun Shourie asked the question: "Do you remember another swearing-in ceremony was held in Guwahati two years ago, attended by the BSF and the CRPF?" and added, "That was Saikia's government, this is your government."

The frenzy, the satisfaction and the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAFULLA KUMAR MAHANTA

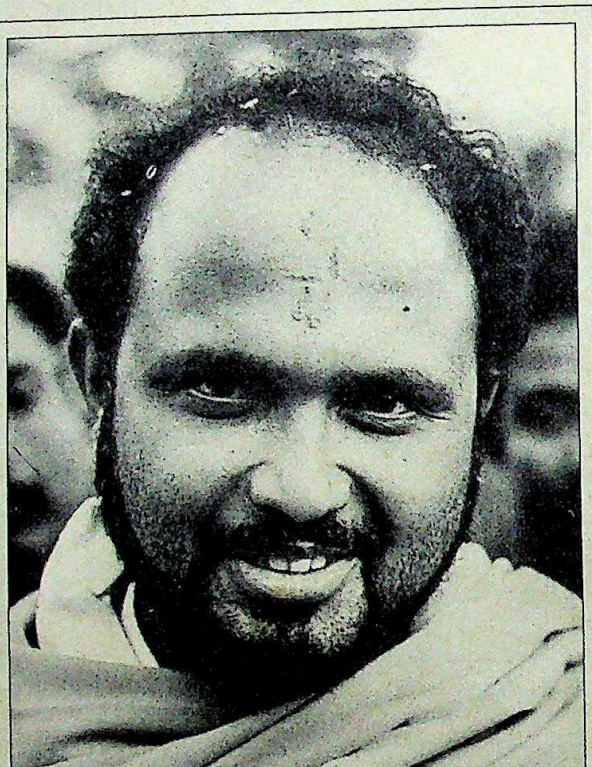
"We have been vindicated"

HIS SUBDUED style has often been mistaken for mediocrity and his characteristic quiet has invariably intrigued those who came in contact with him over these troubled years in Assam. But belatedly, even the most incorrigible sceptics now concede the fact that Prafulla Kumar Mahanta, now chief minister at 32—the youngest ever to rise to that position—has perhaps been the most underestimated politician in the country in recent years. He is shy and many of his close supporters complain that he can vacillate on vital occasions. He can also be excessively moralistic at times to the chagrin of the many "political pragmatists" in his party, as he did in clearly rejecting the prospects of the AGP entering into a coalition while his partymen, on the verge of a clear majority, were tensely awaiting the last few, vital results.

But he is a pacifist and has shown over the six tumultuous years, a remarkable capacity to hold together elements with disparate ethnicities, castes, political ideology and ambitions, a quality he will need now in fullest measure to keep together an inexperienced, exuberant cabinet culled out of the same elements.

From the streets of Nowgong to the Assam Government Secretariat at Dispur has been a long, eventful journey for the bearded, balding chief minister. Born to Devkanta, a modest, school-teacher and his wife Lakhani Prabha in 1954 Mahanta went to school in his hometown Kaliabar and later to Nowgong College. This is where he became an active participant in AASU activities. The leadership of the district AASU committee became the springboard for the presidentship of the AASU in 1979 the year history took an entirely new path in Assam launching Mahanta and his more vocal lieutenant Bhrigu Kumar Phukan (now home minister in his cabinet) into international limelight. In the years of the agitation he has been jailed many times and accused of crimes ranging from slogan-shouting to sedition. But he seeks vindication for all that in his party's victory now, saying: "The people are the best judge. They know better than anyone else who was responsible for the violence in Assam."

Even in the hub of the agitation and now politics Mahanta has continued to be in an impressive degree-hunt. His six years at the Gauhati University have fetched him a bachelor's degree each in science and law and a diploma in journalism. He is currently in line for an LLM degree and in case he decides to appear for his final year examination he will score yet another first, the first chief minister to appear for a university examination. While the AGP theoreticians claim that their party does not encourage personality cults and stands for collective leadership and responsibility, all along this victorious campaign they have projected Mahanta as the new chief minister realising that among all the AGP leaders he has by far the most mature and secular image something he will now have a hard time retaining while he fulfils his party's promise of implementing the Assam accord. Normally hesitant in opening up to newsmen, Mahanta spoke to Principal Correspondent SHEKHAR GUPTA on a wide range of issues concerning him and his party of political greenhorns. Excerpts:



"Ours is a victory for regionalism with a nationalistic outlook."

Q. Has the extent and margin of your election victory surprised you? To which factors do you ascribe it?

A. No, we are not at all surprised. We always knew we had the people behind us and all we needed was a fair election. This was a people's movement and the support had always been there. There is only one factor behind our victory, the involvement of the people. This election fully vindicates our decision to boycott and block the illegal, immoral 1983 election.

Q. Do you agree that this was a fair election?

A. Yes, it was generally a fair election. Perhaps everywhere except in Nazira (where Hiteswar Saikia won). The Congress(I) tried the usual tricks such as distributing money, liquor and blankets. They even did so in my constituency at Nowgong. But people were not swayed.

Q. Would you say that your party has got a fair share of votes from all sections of society in Assam?

A. Yes, don't the results show it? We are not a party of any community. We stand for all genuine Indian citizens in Assam. Do you think we could have won all those seats in Upper Assam without the help of the tea-garden labourers?

Q. What explains the widespread rejection of the Congress(I)? Does the rise of UMF pose a long-term challenge to your party?

A. The Congress(I) paid the price for the ultimate sin in democracy, by barricading themselves away from the people and letting loose a reign of repression terror and torture in the last six years. Their last 33-month rule can be summed up in just one word, misrule. The people have rejected them now but we are left with the by-product of the Congress(I) political culture in the form of the UMF. Yet the minorities are increasingly realising that this party has no positive programme for them and thus we do not look at the UMF as a serious threat in the future. Even now election results clearly indicate that the minorities have confidence among us.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Q. But doesn't your total failure in Cachar once again underline the region's very distinct character from the Brahmaputra valley?

A. Not exactly. But we realise that we have to strengthen the party's base in Cachar and I am confident that we will succeed in doing that.

Q. You will face an unusual assembly where everyone from the ruling party is a newcomer while the Opposition is full of veterans. Will that not make things difficult for you?

A. No, it will not. Because when it comes to working with the people we are also veterans. In our opinion, experience gathered from total involvement with the people is real experience. I don't anticipate problems either legislatively or administratively as our people are committed workers and quick learners.

Q. What are the first priorities before your government?

A. Our priorities are quite clear, implementing the Assam accord, accelerating development and revamping the economy. Besides we have to remove corruption from the government apparatus which has been heavily polluted under the Saikia regime.

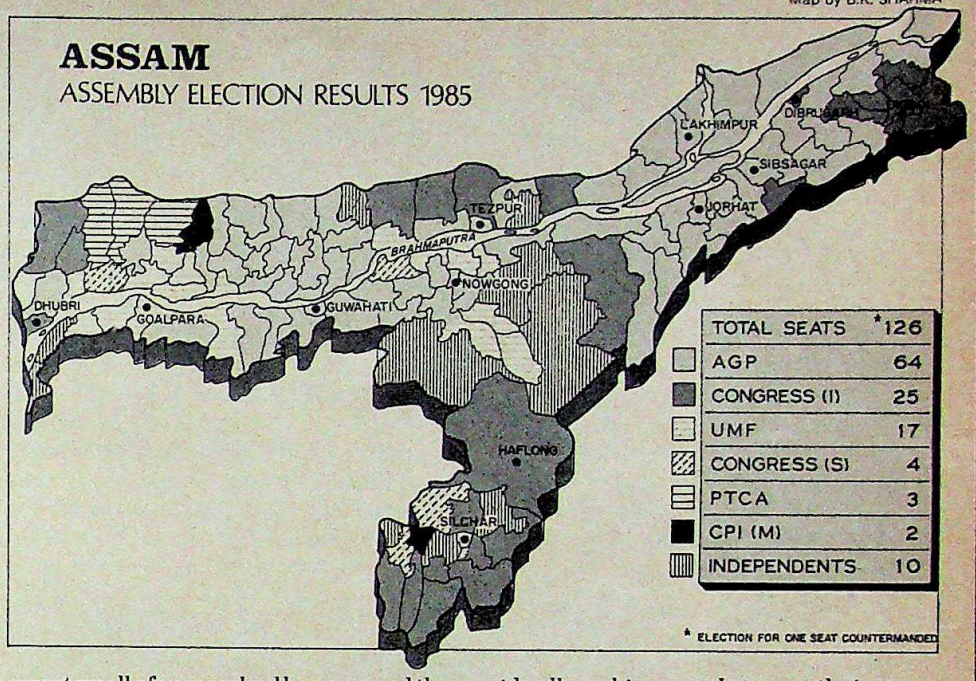
Q. Is yours a victory for regionalism? What kind of relationship will your government have with the other regional parties and the Centre?

A. Ours is a victory for regionalism with a nationalistic outlook. We will certainly have a cordial, friendly and programme-oriented relationship with the other regional parties. Our government also does not stand for Centre-state confrontation. Such relationships should be based on mutual trust, respect and cooperation.

Q. Charges of regionalism, parochialism and even secessionism have often been made against the AASU and AGP. Now that you are taking over power and responsibility how do you react?

A. Our victory is the most fitting reply we could give to these charges. The people of Assam have not voted for parochialism or secession. They have voted for peace, prosperity and national integration. These charges were made by interested, motivated parties to fool the people and how badly have they collapsed now.

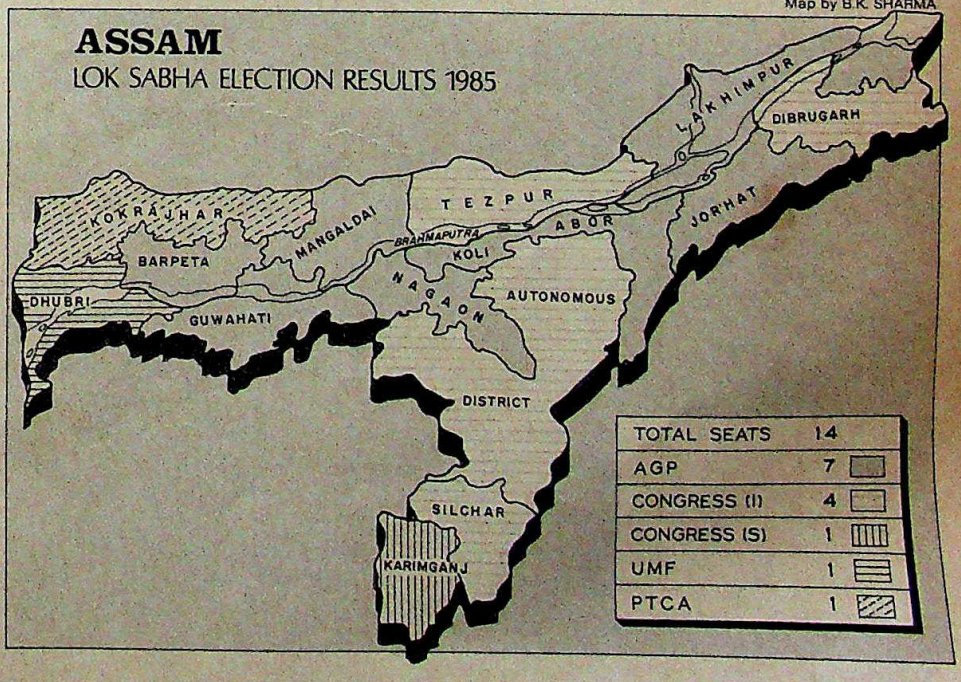
Map by B.K. SHARMA



sweet smell of success had been earned the hard way and the result of a campaign run with electronic precision. "We were short of funds and could not give our candidates more than Rs 5,000 each besides coupons to collect donations on their own," says Bhrigu Phukan. But the AGP's main strength was the massive force of student workers who took the fledgeling party's message to the deepest interiors in impressive bicycle processions, singing songs and holding impromptu meetings. "I have never seen workers of a party as active as this," Union Minister of State for Surface Transport Rajesh Pilot was to exclaim later as some Congress(I) leaders described with awe how their volunteers had reached almost every household individually, asking people to cast their votes. This resulted in the unprecedented high turnover, more than 90 per cent in all areas dominated by the ethnic Assamese.

The same sense of purpose had earlier marked the strategy sessions. The AGP realised early enough that it could never hope to snatch power without a fair share of the vote of the tea-garden labour and the Muslims. Emissaries were rushed to far-away state capitals in the country to garner help. College teacher Ranjit Narain Deka met Farooq Abdullah in Srinagar and Surjit Singh Barnala in Chandigarh. Neither could come but Abdullah at least sent in a poster with a signed appeal to the voters; it found some purchase in the Muslim areas of the state.

Map by B.K. SHARMA



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ASOM GANA PARISHAD

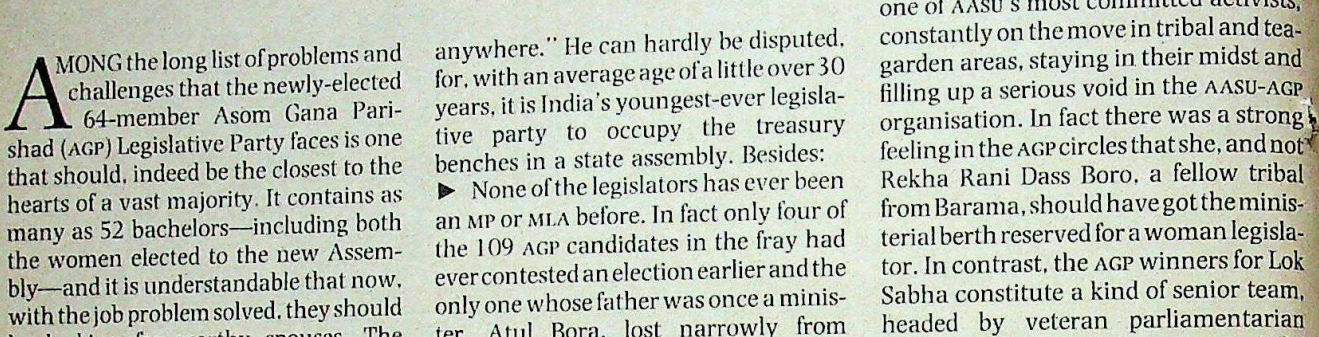
A Youthful Takeover

AMONG the long list of problems and challenges that the newly-elected 64-member Asom Gana Parishad (AGP) Legislative Party faces is one that should, indeed be the closest to the hearts of a vast majority. It contains as many as 52 bachelors—including both the women elected to the new Assembly—and it is understandable that now, with the job problem solved, they should be looking for worthy spouses. The cabinet itself contains 14 bachelors and many AGP functionaries worry at the thought of so many marriages in quick succession bringing the work of the party and the Government to a standstill. "The only way to get around that is to hold a mass marriage ceremony at the Judges Field and then a mass feast," says Urvashi Hazarika, a Guwahati housewife. And given the AASU and AGP leaders' penchant for the unusual that just might happen particularly when at least a dozen of the new legislators, including Chief Minister Mahanta, his deputy Bhrigu Phukan and Irrigation Minister Bharat Narah are all believed to be "going steady".

But bachelorhood is not the only unusual characteristic that the new legislative party has. At the public swearing-in ceremony in Guwahati a visibly excited D.K. Kakati, a former police officer who has been in the forefront of the agitation exclaimed: "In the international year of the youth it is the greatest celebration of the young anywhere." He can hardly be disputed, for, with an average age of a little over 30 years, it is India's youngest-ever legislative party to occupy the treasury benches in a state assembly. Besides:

- None of the legislators has ever been an MP or MLA before. In fact only four of the 109 AGP candidates in the fray had ever contested an election earlier and the only one whose father was once a minister, Atul Bora, lost narrowly from Marigaon.
- The legislature party includes 56 with a bachelor's degree or more and with just two members without any formal educational degrees, this is the most educated legislature party in the country.
- Over two dozen MLA's are still registered as students and they will rub shoulders in the Assembly with at least eight serving teachers.

The youngest and probably also the richest in the list is Abhijit Sarmah, 25—scion of a Jorhat family that owns over a dozen tea-gardens. He was also a surprise inclusion in the list of candidates much to the chagrin of scores of AASU-AAGSP activists in Jorhat who coveted the AGP nomination. "He just stood there, quietly, while others fought for the ticket. So we said why not give it to the least insistent one and get rid of all the others," confessed an AGP leader who dealt with the ticket distribution. He is closely followed by Jyotsana Sonowal, a tall, stately tribal student from Sadiya, the backward constituency in the extreme east of Assam. She is considered one of AASU's most committed activists, constantly on the move in tribal and tea-garden areas, staying in their midst and filling up a serious void in the AASU-AGP organisation. In fact there was a strong feeling in the AGP circles that she, and not Rekha Rani Dass Boro, a fellow tribal from Barama, should have got the ministerial berth reserved for a woman legislator. In contrast, the AGP winners for Lok Sabha constitute a kind of senior team, headed by veteran parliamentarian Dinesh Goswami. The youngest of the MP's, Gokul Saikia, at 34 also just falls short of becoming the youngest ever MP from Assam, falling behind the venerable Dev Kant Borooah who first went to the Lok Sabha at 33.



New cabinet with Governor B.N. Singh: young brigade

Also, most of these are faces familiar to the police all over the state. Said a police officer in Dispur: "I do not think this kind of statistics will ever be compiled now, but our new crop of MLA's should have something like a hundred murder charges over them, a large majority of them being against three prominent ones from the area around Mangaldai." Joy Nath Sarma, MLA from Sipajhar and former chief of the AASU volunteer force also lost his brother in the rioting during the February 1983 elections.

Love and marriage are just one aspect of the peculiar challenges the AGP legislature party faces. Most of the legislators have spent the last six years agitating and have piled up family problems. There are sisters to marry, houses to build and family businesses to organise. Says Gagan Datta, a former AASU executive member and now a senior AGP functionary who kept out of the elections: "Many, like me, could not even think of contesting elections this time. If I married my sister and built a house after joining the Government people would have said I have made money through corruption. At the same time how much can one do with Rs 2,000 a month which is what the Government can give you. I will now set up an industry and think of contesting elections when I begin to earn Rs 5,000 every month." This, in fact, is an extremely significant factor for, unlike the conventional politician, the AGP leader will have to look upon politics as a full-time career with little else to fall back upon. "I hope that will make them more serious," says Ataur Rehman, a retired inspector-general of police and AGP's victorious candidate from the Barpeta Lok Sabha seat, adding: "Unlike us all, these people have something like three to four decades of politics ahead of them. If they want to survive through it they certainly cannot afford to take things easy at this stage."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

But for that political survival the AGP men—or boys as they have always been called in Assam—will have to learn fast the art of legislative politics and the craft of running a government but most of their supporters think they will take no time doing so. Said Ghana Kanta Barua, a Nowgong schoolteacher who came all the way to attend the swearing-in ceremony: "Come to think of it, what qualification did all those Congress politicians had to begin with except that they had all been to jail during the freedom struggle. So has each one of our new legislators done in the agitation against foreign nationals. Don't go by their age, they are veteran politicians already."

Just as Rajiv Gandhi's new-look list of candidates did in the December 1984 elections, the AGP youth brigade has thrown the state's age-old, familiar politicians out of business. But as AGP men themselves concede, it is at best a beginning. In months to come they will have to prove in the Assembly and the secretariat, that these boys are not boys any more. That indeed will be a real coming of age. It is one thing to seek votes for youth and quite another to perform from a position of power, till now considered a preserve of the old.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA

but by far the greatest contribution was made by Telugu Desam. Atul Bora, a lawyer flew down to Hyderabad and got an immediate nod from N.T.Rama Rao who toured extensively through tea-garden areas with their huge share of labour of Telugu origins, tipping the scales decisively. NTR drew huge crowds and then his party got a large number of AGP posters printed at their own press at Rajahmundhry at nominal cost. "We had taken this campaign very seriously. In fact we held a training camp for our people deputed to spend a month in Assam to help the AGP and it worked," says TVR Shastri, a Telugu Desam executive member and the leader of their delegation based in Assam during the campaign.

Brindaban Goswami, their shrewdest strategist and now education minister made a telling contribution by choosing the elephant as the party symbol. It is familiar in Assam, and also has some religious significance. And the AGP ingenuity showed cheekily in the way its volunteers paraded decorated elephants around the booths on the polling day. "It was a stratagem. They did not shout slogans nor did they display any posters. And we could not have shooed away the elephants just like that," said an official.

Pilot with Congress(I) candidates: inevitable defeat

The same ingenuity was evident in the party's campaign styles. They used both video and audio cassettes of the speeches of the Mahanta-Phukan duo and filled up almost every street-corner in the Brahmaputra valley with large, stuffed models of elephants. All day young boys and girls danced and limbered across the streets chanting: "Hathi jahibo Dispur, hath jahibo Tezpur" (The elephant will go to Dispur and the hand to Tezpur, where the state's mental asylum is located) or "Saikia bhang khaye podi ase lankhaye" (high on cannabis Saikia is lying in deep slumber).

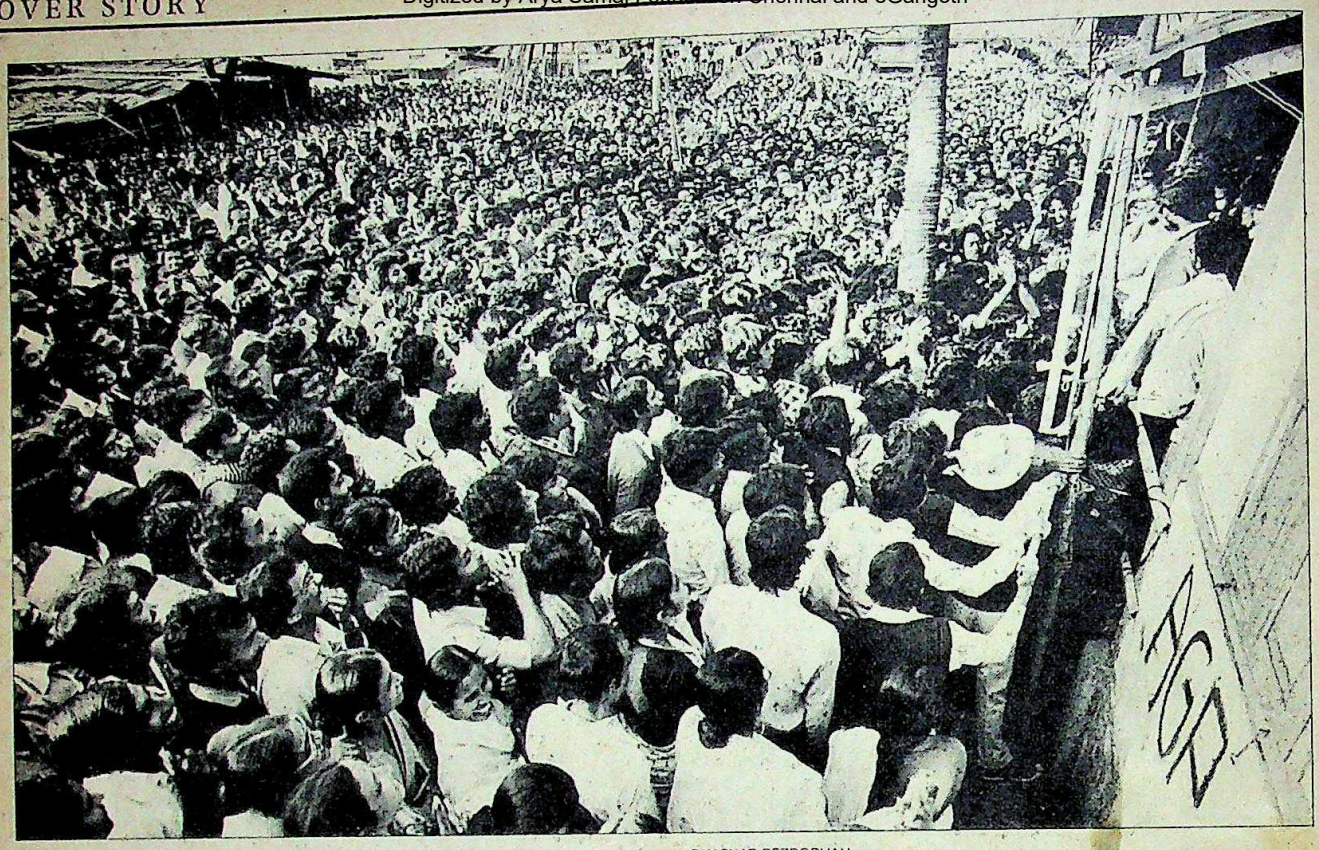
The object of six years of accumulated ire, in retrospect it was Saikia who ultimately became the biggest target of the AGP's high-pressure campaign. While nothing was said against Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi anywhere in the valley, AGP men spewed venom against Saikia. More than an AGP versus Congress (I) election, this was a battle against Saikia and his assembly elected in the farcical 1983 poll with its laughable 32 per cent turnout.

Not surprisingly, then, the passions aroused by this year's campaign were daunting. At Dharampur, where in 1983 Dr Bhumidhar Burman (later health minister in the Saikia cabinet) had set up a record of sorts by polling 266 of the 267 votes polled (one having been declared invalid) an AGP supporter put up a placard in the town cemetery reading "site for Bhumidhar Burman". Till polling day no one had the courage to remove the placard. Burman, incidentally, lost by over 35,000 votes this time.

Later, as results came in, the victorious hordes danced merrily around Saikia's official residence, mobbed his car, spat at it and began to smash it till someone shouted: "Do not damage it. It is now our chief minister's car." In the Congress(I) circles there is a strong fear now that the AGP's populism and enthusiasm will spill into the streets. Complained Hiteswar Saikia: "The harassment of our people has already begun. Already (former education minister) Mukut Sarma, our candidate from Nowgong, is looking for a house in Shillong." But the new leadership was trying hard now to control the passions. "We have no accounts to settle with those who have been ground to dust by the ballot. We have no need now for any bullets or blood," says Chandra Mohan Patowary, the new AGP MLA from Dharmapur, counselling restraint with his partymen.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



BHASKAR BEZBORUAH

All Saikia could do now was concede defeat gracefully. "If this is the wish of the people we can only give it the fullest respect. My best wishes to the new government," he said somewhat condescendingly before leaving for Bombay to attend the Congress centenary celebrations, where the shadow of the Assam defeat loomed large despite a brave front showed by party leaders in Guwahati. Union Industry Minister Narain Dutt Tiwari, who had camped in Assam for a fortnight said: "If you ask me, today's defeat is tomorrow's victory. In this election, the same young men who were distributing dynamite till the other day, were handing out election posters. From a nationalistic point of view is that victory or defeat?" But off-record, partymen were openly admitting that Assam was never meant to be a Punjab-type operation, where the Congress(I) was only too pleased to have the Akalis in power. Said a senior party campaigner: "If that were the case would we have over a hundred MP's and 16 Central ministers, besides four chief ministers touring Assam? We feared we will lose but we never wanted to."

Enthusiastic crowds at the AGP rallies: spirited show

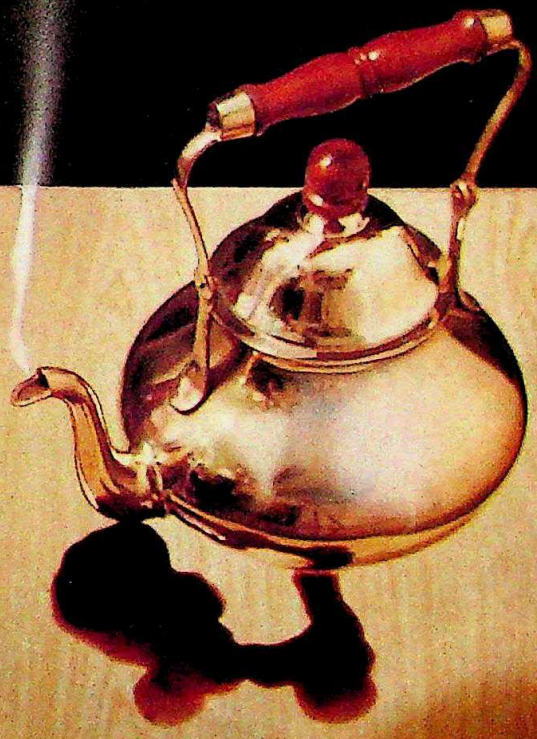
But in the party circles the loss of Assam, now the eighth state not ruled by the Congress (I) in the Union was not an event to be glossed over. Lamented a senior party functionary: "Suddenly we are becoming a party of the country's best losers, a kind of large regional party. Can we afford that?" There was a nagging realisation that when fresh elections are inevitably held in Jammu and Kashmir and then even in Mizoram sometime next year, the party will end up losing two more states.

The Congressmen themselves would never say it for the record, but the overriding feeling in the party circles was expressed somewhat dramatically by A.F. Golam Osmani, a former Congress (I) PWD minister and now the chief of the United Minorities Front (UMF), a rag-tag ensemble of Muslims and Bengalis formerly in the Congress(I) which had just taken away the party's minority vote banks. Said Osmani: "This young, nice prime minister, who wants to be good to everyone, is destroying his party in its 100th year." The accord had upset the minorities and the UMF played on their fears, completing the Congress (I) rout by grabbing 19 seats which would have gone to Congress (I) and cutting vitally into the party's vote in at least 10 others. "It is the UMF that made us lose so badly," said Hiteswar Saikia, adding, "wherever they won they took away our seats. Wherever they lost they took away our decisive votes."

But there was also realisation in the Congress (I) camp that this was one election they had to lose, as a kind of penance for the way the Assam issue had been handled in the past five years. "It is sad but this again is a price Rajiv Gandhi has had to pay for his mother's follies,"

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The difference in laminates now comes to surface



Sungloss has the unique SuperShield against stains, heat, abrasion

The SuperShield on the Sungloss surface gives the laminate super protection, greater resistance. No worrying about everyday wear and tear, no fretting over little incidents and accidents. The extra-protective SuperShield surface keeps the laminate looking beautifully new, almost forever.

Discover new meaning in the colours and designs of the Sungloss SuperShield range. Enhance any decor with the exquisite finishes in brilliant Gloss, muted Matt or natural Woodtex. Or with any of the several attractive textures.

When you get laminated furniture, make sure you get the Sungloss SuperShield on it. You'll be glad you insisted.

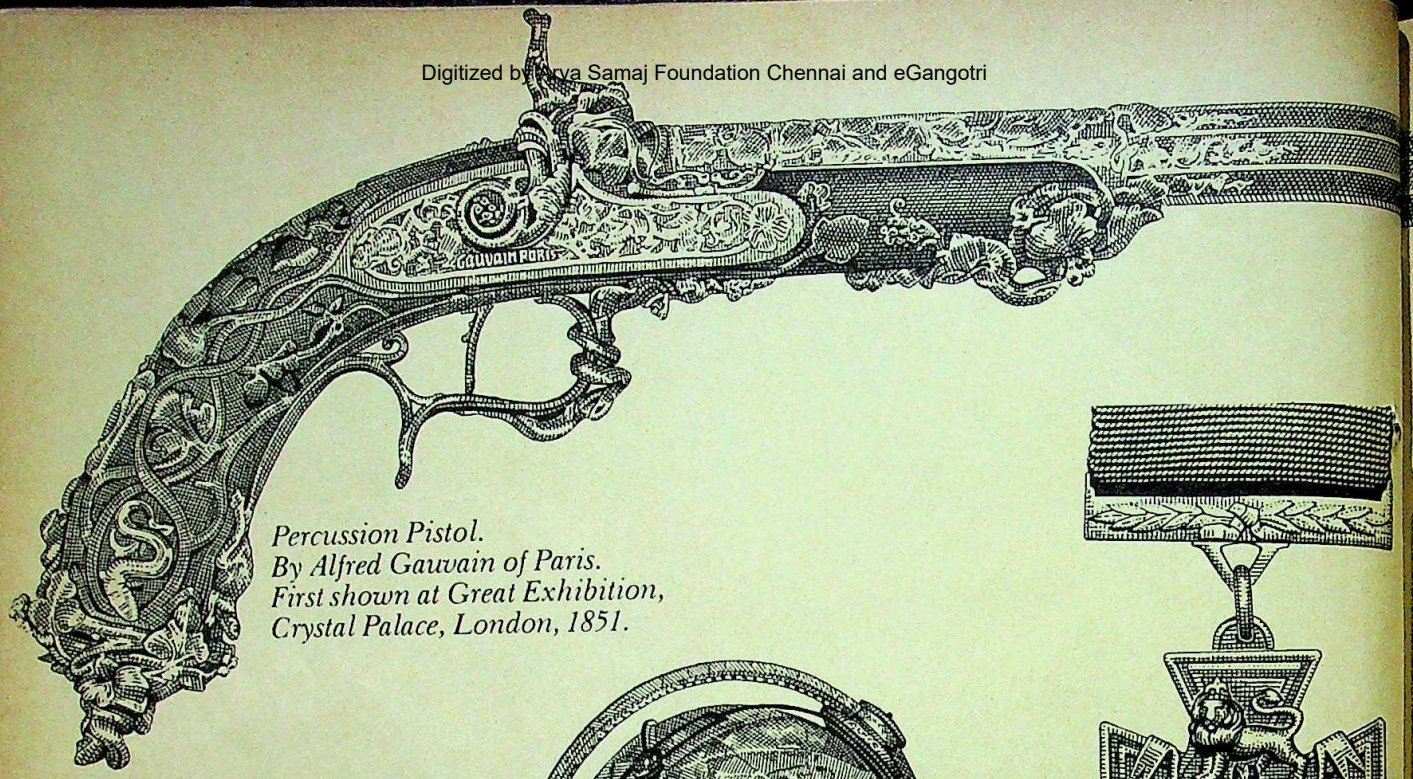
SunGLOSS Decorative Laminate SuperShield

Make sure you get it. Then you can forget it.

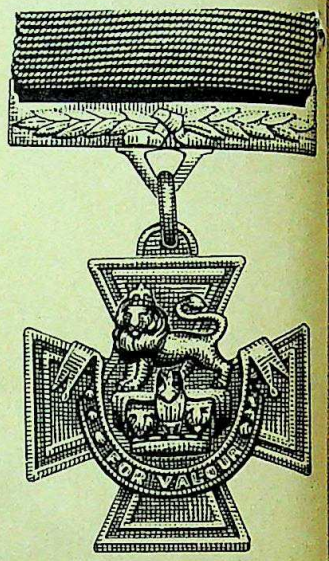
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Colle

caprihan INDIA LIM

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Percussion Pistol.
By Alfred Gauvain of Paris.
First shown at Great Exhibition,
Crystal Palace, London, 1851.



Victoria Cross.
Supreme military honour
since 1856.
Originally made from guns captured in Crimean War.

Celestial Globe.
Made in 1584 by
Reinhold and Roll of Augsburg.
Almost certainly sold in 1854 to Emperor Rudolph II, Prague.

Waterford Decanter.
Classic full lead crystal brought to life by the breath of a master glassmaker.

Danish Freehand.
Completely hand sculpted and finished to bring out
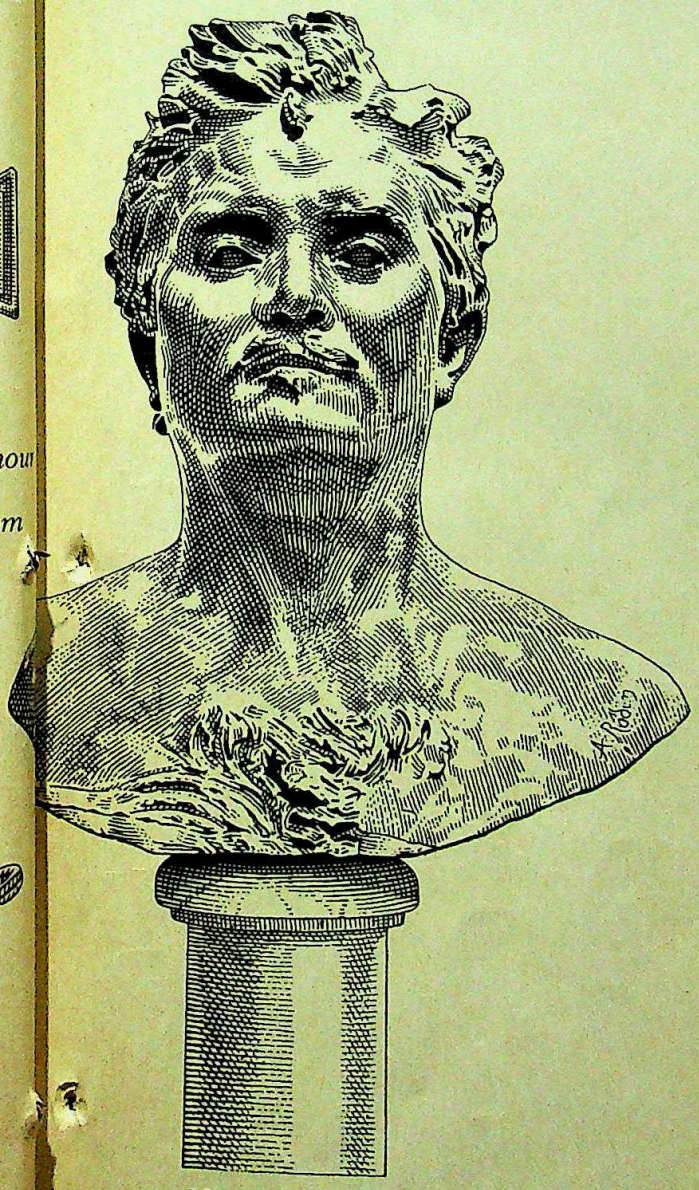
the exquisite grain.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Head of Balzac.
Study in bronze by Auguste Rodin, 1840-1917.

Another certain something that's extravagantly male.

Aramusk. A bathing experience that pleasures the senses. Capturing the timeless aroma of musk, said to be rarer and costlier than gold.
From Shaw Wallace.

Introducing Aramusk. Bath Soap For Men.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Now available at select stores in Delhi only.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Better picture
Better sound

Televista CT-714 SDX
With India's most advanced infra-red remote control

- A 29 function keyboard
- 69 channels on any of the 32 programmes
- Computer-controlled channel selection
- Programme indication with 7 segment LED, red
- Provision for video-text adaptor
- Interfacing of Teletext Decoder can be provided

Better lasting value — And that's a commitment

televista

televista
Authorised Service Agents for ITT
West Germany

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

reasoned a Central leader of the party.

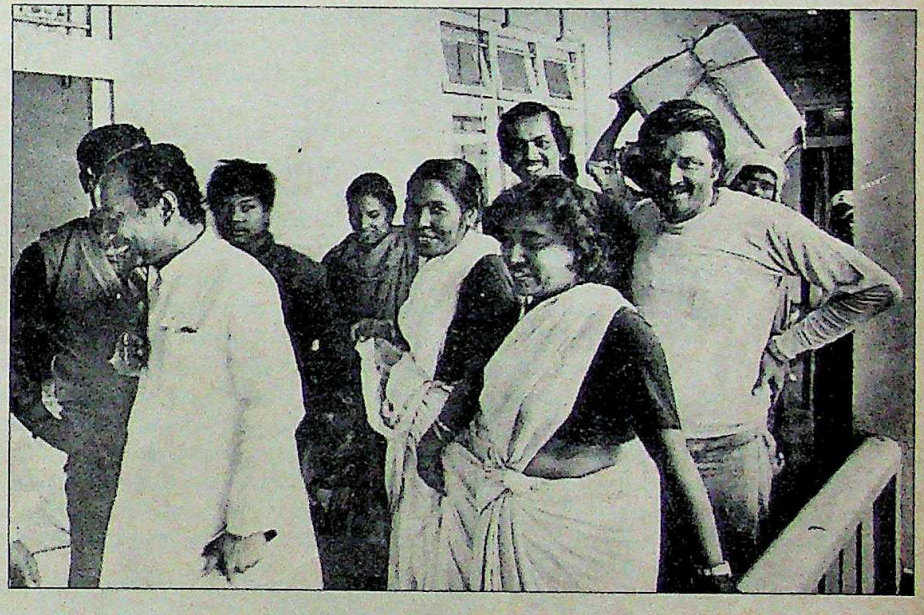
If there was anger in the Congress(I) camp, it was quickly submerged by voluminous explanations trotted out to explain the poll result. Certainly there was no dearth of foul-ups. The first lot of election posters and video cassettes arrived in Guwahati on December 7, just a week before the campaigning was to end. Worse, a lot many of these posters were in Marathi, apparently left-overs from the by-election there. Nothing shows up the party's lack of imagination better than the poster put up all over the minority areas with the question: "Even if I lose my voting right will I continue to own my property and carry out my business?" Printed across it in bold type is "Nishchay" (certainly). "Now is that a way to reassure the minorities? There are easier ways of committing suicide," a party leader complained bitterly.

Such short-sightedness, reflecting how far out of tune the party was in Assam, had more to do with the Congress(I)'s humiliation than any organisational hiccups. Whatever ethnic Assamese support the Congress (I) had was squandered away by A.B.A Ghani Khan Chowdhury's nonchalant dismissal of the Assam accord. In the course of his campaign in Bengali-dominated areas, he dismissed it as a "piece of paper that will never be implemented". The AGP which recorded the speech was quick to seize this initiative. Said Prafulla Mahanta in a series of election meetings all over the Brahmaputra valley: "We do believe that Rajiv Gandhi is sincere about the accord. But look at this, his minister for programme implementation says it will not be implemented. Will you still trust the Congress(I)?" Broadly the Congress(I) was unable to decide what its constituency was, the traditional ali-coolie-bengali (a term coined by former Congress president D.K. Barooah for the party's stronghold among the Muslims, tea labourers and Bengali immigrants) or the ethnic Assamese. Indecision cost the party votes from all.

Seeing the writing on the wall, the Congress(I) leaders grew desperate enough to invite Nar Bahadur Bhandari, the controversial Sikkim chief minister, to campaign among the Nepali-dominated areas forgetting that Hiteswar Saikia was the Congress(I) campaign chief against him at Gangtok in the December 1984 elections. Even Amitabh Bachchan, the Congress(I)'s greatest show-piece, was thrown headlong into the campaign.

But the Bachchan magic failed to work, and he faced more hostile crowds than he could possibly be used to. There were absurd episodes too. Midway through his three-day campaign there was panic as the organisers ran out of the Bisleri mineral water which he always drinks. The brand was not available in Guwahati but finally one of the hotels was able to produce a few bottles left over from the West Indies cricket team's tour.

But worse was yet to come. On the last day of his campaign, his helicopter landed by mistake in the very midst of an AGP meeting. The superstar was greeted with stones and chappals—"did you see those dents on the helicopter", he was to exclaim later—and forced to get away.



Saikia and wife moving house: graceful exit

But the drama did not end there. On taking off the pilot realised that he did not have enough room to make height at the usual angle because crowds had converged on the helipad. Nor could he land for fear of hitting people on the ground, and was left with no choice but to ask some of the passengers to jump out to reduce weight so that the chopper could fly off at a steeper angle. Bachchan's secretary Srinivasan and state Congress (I) campaign chief Bhubaneswar Kalita had to finally perform a real-life Bachchan stunt by jumping out of an airborne helicopter and face hostile crowds.

Finally, the Congress (I) aspirants' hopes were dashed by the one person they had expected would salvage some prestige for them. Rajiv Gandhi, visibly upset at the wrangling within the state unit and at the choice of candidates, acknowledged at a campaign meeting in Guwahati that many of the party candidates did not deserve nominations in the first place. Many Congress(I) old-timers strongly resented this. These remarks perhaps also prompted The Times of India into writing cynically that "the prime minister should realise that textbook morality does not pay in politics."

In their own way, the AGP leaders were trying to teach themselves the same lesson. Before the poll they had promised to set up an inquiry commission against Hiteswar Saikia. But afterwards they clearly did not want to repeat the mistakes of the Janata government which came a cropper hounding Mrs Gandhi. Saikia is an obdurate politician, a crafty customer who could thrive on a diet of political persecution. Said he: "Let them set up inquiry commissions. I have faced them before. I want them to give me more punishment so I could get some sympathy." Even as the new cabinet held its first meetings its leaders had a tough time persuading the hot-heads from giving up the inquiry demand. "No, there will be no inquiry commission and nothing else that shows a vindictive attitude. Saikia has already paid the price for his misdemeanours," says Home Minister BhriguPhukan. But there are hotheads who want action, Shah Commission style.

That sort of euphoria and youthful exuberance is going to be the new government's first immediate problem. It is one thing for a movement to ride a popular wave, but can a government ride it as well? "Why not, we have been doing it all along," says Telugu Desam's

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Men who were distributing dynamite earlier were handling poll posters. From a nationalistic viewpoint is that victory or defeat?"
NARAIN DUTT TIWARI,
Union Industries Minister

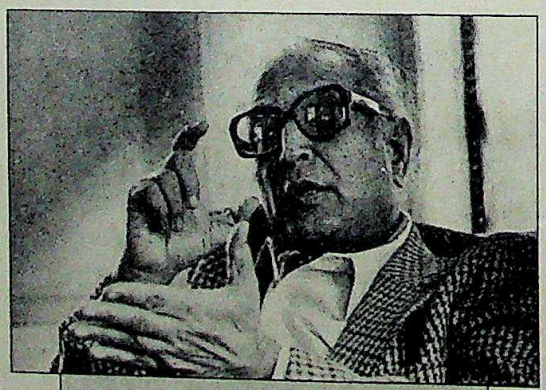
P.Upendra. But the AGP leaders say that they want to run politics much differently from NTR and would prefer to subdue passions and get down to serious governance. An indication of that resolve came last fortnight when the new cabinet members were barred from attending any public reception for a month so as to give them time to learn the ropes. Besides the party leaders were conscious of the inevitable demands that thousands involved in the agitation will now make for jobs or licences and ministers will have to be restrained from either handing out largesse or victimising those on the other side of the political fence. They do not, however, show too much worry on that score. "How long does it take to learn statecraft? Seven to ten days if we try. At least we are not a government of illiterate people," argued Atul Bora the new PWD minister.

Yet even in circles close to the AGP there is a feeling that the party suffers from administrative amateurishness. "Yes there could be a little excess of exuberance there," says former deputy inspector general of police D.K. Kakati, adding, "But democracy means a government of the amateurs and bureaucracy is what orients and guides it." On the other hand by far the greatest fears were being expressed within the bureaucracy and these were accentuated by the very first action of the new cabinet in shuffling the departments of 21 key bureaucrats, sending into cold-storage the known Congress loyalists and promoting some known movement supporters.

In the first flush of change a bit of that was perhaps inevitable. But the new leadership is conscious of the fact that the bureaucracy is the last institution it can afford to alienate. With a bureaucracy ganged up against it the AGP could hardly ever hope to tackle the serious, long-term challenges it is bound to face in months to come. None of these is as formidable as that of bridging the communal and ethnic divide which has now been formalised by the UMF.

A look at the election results (see chart) clearly indicates the kind of support the UMF was able to garner in the Muslim-dominated areas bringing about a complete communal split in the population. "Where are the great Congress leaders of the minorities, Anwara Taimur, Mohammed Idris, Sadhan Ranjan Sarkar today?" roars Osmani, bar-at-law and a one-time contributor to The New Statesman counting the names of the Congress (I) ministers humbled by his candidates. He adds menacingly: "The minorities will not allow this accord to be implemented by anyone from a position of power. Each clause of this accord is full of poison. It is a subversion of the Constitution to install into power a group which would not have come to power otherwise."

Osmani is too shrewd to say so clearly but his partymen say they will even launch a movement in the minority areas to prevent the implementation of the accord, making the going impossible for the fledgeling Government. And they have plenty of sentiment to play around with because even in the areas where the AGP won despite a sizeable Muslim vote, fear exists. At Nellie this is expressed chillingly in the words of Sirajuddin Ahmed, a petty shopkeeper who says, explaining why he voted for them: "You really think we could have voted for someone else? I lost my parents and four daughters in the 1983 massacre. My wife was cut up so badly she can barely move. Of course there is a lot of fear and if voting for the AGP means we will not die we will do it for the rest of our lives." But passions have not cooled on the other side as well. Said Pranay Patar, a Lalung youth at Nellie whose fellow tribesmen had spearheaded the murderous hordes in February 1983: "Yes I voted. Not once but twice. We want these foreigners out of here and that is what we are voting for."



"Muslims in Assam are like a shy horse. They want to come over to us but cannot decide right away."
ATAUR REHMAN
AGP MP from Barpeta

THE MORE mature elements in the party as well as the officials in the Union Home Ministry say they are conscious that the same fear that was translated into votes this time could be the key to irreversible break-up of Assam tomorrow. This is their greatest challenge and the party theoreticians are trying to devise ways of meeting it without seeming to be appeasing the minorities. Says Mahanta: "Those who have voted for us already belong to us. Now we have to reach out to the other Indian citizens who may have doubts about our intentions."

In this quest the AGP's approach is to tell the Muslims that in Assam Hindus and Muslims have shared an absolutely common heritage. "Look out of the window," says Ataur Rehman, a retired inspector-general of police and the new MP from Barpeta, pointing at the banks of the Brahmaputra from his hill-top house: "It was somewhere here that Bagh Hazarika, a Muslim commander joined forces with the Assamese Hindus to defeat the Mughals. We have a common heritage in Assam." But even Rehman, the party's most important Muslim functionary, admits that the communities have drifted apart: "The Muslims are like a shy horse. They want to come but cannot decide."

In the course of time, however, Rehman and his ilk will have their hands full with trouble as, along with the UMF, the Congress(I) also begins a renewed effort to win back the minorities. There is serious concern in the party high command which views this drift in the same perspective as the furore over the Shah Bano case and Syed Shahabuddin's victory from Kishanganj in Bihar. Assam, like Punjab is a problem sorted out by the prime minister at the cost of his own party, and he could now find the law of diminishing returns coming into play very rapidly.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

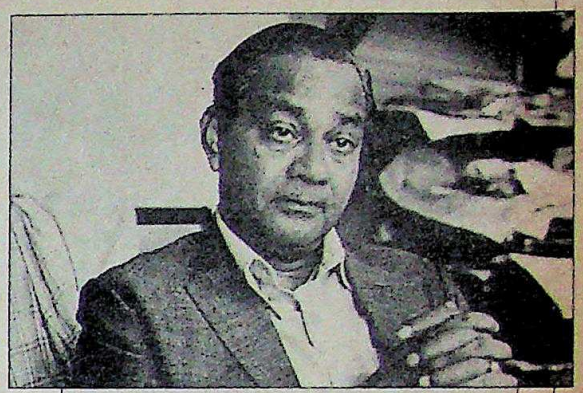
FOR THE AGP this will mean tight-rope walking on the relationship with the minorities which is the same thing as a go-slow on the implementation of the accord. Realistically speaking, the implications of the accord are mind-boggling. According to the old AASU stance Assam has at least two million infiltrators of the post-1971 stream. The agitation leaders also believe there could be over a million migrants in the 1966-71 bunch whom the accord disenfranchises. The Central Government's estimates are much lower. But numbers do not matter for even a single act of deportation in today's surcharged atmosphere could give the UMF the cause it so sorely needs.

In addition, over three million encroachers live on Assam's reserve forests and tribal belts and these include ethnic Assamese. Any effort to remove them could lead to mass violence. "The AGP will have serious problems implementing this document which is in fact an apple of discord," says D.K.Barooah, former Congress president and now a defeated Lok Sabha candidate in Nowgong. Even in party circles there is a realisation that the best policy is to forget about the accord for the time being. But can they afford to do that when it is part of their mandate?

This question brings into play the question of the AGP's relationship with the AASU which has mothered the new party besides providing it with its most committed cadres in this election. A go-slow on the accord will upset the hot-heads in the AASU spelling trouble. Says Kartik Hazarika, its new president: "We will keep the strictest watch on the government. In case it does not implement the accord we will even launch a movement against it." Despite their close relationship therefore, the AGP cannot afford to take the AASU for granted. The AASU leaders repeatedly emphasise that they are an independent organisation and not to the "AGP what the ABVP is to the BJP and the NSUI is to Congress(I)". In a few months the AASU may begin to ask searching questions particularly on the implementation of the accord. "This will be a difficult situation. It is difficult to govern people who have made themselves governable," says Dev Kant Barooah, summing up the newly elected party's compulsion to deal impartially now with the very forces that constitute its power base.

But this communal and ethnic divide, an empty treasury and a demoralised bureaucracy is the legacy the AGP has inherited. As one leader confessed: "Once excitement subsides we will realise that the real battle has only begun." If Saikia had the problem of finding legitimacy in ethnic Assamese areas, AGP has a similar problem in the minority pockets of Goalpara, Dhubri and the Barak Valley districts of Cachar and Karimganj.

Also, while the party leaders learn the ropes politically and administratively they will also have to find their bearings on the national scene. An overwhelming opinion in the party seems to be against a confrontation with the Centre but its seven-member team in Parliament will sit with the Opposition, the third largest group in its ranks. It is significant that, while maintaining a close relationship with Telugu Desam, the AGP has been shying from the Bharat Desam concept to bring together regional parties. "Tell me, is Bharat Desam a regional party?" asks veteran MP Dinesh Goswami. Mahanta has been talking in terms of a regional party with a national outlook but that is neither here nor there. Within Assam there are strong regionalistic pressures.



"This nice young prime minister who wants to do good to everyone is destroying his party in its 100th year."

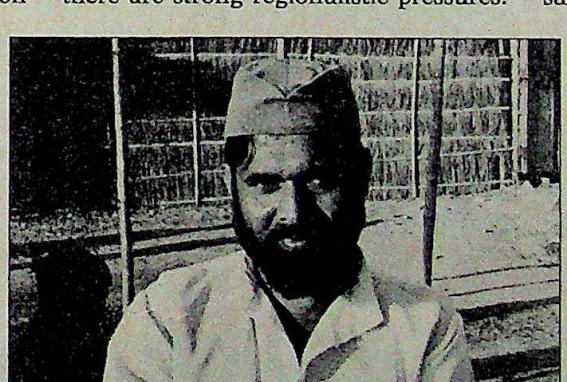
A.F. GOLAM OSMANI
president of United Minorities Front

"What is wrong with our having a regional party? If it is okay to be an Andhra in Andhra Pradesh and a Tamil in Tamil Nadu what is wrong with being an Assamese in Assam?" questions Indrajit Barua, a Guwahati engineer.

This is where the catch lies. Six years of agitation, destruction, the devastation of 1983 poll and now the communal polarisation in the election have almost redefined the word Assamese as an Assamese caste Hindu who also happens to be the mainstay of the AGP. But any party wanting to do even half a job of ruling a multi-lingual state with a history of recurrent violence cannot afford to have just about 30 to 40 per cent of the population on its side. To survive in power and to fulfil some of the aspirations that drove nearly 80 per cent of the voters in Assam, an all-time national record, the AGP's first priority will have to be to broadbase itself, to win the confidence of those who did not vote for it. "People have taken a great risk and if we fail it will be a colossal let-down," says MP Dinesh Goswami.

The coming months will prove whether the AGP was worthy of that trust. Though now perched atop lofty political heights the student leaders will need to show results quickly; bring together a fragmented society, restore order and resume economic activity, a stiff test for a bunch of men and women with an average age of less than 31.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA in Guwahati



"Of course there is fear among us. If voting for the AGP means that we will not die, we will do so for the rest of our lives."

SIRAJUDDIN AHMED
Nellie shopkeeper

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BY-ELECTIONS

Congress(I) Woes

EVEN as north India shuddered through a series of cold waves last month, a chill seemed to have struck the Congress(I). The news from Assam was bad enough: what added to the gloom were the results to the by-elections to seven Lok Sabha seats and nine assembly seats. Not only did the Congress (I) lose in three parliamentary and five assembly seats, with the sole exception of Churu in Rajasthan and Madhepura in Bihar its voting percentage plummeted in all the seats it contested. Without exception, its victory margins in the four Lok Sabha seats and the two assembly seats were lower than the last time around, while the margins of defeat were invariably higher.

The contrast with last December's verdict could not have been more stark. Then, the Congress (I) had won more than 80 per cent of the seats it contested and nearly 50 per cent of the votes polled. This time it got a majority of the votes polled only in Churu, with the fall in the voting percentage ranging from a high of 28 per cent in Banka to the lowest of 5 per cent in Bolpur. Even in South Delhi its voting percentage fell by almost 7 per cent.

Nor was the decline sudden. The trend was noticed as early as March and April when elections to the state Assembly were held in 11 states followed by by-elections in three Lok Sabha and 22 assembly seats. In the Assembly poll, the party won a quarter less seats compared to the Assembly segments it had led in December 1984 with its share of the popular vote falling in every state apart from Gujarat. And in the by-elections it won only one of the three Lok Sabha seats and seven of the assembly seats.

Opposition leaders were elated. Said Bharatiya Janata Party leader Atal Behari Vajpayee: "If the March results were a warning, these results are final proof that the myth of Rajiv's popularity has finally been exploded. What is most surprising is the speed of the decline: even the Janata Party's popularity had not declined so rapidly." Added Janata Party leader Chandra Shekhar: "This is bad news. If their popularity continues to decline, I am afraid they might decide to close their democratic options."

What was disturbing for the Congress(I) was the evidence of a growing alienation between itself and its vote banks. In the last general elections—admittedly a battle fought in unique conditions—the party had not only got the support of its traditional vote banks—the Muslims and the Harijans—but also the votes of the majority Hindu community. The support of the Hindus held through in the Punjab elections in September but last month's by-elections suggest that it has lost a great deal of ground not only among the Hindus in Punjab but also among the Muslims and Scheduled Castes in most other areas. Admitted former Bihar chief minister Jagannath Mishra: "The results definitely show an erosion in the party's traditional bases—Muslims, Brahmins and weaker sections."

The BJP wrested both the Jalandhar North and Central seats, both Hindu-dominated areas, from the Congress (I). The Janata Party General Secretary, Syed Shahabuddin, trounced the Congress (I)'s Maulana Israrul Haque Quasmi in the Kishanganj constituency in Bihar which has a 60 per cent Muslim vote. In Bijnore, which has a 30 per cent Muslim and 20 per cent Harijan electorate, Jagjivan Ram's daughter, Meera Kumar, contesting on the Congress (I) ticket barely scraped home with 6,000-odd votes. And the little known Mayawati of the Bahujan Samaj Party, which speaks exclusively for the Harijans, took away a healthy chunk of 61,000 votes.

The reasons for this alienation were not hard to seek. Admitted Shahabuddin: "Though I kept my campaign very secular—not even mentioning the word Shah Bano once in my speeches—there is no denying the unease in the Muslim mind about the Centre's ambivalence regarding the Shah Bano case and the unfair deal given to the minorities in Assam gave me a solid base of support." Said Vajpayee: "There is no denying that the Hindu in Punjab is very unhappy. Our votes reflect this."

The poor results cast a shadow over a host of Congress(I) chief ministers who virtually staked their personal reputation in the electoral contests. Topping this list was Janaki Ballabh Patnaik of Orissa, who virtually contested the Kendrapara Lok Sabha seat through his

WINNERS

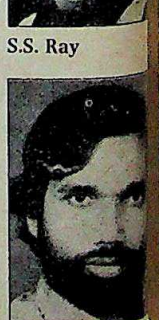
Shahabuddin

Meera Kumar

S. Chatterjee

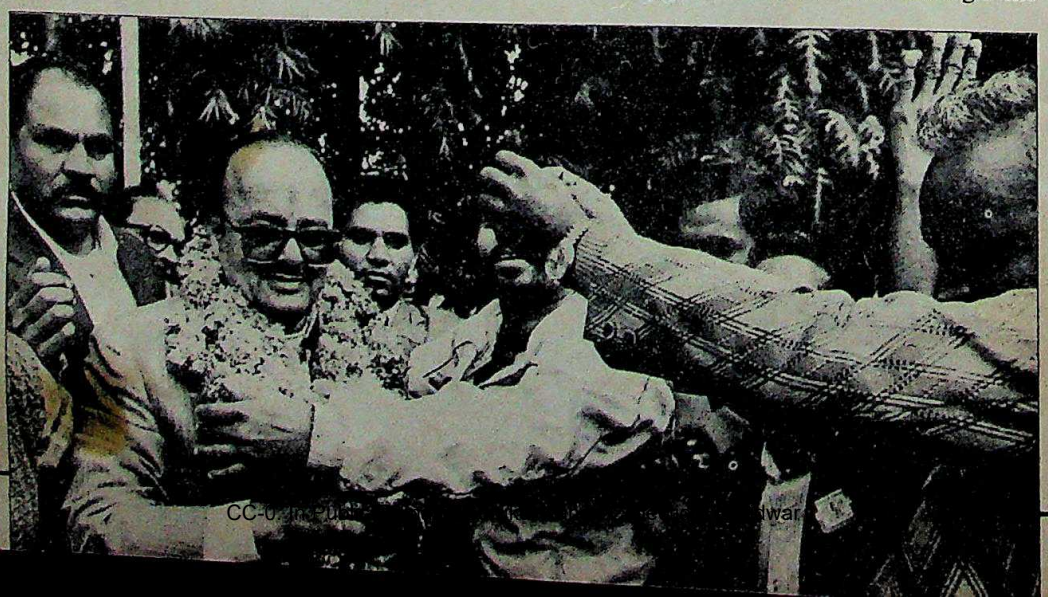
LOSERS

S.S. Ray



B.K. Paswan

B.K. Biswal



Arjun Singh after the victory

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

nominee, Basanta Kumar Biswal, only to be convincingly beaten by the Janata Party's Sarat Chandra Deb. The seat had been vacated by Biju Patnaik, who had won by a margin of 16,000 votes: Deb triumphed by two-and-a-half times the margin.

For the chief minister, this defeat represented his fourth straight loss in by-elections. In April, the Congress (I) had lost three Assembly by-elections, including one seat that had been vacated by J.B.Patnaik himself. He tried to rationalise the defeat by arguing that it was "normal" for a ruling party to lose a by-election. He also said that this was a "sympathy vote" for the Opposition, so as not to deny the only seat out of 21 from Orissa that does not belong to the Congress (I).

There were the inevitable allegations of sabotage. The reference was to supporters of the state party chief, Nityananda Mishra, who are known to be unhappy with both the chief minister and Biswal, though Biswal would only say: " I am a disciplined Congressman and I do not want to say anything." But for Biju Patnaik, the ballot-box's message was clear: "The people have shown J.B.Patnaik and his crony the exit gate but he has got stuck up there."

J.B.Patnaik had the consolation, however, that he was not lacking in company. Gujarat Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary and his Maharashtra counterpart, Shivajirao Patil-Nilangekar, were embarrassed by the party's losses in Sayajigunj and Shingnapur. In the former, which is part of the Baroda parliamentary constituency, the party ticket had been allotted to Dr Chandrika Purohit, with the full backing of Chaudhary, though former finance minister Sanat Mehta, who also belongs to Baroda, might have been a more formidable candidate. But former Baroda police commissioner Jaspal Singh, who contested as an independent, left her way behind to win by 8,365 votes.

An independent also proved to be the nemesis for Nilangekar. Shingnapur falls in Parbhani district in the Marathwada region, which is where Nilangekar comes from. The Congress (I) candidate here was Raosaheb Jamkar, a former minister, who is considered close not only to Nilangekar but also to the ex-chief minister Vasantrao Patil. Ranged against him were a rebel Congress (I) candidate, Suresh Varpudkar, and Uttamrao Gavali of the Congress (S). Nilangekar left no stone unturned to retain the seat—even sowing confusion among Congress (S) ranks by charging that party leader Sharad Pawar was all set to join the Congress (I)—but still his candidate finished third, after Varpudkar and Gavali. The defeat was the signal for Nilangekar's detractors within the party to hoist the flag of dissent. One powerful Marathwada MP, who had previously led campaigns to dislodge Babasaheb Bhosale and Patil, openly asked how proper it was for Nilangekar to continue as the chief minister when he wasn't even a member of the Assembly (he was elected to the council).

For Bindeshwari Dubey, the results in Bihar—one Lok Sabha and one assembly seat lost, one each won—came as so much of a shock that he refused to comment on them. His track record is only slightly better than J.B.Patnaik. In April, the party had lost in two of the three assembly by-elections. This time around the party lost the Kishanganj Lok Sabha seat because of the disenchantment among Muslims even though Dubey had spared no effort to defeat Shahabuddin. Not only had he attacked Shahabuddin personally from every platfrom, on the day of the polling there were as many as 18 state ministers present in Kishanganj. The party also lost Kishunpur (in Saharsa district) to the Lok Dal.

It took Madhepura to retrieve some of the lost prestige, but here the credit went more to Congress (I) MP, Satyendra Narain Sinha, than the chief minister: the party candidate is known to be a close follower of the veteran Sinha. It also triumphed in Banka, where former chief minister Chandrashekhar Singh was up against George Fernandes, but Singh's margin was greatly reduced. While the BJP's Janardhan Yadav took away 70,000 votes, Fernandes' ire was reserved for the Bihar administration, which was accused of posting officers convenient to Singh on the eve of the poll. As expected, the indifferent result only sharpened the factional quarrels within the party. Said Kamal Nath Singh Thakur, MLC and known Mishra's alter ego: "It is high time the high command assessed the mood of the people and gave the state a popular leader to run its affairs."

Veteran Siddhartha Shankar Ray's defeat in Bholpur at the hands of the Marxist Somnath Chatterjee was doubly embarrassing. By fielding a high-profile candidate like Ray, the party had upped the ante in a traditionally Marxist seat and Ray's campaign, virtually a referendum on Left Front rule, elevated it to more than a simple by-election. In the event, Ray's

DECLINING FORTUNES

Percentage of Congress(I) vote in By-elections

LOK SABHA

	December 1984	March 1985	December 1985	Swing: '85 over '84
BANKA	64.08	53.80	43.85	– 20.23
KISHANGANJ	44.19	39.11	36.15	– 8.04
SOUTH DELHI	61.70	n.a.	54.81	– 6.89
KENDRAPARRA	50.14	49.50	44.17	– 5.97
CHURU	51.28	40.92	54.10	+ 2.82
BIJNOR	56.78	8.80	37.10	– 19.68
BOLPUR	44.53	n.a.	39.52	– 5.01

(The March 1985 percentages are the total of the assembly segments in that Lok Sabha constituency as polled in the Assembly elections; n.a. = not applicable as no election was held.)

ASSEMBLY

	December 1984	March 1985	December 1985	Swing: '85 over '84
BIHAR
Kishunpur	41.43	39.80	33.00	– 8.43
Madhepura	47.41	39.53	51.79	+ 4.38
MAHARASHTRA
Singnapur	57.98	54.82	24.50	– 33.48
GUJARAT
Sayajigunj	53.45	63.64	35.61	+ 17.84
PUNJAB
Jalandhar North	n.a.	66.26*	39.59	– 26.67
Jalandhar South	n.a.	47.72*	35.40	– 12.32
WEST BENGAL
Nanur	45.92	n.a.	43.16	– 10.54
NEW DELHI
Laxmibai Nagar	68.28	n.a.	51.64	– 16.64

(The December 1984 column refers to votes polled in that assembly segment during the Lok Sabha poll; n.a. = not applicable since no election was held;
*Punjab comparison is with September 1985 election. The details of the Cheyyar by-election in Tamil Nadu and Aurangabad in West Bengal were not available.)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SAYAJIGANJ

Poll Upset

FORMER police commissioner of Baroda Jaspal Singh's victory in the Sayajigunj assembly by-elections last fortnight was a result as much of his own popularity as the chaos in the Congress(I) camp. The ruling party's organisational setup, manned by two of Solanki's lieutenants Mahant Vijaydasji and Hasmukh Patel, was unable to whip up an effective campaign. Worse still was the choice of a candidate. Hoping that sentiments would play a part, the party fielded Dr Chandrika Purohit, wife of the late Shirish Purohit, the party whip, whose death resulted in the by-election. The choice came as a big disappointment to party workers.

Jaspal Singh

Singh's victory in Gujarat assumes significance because Sayajigunj has always been a Congress(I) stronghold. Barring the victory of Janata front nominee Gajanan Paradkar in 1975, the Congress always reigned supreme. The defeat of the Congress has been blamed on the negative vote by the poor. On one hand, traditional vote banks like Harijans and Muslims did not turn up at the polling booths in expected numbers because of doubts over the state Government's commitment to reservations for backward classes and apprehensions whipped up in the wake of the Shah Bano case. Significantly, Singh, who polled 31,274 votes compared with Purohit's 22,909, secured more votes in backward areas of Navayard and Tandilja.

Singh had emerged as a controversial figure after he was transferred from Baroda city to Gandhinagar as DIG (Computers), an administrative job. The Solanki administration didn't—understandably—take kindly to his open criticism of its policies while he was in service. But by then he had become something of a public hero. His transfer triggered off communal riots as it was believed that a delegation of Muslims in Baroda had asked for his transfer suspecting that he was igniting communal feelings. The Hindus felt that they must demand for his continuation as police commissioner. He then sought voluntary retirement from service and contested the last Lok Sabha election from Baroda on a BJP ticket, which he lost.

But Singh wasn't a man to give up easily. He filed his nomination in Raopura from where BJP state party president Makrand Desai was contesting. The BJP was not amused and expelled him. Singh contested as an independent—and lost. His perseverance has now paid off. Singh ascribes his victory to the electorate's desire for action and their disgust with petty politics. "The people expect me to represent the new culture of upholding values and fighting corruption. I have been getting letters from all corners of the state telling me that they expect me to set things right. Their expectations scare me, but I will not fail them now," he says.

Singh—always the showman—is now planning to lead a rally of over a lakh of Baroda citizens demanding elections to the city municipal corporation which would have taken place in February '86, but the corporation has postponed it for a year. Singh alleges that this is because they do not have the confidence to face the electorate. One of his foremost tasks, he says, is to save the city from pollution and improve civic facilities. "I am going to wage a war with the corporation and make all officials accountable," he says. And Baroda's citizens are eagerly looking out for some fireworks in the Assembly now hoping that the otherwise tamed opposition in Gujarat will get some long needed thrust.

True to his style, Jaspal's campaigning caught the imagination of the voters. He is a fast learner and met as many people as he could personally. He took time off to be with those who live in jhuggi jhopadis, sitting down to listen to them as no other candidate had ever done in the past. "The misery and the poverty that I have seen in the last few weeks among my supporters has taught me much," he says. His switch from a policeman to a politician has obviously been quick and effortless.

—RAMESH MENON

margin of defeat was nearly 40,000 votes more than the party's loss in the December election, and put paid to the Congress(I)'s strategy of projecting an alternative to the charismatic Jyoti Basu.

Ray's loss was also a jolt to the new state party chief, Priya Ranjan Das Munshi, who faces powerful detractors within the party. Das Munshi tried to explain away the defeat as a victory for the CPI(M)'s capacity to organise votes, but the state CPI(M) secretary Saroj Mukherjee was quite clear in his mind about the result: "This is a positive vote for the good work done by the Left Front."

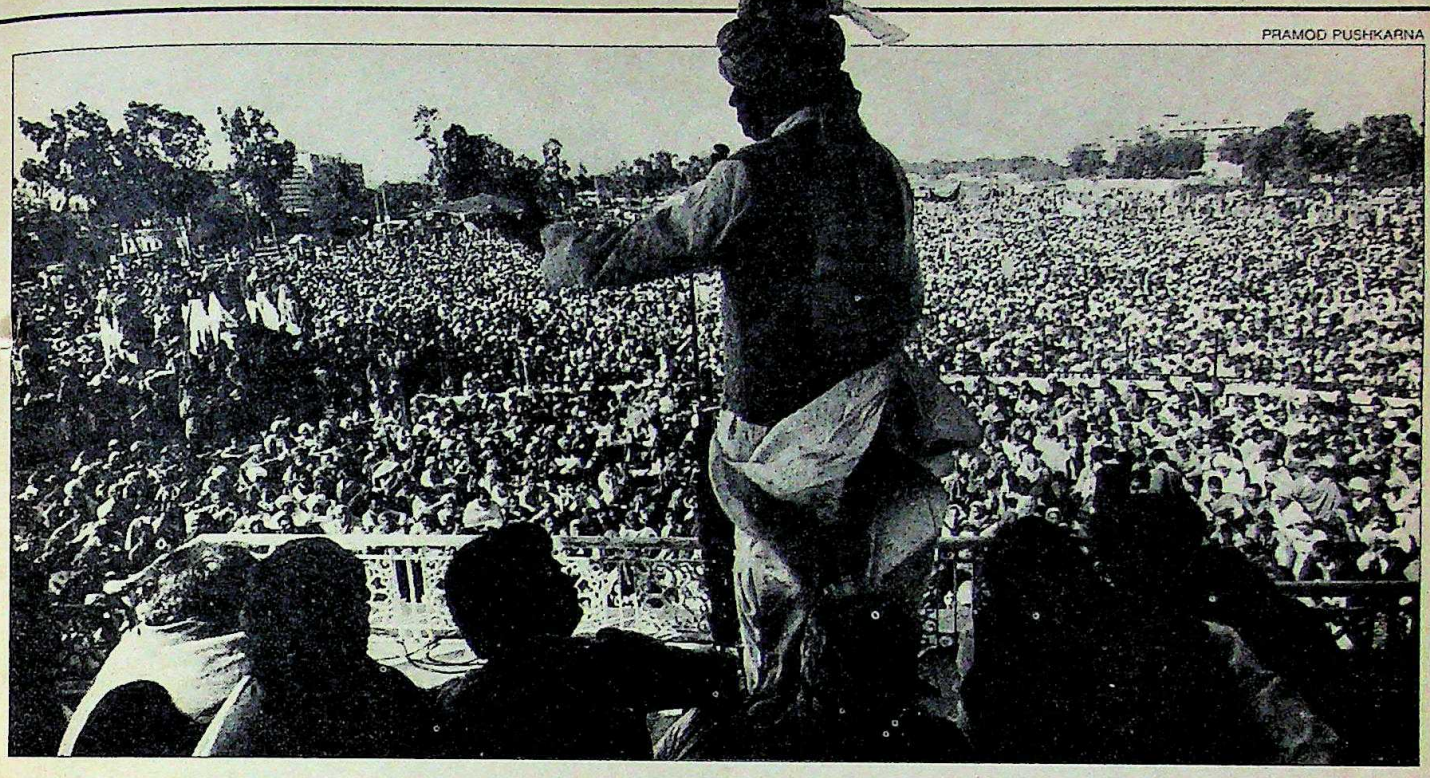
For the Congress (I) the silver lining was provided by Churu, where its fresh-faced 31-year-old candidate, Narendra Bhudania, a mere village sarpanch, convincingly trounced the veteran Jat leader, Daulat Ram Saran of the Lok Dal, who had won this seat twice in the past. This was the one seat that the Opposition was most sanguine about winning. Saran's defeat left them nonplussed. Lok Dal leaders accused the Congress (I) of rigging the poll but the message was fairly clear: the voters preferred a young Jat with a clean image to a tired old warhorse.

Set-backs in by-elections are normal after the kind of massive victories witnessed in 1984, 1980 and 1977. But the Congress(I) has slipped rather more than it expected. But there seems to be little reason for the kind of euphoria that has erupted in opposition ranks which see in these by-election results the beginning of the end of the ruling party's fortunes. Said Lok Dal leader Karpoori Thakur: "The people can no longer be taken for a ride. This is the beginning of the people's revolt against Congress (I) misrule." Adds Vajpayee: "The poor everywhere are showing their disillsionment. Even in Delhi we got more votes than the Congress (I) in areas where the poor are in an overwhelming majority." They expect that the Congress (I) will now take some ameliorative measures—particularly to assuage the Muslims, whose conceived threat to the Shariat comes on top of the community's feeling of discrimination on government jobs—but feel that the party's image as anti-poor is too indelible to erase. Says Chandra Shekhar: "The image has stuck to Rajiv that he has no sympathy for the poor." Opposition leaders might be guilty of overstating the case but it would be disastrous for the Congress(I) were it to satisfy itself with Patnaik's reasoning that ruling parties always lose by-elections. Perhaps, but not so badly.

—AJAY KUMAR with FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

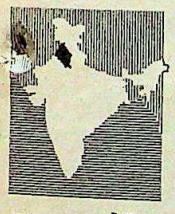


PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Devi Lal addressing rally: new rhetoric

PUNJAB & HARYANA

Discord over the Accord



STRAINS are beginning to manifest themselves in the implementation of the Punjab accord and the question increasingly doing the rounds in the corridors of power in Haryana and Punjab is whether the "memorandum of settlement" will be implemented in the spirit with which it was drawn up.

The ball was set rolling by none other than Lok Dal leader and former chief minister Devi Lal, who led a massive demonstration to Parliament last fortnight. And joining him were supporters of the Bharatiya Janata Party and the Janata—no matter that they had been perhaps the first to welcome the accord—who lent their support to what Lal called "a march to get justice." Warned the fiery Haryana leader: "If we do not get our share of waters and Hindi-speaking villages in lieu of Chandigarh by January 15, 1986, we shall bring to a halt all movement on road or rail."

That the Haryana Government had thrown its weight behind the marchers was evident in the orders issued to the district administrations to arrange vehicles to ferry the demonstrators to Delhi. And Chief Minister Bhajan Lal's denials only lent credence to Punjab Chief Minister Surjit Singh Barnala's charge that it was a government march. But the Lok Dal and Janata leaders asserted that the tremendous response was a result of the peoples' anger. "The Government tried its best to stop the march at Bahadurgarh but failed. The Centre must understand the anger of the people of Haryana," said Balwant Rao Tayal, former Janata minister who was arrested in Delhi.

Police controlling demonstrators: emerging conflict

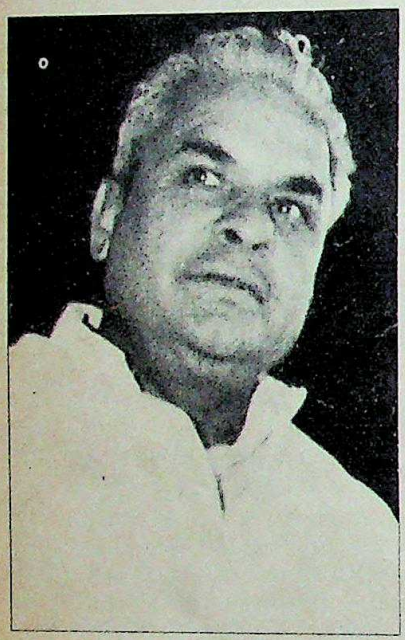
The march also made it clear that Bhajan Lal had gone back on his earlier stand that a few villages here and there meant nothing. Said the wily Jat: "My government and the people of Haryana will not honour any decision taken on the basis of the accord, even if the Mathew Commission gives the Hindi-speaking areas of Abohar and Fazilka to Haryana, until prompt steps are taken to complete the Sutlej-Yamuna Link Canal that will give Haryana its share of surplus waters." Much the same was stated in New Delhi after a meeting with the prime minister—obviously, Lal was intent on stoking the fires for all it was worth.

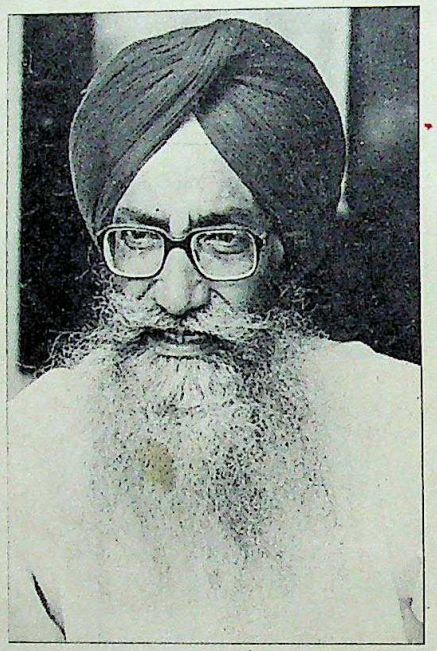
But his rhetoric had had its effect. Senior Akali leaders like Balwant Singh made repeated trips to Delhi to voice their concern to the Union Commerce Minister Arjun Singh and the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Minister of State for Internal Security Arun Nehru about the implications of Bhajan Lal's stand. And Barnala categorically told INDIA TODAY: "The accord is explicit. Chandigarh is to be transferred to Punjab by January 26 and the canal is to be completed by August 15. Work on the canal is in progress and there is only a minor dispute over the realignment of a small section of the canal. We are confident that this will be done in the stipulated time."





Bhajan Lal (left); and Surjit Singh Barnala: tug-of-war

His apparent confidence only underscored the apprehensions in the Akali camp. Both Barnala and Balwant Singh fear delay and have pointed out that loss of Abohar and Fazilka would mean a serious loss of face for them. Said Barnala: "If the accord is sabotaged and the prime minster, as one of the signatories, fails to get it implemented in letter and spirit, we shall not be able to govern the state."

What has the Akalis really worried is the prime minsiter's failure to amend a clause in the terms of reference of the commission while publicily admitting it to be an oversight. Clause 7.2 of the accord directed the commission to strictly adhere to the twin principles of contiguity and linguistic affinity in deciding the boundary question. But there was a vague "other factors" clause upon which Haryana has rested its claims to Abohar and Fazilka.

Justice K.K.Mathew's term, which was to have ended on December 31, 1985, has now been extended till January 15 pending a solution, but nothing is in sight. His suggestion that the Centre should send fresh enumerators to Abohar and Fazilka, has met with opposition. Intelligence Bureau (IB) teams sent by Union Home Minister S.B.Chavan to study the feasibility of holding a fresh census in Abohar and Fazilka have warned of the situation taking a communal turn. "This mini-census will create an explosive situation. The life of enumerators will be under constant threat and the findings would be disputed by the aggrieved state. It could be simple disaster in an atmosphere already surcharged with tension," the IB report says. The fear is that the head-counting may turn into a head hunt with Hindus and Sikhs on opposite sides. Moreover, since the enumerators will be from Punjab—as per census operation practices—the result might not be acceptable to Haryana.

More important, the census commissioner had made amply clear to the Centre that the doubts expressed by the Haryana Government—which termed the 1981 census as coloured—were unwarranted and unethical. Haryana feels that the census showed more than 85 per cent of the people as Punjabi-speaking, which is "incorrect". But the census commissioner felt otherwise. "The 1981 census was conducted under normal circumstances and a fresh census would be nothing but a mockery of the system itself," the commission representatives told the Union Home Ministry. With so much at stake, there is a suggestion from the Centre that the aggrieved parties in the territorial dispute sort things out across the table but the snag is nobody is sure if the spirit of give and take exists.

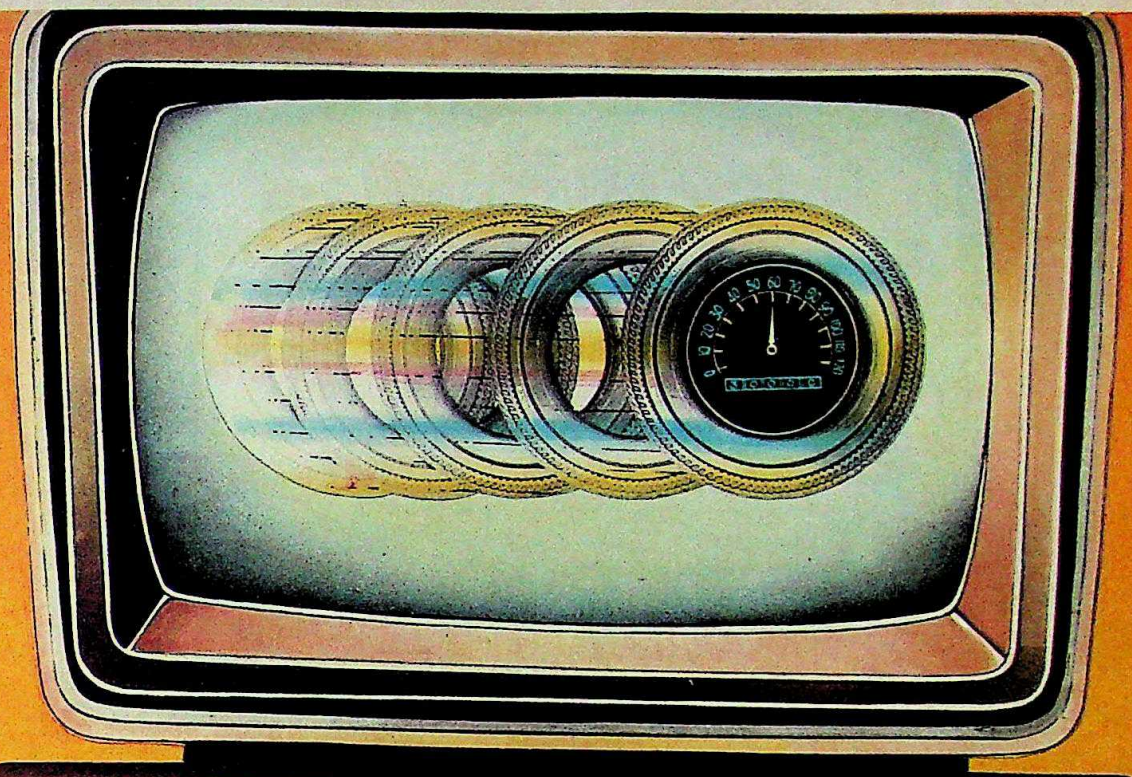
Last fortnight, Union Home Secretary R.D.Pradhan flew into Chandigarh to assure Barnala that the prime minister was keen that the accord be implemented in the time frame envisaged. And in fact for the Akalis, the prime minister is their only hope. "Whenever we have met him, we have come back with the hope that we shall get justice," said Barnala. But others, like SGPC President Gurcharan Singh Tohra, think differently. "Bhajan Lal has no courage to speak a word unless his bosses in Delhi tell him to do so. I fear mischief at the Central level and that is very sad," he says and warned that the prime minister must get the accord implemented if confrontation is to be avoided. His opinions are shared by many. Said Akali MP Shaminder Singh: "I have discovered in Delhi that all are keen to help Haryana and we have no sympathetic ear." Fortunately, matters seemed to clear when Balwant met Rajiv Gandhi and Arun Nehru in Delhi. "The accord will be implemented as scheduled," he said confidently. He added that he had told the prime minister that Bhajan Lal should identify three dozen villages contiguous to Haryana in Patiala district. Earlier the Akalis had offered only 13 villages.

What really stands in Barnala's favour is the fact that he is the first Akali chief minister to head both the Government and the organisation wing of the party. Previous chief ministers Prakash Singh Badal and Gurnam Singh had to function under overbearing party presidents but Barnala was elected unopposed as head of the party. With an unprecedented authorisation from the delegates, he is now finalising his 31-member working committee and expanding his six-member cabinet.

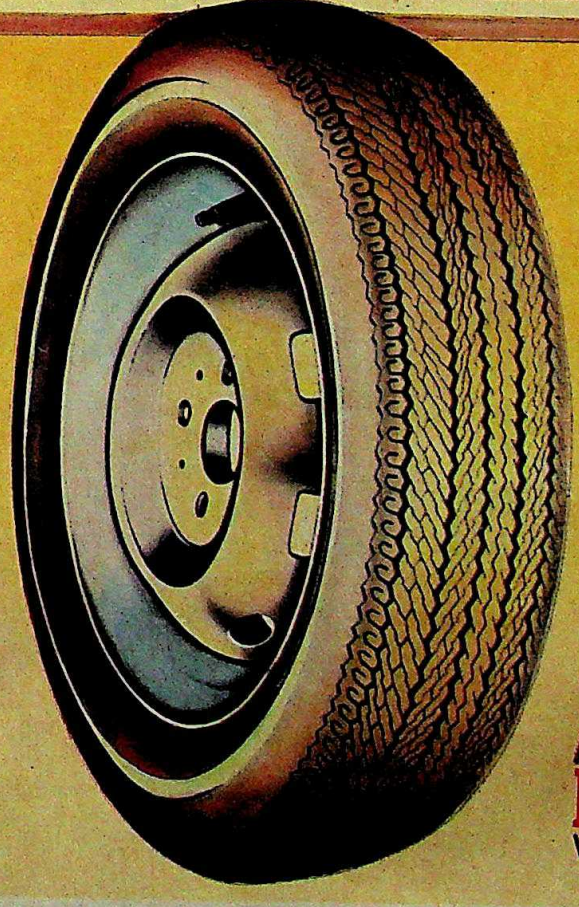
But law and order is taking up much of his time. A Hindu-Sikh clash was averted by timely police intervention in Gurdaspur district after a violent group of Shiv Sena workers pelted stones at some petty Sikh shopkeepers near a temple. Police had to fire killing one and injuring a dozen others. "We had to resort to firing to scare away the warring communities after lathi charge and tear-gassing failed," said district police chief J.P.Birdi. "But for our intervention, the town would have witnessed unimaginable bloodshed." More was to come. Terrorists led by a dismissed police constable Balwinder Singh, who were in-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



MORE MILEAGE. From the COMPUTER created car tyres



Modistone COMPUMILER RANGE

Modistone Car Tyres — the Modistone Compumiler range — are manufactured on computerised machines. A process that lends the tyres characteristics few tyres have.

Modistone Compumiler range— premium nylon tyres that are just right for this computer age. With safety, comfort, reliability and longlife engineered into every fibre, every component that goes into making the tyres.

Modistone Compumiler range— few car tyres are quite like them because they are literally built by the computer! That's why 2,50,000 people chose Modistone for their cars last year. Proof enough that they're the largest selling car tyres in India.

Modistone
When miles matter

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OONT
The first bidi to win The Monde Selection Award.

The 19th Monde Selection Awards at Belgium witnessed a special category being created for a bidi. Thanks to the lasting impression of quality that your favourite Oont Bidi created. Making it the first bidi anywhere in the world to win the Monde Selection Gold Medal!

Kisanlal Bastiram Sarda
Nasik 422 001

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

volved in the killing of Hiralal—a businessman of Barnala—were trapped by the Barnala police. While Balwinder Singh was captured, another terrorist Jagtar Singh was killed in the shoot out. On December 20 a three-member gang looted a branch of the State Bank of Patiala in a Bhatinda village. An alert police inspector Jhanda Singh chased them and killed gang leader Gurcharan Singh in an exchange of fire. Two others—one of them the son of an executive magistrate of Bhatinda—were arrested.

But these successes were meager compared to the extent of terrorist activities throughout the length and breadth of Punjab. In Amritsar, Ludhiana and Hoshiarpur, terrorists struck at chosen targets looting banks and robbing bus passengers and seriously injuring BJP leader Hardial in Dasuya in Hoshiarpur. More worrying to the state police is the frequent crossings of terrorists from Pakistan into Punjab—no less than seven such groups have infiltrated into the state and intelligence reports and interrogation of some of those captured indicate that though they are operating independently of each other, their aim is the same—create panic and incite communal violence. "We have definite information of Pakistan training Sikh terrorists and have used this information to nab at least three terrorists," claims Amritsar Police chief S.S.Virk.

For the politicians, however, empty posturing and sabre-rattling provides all the histrionic appeal they could ever ask for—no matter that the future of the Punjab accord and all that it implies stands in increasing danger of being annuled.

—GOBIND THUKRAL

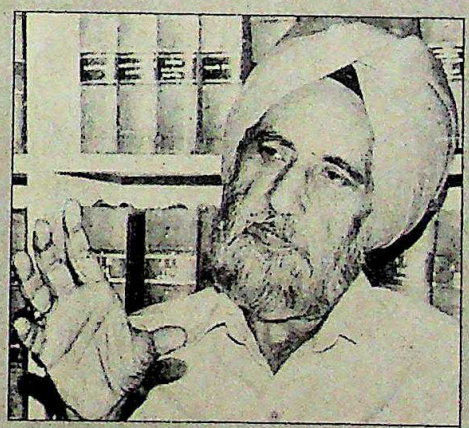
BAINS COMMITTEE

Lack of Action

TO RELEASE or not to release—that is the Hamlet-like dilemma facing Punjab Chief Minister Surjit Singh Barnala. On the one hand is the promise that he and his party made to the electorate three months ago, to release all persons detained during the Akali agitation against whom there are no serious charges or insufficient evidence of wrongdoing. On the other hand is the objection voiced by the prime minister to "indiscriminate releases" and the subsequent stand of the state police opposing any large-scale release of detenus. To make things worse, a confrontation has developed between the police and retired high court judge Ajit Singh Bains who headed the four-man committee appointed by the state Government to review the detenus' cases.

The appointment of the committee was to be expected after the Akalis charged before and during the election that "innocent persons, particularly youth, were arrested on false charges by the police which ran berserk killing scores of people in false encounters". The committee was set up on October 1, and initially given a month, and later six months more, to go into 2,170 cases involving over 4,120 persons. The state police never hid their unhappiness with the committee. Eventually, says Bains, he managed to screen 80 per cent of the cases but as even he admitted: "We had hurdles all the way. The police took its own time and did not put forward all the cases."

The police attitude disappointed and distressed Bains. His committee had recommended the release of over 2,000 persons in October itself but so far the Government has released only 992 of them. The police admit the niggardly pace of releases and add, that the number of detenus actually released is even less—in fact, only 26. As Inspector-General of Police (Crime) Hardyal Singh Sekhon says, 833 of the 992 persons recommended for release were already out on bail. Only 26 were actually released and the remaining 33 are still behind bars in connection with cases other than those registered during the Akali agitation.



Justice Bains: disappointed

For Bains, the unkindest cut of all was the appointment of a police committee to screen the recommendations of the Bains Committee. "It is the police which launched false cases, maimed or killed scores of people and now it is to be the judge to screen our recommendations... and ask the committee to furnish evidence for the recommendations," Bains protested to Barnala. Bains wondered why this step was necessary when the "prosecution admits that it has no evidence to support in court the cases which have been pending for years."

Bains believes that 99 per cent of the police encounter cases are "bogus". "Having failed to catch the real culprits, the police, more often than not, involved innocent persons in encounters. This state terrorism which had the backing of the rulers of that time complicated the already complex situation in Punjab," Bains observed. A police spokesman promptly joined issue saying: "The committee is obviously labouring under the misconception that it is an executive body. It is not. It is just an advisory panel whose recommendations we are reviewing." To which, Bains retorted: "I have not recommended the case of every Tom, Dick and Harry."

This slanging match between Bains and the police is hurting the image of the Barnala Government and adds grist to the extremist mill. "This is a bogus government; it does not accept the recommendations of its own committee," snorted H.S.Kahlon, convenor of the militant All India Sikh Students' Federation (AISSF) which has threatened an agitation on this issue. Barnala has not only to counteract such propaganda but also convince his Sikh constituents in Punjab of his sincerity to carry out his poll promise while at the same time carry assurance with the Central Government that the releases are not indiscriminate. "We are aware of the grim reality and know our responsibility," he had said in reply to Rajiv Gandhi's charge of indiscriminate releases. His dilemma admits of no easy solutions and how he resolves it will be watched with interest.

—GOBIND THUKRAL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MADHYA PRADESH

Ending An Inquiry

THE MEMORY of that night still haunts. But the average Bhopali is struggling hard to salvage what he can from the disaster of the Union Carbide gas tragedy. For most people that now means a seemingly unending wait for compensation for the loss and suffering. Nothing else seems to matter much. So when the state Government last month announced its decision to close the judicial inquiry into the tragedy, there was not even a whimper of protest.

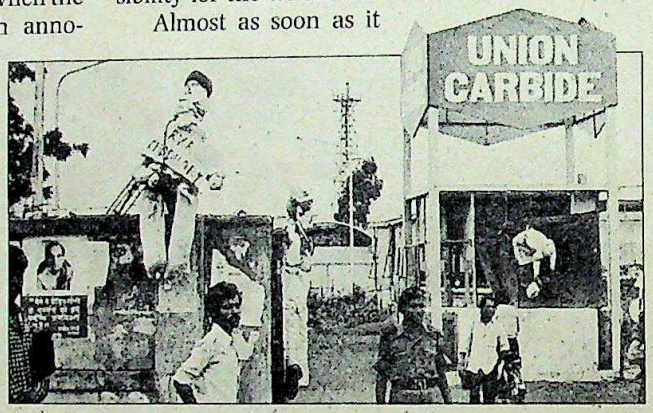
In fact most of the victims were not even aware that the Government had begun an inquiry into the affair in the first place. And it was precisely this ignorance and indifference that the Government turned to its advantage in taking this decision. As Chief Minister Moti Lal Vora said: "The decision will help the people who were affected by the gas." The implication was clear: that the victims would be better off getting money rather than fretting about the causes behind the tragedy.

However, a senior state government official who did not wish to be named, said the decision had been taken at the instance of the Government of India's lawyers in USA since they felt that the inquiry's findings might affect the compensation claim of $500 million made on behalf of the victims.

If the N.K. Singh Commission, which was entrusted with the probe on December 6, 1984, eventually established that the Madhya Pradesh Government, the Union Government and Union Carbide India Limited (UCIL) all shared the blame equally, Union Carbide Corporation (UCC) might have got away with less compensation. In fact, Union Minister of State for Law and Justice H.R. Bhardwaj even suggested that the probe had been withdrawn because "information submitted there was reaching the Union Carbide Corporation in America".

Vora, however, denied that the probe had been withdrawn under pressure from the lawyers. Said the chief minister: "There was no reason to keep it going since the Government had also appointed the Vardharajan Committee and the Krishnamurthi Committee to go into the incident." This suits the Government fine, since both committees are carrying out their investigations on a scientific level only and do not enjoy the wide terms of reference of the N.K. Singh Commission—to determine the causes and effects of the tragedy and responsibility for the whole sad affair.

Almost as soon as it provided these terms, the Government seems to have become ambivalent. As a result, Justice Singh complained that he was not being provided any facilities at all. The Government relented and all at once Singh got a swankily equipped and air-conditioned courtroom. The Government spent nearly Rs 6 lakh on the commission in this one year, of which Rs 3 lakh alone was on fixtures and fittings and Rs 2 lakh on the salaries of the 10 judicial officers and secretarial assistants helping him, besides Singh himself. As a result, there was no question of the commission meeting its deadline of March 15, 1985, for submitting its report. And just as the commission was to begin the hearings, the inquiry was suddenly called off.



Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH

Union Carbide factory (above) and Vora: controversial move

Singh, however, is studiedly noncommittal on the withdrawal of the probe. Endorsing the Government stand that the decision is in the "national interest", he says: "The Government has the right to appoint a commission under Section 3 of the Commissions of Inquiry Act, 1952, and it has the right to discontinue it under Section 7. Nothing illegal has been done." But sources close to him reveal that Singh had himself grown disenchanted with the commission, due to the lack of cooperation from the Government.

Despite the sudden nature of the inquiry's withdrawal, it is the ones who stand to be directly affected by it—the gas victims—who are the least bothered. All they care for is compensation. The attitude is: give us the money and let bygones be bygones. The general feeling is that the lawyers, reporters, social workers and politicians have been able to do precious little to alleviate their suffering. Their complaint is that the Government has not done enough. Says Sheikh Shabir, a taxi-driver who lost his niece in the tragedy and himself became half-blind: "What difference would the inquiry make? All we want to know is why we haven't got the money that was promised."

There may not have been any protest at the local level, but a lot of eyebrows—and strident voices—have been raised elsewhere at the sudden withdrawal of the probe and that too without a valid reason. Crying foul are the various organisations that took up the cause of the gas victims for relief and rehabilitation and who are now feeling cheated by their complacent passivity.

At least two groups, the Zahrili Gas Kand Sangharsh Morcha and the Lawyers' Collective, are reported to be seriously contemplating filing writs against the closure of the inquiry. As noted lawyer Soli Sorabjee said: "The whole rationale behind a commission is that it is going into a matter of public importance. There may be an explanation for why they have dissolved it. But the manner in which it was done has raised certain doubts about the bona fides." And thereby hangs a tale.

—TAVLEEN SINGH in Bhopal

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Six good reasons to fly British Airways to Hong Kong.

We now fly non-stop to Hong Kong six times a week, with four flights from Bombay and two from Delhi. And not only do we offer the most convenient flights but we offer them at the lowest excursion fares.

Our service is second to none as well. Both in the air, with Indian stewardesses and vegetarian meals, and on the ground, with the new India Gateway Service meet and greet — for our business passengers at Bombay and Delhi connecting from other flights.

With reasons like these, there's only one airline to choose.

BRITISH AIRWAYS
The world's favourite airline.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Over to Sinclairs

Azure and ice: see the majestic Kanchenjunga etched on a winter sky. Right here. From the sundeck at Hotel Sinclairs. Visit 'lower market' and pick up those bright hand knitted woollens from apple cheeked Tibetan women.

Or take off to Takdah, the idyllic picnic spot ablaze with 110 different kinds of orchids.

Then it's over to Sinclairs. Star class luxury with perfectly controlled central heating. Relax, and enjoy the comforts of the best hotel in Darjeeling.

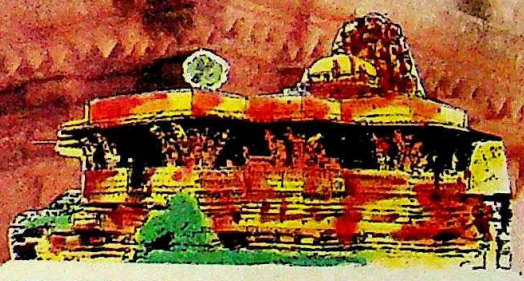
For Instant Reservation Contact
Sinclairs Hotels & Transportation Ltd
Calcutta: Phone 293375 Telex 217168.
Bombay: Phone 316355 Telex 113666.
Delhi: Phone 3313236 Telex 31 3101 or write to Hotel Sinclairs, 18/1 Gandhi Road, Darjeeling. West Bengal.

Stone studded traditional flint travellers carried in ancient Tibet.

Hotel Sinclairs
It's done something to Darjeeling

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Recreating poetry in silks — a monumental rhapsody



RAMAPPA

From time immemorial, inborn aspirations of the creator-artisan finds expression in beauty of his confidence-of-touch and grace. The pulsating life on the panels conveys an impression of youth and rhythm in the loftiness of spirit stirred by visions of a passionate conception of beauty.

Weaving an earthly elegance into creative reflections of the inner spark within, is the mastercraftsman who finds supreme satisfaction in the blend of colours and gold presenting an unsurpassed beauty in this endearing Venkatgiri saree.

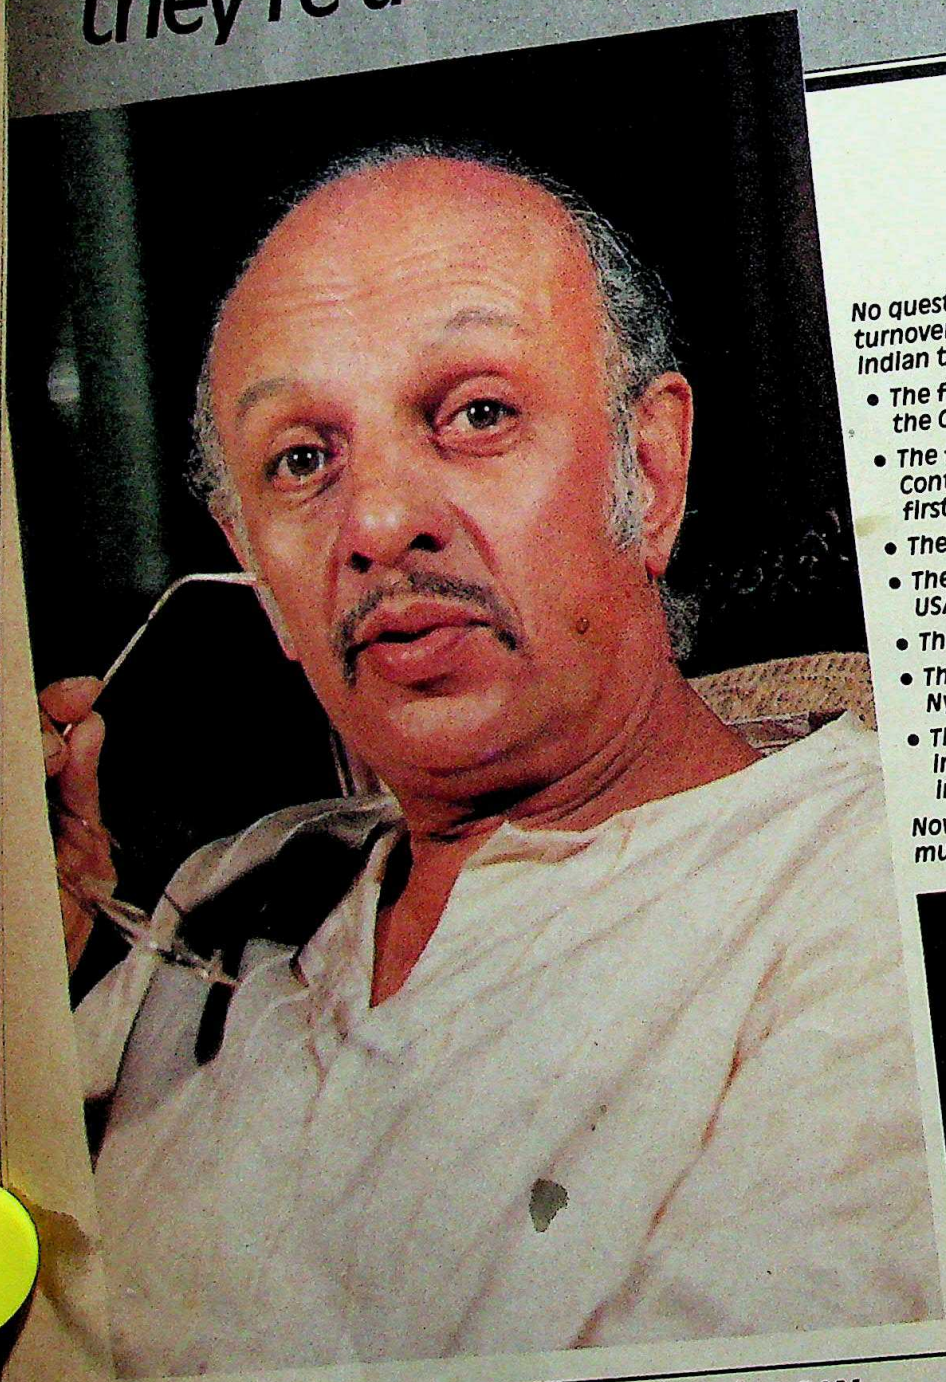
apco

fabrics

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

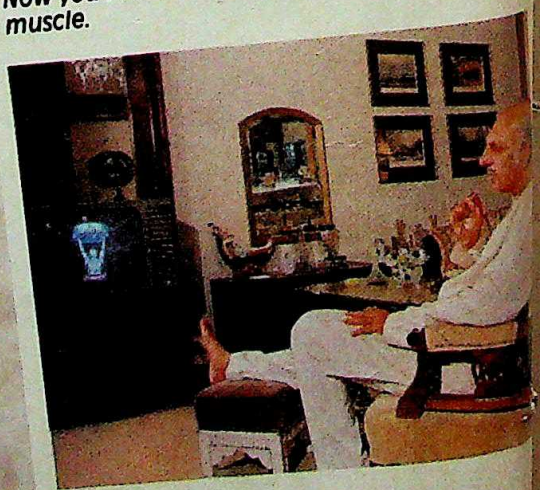
"MRF TYRES?
No wonder they're a 200 crore company!"



No question about it. MRF TYRES with a turnover of 200 crores, is a major force in the Indian tyre industry.

- The first Indian tyres chosen for the Maruti, the Gypsy and the Maruti Van.
- The first Indian tyres chosen for the Contessa. Currently largest suppliers and first with Radials.
- The largest tyre suppliers to Defence.
- The first Indian tyres to be exported to the USA – the very birth-place of tyre making.
- The first multi-plant Indian tyre company.
- The first company in India to introduce Nylon Car Tyres.
- The only Indian tyre company to win quality improvement awards in competition with international tyre plants.

Now you know why MRF TYRES are tyres with muscle.



Now you know

MRF TYRES

The Company with Muscle

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

MRF TYRES are made in technical collaboration w the BF Goodrich Company of the USA – sole supplier of tyres to the NASA Space Shut

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

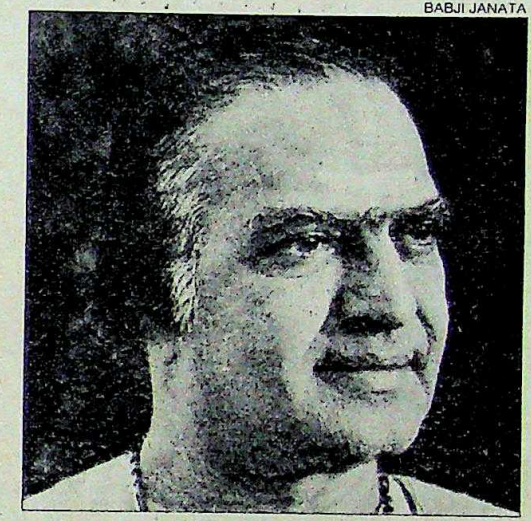
ANDHRA PRADESH

Strained Relations

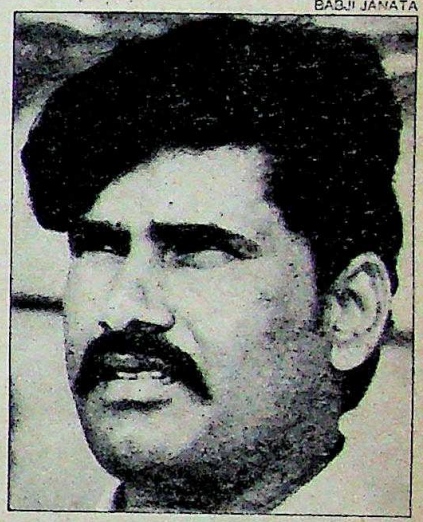
AN ALLUDU (son-in-law) is a specially welcome guest in a traditional Telugu home. But when the home in question is that of a chief minister, all axioms fall by the wayside. For Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister N.T.Rama Rao, this is specially true. Two of his alludus live in Tamil Nadu but the other two are in-house party activists and their scrambling to surpass one another is sending alarm signals through the party ranks.

S.V. ANJAN BABU

BABJI JANATA



BABJI JANATA



Rao, Rama Rao and Naidu: growing rifts

Naravaripalli Chandrababu Naidu, 34, is the de facto working chief of the party and Daggubati Venkateswara Rao, 32, is an MLA and chief of the party's 200,000-strong youth wing—the Telegu Yuvatha. They are up against one another in their efforts to pick partymen for various posts so as to build a bigger clout for themselves.

Rama Rao had assigned Naidu the task of organising the party at the grassroots level and conducting elections to the village, mandal and district units. But even before elections to the 26 district committees were held on December 22, the five-man election committee were rewarded with rent free accommodation, telephone and transport facilities. Despite Rama Rao's protests against the spoils system before becoming chief minister, Naidu's gifting of posts has made many flock to him with hope.

The man most hurt by this is Venkateswara Rao, a founding member of the party. He protested to Rama Rao in November about the growing influence of Naidu and ex-Congress(I) activists ignoring the claims of those who joined the party when it was started in 1982 and stood by Rama Rao when he was temporarily unseated in 1984. In an interview Naidu pooh-poohed Rao's protest: "In the Telugu Desam minus NTR, all of us, Chandrababu, Venkateswara Rao or anybody else are zeros." He publicly demonstrated his lack of any ill feeling towards Rao by inviting him to a family dinner. Not to be left behind, Rao turned up and pleasantly surprised the Rama Rao family—but there was no let up in the cold war.

Naidu's party image was enhanced by his role in keeping the flock together when Rama Rao was thrown out of office in August 1984—but his increasing influence and power have now begun to worry many of the ministers. While some have begun to curry favour with him, others are ranged behind Venkateswara Rao to help him organise the Telugu Yuvatha in their districts. Rao told INDIA TODAY: "I am writing to the party chief that I am not interested in becoming a minister but in building the Telugu Desam as a strong alternative to the Congress in Andhra Pradesh. Many joined the party with this motive before it came to power and we have to be cautious against repeating similar mistakes as the Congress(I) did for many years in the state." So, he insisted that only those who had been with the party since its inception should be elected district presidents, but for the December 22 election an ill-advised Rama Rao despatched ministers with sealed covers containing names of those he felt should be on the district committees.

The move boomeranged. In many districts the party's electoral colleges refused to be dictated to and elections had to be postponed. For the elections in the lower tiers, the mandal and municipal committees, the party dispensed with the secret ballot and instead met voters individually, recorded their choice in a register and declared the result. But this style of controlling the process was not tried on the district committees.

After the bitter experience of 1984, Rama Rao has not found reliable advisers in his party and depends on the alludus to glean facts from party dossiers about candidates for various posts. INDIA TODAY enquiries reveal that the members of the state executive committee are to be hand-picked men whose past is being screened before their formal election at the approaching party convention. Naidu's supporters want him to become the party general secretary.

It will be a difficult decision for Rama Rao because the party constitution limits him to only picking office bearers from the 25-member state committee and Naidu would have to be elected to the executive. His supporters are also demanding strict implementation of the one-man one-post principle to prevent Rao from being the Telugu Yuvatha chief and an MLA simultaneously. Rama Rao is aware the deepening row between his alludus may lead to rifts in the party but finds he cannot do without them.

If there is an issue on which the two agree it is in delaying the launch of the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bharat Desam, deeming it early days yet since the Rajiv euphoria is still omnipresent. But according to Telugu Desam parliamentary party leader P.Upendra: "A nucleus may emerge after discussions with the Akali Dal, Asom Gana Parishad, Sikkim Sanghram Parishad, National Conference, Congress (S) and the Dravida Munnetra Kazhagham after the Mahanadu."

Rama Rao's interest for the moment is to keep alive the enthusiasm for starting a loosely-knit federation of regional parties. But growing opposition to the police bill and the characteristic Rama Rao flip-flop over the assembly session are not the only flash-points in the run-up to the Mahanadu, the party convention. The war of the alludus and the demand for democratic elections reveal the growing cracks in the party monolith and his priority is obviously to set his own house in order. Some observers feel Rama Rao has reason to rejoice having built a cadre of "yellow shirts" but fear he may not be able to control them. And for other political parties though, Rama Rao's woes seemed just one more cause for year-end jubilation.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

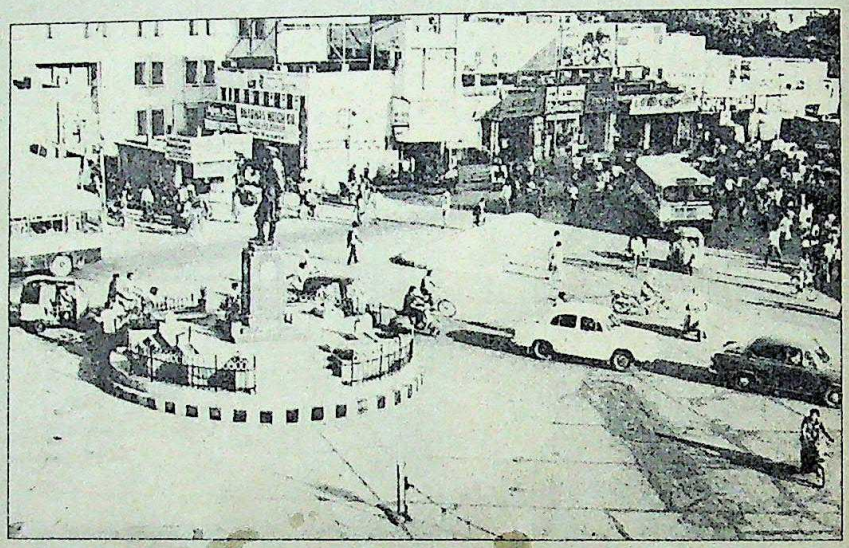
HYDERABAD

Dressing Up

HYDERABAD is beginning to look like what it is: the third largest metropolis in the south and the capital of a state of 60 million people. Roads are being widened and blacktopped, pedestrian paths paved, traffic islands being greened and Begumpet airport has recently been put on the international map. Plans to develop the state capital had been hanging fire for the last five years but with the city slated to play host to the non-competitive film festival, Filmotsav '86, from January 10, the Municipal Corporation of Hyderabad (MCH) is racing against time to spruce up for the jamboree.

Work began in early November with a typically grand gesture by Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao. The corporation's special officer, Cheeli Arjuna Rao, a senior IAS officer, was told to send a demolition squad to break down the compound wall of NTR's private home on Bank Street to take the 30 sq ft required for widening the road. This act galvanised the MCH and served notice that the authorities meant business.

The MCH can do little without the help of the state Government. It was superseded by the state Government in 1969 and consequently lost two major sources of income—octroi and motor vehicles tax. As Rao pointed out to the chief minister, the MCH budget of Rs 26 crore is less than half the budget of the Bangalore corporation and a fifth of the Rs 135 crore available to Ahmedabad. Explains Rao: "The two cities of similar size and population are able to do better as octroi and motor vehicle tax earnings are ploughed back and the corporation limits are wide enough to include the industrial areas. The MCH is bound by a six-point formula which prevents the inclusion of industrial suburbs in the corporation limits." Rama Rao responded to Rao's pleas and sanctioned Rs 16 crore for the MCH.



A smaller traffic island: the new look

While part of this sum will go towards implementing the four-year-old proposal to widen 550 km of roads, some will be used to pay compensation for land taken over to widen roads. During his earlier stint as MCH chief which ended in June 1982, Rao had cajoled some 6,200 people to give up 104 acres of land for a token compensation of Rs 200 a sq yd to help widen the roads. But none of Rao's five successors could convince the Government of the need to advance money for paying the compensation. It was only when Rao returned to the post that he took up the matter with the chief minister.

Having finally got the chief minister's nod, the pace of work quickened almost overnight. Four-man teams of officials were asked to complete paying the compensation to all except those few who have taken the issue to court. While MCH engineers are working round the clock to ready the arterial roads by January 10, work on the remaining roads is scheduled to be completed by March 31. But roads are not the only problem area being tackled. The city's acute water scarcity is also being addressed.

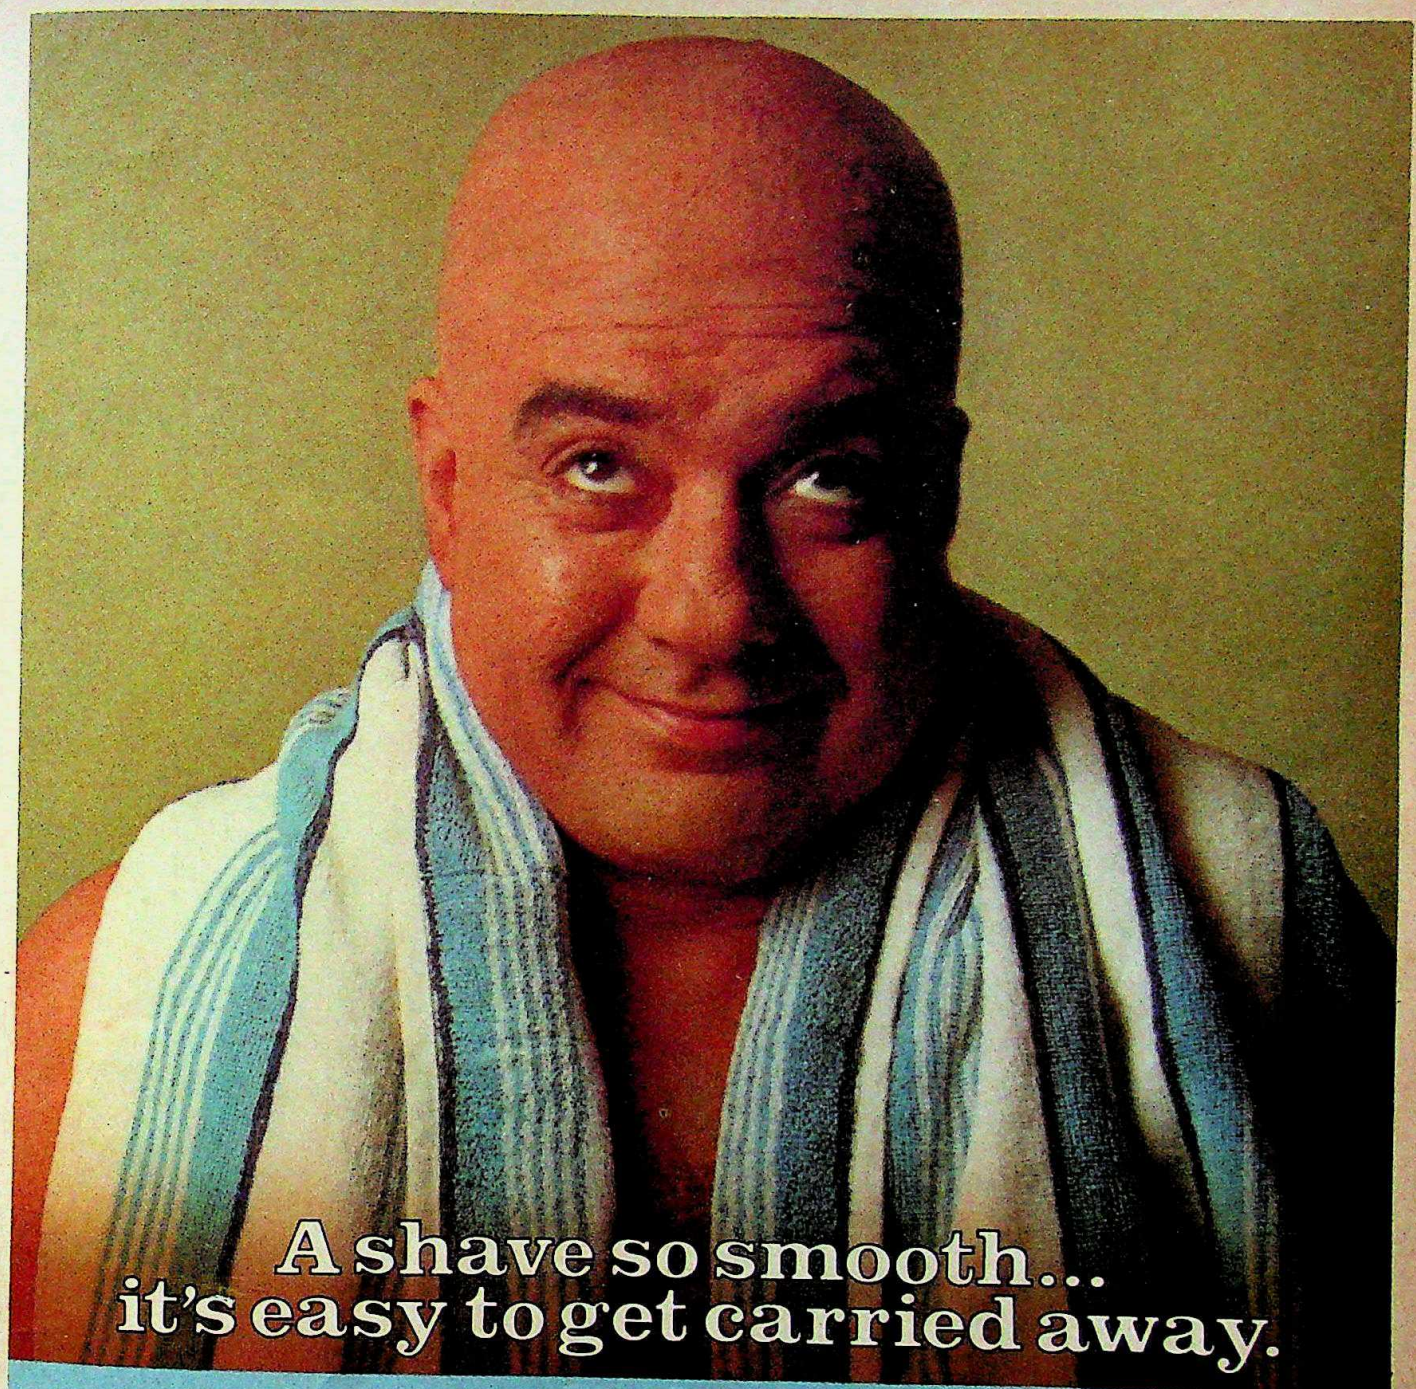
But by then the city should have a new set of godfathers and guardian angels. Elections to the 100-seat corporation are to be held in February after a 16-year break. Both the Congress(I) and the Telugu Desam have been reluctant to hold the elections, apprehending domination by the Bharatiya Janata Party and the Majlis-e-Ittehadul Muslimeen in the city hall. But with the Andhra Pradesh High Court ordering elections by February, the state Government has been left with no choice.

Once elections are completed, the Rs 16 crore sanctioned may prove inadequate. In their keenness to impress their constituents, the corporators are bound to ask for more. And if their demands are ignored, then, says Rao: "Even if God was appointed as the municipal commissioner he will seek a transfer to the state secretariat." But those clouds are far away: for the moment, Hyderabad is busy dressing up.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



A shave so smooth... it's easy to get carried away.

Erasmic Imperial II
Twin Blade Shaving System

A whole new shaving experience from Erasmic. A scientifically designed twin blade shaving system that glides over the toughest beards with the smoothest ease. Giving you a close and comfortable shave without any nicks or cuts.
A larger handle gives you a firm and comfortable grip, while an extended metallic head makes cleaning much easier.
Get into the Imperial II habit now and make shaving a real pleasure.

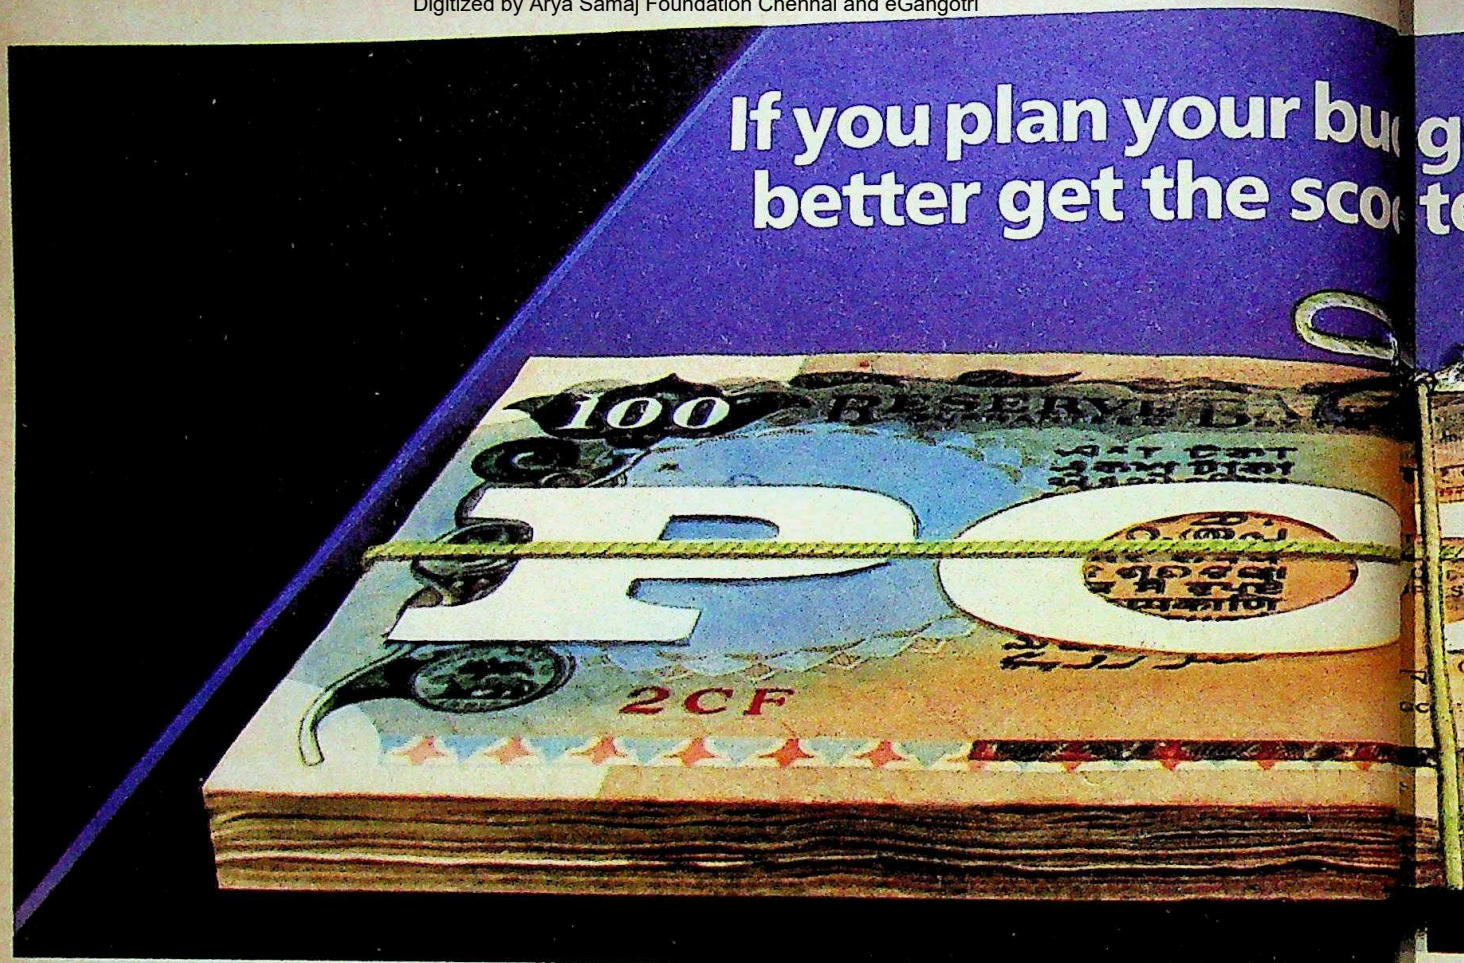
everest/d85/SL/220

A quality product from the makers of ERASMIC

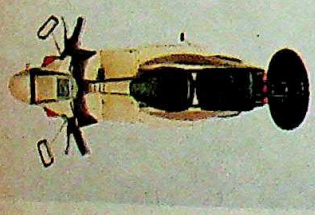
SHARPEDGE LIMITED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

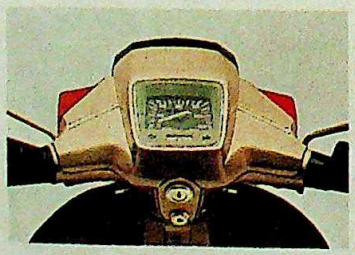
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



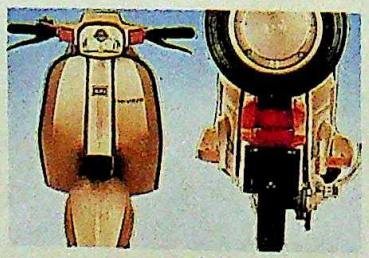
Polo. The sleekest, most spacious shuttle vehicle you ca



Polo Comfort
Ample legroom. An effective suspension swallows road bumps, ensuring comfort and stability. Individual front and pillion seats with spring-mounted cushions. Ergonomically designed to prevent backaches on long rides. A 150 cc engine: powerful enough to take the whole family.



Polo Economy
New hi-tech engine and carburettor designs for fuel efficiency: 55 km/litre* even with two people riding it. Pick-up: 0-60 kmph in 9 seconds. Economical maintenance: backed by the long established service and spare parts support only API can provide nationwide.



Polo Safety
The Polo also keeps more room for safety. Here's how. Centrally aligned engine for perfect balance even on sharp bends. Braking system designed to eliminate skids. Big rectangular 12 V headlamp for a wider field of illumination. Hi-visibility electronic flashers and integrated tail-lamp with blinkers. Tubular chassis for impact-proof sturdiness. Movable mudguard.

Polo Aerodynamic Elegance.
Computer-aided design and dies by Miyazu of Japan, the specialist to Honda, Suzuki, Toyo Nissan, Isuzu, Mitsubish General Motors, Volkswagen and Ford. you can count on spaci longevity of the Polo e after a lifetime of use.

* As certified by ARAI, under standard conditio

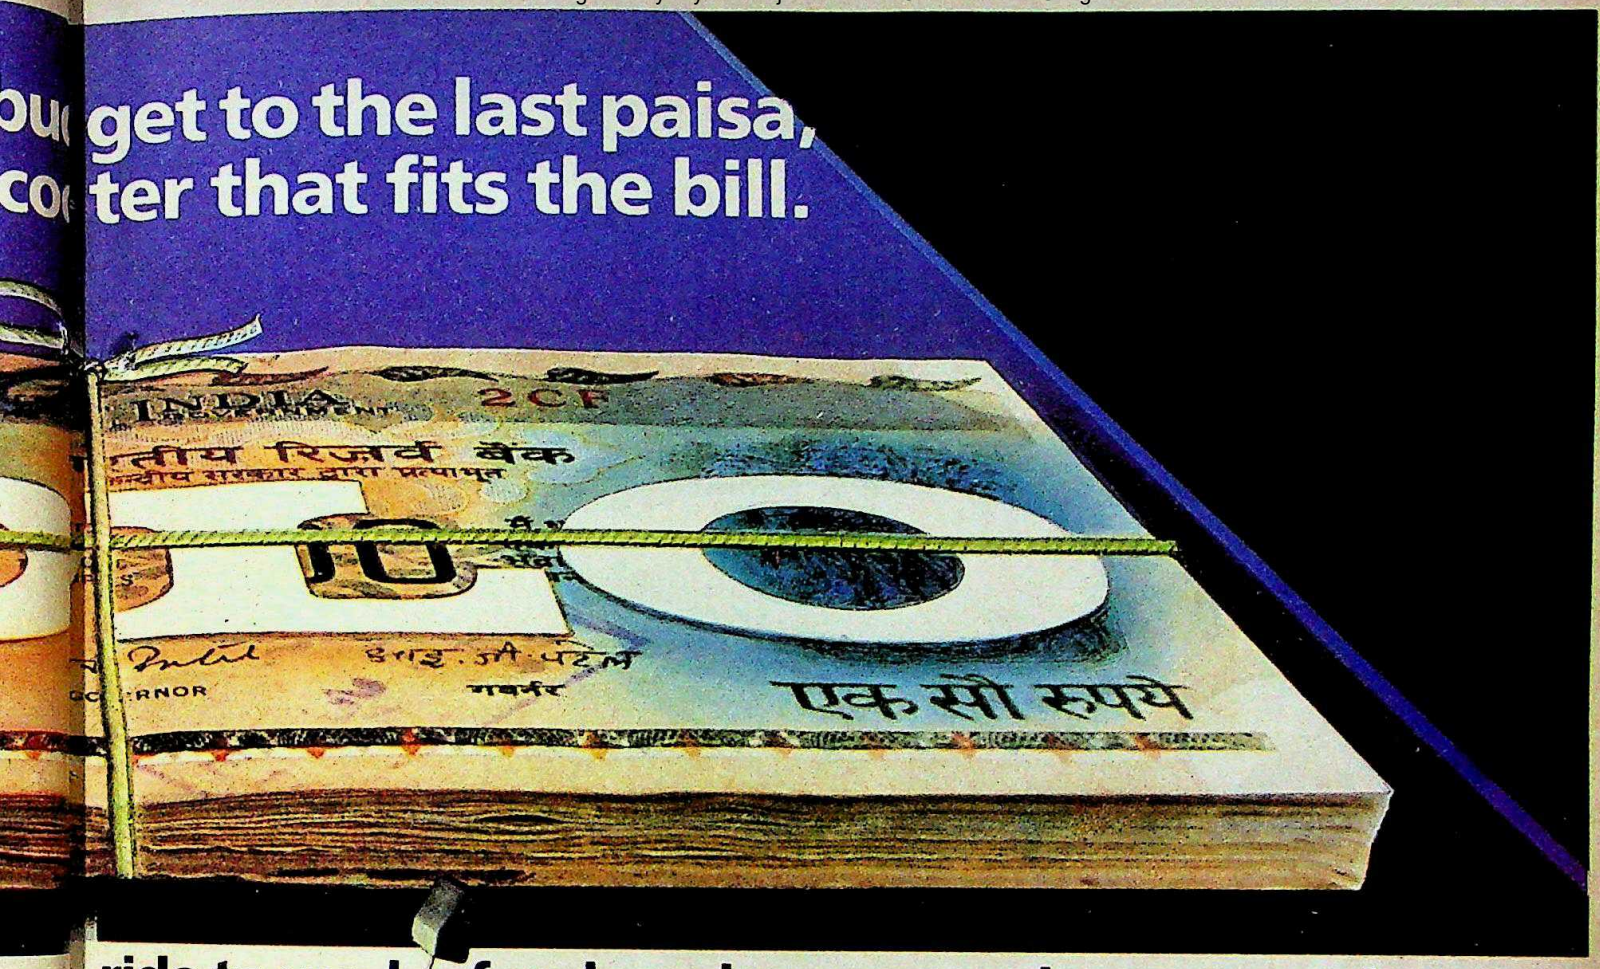
New
LAMBY POLO 150
Design by Miyazu, Japan.

Spacious comfort. Spacious economy. Spacious safety.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

get to the last paisa, ter that fits the bill.



ride to work, for shopping, an evening out or whatever.

API
Automobile Products of India Ltd.
L.B. Shastri Marg, Bhandup, Bombay 400 078.

BOOKING OPEN FROM 11 DECEMBER '85 TO 15 JANUARY '86

everest/85/API/432

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CC-0. Vasanthakumar Swamy Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SONY

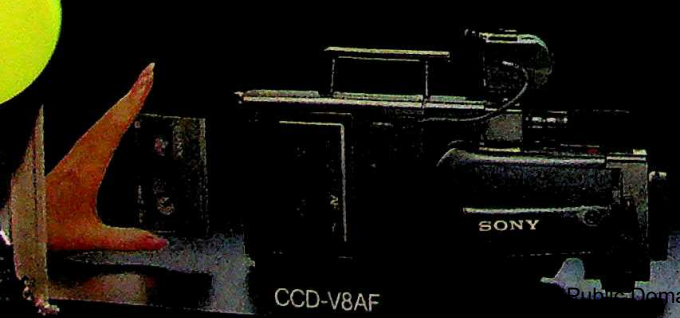
REACH FOR THE TOP.

Top quality movies come easily with Sony's new Video 8. You don't even have to focus — a sophisticated Auto Focus system does it for you. While a highly advanced CCD Image Sensor gives you better picture resolution and improved sensitivity in low light.

Video 8 is so light and compact you can use it to make movies virtually anywhere. Up to 3 hours worth on a single cassette. And immediately review what you've shot through the unit's viewfinder. Or simply hook it up to any TV for instant playback.

And best of all, Video 8's 8mm cassette delivers a picture as impressive as that of a larger cassette.

So if it's top quality movies you're after, better start with the top video camera recorder — Sony's Video 8.



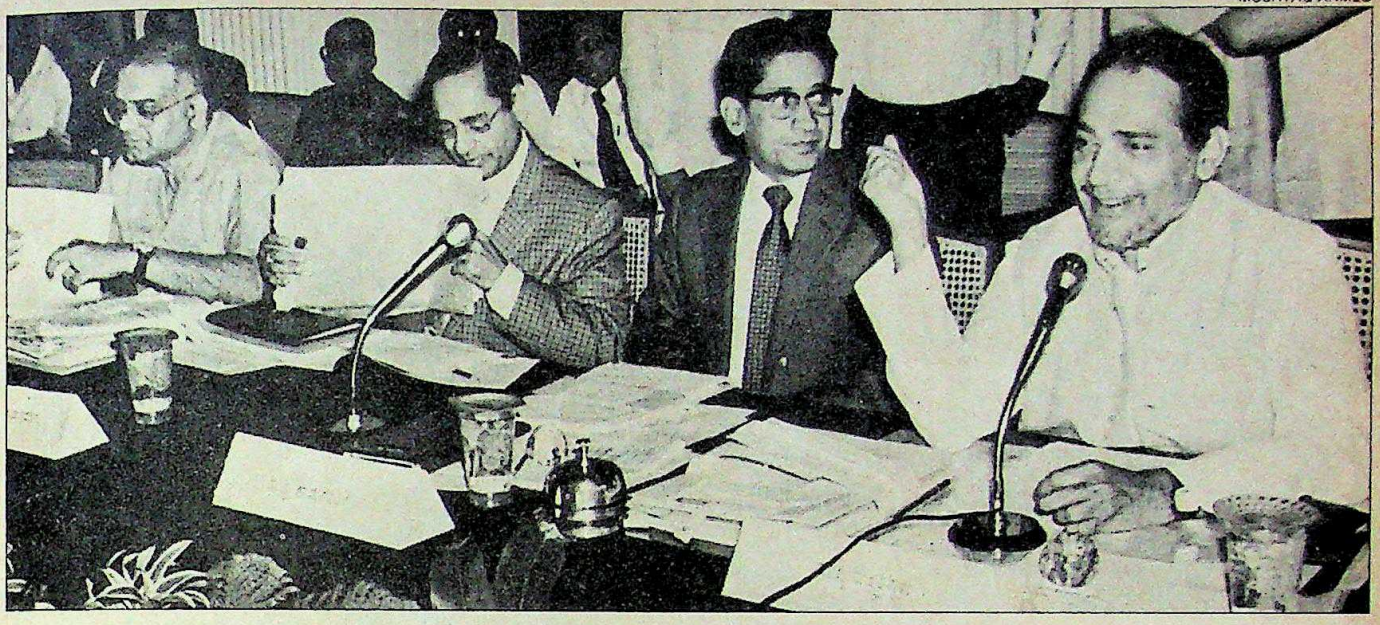
CCD-V8AF

CCD-V8AF Video 8

Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MUSHTAQ AHMED



Chief Minister Hegde addressing officials: last warning

KARNATAKA

Politics of Language

KARNATAKA has declared war on English. And the censure of a senior IAS officer in the state Government has come as a clear warning to the bureaucracy that Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde's Government will brook no delay in the use of Kannada in all official transactions. While nobody disputes the need to use the language in the state administration, the haste with which it is being enforced has posed some practical problems apart from kindling fears among the minorities about the status of their own language.

The censure of Adhip Chaudhury, commissioner in the Department of Public Instruction, came as a shock considering the apparent innocuous nature of the crime. His department had called for applications in English for lecturers' posts but a week later a baffled Chaudhury was bluntly asked if he was aware that Kannada is the state's official language and all applications should be received in that language.

The censure came close on the heels of a "last warning" to all government employees—use Kannada in all official transactions or else—from Chief Secretary T.R.Satish Chandran last month. Chandran's circular minced no words: "Kannada is the state's official language. It is the Government's policy that Kannada should be used in the secretariat onwards to a village-level office. The umpteen number of instructions issued to the staff in this regard have been followed more in the breach. Whoever doesn't heed this last warning will face merciless action." Perhaps to show that this time the Government meant business, the "last warning" came only in Kannada. All previous sermons had been delivered in English only or in both English and Kannada.

Keeping tabs on the officials is the fearsomely called Kannada Watchdog Committee (KWC), a 15-member panel of politicians and litterateurs set up by the chief minister to ensure that Kannada is used. So it was left to the committee's Chairman, Patil Puttappa—editor of two provincial weeklies in Hubli—to elaborate on what could happen to officials who are fond of English. Said Puttappa: "If the officials don't use Kannada, their increments may be stopped." Warned Mahadev Banakar, a former legislator and the most vocal of the KWC members: "A record is being maintained in the service book of each official to mark his efficiency and interest in using Kannada." The watchdog panel has been touring the state, sniffing around government offices and pulling up officials who are even partly using English.

While no one objects to Kannada being implemented as the administrative language of the state, the haste with which the Government is going about it, often showing signs of chauvinism, is raising quite a few eyebrows among Kannadigas and non-Kannadigas alike. Kannadiga officials themselves complain of "technical difficulties" like finding the right Kannada word for the established and so convenient English words and the shortage of Kannada typewriters. The minorities also crib about the language being forced on them. To this the watchdog panel's answer is—if the officials have the will they have the way. The minorities, panel members say, have been given enough time to learn Kannada.

The Janata Government's growing association with the cause of Kannada was also evident last fortnight when it hosted the "World" Kannada Conference at Mysore "to promote Kannada". Not surprisingly, the justification for spending Rs 4 crore on constructing an auditorium and another Rs 50 lakh on hosting the three-day affair was questioned by many, especially when most of the state is in the grip of the worst-ever drought. The opponents included some eminent Kannada writers who boycotted the conference.

By holding the conference, which served no perceptible purpose, the Janata Government also made yet another policy volte face. When the previous Congress(I) government of R.Gundu Rao first mooted the idea of the meet in 1981, the Janata had opposed the proposal vociferously and the meet was put off. At the conference itself, while Hegde kept a discreet silence, a piqued Shivrama Karanth, Jnanpith award-winning writer, asked from the dais: "Has anyone stopped eating masala dosais because of the drought ?"

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Although previous governments had been making occasional noises about Kannada since it was declared a state language way back in 1963, it was Hegde who got serious about it when he came to power in early 1983. Starting with the removal of all English name plates from the Vidhana Soudha, the imposing stone structure that houses the state legislature and the secretariat, he passed a series of orders. But without much success. Addressing a meeting of top bureaucrats along with Puttappa last fortnight, Hegde said: "Writing and even thinking in English has become a habit with you. This has got to be changed." And the change, he feels, can only come through threats.

Earlier, declaring the observation of "Integrated Kannada Administrative Language Year" from November 1—the day Karnataka came into being following the states' reorganisation—he set himself the deadline of October 31, 1986, for making Kannada the "100 per cent" official language. In August last, Hegde had set another deadline: all employees whose mother tongue is not Kannada should acquire proficiency and pass a test in Kannada in two years. The Government will go a step further on the expiry of this deadline on August 7, 1986. From then on, a Kannada language test would become a prerequisite for anyone joining the Government.

If the Government is not already being openly accused of being fanatical, it is sure to be if a KWC proposal comes into force to stop the exemption from Kannada given to linguistic minorities in areas where they number more than 15 per cent of the population. As of now, such minorities can use their own languages. The stoppage of this concession can create serious problems in the areas bordering Maharashtra where relations between Marathis and Kannadigas are already strained as a result of the border dispute between the two states.

Political observers feel that all this talk is politically motivated and is obviously aimed at stirring the Kannadigas' linguistic emotions in an attempt to consolidate the Janata Party's power base in the state. But for the moment all that the Hegde Government seems to have succeeded in doing is give another handle to its detractors to beat it with.

NAGALAND

Rebel Wars

THE BIRTH of a new rebel group is normally bad news for the troubled administrations of the insurgency prone north-eastern states. But the formation of an outfit called the Peoples' Militia of Nagaland (PMN) might actually be a welcome development. For, in its manifesto circulated openly in Manipur and Nagaland recently, the PMN has declared its sole enemy to be the National Socialist Council of Nagaland (NSCN)—the region's largest and most active insurgent group. This intriguing rebel-versus rebel scenario, intelligence officials believe, is a denouement of the 1975 Shillong Accord which was later denounced by a group led by Isaac Chishi Swu and T.Muivah who went on to form the NSCN in 1980.

Ramyo (above) and Vamuzo: unenviable battle

The brain behind the PMN is Zimik Ramyo, a former rebel leader and one of the signatories to the Shillong Accord, who came overground after the accord. Several former accordists are known to support the militia unofficially. Ramyo, who is on the NSCN hit list, argues that the PMN is essentially a product of desperation. "We have maintained peace for the past 10 years but some people are deliberately trying to scuttle peace and much of their activities are directed against people like me who have signed the Shillong Accord."

The army and the police have been powerless to stop the NSCN from murdering the accordists. Ramyo was attacked by gunmen at his Dimapur residence three years ago. Many of his associates, besides over 100 civilians, have been killed in the Naga Hills of Manipur and Nagaland during the last couple of years. Nagaland Assembly opposition leader Vamuzo, who also stands by the accord, claims only advance information helped him elude three NSCN killers lying in wait at Dimapur airport in October last. Ramyo dismisses the army as "being impotent against the NSCN." But the army argues that it cannot be expected to prevent isolated killings.

Left out in the cold, with even the Centre refusing to ban the NSCN, the accordists and their supporters have rearmed themselves and not only set up camps (with some 40 men equipped with arms) in the Manipur East district, an NSCN stronghold, but gone on the offensive, killing three of its men and imposing punitive taxes on pro-NSCN villages.

More important, point out intelligence officials, the PMN has the capacity to counter the NSCN ideologically. Leaders like Ramyo and Vamuzo retain considerable influence among the tribals and the powerful churches that dominate Naga social life.

By putting down the NSCN, the PMN and its supporters hope that the Centre will also heed its demand for a fuller implementation of the Shillong Accord. Says Vamuzo: "The Centre, according to one of the clauses in the accord, was to have worked out a conclusive political settlement with the help of the Naga leaders but did not bother to honour this commitment." And to this day, the accordists continue to hope that their leader Zapu Phizo will be brought back from London and reinstated in the state by the Centre.

But prospects for this look bleak because there has been no reaction from the Centre. The army, too, seems non-committal about the help it could receive from the PMN in countering the insurgency. Says a major: "We have not sponsored the PMN and we can do nothing about inter-rebel rivalry." For the moment, the PMN and its accordist supporters are fighting what can only be called an unenviable battle with the Centre and the NSCN.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Excerpts from Chairman's Review

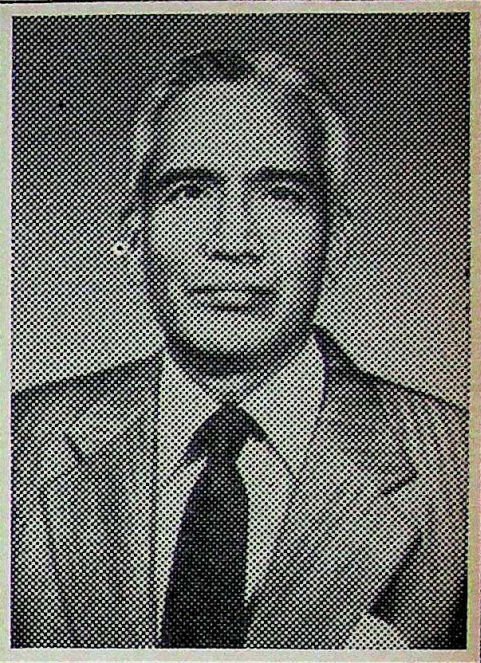
A Record of Rapid and Continuous Growth

Increased production and sales. Excellent profitability. Expansion and diversification.



Mr. S P Acharya, Chairman

"During the year of twelve months ended 30th June, 1985, the Group performed extremely well, with a pre-tax profit for the parent company of Rs 860 lakhs and for the Group of Rs 1,599 lakhs..."

The year under review was marked by very important events and developments, on the national scene as well as for the Shaw Wallace Group. The manner in which the nation and the Government, led by the Prime Minister Shri Rajiv Gandhi, surmounted the trauma of assassination of the late illustrious Prime Minister, Smt. Indira Gandhi, and the ease with which the democratic credentials of India were firmly re-asserted to the amazement of the rest of the world, through peaceful national elections covering an electorate more than thrice that of the next biggest electorate in the world, should give us all the confidence we need in the strength of the basic fabric of the nation and in its leadership. Subsequent policy announcements of a Government backed by an unprecedented mandate, have given a clear indication to the private sector that the Government does recognise its valuable role and would like all the constituents of the nation to work unitedly towards improvement in living standards and in ensuring national cohesion, integrity and strength. These goals are to be achieved in a competitive environment which is in keeping with the late twentieth century, but also remaining in harmony with our traditions and culture.

Among the signs on the horizon are a fairly good monsoon in most parts of the country, greater interest from foreign investors and buoyant stock markets, with a shadow, however, of a still creaking infrastructure — railways, coal and power. Steep increases in administered prices and higher indirect taxes have had some cascading effect on prices, hopefully now well under check. If the long term fiscal policy to be announced in November of this year contains encouraging fiscal reform and assures stability of policies, as it is expected to do, it will give us all a promosing environment for growth.

We, in the Shaw Wallace Group, would like to reiterate the pledge expressed in the last Annual Report, namely, our whole-hearted support to the Government and our determination to do our best in helping to build a strong, united and prosperous nation.

The Directors have succeeded in effecting a substantial improvement in the already very satisfactory profitability and business of the Group. Expansion and diversification continue. The Group is making very active efforts to enter the field of Contract Drilling for Hydrocarbons for the ONGC and Oil India and render other services. Its entry into the field of Detergents some two years earlier has been a success and the Group expects further substantial growth in consumer products. A Letter of Intent has been received for the manufacture of Hydrogen Peroxide. These growth areas are in addition to the Letters of Intent in hand for white cement and gypsum board, blocks and tiles.

Financial Performance

During the financial year of twelve months ended 30th June, 1985, the Group performed extremely well, with a pre-tax profit for the parent company of Rs. 860 lakhs and for the Group of Rs. 1,599 lakhs, compared with the profitability for the previous financial period of eighteen months of Rs. 912 lakhs and Rs. 1,879 lakhs respectively. Group revenue in India and Sri Lanka aggregated Rs. 197 crores. An equity dividend of 30% is proposed, which is the same as the annualised rate of 30% paid for the previous year.

Profitability is only one index of performance. The following analysis of results of principal divisions, subsidiaries and associates, will give shareholders a pen picture reflecting not only the diversity of the Group and the many directions in which it is progressing, but also an indication of future prospects. Barring unforeseen circumstances, turnover and profits in 1985-86 are expected to increase significantly over 1984-85.

Principal Divisions

Agricultural Inputs

As stated in my review of the previous year, Madras Fertilizers Limited decided to market its entire production directly, without the agency of principal distributors. The full impact of this was felt in the year under review and resulted in sales of fertilizers being 31% lower than in the previous year. The substantial adverse effects were to an extent made good by reorganisation of operations and increased sales of agrochemicals. Market share of Dimethoate and Ethion produced at our Haldia Plant increased. While Research and Development efforts continue to achieve cost reduction, action has been initiated to increase the range of agrochemicals. Various measures were taken to control pollution and I am assured by the technical staff that there are no risks to the environment from our plant in Haldia.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The second stage of expansion of the Sulphuric Acid Plant was completed which, apart from increasing production, fully met the Government's requirements regarding pollution control. There is scope for further increase in production in the coming years.

There was a record production of Superphosphate crossing the 80,000 tonne mark. Granulated Superphosphate has been introduced into the market for the first time in South India. There was encouraging acceptance from farmers in view of the advantages of lower loss in application and greater absorption.

Consumer Products

Production at our Detergent plant in the no-industry District of Fatehpur in Uttar Pradesh increased to satisfactory levels and demand for the products — Regal and Chek detergent cakes—continued to grow. Availability is being extended rapidly. It is a measure of satisfaction that within two years, an annual sales volume of 10,000 tonnes coud be built up. Profitability has been satisfactory and prospects are encouraging, despite the intense competition from well-entrenched and very large companies in the field.

Footwear

Although there was an appreciable increase in sales, Government subsidies and incentives were not available to this unit, being a 100% Export Oriented Unit. Sales have not reached optimum capacity as yet. These two factors affected the working results.

With a change in the terms of the Industrial Licence recently agreed to by the authorities, it is hoped that, in the second half of the current year, operations will become viable. To establish a high profile consumer product like high quality leather footwear in the international market takes some time, but I believe that, in the long run, this diversification will prove very rewarding.

Shipping

While international shipping continued to face depressed market conditions, Liner Shipping with containerised cargoes as well as freight forwarding have shown satisfactory growth. The Division was able to maintain its earnings. We are grateful to our Principals and our clients, both in India and overseas, for the trust and confidence which they have placed in our organisation.

An agreement has recently been signed with Messrs. Kuehne and Nagel Management AG., one of the best known firms of international freight forwarders. It is our hope that, with this connection, we will be able to serve Indian importers and exporters better, and at the same time improve the profitability of the Division.

Wines, Spirits and Beer

Despite difficulties in availability of raw materials at some of the production units and increase in the cost of all inputs, results of the Division for the year under review have been very satisfactory.

Consumer demand for the Company's products continues to be excellent and significant growth was achieved in the De Luxe segments. Both Royal Challenge and Director's Special have become outstanding brand leaders. The newly introduced Band Master Blend Whisky and Olde Adventurer Rum had encouraging consumer acceptance.

Excessive Government controls over the trade continue. The incidence of taxation on wines, spirits and beer also remains very high. Such a situation remains potent with unhealthy practices on the part of some parties, such as tax evasion and spurious products, which not only deprive the Government of very substantial revenue but also pose a peril to public health and life. Rationalisation of the duty structure and easing of unwarranted controls will help considerably to reduce this menace, by making quality products available at a reasonable price and at the same time augment the revenues of State Governments.

On current trends, the Division should continue to register very satisfactory progress.

The year at a glance

GROUP	1984-85
Sales and Other income Rs Lakhs	19678
Profit before taxation Rs Lakhs	1599
Profit after taxation Rs Lakhs	904
Earnings per ordinary share	Rs.12.01
Dividend per ordinary share — Parent Company	Rs. 3.00

Principal Subsidiaries

Cruickshank & Co. Ltd.

Due to reduced earnings from sale of Liquor products owing to the incidence of higher levies, profit for the year under review was reduced. Nevertheless, performance may be considered satisfactory under the prevailing circumstances.

The Indian Yeast Co. Ltd.

The company achieved satisfactory results in 1984-85 making an impressive turn-around in profitability.

Vigorous steps were taken to improve operations and reduce costs. TOWER Brand Bakers' Yeast continues to enjoy a good image throughout the country. The company expects to improve its performance further in the current year.

Additional ordinary shares of the face value of Rs. 35 lakhs were subscribed by Shaw Wallace & Co. Ltd. which increased its holding to 73%

Kerala Chlorates and Chemicals Ltd.

Current installed capacity of Potassium Chlorate in the country is almost double the demand. As a result, selling prices fell heavily, which in turn affected margins. This unit became a subsidiary during the year. Its modernisation plan, now under implementation, will reduce cost, improve quality and increase production. Once it is complete in another year's time, operations should become profitable.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Maharashtra Distilleries Ltd.

Profitability was affected due to low allocation of alcohol and ever increasing cost of raw materials, but was still at a very satisfactory level. The premium brands produced at this unit have been well accepted by the market.

Shaw Wallace Gelatines Ltd.

Performance was satisfactory. An expansion programme to increase Pharmaceutical and Edible Gelatine capacity has been taken on hand, partly financed by institutional loans. An application has been made to the Government for approval to an issue of Rights shares to help finance the balance outlay.

Tezpore Tea Co. Ltd.

Buoyancy in the market continued and yet another record profit, of Rs. 305 lakhs, was achieved.

During the year, various restrictions were imposed by the Government on the marketing of tea.

Planted area was extended by 15 hectares and there was a satisfactory improvement in yield.

The company continues to follow a policy of extensions, renewals and replacement, which should strengthen its operational base in future years.

Bonus shares were issued in the ratio 1 : 2.

Shaw Wallace & Hedges Group in Sri Lanka

The Group turned in yet another record profit. A unit to manufacture hosiery with West German collaboration and a second unit to manufacture specialised high polythene engineering products, both located in the Free Trade Zone, commenced production during the year.

Profitability is largely dependent on exports. In view of the increasing tendency towards protectionism and adverse changes in tariff structure in the importing countries, volume of exports and profitability may be affected until the new projects that went into production recently reach optimum production levels.

A dividend of 45% was declared.

Principal Associates

Detergents India Ltd.

Owing to prolonged labour problems, production and sales of Detergents India Ltd. were poor and operations resulted in a loss. Since the close of the year, production has improved and this company should turn in good results in the future.

Sica Breweries Ltd.

Production was satisfactory. Profitability level was maintained. The company had used up all carried forward tax benefits. Hence the incidence of normal income-tax reduced appropriations to reserves.

SKOL Breweries Ltd.

Production and sales were adversely affected solely due to inter-union rivalry from early August 1984. Consequent disruption of production and danger to life and property forced the Company to declare a Lock-out from end September, 1984, which lasted 95 days. Production has since then stabilised. Barring unforeseen difficulties, it should be possible to improve production and sales substantially during the current year. Margins are under pressure because of competition and continuing inflationary trends in the cost of inputs, but current year profitability should be good.

Projects

Detailed prospecting of the lease in Himachal Pradesh for the White Cement project has proved encouraging and we have now entered into foreign collaboration agreement with LaFarge Coppee Lavalin of France, subject to Government approval.

The proposal for establishment of a new undertaking for the manufacture of Gypsum Board, etc. in the State of Jammu & Kashmir, was not proceeded with as the lease grant area did not contain adequate reserves of Gypsum. However, sources of raw material elsewhere are being explored to assure a regular supply of the right quality. Technology is being arranged from Europe.

Technical collaboration was concluded with Blocker Energy Corporation, U.S.A., subject to Government approval, to enable us to enter the field of oil and gas drilling. Bids were made for tenders floated by ONGC the results of which are awaited. In the meantime, a cadre of trained personnel is being built up.

We are actively pursuing a project to manufacture Hydrogen Peroxide. Offers of technology, which is closely guarded internationally, are being evaluated.

Other projects are under examination.

General

My thanks go to all employees for their co-operation and contribution to the progress of the Group.

I am confident that the Group, with substantial resources both in money and manpower, will achieve further progress in the years to come. Shareholders will benefit by healthy growth of the Group, and their investment should appreciate, barring totally unforeseen circumstances.

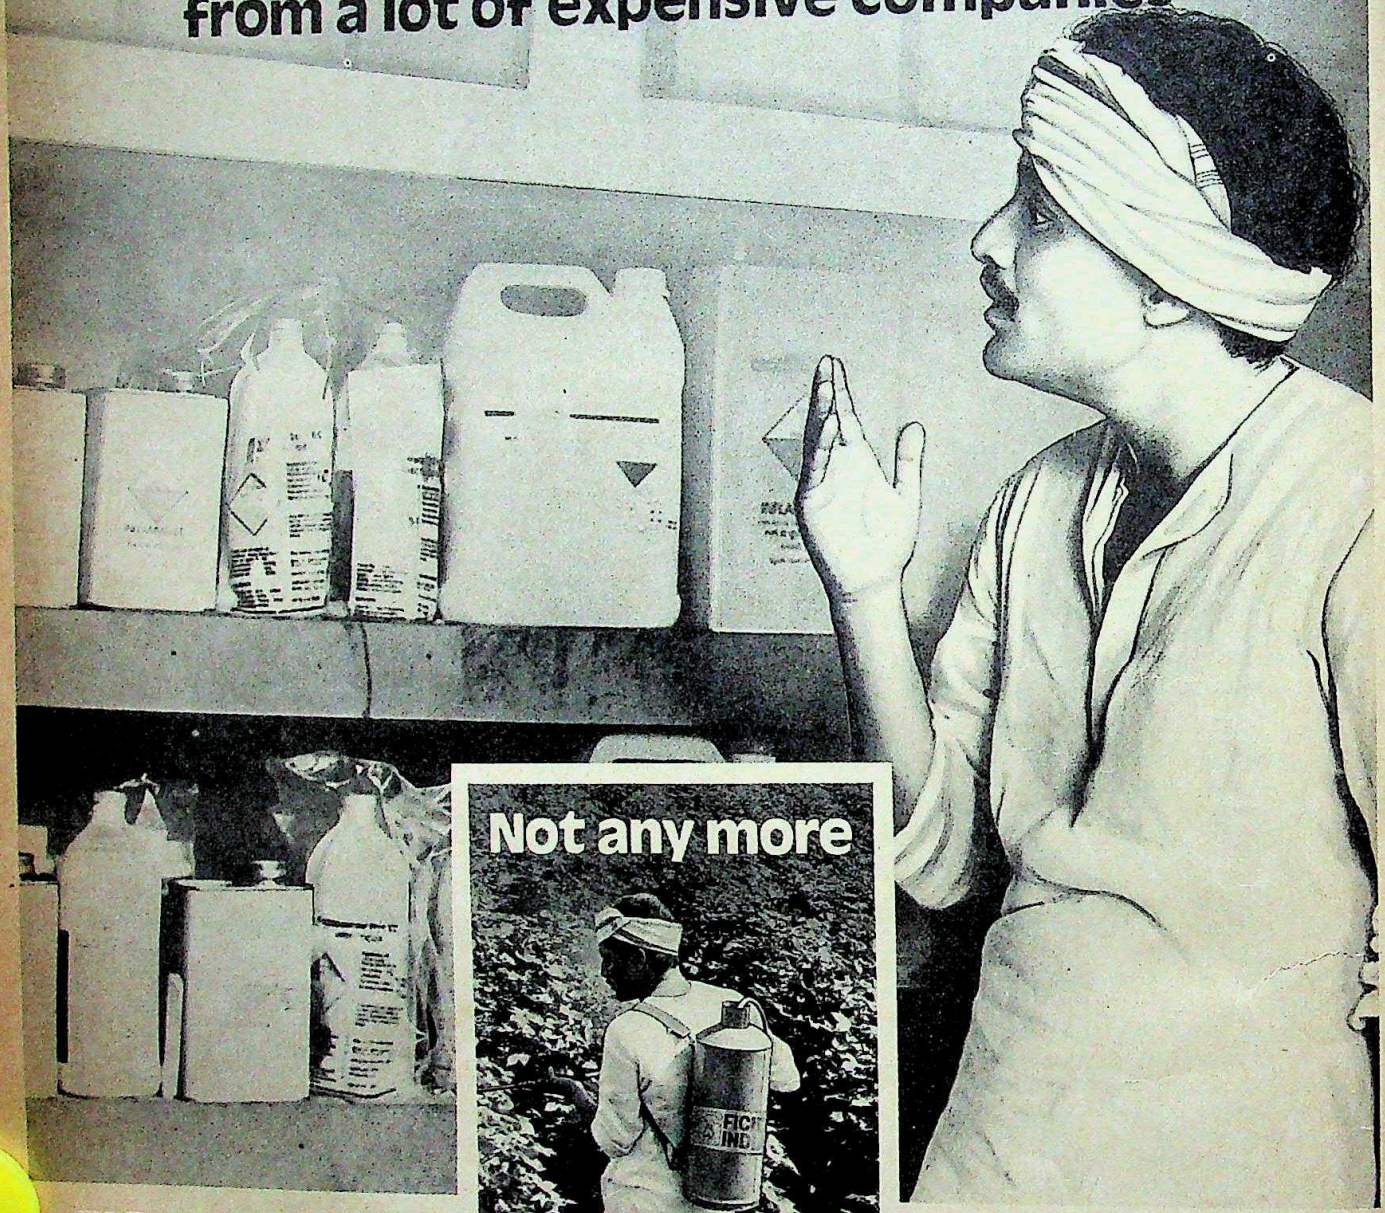
The Group will reach its Centenary in 1986. The history and growth over one hundred years of existence bear ample testimony to pioneering efforts, stamina and adaptability and the sustained adherence to professional ethics. The Group has carved for itself a distinct place in Indian Industry, with a tremendous amount of satisfaction to everyone who participated in its growth or is currently associated with it.

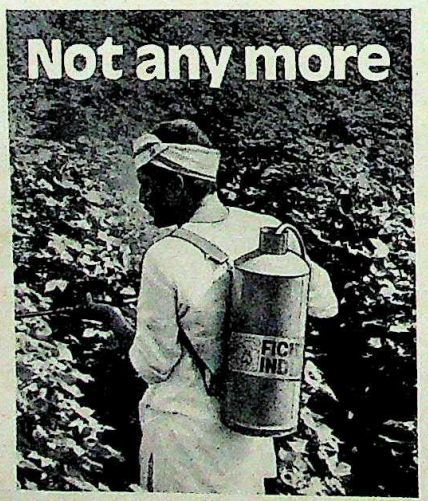
Shaw Wallace & Co. Ltd.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For the Indian farmer complete crop protection meant a lot of expensive buying from a lot of expensive companies





FICIDES INDIA

From sowing to harvest - Complete crop protection - economically balanced

For the first time, the Indian farmer can cover his every crop protection requirement - cost effectively - through one company. FICIDES INDIA.

As a wholly Indian Company, FICIDES INDIA have access to, and the freedom to implement in India, the world's latest crop protection practices.

Our products - The FIGHTING FORCE - make up a complete range of pesticides, covering every crop protection need from sowing to harvest - cost effectively. Giving the Indian farmer the best value in the market - for the first time.

Untroubled by Pests

FICIDES INDIA

Sweeping Green Fields to Golden Harvests

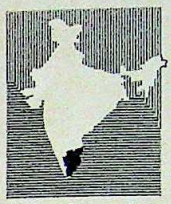
LINTAS-M-FI-2-2417

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAMIL NADU

An Elusive Catch



EVER since the Emergency, beautification drives have lent themselves to a certain notoriety. And when recently the Tamil Nadu Government decided that the fishermen's catamarans were an ugly blot on the Marina Beach seascape and seized them, it immediately brought back memories of Sanjay Gandhi's Operation Beautification of Delhi. But the fishermen were not as unfortunate as the people of Jama Masjid. They asked for—and got—justice, and in no small measure.

The Supreme Court issued an interim stay order last month directing the state Government to return all the boats it had seized from the fishermen during the beautification drive. The order was issued pending final disposal of a number of writ petitions challenging the state Government's action. The division bench comprising Justice O. Chinnappa Reddy, Justice V. Balakrishna Eradi and Justice V. Khalid requested the chief justice of the Madras High Court to depute a deputy registrar to supervise the delivery of the catamarans and report to the court about their condition, since the boats had allegedly been damaged during the seizure.

The battle began in November when vanloads of policemen, armed with lathis and rifles, surrounded the fishermen's villages, called kuppams, opposite Marina Beach while Madras Corporation and Public Works Department (PWD) officials began removing the catamarans left by the fishermen on the beach. The logs were carted away in lorries and dumped some 2 km away from the beach, apparently for the time being.

The roots of the battle go back many years. The tussle has been going on for quite some time, with the Government wanting to cleanse the beach of the catamarans and the fishermen standing their ground on the plea that their catamarans had always been there and they had no alternative place to keep them. Says P.R. Selvaraj, who has been representing the Tamil Nadu Catamaran Fishermen's Association before the Madras High Court and the Supreme Court: "The logs, which are tied by ropes to make the catamarans, are very heavy. So if they are kept away from the seashore the fishermen will have a terrible time carting them all the way to the sea whenever they want to fish."

According to the President of the National Union of Fishermen Kuppuswamy Subramaniam, prawns have to be caught as soon as they are sighted since they do not stay at one place for long. So it is necessary to have the catamarans at hand. He supports his argument by pointing out that prawns and shrimps form the most important part of the catch on Marina Beach, which contributes 37 per cent of the state's total prawn catch of 4,000 tonnes.

So it is a case of beauty against utility. And at the crux of the matter is the fishermen's fundamental right to earn a living—the right of a whole community to its traditional means of livelihood. In their writ petitions to the Supreme Court, the fishermen have cited Article 19 of the Constitution which gives Indians the right to an adequate means of livelihood—or as Subramaniam insists, "the right to facilities which are necessary to eke out your livelihood".

The basic issue of the case apart, the fishermen are incensed at the high-handed manner in which the seizures were carried out, with government officials descending on them and carting away their boats without any notice. For years now, the state Government has been negotiating off and on with the fishermen for removing the boats from the beach and berthing them at alternative sites. Recalled R. Gandhi, counsel for Subramaniam: "In fact, at one stage of the negotiations, the Government was able to persuade the fishermen to stack their catamarans at five clearly demarcated and secluded sites on the beach itself. But it did not take any follow-up action on this. So, for the corporation and the PWD to have swooped down on the beach and removed the catamarans was an arbitrary, mala fide and colourable exercise of power."

SADANAND MENON

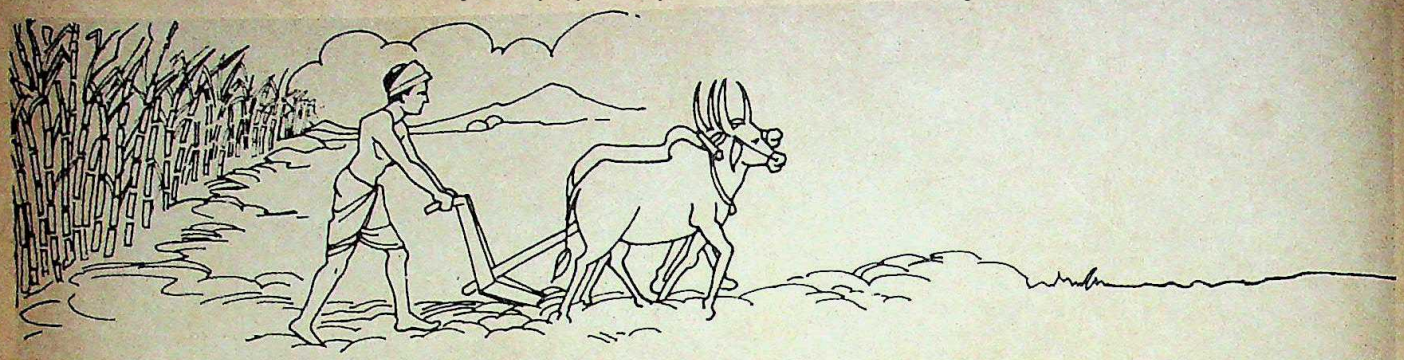
Fishermen with their catamarans on Marina Beach: tug-of-war

The state Government, however, denied this in the high court, saying that it had given the fishermen adequate notice to shift their catamarans to alternative sites. Said PWD Deputy Secretary R. Ramakrishnan in the Government's counter-affidavit: "The fishermen were advised by the executive engineer (of the PWD) and his subordinates personally to remove these obstructions for the better use of the beach by the visitors. This request was made almost daily. It is therefore not correct to say that there was no notice."

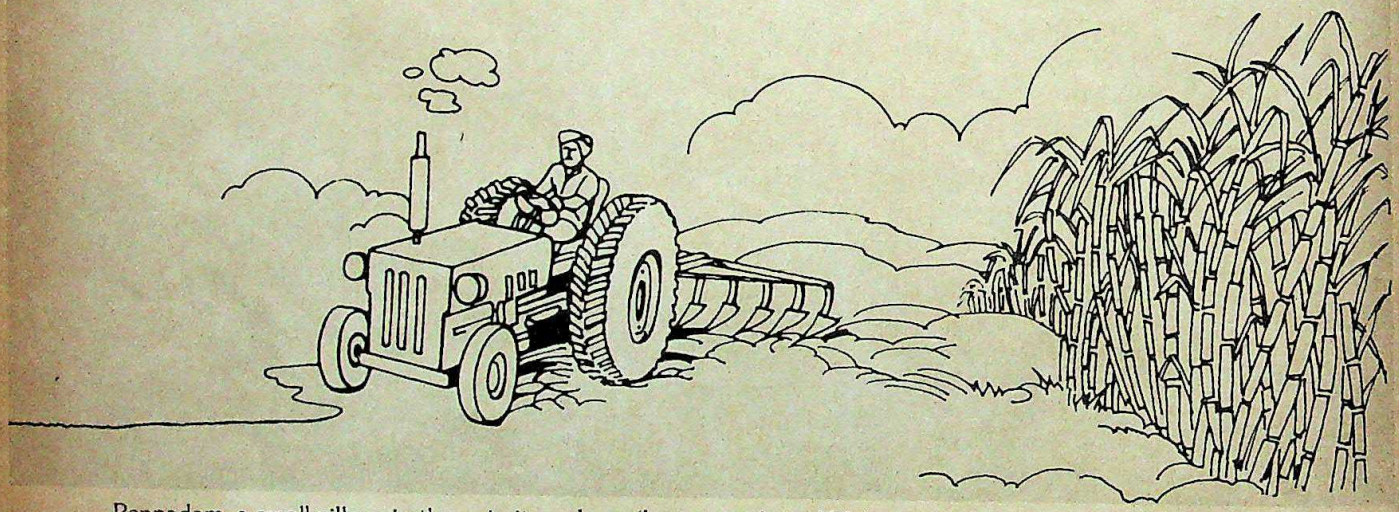
The Government has taken the position that it has not tampered with the right of the fishermen to fish. All that it has done, it says, is to shift their boats to proper parking lots. The issue, it points out, is only the cleanliness of the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



When the people progress the sugar is sweeter



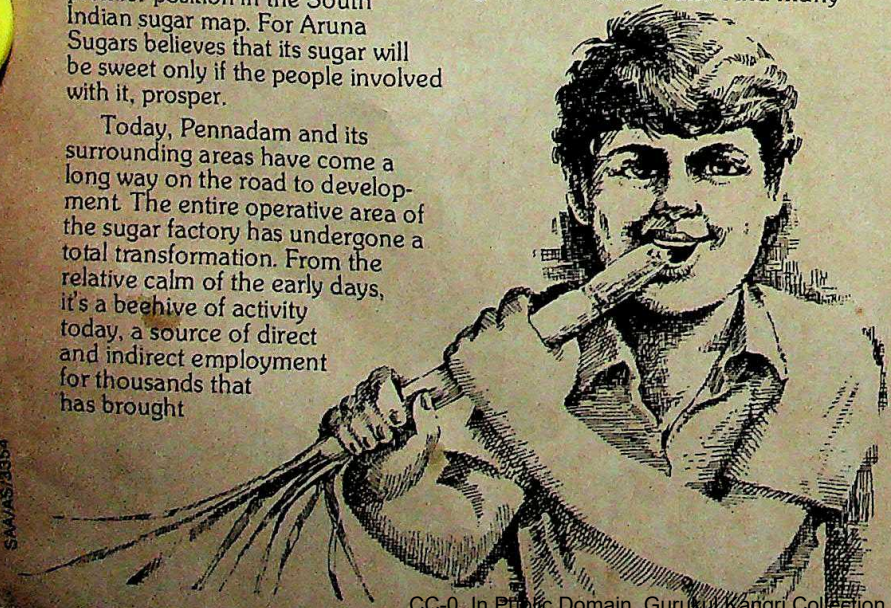
Pennadam, a small village in the South Arcot District of Tamil Nadu is today bustling with activities. Where Aruna Sugars, for two decades now, has been producing cane sugar... Recording success upon success and drawing its strength from the people involved with it, Aruna Sugars has reached a premier position in the South Indian sugar map. For Aruna Sugars believes that its sugar will be sweet only if the people involved with it, prosper.

Today, Pennadam and its surrounding areas have come a long way on the road to development. The entire operative area of the sugar factory has undergone a total transformation. From the relative calm of the early days, it's a beehive of activity today, a source of direct and indirect employment for thousands that has brought in its wake, a 'better quality of life' for all concerned.

Community development programmes already launched on educational, health care and communication areas have helped translate many dreams into realities. The Rotary movement has gathered momentum. And many more welfare measures are in the offing.

Aruna Sugars' commitment to the nation is no less deep rooted. While there has been a continuous Research & Development programme at work bringing forth new varieties, production schedules have been simultaneously kept at the optimum level, even when the country's sugar performance has recorded a downward trend.

That's Aruna Sugars, yielding sweet results for all round prosperity.



SAARAS/3354

Aruna Sugars Limited

Registered & Administrative Office :
"Aruna Centre", 145 Sterling Road,
Madras 600 034.
Cable : "ANUSHAM"
Phone : 471841 (4 lines)
Telex : 041-7850 (ARUN IN) Factory :
"Arunapuram", Pennadam Railway Station,
P.O. Pincode : 606 111.
South Arcot Dist., Tamil Nadu.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

beaches. The right of anyone to offer an explanation and to be heard is a principle of natural justice and this precisely is what the fishermen's writ petitions have been hammering at. Whether or not there has been a violation of natural justice will be decided by the Supreme Court when it resumes hearings in January. Meanwhile, the exercise of returning the catamarans has been gone through, though not without confusion.

The Government claimed that it has returned all the 1,200 logs it had seized while the fishermen contend that not less than 4,800 logs had been seized and the few that have been returned are in a damaged state.

What has hurt the fishermen most is the timing of the action—at the peak of the fishing season of November to January—the golden months for prawn and shrimp catches. Even if they are restored their rights to earn their livelihood as they have been doing for long, some damage will already have been done. For at a time when they should be out in their catamarans looking for a prize catch, they find themselves entangled instead in the net of their legal battle.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

NEW MARKET

Fiery End

FOR 111 years Calcutta's famous New Market had remained one of the city's most resilient landmarks, surviving the depredations of the pre-Independence communal riots, the Naxalite rebellion and the modernisation plans aimed at obliterating its stately brick columns. But last fortnight, a raging fire devastated the market, paving the way for the modernisers to erect yet another monstrous steel and concrete structure.

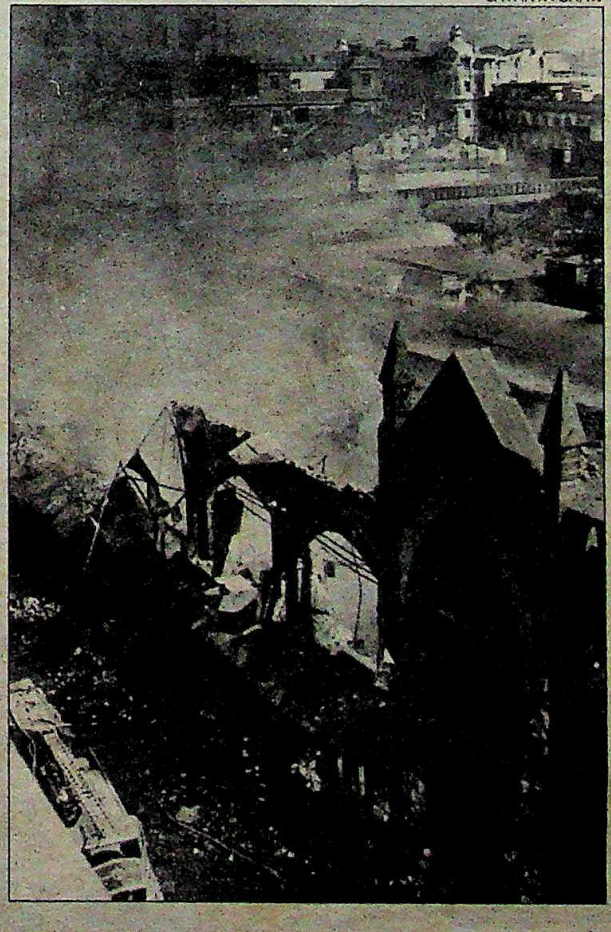
Hardly had the embers of the market's 600-odd devastated shops cooled among the stumps of charred columns, when municipality Mayor Kamal Basu announced that phase two of the market's redevelopment plan had begun rolling. Even while distraught shopkeepers were picketing the municipal headquarters, demanding that they be allowed to put up tin huts in the devastated portion of the market and continue business, demolition teams were moving into the market to prepare a site for a modern four-storey market and Basu, irked by the protesting shopkeepers, remarked: "At this rate I will not be able to do any modernisation."

The shopkeepers want to stay on because they paid absurdly low shop rents to the municipality—between 12 and 40 paise per sq ft per month—while some of them sold as much as Rs 18 lakh worth of goods during the peak months of October-December. Not surprisingly, they are pretty worked up at the suggestion that they continue their trade well away from the premier shopping site. "The mayor should resign," raged shopkeeper Madan Das, and added: "The municipal corporation has deliberately neglected the market in order to demolish it."

While it is impossible to substantiate the furious shopkeeper's charge, there can be no disputing the municipality's neglect of the market. Despite earning a whopping Rs 58 lakh annual revenue from the market, the municipal authorities did little to maintain the historic buildings. Curiously, even the deep tube-wells installed six months earlier near the market, were found inoperative on the night of the fire and could be put into operation only after the electric supply corporation hastily fixed their power lines. The fire started at midnight on December 11 and continued till 11.30 next morning despite army help.

The devastated New Market

JAYANTA SHAW



The shopkeepers' loss has wittingly or unwittingly been the municipality's gain. Most shopkeepers, being illegal tenants, will not have to be compulsorily rehabilitated. Besides, the municipality's moribund phase one redevelopment plan, which consists of putting up a 14-storey marketing complex in the south eastern corner of the market, will also get immediate boost. Lack of takers for shop space in the new complex had saddled the municipality with a few crore of blocked funds. Now the corporation's Chief Architect, Achintya Sarkar, expects a scramble for space in the new complex.

To the city's fanatic conservationists, the municipality's dreams of constructing convenient modern structures with adequate parking space is anathema. "Modern government buildings turn out to be as sordid and ill conceived as the most ancient of our buildings and they also have the disadvantage of being aesthetically repugnant and devoid of historical value," explains D.N. Banerjee, member of the Society for the Preservation of Archival Materials and Monuments of Calcutta. Most Calcuttans, however, would now prefer a smarter and newer "new market" and this time round all the shopkeepers and the conservationists seem fated to lose.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CHANDIGARH

Fears and Uncertainties

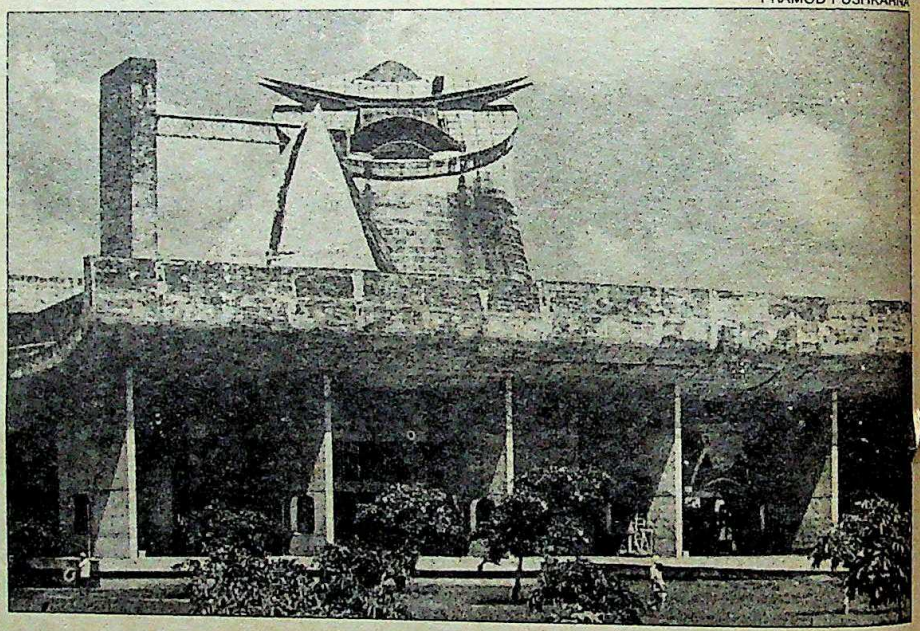
REPUBLIC Day 1986 should dawn as a day of fulfilment for Punjab. On that day the capital city of Chandigarh will be legally restored to the state in fulfilment of a major clause of the Rajiv-Longowal accord. But some others await that day with foreboding for, it will signal a return to uncertainty for the employees of Haryana and the Union Territory of Chandigarh who have spent 19 undisturbed years in this city. For different reasons the city of Chandigarh has enjoyed an almost mythical status. For the people and Government of Punjab it is more than a valuable piece of real estate; for nearly two decades it has been an emotional political issue, the subject of morchas, agitations and high level accords. For its residents it has been a safe haven, sheltered from the political strife raging around it in neighbouring Punjab and Haryana. It is not surprising, therefore, that the Union territory considers itself unique and its employees see themselves as a special breed of super clerks who flinch from the prospect of merger with the ragtag cadres of Punjab. As D-day draws near waves of anxiety course through Le Corbusier's grey edifices with the ripples originating in the corridors of the Chandigarh Secretariat.

The important questions being asked are: what will become of the 19,000 directly recruited employees of the Union territory administration. How soon will the families of 18,500 Haryana officials and staff have to move out if Haryana shifts its capital elsewhere. What will be the fate of the institutions housed in the more famous landmarks like the high court, the Post-Graduate Institute of Medical Education and Research (PGI), and the attractively laid out campus of the Panjab University?

This dread of the future finds an echo in the words of P.S. Lamba, general secretary of the Chandigarh Subordinate Services Federation, which recently organised a massive convention of Union territory employees to demand the creation of a separate cadre for the Union territory's employees even after it is merged with Punjab. "We are facing a very big danger," says Lamba. "Let Chandigarh be a small state within the state of Punjab," he argued, adding that specific provisions be written into the law protecting their terms and conditions. Basically what that demand means is that the 19,000 directly recruited staff of the Union territory should not be transferred out of Chandigarh where most of them have lived, in government housing, since 1966. In all, Chandigarh has 22,500 employees but there is no uncertainty about 3,500 deputationists from Punjab and Haryana, who will automatically revert to their parent cadres.

The high court: legal tussle

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



For nearly two decades Chandigarh has been an emotional political issue, the subject of morchas and agitations and, for its residents, a haven from political strife in Haryana and Punjab.

This refrain about special treatment is echoed in the memoranda submitted by various organisations of Chandigarh employees to the two-man committee set up by the Home Ministry to "identify and examine the issues consequential to the transfer of territories and suggest how they could be dealt with". During several visits to Chandigarh, the committee members Mohan Mukherjee, former chief secretary of Rajasthan, and A.R. Shirali, member of the L.K.Jha Commission on Economic Administration Reforms held detailed discussions with the chief secretaries of Punjab and Haryana and the head of the Chandigarh administration, about the transfer of the Union territory's assets and liabilities, the fate of its Central government institutions and more importantly the fate of the 19,000 employees.

The Mukherjee Committee has to sort out the nuts and bolts issues, like the apportionment of the public debt incurred by Chandigarh to finance its developmental activities, the status of the government institutions and most of all, the fate of the government staff. Some of the answers are quite simple. The public debt has already been squared up, says Punjab's amiable Chief Secretary P.H. Vaishnav, a Gujarati whose idiomatic Punjabi would shame even the homespun rustic. "The PGI is a Central institution and the Chandigarh High Court will remain here till Haryana finally sets up its capital somewhere," he adds.

What is still not certain, however, is the future status of Panjab University, an "inter-state university" which at present gets 60 per cent of its funds from the Centre and 40 per cent from Punjab. Vaishnav set at rest all misgivings about Punjab's ability to maintain the city and its services: "Chandigarh is a special city and will remain that way. The administrative framework will remain much as it is today. We are working on the idea of declaring it a city district like Gandhina-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

gar in Gujarat, with a chief administrator."

Doubts persist about the staff too. In the past, senior Punjab officials used to quote former chief minister Prakash Singh Badal's 1978 letter to the home minister objecting to the wholesale recruitment of staff by the Chandigarh administration. They said that with 22,500 employees for a population of 4.5 lakhs, Chandigarh was the country's most over-administered city. Moreover, it was argued that the inflated seniority of these employees would create problems at the time of their absorption into the Punjab cadre.

Vaishnav suggested that the directly-recruited employees had been hired to service two capitals. He said: "We are thinking of suggesting that they be divided in a ratio of 60:40 between Punjab and Haryana." As for seniority, "one way is that the initial date of recruitment should count for seniority and not the date of promotion." He said lower level personnel have little cause for worry about transfers because the state Government had decided to retain the capital project as it was, and according to one estimate this would require about 7,000 people to maintain services.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

It is clear by now that if Punjab can help it would not like to take on all the Chandigarh employees. Similarly, those who hail from Haryana—and Satpal Gupta, chairman of the National Organisation of Government Employees, says there are 4,000 to 5,000 of them—would like to go to Haryana instead. "We have asked that the employees should be given an option," said Gupta. It is probably in view of this demand that the Chandigarh administration is collecting data on the state of domicile of its employees.

Since Chandigarh has been an oasis of relative calm in the desert storm of terrorist violence, not only Haryanvi but Sikh employees of the Chandigarh administration too would like to stay on there. Said Gupta: "We have sought an assurance that the Union territory's employees, even after allocation to Punjab, should not be transferred out of Chandigarh for 15 years." Others would like to retain the considerable benefits they enjoy as Central government employees.

The secretariat: future shock

Brij Lal Sharma, president of the UT Federation, says Central employees categorised as industrial workers, like the 1,300 workers of the Government of India Press, retire at the age of 60. The moment they join Punjab they will have to retire at 58. Sharma said nearly 200 press workers aged between 58 and 60 would retire the day they are transferred to Punjab. Other benefits are also not to be scoffed at, such as tuition allowance for their children, interim relief, bonus and leave travel concession. Moreover, the electricity tariff in Chandigarh is just 40 paise a unit whereas the rate in Punjab is at least double that. The same is true of entertainment tax and registration fees.

Apart from the wrench of leaving a clean and modern city like Chandigarh for far less appealing towns like Sangrur or Malerkotla, the main fear is losing government housing and disruption of children's education. Satpal Gupta argued that 80 per cent of the schoolchildren in Chandigarh have adopted Hindi as the medium of instruction, and they dread a change of syllabus as well as medium of instruction. Added P.S.Lamba: "We are not against the accord, but we have to protect ourselves. We feel the Punjab Government will soon lower the retirement age to 55 as it has to fulfil its promise of providing 8,000 jobs in two months and 60,000 jobs in a year."

Employees apart, another problem which the Mukherjee Committee is wrestling with is the definition of the Capital Project, which according to the Rajiv-Longowal accord, is to come to Punjab along with the Punjabi-speaking areas which were merged with the Union territory in 1966. The Hindi-speaking area in the north-eastern part of the Union territory is to revert to Haryana. This has created problems because nowhere, say officials, is the term Capital Project precisely defined.

Said one official: "We cannot go by the areas notified under the Capital of Punjab (development and regulation) Act of 1952, because after 1966 all lands were acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, such as the land for the railway station and the 39 tubewells for the water supply scheme." The station and these tubewells now fall in the Hindi-speaking area of Chandigarh, which is to go to Haryana. "The only way to avoid controversy is to give the Union territory as defined in 1966 to Punjab, minus the five Hindi-speaking villages," said a retired official who has been involved with Chandigarh's development for nearly two decades.

The legislation giving effect to the transfer of Chandigarh to Punjab has to contain specific solutions to all these issues. In drafting that legislation the Home Ministry and the Law Ministry will go by the recommendations of the Mukherjee Committee which is due to submit its report this fortnight. A Home Ministry official said the new law would be pretty similar to the Punjab Reorganisation Act of 1966, which carved Haryana out of the composite state of Punjab.

Meanwhile the city's environmental lobby comprising eminent citizens and former and serving officials, won two resounding victories last fortnight, raising hopes that the city's environs will not be permitted to degenerate into an unregulated urban sprawl. With real estate prices in and around Chandigarh shooting up, Haryana, unmindful of the law prohibiting any construction in a 10-mile belt surrounding Chandigarh, started selling plots of land in the area falling between the city and the Shivalik foothills.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Last December Punjab governor K.T.Sataravala sought Rajiv Gandhi's help to stop Haryana's urbanisation of this green belt, saying it was "bound to lead to environmental degradation". Last fortnight, Rajiv appeared to have heeded that plea. His office sent off a letter firmly directing Haryana not to urbanise the green belt around Chandigarh. At the same time the Prime Minister's Office ordered cancellation of all industrial plots allotted in unseemly haste from 1981 onwards in Chandigarh's green belt by a committee of local administration officials. The allotments had been severely criticised by several politicians in Punjab and the matter went up to the prime minister.

Along with the Punjab announcement that the city of Chandigarh would be maintained as it is, these two developments raised hopes of the public that the country's pre-eminent planned city would remain an architectural and environmental show-piece for many years to come.

—RAMINDAR SINGH in Chandigarh

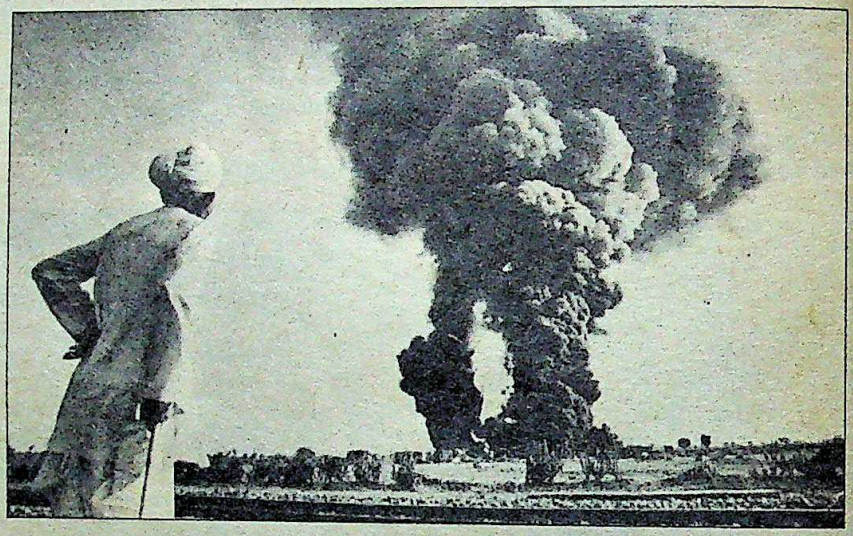
ONGC

Blow-out

IT WAS a chilly night on December 15 when the quiet little town of Kadi in north Gujarat woke up to an explosive sound followed by a burst of orange flames, 35 metres high, licking the dark sky. An oil well being drilled by the Oil and Natural Gas Commission (ONGC) had suddenly caught fire. Panic gripped the town with several residents immediately migrating to nearby villages. Recalls Hijibhai Ghanchi, a tea stall owner: "We were terrorised. We thought that soon parts of the town would be reduced to ashes."

Quickly realising that they had a potential disaster on their hands, ONGC rushed officials from various parts of the country to Kadi to try and put out the fire. But oil well fires are notoriously difficult to handle: when the Sagar Vikas caught fire in 1982, ONGC was obliged to call in famed fire-fighter Red Adair and his men (INDIA TODAY, August 31, 1982). This time in the Kadi well incident, the fire refused to respond to the thousands of gallons of water dumped on it. Even 200 hours after the fire broke out, it continued to rage, sending billowing clouds of smoke into the sky.

ONGC set up a camp near the burning oil well for its crack team to stay as it drafted in the help of the army and other government agencies to help with fire-fighting equipment. Later this fortnight, huge ponds were dug around the well and filled with over 4,000 cubic metres of water to launch an onslaught. After nine days of continuously trying to tame the fire, the ONGC decided to blast the exploratory well with the help of the army. This decision was taken after they found that all attempts to remove the charred steel oil rig weighing about



Smoke and flames from the well: explosive situation

150 tonnes was futile. Even thick wire ropes thrown in to pull the rig out so that the mouth may be capped did not work as the ropes snapped in the heat. Villagers from nearby areas who came to see the massive fire watched with awe as they saw oil being thrown up to a height of over 10 feet as firemen with fireproof overalls tried to stop the fire from spreading. With changing wind directions making it harder to approach the blazing well head, J. Swaroop, deputy manager, Ahmedabad project of the ONGC, said: "We are fighting against nature. This fire may continue despite all our efforts." This was also amply clear as the ONGC has already started digging a relief well about 350 km away so as to ease pressure from the flaming well. It will take nearly a month for the well to be dug. To assist in their operations, the ONGC called in Russian expert V.G. Vaskanov, who has handled nearly 200 inland blow-outs.

The ONGC officials are still not clear how the blow-out took place. Oil had been struck at around 2,000 metres and so a metal pipe had already been put in along with a cement casing necessary to harden the well and prevent it from collapsing. The drill had reached 2,174 metres, when oil and mud gushed out. To control this, a blow-out preventer was clamped on the rig, but the enormous pressure blew it off in 40 minutes. A few hours later the well suddenly caught fire.

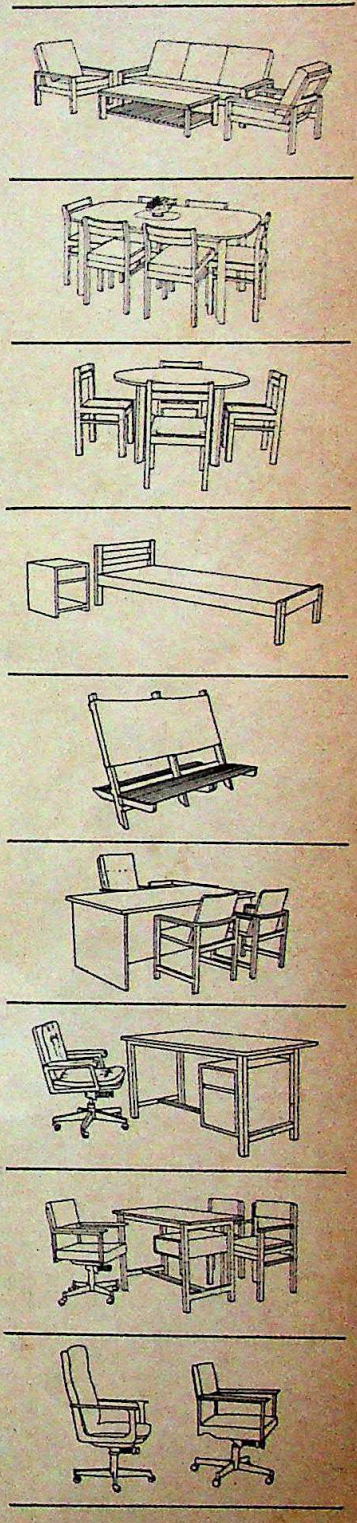
A separate inquiry has been ordered by the Union Ministry of Mines and Safety into the causes of the fire at Kadi in addition to the one already ordered by the ONGC. As officials are involved in putting out the fire, no estimate of losses have been yet tabulated. But in the first 10 days of the fire, the rough losses to ONGC were put above Rs 10 crore. As a precautionary measure, Western Railway cancelled all trains running between Kadi and nearby stations as the railway line is just a few metres from the fire. While determined ONGC men try to put out the fire, L.L. Bhandari, member, drilling ONGC, who rushed from Dehra Dun to direct operations strikes a positive note: "This well may not be retrieved, but we have discovered a new pocket of oil. We can still dig a well nearby and exploit it."

—RAMESH MENON in Kadi

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The world of fine furniture



Woodworth furniture.
In the choicest variety of beautiful designs. Made from the finest quality seasoned wood. To the highest standards of workmanship and finish.

Economical, guaranteed and space-saving furniture. Of lasting strength, enduring satisfaction and permanent value.

Woodworth comes in a wide range. For relaxing, dining, sleeping, and working.

Available off-the-shelf. Also in knock-down condition. Packed in carry-away cartons for those who want it.

GEM INDIA LTD.
K 18-19, Connaught Circus,
New Delhi-110 001.
Phone : 353327

New Delhi, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, Ahmedabad, Bangalore, Bhopal, Chandigarh, Cochin, Cuttack, Jaipur, Patna & Vijayawada.

Mutual- 4139

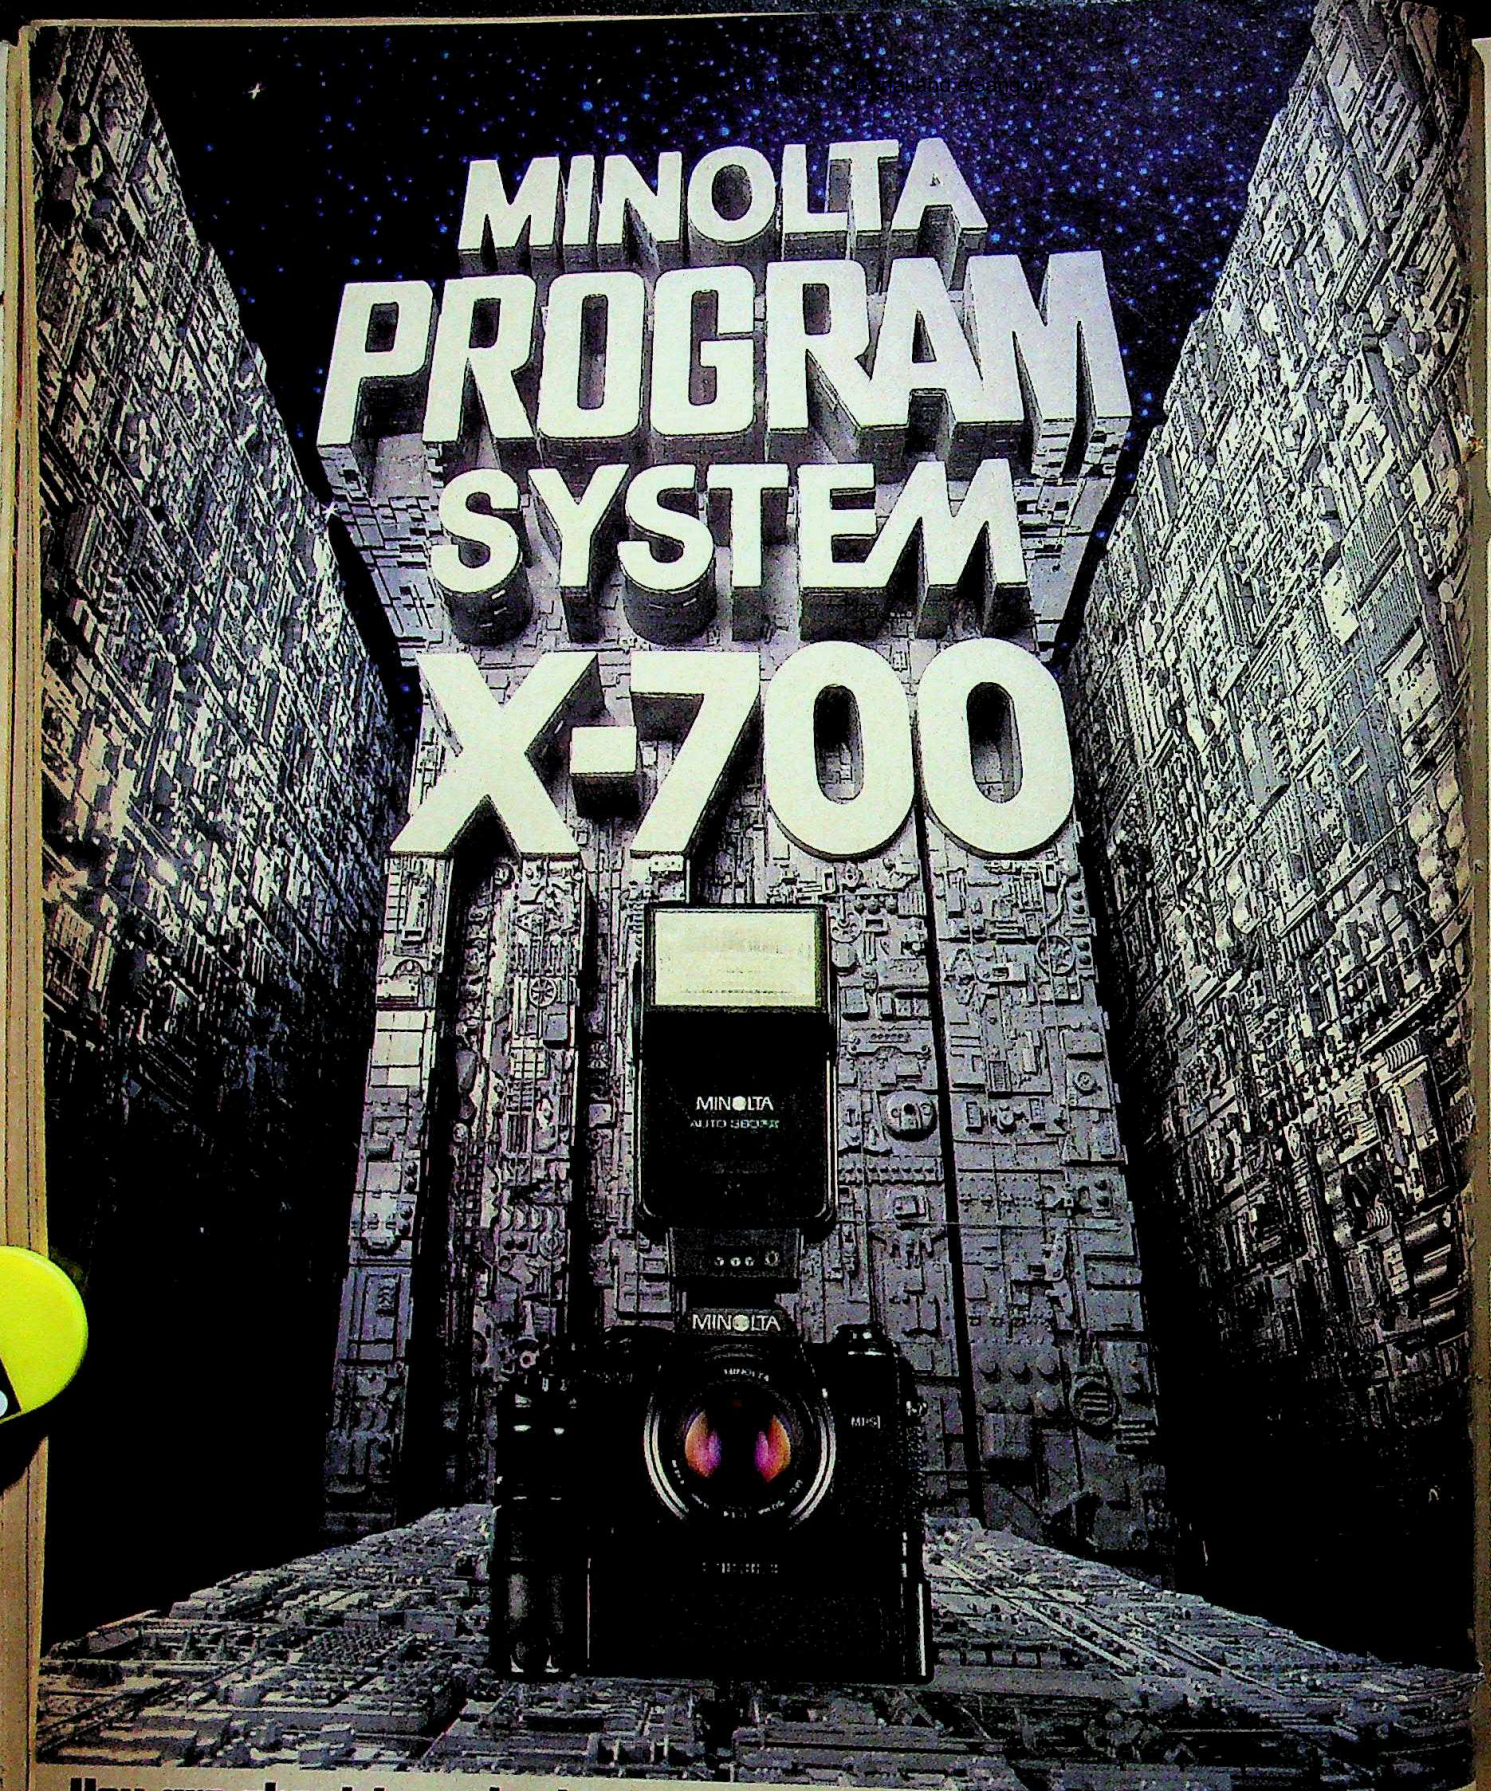
d+h studio
Manufactured with technical assistance from Design + Holz Studio of West Germany.

WOODWORTH

Furniture – The way you wanted it!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar



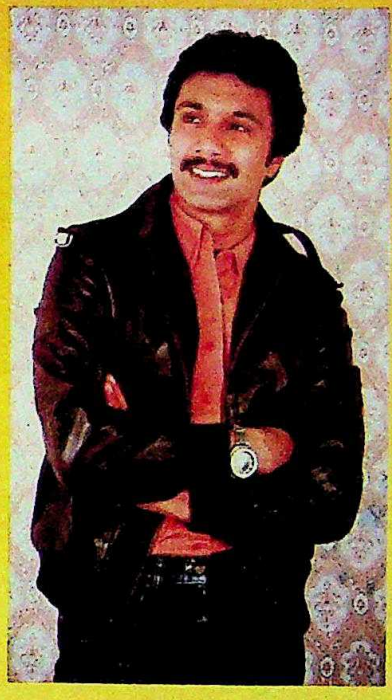
You are about to embark upon an incredible voyage of discovery.

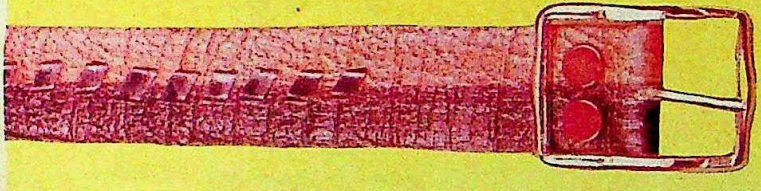
The Minolta X-700 and its Minolta Program System represent a quantum leap into the new dimension of photography. For this incredibly advanced 35mm SLR and its sophisticated, interrelated Minolta Program System accessories and capabilities will usher you into a completely new realm of photographic simplicity, consistency and excellence.

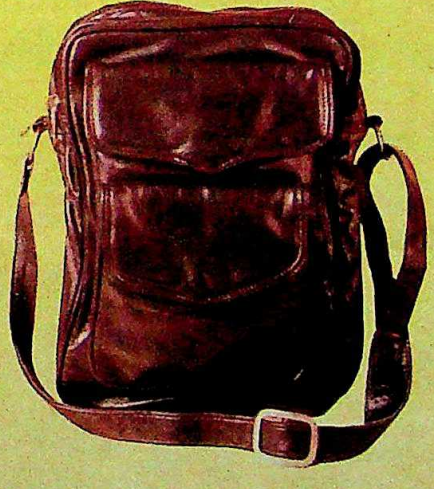
MINOLTA

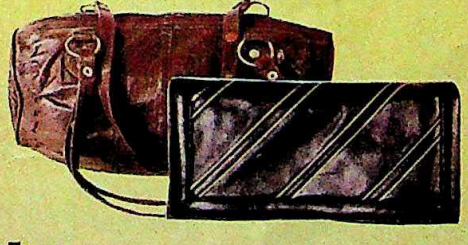
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A Riot of Fashion Stealers in Leather









SWAIN

Footwear for Gents, Ladies and Kids, Belts, Purses, Handbags, Garments...All in genuine leather to give you a touch of class, a feel of comfort. Walk into our world of leather and step out in style. You name it, we have it...Everything in leather.

For Everything in Leather

HLB BHARAT LEATHER CORPORATION LIMITED

(A GOVT. OF INDIA UNDERTAKING)

BHARAT LEATHER EMPORIUM

- E-1, Connaught Place, New Delhi-110001
- G-2, Raja House, 30-31, Nehru Place, New Delhi-110019
- Shop No. 17, M.G. Road / Jantha Bazar, BANGALORE
- 3-6-10, Himayat Nagar, Opp. Liberty Talkies, HYDERABAD
- Anna Salai, Reheja Complex, (Opp. Anna Statue) MADRAS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

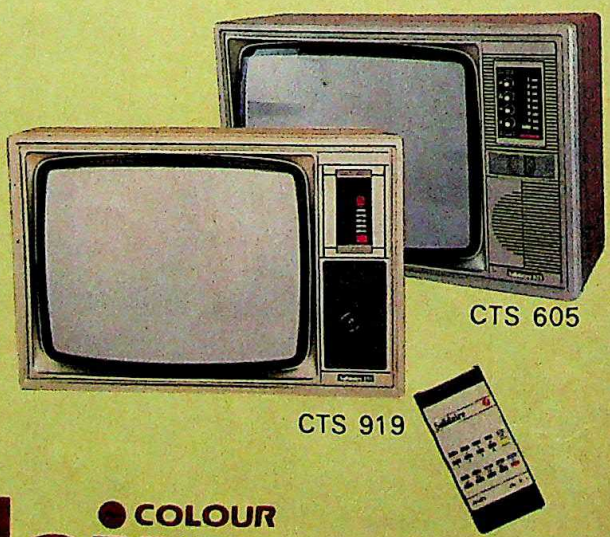
If the eyelashes of the news-reader are clearly visible

it must be Solidaire !

Yes, a claim Solidaire alone can claim. With confidence. Since it has won acclaim from its proud owners. Leading to make more and more people buy Solidaire. For its picture clarity, perfect colour and the right contrast.

And to judge the picture quality, you must do it when the news is being telecast. Because it's live and the news-reader faces the TV camera under proper lighting. It means there's no chance of bad focussing. Now watch the same on different TVs and compare it with Solidaire. On a Solidaire TV you can see every minute detail like the eyelashes of the news-reader. And all in the right, natural tones.

Such picture sharpness in Solidaire is the result of using error-free components from ITT & Preh, West Germany. For instance, components like the LOT, Electronic Tuner, Colour ICs, SMPS etc used in Solidaire are among the most advanced designs in the world.



CTS 605

CTS 919

COLOUR Solidaire -that seldom fails!

Model Courtesy :
Gitanjali S. Aiyar, Newsreader, Delhi Doordarshan

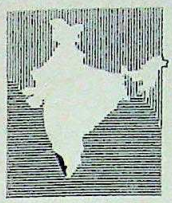
Insight-DB-241

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KERALA

Truce Time



PUTTING aside their well-worn brick bats, the battle-scarred veterans of the ruling Congress(I)-led United Democratic Front (UDF) are hesitantly pulling out their faded olive branch for one of the periodic truces that mark the lull before the storm in the coalition. Chief Minister Karunakaran's threat to hold a mid-term election was shot down last fortnight by the more powerful Kerala Congress and Mulsim League constituents of the ruling front. Karunakaran maintained that the idea could be revived but this is unlikely for some time to come.

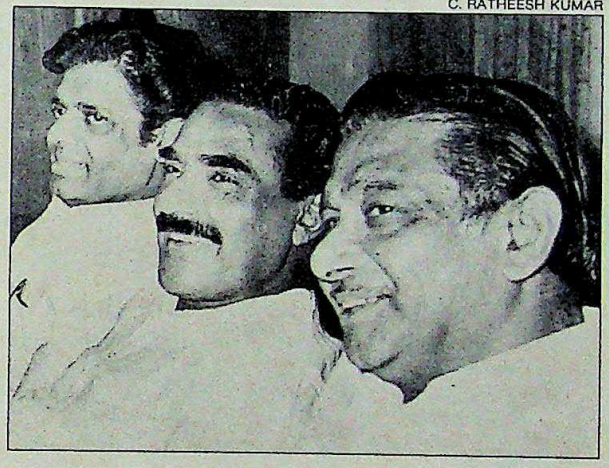
When the leaders of the UDF met in Karunakaran's living-room in his official residence, The Cliff House, after his return from Delhi with the green signal for holding elections in the state, it soon became clear that the Kerala Congress and Muslim League—who have 29 of the UDF's 80 MLA's between them—were in no mood to accommodate Karunakaran in his desire to hold a mid-term poll. Said Tachadi Prabhakaran, a Congress(I) MLA who had a ring side view of the happenings in Cliff House: "The Kerala Congress knew that we would ditch them if we get the support of the Muslim League, so they brainwashed the League who at the last minute turned against us and we had to fight it alone."

Both the Congress(I) and Karunakaran, who were riding a wave following their attempts to cut to size the Kerala Congress in the last few months, now found their credibility at its nadir. Said Arayadan Mohammed, a former Congress(I) minister: "It has been proved once again that the Congress(I) is not being taken seriously by the Kerala Congress and the Muslim League even though, at the moment, we are numerically stronger and head the coalition. The Kerala unit of the Congress(I) can never stand on its feet without the support of these communal parties."

The idea behind Karunakaran's call for a mid-term poll was to begin on a new slate by clipping the wings of the Kerala Congress. At one stage he was even willing to throw them out of the UDF into political oblivion knowing full well that the Marxist-led Opposition would have no truck with them. For this he was counting on the support of the Muslim League, some of whose leaders are known to be closer to him than even his own party's ministers. Said a Congress(I) minister: "In the last three years Karunakaran has given everything the Muslim League asked for. So he knew that they were safely in his pocket, but when he needed their support more than ever before, they dilly-dallied." Leading the statusquoists in the League ranks was E. Ahamed, the industry minister and Muslim League strongman—an ardent supporter of Chief Minister Karunakaran.

The Kerala Congress played its cards

C. RATHEESH KUMAR



(From left) Ahamed, Mani and Abubacker: wrangling

shrewdly. K.M. Mani and P.J. Joseph met Home Minister Vayalar Ravi, who heads the anti-Karunakaran lobby in the state, and made it clear to him that Karunakaran's mid-term poll plan was a ruse for a cabinet reshuffle which would see him dropped from the ministry. Ravi—humiliated all these months by Karunakaran—saw an opportunity to hit back and told the chief minister that if he went in for a mid-term poll, it would be at his own risk. Oommen Chandy—the convener of the UDF liaison committee and protege of A.K. Antony—maintained a studied silence since he knew that the high command favoured him and that the Christian-dominated Kerala Congress would support him against Ravi for the chief ministership.

K.M. Mani then personally went to Malappuram, the Muslim League headquarters, and met Panakkad Sihab Thangal, state president and the spiritual leader of Muslims in the state and bitterly complained about E. Ahamed and his dealings with Karunakaran. Thangal's blue-eyed boy, the Malappuram MLA Kunjalikutty—no great fan of Karunakaran—also prevailed upon him to resist any attempt to establish a Congress(I) hegemony. Sulaiman Sait, MP, and Karunakaran's most bitter Muslim critic, also rushed from Delhi and pleaded with Thangal to resist Congress(I) moves. Mani is reported to have told the Muslim League leaders that if a mid-term poll was to take place the Congress(I) would demand nearly 90 seats in a house of 141 and pointed out that they would have to go along with the Congress(I) terms. Said U.A. Beeran, the Muslim League civil supplies minister: " We could have forged a third front of like-minded parties against the Congress(I) and the Marxists but that would take time." Finally, on the day of reckoning, Mani asked Karunakaran to conduct elections after another six months as the party, with its image at its lowest ebb, could not risk an election.

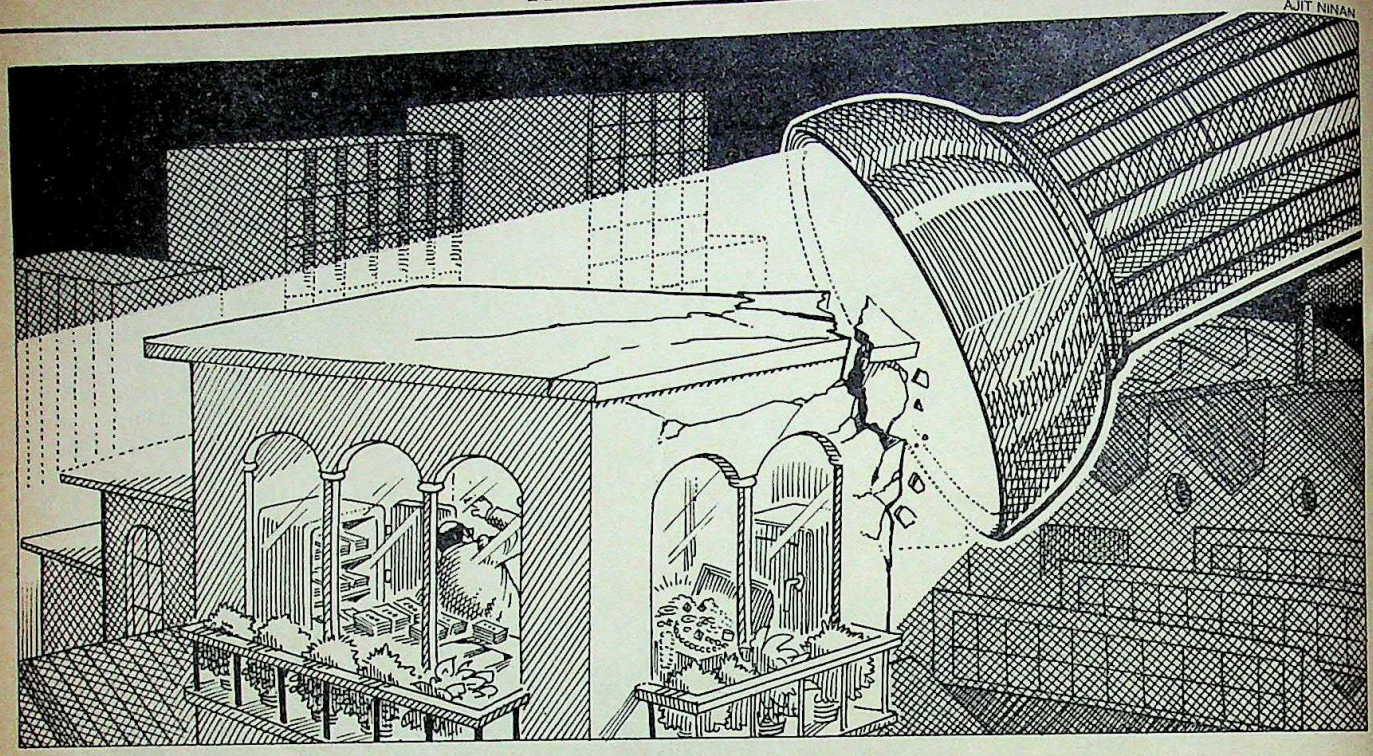
Karunakaran bowed to the inevitable realising that the party would be left in the lurch. By unspsoken consent, further sabre-rattling in the UDF ceased pending the results of further talks on the issue. Said P.C. Chacko, the dynamic Congress(S) state president: " Karunakaran's insatiable appetite for power and the capacity to bargain for it has eroded the charisma of Rajiv Gandhi in the state. A lot of people keep asking me how Rajiv is tolerating Karunakaran's antics." Karunakaran's rivals in the party—Vayalar Ravi and Oommen Chandy—in private wonder about his clout in Delhi. But Karunakaran nearing 70 with 18 years as state party boss, has more guile and cunning than Chandy and Ravi put together. Shortly after surrendering to the Kerala Congress and Muslim League, Karunakaran left to climb the steep hills of Sabarimala, doubtless to secure the blessing of Lord Ayyappa. A few hours after he left for Sabarimala, his staunchest supporter and Youth Congress state President G. Karthikeyan, MLA, told a press conference: " We should break the shackles that bind us to small communal pressure groups and go it alone to have a political polarisation." The Congress was certainly back to square one with one but for Karunakaran, the tightrope walker extraordinaire, the show goes on.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AJIT NINAN



Raiders of the Lost Tax

HARDLY a week went by in recent months without the newspapers carrying startling headlines about government-ordered raids on business houses, trade establishments, and private residences. And the list of people raided on allegations of 'economic offence' read like a veritable who's who of Dalal Street. A jittery business community reacted with dismay when the axe fell on industrial stalwarts S.L. Kirloskar and Rahul Bajaj. Even ordinary, middle class citizens began expressing fear and doubt about their right to privacy and freedom from undue government intrusion. This raised questions about who the raiders are, where they derive their powers from, what protections and rights accrue to the raided, how raids are conducted, who are the likely targets, and whether it is proper to publicise raids on people who have not yet been found guilty. To answer these questions, Features Editor INDERJIT BADHWAR interviewed businessmen and intelligence officials in New Delhi. Assistant Editor PRABHU CHAWLA and Correspondents JAGANNATH DUBASHI and RAMESH MENON talked to politicians, the raiders and the raided in Bombay and Ahmedabad. Their report:

BHAWAN SINGH

V.P. SINGH
finance minister

"There is nothing wrong in giving publicity to the raids. After all, it is the public money that is at stake and the people have a right to know. The drive is not aimed at maligning industrialists...."

HARI OM GULATI

D.N. PATODIA
president, FICCI

"The structure of the laws and regulations is so complicated, so confusing and contradictory that it is impossible for a citizen to know whether he is in perpetual violation of some law or the other."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IT HAS produced fear and loathing, awe and admiration, pious praise and scathing denunciation. Like the French Revolution's guillotine, it pronounces guilt through execution. It has become Rajiv Gandhi's and his Finance Minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh's most potent battering ram in their armamentarium of weapons against "economic crimes". In the lexicography of the new anti-corruption culture it is known simply as the raid.

It strikes anywhere and without notice in a blaze of publicity. The distinctions between the innocent and the guilty, the indicted and the accused blur. An industry here, a business house there, a private residence elsewhere. Swarms of raiders from economic intelligence agencies swoop down on them, search their dwellings and offices and bank lockers and make off with "incriminating documents", and oodles of cash and jewellery. The process of law, to determine guilt or innocence, moves into creaky action only later. The overwhelming might with which the Government's raiders can strike at short notice could teach the mobiliser of a guerrilla army a lesson.

When income tax intelligence raided

BAJAJ AUTO

At a Premium

BHAWAN SINGH

RAHUL BAJAJ
managing director, Bajaj Auto

Bajaj himself was intercepted on the way into town from Bombay airport and 'accompanied' to his office at Bajaj Bhawan. There he was interrogated for six hours.

THE AFFAIR supposedly started in August when, during a raid on a Patna dealer of Bajaj Auto Ltd, duplicate books were recovered showing that Rs 12 lakh had been paid to a top company executive. This sparked off a series of investigations into the premium racket in the 33,000 three-wheelers that Bajaj Auto builds every year. The premium on each is around Rs 7,500.

The raid report was sent to the Finance Ministry, but as a matter of strategy, the department kept quiet. They studied the market for five months, collecting information piecemeal. D.N. Pathak, the newly-appointed director (investigation) in Bombay comes from Uttar Pradesh, the state of Finance Minister V.P. Singh, and was obviously brought in as a trusted confidant of the powers that be in a sensitive post. Pathak is known to be a stickler for rules, and maintains a low profile. He coordinated the entire investigation and operation, right from the lists of Bajaj dealers to the detailing of raiding parties. The object: to bust a suspected racket which they believed resulted in the generation of Rs 3 crore of black money every year.

One day before the raid, a deputy director of intelligence visited the Bajaj plant in Pune disguised as a schoolteacher, to check out the various entry points and sensitive locations. The Pune commissioner of income tax was requested in a letter sent in a sealed cover to collect 100 people at his office and also to arrange buses and taxis.

On December 17, 1985, at 7.45 a.m. 285 people in Pune and Bombay fanned out to 65 locations and began an intensive search. One hundred and one search warrants were signed by Pathak. Bajaj himself was intercepted on the way into town from Bombay airport and 'accompanied' to his office at Bajaj Bhawan on Nariman Point. There he was interrogated for six hours.

Sources say that the officers repeatedly confronted him with the books recovered from the Patna dealer and asked him to explain the listed payment of Rs 12 lakh. According to the same sources, Bajaj said that there were heavy premiums in the sale of the three-wheelers but added that he or his company had no responsibility other than ensuring that the machines were supplied according to priority. He also said that they had no control on what his customers did with the vehicles after buying them.

The department also seized over Rs 1 crore from four Bajaj dealers: cash, jewellery, fixed deposit receipts. The dealers include Project Automobiles, Malad, and its associated concerns like Sah and Sanghi and their partners; Automotive Manufacturers Ltd in Bombay and its branch offices in Gujarat and Andhra Pradesh; Ranji Automobiles, Ahmedabad; Amin Automobiles also of Ahmedabad.

Ranjan Sanghi of Sah and Sanghi denies that his companies are involved in any premium racket, and uses the same argument as Bajaj Auto that they could not be in the premium racket even if they wanted to, as all the lists are computerised and open for public inspection. "We go strictly by the rules. There is no question of hanky-panky anywhere," says Sanghi.

However, a scrutiny of the documents by department officials led them to conclude that, in one official's words, "A substantial amount of premium is being charged on the three-wheelers. A portion of the premium collected was being pocketed by the dealers. Vehicles were coming back to Bombay and Pune from Hyderabad and Ahmedabad for actual usage although they were booked in those cities." He asserts that three-wheelers were found to be available in Bombay through Bajaj Auto dealers at a premium. "During the searches, in fact, we recovered more evidence which showed that certain vehicles had been booked by the benamidars of the dealers and secondly that these vehicles were being allotted out of turn," he adds. With Bajaj denying this vigorously, the case promises to be long and drawnout.

—JAGANNATH DUBASHI in Pune

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Navani Builders in Bombay last February they recruited more than 900 raiders for the job. In addition, they requisitioned 125 taxis, 12 BEST buses and 12 private cars to strike with lightning speed at several locations scattered in the Bombay area. The raid lasted three days and covered about 300 premises.

Raids are hardly a new phenomenon. They were used against political targets during the Emergency. In fact, the pecking order among Sanjay Gandhi's coterie of friends was decided on their ability to get someone raided faster than the other. The Janata government, in pursuit of Mrs Gandhi, took a page right out of Sanjay's raid book. In the public mind raids had become a discredited instrument of official goondaism in which politicians punished other politicians or intimidated a recalcitrant businessman into donating to the party's coffers. Rajiv's Government has tried to give raids a new respectability by insisting that they are unbiased, free from political taint, and are used only as a punitive instrument of fiscal policy to flush out tax evaders and forever bury the parallel black economy.

But notwithstanding these pronouncements, the sheer intensity, frequency, and size of the raids conducted during the past year, and their targets—often regarded as the doyens of enlightened capitalist industrialisation—has sent shock waves of consternation, confusion, bitterness and demoralisation throughout the business community.

Perhaps no past raid has produced as many ripples as have the Revenue Intelligence and Enforcement Directorate strikes against Bajaj Autos and the Kirloskar Group of Companies. The Bajaj Group was accused of generating some Rs 3 crore of black money each year as part of a premium racket on Bajaj scooters and autorickshaws (see box).

The octogenarain giant of the engineering export industry, Shantanu Laxman Kirloskar, was interrogated by seven DRI officials a week before the Bajaj raids. The questioning started at 6 p.m. on December 6 and ended at 3 a.m. the next morning. His wife was grilled for several hours as well.

A sprightly 82, Kirloskar was still smarting under the treatment meted out to him when he talked to INDIA TODAY. Describing all allegations as "completely false", he emphasised that no formal charges had been pressed against him.

The main allegations against Kirloskar are that his group had made substantial investments abroad without the permission of the Reserve Bank of India (RBI). Specifically:

► F.H. Schule, GMBH, Hamburg, West Germany, the first major overseas company to be acquired by the Kirloskars, manufacturers of diesel engines in the 3

INTELLIGENCE OPERATION

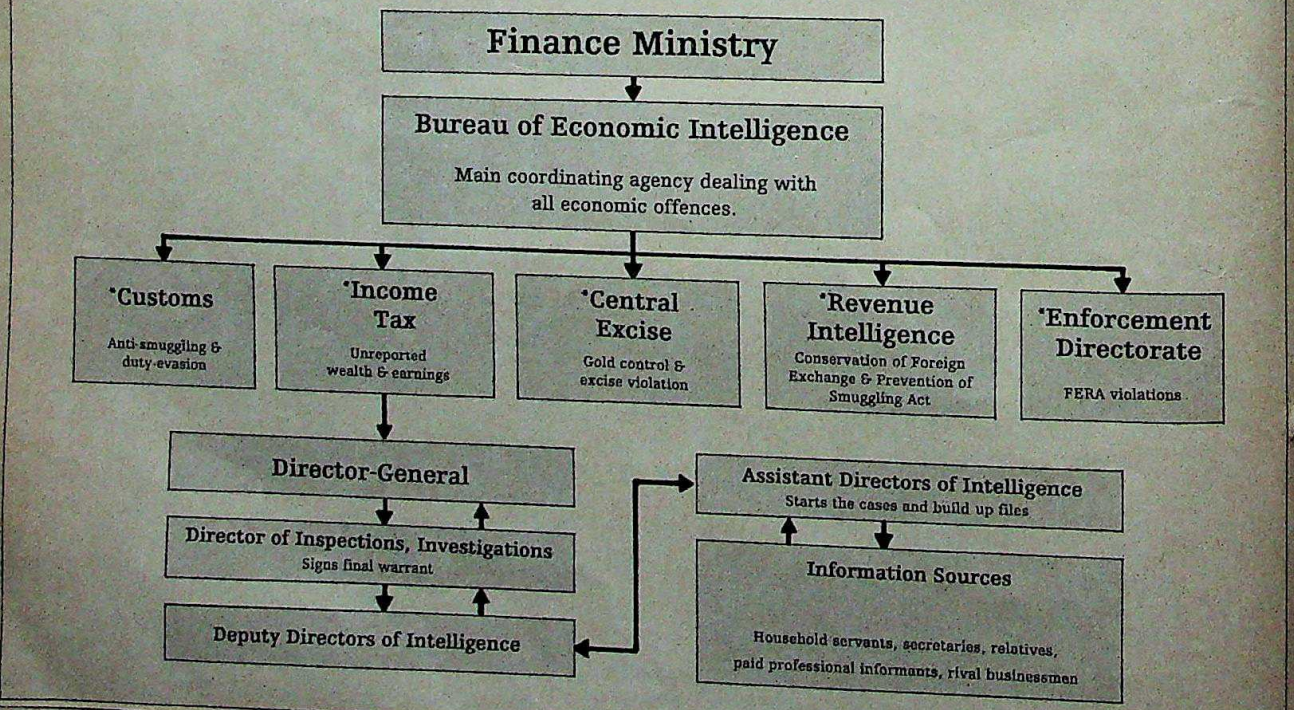
The Hawks

THERE are essentially five government departments—collectively known as economic intelligence agencies—which spook around business establishments, industrial units, private residences, manufacturers' godowns, import docks, and can despatch a swarm of raiders to make that early morning knock on the door with search and seizure warrants.

They are: Customs, Central Excise, Income Tax, Department of Revenue Establishment, and the Enforcement Directorate. They sometimes have overlapping, conflicting jurisdiction and often work without any central coordination. But their overall goal is to ferret out undisclosed assets and income, gold control violations, manipulation of foreign exchange, smuggled goods, and imported goods whose values may have been "under-invoiced" in order to lessen or avoid duty.

While these intelligence wings may vary in structure, chains of command

How big brother watches



*Intelligence operations only. The raid can involve from between 20 and 1,000 raiders depending on the size of the operation.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HP to 60 HP range and other products like grain processing plants, filtration equipment and packaging machinery. Kirloskar Oil Engines Limited (KOEL), of which S.L. Kirloskar is the chairman, holds shares worth DM 1.9 million (Rs 93 lakh) in F.H. Schule. The company's paid up capital was increased from DM 2 million to DM 4 million (Rs 1.96 crore) in 1974, and at that time DM 2 million was invested in F.H. Schule by a Liechtenstein trust. The DRI claims to have evidence to show that the Kirloskars have created the trust and that the other half of F.H. Schule's equity is thus also owned by the Kirloskars. This has been done in contravention of the Foreign Exchange Regulations Act.

S.L. KIRLOSKAR
chairman, Kirloskar Oil Engines Ltd

"The allegations are completely false. There is no under-invoicing involved here. We hammered the price down. When the Government of India hammers down the price, is that under-invoicing?"

► S.P.P. plc is an English company which markets Kirloskar pumps in Britain. The Kirloskars are said to have bought £0.5 million (Rs 87 lakh) worth of S.P.P. shares which were being paid for by another British company by P.M.Engines on behalf of Kirloskar Bros Ltd, of which S.L.Kirloskar is the chairman. P.M. Engines is partly owned by F.H. Schule. The investment of £0.5 million was in two parts: £0.3 million (Rs 52 lakh) financed by a loan from Grindlays Bank, London, and £0.2 million sent to England by havala. The £0.3 million loan was repaid directly from Japan, utilising a commission of £0.23 million and authority to prosecute, their operations are similar. Though lean at the top they are able to mobilise hundreds of raiders at short notice and spring into action with lethal alacrity.

Typically—as in the case of the Income Tax Department—the intelligence operation would be headed by a director-general based in Delhi who is assisted by directors of inspection (investigations) based in Bombay, Delhi, Calcutta and Madras. They, in turn, are served by many deputy and assistant directors of intelligence. Under the Income Tax Act of 1961, a director or chief commissioner is authorised to sign raid warrants.

Raids are not planned overnight. They sometimes take six months to a year of preparation. Income tax cases, for example, are usually started by an assistant director (AD) who is a Class 1, Indian Revenue Service officer with at least five years of service. The AD generally gets his tips and information from market sources, news articles, paid informants, business partners, secretaries, and domestic servants. The intelligence agencies are reported to have as many as 5,000 regular informers in all major cities. Every year, immediately after the budget proposals are tabled before Parliament, the Income Tax Department prepares a list of about 200 companies and 5,000 individual assessees for special scrutiny.

These lists are based on raw information being gathered from informers and are not in themselves a cause for any precipitate action. But once an AD—based on exhaustive interviews with his sources—is convinced that an investigation is warranted he submits the information to his deputy director (DD) who can then authorise a covert operation by paying a spy from a secret fund to penetrate the organisation under surveillance.

If the spy generates useful information the surveillance file is sent to the director or to the relevant commissioner. The beginnings of a raid now start to shape up. At this stage of the game the DD and the AD obtain the official records of the targeted individual or organisation from various departments in total secrecy—in order to prevent the destruction of files or relevant material by a bureaucrat or chaprasi who may be a friend of the suspect.

Before authorising a raid, a director must be convinced of three things:

► preliminary facts show that a person has actually earned more than he has shown;

► the suspect's established modus operandi—the real mechanics of how he earns black money;

► a search or a raid must produce illegal cash, jewellery, or incriminating documents.

Only when convinced on all three counts will the director sign a "satisfaction note"—the go ahead for the warrant to raid. As a rule, for every individual who is searched or raided there are at least 50 friends, accomplices, acquaintances or partners who will also be visited, and the director—before he gives the final okay—must be given a dossier on each person to be covered by the raid.

Before the actual raid occurs a top secret logistical operation is launched. Groups of raiding parties are assembled. Inspectors from the local police are requisitioned if they are needed. Locations—often all over the country—are secretly reconnoitered. Information on bank lockers, accounts, fixed deposits, and voucher registers is accumulated.

Until the last minute only two or three top officials will know who is being raided and where the raids are to be carried out. The head of each raiding party—the team leader—is given a sealed envelope containing detailed instructions, addresses, identities of people, and maps that he can open only after he has reached a given destination. He must go into action—timed to the minute with other raiding parties—only after opening the envelope.

The kit of the income tax raiders includes an envelope containing cloth, needle and thread to sew up seized cash and valuables, wax seals, their own personal rubber stamps, and Rs 10 as lunch allowance. The raids may start at 7 a.m. and last until 3 p.m. or longer. Following the search and lengthy interrogations of suspects the investigations wing will issue a report to the proper income tax officer, and there the work of the raider ends.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

(Rs 40 lakh) due from Ebara of Japan.

► As on June 13, 1985, export earnings of KOEL to the tune of Rs 2.51 crore have not been repatriated to India.

► Kirloskar Industries, Philippines, a joint venture promoted by KOEL, is now under liquidation. Amounts due to KOEL come to $1.16 million (Rs 1.42 crore) and are yet to be repatriated.

► Kirloskar Cummins Ltd (KCL) under-invoiced rod forgings imports from Japan by Rs 2.25 lakh. The difference is said to have been paid to Genemaco.

S.L. Kirloskar was cool when asked about the charges. His answers:

► "We have no connection with the Liechtenstein company which made the investment in F.H. Schule."

► "The allegations are completely false."

► "We export Rs 200 crore worth of engineering goods every year. The Rs 2.5 crore that we are said to have not repatriated are bad debts that occur in any business."

► "There is no under-invoicing involved here. We hammered the price down. It is a legitimate business deal. When the Government of India hammers down the price of its imports, is that under-invoicing?"

Kirloskar said he would not like to say anything more at this stage while investigations were in progress, but emphasised that no charges had yet been preferred. Kirloskar talks slowly but firmly and although he doesn't say so in so many words, is obviously cut up over the treatment meted out to him by the DRI.

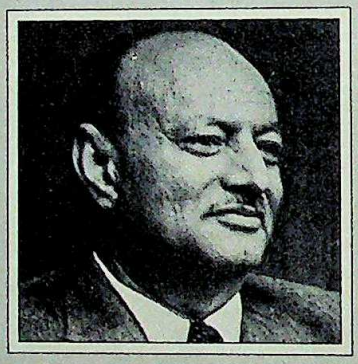
With newspaper stories about the raids on Vijay Mallya, Manu Chhabria, Kapal Mehra still lingering in their minds, the Bajaj and Kirloskar affairs have prompted alarmed cries of foul from the business community. Much of this sentiment is still muted—largely because of fear. But several businessmen confided that there is a feeling that Rajiv and his government are ushering in a raid raj as a "socialist tamasha" to counter criticism that their budgetary and fiscal policies have been too business oriented. "The man on the street," a businessmen said, "gets the impression that the Government is socking it to the big businessman on his behalf."

Whether the Government's motivation is a sinister and underhanded exercise in which the raided are made the scapegoats is anybody's guess. But Finance Minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh has made no bones about government playing Robinhood. He has said that the taxes evaded by big businesses are, indeed, "the share of the poor. We're here on behalf of the common man." And Minister of State for Finance Janardhan Poojary has vowed that the "war" on black money will be continued until all black money is unearthed.

A PROMINENT New Delhi businessman was more blunt. "Sure we made black money. All businessmen made black money to meet the demands of political candidates. Do you think they can fight elections on the Rs 1 lakh to which they were restricted. We had to pay the remaining Rs 2 or 3 lakh to make up the difference. Where do you think this came from? We couldn't pull it out of our companies. How could we explain this to our shareholders? This came out of black money." Arguing that it was all very well to now talk of a new culture, the raids were punishment meted out for wrongdoing that occurred two or three years ago when politicians and businessman had a different equation. More pertinently, businessmen ask, why is the Government pursuing the raids so vigorously when it has permitted people to declare concealed wealth by March 1986? "Why not wait and see the results?", they ask.

Jyotirmoy Dutta, chairman, Central Board of Customs and Excise, counters this general feeling by saying that the Government is only looking for what is legally due to it by way of tax, and isn't out to persecute anyone unfairly. But he warns: "Top industrialists and businessmen have made it their habit to delay their payment due to the Government. They have the best legal and accountancy brains at their disposal. They make a mockery of our budgetary exercise."

But the demoralisation that has set in within business circles is genuine. D.N. Patodia, president of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry, says that the new Government and its economic reform packages had for the first time created an atmosphere in which government and industry could co-



M.L. WADHAWAN

head of the Bureau of Economic Intelligence

"Our job will be to identify and gather information about economic offenders...We will be the focal point for liaison among the intelligence agencies and a storehouse for all possible intelligence."

THE LAWS

Victims' Rights

DURING and after an income tax raid conducted by the intelligence wing, the raided have several rights and appeal avenues open to them under the law.

► Officers of a raiding party must first produce a search warrant, and the raided have a right to ask them to submit themselves to a comprehensive body search in the presence of independent witnesses—who must be present during a raid—in order to ensure that government agents are not planting any incriminating evidence on the premises.

► The raiders can under no circumstances seize all cash and jewellery they find. If the raided is able to prove on the spot that his valuables have been declared and taxes have been paid, the assets cannot be taken away.

► After a comprehensive search—usually in and around and under every receptacle on the premises—the officers must make a panchnama— detailed records and receipts co-signed by the independent witnesses, the team leader and the suspect—before the packets are sealed.

► Under Section 132 (5) of the Income

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

operate "in taking the country ahead at a fast rate. Anything that dampens this spirit is indeed unfortunate. The wide publicity that is being given and arrests being made before charges are proved has come as a disappointment. I feel in all such cases advance publicity is totally uncalled for, and arrest is discretionary, not obligatory."

V.P. Singh responded during an interview: "There is nothing wrong in giving publicity to the raids. After all, it is public money that is at stake and the people have a right to know what has happened to this money. This drive is not aimed at maligning industrialists or individuals but to inform and educate the people about unethical trade and business practices. Industry must create an environment in which the Government trusts them. We just cannot ignore a person simply because he has a better name and life-style than others."

But Patodia believes that the Government must do a bit of legal and regulatory housecleaning of its own. "The structure of hundreds of thousands of laws and regulations," he says, "is so complicated, so confusing and contradictory that it is impossible for a citizen to know whether or not he is all the time in perpetual violation of some law of or the other. Indian laws must change and be replaced by fresh, easy to understand language so you don't have to have lawyers to interpret them all the time."

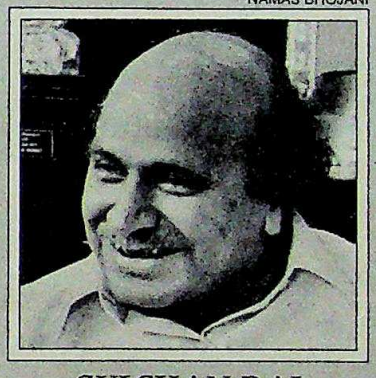
Ashok Mehra, 38, one of the proprietors of Mehrasons, a leading New Delhi jewellery business says he is the victim of excise inspectors who do not themselves know the technicalities of the law they are supposed to enforce. The operating licences of four of his stores were recently suspended, along with those of nine other jewellers, for "illegal transactions" following raids conducted earlier during the year. Soon after this, however, he appealed to the high court and obtained a stay order.

THE MAIN accusation against Mehrasons was that the dealers had less quantity of gold than was shown in the books, the suspicion being that they sold this gold without showing it on the books, thereby generating black money. But, argues Mehra, "The inspectors who came to check our registers and weigh our stocks don't even know the difference between 14 carat, 22 carat and 24 carat gold. So how can they know whether the gold is less or more?" In their Karol Bagh showroom, for instance, excise inspectors weighed the entire stock and found it 3 kg short. But when Mehra convinced them that they were technically wrong they re-weighed it and found 500 grams excess. Then they re-weighed it again and found 300 grams less. All the while, Mehra complained: "They don't let you argue with them or explain anything to them. They simply tell you, sign here or we'll seize it and seal it."

Mehra believes the whole system is arbitrary. "Remember," he says, "our books are constantly inspected. Still, they raided us 10 months ago, and now, overnight they tell us our licences are suspended. We are not even proven guilty or even have a chance to explain. They did not even give us a photocopy of our papers they seized. When we ask them how they can do this without proving us guilty they simply respond, 'we have powers'. We have always paid our sales tax and income tax. We have done nothing wrong. Who will make up for the reputation we have lost and loss of revenue? My children read about it in the papers and ask me what I have done. This is the height of babu raj. I had plans to expand my business but I will not do so now. Ultimately the Government will also lose on revenue if businessmen lose confidence and refuse to expand."

The frequency of raids and the attendant publicity has caused not just the business community but also middle class citizens to express fears of their privacy being violated through raids. Several people who talked to INDIA TODAY expressed a common concern. They are wage earners and petty businessmen. Many of them bought houses 20 years ago when land was cheap, or inherited gold and jewellery which have appreciated five-and ten-fold. They face a Catch-22 conundrum, if they declare their assets they may be subjected to a wealth tax that their earnings—on which they already pay regular taxes—cannot afford. Alternatively, if they are raided they can be charged with concealing undeclared wealth and subjected to confiscations and penalties. And many of them believe that the next midnight

NAMAS BHOJANI



GULSHAN RAI

film producer

"My blood pressure went up 200 over 140. I didn't know whether I was going to live or die. I haven't done any crime in my life. I have suffered heavy losses in the last two years."

Tax Act, an income tax officer must issue a report within 120 days on whether seized items will be kept with the department as collateral against unpaid taxes or released to the owner. The officer, at his discretion, may work out a tax and a penalty and release the valuables if the assessee agrees to pay in writing. But he will be reluctant to do so if the liability exceeds Rs 1 lakh. If the owner can prove that the assets have been unreasonably detained beyond 120 days the department will pay an appropriate interest upon returning his cash and valuables.

► An individual who believes he has been unfairly raided can appeal to the high court alleging that the search was mala fide, or submit a writ petition against the search to the Supreme Court. The courts—based on the facts— may declare a search illegal and order the department to return the material, but they will not question the judgement of the commissioner or director who ordered the raid. A court judgement against the department does not mean that the tax case against the individual will be necessarily dropped.

► A final order or assessment made by an income tax officer on the basis of the raid can be appealed to the income tax commissioner or to income tax tribunals that fall within the jurisdiction of the Law Ministry. —INDERJIT BADHWAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

knock from the intelligence agencies will come at their doors.(see box)

But the chances of this happening are slim. As one revenue intelligence raider explained: "The smaller guy doesn't need to fear us. Usually we have instructions to leave personal jewellery under a lakh of rupees alone. We may list it but we don't seize it. The big fish are more important. If an informant comes to me I'd be interested in someone who has quietly accumulated Rs 20 or 30 lakh in the last five years through an established, illegal modus operandi. In a big city like Bombay, for example, we know that most people are earning black money. We get regular information on fixed deposits. If we find, for example, that someone is showing fixed deposits of Rs 2 lakh and has bought two new flats in succession then we would have reason to start making inquiries."

M.L. Wadhawan, one of the most powerful bureaucrats in the Finance Ministry, heads the newly-created Bureau of Economic Intelligence a super-agency which, when fully staffed, will be able to perform—through signing warrants or making requisitions—the functions of all the five intelligence wings that are operating at present. His concern is not with the small fry.

HARI OM GULATI

ASHOK MEHRA

proprietor, Mehrasons Jewellers

"We have always paid our sales and income tax. Who will make up for the reputation we have lost and loss of revenue? My children ask me what I have done. This is the height of babu raj."

"WHEN we are fully operational," Wadhawan says, "our job will be to identify and gather information against economic offenders operating either as a syndicate or individuals on a large scale. We will then collate this information and develop all the legal angles under applicable fiscal laws, plan and coordinate strike actions, and monitor follow-up investigations by all agencies concerned. We will be the focal point for liaison among all the intelligence agencies and a storehouse for all possible economic intelligence."(see box)

The bureau, further, will concentrate on the sources where black money is generated, some areas being the hotel industry, real estate and films. While some of the industries under scrutiny have escaped full-scale raids, the film business seems to have had more than its share during the past year.

According to intelligence sources, the Bombay film industry is said to generate about Rs 50 crore of black money every month. Single deals involve as much as 60 per cent of black money. Recently, seven groups of distributors and exhibitors were raided. Among them: Gulshan Rai, Yash Chopra, B.R. Chopra, Subhash Ghai and N.N. Sippy. Says Rai about the raid on his house: "My blood pressure went up 200 over 140. I didn't know whether I was going to live or die. I haven't done any crime in my life. I have suffered heavy losses in the last two years." But he was quick to add that the dozen or so officers who raided him were "very polite and well-behaved ". Recoveries made from Rai's house included Rs 51,000 in cash and Rs 3.4 lakh of jewellery.

While Bombay is highlighted as the raids capital of India because of the publicity given to film stars and producers caught in the dragnet, its real importances lies in its being the financial lynchpin of western India—the most important revenue collection base in the country.

Last year there were 600 income tax searches in Bombay yielding seizures of Rs 3.5 crore. This year there were 1,100 searches with seizures of Rs 15.6 crore. Duty evasion cases shot up from 5,070 (detected) involving Rs 59 crore of evaded duty to 6,124 with Rs 228 crore duty evasions. Last year Bombay customs made 643 arrests and obtained 359 convictions. This years arrests shot up to 847 with 335 convictions so far.

While customs raids and investigations yield a large number of prosecutions because cases are usually made against thugs and smugglers who can be tried in criminal courts, other areas of economic intelligence lead to mixed or poor results. Initial search, seizure and recovery figures given by the Government in the areas of income tax evasion are ultimately rendered meaningless because they are usually litigated in courts of law. And in the majority of income tax cases the courts, in the absence of concrete evidence that a suspect deliberately tried to cheat the Government, decides against criminal conviction.

At last count more than 15,000 Customs and Excise cases were pending in the courts with a total revenue implication of about Rs 3,800 crore. Intelligence agency officials complain that the involvement of courts slows down the pace of prosecutions and the realisation of revenues. They are lobbying intensely for the creation of special income tax courts to handle the cases expeditiously. But as one Delhi industrialist put it: "It's ridiculous to blame the courts. In this country we live under the rule of law. Just because the Government gives you some fancy figures and says these are the money claims pending for the treasury doesn't mean those claims are right or even accurate. As individuals we have the right to use the courts to challenge the powers and claims of the state no matter how deeply they may be clad in today's so-called 'culture'."

Purshottam Choksi, chairman of the Manek Chowk Mahajan Association in Ahmedabad, where excise inspectors sprang raids on the premises of 27 gold and silver dealers and seized Rs 10,000 worth of gold sums it up another way: "It is a good idea to unearth unaccounted money. But we businessmen should not be unnecessarily harassed. So much publicity is given to the raids by the Income Tax Department that the people have started getting the feeling that we are all defaulters and enemies of the nation. After the case is heard, businessmen often get back all that was seized. But no publicity is given to that." With the protagonists standing daggers drawn, neither side is likely to yield. The raid, it seems, is here to stay.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Kashmir Velour

The wall-to-wall difference in pure new wool

Rich in colour and gentle to the touch, every centimetre of a Kashmir Velour wall-to-wall carpet is a superb blend of pure, New Zealand and Indian wool.

Which means, you are assured of a carpet that survives fire, heavy furniture, dirt and years of use with ease.

Little wonder, Kashmir Velour bears the Woolmark. The symbol of quality recognised by over 400 million people, the world over.

Woolmark
PURE NEW WOOL PILE

modifloor
modi carpets ltd. India's No.1 Carpet Manufacturing Company

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

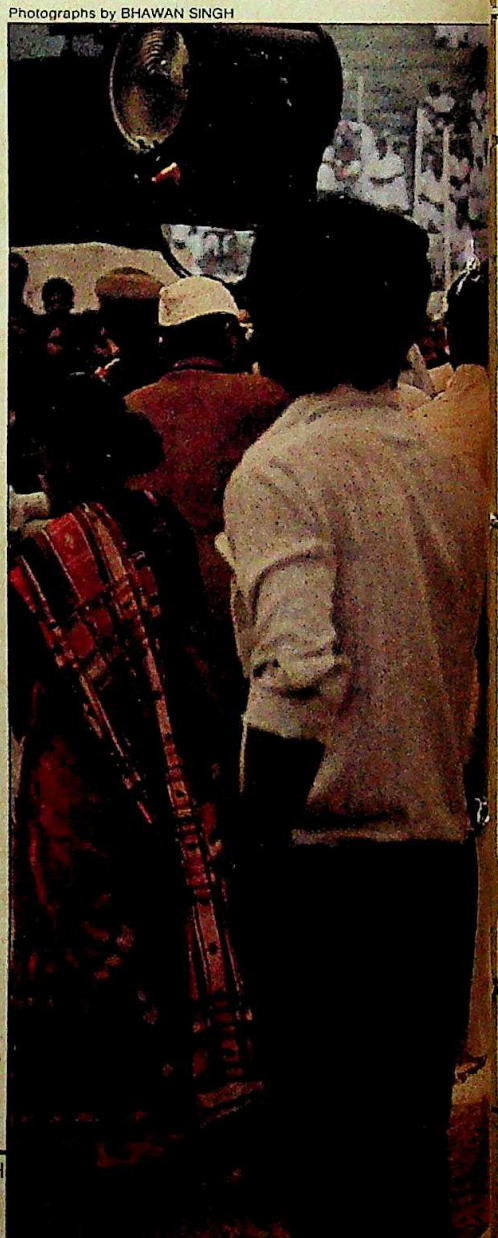
CONGRESS CENTENARY CELEBRATIONS

Pomp and Chaos

THOSE who expected something different, now that Rajivji is in charge, went away disappointed. Those who were looking for organisation, discipline, austerity, debate, the lost world of decades ago, went away alarmed. Only the cynics were laughing and told-you-soing. For the Congress centenary celebration, in spite of Congress President Rajiv Gandhi's plain talking, was a tamasha in the great Congress tradition, an extravagant jamboree made up in equal parts of sycophancy, showman-

Rajiv Gandhi greets Congressmen at Bombay; and scuffles at the session: an extravagant jamboree

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH



CC-0. Prof. Satya Vrat Shastri Collection. Gurukul Kangri Collection, H

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ship, indiscipline and disorganisation. A banner on Bombay's Marine Drive, fluttering above the milling khadi-clad legions on a warm December week-end, said it all: "A hundred years ago they were class. Now they are classic."

For three days at the end of 1985, over one lakh Congressmen showed to Bombay just how classic they could be. The party spent a reported Rs 5 crore in proving to the people that they were still the devil they knew. From the tricolour-festooned, hopefully temporary township of Tilak Nagar, where the hungry hoi polloi scrambled for bananas and biscuits, to the historic August Kranti maidan to the hallowed Brabourne Stadium—Indira Nagar in the new lexicon—where unruly delegates were lathi-charged, it was evident that, despite all the invigorating talk about the next century and the new catchwords of pragmatism and efficiency, little had changed.

Even as the garish cut-outs of grandfather, daughter, and son of India's most durable dynasty went up at the crossroads unevenly adorned with winking lights, and as nearly 100 welcome arches swayed uncertainly over Bombay's roads—among them the offering of non-resident investors—it was clear that here was more of the same. Rajiv was everywhere, on posters, arches, banners, glowing at the entrance to Tilak Nagar. His clean, scrubbed face was juxtaposed with chosen heroes of the Congress and the freedom struggle: Subhash Chandra Bose, Maulana Azad et al. One memorable banner proclaimed that Dadabhai Naoroji worked for his country, but Rajiv was working not just for his country but also for the world.

The crowds of delegates streaming into town in the 700-odd buses and the score or so daily local trains arranged for them by a thoughtful administration came to believe that the Congress consisted of only two people, Indira and Rajiv, The Gandhis, including, thankfully, the Mahatma, made up most of the backdrop at the Brabourne Stadium in large paintings. The organisers also went gaga over a gimmick created specially for the occasion: a watch with two revolving, specially treated plates which, twice every minute, synchronised to show a smiling Mrs Gandhi.

Indeed, as the prime minister went about the business of unfurling flags and unveiling plaques, it could have been any Congress bash. For a celebration which was to commemorate the continuing existence of a 100-year-old organisation whose history is intimately intertwined with that of the country it rules, there was a disappointing lack of celebration in the proceedings. On the first day, for instance, at the meeting of the subjects committee at the August Kranti maidan, where it all began 100 years ago, the minutes of the last AICC(I) meeting held in May were, on the urging of the party president, taken as read and passed only a few minutes after AICC(I) members had held them in their hands for the first time.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

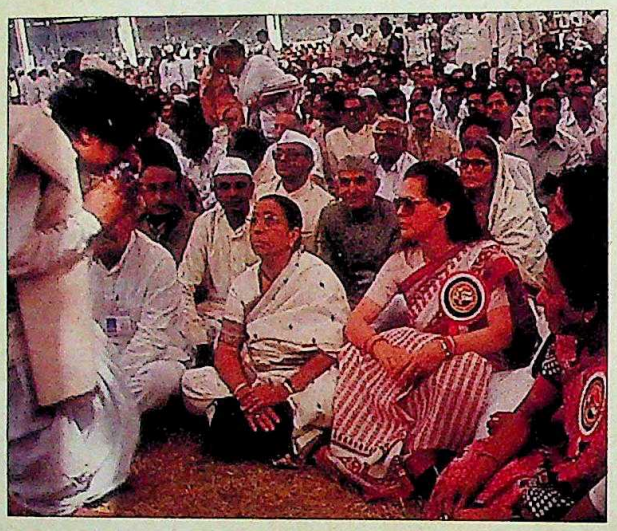
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Debate was non-existent; discussion at the hefty premium. It was blindingly obvious that the session was not being taken very seriously by the most powerful people in the Government: even as Human Resources Minister Narasimha Rao went interminably on about how best to apply them in the march to progress, Finance Minister V.P. Singh, Commerce Minister Arjun Singh, Minister for Internal Security Arun Nehru and Minister of State for Defence Arun Singh all sat in the audience. The two Aruns, in fact, walked in together, sat down together, and were immediately mobbed by reporters for a quickie press conference. Not very far away was Amitabh Bachchan, surrounded by his acolytes, grimacing at any photographer who tried to snap him.

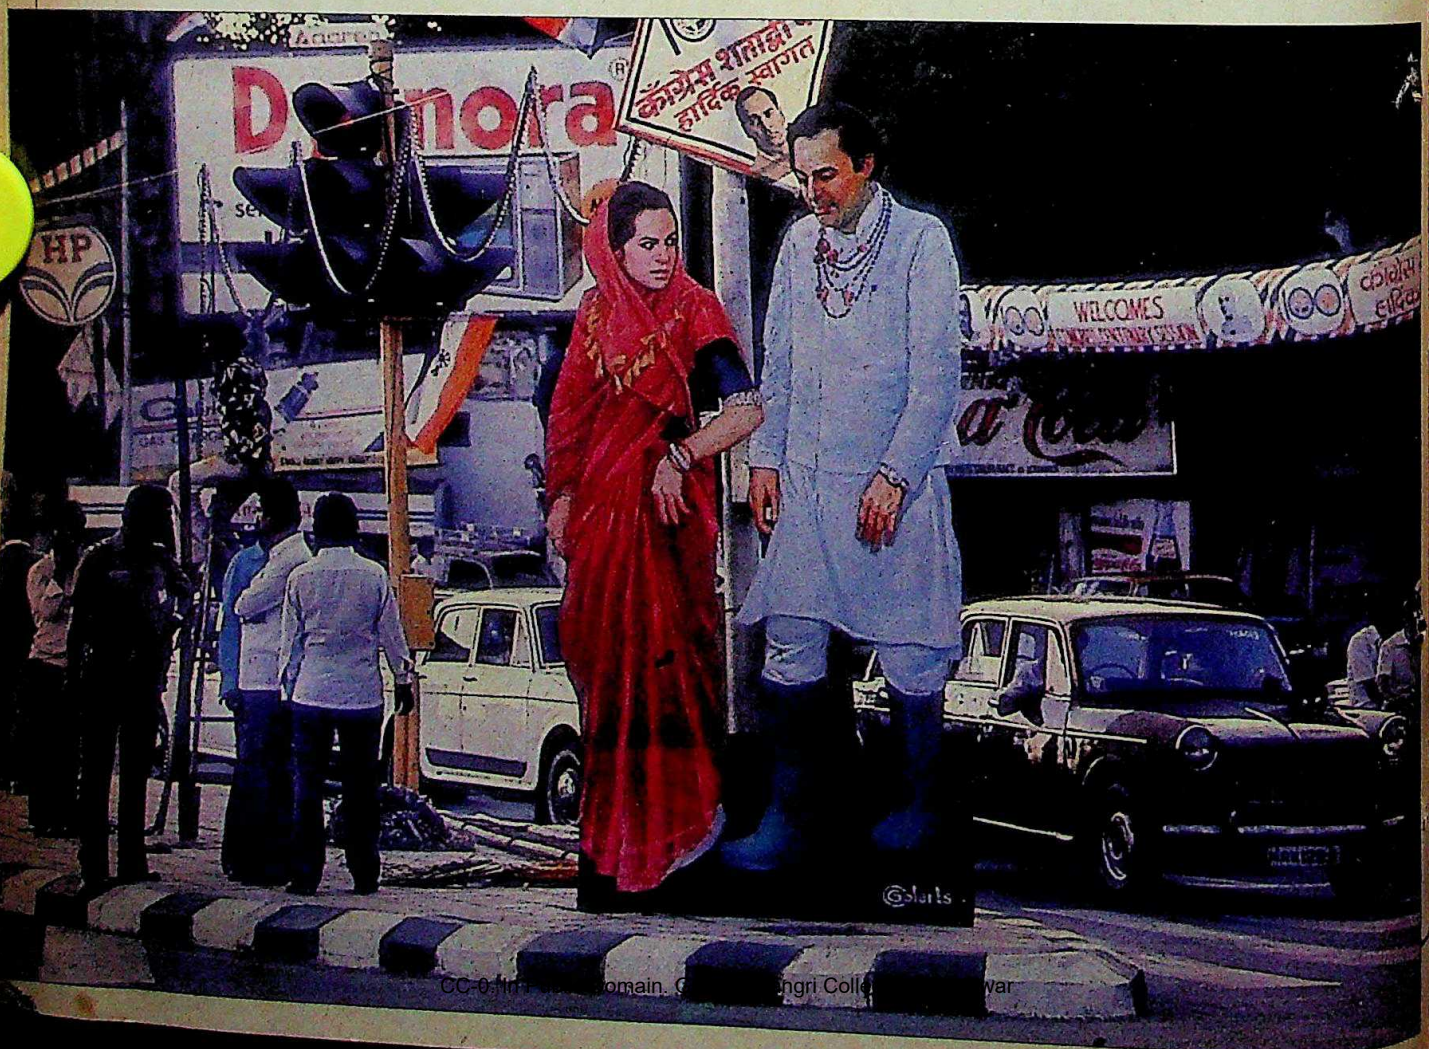
The culture of the personality, and that too one personality to the drowning of everybody else's has for long been a fact of life in the Indira Congress, and if Rajiv wanted to send the message that those days were over then that message was conspicuously absent in Bombay. Said a middling party functionary: "It is only right that we praise Rajiv to the skies. If he weren't there to get us the votes we would be nowhere." Mused Arun Singh: "It will take at least 20 years to get rid of this culture of sycophancy." Not that anybody was trying very hard.

Nobody was trying very hard to be austere and frugal either, in keeping with the party's oft-repeated claim of being a party of the poor. The party had booked 700 rooms in various five-star hotels, including 40 for as many journalists, who were wined and dined at party expense. In shameful fact, none of the 300 MP's, 2,000 MEA's, 25 PCC(I) chiefs and 17 chief ministers cared to take a dekko at the racecourse grounds. In the earlier session at Calcutta, the provincial bosses had stayed with the cadres; here they did not even deign to visit them. Ironically, all this was going on even as their leader scolded them in the Brabourne Stadium: "For such persons the masses do not count."

It was saddening that even the persons who had joined the party recently, and who can be said to form part of the youth brigade which is reported to be revitalising the aged machine, were not setting standards. A student leader, Marxist-turned-Congressman lorded it at a five-star hotel. The joint secretary of the Youth Congress(I) also set up camp at a luxurious hotel, though she was put down as being somewhere else. Party functionaries set up as middlemen, putting this industrialist or that bureaucrat in touch with people—for a fee. Members of Parliament who were put up in the Haj House, an incomplete



Delegates greet Sonia Gandhi (left); and cut-outs in a Bombay street: culture of sycophancy



CC-0. In Public Domain. G... Sangri Colle... Varanasi

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

transit tower for Haj travellers, turned up their noses at the rough flooring and the rickety cots, left their aides behind—most of them came with family and friends in tow — and fled to clementer climes.

So exasperated did the general manager of one hotel become that he locked up his office, gave his khadi-clad clients the key, and walked out. One of the most expensive restaurants in the city was crowded with diners obviously dedicated to austerity by day and Epicurus by night. On the seamier side, a state minister went missing for several hours and was finally traced by anxious security to the red light area—which, in anticipation (remember Nagpur) had heavy bandobast.

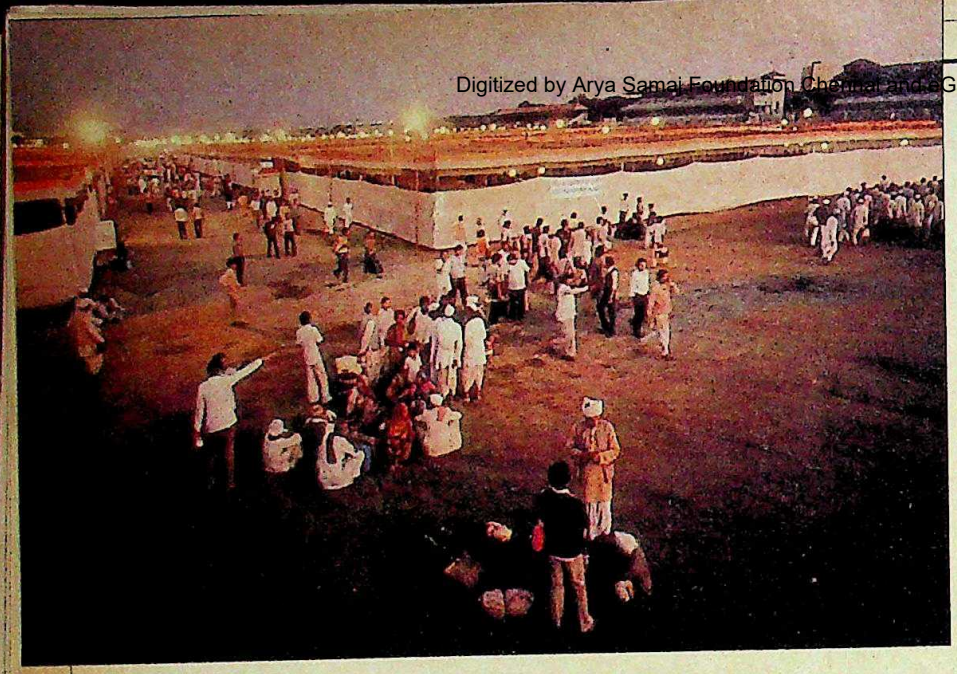
Perhaps the hypocrisy could have been pardoned if the organisers had pushed things through smoothly. But despite their best efforts, things went wrong. On the second day of the three-day jamboree, when the Brabourne Stadium received its honoured guests for the first time, there was chaos. People jammed the gates demanding entry, with the police swearing that they wouldn't let them in. Apparently what had happened was that all facilities for checking delegate cards had broken down and the result was people were gatecrashing on the strength of 'special invitee' passes which sometimes even sold for Rs 25 each outside the stadium. In the repeated melees at the gates several people were injured, journalists had literally to batter their way in, foreign diplomats were snubbed, and at least four people sent to hospital.

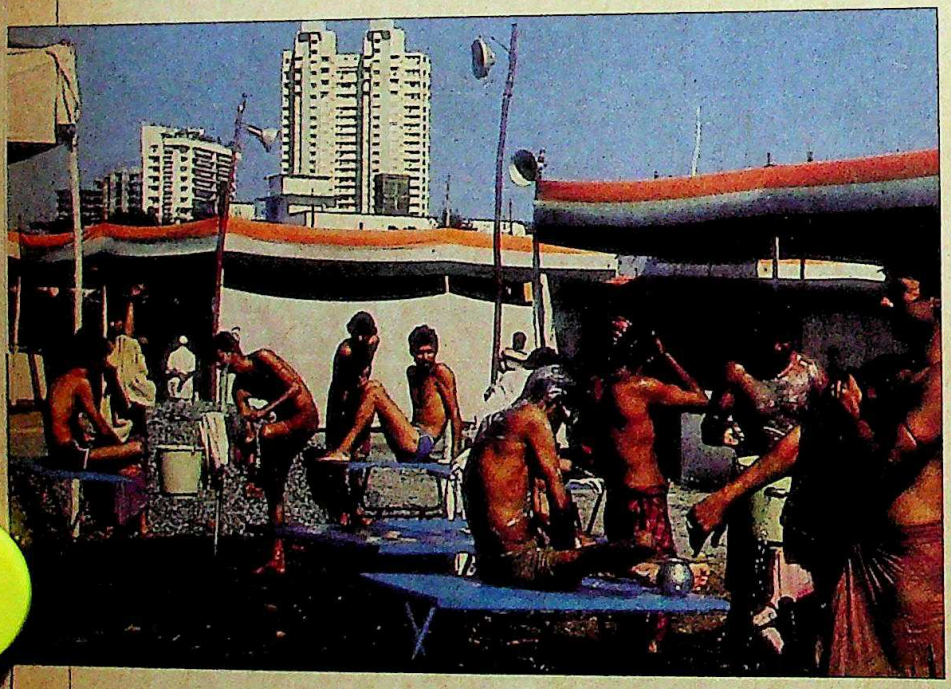
Later, there was more trouble as the loudspeaker system failed and entire sections implored Rajiv Gandhi in mime to set things right. Towards the end of the morning session, the horde that had been fighting pitched battles with Seva Dal workers—3,000 of whom had spread out at the different venues to keep the peace—managed to break through the human and wooden cordon, swamping the AICC(I) members and legislators in the process—including Sonia Gandhi and Amitabh, both of whom had to beat a hasty retreat—and crowding right up to the dais, even as security guards watched helplessly. The Seva Dal blotted its copybook somewhat at lunch, when its workers— admittedly hungry after a long and tiring stint—polished off the food they were supposed to protect for their leaders.

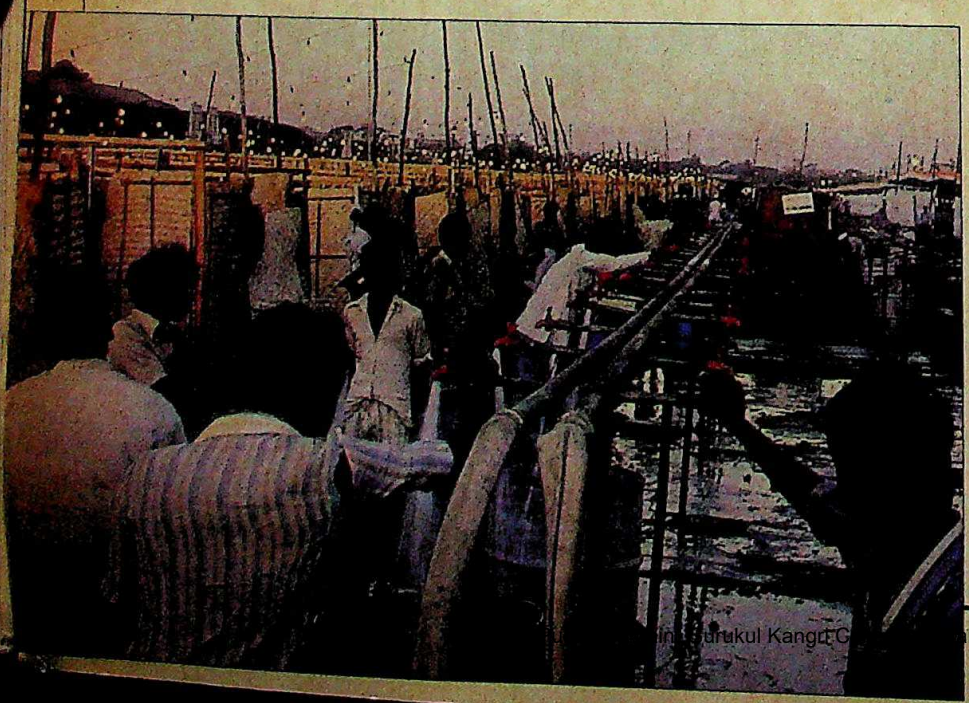
But the cake was taken by, scenes at the Tilak Nagar residential camp, a sprawling complex, spartan in conception when compared to the five-star retreats of the leaders. Before it began, every care appeared to have been taken so that the

Rajiv helps Frontier Gandhi on stage (right); and asks for replacement mike: plain talking

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri







50,000-odd delegates who were to arrive in, among other things, 50 special trains, would have a comfortable stay. The complex was built out of tenting brought down from Delhi in trucks because that kind wasn't available in Bombay, and the cooking was parcelled out among 40 contractors. The food was prudently prepared at venues as far away from the camp as was feasible—into the mill daily went 5,000 kg of flour, 700 kg each of sugar and of potatoes—and was supposed to be given to the hungry delegates in convenient packets.

Soft drinks had been provided free by the company which made them—but were sold at Re 1 each to buyers at the August Kranti Maidan—and the Maharashtra Government's popular Energee, a milk-based soft drink, was handed out free. Snacks were subsidised. The area received one lakh litres of water every hour—the purity was tested four times a day—and scores of wcs had been laid. Said Bombay party boss Murli Deora, who was the guiding spirit behind the preparations: "We took every care to see that Bombay's image as a generous host was not tarnished.

But tarnished it was. At Tilak Nagar, 50,000 delegates had been rather unrealistically expected and when over twice that number arrived, there was confusion. A truck-load of biscuits arrived and was promptly sacked by a ravenous horde which howled that they had received nothing since arrival. While there was enough food to go around, the distribution system appeared to have fouled up and the authorities had to resort to flinging packets out of the back of a truck. Nand Lal of Varanasi complained: "Are we dogs that we have to be thrown our food like this?" Malti Devi of Bihar plaintively added that her group, which had paid Rs 182 each to come to Bombay, had not yet found their MLA who was supposed to get their delegate passes.

Durga Prasad Kesari of Haryana made his feelings quite plain, even as he went about with four-coloured stickers of Mrs Gandhi, Rajiv, Jawaharlal Nehru, and the new darling of the masses, Amitabh Bachchan, pinned to his chest: "There is no water to drink or to bathe in, there are stones in the latrines, and we have to buy food with our own money." In fact, so great was the disorganisation that a volunteer at the besieged enquiry counter,

Camp for delegates at Mahalakshmi Racecourse (top); delegates bathing; and queuing outside the latrines: inadequate arrangements

CC-0. In Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

on the verge of both apoplexy and laryngitis, spread the good word over the public address system that "our esteemed guests should not ask too many questions of the enquiry people as they are tired".

In such an atmosphere, people like Chandra Kumar of the West Bengal Youth Congress(I), who said that things were satisfactory and they got their food properly, thank you, were few and far between. When asked about the multiplying murmurs of discontent and, more serious, about the growing number of thefts at the township, Deora said: "Small incidents are being blown up. Everything is going well. No problems at all."

There were, however much the organisers might wish them away, and attempts to entertain the party workers didn't assuage feelings. Kishore Kumar, Mahendra Kapoor and Nitin Mukesh sang to a thin gathering, most of whom had gone out to watch a spectacular laser-beam and fireworks display. Vyjanthimala presented a pageant on unity and Sunil Dutt coached the schoolchildren choir. Perhaps it was fitting that so many showpeople were involved in a celebration which had, in the ultimate analysis, more pomp than substance.

—PRABHU CHAWLA and JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CONGRESS(I)

Crisis of Confidence

"WE (Congressmen) obey no discipline, no rule, follow no principle of public morality, display no sense of social awareness, show no concern for the public weal. Corruption is not only tolerated but even regarded as the hallmark of leadership."

—Rajiv Gandhi at the Congress centenary celebrations in Bombay

AS IT steps into its second century, the Indian National Congress is passing through a crisis of self-confidence. Wearing his party president's hat, Rajiv was typically thorough in the clinical precision with which he cut open the innards of the party and displayed the rot inside. But his hour-long speech at Indira Nagar was heard by the largest ever assembly of Congressmen with a certain cynicism.

Within the party, there is doubt if the youthful helmsman has a clear vision of which direction he wants to take the party in. Rajiv's unprecedented indictment of the party he leads may have stolen the thunder from the party's in-house critics but because he had no readymade answers, doubts remained. Said an MP: "He may sound impressive but we still don't know what he expects of us."

The reasons for the party's disquiet are not hard to seek. Some are rooted in the immediate past: the loss of Assam, coming on top of the defeat in Punjab, has started them wondering if the party leaders are not being a little too cavalier of the party's interests even as they avowedly pursue national objectives. Quipped one MP: "What we now intend to do is to sign accords with regional parties in all states and lose all the elections."

Then, the reverses in last month's by-elections and the irrefutable evidence of a sharp drop in the popular vote has members alarmed. Party leaders argue that ruling parties are always at a disadvantage in by-elections but they can see that the real reason for the alarming fall is its alienation from the myriad of com-

Congress(I) Working Committee meeting in Bombay: disturbing trends

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The most envied colour TV within a stone's throw!

ow who'd want to hurl a stone at ch a beautiful TV! Mentally, though, any might.
me of your neighbours for instance.
ho may have seen your new ONIDA.
nd envied its classy, futuristic looks, the ost astounding true-to-life colour, and the sharpest picture they've ever seen on a TV screen! And have been deeply regretting the fact that they're stuck with colour TVs that are obviously a generation behind!

You may of course argue, your neighbours are the nicest lot. Hardly the type to stoop to violence no matter how much they envy your ONIDA TV. Well... thank heavens!

ONIDA With cordless remote.

Neighbours' envy. Owners' pride.

In case you want more details rush to the nearest Dealer

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

munities. Among them, the Muslims. Their disillusionment in Kishanganj and Bijnore is known well enough but in Bombay Amarsinh Chaudhary of Gujarat and Orissa's Chief Minister J.B. Patnaik argued that an important reason for the party's loss in the by-elections was the alienation of the Muslim vote.

EVEN the Harijans, the party's traditional vote banks, seem to be looking for a voice of their own. Both in Jalandhar and Bijnore, the Bahujan Samaj, a party dedicated to espouse the cause of the Scheduled Castes and with support that cuts across class barriers, took away large chunk of votes. There is no doubt that this has a great many of the members and the party leadership worried. Arun Singh admitted as much though he thought that this was a "disturbing trend" from the national point of view and not just the party's.

Narain Dutt Tewari, Union minister and the party's observer for Assam, argues that the party's defeat in the state came about because "time was too short to explain the party's principled stand". But partymen are worried that the two accords, on Punjab and Assam, which are Rajiv's crowning achievements, seem to have displeased a large section of their vote bank.

Partymen are worried that this alienation is symptomatic of a deeper crisis—of the party's alienation from the poor. Mrs Gandhi had assiduously cultivated the image of the Congress(I) as the party of the poor. Tariq Anwar, past president of the Youth Congress(I), recalls how in a policy resolution adopted by the YC(I) she had insisted that the party's commitment to garibi hatao be incorporated.

Many partymen feel that the present image of elitist leaders with elitist problems seems to have stuck. Said one chief minister: "In India one has to walk the middle path very assiduously and there is no doubt that in the past year we have strayed a little to the right." Another MP, listening to Rajiv's address to the subjects committee of the AICC(I) remarked: "He speaks so strongly of the dangers of communal exploitation but does not have a word to say of the economic exploitation of the poor."

Party Working President Kamlapati Tripathi is dismayed at the quality of men coming into the party. Says he: "In my days Congressmen were fired by the spirit of sacrifice. Today, people join the party because they expect something from it." Rajiv also voiced concern over the "brokers of power and influence, who dispense patronage to convert a mass movement into a feudal oligarchy." He went on to add: "They are reducing the Congress organisation to a shell from which the spirit of sacrifice has been emptied."

Nobody, but the power brokers, disagrees with this. The doubts concern an analysis of why this was allowed to happen. Rajiv's statement on the party's crisis skirted the reasons which have brought this about. He did say that Mrs Gandhi "analysed with clinical precision" how the "party had once again been infiltrated with by vested interests who would not allow us to move" but there is little doubt that Mrs Gandhi proved inadequate to the task of tackling these power brokers. Her method of reducing their influence was to concentrate all the powers in her hands while letting the limbs atrophy. Where the correct course of action would have been to let the party's sinews be strengthened by fresh blood from the grassroots, elections were postponed and paper tigers nominated. Election to the party were last held in 1972. Says Tripathi: "There is no doubt that in the absence of elections men motivated by self-interest came to occupy important positions in the party." Tripathi is convinced that party elections are absolutely necessary. "Elections are the only way in which new blood is infused into the party. They are a must even if they result in differences within the party coming out in the open." Rajiv has also repeatedly said that elections will be definitely held. Says the senior most AICC(I) General Secretary G.K. Moopanar: "Rajivji wants the elections to be held immediately so that the representatives of the Congressmen can take charge and build party. After elections Congressmen are more concerned about the party." But Arun Singh feels that not holding the elections is not a "fundamental" problem. He told a clutch of press people as he sat next to Arun Nehru at the historic August Kranti Maidan at Bombay: "It worries me a lot but it is not fundamental."

Congressmen on stage: getting alienated

It would seem that Rajiv shares Singh's perception. Barely a week before the centenary celebrations, he told the Congress(I) Parliamentary Party that the party membership drive, scheduled to close on December 31 last, would at the maximum be extended by one month, but at the working committee meeting at the Seth Goculdas Tejpal Auditorium on December 27, he succumbed to the pressure from PCC(I) chiefs and agreed to extend the period to March 31. Inevitably, speculation started afresh whether the promise of elections would go the same way as similar promises made three times by Mrs Gandhi. One MP, who recalls with fondness his entry into the party as the elected president of the block Congress(I) 14 years ago, commented: "We feel that there are people close to the prime minister who are opposed to the elections."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

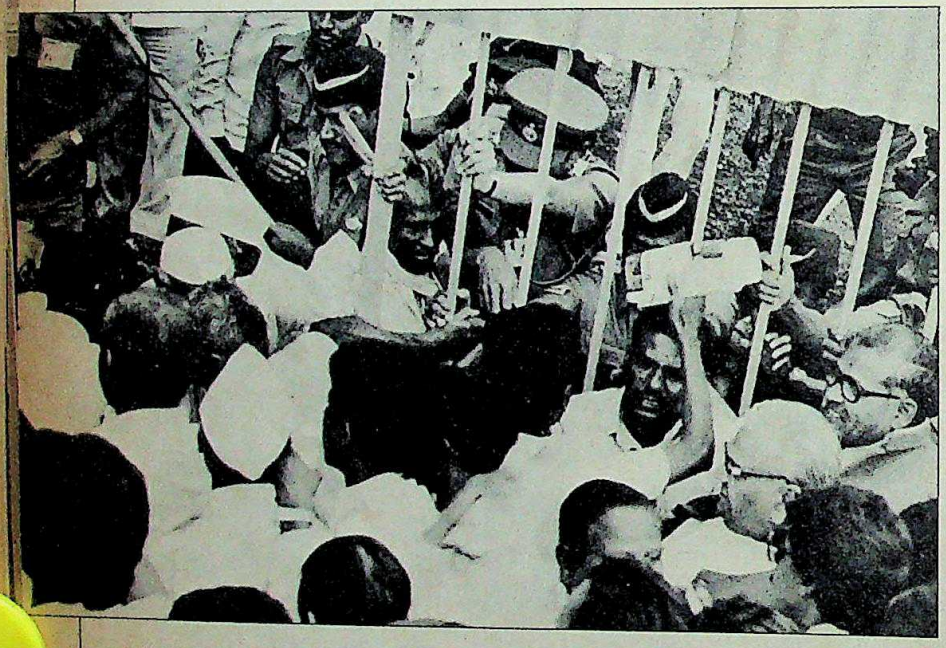
The failure to throw up leadership from the bottom has affected the quality of middle-level leaders. As a senior MP said: "Where we had a leader of the stature of Maulana Abul Kalam Azad, we were forced to do with Abdul Rehman Antulay, where we had Govind Ballabh Pant there is now Vir Bahadur Singh, where there was Pratap Singh Kairon there is now Rajendra Singh Sparrow, where there was Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel there is now Amarsinh Chaudhary."

The track record of Rajiv Gandhi in appointing PCC(I) chiefs and chief ministers also does not inspire hope. A problem state like Bihar has an ageing and ineffective, if well-meaning chief minister like Bindeshwari Dubey. Worse, he was allowed to have his say in the appointment of the PCC(I) chief so the singularly uninspiring Dumarlal Baitha rules the roost in the party with no authority or support. Lacking in confidence, chief ministers and party chiefs even avoid meeting partymen. In most states, even the PCC(I) executive has not met once and legislature party meetings are held, if at all, at the beginning of the session. Said one ex-PCC(I) chief of a state ruled by an opposition party: "We have a PCC(I) chief who is in his 60s and who has made a mess of providing opposition to a confused government."

Partymen are also upset with the adhocism in the selection of candidates for by-elections. In the recent by-elections, of the seven seats that the party contested, four were given to candidates who did not belong to that area, of which two were admitted to the party on the eve of the elections. Barely a year ago, S.S. Ray had caused the defeat of the party candidate in Darjeeling for which, old-timers in the party feel, he should have been ostracised. Instead, he was nominated for a seat. Arjun Singh was selected from South Delhi in preference to local partymen. The result was that there were no Congress(I) agents in at least 80 booths in South Delhi.

There is clearly a strong undercurrent of resentment among the "loyalists" in the party—those who had stayed with Mrs Gandhi in her days out of power—against the increasing importance of Johnnies-come-lately. At the CWC(I) meeting in Bombay, West Bengal PCC(I) chief P.R.Das Munshi and ex-Karnataka chief minister R. Gundu Rao clashed openly on this issue. Das Munshi, in what otherwise was a clear attempt at sycophancy, said that the 25-page centenary resolve should separately mention the achievements of Rajiv Gandhi's Government in the last year. At this, Rao got up to say that they are not going into detail because if they did then they would also have to mention the splits in the party and the role of those who left to rejoin later.



Stampede at the gates: reasons for disquiet

Several "loyalists" have been dropped from positions in the Government and the party in the last year, and there have been rumblings of discontent among them. Some reports have even talked of a revolt brewing, and their spokesmen in Bombay let mediamen know that the leaders among them had met to discuss their strategy. But Congressmen will start thinking of leaving the party only if they feel that Rajiv can no longer get them elected. And this is not something that they need to worry about for four more years. Said one MP: "The people gave Rajiv a massive mandate barely a year ago. This is not the time for any revolt."

While the threat of any revolt can best be described as distant, what did emerge from the Bombay sessions was that there is a unanimity of opinion that the party is badly in need of rejuvenation. As Girilal Jain noted in the Times of India: "The fact is that the Congress organisation is in utter disarray and must be put back into shape if the party is to enter its second century with the confidence that it will be there to celebrate its second centenary in 2085."

Party leaders across the board agree. Said Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister Vir Bahadur Singh: "The party needs to be strengthened. Rajivji has given a clear programme and if the party and state government do not implement them then people are going to punish us." Added Ashok Gehlot, Rajasthan PCC(I) chief: "We need to develop effective district and block level leadership. All of us must return from our urban comforts to the villages." Those running the party from Delhi see the need just as acutely. Says Arun Nehru, the political supremo in the party: "So far we have been busy setting the Government right. Now we will concentrate on the party." Adds Sitaram Kesari, party treasurer: "The party organisation has not grown because we have been too busy."

What is not clear is how the task will be gone about. Rajiv gave no indication of this in his speech beyond saying: "The Congress will be reorganised and revitalised. It will gather in its fold patriots of all sections and all communities, it will be the shield of the oppressed and the sword of the poor." For Rajiv to admit the rot in the party was achievement enough but it is a measure of the bankruptcy of ideas in the party that whereas his admission should have been the clarion call for others to expand on the theme and suggest solutions, nobody took the bait. The party will dutifully wait for directions from the top but there was no evidence to suggest that even those at the apex know what they should do.

—AJAY KUMAR and PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONGRESS CENTENARY

Missing an Opportunity

LIKE many others, and for varied reasons, I am not a member of the Congress(I) but that does not forfeit my claim to a little of the glory that the great national upsurge, synthesised by the Congress Party, has bequeathed—being one of the privileged people who participated in the epochal Independence struggle.

Time has taken its toll yet there are many veterans amidst us who still preserve the shine of their battle shields. They may not be amongst the hierarchy of the ruling party but they are there to belie the claim that has been made in Bombay, of the Congress(I) being "a party that brought freedom to the country...." No, the Congress(I) is a different species altogether. It was born out of a bitter factional struggle that was caused not by any ideological or programmatical differences, but by issues that were wholly personal. The controversy regarding the heritage apart, an obsessive preoccupation with self-glorification has made the Congress(I) miss an opportunity at a time when the collective strength of the nation could have presented a credible hope and vision for the coming decades. The lengthy Bombay resolutions, couched in a partisan idiom, do not invoke faith. The exercise demonstrates that the rulers are neither willing to learn nor to adjust despite their shrinking base.

The Bombay session accepted the prime minister's alibi for the party's rout in Punjab and Assam, once again postponed the party polls that have never been held and repeated the incredible pledge of 'garibi-hatao'—while in the background quite the opposite policies are being practised.

As Congress(I) men return to their homes and villages they carry with them the glamour and glitter of the session, but none of the inspiration that would, once again, build the symbiosis between the masses and leaders for which the parent Congress was so famous.

The Congress sessions of yesteryear used to inspire faith and transform lifestyles and outlooks, even of those who stood on the side as spectators. The "Congress culture"—as it came to be called—was a thoroughgoing struggle against obscurantist beliefs, and it symbolised the unity in diversity on which our national unity was based.

Gandhiji did not try to contain the gigantic mass upsurge within the conventional precepts of a party structure. The Congress was a wide platform with the capacity to coalesce and synthesise various shades of socio-political outlooks. A partisan celebration contradicts this—the very concept that could help, once again, in getting all shades of patriotic polity to collectively assert themselves against the baffling and complex challenges to our unity. But this has not been done despite the traumatic experiences of Punjab and Assam.

> "This occasion should have been utilised by honestly telling the country that formidable challenges cannot be met—even by the country's largest party—singly."

No rhetoric can gloss over the fact that despite all the approving noises made by the official media, there is a mounting sense of frustration and discrimination in the country. The elitist pursuits have split the nation in an unfamiliar way. The renewed "commitment" on part of the Congress(I) is neither going to reduce unemployment nor offer solace to the landless or slum-dweller. Only, for some days the people were presented a glittering spectacle on the television.

Nations—like purposeful individuals—do not celebrate anniversaries merely by "cake cutting" or group "happy birthday" tunes. This occasion should have been utilised by honestly telling the country that formidable challenges cannot be met—even by the country's largest party—singly. Only a collective assertion by all the children of the revolution can safeguard and further the legacy of the great Mahatma.

The nation has paid heavily for the politics of confrontation. It is a mercy that this phase has ended and the futility of such policies has been realised. Some difficult problems have been sorted out with remarkable courage on the part of many. This refreshing outlook should now be ingrained in our politics and made a basis for building a widely shared consensus pertaining to the nation's integrity and social transformation.

The centenary offers a unique opportunity to launch a determined nationwide struggle for achieving the "socio-economic Swaraj" that alone can consolidate our unity in real sense. It is futile to expect that socially left-out sections would have a vested interest in unity or in development. Any objective analysis of the Punjab and Assam crises tells us that an unemployed and frustrated youth gets easily mobilised by communalist or chauvinistic slogans. The socio-economic condition has reached such a pass that it can be tackled only by a collective assertion. The need for the revival of a broad national platform to evolve and pursue both short-term and long-term programmes and policies is urgent. This does not negate the party system, it provides an institutional framework for resolving differences and determining common denominators to vital national issues.

Rajiv Gandhi, even in personal terms, is missing an opportunity to carve a place for himself in history. The accords were lauded by the entire country and improved his popularity rating. This should encourage him to build a political environment wherein parties and individuals may rise above narrow interests and assign the nation's interests a higher priority. Though belated, even now his party can set an example. Only then can he expect a response from all patriotic elements to unitedly address themselves to tasks of unity.

Such a clarion call would also reverberate across our political boundaries. After all the entire South Asia had responded to Gandhiji. Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan is a living monument of the era that had founded the inspiring "Congress culture" under Gandhiji's leadership. The epoch had succeeded in unifying a diverse nation; repairing its self-esteem and restoring its courage and potency.

The nation has already paid heavily for propagation of personality cults; compromising norms of public life and placing party and individuals above the nation. Let this be the turning point.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MODI INDUSTRIES LTD.

MODINAGAR

SPEECH OF THE CHAIRMAN SHRI K.N. MODI TO THE SHAREHOLDERS AT THE 52ND ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING HELD AT MODINAGAR ON MONDAY THE 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1985

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It is my pleasure to welcome you all to the 52nd Annual General Meeting of your Company.

Economic and Political Environment

Our country went through a traumatic experience in the unfortunate and tragic assassination of our beloved Prime Minister Smt. Indira Gandhi on October 31, last year. It is said that great men always rise to occasion irrespective of the magnitude of

HIGHLIGHTS

1. New Era Ushered in by Shri Rajiv Gandhi
   a. A new progressive era ushered in by the Prime Minister Hon'ble Shri Rajiv Gandhi through fiscal policy, broad banding of licenses, reduction in corporate tax structure etc.
   b. He has brought in political stability through the Assam accord and famous Punjab accord now ratified by one and all.
   c. The import of technology should be liberal and it should stimulate the local industries.
   d. Industry will welcome a competitive market. We should, however, be cautious about the dumping of goods and commodities by foreign Companies.
   e. Under the new dynamic and progressive Industry Minister with a new structure, the schemes for industrial applications will be processed rapidly.

2. Some Pointers
   a. The progressive policies can be taken advantage of only if infrastructural development is not neglected.
   b. Any modernisation requires rationalisation of manpower as well as retraining. Industrial laws to be oriented towards this.

3. Points Relating to Your Company
   a. Power for Steel Division to be made available adequately and economically.
   b. The imposition of 10%. Excise duty on Vanaspati, common man's cooking medium, needs to be reduced to give relief.
   c. Your Company's Paint Division is collaborating with M/s. Schaepman and will offer international quality industrial paints.
   d. Actively involved in the Bihar Sponge Iron Project for captive utilisation as well as supply of this critical raw material to others.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the gravity of the situation. At the hour of great national tragedy, this country had a good fortune of getting a new dynamic and able Prime Minister in Shri Rajiv Gandhi.

With the assuming of the new responsibilities of this great nation, our Prime Minister Shri Rajiv Gandhi is ushering in a new era in the history of India. From the first day itself, Shri Rajiv Gandhi has demonstrated his statesmanship-like quality. He has brought in a new environment in the political and economic environment of this country. His progressive outlook has not only stimulated all the sections in this country but also international interest.

He has demonstrated an astute acumen towards the bottlenecks faced by the country in its industrial progress through the various measures like the Union Budget presented recently and various other industrial and trade policies like Broad banding of licenses, reduction in taxes etc. One can definitely feel the changing environment and a pragmatic business outlook being infused into the policies of the Government.

His keenness to modernise various traditional industries like Textiles as well as induct latest technology in those areas which affect people at large like communications and other service industries are indicative of the trend of future India.

His nation building tasks have been in the form of new look at the educational policies, formation of human resources development ministry, formation of programme implementation ministry etc.

Under the new dynamic and progressive Industry Minister with newly structured Industry Ministry, all the schemes and procedures for industrial applications etc. will be processed much faster.

The import of technology has to be liberal and such that it stimulates the local industries which we have developed for the last 40 years. Industry will welcome a competitive market. We should, however, be cautious about the dumping of goods and commodities by foreign companies.

On the political front, he has brought in political stability through the Assam accord thereby solving a long pending problem in the Eastern Borders of the country. Now famous Punjab accord which has been ratified by one and all as demonstrated by the recent polls.

In this environment of stimulating industrial environment and progressive policies, it is the responsibility of every one in trade and industry to respond in the most positive manner to fulfil the ambitions of this great nation.

Some Pointers

a. The progressive policies which have been brought in can be taken advantage of and the industrial growth thereby raised only if the important aspects of infrastructural development are not neglected. If we have to achieve the growth rate of 7% then that of power has to increase at the rate of 15%. Broad banding has to be allowed in such a way that industries are able to take full advantage of this in the raising of their capacities.
b. Any modernisation requires rationalisation of manpower as well as retraining them in newer skills. Those people who can not be accommodated in the newer technologies, be developed in such a way and provided resources so that they can become self-employed.

Points relating to your Company

We find that in the operation of Steel Division of your Company, power becomes one of the most critical bottlenecks. We have severe power cut resulting in loss of production.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Your Company has made several representations and is continuously doing so at various levels of Government both at state and centre for continuous supply of power to ensure optimum production in the Steel Division. The discrimination and the allocation of power to Electric Arc Furnaces vis-a-vis other industries has to be done away with by the U.P. State Electricity Board.

We are facing a high cost economy brought in by high interest rates and undersized production units which do not yield economies of scale. This has resulted in a price rise affecting the economy. The present rate of 10% Excise duty on Vanaspati is affecting every common man, since Vanaspati is an universal cooking medium. The reduction of this Excise duty will to some extent reduce the price and give relief to common man.

The Paint Division of your Company has entered into a collaboration with M/s. Schaepman who are one of the world's leading industrial Paints Company's. This will result in the company's ability to produce international standard paint used for industrial applications.

In keeping with the Corporate objectives of your Company of entering new areas, your Company has been actively involved in the Sponge Iron Project in Bihar. This Project will use the latest technology and have very big potential. In addition to captive utilisation, the project will also help other Steel Mills in the supply of this critical raw material.

Your Company has always looked after the welfare of the people to the best extent. We have also strived to increase productivity. The benefits of such productivity are shared between the workers, the consumers and the shareholders. The workers have been made conscious not only of their rights but also of the responsibility. It is unfortunate that a small section of workers have resorted to go-slow tactics in the Steel Division. While we believe in taking full care of the employees, such irresponsible action will not go unheeded.

Working Results

The audited account of your Company and the Directors' Report for the year ended 31st March, 1985, have already been circulated to you. With your permission, I take them as read.

During the year, as mentioned in the Directors' report, your Company made a net profit of Rs 3.16 crores after providing for depreciation of Rs 2.76 crores.

The working results of your Company for the current year are very encouraging in comparison to the last year.

Acknowledgement

I wish to express my sincere thanks to the Central Government, the Government of Uttar Pradesh, the Financial Institutions and the Banks for their continued and active support. I am also thankful to my colleagues on the Board for their guidance and counsel. Last but not the least, I wish to place on record the deep appreciation for the dedication, efficient and loyal services rendered by the Executives, staff and the workers at all levels and I earnestly hope that the environment of cordial and harmonious relations will continue.

I would like to thank the Shareholders of the Company for taking a keen interest in the progress of the Company.

Thank you.

Modinagar
30th September, 1985

K.N. MODI

Note: This does not purport to be a record on the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Dream Boat

A WHITE elephant is anything but an elephant. It can be a boat. A luxury launch, to be precise, going by the exotic name of Zaria. And it's now lying chained in a creek at Nagarjunasagar while the Andhra Pradesh Tourism Development Corporation (APTDC) is at its wits' end what to do with it. Or how to pay back the Rs 44-lakh loan it took to buy the 1,000 H.P. dream boat. Everything had seemed hunky-dory when two APTDC officials went to USSR in 1982 and bought the 65-seater launch, for 36-hour joy-rides on the Krishna river between Nagarjunasagar and Srisailam as part of APTDC's package tour. But alas, things are not what they seem. First, the actual cost of Rs 35 lakh shot up to Rs 60 lakh with the various duties and taxes. Then the officials realised that the monster drinks up 166 litres of diesel in an hour and costs Rs 3,000 an hour to maintain. The joy ride itself, at Rs 300 per trip, found few takers. So after some 20 trips, mostly free, the launch is in the creek and the APTDC, in the red.

The luxury launch: in troubled waters

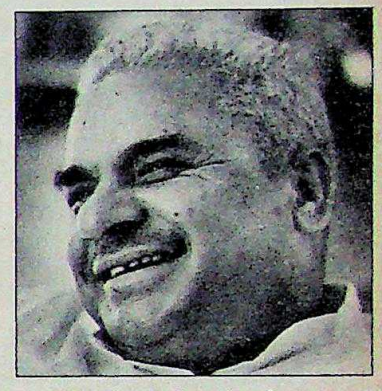
Light and Dark

THE MIDDLE class may be rising and at last coming into its own. But at whose expense is it doing so? In West Bengal at least, it is the state electricity board. For instance, everytime a babu switches on his TV set to watch Yeh Jo Hai Zindagi or Hot Tracks, he cheats the state electricity board of just so much revenue. As a report submitted to the state Cabinet said recently, he just doesn't pay his electricity bills. So the SEB loses a whopping Rs 10 crore of revenue every year and government officials—bureaucrats, secretaries and what have you—top the list of defaulters. Chief Minister Jyoti Basu, on hearing about this state of affairs, promptly told the SEB to cut off the connections of all defaulters. But this is easier said than done. Since most of the government quarters have power lines drawn from nearby administrative offices, the options are: calculate how much power each employee uses, provide individual meters, or cut their connections and plunge the offices too in darkness. Right now, the SEB is considering neither.

Lethal Charm

HARYANA Chief Minister Bhajan Lal must be the most charming politician this side of the Beas. The way his political opponents succumb to him is almost like moths falling to a flame. And what Bhajan wants, Bhajan gets. Recently, the wily chief minister's charm was again at work, this time though on a comparatively unknown quantity—an academician. The scholar was none other than Dr S.C. Saxena, who as director of Panjab University's Regional Centre at Bhatinda had petitioned in 1982 to the Supreme Court against Lal's allegedly irregular land allotments to favoured politicians, judges, lawyers and journalists. Almost overnight, Saxena had made it to the mofussil pages with the zeal of a crusader. Two years later, he is in the news again but for different reasons. Saxena has withdrawn his petition, and now heads the Haryana School Education Board. Now what was that about how to win friends and influence people?



Bhajan Lal: wily charm

Loose Noose

WORDS have an uncanny power all their own and they can make, mar, heal or kill, as the Karnataka police discovered to their chagrin last fortnight. Even as the cops were rejoicing and doing themselves proud by celebrating the centenary of their corps, there were some "audacious" and "notorious" types who were rolling around with mirth. Reason: they had just been let out of detention by the high court and a special advisory board because their detention orders had been hazily worded and forgot to describe them as criminals. The 12 had been arrested along with three others some time ago under the state's own version of the NSA. But the high court and the advisory board, while hearing their habeas corpus petitions in camera, found several loopholes in their detention orders and let them off. A perplexed Home Minister B. Rachaiah has now called for an examination of this "failure" of the law, which goes by the rather labyrinthine title of Karnataka Prevention of Dangerous Activities of Bootleggers, Drug-Offenders, Gamblers, Goondas, Immoral Traffic Offenders and Slum-Grabbers Act, 1985. With a name like that it is not even easy to remember what the law is all about, let alone the detention orders.

Rachaiah: word play

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ORISSA

Temple Loot

FOR THE God-fearing in Orissa, Sulaiman Kalapahad is a familiar name. A figure of myth and legend, he is said to be a Brahmin who turned his back on religion and ever since, goes around breaking and stealing idols of deities. So last fortnight when the magnificent 12th century idol of Garuda (Vishnu's eagle) was found missing from the Gundicha Temple of Puri, the devotees promptly blamed it on Kalapahad. But the facts of the case have set the police wondering if the thief does not actually have his roots in some alien country rather than Oriya folklore.

The rare black laterite idol, which stood three feet tall on a 12-feet rock pillar and weighed all of 50 kg. The police were informed as soon as it was found missing but by then it was already too late. An extensive search of the area yielded no clue and police dogs on the trail stopped at a Puri railway station platform. According to Puri district Superintendent of Police Anadi Sahu, it could be the handiwork of some burglars hired by some professional idol-lifters' gang who removed the statue sometime in the early hours of November 3.

Director-General of Police (DGP) B.K. Panigrahi said: "We have issued a national alert, combed areas in Calcutta with the help of the West Bengal police and now we have sought the assistance of Interpol through the National Central Bureau to track down the gang." By last week, the Crime Branch had taken over the investigations and Panigrahi said assuringly: "If we are able to catch even one person, we can bust the whole gang, which certainly has international connections."

The Garuda idol was the fifth to be stolen from the Puri area in the last three months. The earlier four were precious brass idols, including one of Radha from Gopal Math and another of goddess Durga from the Pipli temple. The police recovered two of them — the Durga and Radha idols — by sheer chance. The first was found lying in a drain and the robbers were trying to sell off the second one when the police got a tip-off and seized the idol.

Eastern Press Agency

Brass idol of Radha: precious find

According to district police chief Sahu, one of the two suspects, Jagannath Patra, had been arrested while the other, Dharnidhar Sahu, is absconding. Two Italians have also been detained but they gave no clues. The police feel that the operation could not have been possible without the help or complicity of the temples' ijaradars, considering the nature of the thefts and the size of the idols.

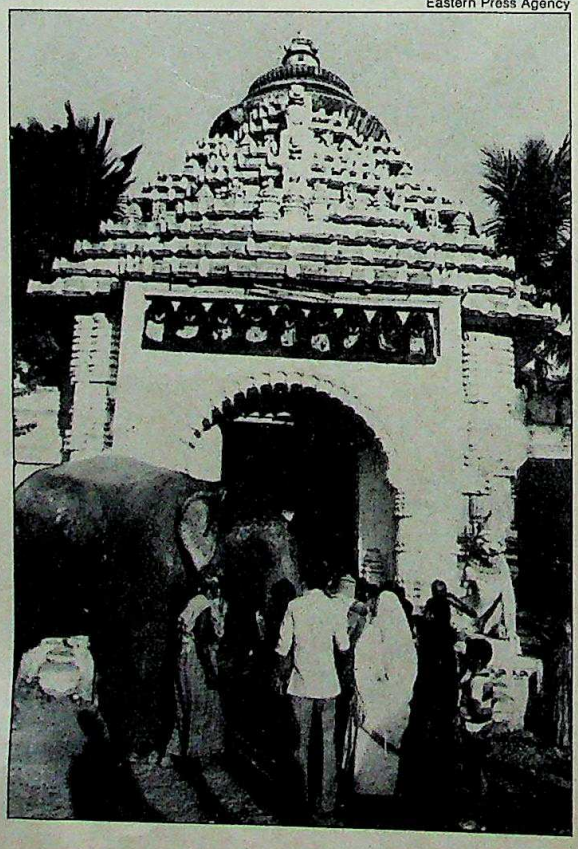
Whoever the culprits may be, the fact remains that of late there has been an alarming rise in idol thefts in the state. With its 5,000-odd temples—1,000 in Bhubaneswar alone—the state is a haven for thieves and smugglers. The figures for this year have been unusually high with the main target of the thefts being Puri where at least 20 cases of idol-lifting are registered every year. Says Sahu: "Black granite idols, a craze outside the country, are spread over a 50-km area in Puri, totally unguarded. These are examples of beautiful craftsmanship and easily fall prey to smugglers."

The situation has become so serious that DIG (Crime Branch) Shankar Sen was compelled to alert all district police chiefs to deploy homeguard jawans to keep a watch on all important temples, besides carrying out a census of temples and idols and maintaining photo files on each of them. Says DIG Sen: "Our main problem is that there is no special force to deal with this problem." The police have recently opened an idol theft cell, but this is understaffed and overworked and has yet to make any headway.

A secret report prepared by the police for 1965-70 had identified foreign tourists and private collectors as the likely culprits. A police officer disclosed that some senior state officials were also involved and the police prepared secret dossiers on them. But predictably these files vanished from the police record room and the officers retired peacefully.

Gundicha Temple: increasing thefts

Eastern Press Agency

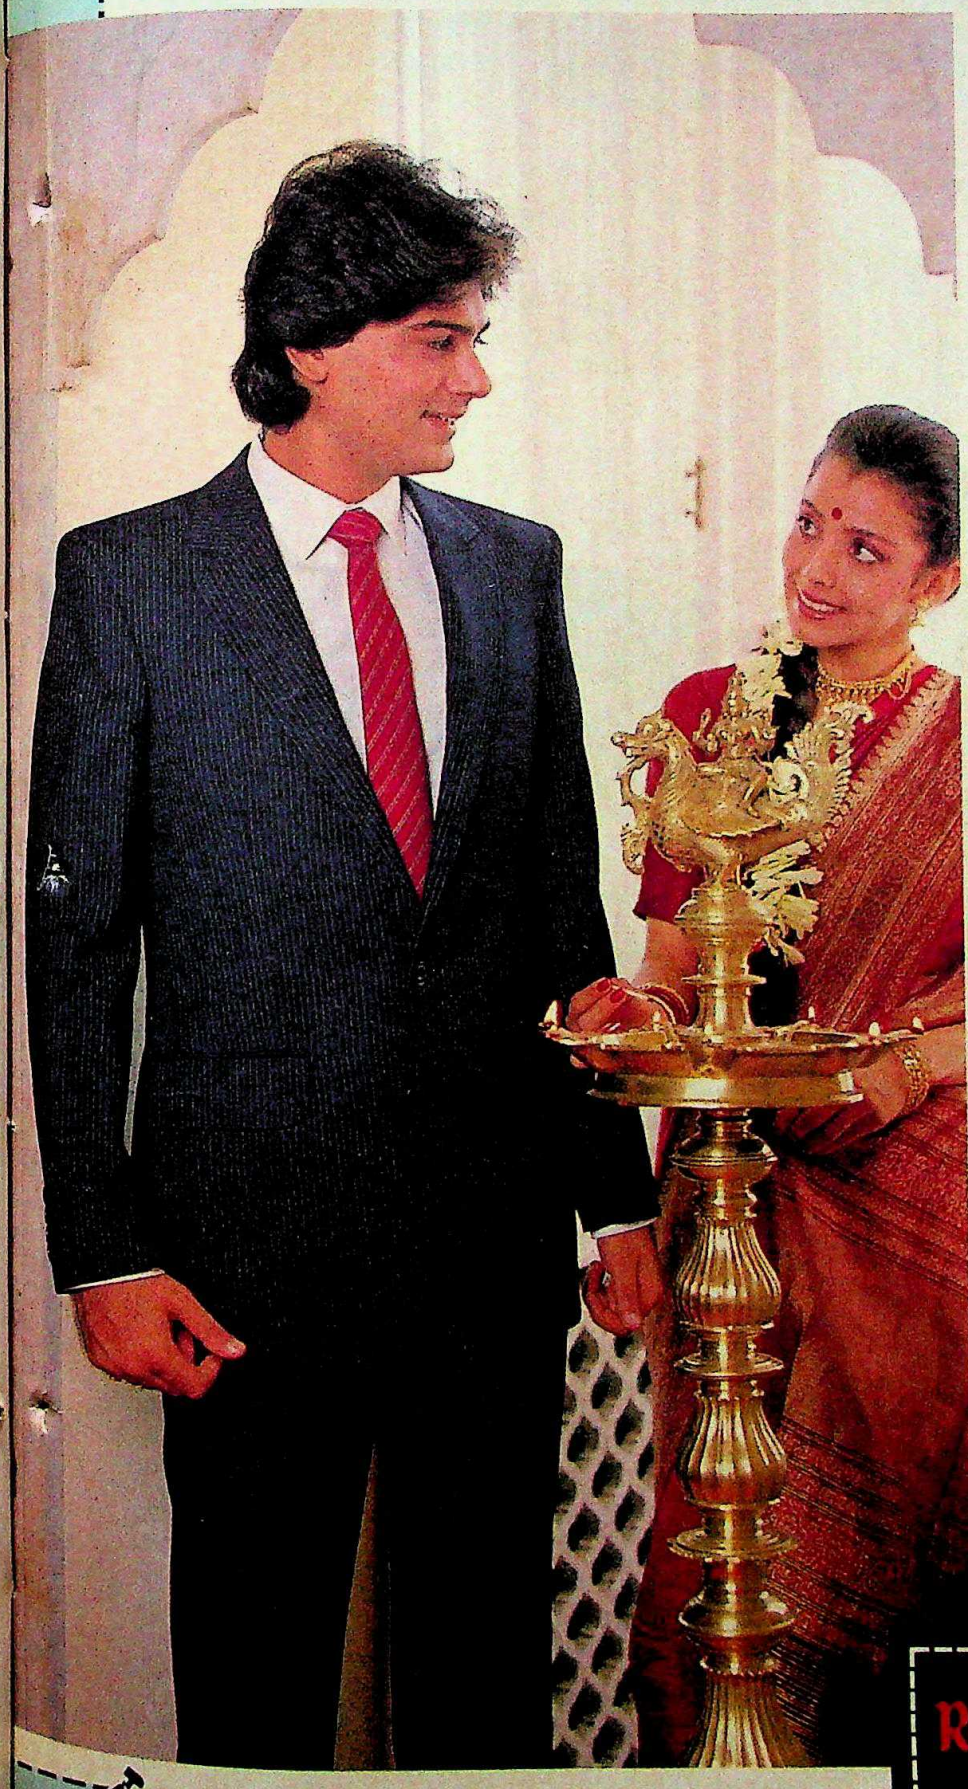


Police records show that at least five shops, besides some private museums, are suspected of dealing clandestinely in stolen idols. According to the records, there were three known outlets in Calcutta for these idols and at least 16 identified "outsiders" who frequented these areas and dealt in antiques. The number of such dealers and outlets has increased recently and Sen says optimistically: "We will soon lay our hands on the culprits."

How soon this comes about is yet a matter for hope and conjecture. But all the police reports and studies point to a definite pattern: the increase in idol thefts relates to the increase in tourist traffic. Tourism brochures call tourists "our honoured guests". But if the guest is of a dubious variety, it falls to the host to be extra careful about his valuables. —FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



EVER SINCE I DISCOVERED RAYMOND'S READYMADES IT'S GOODBYE TO DELAYS.

Trousers
•
Safaris
•
Shirts
•
Suits
•
Blazers

Raymond's Mens Wear

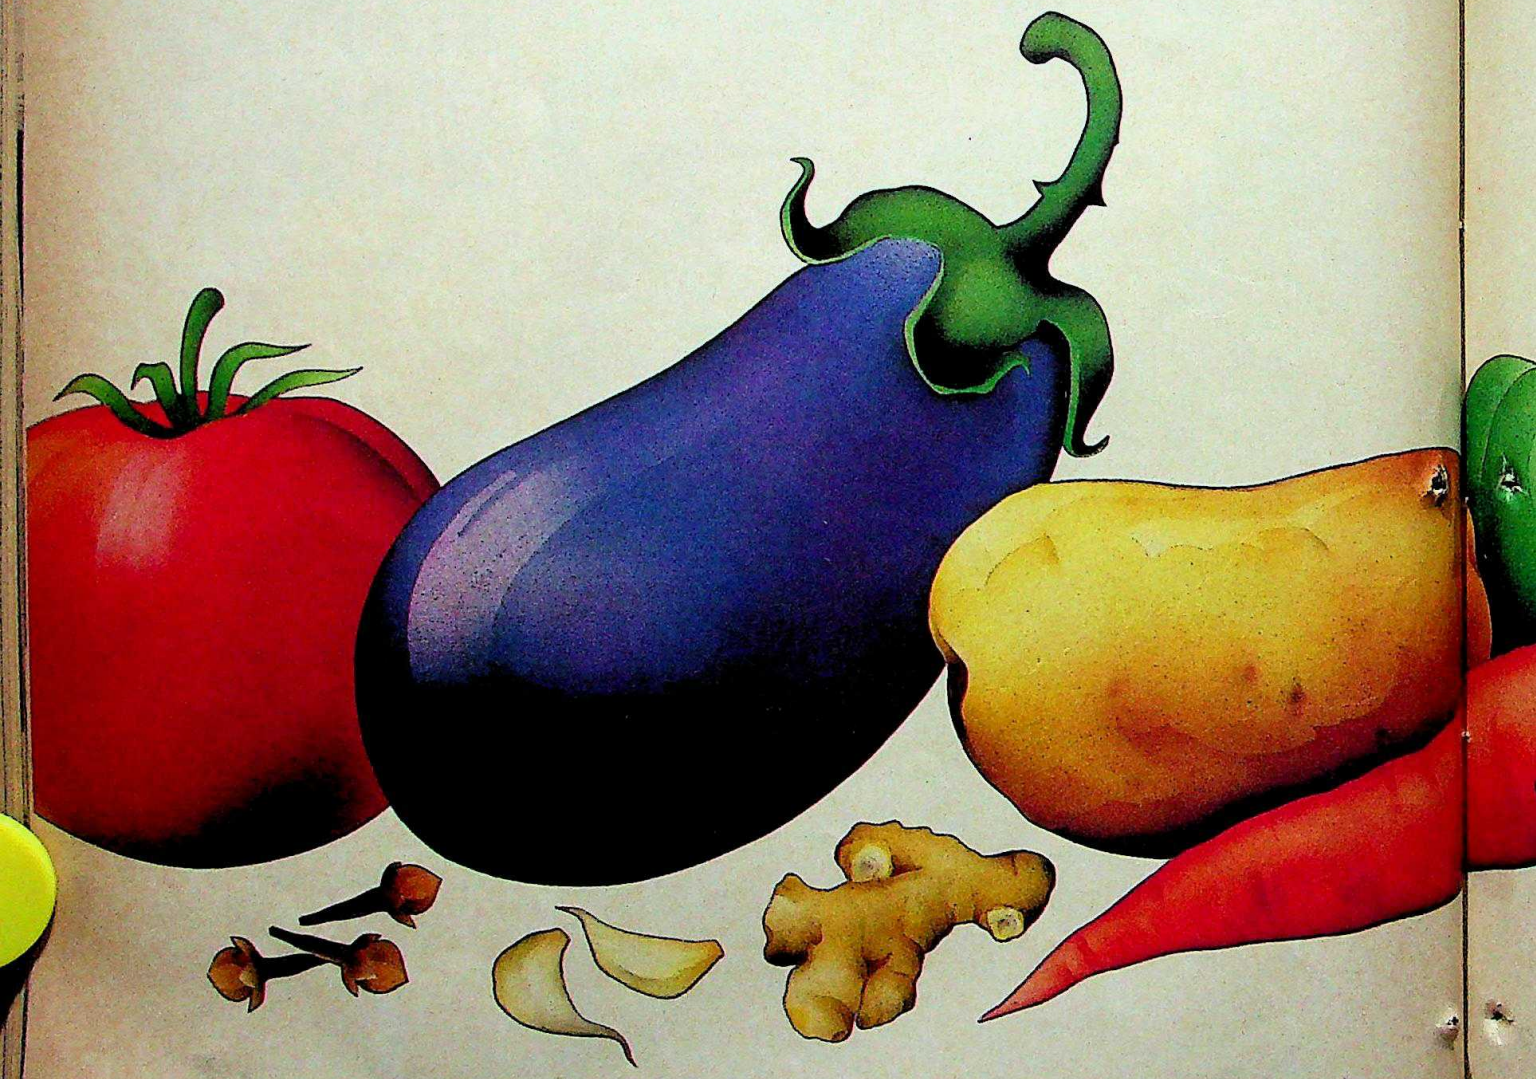
Location courtesy: The Taj Mahal Hotel, Bombay.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Col

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

From the snow-clad mountains the north to the sea-washed ores of the south, India is a land surprises. If you travel across e country, you will find diverse stoms, food and languages.

One of the main fears we have about travelling is whether the food we are used to will be available. But eating the same food you eat at home defeats the purpose of travelling. When you are on holiday, give yourself up fully to the adventure. Try a new dish every day. When in Goa, try the mouth-watering Vindaloo; in Bombay, the Parsi Dhansaak; Resham Kababs in Delhi's walled city; the 'Misti Doi' of Bengal, not to speak of the crisp Paper Dosas of the south. And should you want your usual



How to travel all over India still be able to

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

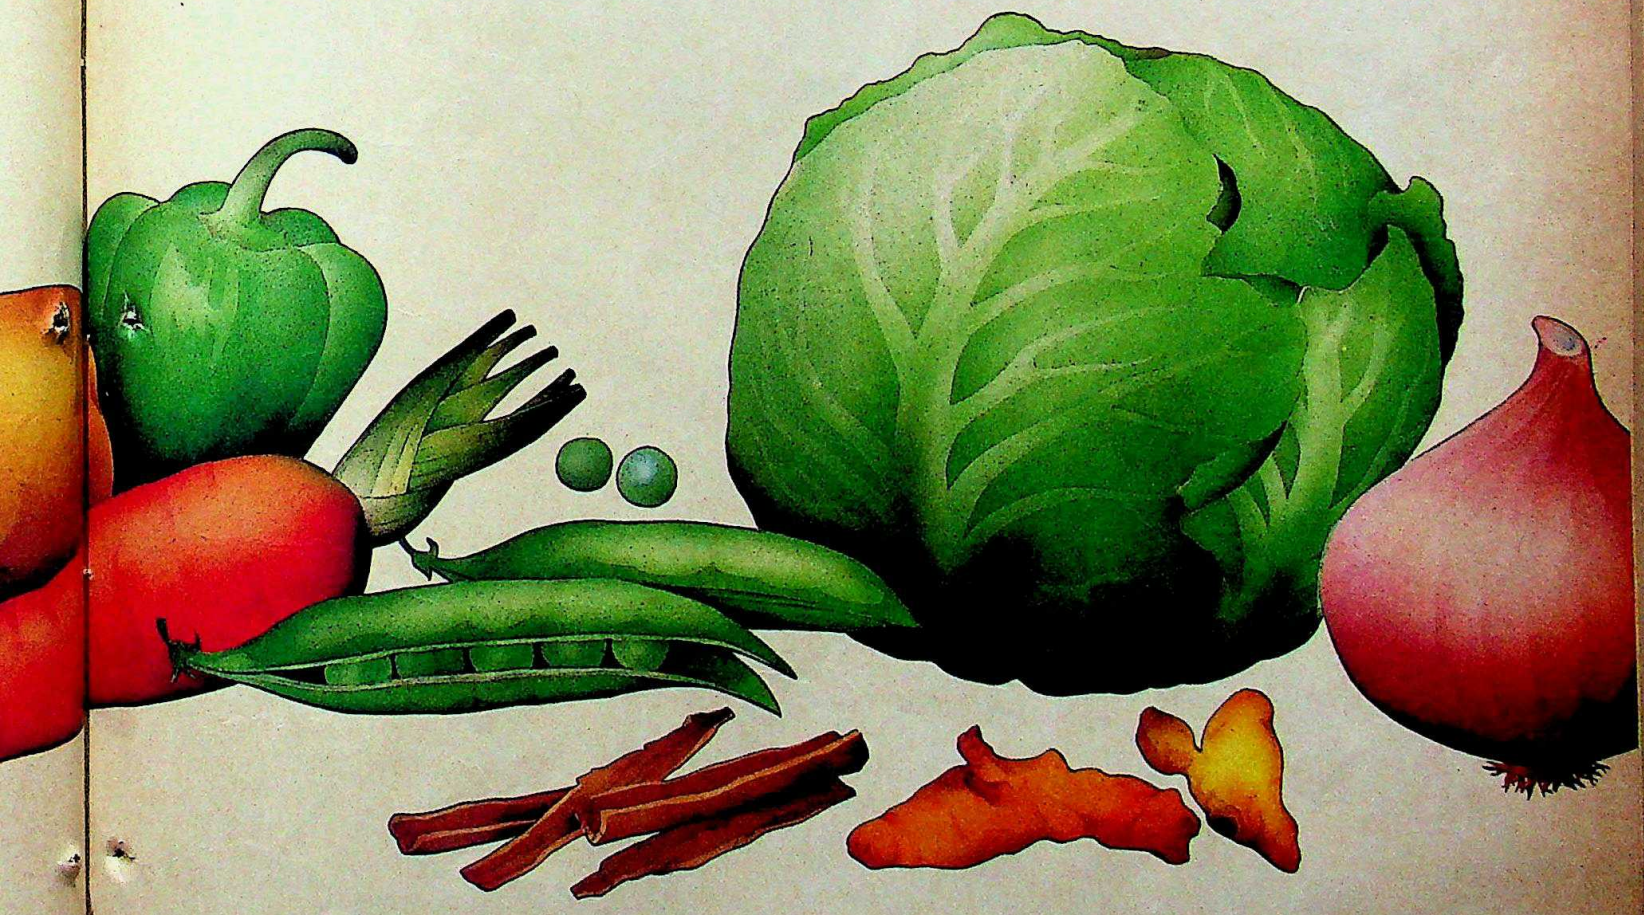
fare, you will not be disappointed as this is available everywhere.

Travel is an adventure that naturally includes strange lands, different peoples, exotic experiences and strange customs. What you get out of the experience depends on how you approach it.

A healthy curiosity will do what travel is meant to, i.e. enrich the mind.

Department of Tourism
Government of India

Discover India
Discover yourself



without your mother and taste her cooking.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

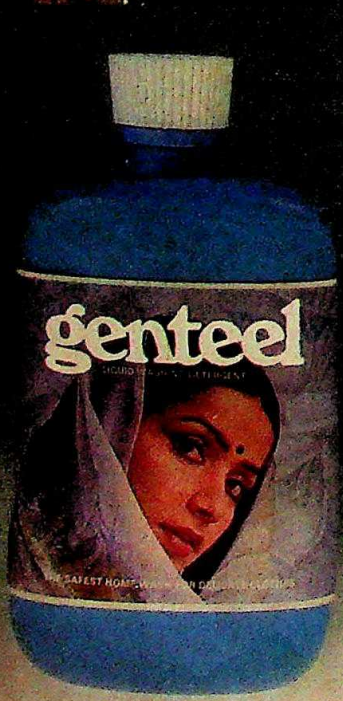
Genteel Liquid Detergent

Loves your woollens as much as you do.

Before you soak your woollens in harsh detergents or give that lovely silk saree to the laundry– think Genteel. Genteel woos the dirt out of fabrics gently but thoroughly. Leaves behind a fresh perfume no brand can match. Thousands of women now trust their good clothes to only Genteel.

Now with a new look, for you.

Wouldn't you like to be a Genteel woman too?



The safest home wash for synthetics, silks, woollens and blends.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Hari

Shilpi DM 5/85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A NEW ARRIVAL

LOHIA Machines, which has had fairly serious problems in getting customers to accept its 100 cc scooter (there have been 3.5 lakh cancellations of bookings, out of the total of 21 lakh that were booked), has now revived its fortunes with the introduction of a new 150 cc model. Customer demand has shifted so rapidly within a month of the new model being introduced that 90 per cent of the total production is now of 150 cc scooters, and the spate of cancellation of bookings has come to a near halt.

The company is meanwhile expanding its capacity for both nylon and polyester filament yarn following the Government's decision that all producers of these items must instal a minimum capacity of 15,000 tonnes. So the combined capacity of the two plants in Lohia Machines will go up from 9,000 tonnes to 30,000 tonnes. However, various other producers are expanding in similar fashion, and a massive glut in the market could be the end result of all this activity.

SUCCESS STORY

FINANCE Minister V.P. Singh may be upsetting a lot of industrialists but he is probably the only minister in Rajiv Gandhi's Cabinet to get a note of congratulation from the prime minister on the performance of his ministry. This followed the last performance appraisal of the ministry, done by the prime minister.

Singh was able to show that he had achieved some 95 per cent of the goals that he had set for the first half of the year, including the setting up of a new economic intelligence bureau, the tax collection record, decisions following from the new textile policy, an "integrated strike" on tax evaders and so on.

STUMBLING BLOCKS

MOST of the problems coming in the way of better industrial productivity have little to do with the Government or government policy. This is the indirect lesson to be learnt from a productivity survey conducted by the National Productivity Council's Productivity Board for Industrial Machinery. Thus, 53 per cent of the companies surveyed felt that demand was the biggest stumbling block, 34 per cent had a problem with raw material availability, 25 per cent were saddled with outdated plant and equipment which resulted in excessive breakdowns, and 11 per cent felt that machine availability was a limiting factor. But government did enter the picture for some companies; 40 per cent said there was a problem with the poor infrastructure and 26 per cent of the companies were sensitive to government policies.

NEW HORIZONS

THE DCM group is making a foray into cement. Shriram Fertilisers & Chemicals is setting up a two-lakh-tonnes-a-year cement plant at Kota, Rajasthan, in technical collaboration with the French firm Lafarge. The project is expected to go on stream by the end of 1986. Loans from the financial institutions will cover some Rs 13 crore of the project's Rs 18 crore plus bill, the remainder being met by the company.

Shriram Fertilisers has a ready raw material for cement in lime-rich sludge, over a half million tonnes of which has accumulated as a byproduct at the factory complex at Kota, posing a pollution problem. The venture itself is expected to be the precursor to a much bigger cement project by Jay Engineering Works, another DCM group firm.

AMBITIOUS AIMS

GARMENT exporters are setting their sights high. The Apparel Export Promotion Council (AEPC) reckons that garment exports can touch the Rs 2,500-crore mark in five years, up sharply from the expected figure of Rs 1,100 crore or so in 1985. Government officials have requested the council to explain its optimism, and the AEPC has now pointed out that exports have grown at a fast clip in the last two years, most of them to countries that do not impose import quotas. Indeed, export targets have had to be jacked up after the initial goals were crossed, and exports have more than doubled in the last five years. But the AEPC projection hinges on the Government ensuring that exporters get raw materials at international prices and granting various other incentives to make it possible.

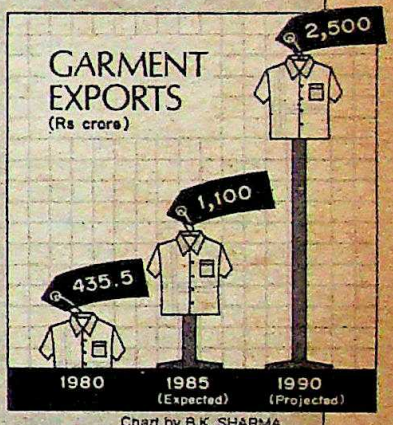


Chart by B.K. SHARMA

REPORT CARD

FOR COMPANIES to poll their employees on what they think of the organisation they work for is unusual enough, but for a public sector corporation to do so can only be called revolutionary. Yet that is precisely what the state-owned Bharat Heavy Electricals Ltd (BHEL) has done. In 10 days in October, BHEL asked some 68,000 employees across the board in 12 of its units to respond to 11 issues—including whether they were proud to belong to the organisation, how they rated it against other companies, their salaries, job satisfaction, and working conditions. Around 79 per cent of them ticked off one of three boxes—0 to 1 (negative response), 2 to 3 (average) and 4 to 5 (positive). Among the top scoring issues: pride in the organisation. At the bottom of the totem pole (average) were working conditions and perquisites, with executives below the manager level expressing unhappiness about these. A company official attributes this dissatisfaction to the higher aspirations of younger executives, and BHEL officials claim that they are not worried by this. The poll, the brainchild of former chairman K.L. Puri, is being extended to the remaining 6,000 employees in BHEL's Jhansi and Jagdishpur units, and possibly to BHEL's customers.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ESCORTS

Surprise Ruling

THE VERDICT came as a bombshell. London-based corporate marauder Swraj Paul hadn't quite expected it. Escorts Chairman H.P. Nanda was caught unawares. And the legions of businessmen and media pundits who had for months followed the twists and turns of the Erle Stanley Gardner-like Case of the Frustrated Takeovers were taken by surprise when it was finally handed down.

Last fortnight, the Supreme Court in a sweeping judgement in effect re-established the rights of the financial institutions to exercise their equity muscle, put Nanda on notice that he was at the mercy of the institutions—and kept Swraj Paul at bay from Escorts. For the next three months at least, Paul cannot get Escorts to register his 7 per cent stock, which was acquired more than two years ago by 13 non-resident firms under his control in Britain.

The five-member bench of the Supreme Court cleared the Government, the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) and the LIC of wrongdoing in the Escorts case. The court also turned down the Escorts argument that Paul's companies had violated the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act (FERA) by investing in shares without prior RBI permission. Instead, it said that the RBI had the discretion to grant retrospective sanction for this, and held that subsequent RBI clarifications on this were valid.

In a surprising twist, however, the court also ordered the RBI to reconsider in three months whether it should have permitted Paul's companies to invest in the first place. Its rationale: Punjab National Bank (PNB), through which Paul's investment funds were routed, had defaulted in its job of monitoring his share purchases. So the ball is in the RBI's court, and all sorts of issues which the Supreme Court did not delve deeply into could be raked up in the RBI investigation. Indeed, there were already stray indications that both Escorts and DCM, in which Paul's firms have acquired a 11 per cent stake, would jump at this opportunity to press home to the RBI a host of alleged irregularities in Paul's investments. So Paul cannot yet romp home, not by a long shot.

Certainly, the 181-page judgement has serious ramifications for the corporate sector. Though the rights of the institutions were not up front in this case, the judgement has overturned an earlier Bombay High Court ruling in Escorts' favour (INDIA TODAY, December 15, 1984) which had said that the institutions had no right to dismiss nine of Escorts' 15 directors. Corporate analysts and industrialists are quick to recognise the problems that can arise from the latest ruling. What, for example, should be the role of the Government when it is itself an affected shareholder? Venu Srinivasan, managing director of the Madras-based Sundaram Clayton says: "What the Government should do when it is itself the shareholder is still unclear — whether it should behave like any other shareholder or should intervene in case of mismanagement." As if to allay such misgivings, Finance Minister V.P. Singh told journalists that the Government had no intention of destabilising managements with a good track record.

That sounded as if the Government was holding out an olive branch, and the action quickly hotted up. H.P. Nanda winged his way to Bombay where he would have an opportunity to exchange views with the financial institutions. With 52 per cent of Escorts stock, they are the company's biggest shareholders and have a majority on the Escorts board. More important, the Supreme Court allowed H.P. Nanda and eldest son Rajan Nanda to continue as managing directors till the next board meeting. The board appointed them to their posts last May, but at the emergency general meeting the LIC called last June, the Nandas withdrew a resolution on their remuneration. Instead, they went back to the board, which then proposed that their appointments run till the Supreme Court decided on the Escorts case. So it would make sense to sue for peace with the institutions.

HARI OM GULATI

The judgement has put H.P. Nanda at the mercy of the institutions, but it looks as if they will support him.

The Nandas however decline to talk to the press and H.P. Nanda would not go beyond saying: "I have no comments to make. The highest court in the country has given its verdict and we must bow to it." For all that, it was evident that Nanda's Bombay trip had paid off. A few days later, the board met and ratified the Nandas' terms for another five years.

If that pointed to which way the wind was blowing, there was more evidence that the institutions did not intend to arbitrarily ease out those at the helm of companies. They lined up behind the DCM management at the company's annual general meeting last fortnight. An investment company had gone to the Delhi High Court seeking a stay on the AGM, claiming that DCM had refused to register a hefty 21 per cent of company equity, including Paul's 11 per cent. The court declined to interfere, but appointed an observer to attend the AGM. Subsequently, the re-election of three DCM directors, including a representative of the institutions (they have an equity stake of around 40 per cent), was challenged by some of those whose shares were not registered. This included Paul's broker Harish Bhasin. Put to vote, the resolution was lost: the institutions threw their weight behind the management.

The well-spring of this brouhaha is of course the judgement, and it is a remarkable document. Before getting down to the nitty-gritty, it wearily dwells on the mountains of evidence presented, testily castigates Paul and his broker Raja Ram Bhasin & Co for not putting in an appearance in court and takes a dig at the PNB for putting itself in "such a hapless situation". Later, the judges lash out at both Paul and Nanda. If Paul's remark to newspapers about the then Reserve Bank governor was quoted correctly, it was "saucy, rude and impudent". A salvo is fired at Nanda for his "duplicity" in holding discussions with the financial institutions while he was filing a writ in the Bombay High Court.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Finally, it picks on Nanda for the company's proposals to issue Rs 35 crore in equity and debentures for its motor cycles project, and repay its dues to the institutions ahead of schedule. The former would have pared the institutional holding in Escorts from 52 per cent to around 29 per cent, while the latter would have freed Nanda from a loan agreement which gave the institutions the power to put as many as six directors on the board. But the equity and debenture issue involved allotting 20 per cent of the shares on a rights basis to shareholders, on condition that no single shareholder would be allotted more than 100 debentures and 500 equity shares. What that meant was that the LIC would get just 500 shares even though it owned 30 per cent of the stock. But the ceiling would not apply to the promoters and directors of the company. As for the second, the court implied that repayment of the loans may have not been a sound financial decision. The money for this was to be raised from the debentures which entailed interest of 14 per cent, whereas the institutional loans involved only 10 per cent interest.

HARI OM GULATI

The court has asked the RBI to review its permission to Swraj Paul's companies to invest in the shares.

MEANWHILE, the big question is the forthcoming RBI investigation. Escorts and DCM are certain to raise issues that the Supreme Court did not take up on the ground that they were outside the scope of the writ petitions. Among them:

- Whether Paul or his brokers used local money to buy shares, something that would be illegal because he remitted funds on a repatriable basis. If local funds were used, Paul could repatriate them with the money he sent from Britain.
- Whether Paul's brokers had bought shares after May 2, the Government's cut-off date for an overall non-resident investment ceiling to come into operation.

On both matters, there may be many unanswered questions. In the first, there is an unaccounted 130,000 pounds (Rs 19.63 lakh). Paul remitted this amount in late January 1983 from the London branch of the PNB to a PNB branch in the capital to open a non-resident account in his name. But the London branch disclaimed knowledge of this, and the PNB's letter to the RBI on Paul's remittances makes no mention of this. It was later clarified to the court that the money was used by the Caparo group of companies to buy shares, but Nanda's lawyers had argued in court that this was irregular. The money was for Paul, not his firms, to spend on shares, they said.

But Paul dismisses all this, arguing that Nanda's lawyers have sought to cash in on a confusing situation. Says Paul: "There has been a lot of confusion over our remittance of £130,000 (Rs 19.63 lakh) in January 1983. PNB had made a mistake in not filing a return on the remittance with the RBI. Taking advantage of this, Nanda's counsel argued that the shares were bought with Indian and not non-resident funds. This is not true."

On the second point, Escorts lawyers produced brokers' notes showing that shares had been sold to one of Paul's investment firms as late as August. Paul had claimed that his investments were made before the ceiling was announced (INDIA TODAY, October 15, 1983).

Similar examples were cited in court, and Escorts lawyers strung all of them together to suggest that the RBI did not apply its mind fully to the facts of the case.

Nonetheless, the Supreme Court did not buy their line. It ruled that the RBI had after all applied its mind. The question then is: why has it asked the RBI to reconsider the entire issue? Is there a contradiction here between its clearance of the RBI and the investigation it has ordered? The judgement is silent on this matter, but an interested observer says: "By directing the RBI to re-examine the matter, the Supreme Court seems to be admitting that the RBI did not apply its mind—the very point that Escorts was arguing in court." The point may be pressed before the RBI. What is important is that the court has stated that the RBI can cancel the previous sanction or impose any restriction and conditions it wants to if it discovers irregularities. But will the RBI confess its sins if it finds that it erred? There is no ready answer to that.

Where does all this leave Paul? If the RBI finds that the law was violated in any way by Paul's companies, Paul stands to have his Rs 13 crore in investments in Escorts and DCM impounded by the Government. Paul reckons that he has lost Rs 10 crore in interest and exchange rate losses. While he can appeal to the courts if the RBI rules against him, that may mean prolonged litigation, and his cash would be further blocked.

Still, this scenario may not unfold. The RBI could plump for Swraj Paul. If that happens, the argument that registering Paul's shares would be illegal would no longer wash. The Nandas would be compelled to register Paul's shares, as would DCM. And though Paul has repeatedly declared that "there is no question of a take-over", the Nandas would be in hot water. On balance however it looks as if the issue is still wide open. But Paul seems to have struck a curious note when he answered a question on his options after the judgement: "Now I do hope that the fight has finally ended." Did that indicate that he was wearying over the nearly three-year-long battle? The conclusion may be premature, but it does provide food for thought.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
with bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FISCAL POLICY

Easing the Burden

FOR UPBEAT reactions, there haven't been many to surpass those that greeted Finance Minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh's Long Term Fiscal Policy (LTFP) unveiled last fortnight after months of nail-biting suspense. Budget-baiter Nani Palkhivala said it was a sound, lucid and historic statement. Tarun Das of the Association of Indian Engineering Industries called it "a remarkable document" while his chief Ramesh Maheshwari said it had several "outstanding features". V.P. Punj of the Federation of Indian Export Organisations said it would help long-range planning and strategies and tax expert H.P.Ranina said it would help companies which wanted to diversify and set up new units. S.P.Acharya, president of the Associated Chambers of Commerce and Industry (ASSOCHAM) said it would provide for an orderly environment for business. And Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry President D.N.Patodia saw it as a welcome step towards open budgeting.

There were the dissenters, of course. Maruthai Pillai of the All India Manufacturers Organisation felt that the section on corporate taxation hadn't fulfilled industry's expectations and corporate taxes should be reduced five percentage points. S.S.Kanwar of the All India Manufacturers Organisation lamented that there was no incentive for the new entrepreneur, while The Times of India said editorially that the policy evaded the central issue in fiscal reform, that is, using taxes to stimulate investment rather than raising resources.

But even these views were generally couched in language that otherwise welcomed the LTFP. And that, considering the context, was really no surprise. Although it leaves a great many details to future formulation, the policy statement unambiguously lays down the direction of the Government's fiscal thinking. It confirms the liberal trend established in the budget last March when a series of incentives was unveiled for the individual taxpayer and businessmen, and awkward, unnecessary fiscal legislation was done away with.

The LTFP makes it clear that the Government isn't interested any longer in the old mantras. The word 'socialism' is conspicuous by its absence. The concept of a direct assault on poverty has been replaced by opting for a trickle-down strategy. The emphasis is on growth, on efficiency, on eliminating, as far as possible, the corrupting influence of discretion in the application of tax laws. It confirms the Government's new approach of increasing tax collections not by raising rates but by making the structure simpler, through better compliance and, above all, by levying tax at rates that are generally judged to be "reasonable". In a sentence that sums up the new philosophy, the document says: "We must ensure that the long-term fiscal policy creates an environment conducive to rapid growth in production and employment, so that the burden of poverty can be reduced."

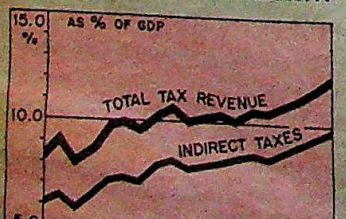
Specifically, among its measures, the policy lists:

- Personal income tax rates will remain unchanged for five years, though the finance minister may levy a temporary surcharge to meet unforeseen contingencies; inflation will be compensated for by adjusting tax brackets suitably;
- surcharge and surtax on corporate tax will be abolished from April 1, 1987, a measure that will reward efficient companies and those which are able to generate high profit on a low capital base;
- the investment allowance, which one tax specialist describes as the "single most potent tax incentive", will be replaced by a new scheme enabling corporate taxpayers to deposit 20 per cent of taxable profits with the Industrial Development Bank of India (IDBI) from fiscal 1986-87 for future purchase of plant and machinery, and abolition of minimum tax provisions;
- a new provision aimed against the creation of black money in property deals. The Government will through random sampling acquire metropolitan property worth more than Rs 10 lakh within 30 days of its changing hands at a price 15 per cent in excess of that declared;
- the introduction, after due study, of a modified value added tax, 'Modvat', to ease multiple taxation of inputs;
- a promise to replace quantitative restrictions on imports with properly structured tariffs; and
- the establishment in future of an appellate tribunal to handle all litigation over customs and excise duties.

Though there are always two sides to an argument, there's no doubt that in some places at least there is sound logic at work. The figures show, for instance, that as tax rates have fallen, income tax collections have risen sharply; over the first seven months of the current fiscal year they are an unprecedented 25 per cent ahead of last year's collections. The abolition of the minimum tax provisions are, in the same spirit, no longer necessary after the end of the investment allowance. Says Patodia: "Theoretically, this will enable companies to retain resources for further expansion." Modvat would eliminate

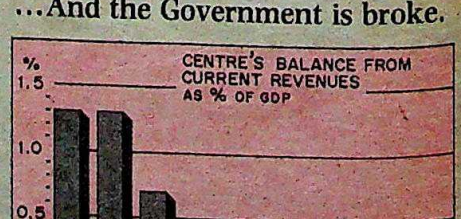
Chart by B.K. SHARMA

Tax revenues have risen...



...But so has non-plan spending...

...And the Government is broke.



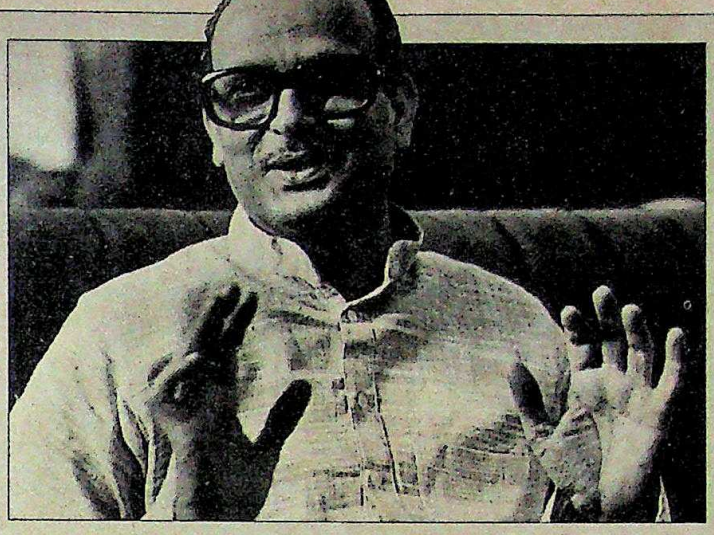
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

multiple indirect taxation, though, as P.M.Sinha of Hindustan Lever Ltd points out, it will be no great advantage unless it also incorporates sales tax.

Granting this innovation, tax lawyer O.P.Vaish regrets that the policy hasn't even addressed the problem of multiple taxation of companies. Citing a hypothetical example, he says that when a subsidiary company declares a profit, that profit is taxed. It is taxed again when the subsidiary remits it to the parent company and again when it is paid out as dividend to shareholders.

The biggest controversy is, as expected, over the replacement of the investment allowance. By instituting a new and in many ways similar scheme, the finance minister hasn't exactly disappointed private industry which was hoping, probably wishfully, that he would both lower tax rates and continue the allowance. Taxes have, indeed, been lowered with the abolition of surtax and surcharge (though the rates remain unchanged) and the investment allowance has been replaced with the new IDBI deposit scheme. But strong views have been expressed. Raunaq Singh of Raunaq Enterprises feels that the investment allowance generates cash while the new scheme will lock up money with IDBI at a lower rate of interest—10 per cent—than available on the market. But ASSOCHAM Secretary-General D.N.Saxena argues: "If the choice was between lower tax rates and the investment allowance, we prefer the lower tax rates."



V.P. Singh's new fiscal policy very succinctly lays down the direction of the government's fiscal thinking, to create an environment conducive to rapid growth in production and employment.

UNDERLYING this line of thinking is the practice of companies to use the investment allowance as an instrument of tax planning, maximising investment in assets rather than profitability. It isn't clear as yet whether the 20 per cent deposit will enable a corporate depositor to draw a tax benefit in the year of the deposit or not, but in the long run it would provide a more easily monitored incentive. Sinha believes that the new scheme will make for more cautious investment plans, contributing to a better capital-output ratio which is notoriously low in the Indian context.

For a government document, the LTFP is a very candid and clear statement. Yet, it does leave some areas unexplained. How, for instance, will the house purchase scheme work? Official sources say that it will be completely random, that a computer will at random select properties to be bought by the Government which will then acquire it at the declared price plus 15 per cent and promptly auction it. The Government expects that a buyer who has declared the right market price will make a 15 per cent profit and will be free to buy the property back from the Government. But there is considerable cynicism among legal circles on just how this will work out.

Nor has the LTFP been very clear about its attitude towards black money. As of now, it is possible for an individual to make a declaration of his hitherto unaccounted income or wealth in his next return (for the fiscal year ending March 1986) without the tax department reopening his past accounts. But, as tax accountant Ajay Behl asks, "Will the Government want to know the source of this additional income or wealth?" The implication is clear: if the source is demanded, individuals may not be willing to make declarations since that would implicate the whole network. But, if individuals don't make declarations the huge stock of black money—recently estimated at Rs 38,000 crore—will remain beyond the reach of the exchequer.

Will the LTFP work? Even government economists associated with its formulation are keeping their fingers crossed. With so many of its provisions left unformulated—mainly in indirect taxes such as customs duties and excise—there's no way of knowing. But more than that is the burden of past policies that the LTFP simply cannot shed. Tax revenues have gone up, but then so has Government's non-plan spending, and as the LTFP makes abundantly clear, the Government is simply not paying its way.

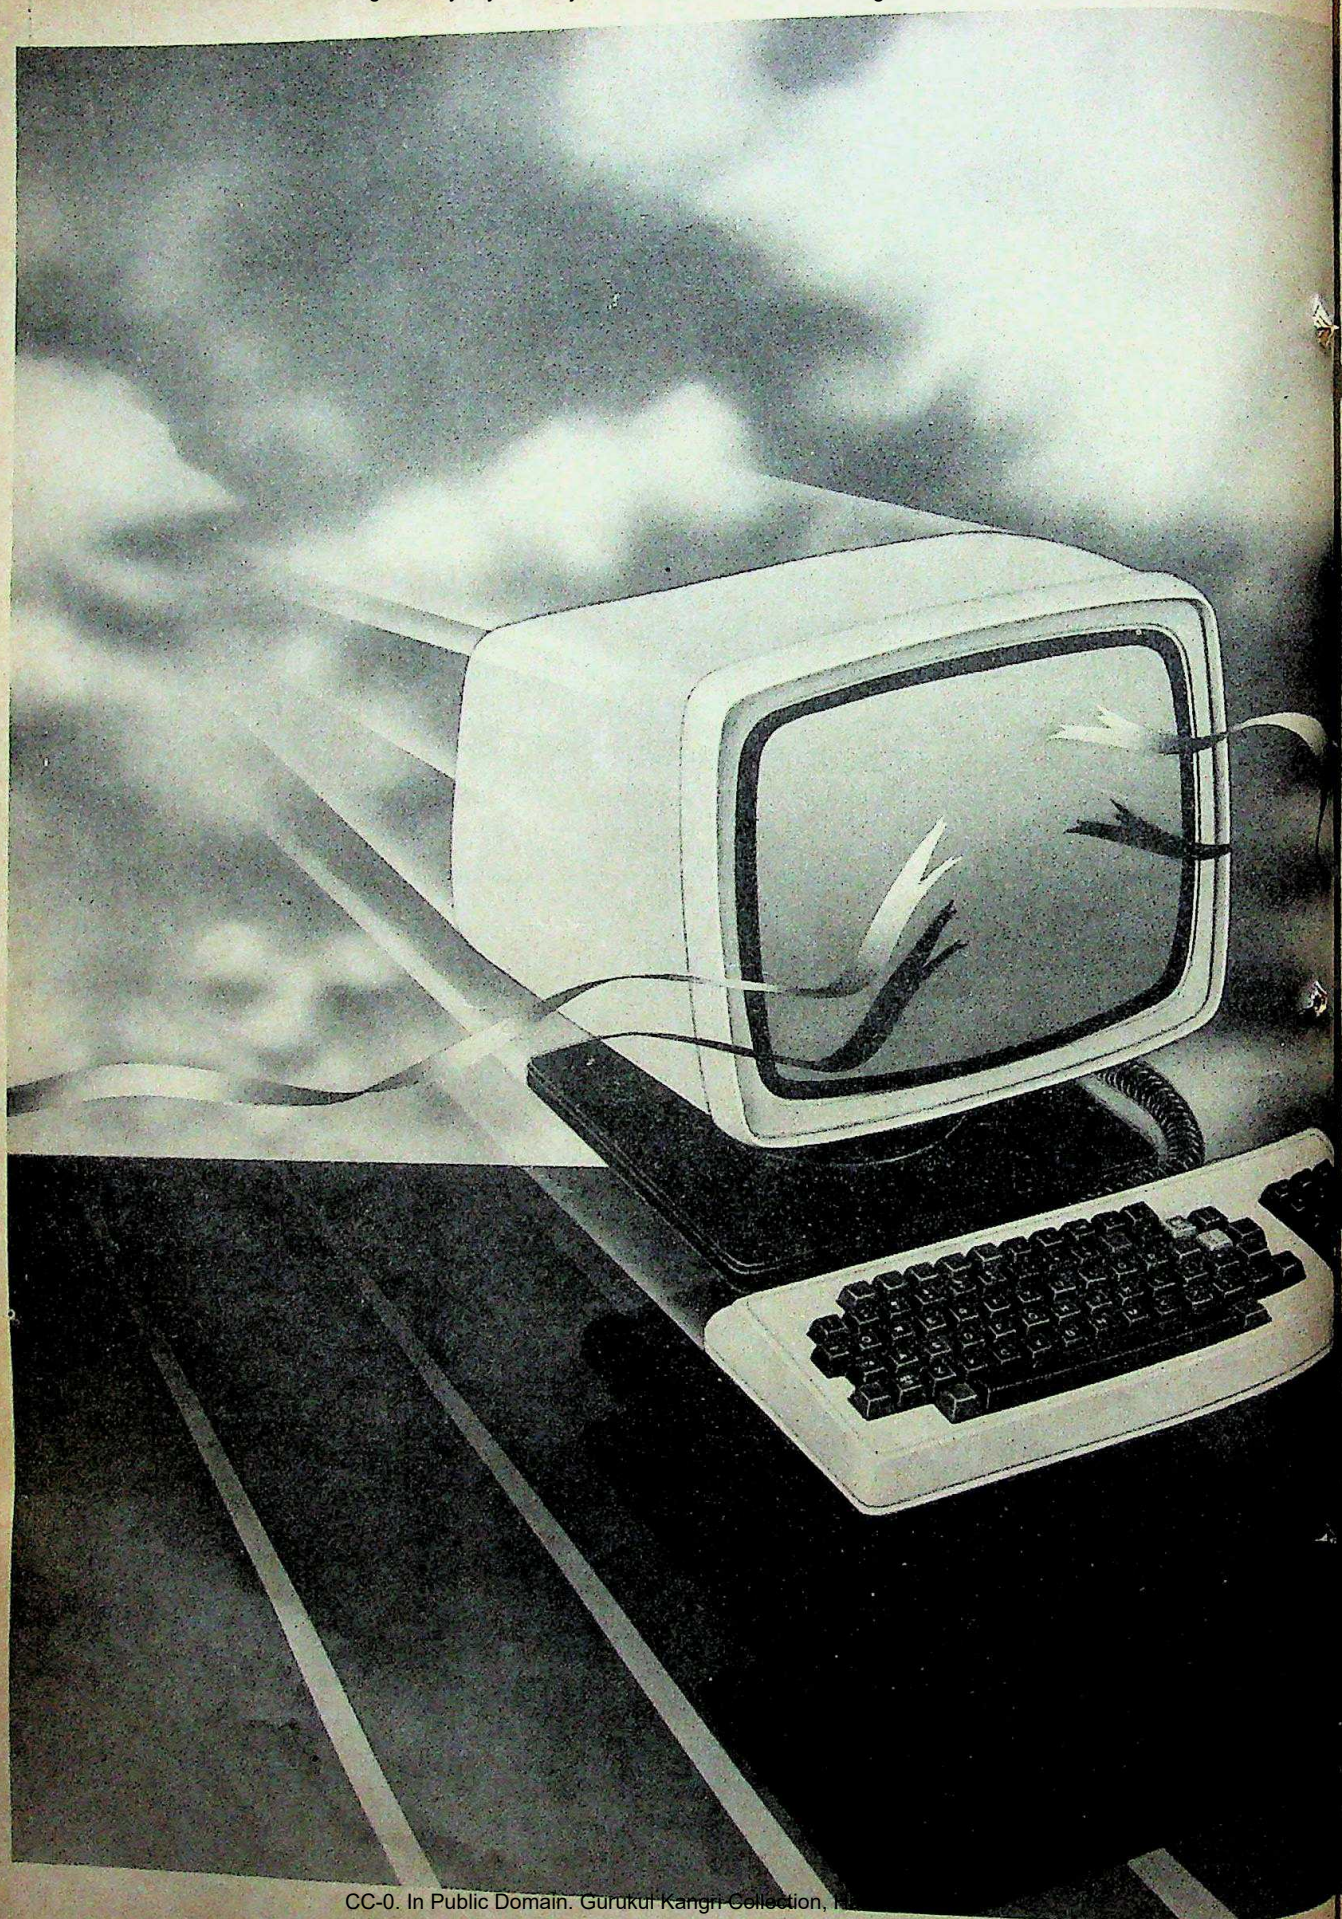
Where, then, does that leave the Seventh Plan, a leviathan which requires nearly Rs 130,000 crore of funds from the Centre. With Defence, subsidies and interest payments at 10.9 per cent of GDP equalling roughly the Government's total revenue receipts at 11.2 per cent of GDP in the 1984-85 revised estimates, development spending cannot be financed from current revenues. So where will the Seventh Plan be financed from? The LTFP says: "The long-term answer must lie in reducing our reliance on borrowings by increasing the balance of current revenues and internal resource generation by public undertakings."

Neither is likely to be easy: deficits and borrowings have become an inalienable part of the budgetary process, and there is nothing to suggest that the public sector will suddenly jump out of its skin and become profitable. Since he isn't willing to tap agriculture, the finance minister's hope lies in buoyant revenues. That may be true of direct taxes, but they yield less than one-fifth of the total tax revenues. Perhaps the current drive of raids will persuade businesses to be more conscientious in paying excise and customs duties but indirect taxes have never been buoyant without higher rates. So, if the finance minister does run into a budgetary squeeze, if money simply isn't forthcoming, he may be left with no alternative but to return to the annual guessing game of hiking this levy or reducing that. As long as he refrains from touching direct taxes, there will be some stability. But indirect taxes affect prices and prices in turn influence corporate fortunes. The future isn't as secure as the LTFP would like to make out.

—SUMAN DUBEY with PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

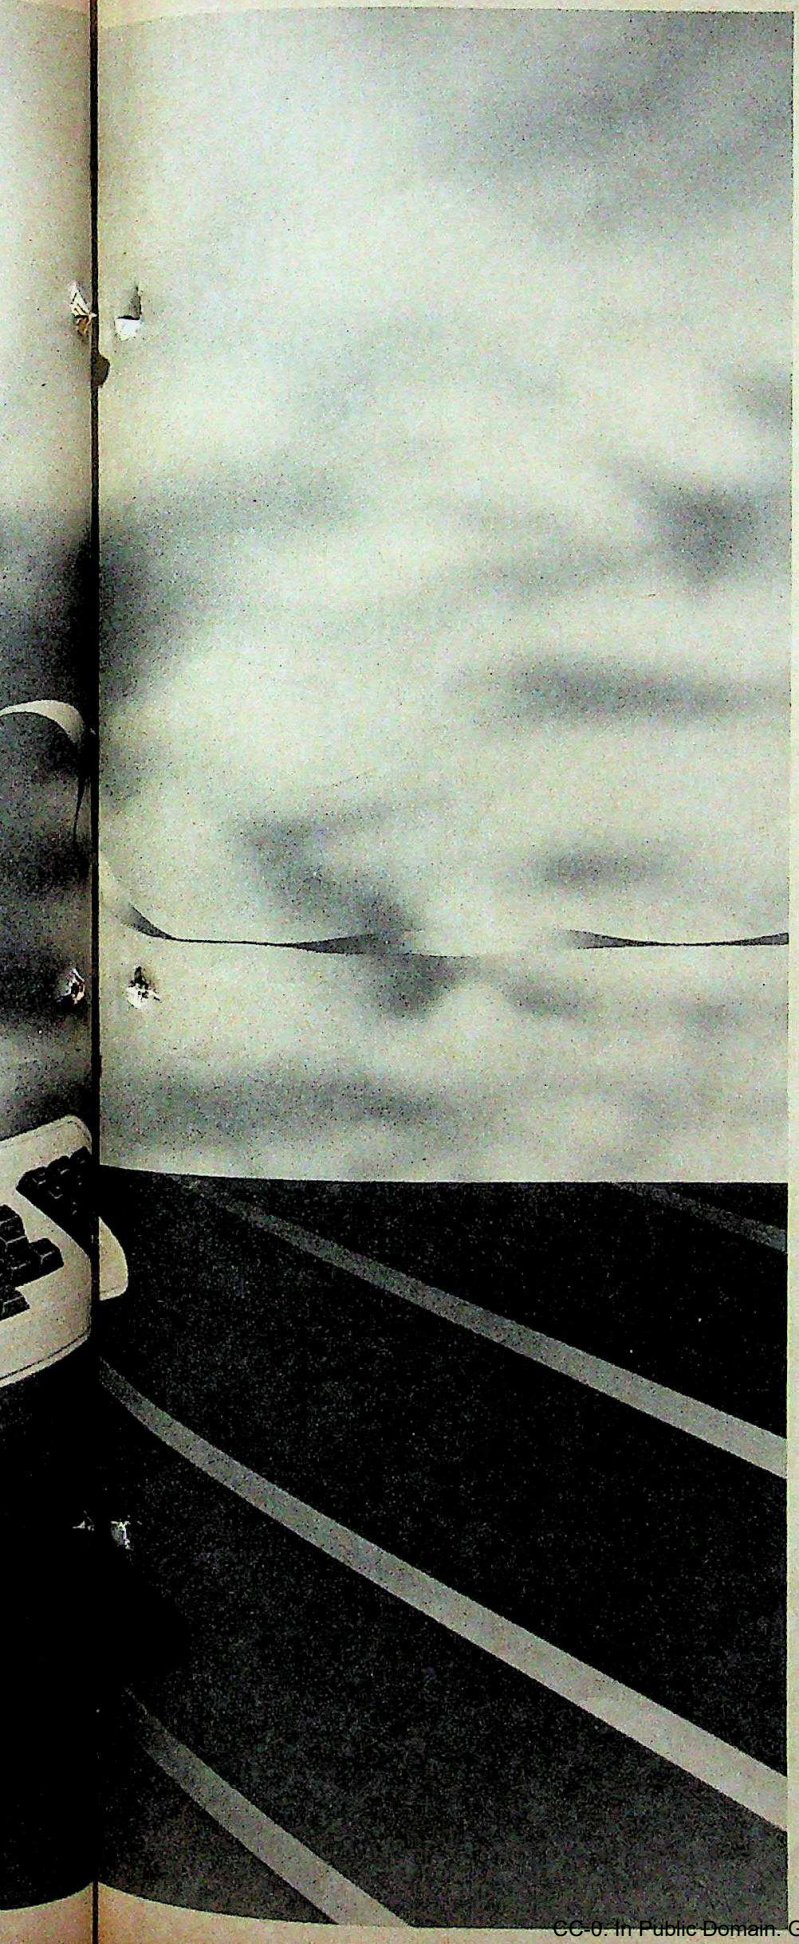
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, H

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



The latest in a long line of firsts.

- 1979-80: Uptron enters the computer market with the D-10, a data entry system. With over 3500 installations, D-10 is now an acclaimed industry standard.
- 1981-82: Uptron announces the S-800, India's first computer to shatter the Rs. 1 lakh price barrier.
- 1982-83: The Uptron S-850 becomes India's first computer to integrate DP, WP and Graphics.
- 1983-84: The Uptron S-1650 emerges as India's fastest 16-bit multi-user EDP machine.

Now The Uptron S-1600. A 16-bit multi-terminal, desk-top computer that's redefining price-performance ratios.

UPTRON

Uptron India Limited
10, Ashok Marg, Lucknow-226 001.

Computer Sales Offices at: Bangalore 71, Millers Road, Bangalore-560 052. Tel. 71919, 28927. Bombay 203, Dalamal Towers, Nariman Point, Bombay-400 021. Tel. 223645, 222561, 231393. Calcutta 52D, Ballygunge Circular Road, Calcutta-700 019. Tel. 476859, 483249. Delhi D6, South Ext. II, New Delhi-110 049. Tel. 665412, 667084, 665662. Hyderabad 5-9-12, Samrat Complex, Opp. A.G.'s Office, Saifabad, Hyderabad-500 004. Tel. 226085. Madras Mowbrays Flats, 282, Mowbrays Road, Alwarpet, Madras-600 018. Tel. 454022, 454625. Lucknow 19, Vidhan Sabha Marg, Lucknow-226 001. Tel. 47131, 34684.

ULKA-D-UIL-1007

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TOURISM

Bracing for a Boost

A SMILING sun beams out of double page colour advertisements in 30 magazines exhorting people to hit the road, to move out and travel. This media blitz splashing the slogan 'Discover India, discover yourself' across the country is the Tourism Department's way of convincing the people of the virtues of national integration. The message clearly is that tourism enriches the traveller and educates him about the country's diversity, its people, customs and food habits. From January 1986 a slightly different message—"the Festival of India never ends"—will be beamed out overseas through advertisements in the international edition of Time magazine.

Tourism is all set to get a much-needed shot in the arm. These ad campaigns are but one thrust of the multi-pronged drive to boost tourism—domestic and international—to encourage Indians to travel within the country and to lure larger number of foreign tourists to India's shores. Additional Director-General of Tourism Ramesh Chandra readily admits that the domestic campaign has strong overtones of national integration. Since the prime minister himself authored the idea of using tourism to cement national unity, the Rs 50-lakh campaign has got off to a nippy start. But the efforts to get more foreigners to India is straight business. Waiting in the wings for its January launch is the Rs 1-crore Time magazine campaign. Separate campaigns with a budget of Rs 78 lakh aimed specifically at the European market are also planned. This would popularise India as a summer destination and also counteract the adverse publicity as a result of the violence of 1984 which forced the cancellation of many booked tours to India. These campaigns would hardly have been possible had the Department of Tourism budget for promotion and publicity not swelled from Rs 5 crore to Rs 13 crore.

The job of designing a campaign for the domestic market was entrusted to Rediffusion, the advertising agency which produced the controversial advertisements in the Congress(I)'s election campaign a year ago. For a start, the agency took a fundamental look at the reasons why fewer Indians travelled for leisure. Some interesting findings which emerged were that there is:

- a basic inertia in the people,
- a lack of knowledge about worthwhile places to visit within the country,
- the fear that travel involves a temporary change in food habits,
- an apprehension that a holiday away from home proves expensive in the absence of adequate facilities for budget tourists.

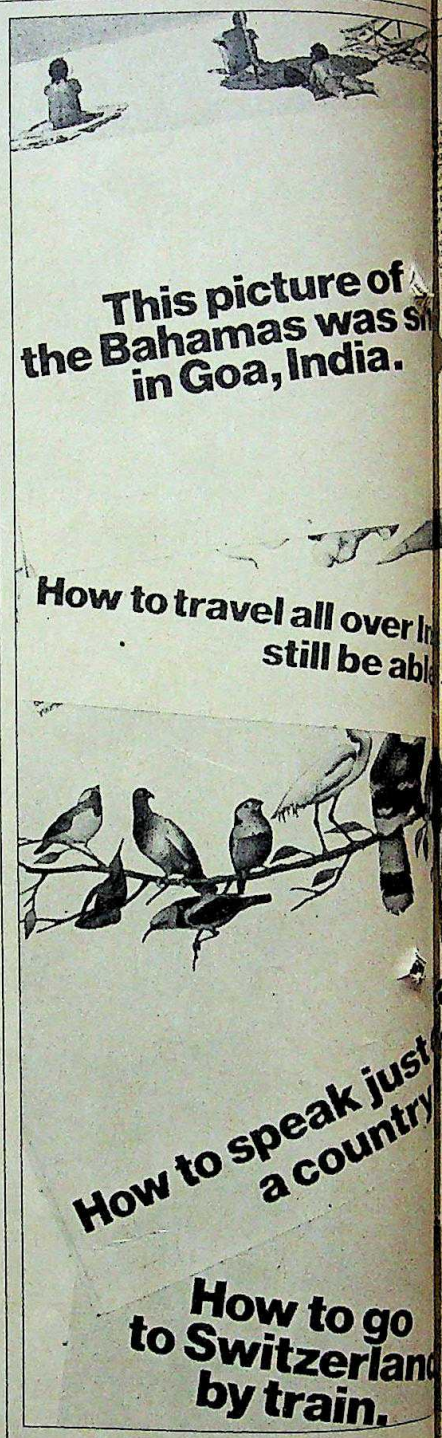
The domestic campaign aims at changing these perceptions. The first ads, says New Delhi Rediffusion Branch Director H.V.Subramaniam, tackle phobias about strange places and different food. From April 1986 new ads will be aimed at those who are least predisposed to travel. The message is simple: that "touring is not just pleasure but an emotional experience." Example: one ad signs off with the following line: "At Ellora, my child learnt that stones could talk."

All this is fine, but marketing experts in the industry question the wisdom of positioning these ads in glossy magazines. The people who read these magazines in any case do not need to be motivated to travel. "These ads need to be placed in Hindi and regional language newspapers if the intention is to get large numbers of domestic tourists on the move," said a tourism expert.

To enable large numbers of Indians to move out, Director-General of Tourism Nitish Sengupta says work is underway to provide infrastructural facilities in three main areas: budget accommodation, roadside amenities and inexpensive tour packages by the India Tourism Development Corporation (ITDC), state tourism corporations and Vayudoot. "Every day 11 million Indians travel by train. If we take even a fraction of these as tourists we have quite a number," he said.

Package tours are now being offered by the ITDC and Vayudoot. In cooperation with the state tourism corporations of Himachal Pradesh and Meghalaya and the Kumaon and Garhwal Mandal Vikas Nigams, the airline sells reasonably priced four and five day packages from Delhi to Dehra Dun, Mussoorie, Rishikesh, Hardwar, and others to Nainital and Ranikhet at around Rs 799 per head including air travel to and fro. Vayudoot General Manager Harsh Vardhan hopes these packages would take off in a big way. Students pay just Rs 300.

On another front similar low cost holidays are being offered by many state



This media blitz splashing the slogan 'Discover India, discover yourself', is the Tourism Department's way of convincing people of the virtues of national integration...

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...marketing experts question the wisdom of positioning these ads in glossy magazines. The people who read these magazines in any case do not need to be motivated to travel.

tourism corporations and the ITDC which has special packages for students and senior citizens, with rates as low as Rs 25 a day. This has enabled the corporation to fill some of its empty hotels in out-of-the-way locations. ITDC Managing Director Rajan Jetley, claimed that the youth packages had proved a big success: "We have moved about 10,000 youth so far and we are having to turn down people because we have no room in our hotels."

WITH a great boom expected in the demand for budget facilities, ITDC has been told to reorient its energies to opening up new areas to tourism and entering places where the private sector hotel companies fear to tread. "The hospitality industry is best left to the private sector," says Chandra. Apart from renovating and upgrading its existing properties and building only one or two new ones, for example, at Bombay, the corporation will in future build only budget facilities in collaboration with state tourism corporations. Six such properties were under construction at Guwahati, Puri, Ranchi, Itanagar, Bhopal and Pondicherry.

But the problem of filling the existing five-star hotels—those owned by the ITDC and other chains—remains. Hence the "Festival of India never ends" campaign and the European campaign to draw tourists in the summer months May and June when hotels report their lowest occupancies. To make the summer package attractive Air-India, Air France and Swissair have agreed to offer a 15 per cent discount on regular air fares, while hotels in India are chipping in with a 25 per cent cut on room rates and travel agents with a 20 per cent discount on ground transportation. "We are happy that some attention is being paid to consumer-oriented tourism marketing abroad," said Ghulam Naqshband, managing director of Sita Travels.

But, cautions Sengupta, "things won't work unless the Government reviews the visa policy to make it easier for genuine tourists to come to India." Even official delegations suffer the indignity of delayed visas. People attending conferences in India face the additional harassment of getting special clearance from the Home Ministry. Delegates to the Federation of International Youth Travel Organisations (FIYTO) conference in Delhi in October got their clearance barely a few days before the conference began. The Home Ministry which is the clearing authority, does not realise that because of the numbers involved, conferences are a big, lucrative but very competitive business. Bureuacratic hassles such as the one faced by FIYTO can kill a country's reputation as a conference venue.

Visas apart, the second obstacle in the way of increased tourist traffic is lack of adequate capacity on Indian Airlines' domestic network and also on airlines operating to India. "While legitimate interests of Air-India should be protected it should not appear to take a dog-in-the-manger attitude." With this in mind, the Government recently overruled Air-India's objections and has allowed foreign charters to land directly at Goa and Trivandrum. The first chartered DC10 planes of the Lufthansa subsidiary Condor started flying in to Goa this winter, and 26 charters have been cleared for Goa. Trivandrum is expected to follow suit. There are plans to run direct services to the Gulf from Goa and an Air-India service from Hyderabad to Saudi Arabia has begun.

A new and belated move is also being made to encourage travel among south Asian countries by lowering air fares. The regional airlines met recently in Karachi to discuss reduction of intra regional air fares and the same topic is expected to come up when the South Asia committee of PATA (Pacific Area Travel Association) meets in New Delhi this fortnight. For many years Indian Airlines has opposed all moves to make it reduce or even prorate air fares for international travellers but as Sengupta pointed out, "in the overall interest Indian Airlines should agree."

Sengupta is confident that if these hurdles are pushed aside, if the capacity to handle more traffic increases, visas are relaxed and the notoriously slow business of getting past immigration and customs is speeded up, Indian tourism will boom. "I am confident of getting 2.5 million tourists by 1990," he says. Earnings of Rs 3,000 crore a year from tourism are "well within our reach" if these impediments are removed.

From today's perspective, these numbers seem the stuff of fantasy. India was supposed to host one million visitors by 1980 according to a plan drawn up in the early 1970s. In fact, thanks to the introduction of the visa restriction, and problems in Jammu & Kashmir, Punjab and adverse publicity due to calamities and violence, the total tourist arrivals at the end of 1984 were only 852,000 and tourism earnings about Rs 1,300 crore. At best 1985 will only match that figure. It's going to be a long haul.

—RAMINDAR SINGH with PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BANKING

Wheeling and Dealing

THE PLOT is as riveting as a murky Arthur Hailey financial thriller: A mighty but tottering bank, large-scale and systematic fraud, powerful politicians, black marketeering bankers, corrupt businessmen, obscure financial deals, payoffs, sex, and an unrelenting and crusading member of Parliament.

The uproar over Johnson Matthey Bankers'—now widely known as the "JMB Affair"—is one of the most explosive scandals to rock the City of London. Its principal characters: Asian millionaires—trading tycoon Abdul Shamji and Pakistani shipping magnate Mahmud Sipra. Teetering on the periphery have been a number of other high profile Asian businessmen. Coming in the wake of the notorious Rajendra Sethia rumpus—which was Britain's biggest bankruptcy—the fortunes of Asian businessmen seem to be under a black cloud in the UK repeatedly caught under the harsh media glare. It has, in the process, earned Asian businessmen an undeserved reputation—of being dubious wheeler-dealers rather than an industrious, enterprising lot.

At the hub of the scandal is Johnson Matthey Bankers'—the international bank and bullion dealers which was saved from a £248 million (Rs 433 crore) collapse by a controversial take-over by the Bank of England last October, and now finds itself where no bank would want to be: on page one of the newspapers. The often ferocious campaign against the bank has been led by the audacious and indefatigable Brian Sedgemore, the Labour MP for Shoreditch and Hackney south. Sedgemore, a former barrister and one-time columnist for the irreverent satirical weekly Private Eye, has put on a bravura display in Parliament, alleging fraud and malpractice in many corners of public and private life, calling for the resignation of the chancellor of the exchequer and the chairman of the Bank of England. At the heart of the affair are alleged to be a series of entrepreneurs who have been named and maybe even villified under cover of parliamentary privilege which has provided Sedgemore protection from libel laws. Much of his damning evidence and withering comments have been reserved for Shamji and Sipra.

Heading the list of charges of extensive fraud were Abdul Shamji and his Gomba Group of Industries (INDIA TODAY, July 31, 1984). Shamji has been described in the House of Commons as an "acquaintance" of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, "friend" of Norman Tebbit, the abrasive chairman of the Conservative Party and a probable future prime minister and "erstwhile friend" of Norman Lamont, minister of state for defence procurement. Shamji's Gomba operations in the UK owed JMB £21 million (Rs 36 crore) which made him its third largest debtor. Unable to recover the amount, the bankers appointed Price Waterhouse, the firm of noted accountants, to be receivers and managers of Gomba. In addition, some £40 million (Rs 69 crore) was owed to other banks including Punjab National Bank by Gomba's subsidiaries and associates.

The property-based empire of Abdul Shamji started in the early 1970s when he fled the rampaging troops of Idi Amin in Uganda and claims to have arrived in UK "virtually penniless". But within six months he had struck his first deal moving a consignment of whisky and cutlery to Zaire. He soon went on to buy properties, hotels and such quintessentially British landmarks as three London theatres—The Gerrick, The Duchess and The Mermaid. He also had an indirect stake in Britain's most famous stadium—the Wembley. His own pet project was a Scottish truck plant—Stonefield Vehicles. Operating from an elegant address in Park Lane, Shamji ran his immense empire of vehicles, hotels, commodity trading and components with a turnover of £40 million, hobnobbing with the most powerful figures in the land.

Shamji banked with JMB for about six years. And as financial experts point out, trouble was never far away. In one deal in June 1984, for instance, the J.M. Jewellry Corporation sold a factory and large quantities of jewellery and watches to a US company, Strongsay. Shamji and his son-in-law Munir Walji, negotiated the deal and the finance was arranged through JMB. However on December 30 last, when a second tranche of $11.8 million (Rs 14.4 crore) in payment for the jewellery became due, a new JMB administration refused to make the money available and so Strongsay defaulted.

More damaging than Shamji's inability to pay his dues was Sedgemore's allegation that Shamji had provided Ian Fraser—JMB's former chief loan negotiator—with a flat in Mayfair where he kept two mistresses. Calling Shamji a crook in the hallowed precincts of the House of Commons, the MP loudly asked: "What I cannot understand is why this luminary of the conservative firmament is not in a remand prison awaiting committal for trial for fraud." Sedgemore also alleged that Shamji attempted to "buy him off".

Sedgemore said that Shamji thought that Victorian values were about "bribery, corruption, fraud, and tarts for bankers". Shamji who has kept a resolutely low profile during all these accusations emerged once to talk to newsmen to defend himself. He told journalists: "When I saw the newspaper headlines I had to ask my son what this word 'tart' meant. He knew, but he ran from the room in tears rather than tell me." Shamji, with his firsthand experience of a demented Idi Amin, said he found Sedgemore's behaviour worse than Amin's—"because he is an educated man living in a civilised world, yet he behaves worse than Amin. Amin had the power of the army and no one could touch him. This man can attack and no one can touch him because of the privilege of Parliament."

The Guardian

Much of Brian Sedgemore's damning evidence and withering comments have been reserved for Shamji and Sipra.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Shamji also openly challenged Sedgemore to shed his cloak of parliamentary immunity. He taunted: "If he has the guts, let him come out and say these terrible things outside Parliament. Let him say that I'm a crook, that I'm corrupt and should be in jail. I'm no crook and I can prove it. He has nothing to support what he says."

Shamji's protestations have not stopped JMB from swinging their receivers into action. Knight, Frank and Rutley (KFR) have been given the job of finding the buyers for a range of properties which was part of Shamji's UK empire. These include:

► instructions to sell the Duchess and Gerrick theatres. The Mermaid theatre has not been included in the list so far;

► KFR have been instructed to find agents for other properties. These include the entire St George's estate in London's Pimlico which is estimated to embrace over 500 individual residential, retail and office accommodation;

► KFR has also been asked to find a buyer for the 64-bedroom Rathbone Hotel in London's West End;

► also on sale will be a 7,000 sq ft handbag factory in Blackburn and a secondary retail investment in North End Parade, Fulham, comprising around 20 shop units and flats. The agents will also be seeking a tenant for Gomba's own leasehold offices in London's Park Lane.

Side by side, the Punjab National Bank which badly burnt its fingers in the Rajendra Sethia bankruptcy resulting in a shake-up in the higher echelons of that bank, once again found itself locked into another Asian with bad debts. Bank sources were cagey about the precise sum involved but Ashok Bakshi, its London office manager, told INDIA TODAY that the secured loans with Shamji were much smaller than in the Sethia affair. The bank is evaluating Alford House on Regent Street through receivers, and is confident it will recover its loans. Meanwhile, Shamji has twice moved the courts to prevent JMB receivers from annexing his property, both of which have been rejected. But sources close to Shamji say that he will be able to pay back the £21 million in its entirety.

Even as Shamji was battling Sedgemore and the receivers, JMB's biggest debtor, the flamboyant Mahmud Sipra—whose shipping and film companies owed $70 million (Rs 85.8 crore)—vanished without a trace for some weeks. In the early stages when the scandal burst, it was alleged that Sipra was one of Sedgemore's informants but that did not seem to stop the implacable Labour MP from charging in the House of Commons that "the number of frauds Sipra has perpetrated is infinite," adding: "He does nothing else but commit fraud." Although no fraud charges have been brought against him so far in UK courts against his El Saeed Group of Companies, Sipra has been slapped with a perplexing maze of lawsuits.

► He has been accused of "old fashioned piracy on the high seas and overwhelming greed" by a district judge in October last year during a $1 million lawsuit brought against him by Dow Chemical and Manual International— a steel wholesaler over a cargo of steel which was not delivered to the people that owned it. Sipra is still waiting to hear the result of his appeal.

► Last July a New York judge awarded a Liberian shipping company $1.6 million in damages against Sipra and two companies in his empire—Bulkferts and WKM Ship Management Service Inc. The Liberian company—Transatlantic Bulk Shipping—claimed that Sipra chartered its vessel in September last year but stopped payments after just seven weeks.

► In August an Iraqi Government agency, State Organisation of Chemical Industries, sued Sipra and another company Sipravon Gulf and Paper seeking $4.6 million (Rs 0.56 crore). The Iraqis claim that Sipra agreed to ship 6,000 tonnes of wood and instead delivered just 2000 tonnes while obtaining payment by presenting bills of lading for cargoes that were not delivered.

► In yet another huge claim an Iranian company, Iran Carton is seeking damages totalling $6.35 million (Rs 0.77 crore). The Iranians say that a Sipra-controlled company, Maritime Americas Ltd, agreed to ship paper products to Iran and obtained payment under letters of credit issued by Bank Melli but failed to deliver the full cargo.

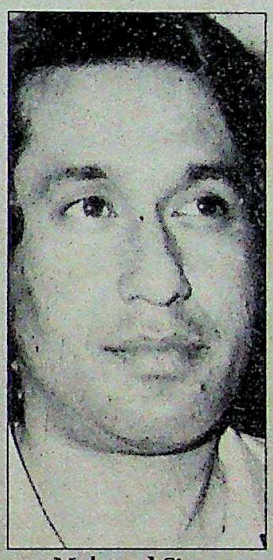
And as Sipra was found untraceable amidst the controversy in the House of Commons, Sedgemore alleged that "he had done a bunk for Karachi". Last fortnight, clad in a cool pathan outfit and brash as ever, Sipra appeared on the BBC "Money" television programme shot in his Lahore home. Asked about the allegations of Johnson Matthey Bankers' staff being involved in shady deals in Nigeria, Sipra replied: "It's common knowledge that anyone doing business with Nigeria would in some way or the other be involved in irregular currency movements in and out of the country." But he denied that any of his ships had ever called at a Nigerian port. He also categorically denied all the allegations made against him by Sedgemore, refuted the allegation that he was running from the law, insisted that he was in Pakistan just for a holiday and promised to be back in the UK by Christmas. But even as Sipra was sounding off, London's fraud squad swooped down on two of his houses in fashionable Mayfair and Regents Park and seized a "carload of documents".

Whilst Sipra's shipping empire appeared to be sinking and Shamji was making fighting talk of making an outright payment of his £21 million debt to JMB, other Asian businessmen involved in dealings with JMB were also being dragged into the scandal. The most prominent of

HARI OM GULATI

Abdul Shamji

Sipra's shipping and film companies owed Johnson Matthey Bankers Rs 85.8 crore making him its largest debtor while Shamji's Gomba group owed Rs 36 crore.



Mahmud Sipra

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

them were the Pahoomal Brothers of Bombay who fled to Singapore after allegedly attempting to defraud Johnson Matthey Bankers' of £7 million (Rs 12.20 crore) before its collapse last year. The Pahoomal Brothers—Vinod, Narendra and Mohan—arrived in England in 1979 and set up a clutch of off-shore companies in Guernsey. One of them was allegedly Lexham Sales Ltd exporting factory equipment and Mercedes car spares to Nigeria. The fraud centred on the smuggling of massive sums out of Nigeria in exchange for bogus imports. Fraud squads tipped off about the existence of forged documents began to investigate but JMB allegedly tipped off the suspects and also refused to reveal the names of those sheltering behind the off-shore company. The brothers allegedly fled to Singapore even as arrest warrants were being issued in their names.

Incriminating evidence has also piled up against Pakistan's Imam Brothers—Amjad and Azam—whose brother-in-law is Mahmud Sipra. After Sipra himself, the Imam Brothers are JMB's second biggest debtors estimated at £35 million (Rs 61 crore). Amjad allegedly paid a bribe of £5,000 in cash to an assistant manager of JMB, Michael Flawn. The latter was suspended after a cashier recognised the notes. Companies linked to the Imam Brothers had allegedly been borrowing sums far in excess of the value of their security. As if all this were not enough, names of several Sindhi businessmen, including Arjandas Hiranand Melwani's, have cropped up in the affair.

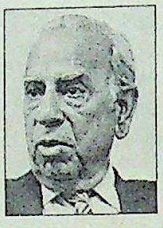
Meanwhile, in his enthusiasm to clean up this web of corruption, Brian Sedgemore himself got into trouble in Parliament and was suspended for five working days from the House of Commons after he refused to withdraw an allegation against the Chancellor of the Exchequer Nigel Lawson who, he said, was "perverting the course of justice" in the JMB affair. The suspension hardly seemed to have had a chastening effect on him. Last fortnight he unearthed a new scandal involving the Lloyd's insurance market in which, mercifully, no Asian businessmen have been implicated so far. But thanks to Sedgemore, the reputation of Asian businessmen has taken a severe denting in England. Some people believe that he may have gone too far and are waiting for him to fall flat on his face, but until then a large number of people will continue to believe that the City of London is stuffed with men who collect old masters, young mistresses and bad debts.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN

BUSINESSSPEAK

PRAKASH TANDON

Consumer Consciousness



Prakash Tandon has become something of a management pundit. He was still working his way to the top of the ladder in Hindustan Lever (then, as now the country's largest consumer product company), the Government launched planned development with heavy industry at the core of the programme, and consumer goods relegated to a minor role. Tandon was the first Indian chairman of Hindustan Lever, then chairman of the State Trading Corporation and Punjab National Bank, and finally the head of the National Council of Applied Economic Research which made him a respected voice in matters economic. Now, when the Government is placing consumer goods nearer the centre of its industrialisation programme, it has turned to Tandon, 74, to head an advisory group set up last month to provide a long-term perspective for the development of India's consumer industry. Tandon spoke to Senior Editor T.N. NINAN on his new task:

SOME two decades ago, we in Hindustan Lever started a business in preserved foods, and introduced Hima dehydrated peas after arranging with farmers to grow the variety of peas that we wanted. The Government then decided that this was a luxury and slapped a heavy duty on such peas: so our packaging cost was more than the cost of the peas themselves. The product failed.

That was the time when the Government placed overriding emphasis on heavy industry. This did increase our savings rate and we developed a heavy industry base. But the fact is that today there is no demand for steel even though we are producing only 8 million tonnes. And a good part of the demand is for steel to be used in refrigerators, cars and other 'luxury' products, not for bridges and things of that sort.

So India ought to enter a new phase of economic policy. So far, the Government has taxed most consumer goods as luxuries. At the same time, the annual smuggling of goods into India is estimated at between Rs 5,000 crore and Rs 6,000 crore: It is ridiculous that you can make a quick trip to Singapore and bring goods back home and still find it cheaper than buying a domestic product. You can pick up a seven cubic foot double-door refrigerator from any store in Paris for the equivalent of Rs 4,500 but in India such a product costs Rs 11,000.

In the US during the inter-war years, the economy grew not because of high savings but because of hire purchase. We in India should do the same. We simply have to develop and feed the markets for wage goods, whether it is clothes, consumer durables or housing. The average worker in Hindustan Steel got Rs 24,000 last year, and in the multinationals in Bombay, the average wage is Rs 40,000. When we have a serious housing shortage, why can't we keep back a part of the wages and give the worker a house.

At the same time we have to develop stimulants for raising quality and reducing prices. You will notice that no one mentions the price in advertisements. We have to introduce legislation for this, we have to encourage competetion, help develop consumer protection societies, and ask the public sector to become the pace-setter in becoming more consumer conscious.

There is also a lot of money in rural markets. Companies like Brooke Bond and Lipton developed rural markets for packaged tea and Wimco did it for matches. But the Government partly destroyed all this: in vanaspati, for example, they introduced price control so that rural marketing became unviable and the company had to drop it. The Hima peas case also shows that the Government was not interested in developing quality products.

Things are now changing, and the Planning Commission is trying to develop a consumer revolution by promoting healthy demand. In effect, demand in the market is now forcing the pace of change.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj F eGangotri

East meets East

Fabric from Wintex.
Yarn from Japan.

Wintex®

100% polyester sarees and dress materia

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Colours you should listen to Warm, pleasing yellows. Soft, soothing greens. Deep, mystic purples. Colours you've never heard before.

At Colour-Chem we make them sing. In the widest repertoire of shades and hues in the world of pigments and dyes.

In that subtle refinement of tone called quality control.

That constant striving to excel, which is R & D.

And that intimate empathy with the audience which you know as customer service.

You'll recognize Colour-Chem colours. And they'll sing for you. Whether you're in the textile, paints, printing inks, rubber, plastics or leather industry.

Just stay tuned in to Colour-Chem. You can't go wrong.

Colour-Chem

Colour-Chem Limited

194, Churchgate Reclamation, Bombay 400 020.

CCL 1361

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

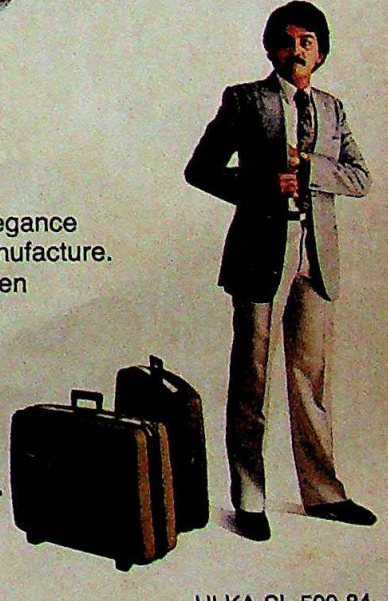
Let's not exaggerate.
Safari is not a romantic trip.
It's the no-nonsense luggage that gets around.

You've seen the airport loaders. Hurling your luggage around in fiendish delight. The railway coolies are equally enthusiastic about roughing it up.

So choose the luggage that manages to land on its feet in the worst conditions.

Safari. The sturdy luggage built to take a lot of beating. You may admire the silky elegance of its insides. But never forget the toughness hammered into it at every stage of manufacture. The pilfer-proof six lever vault lock never gives in. The buckle-down flap protects even the crease of your clothes.

Safari. It survives.



safari

The luggage that knows its business.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ULKA-SL-500-84

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Amsterdam, The Hague, Leiden, Bussum. Where do I go from here?"

"Oh! Anywhere you please. After all, it's 'Holland-on-the-House'."

Make Holland your first point of arrival or departure on a direct intercontinental flight... and you've got it made! And how!

This smashing opportunity is brought to you exclusively by the Holland Promotion Foundation. Available till 31 March 1986.

Live it up!

Your first night accomodation in a superior tourist class hotel and a continental breakfast come free.

Roundtrip transfers by KLM motor coach between Amsterdam Airport and the Central Railway Station in the city—that's free too!

Take into account the other discounts that you get!

On domestic flights.
On car rentals.
On entry fees into museums.
On antique hunting tours.
On canal cruises.
On the spicy late-late shows at the Lido!

Come to Holland with an open heart... and watch us win it over!

Contact your travel agent, or call us at:

Ahmedabad 77677, Bangalore 28703, Bombay 221013, Calcutta 441221, Cochin 39165, Delhi 343998, Goa 2298, Hyderabad 36042, Jalandhar 76088, Madras 86356, Patna 25437, Pune 61358, Kathmandu 214895 and Dhaka 250357.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The Reliable Airline KLM

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SHRIRAM FOOD & FERTILISERS

On the Firing Line

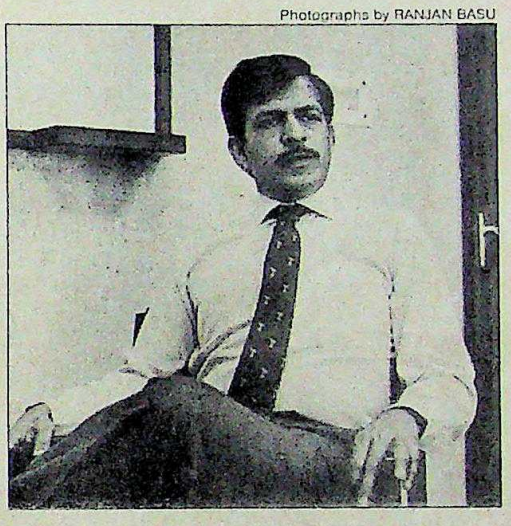
BARELY six months after he took over as Deputy Managing Director of DCM, 40-year-old Siddharth C.Shriram has been fielding questions from a hostile press, gone into a huddle with Delhi Administration officials more than once and is fighting furiously to salvage the badly beaten image of his company. Worse, he faces the unpleasant prospect of having the Delhi Administration wield its scalpel on what is probably one of the DCM group's biggest money-spinners.

What has brought Shriram on the firing line is a leakage of oleum early last month at the Delhi-based Shriram Food and Fertilisers (SFF) factory. Oleum, a highly volatile chemical, was piped to the neighbouring public sector Hindustan Insecticides Ltd (HIL) for the manufacture of DDT. The 15-minute leak from a tank at the Shriram plant resulted in vapour clouds rapidly spreading to the thickly populated neighbourhood, sending residents into a tizzy. Some 700 people had to be hospitalised for eye and respiratory irritation, though most were out the next day itself. There was however one casualty—lawyer Charanjit Singh Walia, who was at the Tiz Hazari courts some 7 km away, died the next morning in hospital. At the plant itself, three workers and two officers were affected.

The human tragedy apart, the leak has proved a disaster for the company in more ways than one. With an official committee looking into the plant's safety, unpleasant questions are being raised on that front. DCM may also face demands for compensation from victims of the disaster, a few of whom have filed claims. It is not quite clear exactly how much the damages will amount to (the courts have asked for supportive medical certificates before taking any action), but the damage could be substantial.

Shriram: bowing to the inevitable

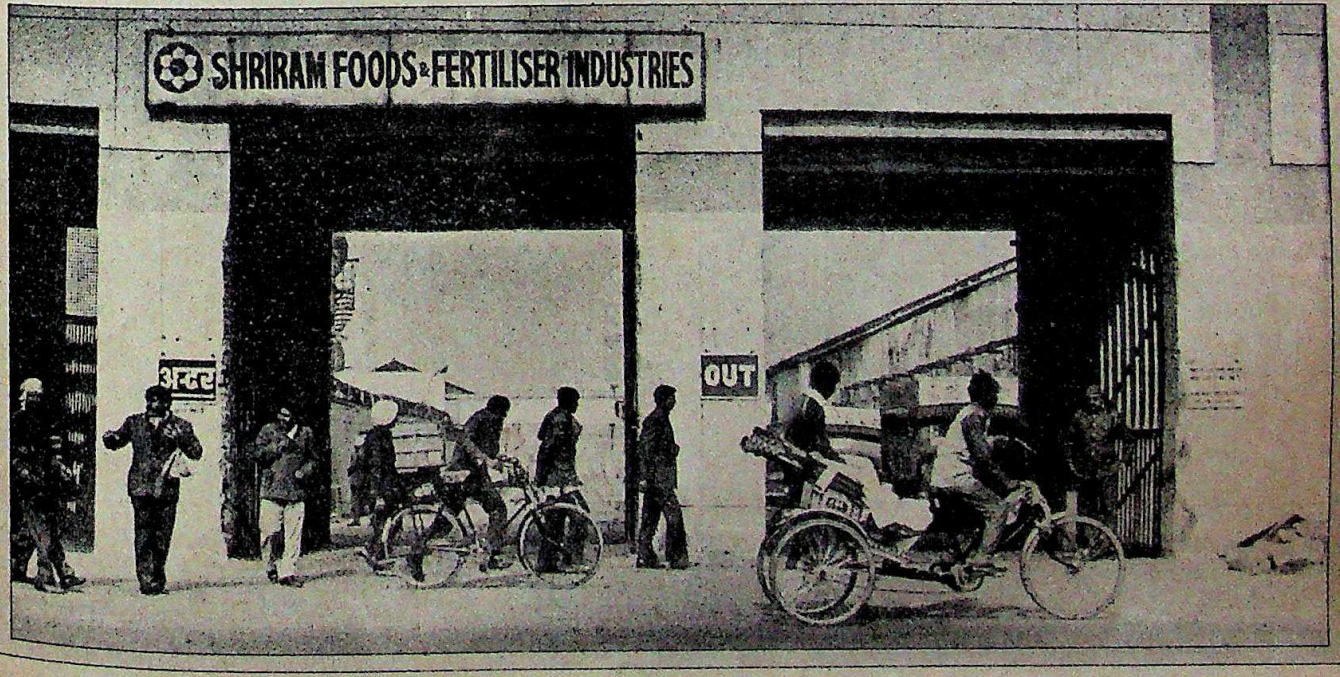
Photographs by RANJAN BASU



Of more immediate concern is the closure of the SFF factory. That means a revenue loss of Rs 50 lakh a day, plus wages for the 1,700-odd workers who are marking time, though the management may not foot the wage bill indefinitely. Last fortnight, the Delhi Administration seemed bent on closing and relocating the chlorine and sulphuric acid plants at the factory. SFF produces a range of chemicals and vanaspati, and its Rs 180-crore sales contributed almost a third of DCM's Rs 529-crore sales turnover last year. DCM itself made lower profits on an increased turnover last year, and anything that affects the company's lucrative factory in the capital will obviously be reflected in coming balance sheets.

Moreover, downing the shutters of the two units would disrupt the

The management is willing to relocate the plants, but the bill for this will run to a hefty Rs 30 crore to Rs 55 crore. The company also stresses the point that when the present factory was set up 40 years ago, the site was almost in the boondocks.



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

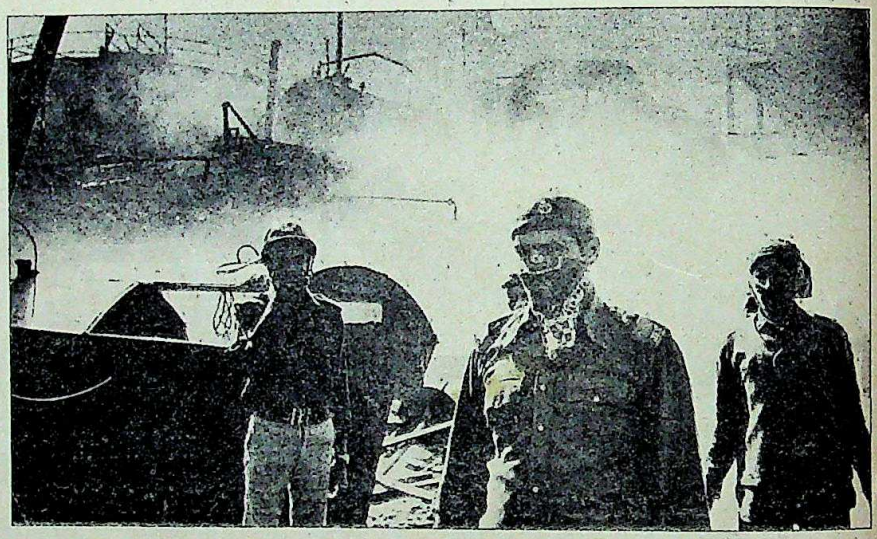
linkages in an integrated factory. Sulphuric acid is required for the manufacture of superphosphates, hydrogen for vanaspati and chlorine for stable bleaching powder. Claims Siddharth Shriram: "We are the largest stable bleaching powder manufacturer in the world. We have contracts with buyers abroad and they are screaming. We may lose this business." The factory also feeds Delhi with over 60 per cent and the country with 10 per cent of their vanaspati requirements. The market is now flooded with vanaspati, but if the factory continues to be closed for long, that could change—and buyers may switch to other brands.

Certainly, the factory's closure has had many more immediate downstream fall-outs. With supplies of oleum and chlorine cut off, the neighbouring HIL has gone the Shriram Foods way. Trucking in raw materials is more hazardous and expensive. So the DDT plant is lying idle, as are its 769 workers, and the insecticides company is losing over Rs 3 lakh a day. Warns General Manager B.N. Chatterjee: "The Delhi unit is one of the more profitable units of Hindustan Insecticides. If it is closed, HIL may suffer great losses."

The administration could serve notice on it to move to a less congested area, but the management is keeping its fingers crossed. Last year, it shelled out almost Rs 40 lakh to revamp the plant in the wake of Bhopal. That money may now go down the drain. What company officials are hoping is that the unit will be allowed to stay put if it switches to less toxic raw materials.

ALL THAT is well enough, but what was becoming increasingly clear last fortnight was that the Shriram factory management cannot escape responsibility for its present woes. Oleum is stored at the factory in three tanks: a 10-tonne process tank, a 58-tonne storage tank and another 10-tonne delivery tank. The management has various theories on what happened that fateful day, though it has not been able to test these since the accident site has been cordoned off by the Administration. But according to one top management surmise, the accident stemmed from a pin-hole leak that developed in the process tank on the morning of the accident. The staff was ordered to empty the contents of the process tank into the storage tank, which was already full. So the oleum had first to be emptied into the delivery tank, and instructions to this effect were given.

However, the staff started emptying the process tank's contents into the storage tank, which therefore began overflowing. This continued for a full 15 minutes. And it is here that the unfolding of events turns foggy. A magnetic level recorder is supposed to provide some sort of warning of an overflow, but whether this occurred and was heeded or not is not clear. In any event, the overfilling may have put excess weight on the steel structure that supports the tank. The structure collapsed, though this could also have been due to earlier corrosion (oleum is a combine of sulphuric acid and sulphur trioxide).



Oleum leak at the factory

A committee set up by the administration is expected to provide clearer answers to what went wrong, but the accident seems to have been avoidable. The structure was last inspected in February last year, and the management could perhaps have checked more frequently on whether the supporting structure was corroding. What is evident is that the management did not expect an accident at the oleum plant. Shriram admits as much.

The issue that is now up front is the safety of the plants. Environmentalist N.C. Mehta and Dharam Singh Kaushik, general secretary of the Indian National Trade Union Congress-affiliated DCM Chemical Employees Lokhit Congress Union, have gone to the Supreme Court on precisely this matter. Paradoxically enough, a committee set up by the court gave the company a clean chit, although Mehta very vociferously condemned the factory's safety measures. But Shriram insists "our attitude to safety has been very positive".

The Delhi administration has now veered around to the view that though the chlorine and sulphuric acid operations will have to move because they pose a hazard to the surrounding community, the vanaspati unit can continue — if it substitutes an electrolysis process to manufacture hydrogen for the chlorine process now used. In fact, some in the company had favoured moving out the chlorine unit because it was too near the capital, but this was disfavoured by others who maintained that investing substantial funds to relocate and create the same production capacity made no economic sense.

The management now seems to have bowed to the inevitable. It has publicly stated that it is willing to relocate these plants (though not the profitable vanaspati unit), even though they have been written off. But the bill for this will run to a hefty Rs 30 crore to Rs 55 crore. Who will fork out the cash? DCM officials have repeatedly stressed the point that when the present factory was set up around 40 years ago, the site was almost in the boondocks. What happens if 10 years after shifting, the management is asked to relocate again because residences and offices have sprung up around it? Such questions are relevant, and there are no ready answers to them. But in the tangled talks that were on, what was becoming increasingly clear was that labour does not want the factory to shift because over 800 workers may lose jobs, while the Delhi Administration does. The final solution may come from the Supreme Court, but which way the court would jump was anybody's guess.

—VIDHU OHRI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Charms is the spirit of freedom.
Charms is the way you are.

A great cigarette
Now even better.

Charms has always been a great cigarette.

And now it's even better.

There's the blend for a sta
The same superior blend of fi
Virginia tobaccos as the one t exported.

A cellophane wrapper to l it fresher, longer.

An acetate filter like all leading international brands.

And now it's also availabl
the smart new cardboard cart

Charms Virginia Kings.
It's got your kind of taste.
Your kind of flavour.
And your kind of style.

STATUTORY WARNING: CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH.

ection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You've never seen tiles like these before.

They'll make the bathroom your favourite room in the home.

And they'll certainly make it a lot different from the hundreds of bathrooms in your neighbourhood.

Textured tiles instead of smooth. Matt-finish instead of glossy.

A range of screen-printed patterns and designs.

Horizontal tiles instead of traditional square ones; you can now create attractive, original patterns even with simple self-colours.

And the best part is, these special tiles won't make a hole in your pocket. In fact, they cost hardly anything more than regular tiles.

Johnson's designer tiles. Another first from the leaders in bathroom decor.

For further information write to:
H & R Johnson (India) Ltd.
Kakad Chambers, Dr. Annie Besant Road,
Worli, Bombay-400 018.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Kakad Kanan Collection, Haridwar.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ever since the new designer tiles came in, Mr.Gangopadhyay and his brother-in-law both want to use the bathroom first.

JOHNSON
DESIGNER TILES

What the well-dressed bathroom is wearing.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SINGAPORE GIRL, YOU PUT A SMILE ON THE FACE OF THE EARTH.

A great way to fly
SINGAPORE AIRLINES

1S85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BLADE INDUSTRY

Sharp Conflict

COURTROOM wrangles, cut-throat fights for markets and sharp practices: the blade industry has seen them all. So the newest entrant to the controversy-rocked industry is leaving nothing to chance. It has mounted an unprecedented security drive that would do a firm of bullion dealers proud. Imported machinery was guarded round the clock when it landed at Bombay and hauled away to the plant site in Rajasthan by three convoys of heavily guarded trucks. The company hired an investigative agency to vet the backgrounds of job applicants at all levels—the chief executive officer personally interviewed candidates for shop-floor jobs—and kept a fake marketing plan within easy reach of most at its New Delhi office (the real 150-page document was tucked away in a safe).

These are an astonishing set of precautions, but not the only ones by far. The firm booked newspaper advertisements for its public share issue in the name of its advertising agency, handing in the ad copy to the newspapers minutes before the deadline. "I've been thinking of sweeping the office for hidden electronic devices," adds Michael Braybrook, chief executive officer of Indian Shaving Products (ISP).

ISP is the joint venture set up by the Calcutta-based Poddars and Gillette of the United States. The company is gearing up to launch stainless steel razor blades in the Indian market this March under the 7 'O Clock label in conjunction with an Indian name. That has already triggered off a storm in the industry, and company Chairman Saroj Kumar Poddar says :"It's not a normal business situation. We are assuming the worst."

They certainly are. For even before ISP's blades hit the market, the fur has been flying in and out of court. ISP crossed swords last fortnight with some 25 individuals before the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices (MRTP) Commission on an unfair trade practice charge. The case is still pending, but it climaxes a series of earlier legal battles that ISP and Gillette have been furiously fighting. Gillette put blade industry heavyweight Harbans Lal Malhotra (HLM) in the dock on patent infringement charges in the Delhi High Court (the case has been resolved) after the latter applied for a compulsory licence to manufacture the US firm's products. Gillette also faces a challenge from the Bombay-based Everkeen Blade Company which has applied to the registrar of trade marks to strike off the Gillette brand name from the register, arguing that it has not been used in the country for 20 years. ISP staved off another challenge from a small Wiltech India shareholder on its brand name (the shareholder has since appealed to the Supreme Court) and faces a similar legal joust this month with a consumer society in the capital.

Braybrook and Poddar: on guard

The joint venture set up by Poddars and Gillette of the United States is gearing up to launch stainless steel razor blades in the market and this has triggered off a storm in the industry.

ISP and Gillette officials see in all this an orchestrated pattern. The Government took over five years to sanction their project, and a Gillette official blamed the Malhotra's for the delay.

With a market share of over 70 per cent, the Malhotras have reigned supreme for years, and now rank as the second largest blade manufacturer in the world (HLM produces some 1,600 million blades a year). Rivals like Wiltech India—a joint sector firm promoted by Britain's Wilkinson Sword and an R.P. Goenka company—have so far not been able to cut substantially into HLM's market share. But the Poddar-Gillette venture could be another matter altogether. Gillette is numero uno in the world and the 7 'O Clock label is well known in the subcontinent.

HLM officials, however, tell it differently. As they see it, HLM had made a small headway in foreign markets by exporting blades to some 55 nations. Says a company spokesman: "This was not to Gillette's taste. So Gillette wanted to gain entry into the Indian market." The Malhotra's have also hotly contested in legal proceedings the charge of having infringed Gillette's patents, and say that the Poddars and Gillette have only themselves to blame for project delays. The US firm had sought a financial stake in proposed Indian joint ventures in the late '60s when the Government disfavoured this. Moreover, ISP sought to import second hand machinery, and so the Government had stalled its import. ISP's desire to use a foreign brand name complicated matters further. The finance ministry has not cleared ISP's brand name and Gillette has therefore not shelled out its 24 per cent contribution to the Rs 5-crore project. Finally, it is argued, the suggestion that HLM is wary of competition does not hold water—the Malhotra's did not stand in the way of a Karnataka Government undertaking joining hands with Wilkinson, with which they had an agreement.

It is true that the Government turned down ISP's foreign collaboration application on numerous grounds, including the foreign brand one. But there is some evidence that a hybrid brand name has received full official sanction. Also, the ISP share prospectus clearly states that Gillette has sunk money in the venture. Some of the other arguments may not stand up to scrutiny either. In any event, Saroj Poddar is quick to rebut the second hand machinery charge. Says Poddar: "Only some of the castings are old. Before the machinery was shipped we had to produce a certificate that it was not second hand. Indeed, the Indian customs said that the castings were new."

What emerges from this point counterpoint is that the battling could turn cut-throat in the months ahead, even though Gillette's patent rights are due to expire in a few months. It remains to be seen which of the two protagonists in the latest blade brouhaha has the final edge.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

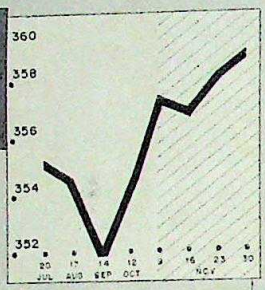
THINGS are quiet on the price front. Though wholesale prices rose marginally, the consumer price index continued to drop. A rise in money supply—largely due to procurement credit—was balanced by a 4 percentage point fall in commercial bank credit. The foreign trade situation is alarming with imports growing and exports plummeting. Share price growth has steadied and gold prices have dropped.

All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trends are computed on the basis of the last six months data to which regressions are fitted.

Wholesale Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
1.27%p.a.

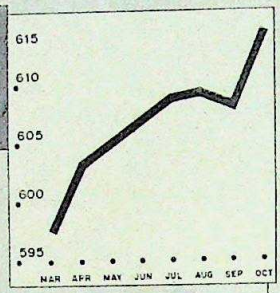


Wholesale prices, after having fallen to a zero rate of growth, increased marginally between August and November.

Consumer Price Index

1960 = 100

Current Trend
2.85%p.a.

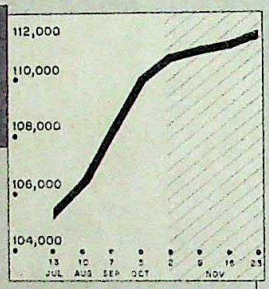


Consumer price growth fell from 4.3% in August to 2.9% in October. But the 1% growth between September and October was above the trend.

Money Supply (M3)

Rs Crore

Current Trend
17.37%p.a.

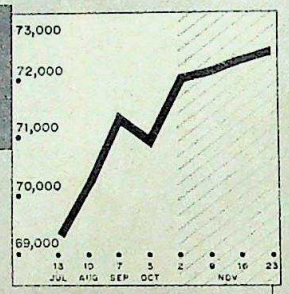


Money supply has been rising steadily—from 16.2% in October to over 17% now, largely due to the growth in RBI credit to the Government.

Commercial Bank Credit

Rs Crore

Current Trend
13.06%p.a.

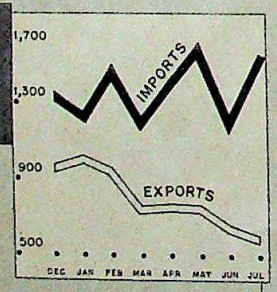


In contrast to M3, bank credit has been severely tightened, its growth rate having fallen by more than 4% between September and November.

Foreign Trade

Rs Crore

Current Trend
12.7%p.a.
IMPORTS
7.61%p.m.
EXPORTS

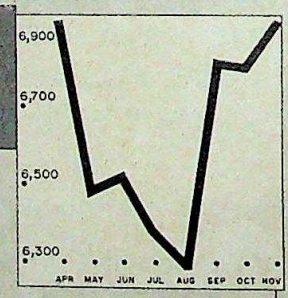


While imports rise at almost 13% a year, exports have been dropping alarmingly at 7.6% per month. The July trade gap was Rs 953 crore.

Foreign Exchange Reserves

Rs Crores

Current Trend
19.1%p.a.

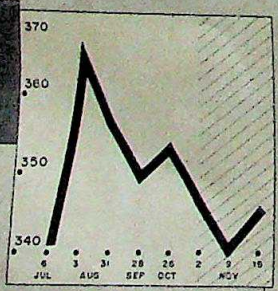


The rise in foreign exchange reserves is due to capital flows. With the trade gap increasing, capital flows alone cannot help.

Share Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
28.79%p.a.

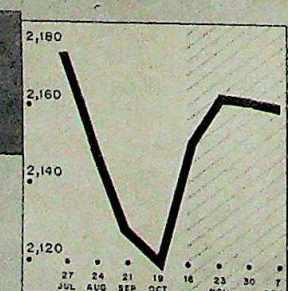


By mid-November, the massive bullishness subsided and prices rose by 0.55% a week—an expected growth rate in a buoyant market.

Closing Gold Prices

Rs per 100 gms.

Current Trend
-1.2%p.a.



In spite of the festival season, gold prices have continued to drop. Between end-July and early December prices fell by 0.6%.

WHOLESALE PRICES

Items with maximum growth in November 1985

	%Growth
Diary Products	15.41
Sugarcane	15.24
Tapioca	13.05
Mustard Oilcake	9.73
Wheat	8.39
Bananas	7.9
Tea	7.08
Onions	6.68
Vanaspati	6.22
Groundnut Oil	6.0
Solvent Extracted Oil	5.88
Cashewnuts	5.62
Art Silk and Artificial Yarn	5.45
Ground Oilcake	5.31
Eggs	5.13
Atta	5.0
Barley	4.34
Groundnut Seeds	3.98
Urad	3.82
Betel Nuts	3.31
Gingelly Seed	3.26
Gingelly Oil	2.46
Cars	2.41
Mustard Oil	2.08
Khandsari	1.96
Logs Timber Bamboo	1.42
Meat	1.42
Ghee	1.36
Gur	1.34
Turmeric	1.25
Coal	1.11
Synthetic Fibres	1.1
Rubber	1.08
Cycles	1.07
Polythene Moulding Powder	1.05
Rape and Mustard Seed	1.05
Board	1.02
Machine Tools	0.96
Milk	0.90
Cigarettes	0.89
Silk and Artificial Silk Fabrics	0.84
Furnace Oil	0.84
Jute Textiles	0.82
SKELP	0.82
PVC Compounds	0.79
Soda Ash	0.79
Steel Structurals	0.76
Sugar	0.76
Limestone	0.76
Diesel Oil	0.74

Of the 139 series considered, 88 of them with a total weight of 66.465 had a positive growth & 50 of them with a total weight off 19.82 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1985	1984
Coal
Thousand Tonnes, November	130.6	122.0
Saleable Steel
Thousand tonnes, November	665.9	586.0
Cement
Thousand tonnes, November	2624	2573
Crude Petroleum
Thousand tonnes, November	2487	2343
Call Money Rate
Percent, November	10.0	10.0

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HTL's Silver Jubilee year gift to the nation — teleprinters go electronic Hindustan Teleprinters are happy to announce that they are now manufacturing electronic teleprinters in collaboration with world renowned Sagem of France.

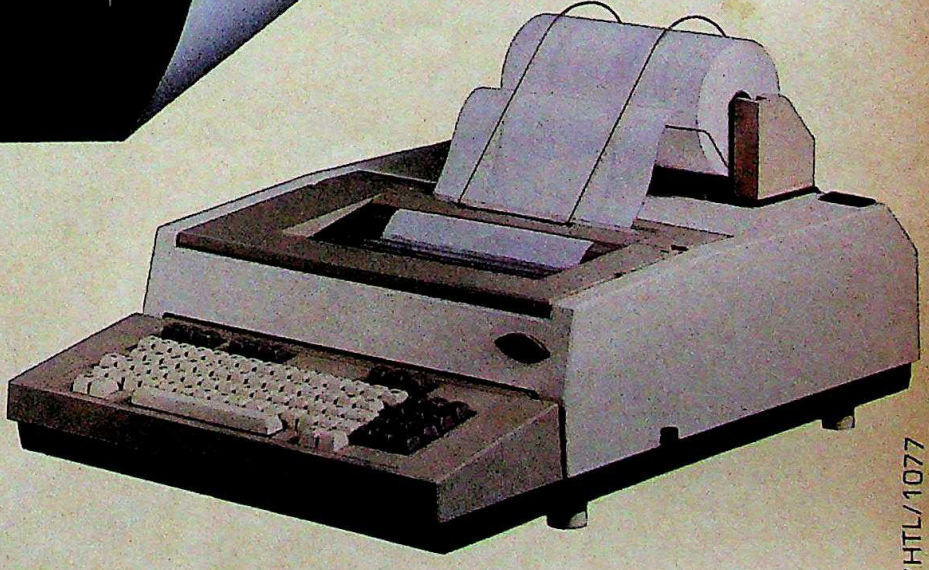
Ownership of teleprinters is now permitted by the government — which means you can own your own electronic teleprinter today.



hindustan teleprinters ltd.
(A Government of India Undertaking under the Ministry of Communications).
Registered Office & Factory:
G.S.T. Road, Guindy,
Madras-600 032.
Telephone: 432771 (8 lines)
Telex: 477 HTL.

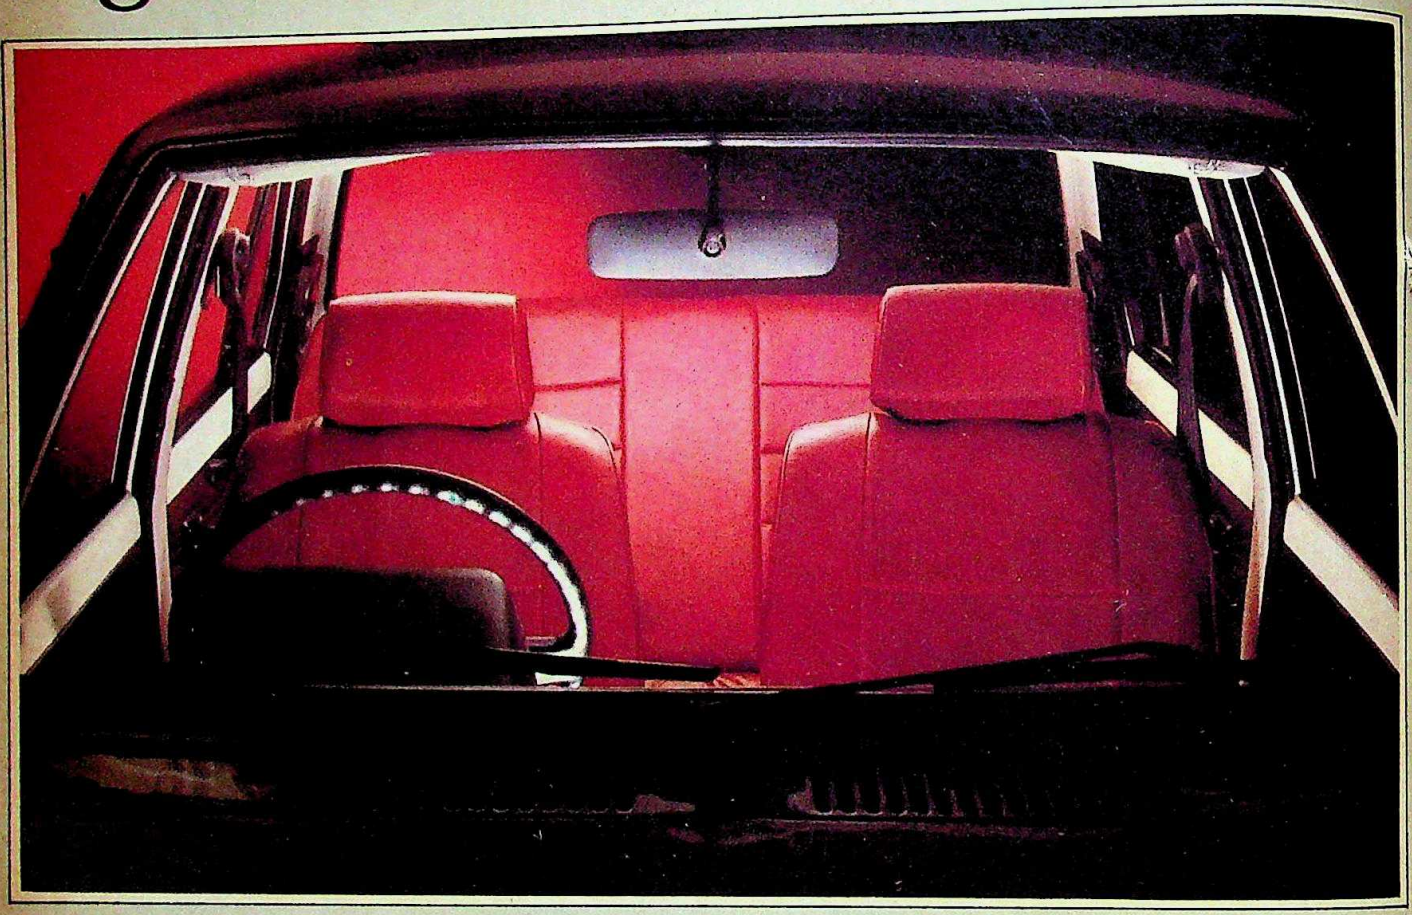
New electronic teleprinter TX 30

MAC/HTL/1077

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Elegance takes the driver's seat!



Bilbo. Known by the company it keeps

Car seats that are designed and crafted to perfection deserve nothing less than superior quality covering material. Bilbo.

Cool and comfortable, soft and supple, Bilbo can be stitched like fabric with pleats, ridges and folds. Just wipe with a damp cloth and Bilbo keeps its subtle colours, its stylish elegance for years.

Bilbo. The touch of distinction fine cars deserve.

Bilbo

A rich, rare elegance to cover the finest car seats

Manufactured by:

BHOR

The Bhor Industries Limited 392, Veer Savarkar Marg, Bombay 400 025 Phone: 4222241

Branch Offices: Station Road, P.O. Maneja, Baroda 390 013. Phone: 4691/2 □ 4/24A, Asaf Ali Road, New Delhi 110 002. Phone: 269813/271563 □ 10A, Ho Chi Minh Sarani, Calcutta 700 071. Phone: 449194/433413 □ Ralli Building, 190 Anna Salai, Madras 600 006. Phone: 811274.

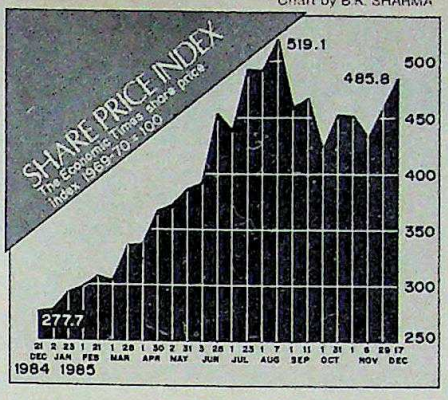
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Spirits Soar

Chart by B.K. SHARMA



THERE hasn't been a year like 1985 for the stock-markets. In some cases, share prices rose more during this last one year than they did during the whole of the previous decade, and The Economic Times share index shot up from 277.7 at the end of last year to 487.6 last fortnight. New capital issues met with unrestrained success as the number of investors soared. Even dud shares seemed on occasion to take on the hue of a blue chip. And it was clear that investments in corporate capital during 1985 had been more rewarding than in real estate, and gold or silver: once again an unprecedented development.

There is little doubt that this boom was fuelled by the advent of Rajiv Gandhi and his new policies. Though the market had initially received the new government without great ado, the Union budget changed all that and market optimism suddenly shot up. This was despite the fact that the capital gains tax still applied to share transactions, and there were no tax concessions that applied specifically to the investing community. These factors were overlooked in the general optimism.

The budget was followed by a series of other decisions that buoyed the market further: the concessions to the cotton textile industry, the reduced taxes on polyester, customs duty concessions for automobiles, a fresh push for the electronics industry, the raising of administered prices for steel and cement and the reduction of the levy quota for both the cement and sugar industries.The delicensing of some areas of pharmaceuticals, the broadbanding of industrial licences in more and yet more areas and the raising of the qualifying floor for the MRTP Act from Rs 20 crore in assets to Rs 100 crore have also contributed to the boom in the market. So if the stock-market hasn't been through a year like this one, neither has the economy seen such bursts of activity when the Government came out with one favourable announcement after another.

The only damper was provided by the efforts of the market authorities and financial institutions in August and September to try and rein in the runaway optimism. But soon both gave up this attempt and quickly shifted to trying to cheer up the market and lend a hand to the bulls. The financial institutions, initially sellers, turned buyers, and the market authorities relaxed the trading margins and shifted scrips from the cash trading list to the forward trading list after initially taking some steps in the reverse direction. There was some nervousness over the contents of the long-term fiscal policy, the raids on leading companies and the arrests of well-known businessmen. But for all that, 1985 will go down in the books as the year of the stock-market.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1985 HIGH	LOW	CLOSE 17.12.86	Change on Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	59.00	29.00	40.50	1.50 –
Associated Cement	610.00	385.00	401.00	3.00 –
Atlas Copco	70.00	37.00	64.50	6.50 +
Associated Bearings	785.00	425.00	777.50	102.50 +
Bajaj Auto	2075.00	855.00	1870.00	50.00 +
Baroda Rayon	492.50	281.00	420.00	20.00 –
Bata India	88.10	48.00	70.00	4.50 +
Bayer	480.00	305.00	440.00	75.00 +
Bharat Forge	95.00	35.50	77.00	8.00 –
Birla Jute	104.50	51.70	96.50	0.25 +
Blow Plast	122.00	36.50	110.00	2.00 +
Blue Star	89.00	33.00	88.00	3.00 +
Bombay Dyeing	156.00	66.00	84.00	3.00 –
Brooke Bond	83.00	47.50	61.50	0.50 +
Ceat Tyres	290.00	180.00	245.00	5.00 –
Century Spinning	1530.00	810.00	1465.00	70.00 +
Chloride India	91.00	56.90	84.25	5.25 +
Citurgia	85.00	32.25	54.00	6.00 +
Colgate	318.00	147.00	170.00	nil
Cyanamid	90.00	33.00	68.00	2.00 –
DCM	74.00	18.00	50.00	7.50 –
Dunlop	48.75	22.30	43.00	nil
Elecon Engg.	108.00	54.00	82.00	2.00 –
Escorts	102.00	49.87	80.00	5.50 –
Food Specialities	215.00	86.00	182.50	7.50 +
Garware Nylon	63.00	24.50	59.00	3.00 +
Glaxo	79.00	24.00	64.00	4.00 +
G.E. Shipping	36.50	14.25	25.00	1.75 +
Gujarat St Fertilisers	857.50	537.00	855.00	22.50 +
Gwalior Rayon	88.00	53.75	85.00	10.00 +
Hindustan Lever	125.00	51.25	117.00	7.00 +
Hindustan Motors	123.25	37.50	121.00	9.25 +
Indian Dyestuff	390.00	267.50	330.00	2.50 +
Indian Explosives	73.50	33.00	70.25	4.00 +
Indian Hotels	135.00	76.00	115.00	7.00 +
Indian Organic	141.00	50.50	88.00	nil
Indian Rayon	141.00	66.00	133.50	0.50 +
Indrol	265.00	90.50	247.50	7.50 +
Ingersoll-Rand	365.00	162.00	330.00	5.00 +
ITC	65.50	29.00	47.00	1.00 +
J K Synthetics	118.00	52.75	105.50	6.50 +
Kinetic Engineering	380.00	128.00	260.00	10.00 +
Kirloskar Cummins	780.00	502.50	650.00	27.50 –
Lakme	200.00	74.00	156.25	2.50 –
Larsen & Toubro	193.00	72.00	188.00	13.00 +
Lipton	58.50	26.50	42.00	1.00 +
Lohia Machines	85.00	42.00	64.00	4.00 –
Mahindra & Mahindra	102.00	48.00	73.00	1.00 +
Motor Industries	875.00	321.25	812.50	70.00 +
National Organic	590.00	240.00	585.00	95.00 +
Nirlon	73.00	37.75	63.00	1.00 +
Orkay Silk Mills	207.00	65.00	125.00	2.00 +
Peico Electronics	99.00	38.40	82.00	4.00 +
Premier Auto	645.00	322.00	557.50	10.00 +
Ranbaxy	127.50	49.00	104.00	10.00 +
Raymond	120.00	59.00	86.00	10.00 +
Reliance Industries	252.00	120.00	222.00	0.50 +
Sandoz	82.00	31.00	62.00	6.00 +
Shriram Fibres	81.00	34.00	68.50	2.00 –
SPIC	137.00	43.50	120.50	4.00 +
Tata Steel	1237.50	381.00	1195.00	21.25 +
Telco	1030.00	409.00	797.50	20.00 –
Vulcan Laval	125.00	64.00	83.75	nil
Zenith Steel	75.00	28.00	73.00	5.00 +
20th Century Leasing	84.00	31.50	60.00	0.50 +
Straw Products	68.00	47.00	56.00	5.00 +

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	8.3788	8.2917
Austria	Schilling	100	69.6063	68.8829
Bahrain	Dinar	1	31.4960	31.4732
Bangladesh	Taka	100	39.8971	39.7032
Canada	Dollar	1	8.7757	8.6982
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.3408	1.3288
Egypt	Pound	1	14.3092	14.2917
France	Franc	1	1.5923	1.5588
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.5724	1.5595
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	1.0537	1.0232
Iran	Rial	100	13.8632	13.8010
Italy	Lira	100	0.7332	0.7130
Japan	Yen	100	6.1312	5.9772
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7200	0.7173
Kuwait	Dinar	1	39.9337	38.9910
Malaysia	Dollar	1	5.0574	5.0134
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.8190	0.8123
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.5729	0.5720
Netherlands	Guilder	1	4.3289	4.2919
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7517	0.7409
Singapore	Dollar	1	5.7984	5.7463
Spain	Peseta	1	0.0793	0.0707
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4390	0.4287
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.5932	1.5787
Switzerland	Franc	1	5.8032	5.7501
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.7220	0.7001
Thailand	Baht	100	44.9532	42.9010
UK	Pound	1	17.4155	17.2965
USA	Dollar	1	12.2700	12.1500
UAE	Dirham	1	3.2110	3.1932
USSR	Rouble	1	14.9999	14.6332
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	4.9431	4.8239

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 20.12.85.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LONDON SCHOOL OF ECONOMICS

Low Key Leadership

TUCKED AWAY in the dreary backstreets of Aldwych in central London—best known for its cluster of theatres, India House, BBC's Bush House and Lincoln's Inn—is a charmless pile of buildings which houses one of Britain's liveliest and most remarkable institutions: The London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE). In its 90 years, the LSE's glittering alumni and teachers have represented every nationality, political creed and background. The LSE's reputation is sometimes considered higher than even Oxford or Cambridge.

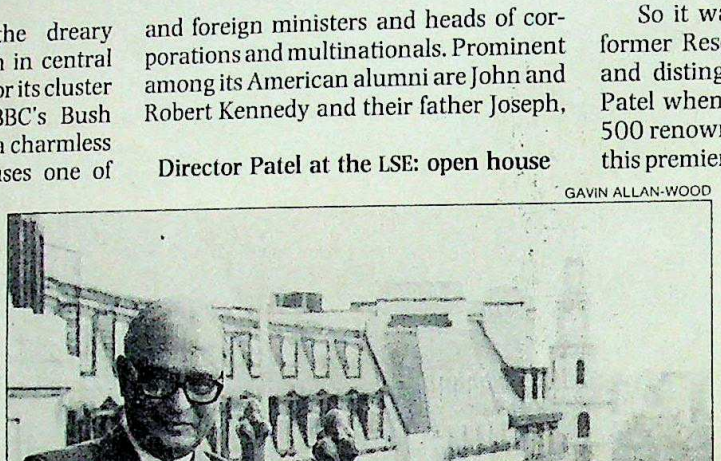
Its brilliant alumni spread world-wide include over 30 members each in the current House of Lords and House of Commons, countless finance ministers and foreign ministers and heads of corporations and multinationals. Prominent among its American alumni are John and Robert Kennedy and their father Joseph, Patrick Moynihan, David Rockefeller and those in India are V.K. Krishna Menon, B.K. Nehru, K.R. Narayanan and Jyoti Basu. The school's reputation for volatile student agitations kept pace with its acquisition of illustrious names to its staff.

So it was no mean achievement for former Reserve Bank of India governor and distinguished civil servant Dr I.G. Patel when he was chosen from among 500 renowned names a year ago to head this premier institution—by no means an enviable task. As the high-profile Ralf G. Dahrendorf, a political activist who retired as director in 1984, had once said with some mystification: "I shall forever love the LSE. I shall forever fail to understand the intricacies of its student politics."

In his one year as LSE Director, Patel has already brought about a change in style compared to his flamboyant predecessor. Low-key, diligent and persuasive, Patel's principal concerns have revolved around his students' problems such

Director Patel at the LSE: open house

GAVIN ALLAN-WOOD



I.G. PATEL

"I don't believe in extremes"

INDRAPRASAD Gordhanbai Patel, 61, is a warm, engaging individual with an easy, friendly smile. Born in Sunav, Gujarat, Patel studied Economics at Baroda College, University of Bombay and at Cambridge. It was while studying at Cambridge that he was first introduced to the LSE where he attended the lectures of many respected economists. He was an Adam Smith Prizeman and was rated as one of Cambridge's "most brilliant students". After spending 1947-48 at Harvard University Graduate School, he returned to Cambridge for his Ph.D. and came back to India in 1949. He soon joined the developing department of the IMF in Washington. Later he became a deputy economic advisor at the Ministry of Finance before taking over as alternative executive director for India on the IMF board. In the '60s he was chief economic advisor and a member of numerous committees both national and international. From 1977 to 1982, he was governor of the Reserve Bank of India and from 1982 to 1984, director of the Indian Institute of Management at Ahmedabad. In an interview to INDIA TODAY, Patel spoke about the problems facing LSE, his own style as its director, and the economic strategies of India and the developing world. Extracts:

Q. How would you categorise the essential differences between Indian academic life and at the London School of Economics?

A. I would refrain from making any comparisons with Indian universities since my own experience has been with the IIM at Ahmedabad. And it is a fine institution whose style of functioning is almost similar to the LSE. The most remarkable thing here is that it is a form of governing that is both participatory and decisive. Everyone is involved in the decision-making process. But at the end of the day, you have to make certain decisions yourself which may not always be popular.

Q. The LSE always seems to have enjoyed a role in British society of a provocative outsider. And it has exercised some marginal influence. As a director, would you encourage the institution to take a participatory role in public policy?

A. You don't really have to encourage. The interest always exists. For instance we have a centre for labour economics and researchers have been debating the problems of unemployment. We have a new research centre, Japanese-financed, to look into the welfare state. Of course, tomorrow I could always suggest—look here, we have got these serious problems concerning the inner cities: we have a department of social administration, a department of psychology, a department of economics, why don't we all sit together and look into it? This kind of thing is going on all the time. But mind you, all of these are group or individual endeavours and under no circumstances will they be considered completely from an " LSE stand-point".

Q. Your problem area seems to be excessively high fees for overseas students. Out of 4,000 students, they constitute 43 per cent. Has there been a fall in admissions from India for instance?

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

as the prohibitive fees for foreign students, reorganising the school's finances to a more solid ground, maintaining the LSE's intellectual reputation and keeping up its international outlook when foreign students make up nearly 43 per cent of its student body. Matters haven't been easy for Patel, as he confessed in a wide-ranging interview with INDIA TODAY (see box) but he says he is a firm believer in the LSE's "sense of mission".

Patel's endeavour is to build an open and honest system and wants to be more "accessible" to his students. Describing himself as an "old fashioned socialist" who advocates "compassion rather than class war", Patel has maintained that the LSE's left-wing reputation is undeserved. While the student body is left of centre, the majority of its professors are apolitical or conservative—von Hayek, for instance, is considered to be Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's economic guru.

However, the students differ from him in many respects. Even as Patel insists that he would like to be more "open" and "accessible" to students, they complain that they hardly get to hear or see their new director. Indian students and members of LSE's India Society say they were initially "excited" about an Indian getting one of UK's most high-profile jobs. But to their increasing dismay they have found the new director far too "placid" and "low-key". For many, the director's status has reverted to that of a "nominal head". It is obvious that the students like to have a director who is charismatic, incisive and maybe even insurrectional—someone who can keep LSE in the forefront and speak out for more funds, and other grievances of the academic community.

SPEAKING to INDIA TODAY, several students repeatedly tended to compare Patel with his pugnacious and often provocative predecessor. "It is such a total contrast between the two personalities," remarks one. "Perhaps it suits the Tory-dominated Court of Governors to have someone so non-controversial and low-key," says another.

The students are agreed on one thing though: that Patel's credentials for the job are "impeccable". But this still doesn't help his low-key image. As one Indian student sums it up rather resignedly: "We know that he is very learned. And that he is very humble. But as far as we are concerned, we wonder if all this humility is such a good thing."

However, Elwyn Watkins, general secretary of the LSE's student union, who has taken a year's sabbatical to concentrate on his union's chores, feels that Patel's influence is not to be underestimated and the student community may have judged the new director's potential without serious thought. "It is a lot like the Queen's influence in this country," he says. Watkins emphasises that a placid and respectful director like Patel could even influence the school's academic policy. Watkins adds musingly: "Perhaps in five years' time, he may leave his mark."

Watkins is not wrong in his assessment. Holding one of the top jobs in international academia, Patel is one of the most sought-after personalities in Britain. Not surprising, considering that he is presiding over the fortunes of an institution once described as the "sacred college of social democracy" or the "breeding ground of hot-house socialism". Many academics, some of them non-LSE, think "I.G" with his vast experience as an international economic diplomat, is doing a "great job". His predecessor Dahrendorf was once described as the most influential German in Britain since Prince Albert. By the same token, Patel is one of the most influential Indians in the United Kingdom.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN

A. Well, yes, this indeed is a major problem. What we are trying to do is to help with more scholarships. As for the Indian students, I think there may be about 35-odd students but some of them may be British citizens or of Indian origin. Talented students do need more support.

Q. As someone who has been involved with India's financial policies for many years, how do you view all the catch-phrases of the Rajiv Gandhi Government...liberalisation of controls, less state intervention, greater role for the private sector, more modern technology...?

A. Let me say that I have felt for some time that a change in this direction is absolutely necessary. Having said that, let me also state that I am not a believer in extremes—either controls or no controls whatsoever. So when you are progressing towards a freer system, you have to tread carefully. My first priority would be to remove as much of industrial licensing as possible. That is not intended except to give each Indian industrialist a turf of his own. It is a kind of internal protection of one against the other which has absolutely no justification. So I would be much stronger in the removal of industrial licences and all this talk of concentration has no great meaning.

"When progressing towards a freer system, my first priority would be to remove as much of industrial licensing as possible."

Q. How about import licensing?

A. I won't be all that open on import licensing. For instance one should be still careful in the import of luxury items and non-essential imports. But where you want competition you should certainly do so. Indian industry has been protected long enough and greater competition will only do it good. But in the name of that, import of luxury goods for the consumption of a few rich people should not be admitted. And in fact production of these items should not be encouraged even at home. But all right, if you have already done so, then the rich can exploit the rich and I am not worried about that. There is a tendency to do one thing instead of another.

Q. How about international capital investment?

A. I have nothing very much against direct investment. But I don't think very much is going to come of it. But on technological agreements, exchange of technology and purchase of technology, we should certainly not advocate loosening of our financial discipline.

Q. Is government intervention still much of a bugbear?

A. It still is. But you should realise there is a lot of intervention at the state level. We always talk of what the Central Government does. There is not enough analysis of the problems at the state level.

Q. Are you saying that there is not much planning at the state level?

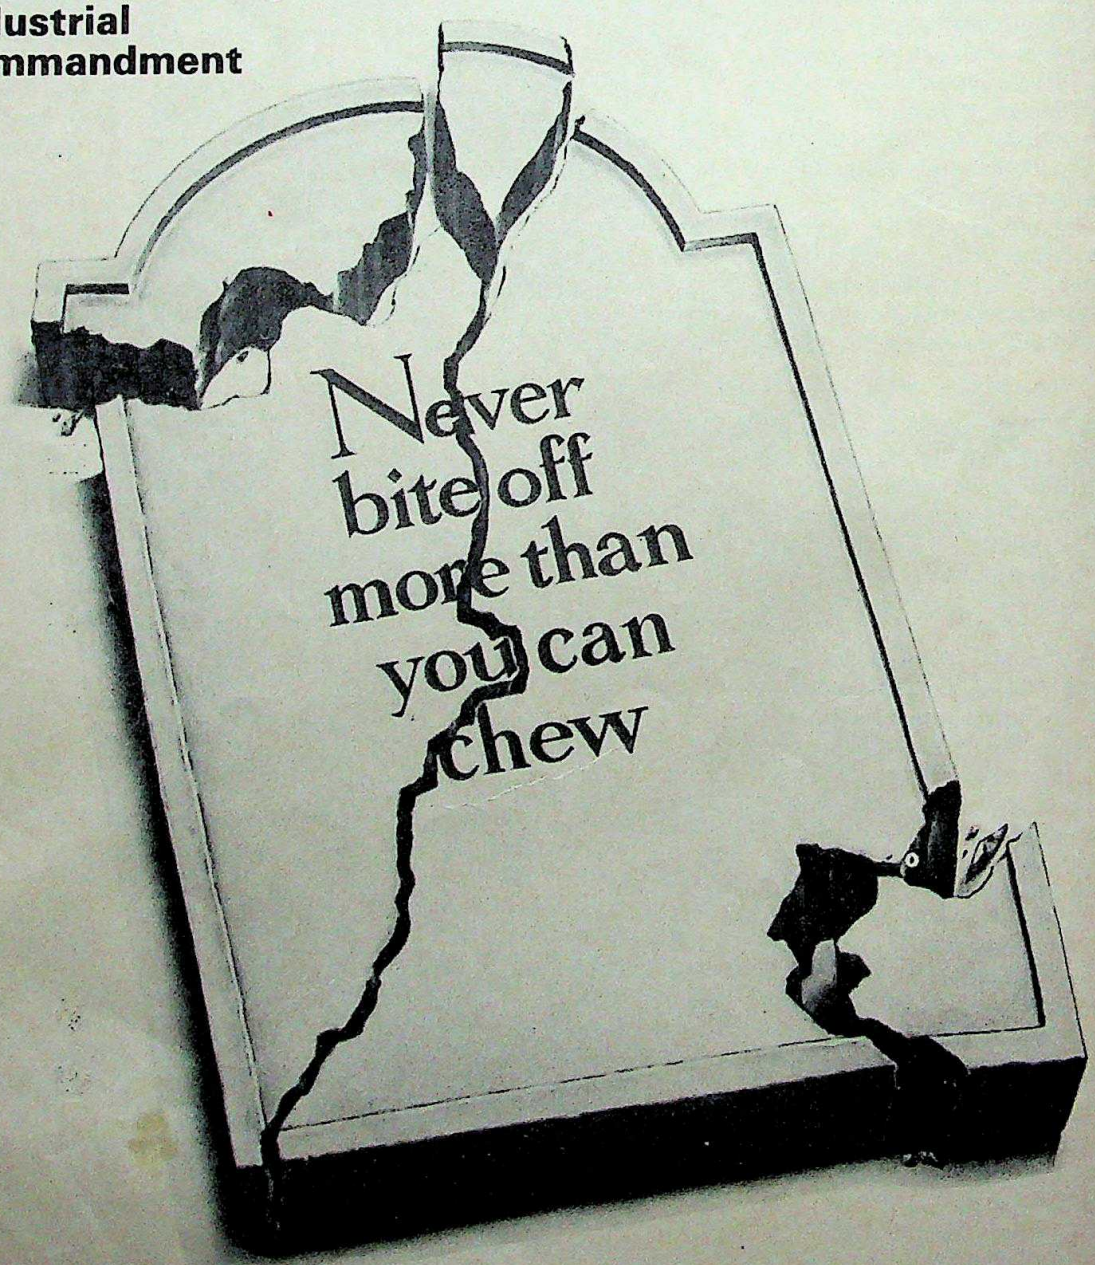
A. There is no planning at the state level. I am for more planning at the state level. You can't have decentralised planning in India because there is no machinery for it. It has become so much a matter for political expediency.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KEC breaks a major industrial commandment



Pratibha-83-73

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Strange as it may sound, our success at KEC and the total confidence of our customers derive in some measure from the fact that we dare to take on challenges when everybody else opts out. And we deliver, no matter what the problems.

Take the case of the no-break genset for the Rajasthan Atomic Power Plant, to cite just one example.

In the first phase of the Rajasthan Atomic Power Plant, Canadian General Electric supplied 300 kVA no-break gensets in 1965.

For the second phase, the Department of Atomic Energy, or DAE for short, decided to launch a major indigenization programme. When they floated tenders for the critical no-break gensets, not a single Indian manufacturer of electrical equipment responded. The uniform feeling was that nobody, but nobody in India could make them.

It was at this point that the Indian Institute of Science, Bangalore, recommended KEC for the job. DAE got in touch with us at KEC and asked our Chief Design Engineer to meet their consultants, Montreal Engineering Company, and talk things over. The consultants were understandably sceptical about our capabilities. The only condition on which they were willing to start a dialogue with us was to escalate the stringency of the specs.

The specs for the 400 kVA no-break genset required that the equipment should be highly reliable and suitable for continuous operation on a 24 hours per day basis. The genset could be shut down only on a planned basis once in 4 months. The loads connected to the high reliability Class II bus fed by these MG sets were very critical in their input requirements and so it was necessary to hold the steady state voltage and frequency variation within 1 percent of the set values. The transient specifications permitted were also extremely severe since a water pump driven by a very large induction motor had to be started without significant disturbance to the other connected loads.

The deal was on. We quoted and DAE gave us the go-ahead. We worked hand in hand with DAE. Their experience and constructive suggestions were invaluable. We pulled out all the stops and worked round the clock. The problems were many. Often we wanted to throw up our hands in despair. For instance, when one of our prestigious British associates on other projects took a look at the severity of the tolerances of the genset, they recommended that we should use a frame size suitable for a generator 5 or 6 times the capacity of the 400 kVA no-break genset. We decided to use our own brains and experience. We designed a 600 kVA frame for the application.

We supplied the first set in 1975. All checks were carried out to DAE's total satisfaction. On D-day, DAE pushed the button. And did our no-break genset live happily ever after? Sorry, this is not a fairy story, it's for real. When the set started rotating, the control system tripped. The set came to a halt. The redeeming feature was that the protection system had worked after all.

Within three months, with DAE's help, we re-designed the entire control panel. This time around when the button was pushed, the set went beautifully into action. It's still going great guns. Of course, there were minor teething problems. As a matter of fact we still continue to make improvements with DAE's active co-operation.

DAE have placed an order for 4 no-break gensets for the Madras Atomic Power Plant. In 1980, we won the order for four 325 kVA sets and 8 55 kVA control power supply sets for the Narora Atomic Power Plant in the teeth of stiff German competition. And, in 1979, DAE asked us to supply them two sets of 150 kVA for one of their research projects. To date, no other Indian manufacturer has entered the field.

Converting energy to serve the millions

KIRLOSKAR ELECTRIC CO. LTD.

P.B. 5555, Malleswaram West, Bangalore 560 055.

Thanks to our sophisticated technological expertise, our capacity to take on new challenges and the fact that we never abandon our customers or products, KEC is today one of the leading manufacturers of AC, DC machines in South-east Asia, making over 80,000 motors and generators a year. KEC also produces electronic equipment and systems, AC and DC controls, geared motors and transformers. Our machines are in use in almost every conceivable industry. In India and in over 20 countries of the world including the U.K., U.S.A. and Canada.

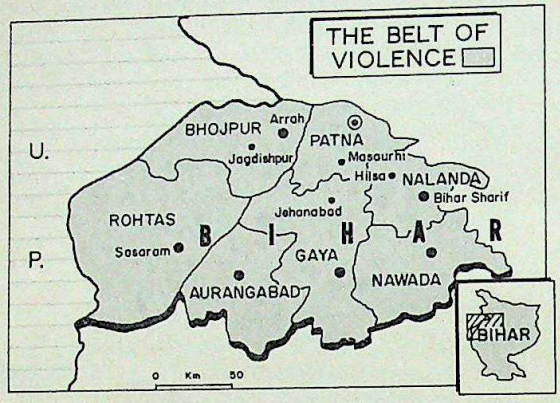
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

Armies of the Night

YOU'RE in the land of Gautam Buddha. Follow his preachings," reads the innocuous legend hanging from a palm-tree in Masaurhi bazar in Patna district. Nothing, however, could be more mocking and ironical than this noble little exhortation. Masaurhi, 65 km from Bodh Gaya where Buddha attained enlightenment, is the epicentre of the senseless violence that has once again rocked south-central Bihar, with the private armies of the powerful landlords ranged against the comparatively nascent organisations of the weak but retaliating serfs.



It is the same old vicious circle of offensive and reprisal. Retaliating to the excesses of the landlords' brutal private armies, the Harijans have organised their own militant groups and the two are now ranged in an endless running battle, with the state fast coming to resemble a bloody battlefield. Murder and cold-blooded killings have become everyday happenings while the connivance of the police with the powerful landlords has ceased to shock. As Ramprit, an old Harijan of Masaurhi, puts it: "Here, the life of the poor and the landless has become shorter than winter days."

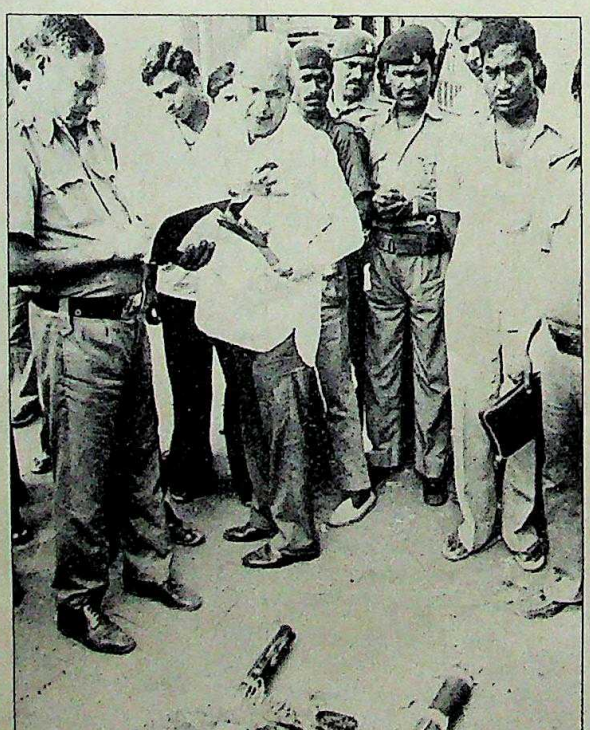
The confrontation is not a new one, but it has peaked to a fevered pitch. The red pins stabbing the map at the state police headquarters symbolise a land stained with the blood of mindless offensive and retaliation. The map of violence spans seven districts—Nalanda, Nawadah, Patna, Gaya, Bhojpur, Rohtas and Aurangabad. Not a month passes without murders and cold-blooded killings in the region and the toll keeps mounting. November and December, however, proved to be the bloodiest months yet with nearly 30 people being killed in this period, taking the toll in the landlord-labourer conflict in the seven districts to 300 since 1980.

The toll was exceptional even by Bihar's bloody standards and most of the victims, as usual, were innocent people. One such victim was Umesh Yadav, a 15-year-old landless labourer of Jaitipur village in Nalanda district. Umesh had gone to the waterfront one evening last month when a group of armed people, identified

Body of Bhoomi Sena victim in Deokuli village: mounting toll

"It is terrible to recall what happened to my son. I could not even perform his last rites."

BADHIKA DEVI
Jaitipur village, Nalanda district



Photographs by K.M. KISHAN

"My husband was a farm labourer and did not belong to any group. They came shouting and just shot him."

PIPARIYA
Brari village, Nalanda district

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

as the "red squad" of the Naxalites, ambushed Baiju Yadav, reported to be the "local commander" of the Yadavas' Lorik Sena. When he ran shouting for help, many of the Yadav farmers nearby came out with guns and rifles. Baiju was saved but in the fracas, Umesh and Satyendra Pandey, a 20-year-old poor Brahmin, were killed. Says Umesh's foster mother Radhika Devi: "It is terrible to recall what happened to my son. I could not even perform his last rites."

Soon enough the Lorik Sena struck back, with the police lending more than active help. The Yadavas led by Baiju and reinforced by a posse of policemen from Ekangersarai raided Brari village hunting for the "red squad extremists". The two who fell victim to their wrath, however, were not extremists but merely innocent villagers, Ram Swaroop Ram, a Harijan, and Kailash, a landless carpenter.

THE LORIK Sena may have been looking for some particular extremists but the way they went about hunting for them showed that they were on a senseless killing spree. Says Ram Swaroop's wife Pipariya: "My husband was a farm labourer and did not belong to any group. They came shouting, dragged him out and just shot him. One reason why he was killed could be that he was once fishing in a pond to which the Yadavas objected."

From all accounts the killings had been planned in advance. Right after this incident, the raiders crossed the river to Piroghamath village in Jehanabad subdivision of Gaya district and killed two more, one of them a poor barber. As is usual in such incidents, Ram's body was found only a few days later and that too at some distance from the village. There is still no trace of the Kailash's body and the villagers suspect that the killers hacked it to pieces and threw it into the river.

As always, the Yadavas denied their involvement and blamed the killings on the "red squad" of the Naxalites. Said Jaitipur's former mukhiya Nasibi Prasad, a Yadav: "There is no such thing as the Lorik Sena and no Yadav from this village had gone to Brari to avenge the murders. In fact, we hardly step out of our village after sunset. We have even stopped going to our fields in the evenings."

The Yadavas may deny their involvement in the attack but the involvement of the police is beyond doubt. In fact, when the Jehanabad Sub-Divisional Officer Vyasji rushed to Piroghamath village under Ghoshi police station, he learnt that the Ekangersarai (Nalanda) police station in-charge, along with some Bihar Military Police (BMP) jawans, had been seen in the mob. On investigation, Zonal Inspector-General of Police D.N. Sahay found this to be correct and the officer-in-charge was suspended along with a BMP assistant sub-inspector.

If the Ekangersarai police killed villagers at the instance of the Yadavas in Nalanda, the Bhojpur police did one better. They did it on their own and added another angle to the caste affair. On November 14, a police party raided Kunai village under Jagdishpur police station and killed two Harijans, Totaman and Gobardhan Ram, in "encounters". Not only this, they "recovered" six rifles, including a military one, and one Sten gun, besides 340 rounds of ammunition.

The police claimed that both the Harijans had been hardcore extremists belonging to the Vinod Mishra faction of the CPI(M-L) and wanted in several cases. The police had a similar story about the Gangabigha incident too, where they claimed to have killed three "extremists" in encounters on November 21.

Villagers in both the villages, however, disputed these claims, saying they had heard only two or three shots and not a whole volley of them as would have been the case had these been encounters. Not only this, they said that the police went on a rampage after the killings, looting and plundering their houses on the pretext of looking for "extremists".

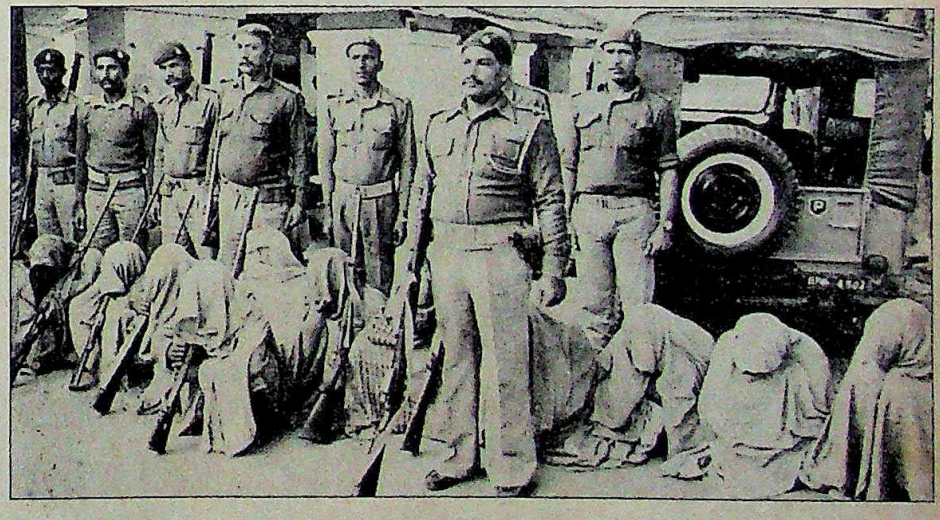
The police sustain their argument about the extremists by citing the latest incident of violence in the area. According to them, a group of extremists attacked a police patrol on December 16 in Sakla village of Rohtas district killing one BMP havildar and injuring three jawans. The extremists also snatched away five BMP rifles, the police said.

Whatever the truth behind these conflicting versions, the fact remains that the central part of the state, south of the Ganga, has become a bloody battleground for the landowners and the landless. The landlords have their own private armies (INDIA TODAY, March 15, 1984) made up of mercenaries and usually operating on a caste basis. In retaliation, many militant groups have sprung up to support the Harijans. These include the Bihar Pradesh Kisan Sabha (BPKS), the Mazdoor Kisan Sangharsh Samiti (MKSS), the Indian People's Front (IPF) and various militant factions of the CPI(M-L).

The upsurge in violence and the mushrooming of various militant senas are all part of a uniform pattern. When the Naxalite movement in the state lost most of its strength in the late 1970s, organisations championing the landless' causes sprang up as a natural corollary. Says IPF's Bihar unit chief Prithiviraj: "We are working in the villages where the BPKS and other Naxalite organisations are also active. Land and minimum wages are the main issues. We want everything to be settled in a peaceful way and this could be achieved only if the landlords took the initiative. But instead they are using guns." Adds Bihar Civil Liberties Convenor Kishoridas: "We are fighting for land reforms, minimum wages, restoration of dignity to the poor and protection of their women. Can we tolerate a situation in which their children, instead of being sent to schools, are being forced to work free on the landlords' farms?"

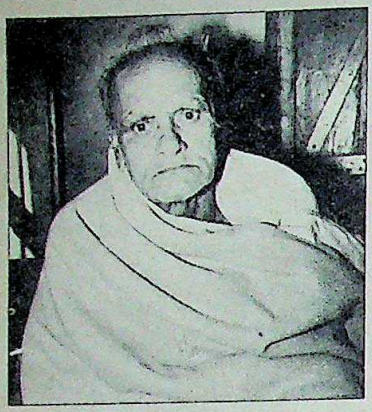
Bhoomi Sena men predictably deny any violent activities on their part. Girish Singh of Masaurhi, who is known as the "commander-in-chief" of the Sena, says:

"Red squad men" in police custody: bloody confrontations



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



"We want everything to be settled in a peaceful way and this could be achieved only if the landlords took the initiative. Instead they are using guns."

PRITHVIRAJ
president, Bihar unit, IPF

justifies its actions. As Singh says: "The administration is ineffective and does nothing to protect the kisans. If we did not defend ourselves, we would all be killed one by one."

The Bhoomi Sena is not the only private army to operate in the region. The name that spells terror next to the Bhoomi Sena is the Lorik Sena of the Yadavas of the Nalanda and Jehanabad areas. Named after the legendary Yadava crusader, Lorik Chand, the Sena has ironically come to represent murder and bloodshed. IPF leaders and the police say that the Lorik Sena has been set up by Ramashray Prasad Singh, CPI MP from Jehanabad, though local CPI leaders are quick to deny this.

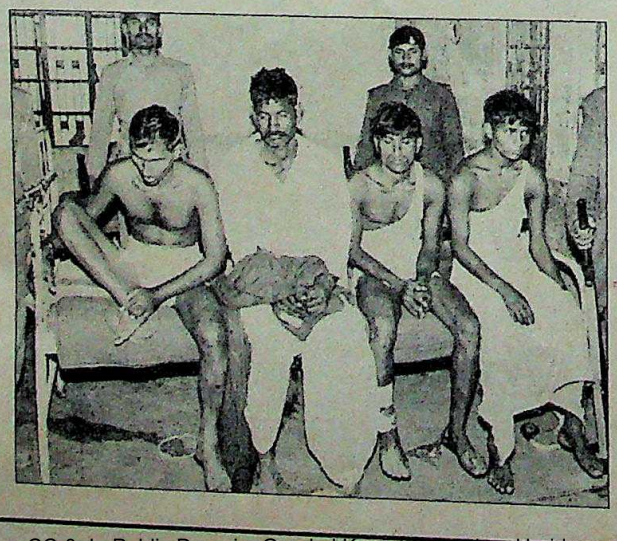
Apart from the major groups involved in the violence, there are smaller senas in various regions. Though most of these are either localised or dormant, they nonetheless spell terror in their respective areas. Prominent among these are: the Brahmarshi Sena of the Bhumihars, the Kuer Sena of Rajputs and other high castes, the Azad Sena of Brahmins, the Srikrishna Sena of the Yadavas, the Samajvadi Krantikari Sena and the Shoshit Samajvadi Sena of the Rajputs. As CPI MP Chaturanan Mishra pointed out in the Rajya Sabha recently, almost all these senas have links within the administration from whom they get help and protection.

The latest to come up is the Shoshan Mukti Sena, the convenor of which is none other than Assembly Deputy Speaker Shivnandan Paswan. The sena has the backing of Assembly leader of the Opposition Karpoori Thakur, known for his pro-reservation stand and such tough proclamations as: "Violence for self-defence should not be called violence. It (self-defence) is our constitutional right."

PART OF the massive effort to flush out extremists from the region was Operation Black Panther, launched by Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey soon after he came to power. This was followed by Operation Task Force in the trijunction of Masaurhi, Jehanabad and Hilsa covering all neighbouring villages. A BMP contingent is still combing the areas and the police have stepped up their operations. As many as 400 people have been arrested, many Naxalites killed in "encounters" and caches of weapons recovered in the Nalanda-Patna-Gaya belt.

Deputy Inspector-General of Police (Anti-Naxalite) Jyoti Kumar Sinha feels it is more than just a law and order problem. According to him, its roots lie in the steadily worsening socio-economic condition of the region. And things will not change unless the administration takes suitable steps to tackle them on a socio-economic plane. Chief Minister Dubey realises this and has announced a Rs 5 crore crash development plan for the region and promised to accelerate land reform measures. But unless the measures touch the root of the problem, they will be futile like all others before them.

Victims of police action in Gangabigha: target of brute force



"Can we tolerate a situation in which the Harijans' children, instead of being sent to school, are being forced to work free on the landlords' farms?"

KISHORIDAS
convenor, Civil Liberties, Bihar

As Sisir Kumar, former MP and commissioner for the Scheduled Castes and Tribes points out, the violence is concentrated in areas where the peasants' movement gained a foothold in the 1930s. This area has also seen the emergence of a new class of landlords, made up of Yadavas and others, in place of the old, established ones. While the old landlords desperately try to cling on to their power, the new ones try to assert theirs and between the two, the crushed Harijans make it clear that they have had enough. Their lack of confidence in the Government has prompted them to take the law in their own hands and the result is a bloody free-for-all.

So, as long as the officials remain lackadaisical in the implementation of growth plans, things will remain as they are. And the endless battle between the landed and the landless will keep raging, claiming its ever mounting toll of death and destruction.

—FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Quality, variety, economy ... NTC Fabrics

Poplins, cambrics, drills, denims, rubias, suitings, dhotis, sarees, shirtings in Pure Cottons and Polyester Blends.

Interads

NTC.
The productive alternative.

NATIONAL TEXTILE CORPORATION LIMITED
(A Government of India Undertaking)
8th Floor, Surya Kiran Building,
19, Kasturba Gandhi Marg, New Delhi-110 001.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

March tows adventurou

An invitation to engineering graduates and post graduates on the look-out for responsibilities – respect – rewards.

Openings for 63rd Technica

As an Indian citizen, you are invited to apply for a permanent commission in the technical arms and services.

Check and see if you are eligible.

TECHNICAL ARMS
Engineering graduates

Your Age:

You must be born not earlier than 2nd July 1959 and not later than 1st July 1966.

Your Minimum Educational Qualifications:

A degree or diploma (equivalent to a degree) in Civil or Electrical or Mechanical or Architecture or Production or Automobile or Metallurgy or Aeronautical or Electronics or Tele-communications or M.Sc. Physics with electronics comprising one or more of the following papers as a major part of electronic curriculum:

(1) Electromagnetic Wave Propagation and Antennas
(2) Micro-waves
(3) Solid State Physics and Semi-Conductor Devices
(4) Analog and Digital Circuits
(5) Radio Communications
(6) Computer Science
(7) Signal Processing Techniques

You must attach proof of having studied these papers in M.Sc. along with University Syllabus with the Application Form.

SERVICES
Post graduates
(For Army Ordnance Corps/ Army Education Corps)

Your Age:

You must be born not earlier than 2nd July, 1959 and not later than 1st July, 1963.

Your Minimum Educational Qualifications:

Army Ordnance Corps:

MA in 1st or 2nd Division in Psychology.

Army Education Corps:

MA or M.Sc. degree in 1st or 2nd Division in Physics/Mathematics/ Geography.

Graduates
(For Military Farms Services)

Your Age:

You must be born not earlier than 2nd July, 1959 and not later than 1st July, 1966.

Your Minimum Educational Qualifications:

A Degree in Dairying or a Degree in Agriculture of a recognised Indian University with Dairying as one of the subjects or an equivalent Foreign qualification in Agriculture. Preference will be given to those who hold an M.Sc. Degree or have carried out research in Dairying or Fodder Crops.

Note: (i) Candidates holding diploma awarded by State Board of Technical Education are not eligible.
(ii) Candidates other than for Army Education Corps and Army Ordnance Corps who expect to pass an examination by 30 June 1986 wh make them eligible for this course also apply along with a certificate the head of their institution to this effect. (iii) Applicants for Army Education Corps and Army Ordna Corps should have passed MA or at the time of submission of application.

Selection

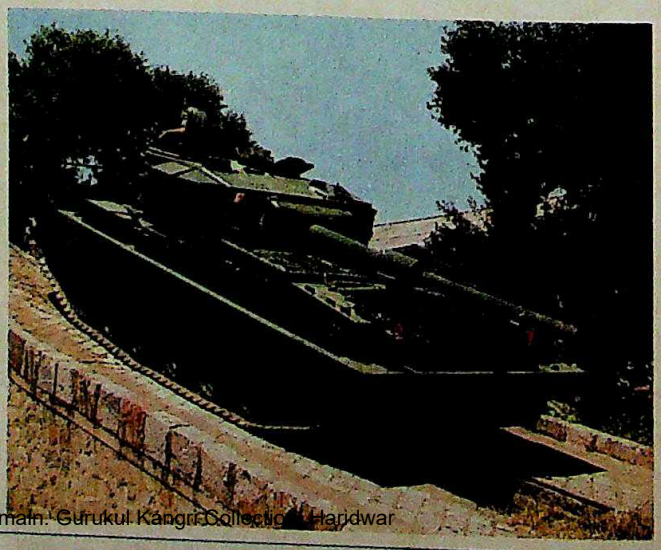
If found eligible, you will be called Services Selection Board screen interview. Qualified candidates w medically examined.

Free Training

You will receive free training at th Indian Military Academy. Engineer graduates will be granted Short S Commission on probation in the ra Second Lieutenant during the per training and an antedate of two ye grant of permanent commission.

Further Opportunities

If you make the grade as a high ca and successful officer, you could b sponsored for M. Tech – even abro During your service in the Army, qualifying in special engineering courses in the Army, enables you exemption for Parts I & II in A.M.I.E can also be given specialised trai exciting fields like electronics and computers. You could be even se for Management Studies in Colle Defence Management or special training courses in institutions ab Post graduate qualification in Arm

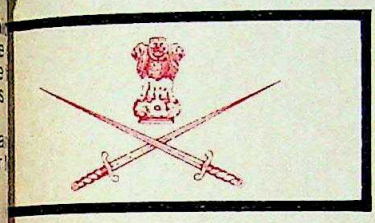


CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...s an exciting and ...outure in the Armed Forces

...manent commissions in the Army – ...graduates Course – July 1986.



...utions is recognised for ...bership to various professional ...s. The opportunities are ...dless.

...d Pay – Attractive ...wances

...and Allowances

...ommissioning, a 2/Lt. gets gross ...nly emoluments approximately ...ing Rs.2,150/-.

...itional Benefits for you

...n Officer, you and your family are ...ed to free medical aid, ...mmodation on concessional rent, ... travel concession, canteen ...ties and group insurance scheme ...fits. Free rations for self up to the ...of Brigadier. Free transport ...ties for school-going children.

...y to Apply

...y on plain paper (Size 30cm × 20cm ...ox.) to Army Headquarters, ...TG 6 (SP) (d) (i). West Block-III, ...Puram, New Delhi 110 066. The ...cation should be typed or neatly ...en as per format.

APPLICATION FORM FOR 63RD TECHNICAL GRADUATES COURSE – JULY 1986

Space for use by Army HQ

Affix passport size photograph duly signed

1. Name in Full (in block letters as per Matriculation or equivalent certificate both in English and Hindi) a) ..... b) .....
2. Father's Name (in block letters both in English and Hindi) a) ..... b) .....
3. Date of Birth (in Christian era) .....
4. Postal Address stating Telegraph Office .....
5. Permanent Home Address .....
6. Educational qualifications giving following information:

Examination Passed	Division or Grade	Percentage of Marks obtained	Name of Institution or University

7. Branch of Engineering or Subject of MA or M.Sc. .....
8. Tick your choice- Technical Arms/AOC/AEC/MF
9. Details of previous SSB interview, if any. .....
10. Present employment, if any .....
11. Nationality .....
12. Religion .....
13. Married/Unmarried .....
14. State and District to which you belong .....
15. List of documents (only attested copies) attached in proof of age and qualifications. .....

DECLARATION:

(i) I hereby declare that all the statements made in the application are true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

(ii) I have also never been debarred from appearing at any examination nor have I ever been arrested, prosecuted or convicted by criminal court or involved in any other case registered by the police.

(iii) I undertake not to make any claim or compensation if at any stage of my selection my ineligibility is detected and my candidature is cancelled as a result thereof.

Place:
Date: Signature

NOTE: 1. Enclose 2 self-addressed 23 × 10 cm. unstamped envelopes with the application

2. Incomplete application in any respect may be rejected summarily and no correspondence will be entertained.

APPLY NOW

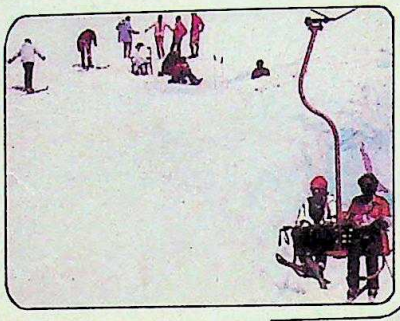
Last date for receipt of applications: 31st January 1986.

Imageads-IA-85347

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Your winter playground Kashmir



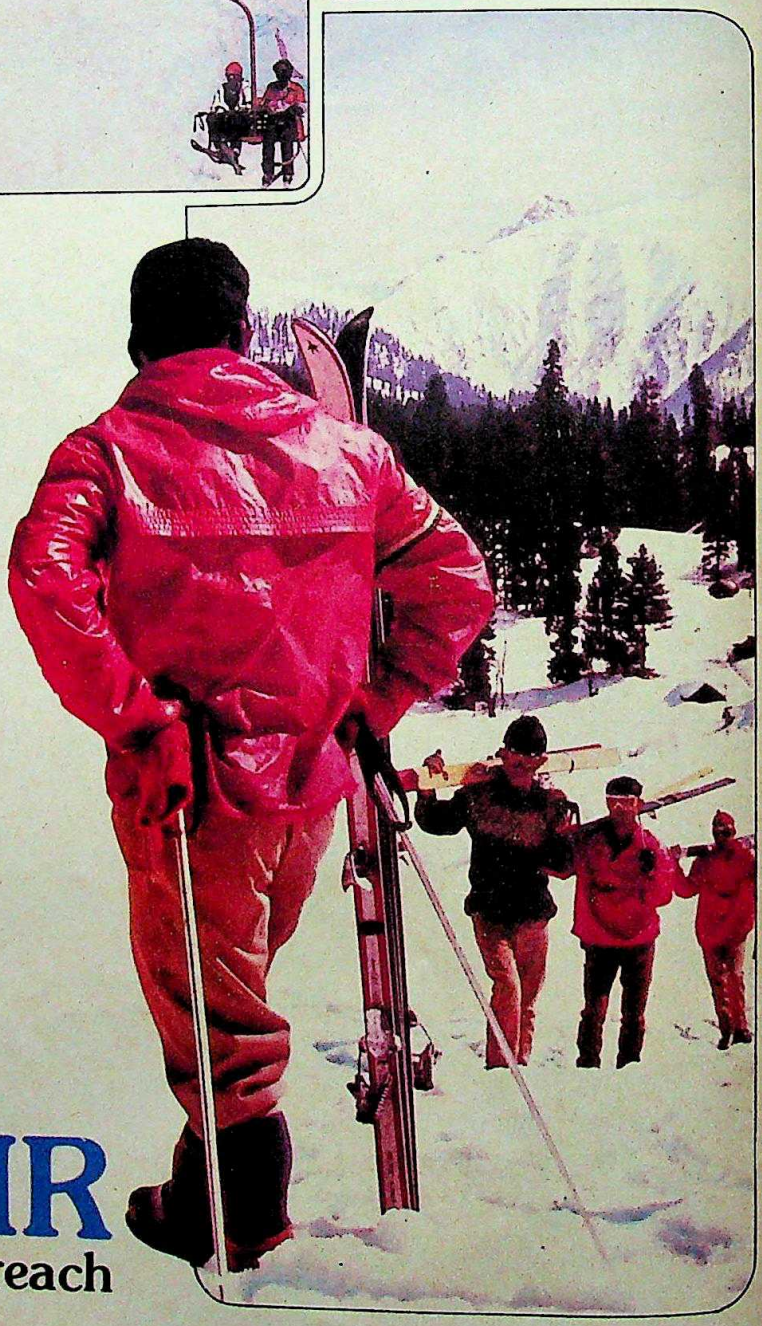
It's winter.
And Kashmir is all white and wonderful.
Come face to face with Nature's most beautiful presence. Majestic mountains gleaming against an azure blue sky. Tall pine and fir trees covered by a shimmering white mantle.

A dream setting for fun and games. Ski. Gulmarg has some of the finest slopes. There's expert-guidance for beginners. Bob-sleigh. Toboggan. Skate. The excitement never ends. Pahalgam is a dream in snow. Centrally heated accommodation is also available. Hokersar and other lakes are full of migratory birds, a rare treat for the wildlife enthusiasts.

And after an energetic day, curl up by a log fire. With a hot cup of aromatic Kashmiri tea, Kahwa.
That's Kashmir. Awaiting you.

Where to stay

Comfortable and economical accommodation is available everywhere. You can book in advance by writing to The Director of Tourism. For accommodation in Private Hotels or Houseboats, contact directly The Hotel Association and The Houseboat Owners Association, Tourist Reception Centre, Srinagar. Tourist huts and bungalows available at Gulmarg, Pahalgam, Kokernag, Acchabal, Verinag, Daksum'and Manasbal.



J&K TOURISM

KASHMIR

Paradise within your reach

For details contact or write to

The Director of Tourism, J&K Government, Srinagar Tel: 72449, 73648, 77224 After Office Hours: 77303, 77305 Grams: JAKTOURISM Telex: 375-207 TSM IN or J&K Tourist Office at: DELHI: 202-203, Kanishka Shopping Plaza, 19 Ashok Road, New Delhi Tel: 345373, 343400 extn. 2379 Telex: 031-61854 JKT IN.
BOMBAY: 25 North Wing, World Trade Centre, Cuffe Parade, Colaba Tel: 216249 Telex: 011-3323 APPLE IN. CALCUTTA: 12, Chowringhee Tel: 225790.
AHMEDABAD: Airlines House, Lal Darwaza Tel: 391043 Telex: 012-656 APPLE IN. HYDERABAD: Diamond House, 2nd Floor, Himayat Nagar Tel: 36282.
AMRITSAR: 2 Court Road Tel: 43276. JAMMU TAWI: Tourist Reception Centre, Vir Marg Tel: 5324 Telex: 0377-228 TSM IN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDO-PAK RELATIONS

Getting Into Gear

IT WAS only to be a six-hour visit, a mere stopover. But President Zia-ul-Haq's meeting with Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi in Delhi last fortnight, sandwiched between a Zia swing through South Asia and the December 18 marriage of his daughter, Qurratulain, achieved more than the five other meetings between the two heads of government in the last 14 months. Indo-Pak relations are like a bumpy car ride, mostly in low gear and occasionally in the reverse. This visit has undeniably put it on a higher gear.

At a joint press conference before emplaning for home, Zia exhuded his familiar optimism: "This is not a limit, but the beginning of future relations between our two countries in the interests of both countries." His comments from Pakistan were even more laudatory. He called the meeting "the most significant event in the recent past" and labelled it "the most cordial so far". Indian media comment agreed: a "breakthrough" was the term in general currency.

The hoopla was understandable—there was much that remained the same, yet there was a lot to show for the 45 minutes that Zia and Rajiv spent together. Zia was as charming as ever, bearhugging the prime minister and President Zail Singh, and 'sirring' Rajiv even though he is 20 years older. Rajiv started off by presenting a set of six proposals to which the Pakistanis responded with their own list of five proposals. Luckily, the points largely overlapped and it was fairly smooth sailing.

Capping the list of achievements was an Indian initiative, an agreement not to attack each other's nuclear installations, marking the first time that the two countries' nuclear programme has been the subject of any substantial bilateral discussion. Equally important was agreement on a "step by step" move towards normalisation of relations. This entails a meeting of the finance ministers in Islamabad in early January, of the foreign secretaries later in the month, of the four subcommissions of the joint commission, of the full joint commission led by the foreign ministers in February.

It was also agreed that a cultural agreement—the draft of which was prepared more than two years ago—would also be signed, more or less on Pakistan's terms since all the reservations are on their side. India also pointed out that though the Simla Agreement of 1972 provided for two border checkposts—at Wagah and Khokrapar Munabao in the Kutch—Pakistan had dragged its feet on opening the Gujarat channel. Pakistan agreed to consider the matter. Siachen would be discussed between the two defence secretaries. "We told them we will move at the pace you want but let us behave like good neighbours, like the USA and Canada," said an MEA official. More important, added a top-ranking Indian official: "The war clouds that were looming large have now been dissipated."

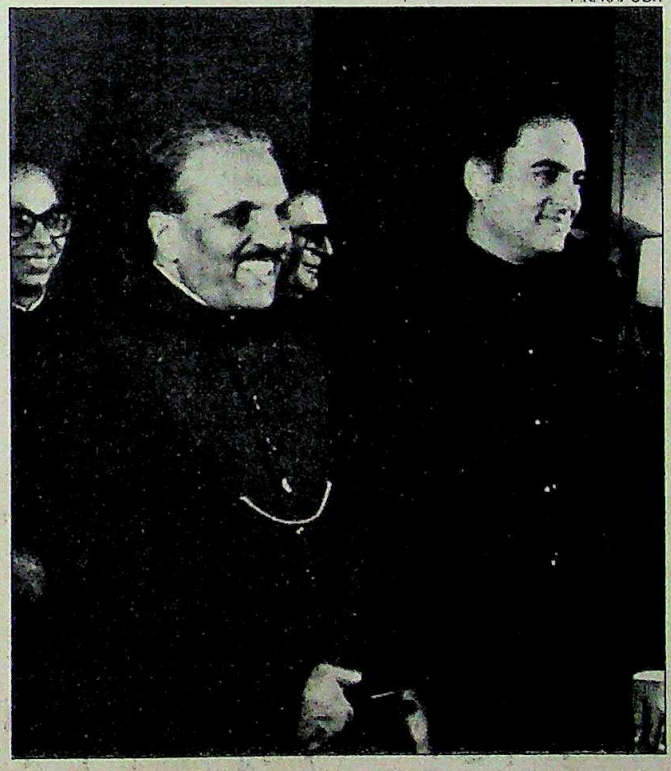
In this upbeat backdrop, speculation also surfaced in the media that an agreement had also been reached on signing a peace and friendship treaty, amalgamating India's draft of a Treaty of Friendship, Peace and Cooperation and Pakistan's draft of a Pact for Non-Aggression and Non-Use of Force. Indian Government sources denied the report but maintained that the two issues that have been bedevilling the treaty—acceptance of the principle of bilateralism and a commitment not to provide military bases for third countries—were "not insoluble".

The visit was Zia's idea but the date initially suggested by Pakistan was December 16, which happens to be the day 14 years ago when Pakistani troops had surrendered to India in Bangladesh. "It was astonishing that somebody there overlooked such an obvious connection. But we knew somebody would point this out and all our preparations were made on the assumption that he would come on the 17th," said an MEA official. It was left to Nawa-i-Waqt, the influential Urdu daily from Lahore, to draw attention to this embarrassing slip-up.

For the meeting itself India set the pace. The Indian approach was clear: "Pakistan never said no to any formulation but had been slippery when it came to specific proposals. This time we decided we would try to pin them down to specifics and would present workable proposals which they would find difficult to turn down," said an aide. The most dramatic, and for the Pakistanis the most unexpected, was the proposal to desist from attacking each other's nuclear installations. India had noted that over the last three months Pakistan had repeatedly raised the bo-

General Zia and Rajiv: breakthrough

P.K. KAPOOR

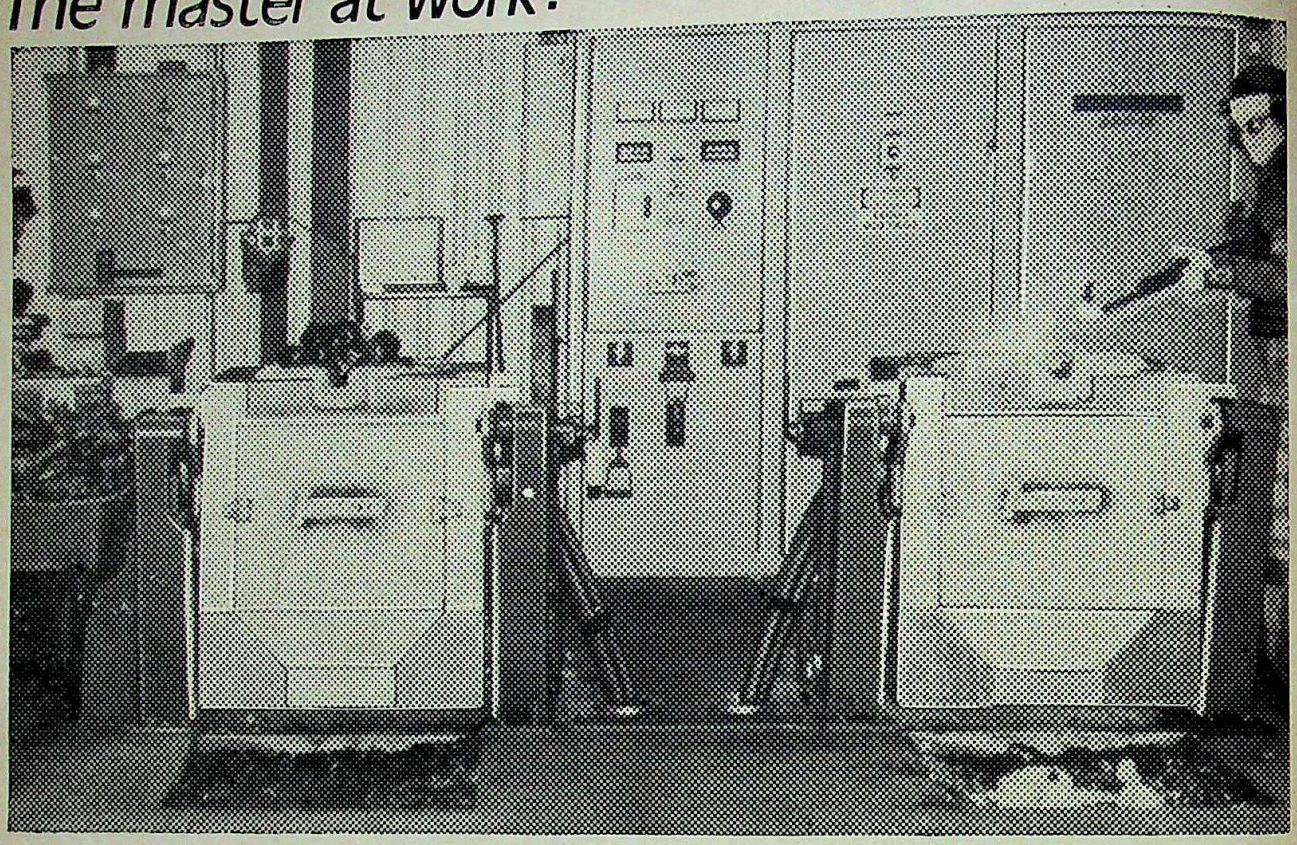


Indo-Pak relations are like a bumpy car ride, mostly in low gear and occasionally in the reverse. This visit has undeniably put it on a higher gear.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The master at work.



Sales-service centres now within your reach in Bombay, Banglore, Delhi, Calcutta.

VIP POWER-TRAK (I)

MEDIUM FREQUENCY INDUCTION MELTING FURNACE

- No other medium frequency induction system melts at lower cost/kg, so fast, so automatically. Ferrous or non-ferrous.
- Melt at full power from start to finish without any interruption or further attention.
- No need for molten heel and no capacitor switching required while melting.
- Inducto's exclusive current limiting reactor virtually eliminates fuse replacement.
- Highly compact design with total distilled water closed loop cooling system.

INDUCTOTHERM (INDIA) LTD.
47, GIDC Phase 1, VATVA, Ahmedabad-382 445 India
Phone: 876140, 876388, 877441, 877372
Gram: POWER TRAK • Telex: 121-626 MELTIN.

Bombay-Ph. 361040-Tlx. 011-4851 PARSIN • Delhi-Ph. 7128819-Tlx. 31-62273 AUTOIN
Banglore: Tlx. 845-8373 DCBYIN-Ph.-567201/02 • Calcutta: Tlx. 7820 FTCIIN/4163 DCCAIN-Ph.-43-2300

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

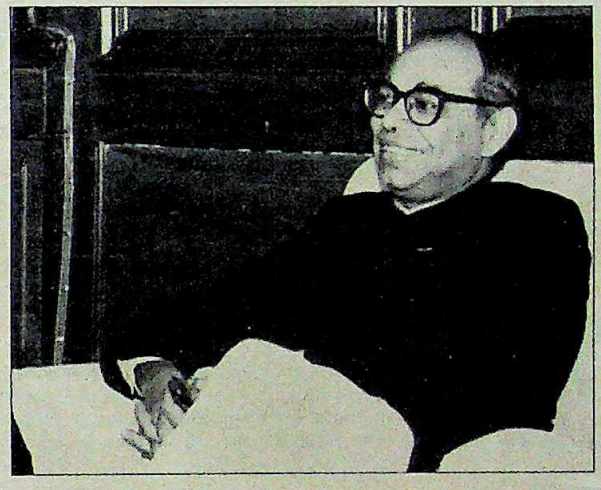
Khurana-PP/11L/112-85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

gey of an Indian pre-emptive strike on Kahuta.

"This was patently illogical for the simple reason that our nuclear installations are more vulnerable," said an aide to the prime minister but the decision was taken to take the winds out of Pakistan's propaganda sails. Said an MEA official: "The Pakistanis were taken aback but this was one proposal they could not turn down. If you have been crying hoarse that I am going to attack your house and I propose that we agree formally not to attack each other's house with what face can you refuse to agree?"

The proposal was accepted but there was some reluctance among Pakistani officials to announce it on Indian soil till Zia intervened and agreed to going public immediately. The Pakistanis made their original contribution in another sphere: it was at their initiative that the first followup meeting was raised from the level of the commerce secretaries to that of finance ministers. Indian diplomats maintained that Pakistan's Finance Minister Mahbub Ul-Haq's presence as the seniormost aide to Zia (Foreign Minister Shahabzada Yaqub Khan was away in Geneva) contributed to the positive tenor of the visit.



Mahbub UL-Haq: positive contribution

Yet there are limits to what a pragmatist like Haq can do. Haq, an economist of international repute, was here in November also when he confessed to his Indian friends: "As an economist I cannot see how we can afford not to have wider trade relations, but there are political considerations and we cannot afford to ignore them." Haq had also met the prime minister then and submitted a five-point proposal which, to start with, called for doubling or trebling the trade in the first year. But as Rajiv told Haq, in a reference to the negligible volume of trade between the two countries: "Doubling or trebling zero still comes to zero."

The trade protocol, signed in the wake of the Simla Agreement, was revoked by Zia in his first import policy statement in 1978 and though Pakistan later agreed to permit import of 42 items (in most of which India has no interest), Pakistan still brackets India with pariahs like South Africa and Israel and private trade between the two countries continues to be banned. "This," said an aide of the prime minister, "is against the General Agreement on Trade and Tariff (GATT) and we know we will win if we took the matter to the GATT council but like we told the Pakistanis, we don't want to do that because we realise that you have your compulsions (a trade lobby is the strongest peace lobby) but let us move towards liberal trade relations." Pakistan, it is understood, has also agreed to a resumption of private trade though that point brought up the rear in Haq's list.

As Rajiv said later, the current approach on easing Indo-Pak tensions is twofold: to expand and diversify areas of economic, cultural and people-to-people contact while the contentious areas are addressed separately. For India the latter are mainly three: Pakistan's nuclear intentions, arms programme and the help it has been providing to Punjab terrorists, the last topping India's list of concerns. India has no intention of sweeping them under the carpet: all three issues were raised at the meeting and, for instance, on training and aid to Punjab separatists, India told Pakistan that while it did not expect the latter to accept its collusion with Punjab terrorists "we would know in a matter of hours the moment you stop helping them."

On Pakistan's nuclear programme, India told Pakistan that it was still convinced that it had a programme to make a bomb and there was little merit in Pakistan's five-point proposal to inspect the installations. "They told us that we should tell them what they should do to satisfy us but we told them that it is impossible to verify such things but we continue to believe that you have a N-bomb plan," said an Indian official. The Indian Government still continues to rely on the USA to discipline Pakistan but after President Reagan's clean chit to Pakistan, recognised that it was necessary to get pragmatic. Hence, the proposal to refrain from attacking nuclear installations.

America's attitude, in fact, looms large on the Pakistani horizon. Pakistan recognises that Indo-US relations are on the mend and with the Congress slated to vote this month on a new $ 6.5 billion economic aid-cum-arms package, Pakistan realises that better relations with India can be a welcome propaganda point. "They can tell the US, look now there are fewer reasons for India to be apprehensive of the arms you will give us," pointed out a Rajiv aide. But international compulsions apart, there is a genuine groundswell of public feeling in Pakistan for better relations with India and the Pakistani Government, though not as sensitive to mass emotions as an elected government, still cannot afford to ignore it. Indian government officials characterise the depth of feelings in Pakistan about better relations with India as bordering on the "euphoric" and compare it with the upbeat mood in the early 1960s when Nehru went to sign the Indus Waters Treaty.

Yet, nobody is saying that the ground realities ought to be ignored. Explained an Indian policy maker: "We realise that there is still a very strong lobby in Pakistan which wants to avenge the humiliation of 1971. So we cannot afford to do something dramatic like lowering our guard on the border or reducing the defence expenditure. But if the Pakistanis want to play ball, they will find that our prime minister is willing to go more than half way. There is no doubt that he wants to build confidence between the two countries."

For the moment, the idea is to accommodate Pakistan and move ahead on non-contentious areas. Said an MEA mandarin: "We want to tell them that the time has come to show sincerity in deeds not words. I do not want to use the word conditional but we are clear in our minds that the prime minister's visit will depend on how the initiatives are followed up." High up on the list of follow-ups is Pakistani help to Punjab terrorists and progress towards a peace treaty. And while Zia no longer needs a Rajiv visit to lend legitimacy to his regime, certainly his eight-year-old army government will gain in respectability should the prime minister of the world's largest democracy come calling.

—AJAY KUMAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

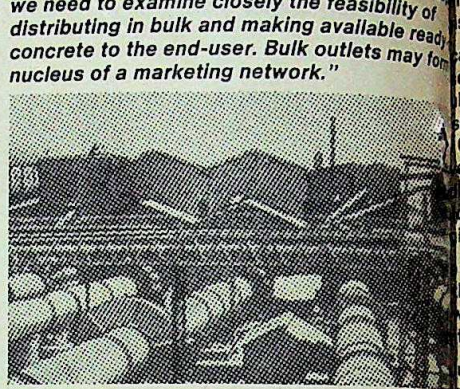
Company Meeting

The Associated Cement Companies Limited

Statement of the Chairman, Mr. N.A. Palkhivala

The 49th Annual General Meeting of the Company will be held at the Birla Matushri Sabhagar, 19, Sir Vithaldas Thackersey Marg, Bombay 400 020, at 3.45 p.m., on Wednesday, December 18, 1985.

"We are moving into times which dictate a dep... from the traditional modes of marketing. I am ... that hitherto the cement industry, lulled by a perpetual gap between demand and supply, fa... get on to the fast track of modern salesmanshi... With the increasing pressures on railway trans... we need to examine closely the feasibility of ... distributing in bulk and making available ready ... concrete to the end-user. Bulk outlets may for... nucleus of a marketing network."



A year has rolled by since Mr. Rajiv Gandhi became the Prime Minister. No fanfare at the outset; no drum roll at the conclusion. The most striking features of this memorable year have been the quiet dignity of his success, and the moral dimension of his liberalism. He has proved himself to be dedicated to purpose and principle, rather than to doctrine and definition.

The threat of a nuclear winter cannot be allowed to over-shadow the truth that we are living through the most exciting period in human history. Nine times as much scientific knowledge has been generated since the end of the Second World War as mankind was able to produce in all the previous eras. "The amount of information in the world now doubles every eight years. Prosperity goes to countries that have a mechanism to put it to use."

1985 saw the redesigning of India to meet the challenges of the 21st century which is just a little over 5000 days away. The year witnessed an epoch-making Budget. Earlier budgets had imposed such draining direct taxes that thrift, once a virtue, had become a vice, and there was a danger of Envy, one of the seven deadly sins, being canonized. The twin begetters of black money had been inane controls and insensate fiscal levies. This year India indicated that it would be kissing goodbye to both. It was some change from the last 30 years in which posture politics had compelled entrepreneurs to breathe in an atmosphere of oxygen, nitrogen and odium!

John Kenneth Galbraith observed in A Life in our Times, "Economics is not a durable truth; it requires constant revision and accommodation. Nearly all its error is from those who cannot change... The experience of being wrong is salutary; no economist should be denied it, and not many are."

Providentially, India has had the wisdom to learn from some of the errors of the past. Over 34 years of the history of our republic, our per capita income had gone up only 61 per cent in real terms. In 1985 we began to change our course – silently and imperceptibly, as a big ship does – from economic fundamentalism and sterile socialism to fruitful and meaningful egalitarianism.

The world seems to be going through a cycle of economic rationalism as distinct from economic theology. In many countries socialism is in retreat. New Zealand's Labour government, and Western Europe's six Socialist governments –Greece, Italy, Portugal, Spain, France and Sweden – have swung markedly to the right. It is the clash of socialist ideology with obstinate reality which has brought about the change.

The cement industry should be one of the major beneficiaries of the re-thinking in our own land.

The Cement Industry

The cement industry, which was in the Intensive Care Unit, has been nursed back to health. Primarily as a result of partial decontrol, the installed capacity of the industry zoomed from 29.3 million tonnes at the end of 1981-82 to 42 million tonnes by the end of 1984-85, and production jumped from 21.1 million tonnes to 30.1 million tonnes. This was more than what was achieved during the preceding ten years!

Moreover, for the first time since the dawn of the planning era, the cement industry is sure of surpassing the Seventh Plan target of both capacity (62 million tonnes) and production (49 million tonnes).

Your Company has also contributed substantially to help reach the country's economic milestone. Between 1981-82 and 1984-85, we set up an additional rated capacity of 1.4 million tonnes. Our gross revenue crossed the Rupee 700 crore mark during the year under review. There was an increase of 2.22 lakh tonnes in the production of grey cement while the Company's installed capacity registered an increase of 1.37 lakh tonnes, over the previous year.

Decontrol

If partial decontrol can launch India on such a big market-driven wave of development, what a full harvest of benefits would not be garnered by to... decontrol! Last year I pleaded for tot... decontrol for three reasons – (a) the adequacy of cement production, (b) iniquity of the public being compelle... subsidize the government by having ... pay higher prices to enable the manufacturer to sell levy cement to government below the cost of produc... and (c) the dishonest seepage of lev... cement into the free market. These t... grounds continue to be as irrefragab... before.

There is no reason for the continua... of partial control on cement exce... reluctance of the bureaucracy to ... its powers and the national penchan... sticking to arsenic and old lace.

The injustice is compounded by the ... that the price of levy cement is not revised even when the government's own action results in increase in the ... of inputs. The last time a niggardly r... was granted to the cement industry ... in July 1984, when the government raised the retention price by Rs. 40 p... tonne (with a marginal reduction in t... levy quota which amounted in effect ... Rs. 5 per tonne) against the industry's unanswerable claim of Rs. 88.75 per tonne.

Fair play suggests that once it is dec... to hike up the price of coal or power, ... natural corollary should be to allow a proportionate increase in the prices ... products which have to use either of these inputs. But past experience ha... shown that when it comes to grantin... legitimate price increases, the government ignores the issue for as ... as it can and then belatedly proffers ... crumbs. The industry is saddled with ... burden of subsidizing the sale of levy ... cement to the extent of a whopping ... Rs. 250 crore in a single year. Your Company has suffered a loss of Rs. ... crore in uncompensated costs.

Why is there such inordinate delay i... doing what is just and fair? The reas... lies in the way governmental decisio... are still made. Files and minutes sti...

...J Kanari Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

n official to official and from artment to department. "Round and nd," Curzon the Viceroy noted, "like diurnal revolution of the earth went file – stately, solemn, sure and slow d now in due season it has pleted its orbit, and I am invited to ster the concluding stage."

ades later, Malcolm Muggeridge erved the same phenomenon: "I bt if any government has ever sted so cut off from the governed as Government of India... It was ernment pure and undefiled; lessly minuting and circulating files, ch, like time itself, had neither inning nor end, but just were."

administrative techniques pursued the government today are the same were cast in the concrete mould a tury ago.

une this year, the basis for calculation evy quota was changed from rated acity to actual production. In the case ld units, the government lowered the quota from 65 per cent of the alled capacity to 60 per cent of actual duction. As regards new and sick s, the quota was reduced from 45 per t of installed capacity to 40 per cent actual production. The linkage of levy ta with actual production beyond alled capacity is a retrograde step, as enalizes the efficient units.

oduction constraints

quickest mode of increasing duction and supplies obviously lies in ter utilization of existing capacities. the woeful inadequacy of the astructure that militates against ter utilization. The shortage of way wagons continues to haunt the ustry. Thanks to the chronic nsport bottleneck, we find that the problem is that of distribution and production, – as every bald man lizes when he shaves in the morning!

ring 1984-85, the total loss of your mpany's production was as high as 5 h tonnes due to inadequate power. bulk of this loss was at Wadi (old nt) and Gagal.

e industry continues to suffer sizeable ses of production on account of ensive and massive power cuts. We e, for example, an unprecedented wer cut in Karnataka which at times is high as 70 per cent, while the nataka State Electricity Board has ounced a steep hike in power tariffs he extent of 30 to 40 per cent.

duce the loss of production, the ustry has added substantial captive er generation capacity. It has set up el-run generators to the tune of ut 35 per cent of its total uirements. Your Company has captive rmal power capacity of 61 MW, and it eing augmented by a 6 MW thermal wer plant at Chaibasa. With this, the mpany's power requirements will be ered to the extent of 70 per cent, inst the government's suggested m of 40 per cent.

Another jinx presently affecting the cement industry is the shortage of coal. During the first quarter of 1985-86, the coal production declined sharply in marked contrast to the spurt in the corresponding quarter of the previous year. The coal output was 32.3 million tonnes, 2.6 per cent less than in the first quarter of 1984-85, and 10.7 per cent short of the target. This portends coal shortages in the current year.

While the industry's major grouse is the short-availability of coal, its abysmal quality is another inhibiting factor.

Coal, supplied even from the same field, has decreasing useful heat value, increasing ash and moisture content, and a generous lacing of shale and other foreign matter. Because collieries do not pay adequate attention to quality control, cement units have to face formidable process problems such as the generation of dust, production of very hard clinker balls, ring formations due to high ash content of coal, erratic performance of kilns, and damage to kilns' brick-lining. Only human ingenuity goaded by despair has been able to sustain the use of poor quality coal. Your Company was the first in the country to introduce the precalcinator technology which maximizes the use of low-grade coal.

Modernization and rehabilitation

Between 1982 and 1985, the industry has invested about Rs. 650 crore in modernization and expansion programmes. Your management's major preoccupation also continues to be the rehabilitation, rejuvenation and modernization of its old plants.

The conversion of our Madukkarai plant from wet to semi-dry process, and of the Shahabad unit from wet to dry process, will together entail a capital outlay of Rs. 144 crore. It is expected that the World Bank will agree to provide finance for these projects in a substantial way.

In line with our continuing concern for the community in which we do our business, your Company has taken firm steps to protect the environment. During the year, five electrostatic precipitators (ESPs) were commissioned at a cost of Rs. 3.9 crore. A further 16 ESPs at a cost of Rs. 21 crore would be commissioned in the next two years.

Marketing

With the marked increase in the availability of cement, the art of responding to and steering consumer demand has assumed great importance. We act upon the sage advice of Mr. Konosuke Matsushita (who 68 years ago founded Matsushita Electric Industrial, now the world's largest consumer electronics producer) that the basic rule of management is self-evident: learn what the people want and respond accordingly. The consumer is king, but the company must act as a loyal subject, giving the king proper advice and guidance. Your Company has initiated marketing strategies such as strengthening the stockists' network and opening new storage depots to cater to small and rural markets.

We are moving into times which dictate a departure from the traditional modes of marketing. I am afraid that hitherto the cement industry, lulled by a perpetual gap between demand and supply, failed to get on to the fast track of modern salesmanship. With the increasing pressures on railway transport, we need to examine closely the feasibility of distributing in bulk and making available ready-mix concrete to the end-user. Bulk outlets may form the nucleus of a marketing network.

Above all, we are conscious of the fact that the competitive market is also presenting challenges to the producers on the quality front, and the success of a business enterprise is more than ever dependent upon the quality and reliability of its product.

Overseas operations

I am happy to report that negotiations are under way for a renewal of the contract at Kubaisa, Iraq, for a further period of two years. Our earnings in foreign exchange from our overseas operations amounted to Rs. 20 crore for the year under review. More importantly, we have earned bonus at both Yanbu and Kubaisa for achieving production in excess of guarantees.

Corporate goal

We are conscious of the necessity of raising our sights from the solving of short-term problems to building for the future. The possibilities in the field for rejuvenation are immense, the challenge is awesome, but the reward will be nothing less than maintaining our position as the leader in the Indian cement industry.

Your Company is unique in that it has to maintain 17 plants in different States. We are painfully aware that running such a company is a job too real and too earnest to mistake a resolution for an accomplished fact or slogans for strategy.

To each and everyone of our officers and staff I should like to convey the well-worn message that there is no substitute for hard, dedicated work in the present. Between yesterday's regret and tomorrow's dream lies today's opportunity.

My heartfelt gratitude on behalf of the entire body of shareholders to the employees who have played a significant role in shaping the fortunes of the Company in a spirit of cooperation and goodwill.

Bombay, November 16, 1985

Raising our sights from the solving of short-term problems to building for the future

ACC

ACC 25A/85

This does not purport to be the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HUM LOG

The Final Flourish

IT WAS an epic ending—heavy and tearful. Last fortnight, when the labyrinthine Hum Log family walked off into the December fog, and Dadi, in the very last episode, had died as imperiously as she had lived, the proceedings constituted the frothiest finale to the first soap opera on Indian television. The froth vanished in no time, but not before it had unleashed an addiction, hooking a record audience of nearly 40 million twice every week, willing to be bombarded with the "family saga", laced with a message.

Doordarshan lost no time in ordering what it hoped would be a replacement, its second serial, this time a chronicle of three generations, to be named Buniyad, and produced by G.P.Sippy with Ramesh (Sholay) Sippy directing the first 13 episodes. With the big guns moving in, the soap opera on the small screen had obviously hit the high spot. But at the end of the 157 episodes of Hum Log, begun in July 1984, TV pundits were wondering just what drew such a large number of viewers to the seemingly flimsy tear-jerker which drew its inspiration from a Mexican serial, Accompany Me. Ever since the private sector began to make programmes —Hum Log was the first— no other serial has remained so steadfastly near the top of the charts, not just in the cities but in small towns and big villages opened up by the mushrooming of transmitters.

Doordarshan's Audience Research Group (ARG) has computed that Indians had spent 214 crore "viewer-hours" in front of the box watching the programme. Though rated as a distinctly down-market serial, it had for over 17 months commanded an average rating of 75 per cent to 85 per cent in the cities of north India and around 50 per cent in Madras, where Hindi programmes habitually run up against a wall of public resistance. In many towns with population varying between 100,000 and 500,000, it had notched up 90 per cent rating, turning itself into the most durable community obsession of the small town its electronic fire-side. Its achievemen transcended viewership statistics. Fo over a year, the Doordarshan receiv over 400 letters a day, with the corresp dents suggesting new twists to the p line, new characterisation, and new d nouement. "The audience wrote the sto with the writer," says Harish Khann Doordarshan's director-general.

BHAWAN SINGH

The serial also yanked out of obscurit a host of actors and actresses. Laha Singh, the septuagenarian compere of th Doordarshan's somnolescent agricu tural programme, Krishi Darshan, sud denly got into limelight as the lovin Dadaji of Hum Log. Seema Bhargava, Delhi stage actress, became a household name as Badki, the elde sister of the impoverish family trying to eke out a honourable living. Vin Nagpal, a city hotelier wit a passion for singing an acting, turned overnigh into a celebrity as Baseswa Ram, the poorer son Dadaji and the typical patr arch of the lower mid class Indian fam Jayashree Arora, an arm officer's wife who had nev acted before either a film a television camera, b came the symbol of th mute Indian housewife Bhagwanti, Baseswar wife, in the serial. Raje Puri, an actor of bit role became known natio wide as Lallu, the countr yokel who bravely sough to grapple with the Englis language. And actre Sushma Seth, who blend the hauteur of a Queen Vi toria with the guilelessne of an old-world India granny to create the char acter of Dadi, was mobb at airports and railway st tions. Says Seth: "It is a experience totally u known to me in my mar

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

The Hum Log line-up: and (top) Seth: one big happy family

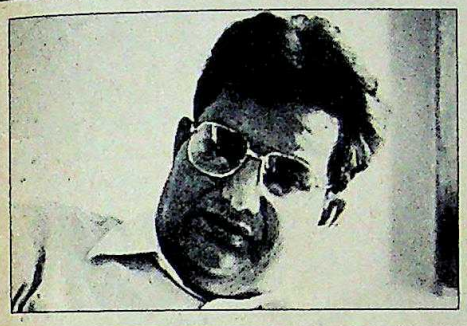
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

years of film and stage career."

So strong were the feelings of viewers that some of them marched up to Bhargava's house in the Daryagunj area of Delhi, demanding that she should get married to Ashwini Kumar, her doctor suitor forthwith. The evening they got married, there were celebrations in Allahabad, Varanasi and Lucknow, the cities inhabited by Hum Log's hardcore viewers. Nagpal was besieged with two sets of

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



"Once we had got onto the hook, it took us time to unhook."

MANOHAR SHYAM JOSHI

advices: one, recommending the songs of the late K.L.Saigal which he might sing while acting out the "drunk" scenes; and the other, recommending prescriptions for drying out.

IT WAS also a bonanza for advertisement of consumer products. Riding almost entirely the crest of Hum Log's popularity, a range of food products expanded their market share. The Delhi-based Food Specialities Limited re-launched its Maggi two-minute noddle leaning heavily on Hum Log, which it co-sponsored throughout its run, and hit the bull's eye. Colgate-Palmolive and Food Specialities Limited went the whole hog with the serial, with the makers of Vicks inhalers and balm chipping on for 13 episodes in between. And, even though Hum Log was identified with the middle class audience, the advertisers found a gold-mine in it. When it started, the programme had virtually no buyers. But before it wound up, the cost of each of the 25-minute episodes had shot up to Rs 210,000, including a whopping Rs 70,000 transmission charge, but enabling the sponsors to advertise their ware through 90 seconds of "free time"; and yet there were a dozen buyers who would gratefully shoulder it if it got an extension and the traditional sponsors dropped a hint that they might back out.

But the Doordarshan, even if it had willed, could not have carried on with the serial which had really entered a no-exit situation with the characters refusing to grow any further and events getting tied up into inextricable knots. "We are used to the dramaturgy of an ascending situation," says Khanna, "but everything had plateaued off in Hum Log." The ebullient Shobha Doctor, whose Time and Space advertising agency had co-produced the serial with the Doordarshan, still tried for an extension but had to throw up her hands in the face of growing tiredness of everyone involved in it. The climax, provided by Dadi dying of cancer, was known nearly three months ago. The eligible bachelors on the cast had also been all neatly paired off, so that when the wedding bells began ringing one after the other there were hardly any surprises left. Lallu had ceased to sound funny; Bhagwanti looked tiresomely predictable is her depiction of the doormat housewife; Manjhli and Chutki, the two younger daughters, became characters drifting from episode to episode in search of a role. And veteran actor Ashok Kumar, putting up a cameo performance at the end of each episode, became stale and more and more predictable with each passing episode.

"The inherent limitations of the serial were showing at the end," admits Khanna who, during the 17 months of the serial's life, often had to throw his weight to straighten out the frequent "cinematic loops" in the story. It began obviously under client pressure when writer Manohar Shyam Joshi was obliged to give a filmi edge to the story, contriving a murder-plot, a couple of chases, and a gaggle of baddies who hatched conspiracies behind hidden doors. But Joshi admits that instead of making the serial popular these contrivances alienated it from the audience who refused to appreciate the Hum Log characters alienated from the everyday domestic background. "Once we had got onto the hook," says Joshi with a smile, "it took us time to unhook."

Despite its inconsistent quality, and the fact that its popularity was closely linked with the spread of the medium in the past year with the sudden mushrooming of TV transmitters it offered certain object lessons for future makers of long-drawn soap opera. Satish Gargh, Hum Log's executive producer who represented the Doordarshan in the production team, categorises them as follows:

- ► it clicks only as long as the characters are identifiable social types;
- ► aping of commercial cinema for family serials is most likely to be resented by viewers of the small screen even though the audiences may overlap; and
- ► no long serial will be accepted if it is peppered with accidental twists such as, long-lost brothers being reunited to the script-writer's convenience, or an irreconcilable triangle being rationalised by the death of one of the protagonists.

In fact the serial created most of its vibrant chapters when it could manage to avoid these pitfalls. One such juncture in the serial was when Manjhli returned to her family, a shattered woman disillusioned with the glitter of the neon lights. Her return alone was greeted with over 4,000 letters written by viewers. And Joshi admits that the "supreme moments" in the serial were those which depicted the family ties: between Dadaji and Dadi; between their children placed in entirely different stations in life; in Baseswar's helpless efforts to get out of alcoholism; in Nanhe's spontaneous buffoonery; and in the warmth of the family get-togethers. "Everything else was garnishing added to the story," he says.

Obviously Buniyad is going to test Joshi's mettle, for he has been chosen by Sippy as the writer for Doordarshan's second long serial. Like Hum Log, Buniyad too is a story of generations and has the same episodic character. Obviously the loyal audience created by Hum Log cannot be ignored any more: neither by the Doordarshan nor by the advertisers whose appetite has been sharpened by the frequency and long reach of roll-on serials. But Doctor sounds a note of caution. She says: "The association of big banners in the production of family serials spells a shift in emphasis. I have a fear—only a lurking fear—that from now on commercialised fantasies will take over from the drama of simple relationships."

But the Doordarshan top brass are pretty confident that Buniyad, initially contracted for 104 episodes, will be able to keep television audiences glued to the set for months to come. And chances are that like Hum Log, anything that Doordarshan dishes out in the most popular time slots will be lapped up, proving once again the abiding wisdom of the dictum: the medium is the message.

—SUMIT MITRA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SUPREME COURT

Tug of War

WHEN Prafull Natwarlal Bhagwati, a self-proclaimed Indira-phile, became the chief justice of India earlier this year, many thought that the appointment would enable the two long-disharmonious wheels of the republic—the executive and the judiciary—to be reconciled at last. Bhagwati rode into the office waving the banner of judicial activism, but soon found that he had his wires crossed with the 74-year-old Union Law Minister, Asoke Sen. The radical Bhagwati and the patrician Sen went about like two unwilling horses yoked together to the carriage of office. Often they charged at each other.

The most serious of their collisions was last fortnight when Sen formally withheld his opinion, which is a procedural euphemism for saying no, on Bhagwati's recommendation to appoint Justice P.B.Sawant of Bombay High Court as a judge of the Supreme Court. Sawant's name was suggested earlier this fortnight by Bhagwati himself in a letter to the law minister. It is a convention established over the years that no name for appointment to the bench of the Supreme Court is put down on paper unless there is unanimity between the chief justice of India and the law minister, who is the constitutional representative of the President of India. Article 124(2) of the Constitution lays down that the Government shall always consult the Chief Justice of India while appointing a Supreme Court judge.

There were two appointments to the 18-member Supreme Court bench since Bhagwati took over, and both went through without a hitch. The judges who joined the Supreme Court thus are: Justice B.C.Roy of Calcutta High Court; and Justice G.L.Oza, former chief justice of Gujarat High Court. The vacancies were caused when the country's highest bench recently lost five judges including the former chief justice of India, Y.V. Chandrachud, who retired at the end of his term. While there was no problem with the elevation of Roy and Oza, the spiking of Sawant's appointment made eyebrows go up.

This is because Sawant, though only number seven at the Bombay High Court bench in terms of seniority, is regarded as an 'active' judge much in the mould of Bhagwati himself.Sawant is also a champion of public interest litigation in Maharashtra. Only recently, he and Bhagwati inaugurated the Lok Adalat in Nagpur. And his views on judicial activism run contrary to those of Sen, who is a strong disbeliever in the crusading approach. In fact, while Sen did not oppose Bhagwati,purely on the ground that he was the seniormost, he nonetheless told INDIA TODAY: "Law-making should be left to the legislators. Judges can at best unfold anomalies in law, but they should never remake them." But the Bhagwati school swears by the American activist judge Felix Frankfurter's dictum:"A judge is not a mimic."

When asked to comment on the impasse over Sawant's appointment, Sen refused to discuss it, but sources in the Justice Department of the Law Ministry predicted that the matter would go up to the prime minister early in January because "it is now beyond the competence of the ministry to resolve the deadlock". However, this is not the first time—and it is unlikely to be the last time either—that the David and the Goliath of the judicial world have clashed.

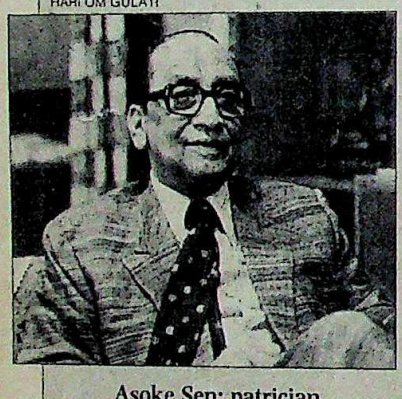
They collided first on the question of who should become the chairman of the Law Commission. On the retirement of K.K.Mathew, Bhagwati suggested the name of D.A.Desai, again an activist judge and a compatriot of Bhagwati who had sided with him on many a judgement, including the historic Judges' Transfer case in 1982 (INDIA TODAY, January 31, 1982). Sen objected to it in writing, but Desai was made the Law Commission chief in August this year, much to the chagrin of Sen. Around the same time came another crunch when Sen, in a three-line letter to the chief justice of India, said he favoured the appointment of Prakash Narain, the retiring chief justice of the Delhi High Court, to the bench of the Supreme Court. High court judges retire at 62 while a judge of the Supreme Court can continue up to 65 years.

In Narain's case, Bhagwati simply put his foot down. In a confidential note he listed out a series of charges against Narain. The most unassailable of them was the fact that a case against him was in pendency in the Supreme Court. It related to the erstwhile government's refusal to extend the term of S.N.Kumar, former additional judge of Delhi High Court, apparently prompted by Narain's 'secret' report to Shiv Shankar, the then law minister. Sen's advocacy for Narain was dropped as a result.

The bad vibes between Sen and Bhagwati are already casting their shadow on judicial appointments. While 62 high court vacancies are yet to be filled up, every proposal is now subjected to an unprecedented tug of war. And, in most of the disputed appointments, the tussle is not between the high-handed Centre and the refractory state Government but between the Law Ministry and the Centre's chosen chief justice of India.

—SUMIT MITRA

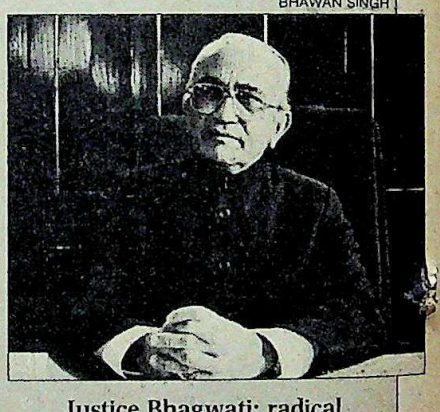
HARI OM GULATI



Asoke Sen: patrician

Differences between Sen and Bhagwati, two pillars of the legal system, are already casting their shadows on judicial appointments.

BHAWAN SINGH



Justice Bhagwati: radical

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

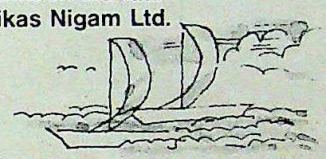
A flying package full of holiday fun

DEHRA DUN
MUSSOORIE
RISHIKESH
HARIDWAR

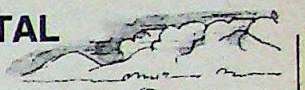
Rates per head all inclusive
4 days/3 nights
From Delhi—Rs 799/-
Student rate—Rs 499/-
Stay in Savoy Hotel, Mussoorie.
In association with
Garhwal Mandal Vikas Nigam Ltd.

NAINITAL-BHIMTAL
RANIKHET-KAUSANI

Rates per head all inclusive
5 days/4 nights
From Delhi—Rs 999/-
Stay in luxury tourist resorts.
In association with
Kumaon Mandal Vikas Nigam Ltd.



NAINITAL-BHIMTAL
NAUKUCHIATAL
SATTAL



Rates per head all inclusive
4 days/3 nights
From Delhi—Rs 799/-
Student rate—Rs 499/-
Stay in luxury tourist resorts.
In association with
Kumaon Mandal Vikas Nigam Ltd.

BHUNTAR-MANIKARAN
KULU-MANALI

Rates per head all inclusive
4 days/3 nights
Economy:
From Delhi : Rs. 1399/-*
From Chandigarh: Rs. 899/-
Stay in luxury tourist bungalows.
Deluxe:
From Delhi: Rs. 1899/-
From Chandigarh : Rs. 1455/-
Stay in delightful log huts. Couples going deluxe get a chauffeur-driven car.
Student rate : Rs. 899/-
*Student rate : Rs. 699/-
In association with
Himachal Pradesh Tourism Development Corporation

CHANDIGARH-BAROG
CHAIL-SHIMLA

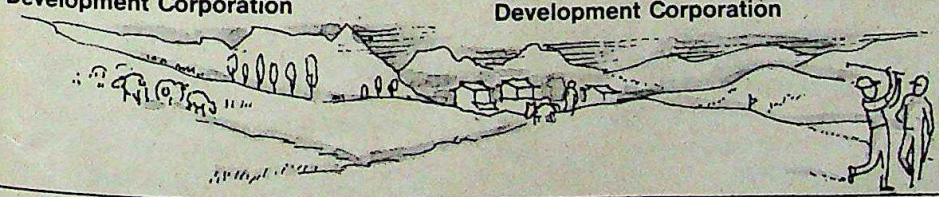
Rates per head all inclusive
4 days/3 nights
Economy:
From Delhi - Rs. 1049/-
Luxurious accommodation.
Deluxe:
From Delhi - Rs. 1555/-
Stay in luxury resort.
Student rate. All inclusive
3 days/2nights
From Delhi - Rs. 599/-
In association with
Himachal Pradesh Tourism Development Corporation

GUWAHATI-SHILLONG
CHERRAPUNJI

Rates per head all inclusive
4 days/3 nights
From Guwahati - Rs. 495/-
Student rate - Rs. 399/-
Stay in tourist accommodation.
In association with
Meghalaya Tourism Development Corporation Ltd.

CALCUTTA-SHILLONG
CHERRAPUNJI

Rates per head all inclusive
4 days/3 nights
From Calcutta
Economy - Rs. 1299/-
Deluxe - Rs. 1699/-
Student rate - Rs. 849/-
Stay in tourist accommodation.
In association with
Meghalaya Tourism Development Corporation Ltd.



Mutual - 4149

NORTHERN SECTOR TOURS VALID FROM 20th September '85 to 15th April '86

EASTERN SECTOR TOURS VALID FROM 10th November '85 to 15th April '86

For details contact the nearest Vayudoot office or any leading travel agent.

Telephone :
NEW DELHI : 3312587, 3312779, 3315768.
BOMBAY : 6121405, 6121397.
CALCUTTA : 576582, 447062, 432316.
HYDERABAD : 76438.

Air Travel to and fro
Free transport for sightseeing.
Luxurious accommodation.

Vayudoot
HOLIDAY PACKAGE TOUR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

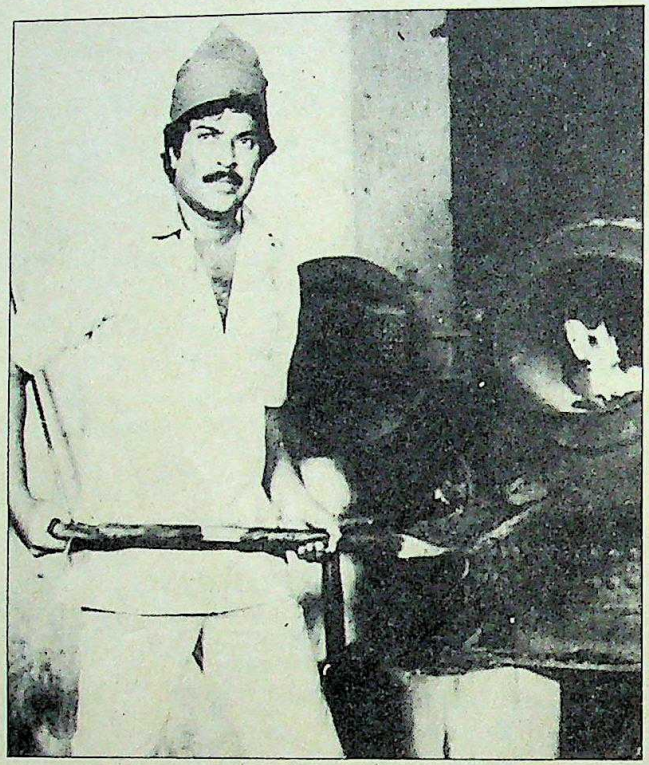
MALAYALAM FILMS

New Heroes

HE IS cool. He is tough. He has steel in his eyes. He does not rant at the drop of a hat, but when he talks the lines are punchy enough to hit the audience hard. Mammootty, the 38-year-old lawyer-turned-star of the Malayalam cinema, may be the idli variant of a Sly Stallone; but he belongs to a crop of new icons of Kerala's thriving movie industry which has zapped the jaded demigod Prem Nazir, undisputed king of the state's silver screen for 25 years. The new films that are drawing audiences in droves are neither the corny tear-jerkers nor the B-grade erotica of the Nazir era but films rooted in life. And the new heroes, unlike their predecessors, are less windows into what the audience would fantasise itself to be than mirrors to what it actually is.

It was most startlingly demonstrated by the success of Yatra, the biggest hit of 1985 which grossed Rs 19 lakh in the main circuits. Mammootty plays a forest officer who is picked up by the police on the suspicion of being a terrorist and, in scenes somewhat embarrassingly reminiscent of First Blood, is subjected to brutal torture in custody. Later he kills a cop in his fury, in the best manner of Stallone. He is subsequently hunted down, imprisoned, and, at the end of the term, reunited with his lover. But, in the process, director Balu Mahendra turns upside down some of the stale conventions of Kerala's "heroic" cinema, bringing dialogue close to life and making violence believable on screen.

If Yatra had been a forerunner of the sweeping changes in audience preferences, there have been a host of other films pointing invariably in the same direction. Notable among them is Nokatha Dooratu Kannum Natu, made by young film maker Fazil, which caused a stampede at the box-offices despite the fact that his script does not have a male lead. Nokatha's story revolves around the loneliness of an old woman, played with a great eclat by the faded star Padmini. It had superb performances all around, particularly by Nadiya Moidu, a vibrant teenager who played the old woman's granddaughter. The point is,



Lawyer-turned-film actor Mammootty: new icon of Malayalam cinema

Nokatha became a runaway hit without any of the conventional ingredients of commercial cinema—such as the usual burlesque, the running around trees, the heavy doses of oratory and display of gladiatorial skills.

The change has been all-embracing, and only those who have adapted their art to the times have survived. I.V.Sasi, whose Her Nights rode the crest of an erotic wave in Malayalam cinema, now makes films where the heroine does not even drop the pallav of her sari. Instead, in his latest Kanamarayatu, Mammootty plays a middle-aged bachelor reluctant at first to be seduced by a luscious 18-year-old but who later on succumbs to her charm in the Mills and Boon tradition. The story-line may be banal, but it has worked at the box-office. In his latest Karimbin Poovin Akkare, Sasi blends a streak of villainy with machismo in hero Mohanlal who rapes a woman, kills her husband, puts the girl in a brothel and yet manages to ride into the sunset. And the producer goes laughing to the bank.

Says Sasi: "The concept of the hero has totally changed. The hero is no longer a chocolate-faced do-gooder. In fact there is only a thin dividing line left between him and the villain." His theorisation is not plain academic. The acceptance of the mingled yarn on screen now looks complete with the matinee crowd, which forms the hardcore film-going audience in Kerala's matrilineal society, lapping up the new films. And if they have rejected the aura of a Prem Nazir, they have pulled into limelight the likes of Mammootty, Mohanlal and comedian Balachandra Menon. Even the art-conscious parallel cinema is now waking up to the new realities. G. Aravindan, the acclaimed maker of many a Malayalam masterpiece, has decided to cast Mammootty in his latest film.

With the new personalities blitzing their way into the limelight, a lot of film conventions have changed too. Gone are the garish costumes, the outrageously extravagant sets and the soft-focus photography. In Kathode Kathoram, Mammootty is shown wearing the same mundu (dhoti) and kurta throughout the film. A mature actor like Gopi, who won the Bharat award for best acting in Adoor Gopalakrishnan's classic, Kodiyettam, does not have to hide his bald pate under a wig any longer.

Nazir, at the other end of the spectrum, is a sad man now. His decline started in 1984 when Pushparajan, a mindless extravaganza, bombed at the box-office. He flirted briefly with the anti-hero role, but it failed to click. Finally he had overpriced himself, charging a kind of remuneration—since film budgets seldom exceed Rs 14 lakh—which Malayalam cinema could not permit.

But now, with the whirligig of show business taking a new course in the coastal state, the question that looms largest is: whether the new attraction for naturalism will survive? The coming of age of Malayalam cinema will depend to a large extent on whether the new breed of film makers can stay close to life and yet sell their products. If they fail, the era of melodrama will only return in a new garb.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI in Trivandrum

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FOR SOME MEN THINGS ALWAYS GO SMOOTHLY

First night tickets.
Par for the course at golf.
And the rich, mellow experience of a truly great smoke. For some men, it all comes very,
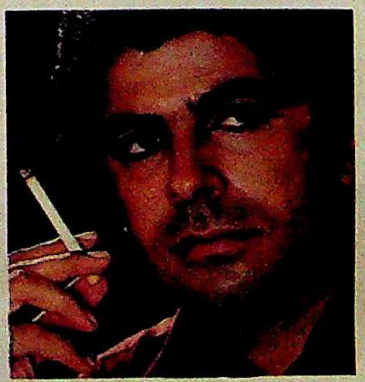
very smoothly.



Wills Filter Kings
Smooth. Very smooth

STATUTORY WARNING
CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

WFK-5950

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

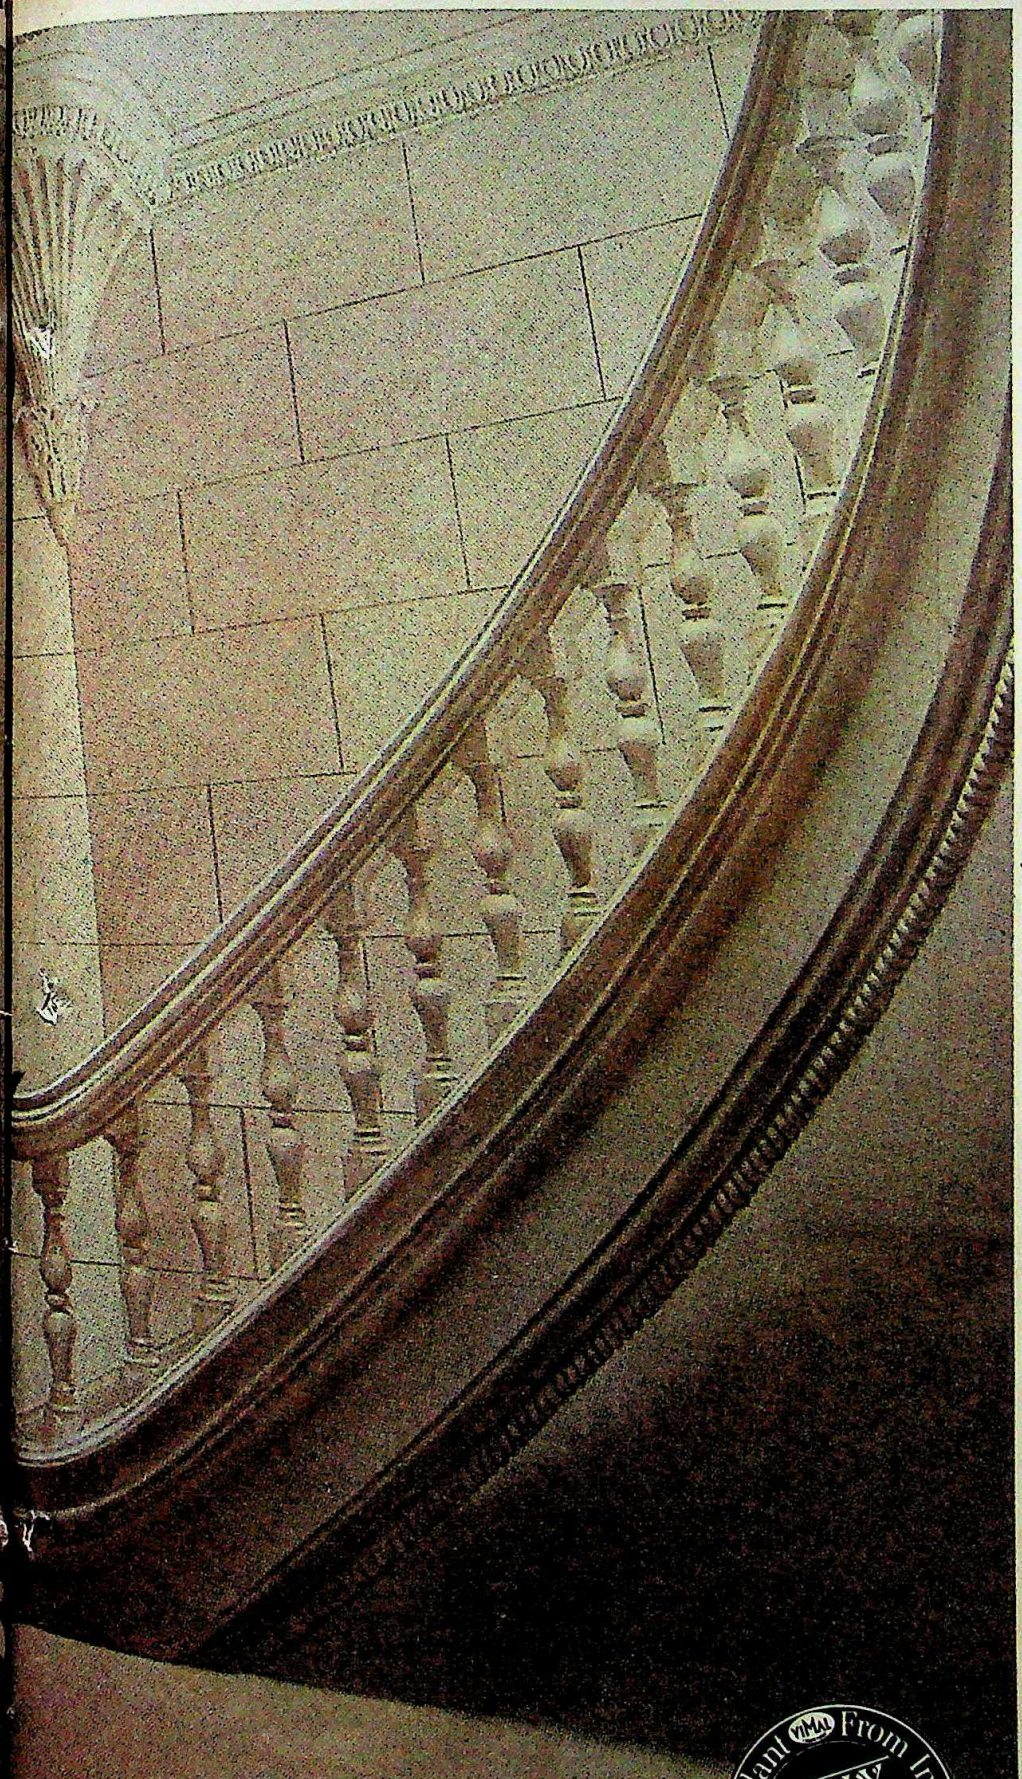
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In the world of Indian Worsted Suitings, millenniu as

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...as set in. Literally. From Vimal.



Millennium

Created for a few discerning wardrobes in India. Just a few.

Millennium

The most splendid suiting material money can buy in India. As unique as your lifestyle. And as priceless.

Millennium

Made from rare'living fibres'. Camel Hair, Cashmere and others. The fibres that went into the apparels of legendary kings.

Millennium

Brought to you today by Vimal. To give you the poise that puts reverence in the eyes of the world. As only Vimal can.

VIMAL®
A RELIANCE PRODUCT

WORSTED SUITINGS

The commitment to excellence continues

Available at very very select Textile Showrooms in India.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul ... Collection, Haridwar

Mudra: A-RTL-2731

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UNISTAR®
FLAMUNI CABLES

Here is the range:

FLAMUNI FR
(Flame Retardant Cable):
With reduced smoke and gas emission, will not propagate flame in a fire situation.

FLAMUNI HF
(Halogen Free, Low Smoke Cables):
Specifically designed, range of flame retardant miniature and control cables offering low smoke and low corrosive gas emission-characteristics. Ideally suited for use with instrumentation and electronic equipment where exposure to corrosive gas generated in a cable fire may cause extensive corrosion damage to the delicate equipment installed.

FLAMUNI FS
(Fire Survival Cables):
Specially designed fire resistant cables for use in situations where it is essential to maintain emergency power during and after a fire to enable a controlled shutdown of process equipment and orderly evacuation of personnel.

Avoid fire risks in Power Plants, Refineries, and other industrial undertakings by specifying

UNISTAR®
FLAMUNI CABLES

AMA-UC-277X

UNIVERSAL CABLES LIMITED.

P.O. Birla Vikas, Satna-485 005 (M.P.)
Tel. 2551, 2552, 2708
Telex No. 0766-202

BOMBAY: Industry House, 159 Churchgate Reclamation, Bombay-400 020.
Tel. 202 6340, 202 8019, 202 3170.

BANGALORE: 5, Palace Cross Road, Bangalore-560 020. Tel. 362674, 368179.

CALCUTTA: 27-B, Camac Street, Calcutta 700 016. Tel. 44-4351.

MADRAS: 20, Greams Road, 1st Floor, P.B. No. 737, Madras-600 006.
Tel. 472427, 477551.

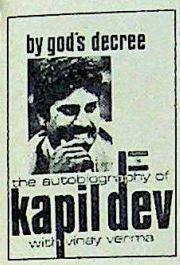
NEW DELHI: UCO Bank Building, Parliament Street, New Delhi-110 001.
Tel: 384851, 382750.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Howzzatt!

BY GOD'S DECREE
by KAPIL DEV with VINAY VERMA
Harper & Row
Pages: 104



WHAT in heaven's name is a combative and earthy cricketer like Kapil Dev doing with a book titled By God's Decree? Quite frankly, it is doubtful if India's current cricket captain knows the answer either. Or, if he does, it is as cleverly concealed within the sparse pages of his long-awaited autobiography as one of his dreaded in-swingers. The title, thus, is about as misleading as the blurb proclaiming it to be the autobiography of one of the country's most controversial and gifted cricketers.

God, in whatever form or substance, has nothing at all to do with Kapil's stormy entry into the Test arena. It was, as the book explains, largely the encouragement and prodding from his elder brother, and later, the coach of the Chandigarh Cricket Club, D.P.Azad. Neither can this book by any yardstick, be classified as an autobiography. It is instead, a rambling, disjointed mixture that appears to have been written by a tourist guide masquerading as a penny ante philosopher masquerading as a cricketer.

The problem, inevitably, is that it is instantly obvious that the book is not Kapil Dev's but Vinay Verma's, an Indian businessman settled in Australia for the last 15 years. The overall effect is that of a substitute player going out to play a Test match on behalf of Kapil Dev while he himself busily scribbles autographs in the pavillion. The other problem is that the book has been clearly written for a foreign (read Australian) audience. The publishers, the Australian branch of Harper & Row, have very carefully timed the release of this rather slim paperback while skipper Kapil Dev was in Australia in person with the Indian cricket team currently on tour down under.

It is difficult to understand the kind of telepathy that must have been employed between Sydney, where Verma resides, and Chandigarh, Kapil's home town, since the style and substance of the book is clearly as alien to the unsophisticated Haryanvi lad as a can of Fosters beer. There is a quite unnecessary description of Chandigarh's physical and architectural origins to start off with followed by a layman's guide to Hindu philosophy and traditions offset by cliched impressions of western society with a little bit of college cricket tossed in to keep up the charade.

Verma's main contribution is the lengthy descriptions of Australian cities and test centres and the character of the Australian people which would have been perfectly suited to a visitor's guide to the country rather than an autobiography of one of the world's leading all-rounders. The visual impression the book conjures up is that of Kapil scribbling notes on his flapping shirt tail between overs and transmitting them to Verma's wordprocessor in Sydney during the drinks break for translation into book form.

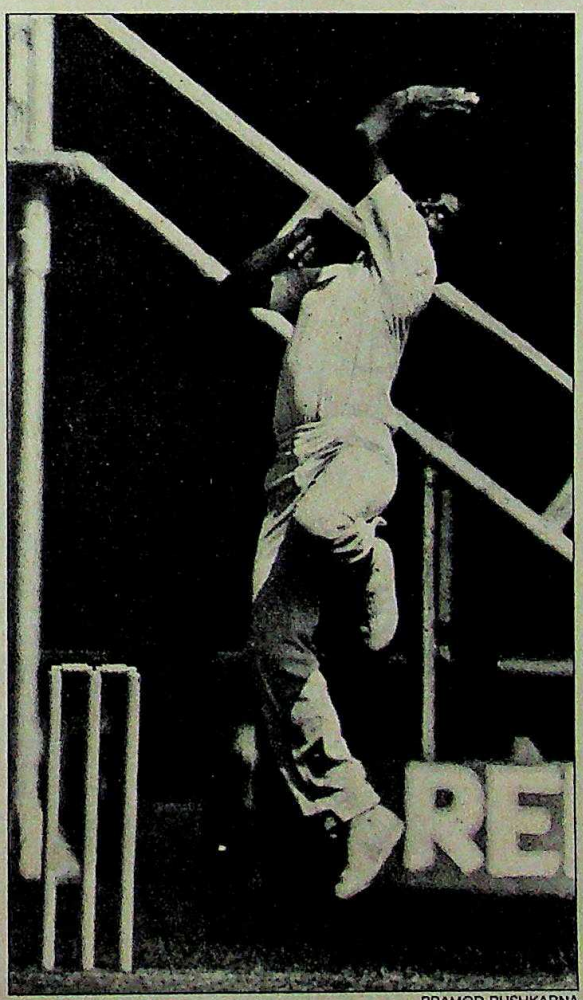
Equally disappointing are the actual cricketing bits, such as they are, when the authors decide to give the reader some of their penny's worth. Kapil steers carefully clear of any issues which might evoke controversy, of which he has had his fair share, even glossing over the Test against England where he was dropped for disciplinary reasons after he threw his wicket away at a crucial stage in the earlier match. He ignores the well-documented efforts of the then Cricket Board chairman, N.K.P. Salve, to bring about a reconciliation between him and the then skipper Sunil Gavaskar. In fact, Kapil goes out of his way to debunk the alleged friction between him and Gavaskar and come across as exceedingly charitable to the rival cricketer in his book.

The cricketing pages in the book essentially offers an abridged version of the highlights of Kapil's cricket career, with the main emphasis being on replaying virtually ball for ball, India's successive wins in the World Cup One Day Championships in England and Australia. But what is clearly lacking is an insight into the man, which is basically the idea behind any autobiography, or the cricketer or the captain. In fact, the impression the book gives is that of a captain going into crucial test series without any strategy, planning or forethought. He admits that in the crucial finals of the World Cup he had nothing to say at the pre-match meeting except to tell his team-mates, "Let's go out and play cricket", somewhat like Lord Wellington telling his men to go out and fight a war before the Battle of Waterloo.

Kapil devotes exactly one paragraph each in the final chapter to his main rivals for the title of world's best all-rounder, Richard Hadlee, Imran Khan and Ian Botham and the only revelations, if they can be called that, are contained in his deliberately diluted opinions on his fellow Indian test cricketers. Perhaps Kapil intends to make amends by his intention to add an additional 80 pages to the book in its Indian version. But by any yardstick, Kapil's original effort can clearly be declared a no ball.

—DILIP BOBB

The author in action: no ball



PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

10^3

And that's not all we have to say for ourselves.

Between February and October, over 1000 SCL Unicorn Personal Computer Modules were sold.
A landmark. A record. Nor is that all.
We're making many more. And 10^4 isn't all that far away.

Because, quite simply, they are the most advanced, upgradable and rugged personal computer modules in India. And much in demand.

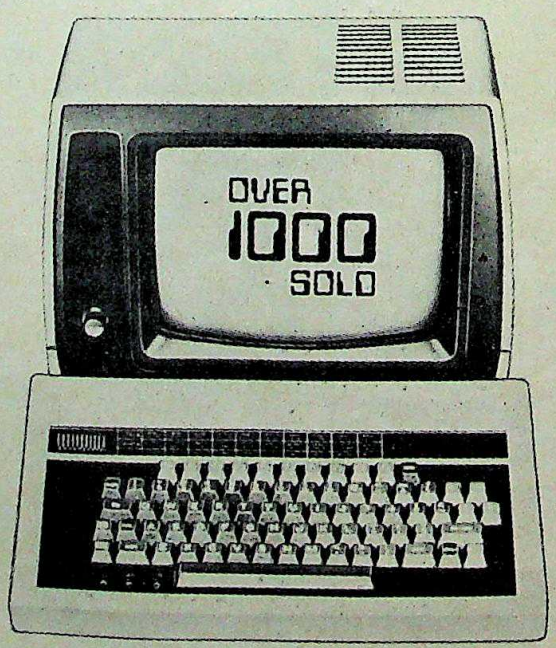
When SCL brought the Unicorn Personal Computer to India, they knew that it was ahead of the rest. Today, India knows it too.

The SCL Unicorn has done phenomenally well. Because it's the result of advanced technology. It's way ahead of the competition in many features like graphics. It's easily upgradable and compatible with the BBC Acorn Microcomputer. It is tough and rugged, built to match stringent specifications.

New technology for the new generation!

The SCL Unicorn Personal Computer Module is ideally suited for use in the Government of India CLASS Programme.

No wonder the education segment, and now the business segment, is switching to the SCL Unicorn. It makes more sense. In more ways than 10^3!



Semiconductor Complex Ltd.

(A Govt. of India Enterprise)
Registered Office: Phase VIII, S.A.S. Nagar-160059 (Punjab)
Tel: 87443,Gram : CHALSI, Telex: 0395-270 LSI IN

THE SCL UNICORN
PERSONAL COMPUTER BASED SYSTEM
Makes life simpler

ASP / SCL / 85

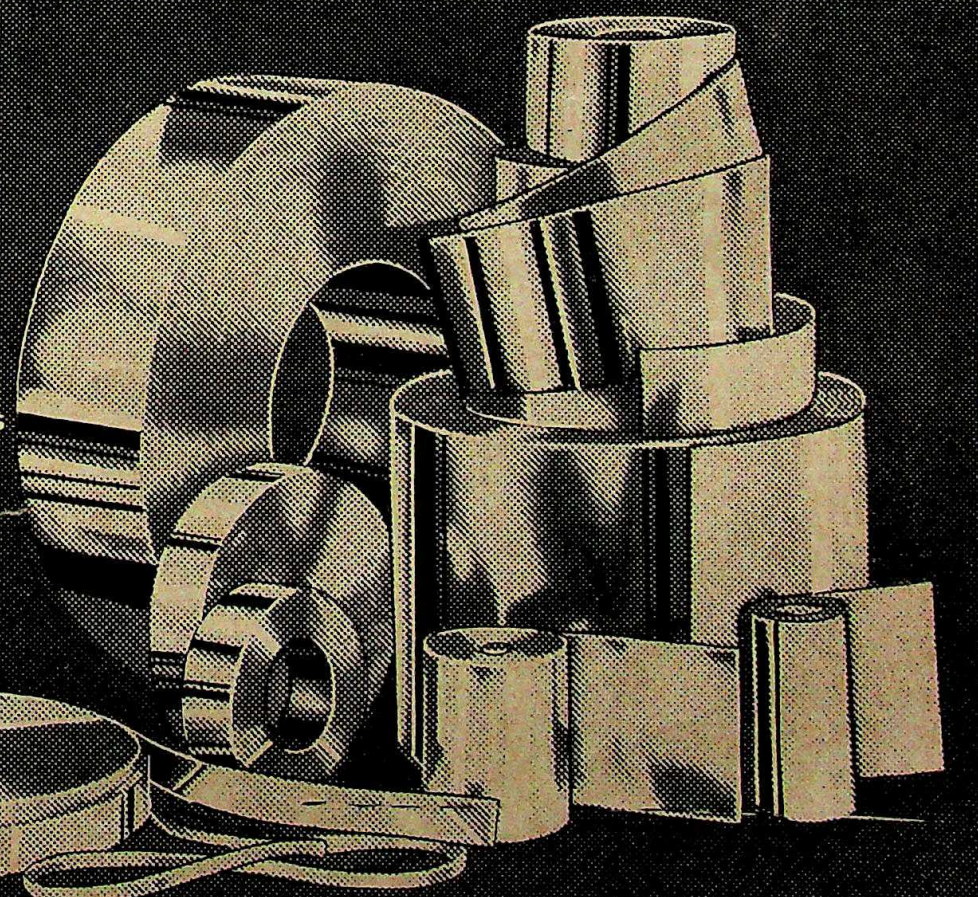
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

to the most exacting standards

BRALCO

copper and copper alloy thin-gauge strips



BMI

BRALCO METAL INDUSTRIES PVT. LTD.

Manufacturers of Brass and Copper Sheets and Strips since 1919.
Reay Road, Darukhana,
Bombay-400 010.

AMA-BMI-87

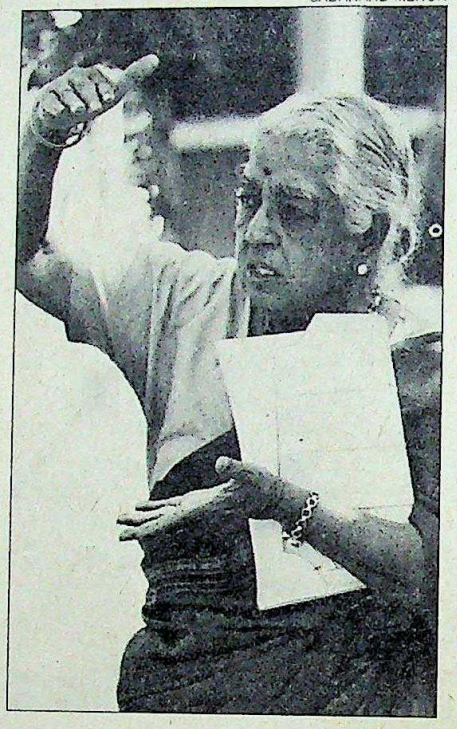
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KALAKSHETRA

Legend of Bharata Natyam

SADANAND MENON



Arundale: high priestess of dance

SHE CAN pass off as a stern grandmother, irate and authoritarian. And her permanent backdrop, Kalakshetra, the school for classical dance south of Adyar in downtown Madras, could be mistaken for a hostel run with an iron hand. The woman is 81: the school is 50. But as Rukmini Devi Arundale, wizened with age and pale with an undiagnosed ailment, appears in view, an overpowering inner rhythm seems to fill the scene. It is as if a perfect mudra has been eternalised, sculpted for ever in the form of one woman and her life's work.

Last fortnight, when Kalakshetra celebrated its golden jubilee with Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi presiding over the function, it was a lot more than a mere cultural event. For, the unique school, with the unique lady at its helm, had not only propagated the classical Bharata Natyam dance but had been its midwife and mother. The 50-year-old school is the surgical scalpel with which Arundale freed the ballet form, which was an exclusive preserve of temple prostitutes, and put it for the first time on the concert stage.

Begun under a thatched roof in Arundale on January 6, 1936, Kalakshetra, or the "temple of the arts", today is the country's most authoritative centre for the teaching of Bharata Natyam. Its alumni include a galaxy of national and international celebrities: Yamini Krishnamurthy; Mrinalini Sarabhai; N.S.Jayalakshmi; A.Sarada; Subbalakshmi Khan, wife of sarod player Amjad Ali Khan; and Uma Rao, a highly acclaimed classical dancer in Singapore. Krishnaveni Lakshmanan is yet another famous Bharata Natyam dancer turned out by Kalakshetra. The 600-odd seasoned danseuses and musicians that have passed out of its portals since it began issuing diplomas in 1960 have all been, in the words of an insider, "apostles of pure Bharata Natyam." But it is the personality of Arundale which, standing in the midst of all these glittering achievements, overshadows it all.

She has steadfastly refused any allopathic diagnosis of her treatment because, as she says, "allopathic medicines are based on experiments on animals, and

INTERVIEW

"Education first and then art"

AGE HAS finally begun to tell on the nimble Rukmini Devi Arundale. A ripe old 81, she is ill and pants after speaking even a couple of sentences. Her legendary footsteps are slow now. Someone has to hold her to walk. But still she knows where she is going and she speaks without the slightest hesitation. Her puffed cheeks and round face give her a sullen look, but as she opens up and speaks out her eyes come aglow. Last fortnight, she spoke to dance critic Sunil Kothari and Madras Correspondent S.H. VENKATARAMANI, on her life, her dance and what the future holds. Excerpts:

Q. What has been your mission in the arts and have you succeeded?

A. We first started with the Besant Theosophical School, and then Kalakshetra was formed. It was education first and then art. We began to teach dance and music for people to acquire proficiency in the performing arts and get oriented to our culture.

I don't think I have completely succeeded. The trends in our country have been going in the opposite direction. We still have to educate people in the fundamentals. It is true that hundreds of our students who have come out of Kalakshetra have really benefited. But then it is easier to destroy than to build. I came into the arts only to help India. My juniors and students are still well-known dancers, here and abroad.

Q. What is the situation in the arts now?

A. If we provide the proper background there must be enough people who are idealistic enough. But then the atmosphere is commercial now. Keeping in mind the prospects of money always, artistes don't want to give themselves heart and soul to their art. If total dedication is there we can cultivate it.

Q. When you started studying Bharata Natyam what was the attitude of the Nattuvanars (gurus)?

A. They were custodians of the art and passed it on to the devadasi class. When people from different strata stepped in they were elated and willing to teach. But it required certain methodology and corelation with theory.

Q. With your arrival Bharata Natyam got institutionalised and became a part of the educational system. What was your major concern?

A. The art had fallen into disrepute by then. It was necessary to bring the best elements back to it. In order to make the art respectable one had to, on account of its inherent beauty and vitality, take away the elements which were not acceptable to society. I am a firm believer in spiritual content of the song. The same songs which would in the hands of the devadasis look despicable were with refinement made devotional. The costumes were in bad taste. The musicians used to follow the dancers. I had to have aesthetics and also one had to bring back the musical instruments like the veena in place of the clarionet. With Kalakshetra as an academy of dance I aspired to instill among the trainees these qualities.

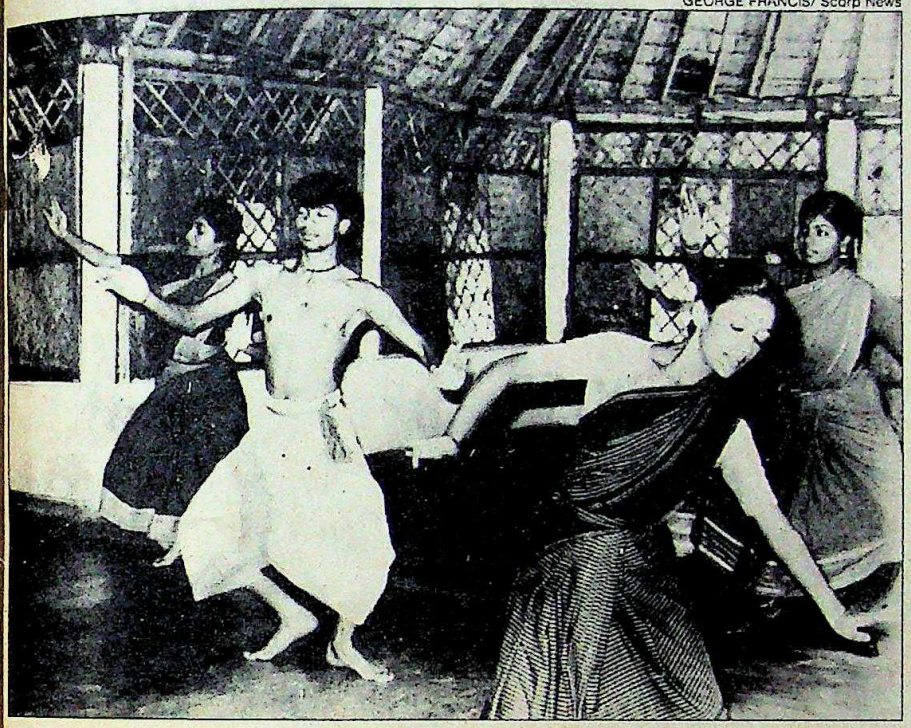
Q. You have choreographed many dance-dramas. Did you wish to revive traditions of Bhagvata Mela Nataka and

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

I'm totally opposed to cruelty to animals." But even though the unknown affliction has slowed down her movements, she must drive down to Kalakshetra every morning from the Theosophical Society building, her residence for many decades. She has the last word not only on the centre's aesthetics but also its administration and finance. And though physically unable to attend to office work, Arundale has a clear grasp of the strategy she wants to follow for perpetuating the pre-eminence of the centre. She recently got the centre's rules changed to transfer all powers in the hands of a new nine-member board of trustees.

GEORGE FRANCIS/ Scorp News



Dance class at Kalakshetra

However, her invisible grip over the affairs of the centre, where some 35 teachers impart music and dance trainings to 150 students, is most strongly felt in the emphasis on formal purity that has always marked Kalakshetra. A 15-minute prayer is still held before any dance can commence at the centre. The inmates are all passionately attached to their art. But one can seldom avoid the feeling of a high wall separating them from the outside world. Kalakshetra is wedded not only to pure Bharata Natyam but also to a brand of religious puritanism whose sole repository is Arundale.

However, Arundale's is not the life of a puritan but that of a rebel. Born of a conservative Iyer family in 1904, there was a touch of rebelliousness in everything that she did, including the whirlwind romance and eventual marriage in 1920 to George Sydney Arundale, the theosophist who came to Madras as prin-

Kuravanji dance-dramas?

A. Not exactly. When I saw Kuravanji for the first time I realised that the tradition was in bad taste. With excellent technique support from the great musicians and scholars, one visualised it in its total impact. I was fortunate to have support from the scholars and musicians. The students had by then acquired the technique to project the dance-drama concept.

Q. Who will head Kalakshetra after you?

A. I have taught so many people. There may be somebody who has the flame. Somehow it may hit a spark somewhere. I know some here are really dedicated. But they may not be well known. Because merit alone is not enough these days. You require showmanship and publicity. But leadership must come out of merit alone.

Q. Are you keen on making Kalakshetra a deemed university—the University Grants Commission (UGC) has already inspected it.

A. It (the deemed university) was not my idea. I didn't want Kalakshetra to become an unmanageable institution. The whole idea of a lot of people managing it (Kalakshetra) makes me nervous. The UGC are considering the matter. But I have set the conditions which will have to be fulfilled if I have to agree to make Kalakshetra a deemed university, not they. I have insisted, for instance, on Kalakshetra framing its own syllabus.

> "The atmosphere is commercial now, even among many artistes. Keeping in mind the prospect of money, they don't want to give themselves heart and soul to their art."

Also we will appoint our teachers entirely on merit.

Q. But will not a deemed university mean better salaries for teachers?

A. More salary... but less culture? For the sake of money, you cannot sacrifice many things worth preserving—art, culture, beauty, refinement, spirituality, character, and so on.

Q. Why have you introduced the new scheme of management of Kalakshetra by a management trust?

A. There were trustees earlier. But a lot of people were interested that the quality of work in Kalakshetra must be safeguarded. We gave a lot of thought to evolving a permanent system of management for the future. We wanted to prevent wrong people, in principle, from taking over Kalakshetra. But our new management scheme is not against any one person. We do not want to get rid of anybody. Every human being has got good points and bad points. I take only the good points. I want everybody to help Kalakshetra.

Q. Why did you rush through the new scheme without even informing the executive committee of the Kalakshetra society?

A. I wouldn't have minded calling them and talking to them. But if we delayed there might have been obstacles in the way of carrying it out. The actual announcement about the scheme may have come quickly, but we had been thinking about it for quite some time.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Little Anita is a moving bundle of trouble, tantrums and a maddening mind of her own.

Getting her to eat is an exasperating experience.

Lips pouting, she refuses vegetables. She nibbles at a chapati and the rest of it goes to her waiting pet dog. In desperation, I shout at her. With a disdainful look, she leaves the table.

I complain to my husband.

Laughing, he says Anita has taken after her mother.

And he's right. I am quite choosy myself.

Whether it's buying a tie for my husband or anything that Anita demands (she never asks), I make sure I get the best.

It's the same with my utensils — made out of Salem Stainless. They don't corrode, stain or develop black spots. Keep their shine even after years of daily use. And strong enough to last a life time.

Now, would somebody come home and give a good talk to Anita?"

Utensils made out of Salem Stainless Steel. Available at all leading utensil stores.

Salem Stainless.
Takes the guessing out of buying utensils.

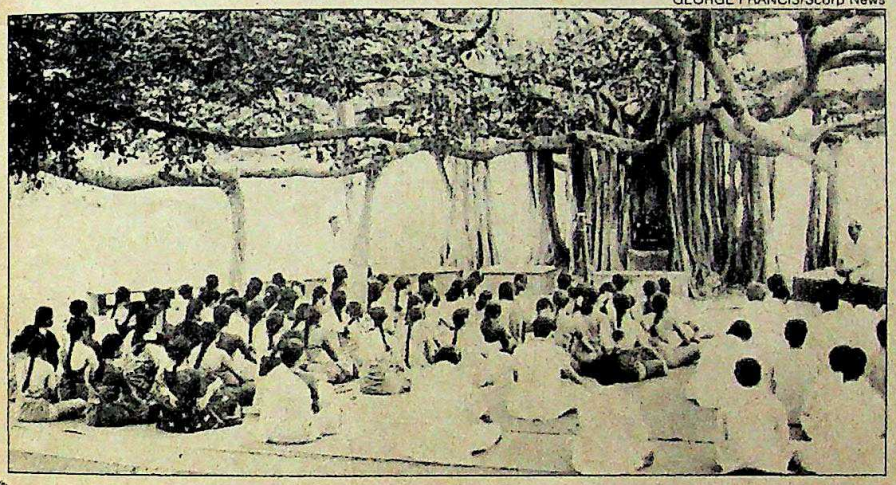
STEEL AUTHORITY OF INDIA LIMITED
A Government of India Enterprise
Salem Steel Plant
Salem 636 013, Tamilnadu

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

cipal of the Theosophical School. It might have been the shared passion for theosophy, animal welfare and vegetarianism that brought them together; but the marriage was strongly resented by the society of Tamil Brahmins. But it paled into insignificance the beside bigger rebellion that was on the cards. K.Sankara Menon, the 78-year-old vice-president of Kalakshetra recalls that the Arundales had gone to see a dance programme of the Tiruvalluputhur sisters, Jeevaratnam and Rajalakshmi, on an evening in 1929. "Rukmini Devi has never been the same person again," he recalls.

GEORGE FRANCIS/Scorp News



Morning prayers at Kalakshetra

She was obviously moved by the grace and poise of the dance form, its great resemblance to the gestures of real life and its limitless dramatic possibilities. So she at once began learning the dance from the veterans: Mylapur Gowri Ammal and Pandanainallur Meenakshi Sundaram Pillai. It created a furore in the staid Madras society. Foremost among those who wanted to dissuade the good Brahmin woman from learning the "art of the temple harlots" were V.S.Srinivasa Sastri and Sir C.P.Ramaswami Iyer. But Rukmini Devi's heart was set. She was determined not only to free the dance form from its narrow social milieu but also its all-erotic connotation.

When Kalakshetra came into being, Rukmini Devi was its only teacher. She had only one student, G.Leelavati. Later on she was joined by Rukmini's niece, S.Radha. She is now Radha Burnier and the present president of the Theosophical Society. But the early years of Kalakshetra were not easy. Before every dance programme, George Arundale would stand up before the audience, ready with a lecture on the social prejudices that had surrounded Bharata Natyam and the efforts made by his wife to defeat them. Slowly, a system which was considered disrespectful and only fit for the devadasis was restored to devotion and dignity. Explains S.Rajagopal, who is now the principal of the College of Fine Arts in Kalakshetra: "Rukmini Devi Arundale has succeeded in eschewing all the lower types of shringara rasa (the erotic mood) and made dance dignified." The shringara is an exposition of unalloyed sensuality. Arundale subtly transformed it into an expression of love of god.

Arundale effectively reinforced the religious element by beginning to compose her own dance-dramas based on Hindu scriptures and epics. Kumarasambhavam and Shakunatalam of Kalidasa, and the Ramayana in different episodes, like Sita Swayamvaram (in which suitors compete for winning Sita's hand) and Paduka Pattabhishekham (Lord Rama's slippers' anointment) were some of her classic presentations that have stood the test of repeated recitals. Significantly, Arundale began changing both the look and the soul of Bharata Natyam. She also brought into vogue the changing of costumes in between dance numbers. Recalls S.Sarada, till recently head of the department of dance at Kalakshetra: "Rukmini Devi used to change costume twice during a recital. She had a green-and-magenta costume made of Benares silk, and a white silk costume in which she would dance the last number."

She changed many of Bharata Natyam's stage concepts. Before her time the musicians and the dance programme conductors, called Nattuvanars, used to stand behind the dancer facing the audience. But she made the entire orchestra sit on the side of the stage, thus bringing the stage backdrop into fluid dramatic contrast with the forms struck by the dancer. She also enforced the "gurukula" system of the teacher and the student living together for the four or five years of the course. And she also enforced the diploma-orientation of western educational system—the best of both worlds.

It is of course for a long time now that Arundale has not danced. Her brief reappearance in the limelight was eight years ago when friend and fellow-vegetarian Morarji Desai began publicly toying with the idea of making her the then ruling Janata Party's candidate for presidency. But her real achievement lies in the unquestionable popularity that Bharata Natyam has acquired in the past half-a-century. "I've taught so many people," she says in her characteristic feeble voice, "there may be somebody who has the flame to carry on from me. Somehow it may hit a spark."

There of course hangs a question mark. She dominated Kalakshetra so completely for all these years that there is no second line of leadership in sight. Also there is the question of where Kalakshetra will lead to from here. In 50 years, the centre has gone on perfecting its grammar and technique whereas the content has always been purely religious. It has put the art into a greenhouse of religion, segregating it from life. Asks Sadanand Menon, connoisseur and dance critic: "Kalakshetra has become insular with its religion. But should not dance reflect the society as well?" Quips Kalanidhi Narayanan, a well-known dancer of Madras not associated with Kalakshetra: "I feel the centre has sacrificed emotion for technique and execution."

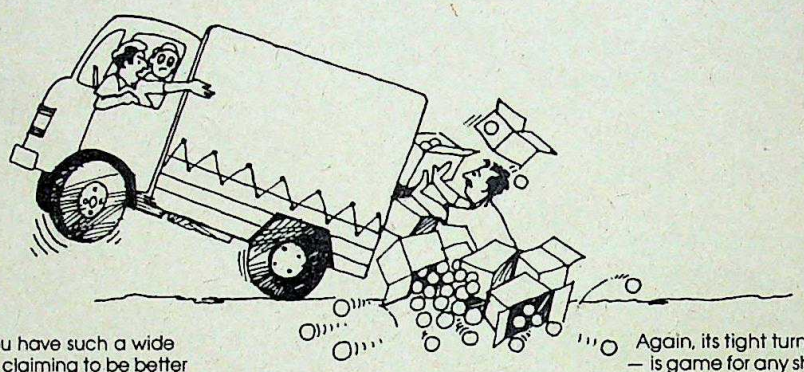
These obviously are questions that are better not asked around the time of golden jubilee of an institution as distinguished as Kalakshetra. The jubilee itself is being celebrated through three weeks of festivity. But as the music of the nadaswaram trails off and the beat of the mridangam ends, Kalakshetra has to decide on its course for the years ahead. Will it infuse into its graceful steps the rhythm of the moving times? Will it venture out of its niche of devotional themes, and explore the society around? Or will it stay insular? A lot of it will be decided by the octogenarian prima donna of Indian classical ballet who has often combined fixity and flux in her life as well as her art.

—S.H. VENKATARAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

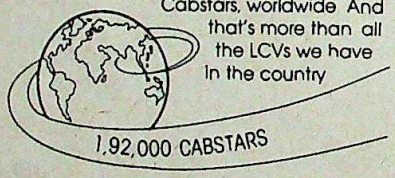
The difference between the light commercial vehicle and...



Never before did you have such a wide choice of LCVs. Each claiming to be better than the other. But beware. Check the facts.

Allwyn Nissan Cabstar : the only competitively priced, proven vehicle, with the latest technology

Priced lower for the class of features offered, Allwyn Nissan Cabstar is a proven product of pioneering Nissan technology, testified by the performance of over 1,92,000 Cabstars, worldwide. And that's more than all the LCVs we have in the country.



One that's worth two

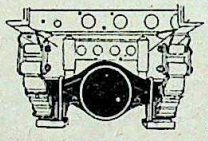
It's like a medium-duty vehicle – with a better fuel efficiency than that of a LCV. How?

It's the only proven vehicle with a rated payload of 3 tonnes – with the ability to carry more.

Result : it takes, in one trip, the entire load that you would need two LCVs to carry ... Double the load without any extra fuel consumption. What's more, it offers you the flexibility of operating a wide range of loads, from one tonne upward, extremely economically. Because, its engine is highly fuel-efficient, compact and vibration-free. Plus, it has over-drive facility in the gearbox and a small knob to easily adjust 'idling speed', both features adding to fuel-saving. No wonder, over 600 proud owners of Cabstar have expressed their delight on this score.

Strength that others can't match

The Cabstar engine is extremely powerful – with 75 HP. Power that's backed up by many unmatched features apparent from just one quick look.



A pressed steel rear axle that's 1½ times stronger. Springs that are 3 times stronger. A chassis with double the strength. A single-piece propeller shaft that is 50% bigger and two times stronger. A corrugated body for maximum strength – to take all the heavy loads, a remarkable vehicle that does the job of two LCVs single-handed – for double the return – on the lowest maintenance cost. Because, Cabstar is specially engineered to last longer under Indian road, load and operating conditions.

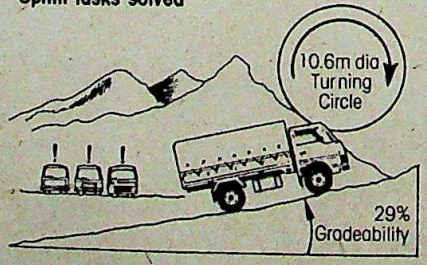
Uphill tasks solved



Its gradeability is 29%. Result : it climbs where other LCVs struggle.

Again, its tight turning circle – 10.6m – is game for any sharp bends. And all wheels have dual-line circuit brakes, absent in some of the latest vehicles, wheels, as against the conventional four make tyres last longer, aided by uniform load distribution ensured by the structure of the vehicle.

Easy does it

A major constraint overcome. Low step platform with three sides opening, makes loading, unloading easier and faster.

A nice place to work

Unlike other LCVs, a noise, vibration-free spacious cab, adjustable seats, the latest dashboard instruments, all-weather ventilation, single piece windshield, easy steering and a hundred and one innovative features, make driving safe, and a real pleasure.

The right commercial vehicle

Allwyn Nissan Cabstar easily wins on price to performance ratio... More load at less fuel. Minimum maintenance cost and excellent dealer network for efficient after-sales service. Ready availability of spares. Greater versatility and reliability. Sleek look. Tomorrow's design features. Yet priced low ... That's Allwyn Nissan Cabstar, the Right Commercial Vehicle, more profitable for diverse transportation needs.

Adaptable to a wide range : Pick-up Van, Mail Van, Cash Van, Mini Bus, Ambulance, Municipal Van, Tanker, Police Van.

For further details, and literature, contact your nearest dealer.

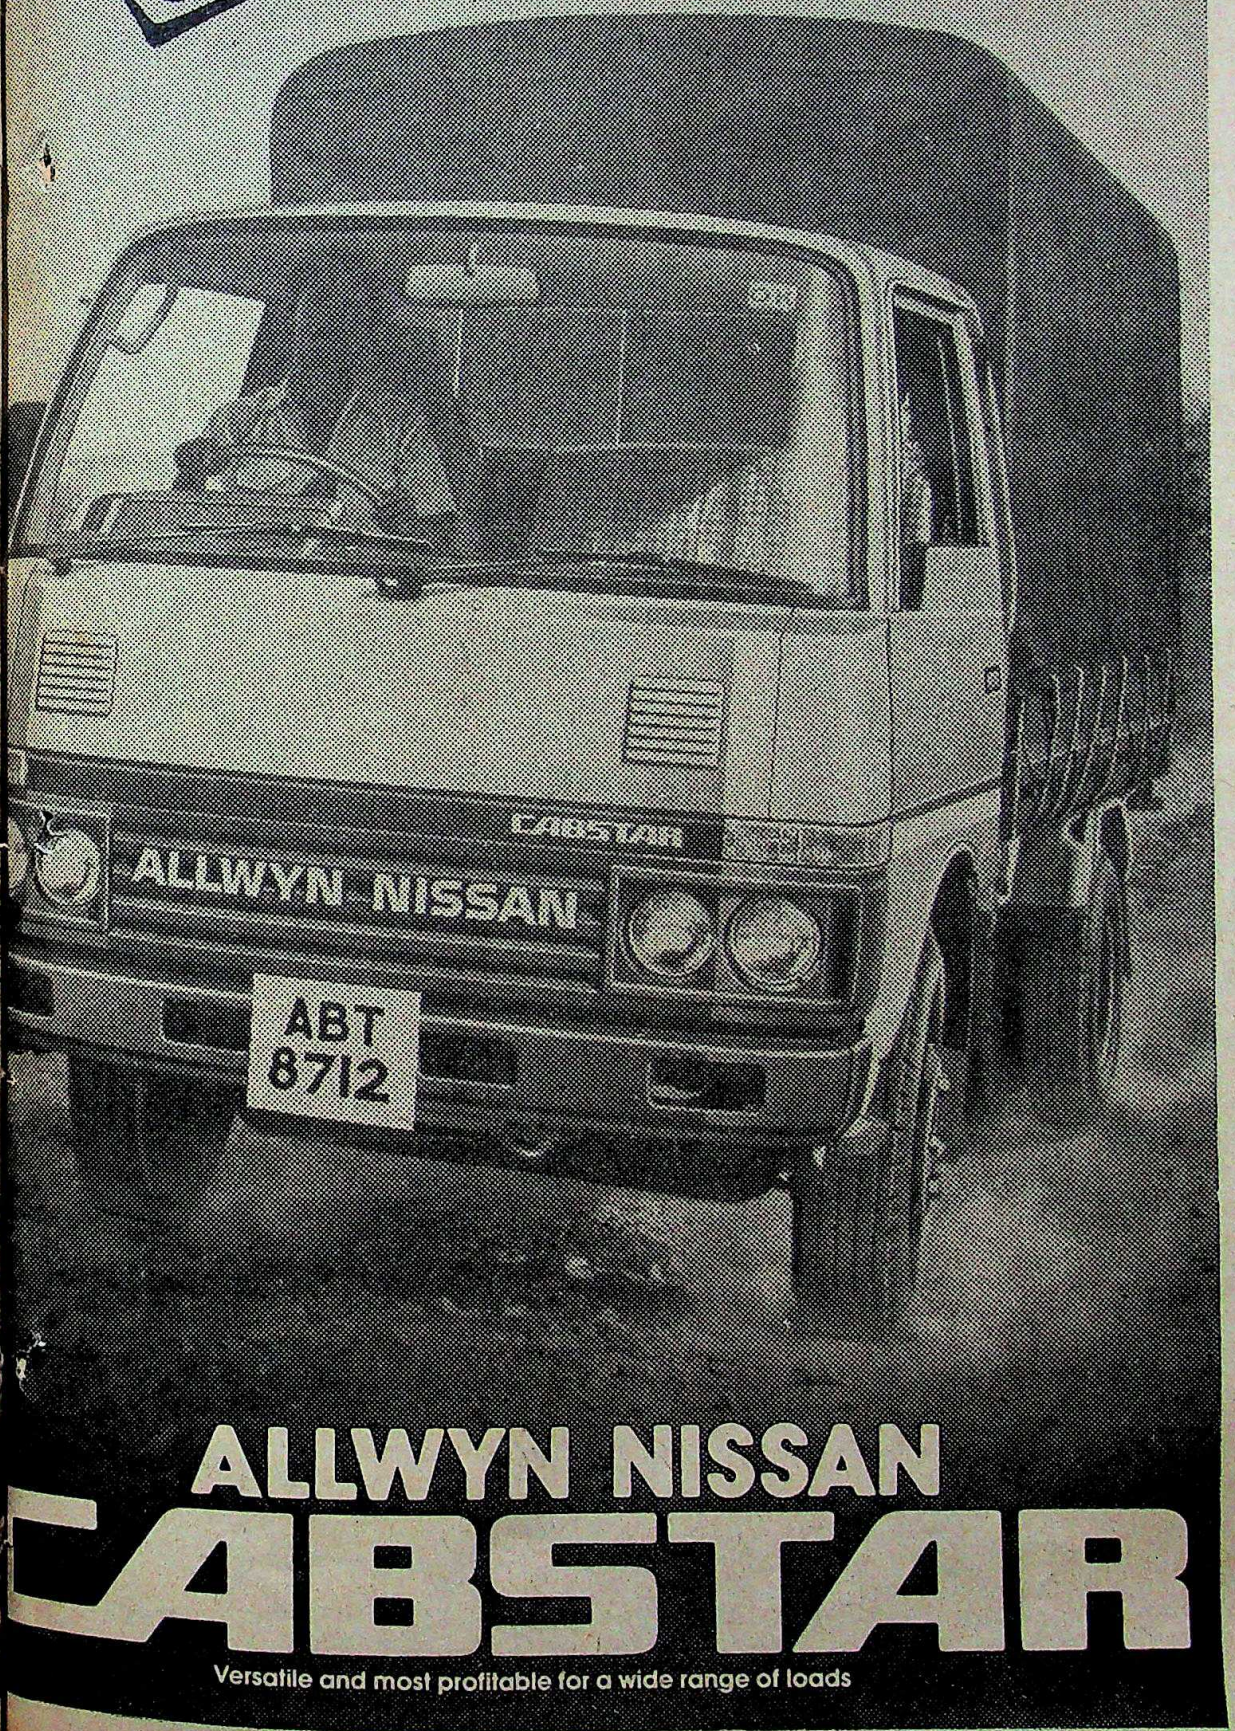
NISSAN

ALLWYN NISSAN LIMITED
Allwyn Bhavan, Sanathnagar
Hyderabad - 500 018 (A.P.)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ne right commercial vehicle



ALLWYN NISSAN
CABSTAR

Versatile and most profitable for a wide range of loads

SAA/AN/5742

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MYSORE ANTIQUES

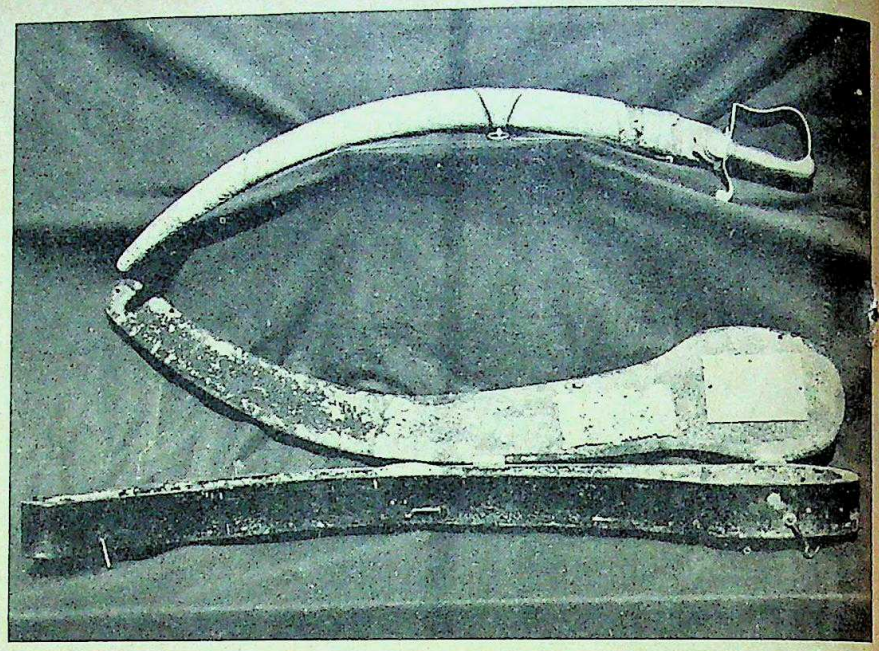
Rich Haul

UNEASY lies the head that inherits the crown jewels. And for Srikanta Datta Narasimharaja Wadiyar, the chubby scion of the late Mysore maharaja and a member of Parliament, the unease must have grown last fortnight after the Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) raided the houses of former palace associates and unearthed a king's booty. Among the prized items seized were: a sword said to belong to Tippu Sultan, the valiant former ruler of Mysore, a 14th century metal idol of Shiva, a rare painting of the Mysore palace estimated to be 400 years old and playing cards belonging to the Adil Shahi rulers. Ironically a majority of these items were seized from a temple in Mysore which was at one time presided over by the Rajguru or chief priest of the late Mysore maharaja.

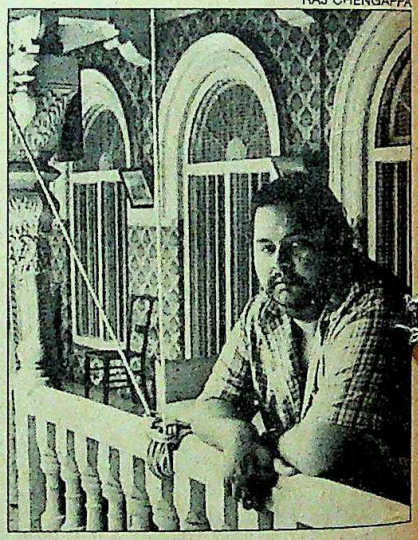
But Wadiyar, who is away in London, can rest easy for a while because so far the CBI has not come up with any evidence to implicate him. R. Srikumar, the bespectacled superintendent of police, CBI, said: "We cannot prove as yet that Wadiyar had any knowledge of these items leave alone their sale." The raids were in fact prompted by a letter in June last written by Karnataka Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi alleging that Wadiyar was selling away priceless artefacts. Rajiv had asked the CBI to investigate the charge.

But Wadiyar's respite might be short-lived. Despite the 1972 Antiquities Act compelling everyone who owns an antique of more than 100 years old to have these registered with the Archaeology Department so far Wadiyar, who is reported to have a whole treasure of them, has not complied with the act. The state Archaeology Department has sent him caustic reminders periodically but Wadiyar has studiously ignored them. Now the State Director of Archaeology Dr A. Sundara says: "We are examining the act to see if we have the power to raid the palace in case Wadiyar does not register the items." If Wadiyar is found in possession of antiquities he is liable for penal action varying from fines being levied to six months imprisonment.

But unlike Hegde, who can get away by hurling charges against Wadiyar without definite proof the CBI has to prove that not only is he in possession of unregistered antiques but he was also involved in selling them. After three months of intense investigation last fortnight's raids is the only gold lining. They found Tippu's sword by pure chance. Masquerading as antique buyers CBI officials were astonished to find themselves being ushered into a temple where a middle-aged priest with the illustrious name of Shilpi Siddhanthi Sri Mahadevaswamigalu is alleged to have offered to sell the sword for Rs 2 lakh. He showed them a room full of antiques and claimed that these items were given by the Mysore maharaja to the chief priest. The CBI officials immediately dropped their disguise and seized all the items. They are now gathering further evidence before charging the swami. When contacted Mahadevaswamigalu refused to comment pleading illness.



RAJ CHENGAPPA



The sword (top); the Shiva idol; and Wadiyar: trouble in store

But if the CBI is yet to come up with facts against Wadiyar it has been receiving accolades from many including the prime minister for recovering Tippu's sword. Although its antiquity is yet to be proven, the sword itself is a real beauty. Sheathed in a gold scabbard with beautiful floral inscriptions the sword was kept in a mildewed box that had a moth eaten note proclaiming that it was 'Tippu Sahibs' sword taken by Sir Arthur Wellesley, after Tippu was killed in the last battle of Srirangapatnam in 1799. Experts say that it does bear a resemblance to other swords of Tippu now housed in several UK museums. But for Wadiyar it might resemble the proverbial sword of Damocles.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA in Mysore

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

odithread®

herever you
ed thread.

ODUCING:
ODISYNTH Synthetic threads
MC Embroidery albums
MC Zippers

DI THREADS LTD.
laboration with
IC, France

Ilnagar, Delhi, Bombay,
utta, Madras, Ludhiana,
pur, Jaipur, Ahmedabad,
re, Hyderabad, Tirupur, galore, Cochin, Patna,

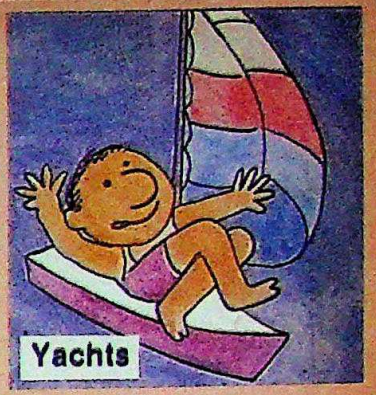
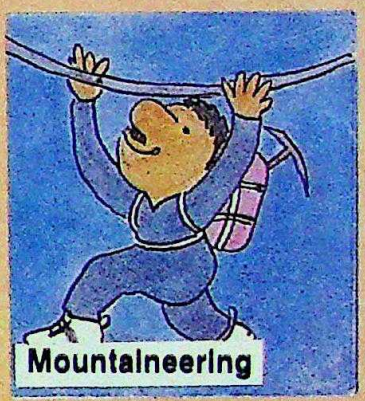
Kite Flying

Dresses



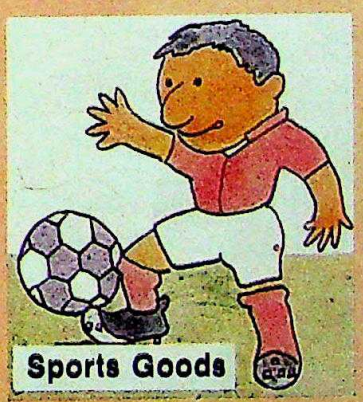
Yachts

Shoes



Mountaineering

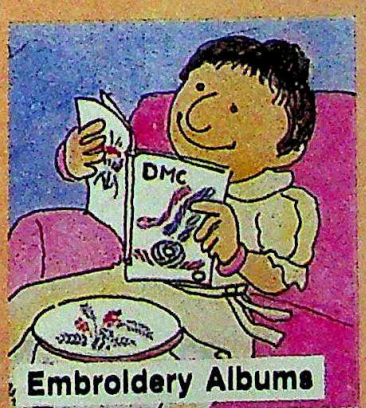
Leather Goods



Sports Goods

Garments

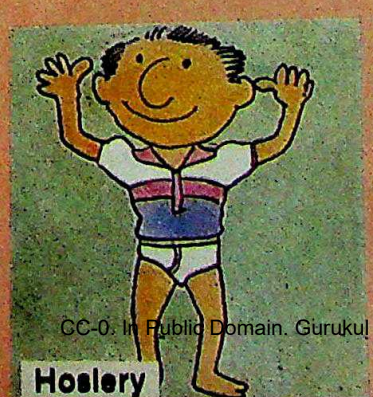
Tents



Embroidery Albums

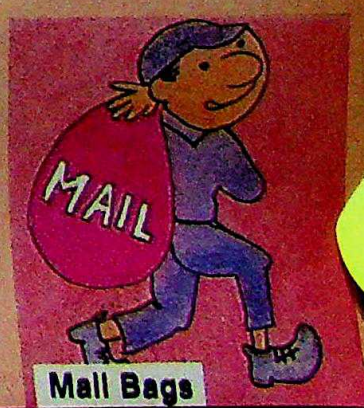
DMC Zippers

Tea Bags



Hosiery

Safaris



Mail Bags

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kan[illegible] Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NEW NAME. SAME HIGH QUALITY.

sakura film's famous quality now comes in a new box with our new name

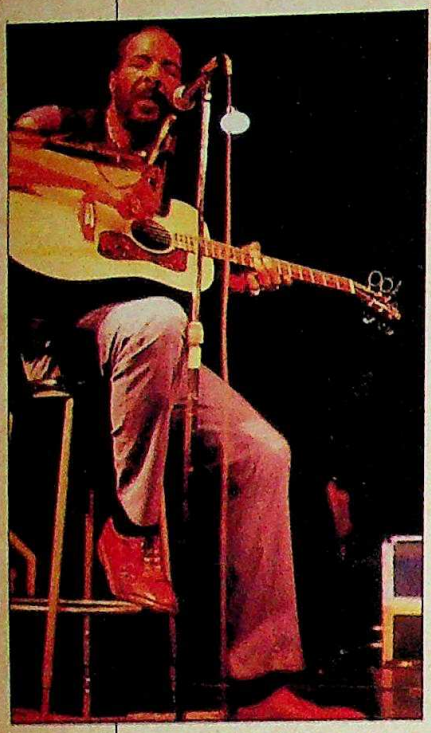
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Havens: rock-a-bye Richie

◆ For the show-starved rock and folk fans of India, he came like Manna from the Havens. And memories of Woodstock came clouding over Bombay's Bandra Gymkhana Grounds. Opening the Wishbone Ash concert last fortnight was certified legend Richie Havens with his earthy timbre and folk fantasia. Richie's rich repertoire had them eating out of his hands as he belted out one scintillating number after another—from Fictitious to Down to earth to Nobody left to crown. It is Freedom, however, that still remains closest to his fans' hearts. When Havens swung to this all-time hit, the crowd simply went wild and just won't let him off. To the endless cries of "encore", an overwhelmed Havens said: "People come to hear the music but they leave with more than that. They hear a part of themselves in the song. And when that happens I love it."

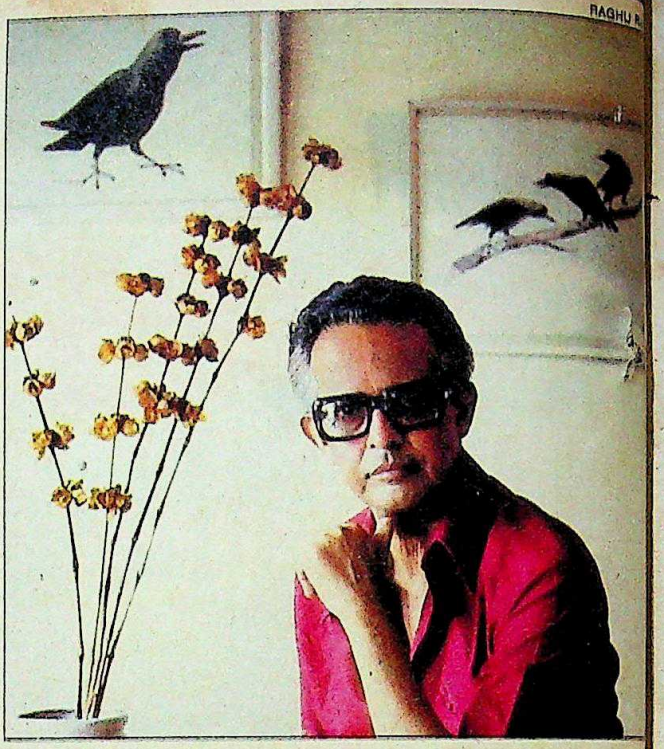
◆ It's a journey into the past. A voyage of discovery. A daughter following in the footsteps of her dead father and discovering facets of his life that had remained hidden to her in his lifetime. It is also a literary reconnaissance since the father is none other than Faiz Ahmed Faiz, the Urdu poet who became a legend in his lifetime. For daughter Moneeza Hashmi, "it is painful, it is fun...it's a debt we have to pay". An educational programmes expert on Pakistan TV, Hashmi was in the capital last month to meet contemporaries and admirers of her famous father for an audio-visual biography she is doing for the Faiz Foundation. Instead, she stumbled on a treasure of Faiz memorabilia and "people who had just been names became close friends". It will be two years before her film is finally complete. Till then, it's a lot of hard work and bitter-sweet memories. "And at times," she says, "I feel so angry that he's not here to help me."

◆ What's the next best thing to the common man? The common crow, of course, the Harijan of the feathered community. So when cartoonist R.K. Laxman is not outlining the misery of the babu next door, he is crowing—not on a ledge but at his eccentric easel. And what emerged from this exercise last fortnight was a flock of feathered friends—in repose, in ecstacy and in cawing ca-

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Hashmi: warm memories

RAGHU R.



Laxman: crowing glory

cophony—at an art gallery in Bombay. And if you thought that the crow is only an ugly nuisance, listen to Laxman who finds it "the most human of all birds". He has been crow-watching for years and has exhibited his drawings the world over. Says the quiet cartoonist: "I have been communicating with them for very long. They come to my window sill and sit there looking at me. It's a joy doing these drawings and relaxes me from my regular political works." The conference of the crows, it seems, is a darn sight better than the conference of chappal-flinging politicians in the state Assembly.

◆ The night was young, the music blared full blast and the floozie on the floor gyrated away to glory. When suddenly our hero strode in, the cymbals crashed and a hush fell. The bunch of cops who had been ogling away at Liza or Suzie or Lily vanished into the cigarette smoke. No, it wasn't Amitabh Bachchan spilling blood and swearing vengeance. It was merely Delhi's new Lieutenant-Governor Harkishan Lal Kapur on his nightly prowl. And the unlucky target of the midnight raid was one of those shady cabaret-cum-disco

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Kapur: on the prowl joints that abound in old Delhi. To make matters spicier, outside was a police jeep complete with an assistant sub-inspector, while some fellow cops took a peek inside. Sure enough they were soundly ticked off. Said Kapur: "There has been an atmosphere of lassitude here. And I want to change that." And as he vowed: "I'm not after publicity. I'm merely doing my job." Well, here's to governor saab and his night watch.

—Compiled by MOHAMMED ASLAM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

2040

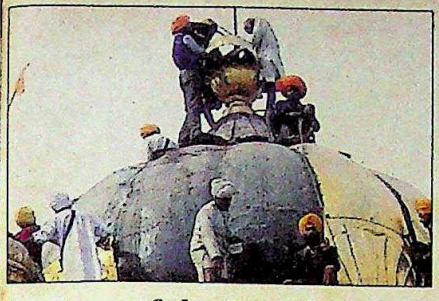
2039

2038

2037

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

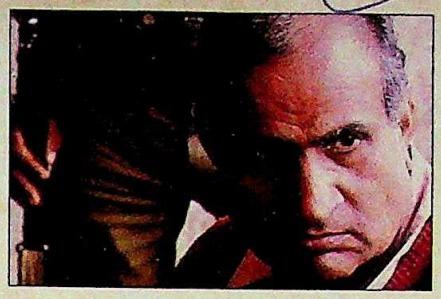
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Capture of the Temple

The takeover of the Golden Temple complex last fortnight by Bhindranwale followers signalled a new crisis in Punjab, just as the failure to transfer Chandigarh to Punjab and Hindi-speaking areas to Haryana marked a setback in the implementation of the accord.

COVER STORY 24



Double Edged Scandal

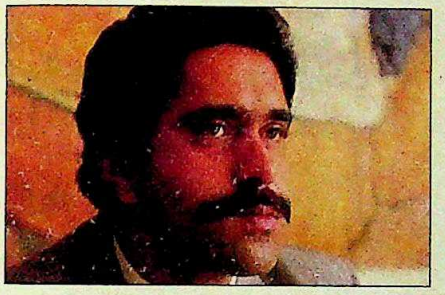
Rama Swarup's arrest last October had not threatened a crisis in the Government. But that is precisely what has now come about. And with it, the discovery that the alleged American spy may in fact have been an Indian intelligence agent. A report.

CURRENT EVENTS 41

The Thinking Man's General

India's new Chief of the Army Staff, Krishnaswami Sundarji, is the thinking man's general. The army can expect major structural changes under the stewardship of Sundarji who has already chalked out the goals for his term in office.

INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT 78



Fighting Spirit

Vijay Mallya, the country's liquor prince, has been in the news for the last year over charges concerning his involvement in the Shaw Wallace affair. A report on the high-flying tycoon, his ambitious corporate plans and an exclusive interview.

BUSINESS 120

Finding a Place

The Indian Panorama section of the Filmotsav '86 held at Hyderabad recently revealed a rising social awareness, expanding budgets and the hope of finding large audiences for the parallel cinema. Glimpses of three films testifying to this trend.

CINEMA 139

Over Rated

They started out as the favourites, and quickly became the underdogs fighting for a place in the final amid persistent reports of dissension in the team. An on-the-spot report from Australia on the travails of the Indian cricket team down under.

SPORTS 153

CONTENTS

COMMENT 11
CAPITALOOK 12
VOICES 14
INDIANOTES 19
COVER STORY
Punjab: Capture of the Temple 24
CURRENT EVENTS
Rama Swarup: Double Edged Scandal 41
Congress(I): Shuffle Puzzle 44
West Bengal: A Sensational Exit 47
Tamil Nadu: Tables Turned 53
Siddharth Continental: Flames of Death 54
Assassination Trial: Day of Judgement 58
Rajasthan: Marriage Mystery 65
Kerala: Cutting to Size 69
Uttar Pradesh: Cabal Strife 71
Mithila: Political Pawn 73
Nek Chand: Love's Labour 75
INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT
General Krishnaswami Sundarji: The Thinking Man's General 78
STATENOTES 62
PHOTOFEATURE
In Search of Miracles 86
NEIGHBOURS
'Indo-Pak Relations: The New Offensive 96
Sri Lanka: Silver Lining 97
GLOBE-TROTTING
United Kingdom: Moderate Targets 100
RELIGION
Ramkrishna Mission: Odd Claims 105
LABOUR
Child Workers: The Wages of Innocence 106
AVIATION
Indian Airlines: Travellers' Checks 112
TRADE WINDS 117
BUSINESS
Vijay Mallya: Fighting Spirit 120
Swadeshi Polytex: A Battle Royal 124
Cigarettes: The Tobacco Tussle 130
Mohan Singh Oberoi: Gracious Host 131
Calcutta: The Takeover Fever 134
The Economy Monitor 136
The Markets: Sunny Days 137
CINEMA
Parallel Cinema: Finding a Place 139
ENVIRONMENT
Sariska: Wild Plans 146
SPORTS
Hockey: Back in Form 151
Cricket: Over Rated 153
DEVELOPMENT
Saurashtra: Tears of Salt 159
EYE-CATCHERS 164

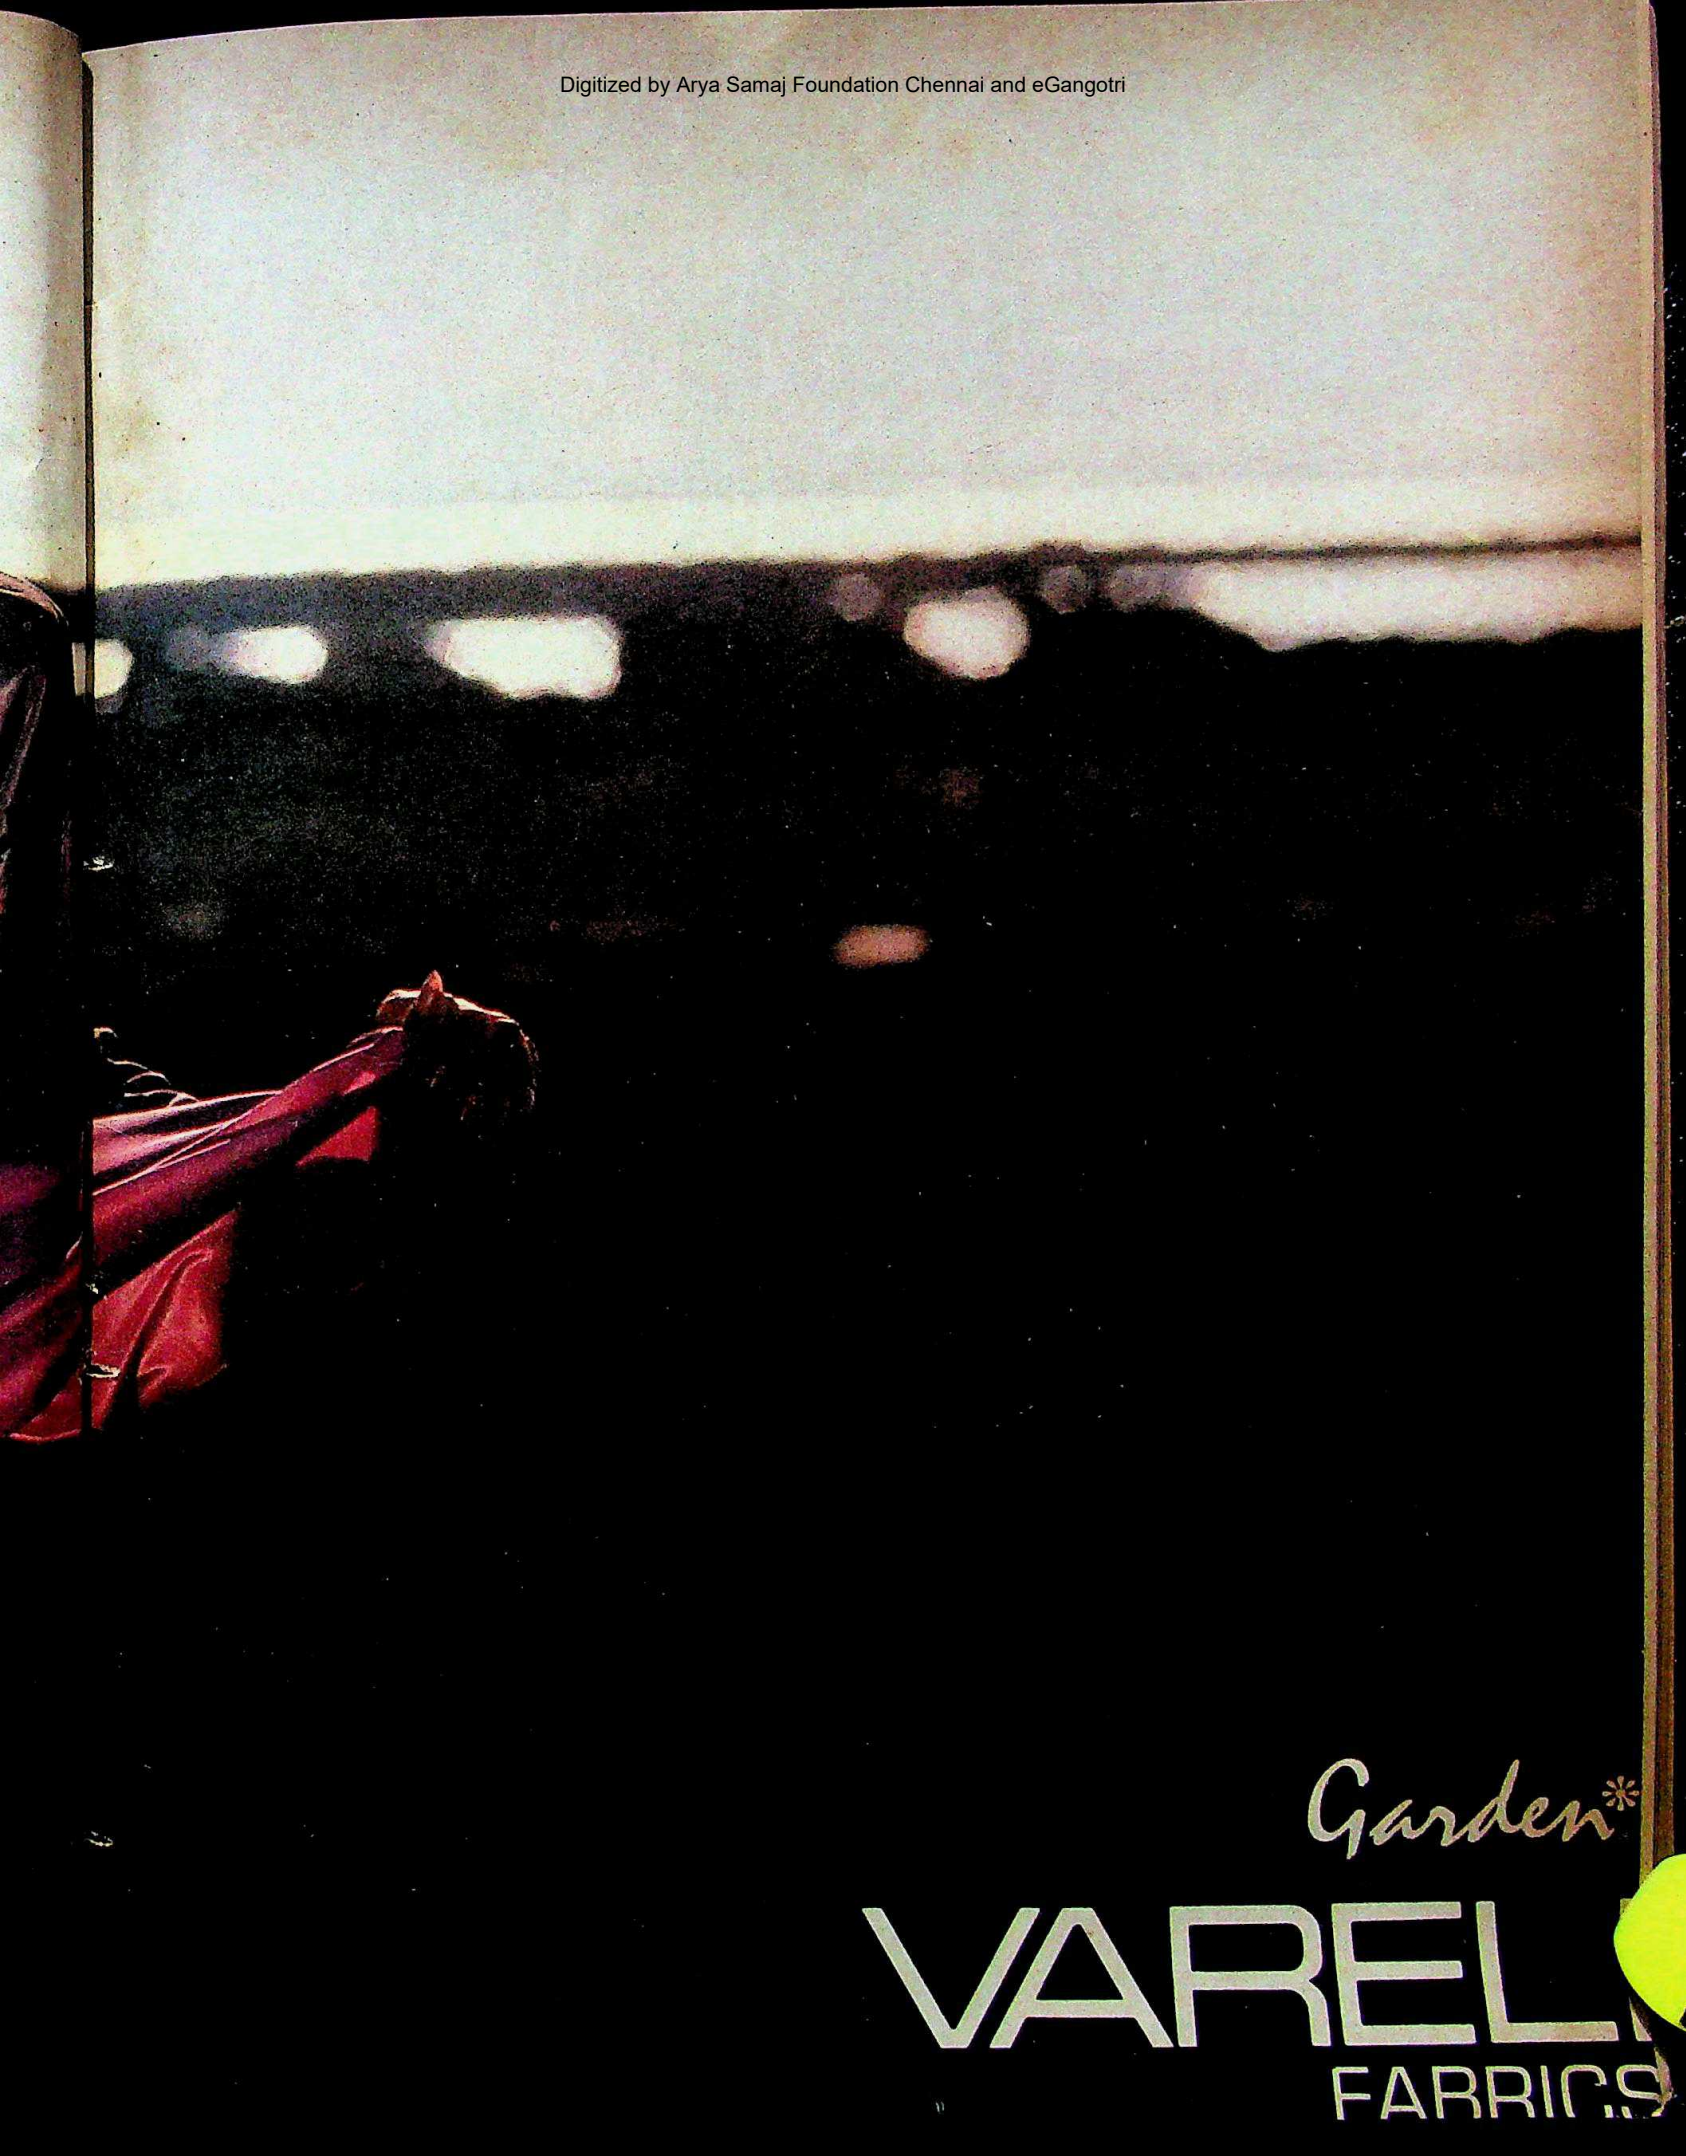
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

G/1103

The new passion...

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Is that really me?"

How Sylvania Laxman brought me out of the shadows

"It was amazing ! I felt I was looking at the real me for the very first time. Could a simple Sylvania Laxman light make such a difference ? My reflection confirmed it. I was suddenly glowing with a new radiance, a new confidence that has stayed with me ever since... like Sylvania Laxman bulbs."

Use Sylvania Laxman bulbs and tubelights and see the difference they make to your life. No matter where you are, good light reduces eye strain, and increases work efficiency and confidence. Sylvania Laxman ensure that all their products meet the most exacting international quality standards. No wonder Sylvania Laxman makes and sells more incandescent lamps than any other company in India. So ask for it by name. SYLVANIA LAXMAN.

SYLVANIA LAXMAN

The name that lights up your life

React/0469/85

BETTER LIGHT BETTER SIGHT

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XI NUMBER 1
FOR THE FORTNIGHT FEBRUARY 1-15 1986

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

MANAGING EDITOR — SUMAN DUBEY
SENIOR EDITOR — T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR — RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR — INDERJIT BADHWAR
ASSOCIATE EDITOR — DILIP BOBB
ASSISTANT EDITORS — PRABHU CHAWLA, AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS — RAMINDAR SINGH, SUMIT MITRA
NEW DELHI — SHEKHAR GUPTA, PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI, RAJ CHENGAPPA
AHMEDABAD — RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE — SRINIVASA PRASAD
BOMBAY — JAGANNATH DUBASHI
CALCUTTA — INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH — GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD — AMARNATH K. MENON
JAIPUR — SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
MADRAS — S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA — FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM — SREEDHAR PILLAI
NEW YORK — MADHU TREHAN
LONDON — RAMESH CHANDRAN

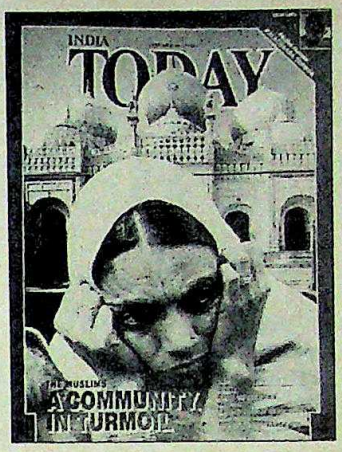
NEWS COORDINATOR — RADHIKA ROY
DESIGN CONSULTANT — AUROBIND PATEL
CHIEF OF PRODUCTION — SHIRLEY JOSHUA, ANURADHA KAPOOR
COPY DESK — ANUPAMA GOPAL, SIMRAN BHARGAVA, ANN NINAN
CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER — BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHER — PRAMOD PUSHKARNA
CARTOONIST — AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER — B.K. SHARMA
LAYOUT ARTISTS — LOKESH BHARGAVA, ANUP GUPTA, PEALI DUTTA GUPTA
MARKETING DIRECTOR — MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY — NEENA MONGIA
DELHI — NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA — MEERA PAUL
MADRAS — R. ANAND
BANGALORE — ANITA BAVEJA

GENERAL MANAGER — CHANDER RAI

• EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-40 CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4, TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI • SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT. POST BOX 69, FARIDABAD HARYANA • TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER. F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE. MIDDLE CIRCLE. NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-4724 INTO IN • ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT. BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2029435. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BOMBAY • 13-K CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 312841, 312070, 321776. TELEX: 31-5308 THOM IN. CABLES: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI • FAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188,477770 CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS • 74/1ST. MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 568448, 579037, 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA: BANGALORE • 12C EVEREST 46C CHOWRINGEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398, 447726. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. CALCUTTA •
COPYRIGHT 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED.
PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA • INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL •



CODE CONFLICT

Your cover story "The Muslims: A Community in Turmoil" (January 31) was very revealing indeed. One cannot but be astounded at the row the maulanas have managed to kick up among the majority of Muslims over the Shah Bano judgement. It is a row which is hardly going to benefit anyone. It defies comprehension as to why the Indian Muslim leadership so vociferously object to the apparently innocuous changes in the Muslim Personal Law when the same have been modified pretty substantially in Islamic countries like Pakistan, Indonesia and Turkey. One only hopes that Rajiv Gandhi, for fear of losing chunks of Muslim votes, does not get pressurised into conceding the demands of the Muslim clergy and do something which might undo the little good the Shah Bano judgement has done. And as you so rightly say, making concessions under political coercion is not such a good policy.

New Delhi — SUSHIL MEHTANI

■ In your cover story, Najma Heptullah says that in Islam marriage is not a sacrament, it is a contract. That does not take away from the fact that it is a one-sided contract. If educated women insist on supporting unjust outworn laws, what hope is there for oppressed Muslim women? It is not immoral for a man to cast off his wife after 43 years of marriage, but it is immoral for her to expect maintenance. What would Najma Heptullah and others of her ilk expect women like Shah Bano to do? Beg on the streets?

Delhi — DEEPA AGARWAL

■ These mullahs are making so much hue and cry only because they want to continue using the Muslim Personal Law as a licence for polygamy and exploitation of women. The Muslim community is by and large illiterate and is under the influence of these religious heads. They want the community to remain backward otherwise their position and leadership will be jeopardised.

Delhi — IQBAL ANSARI

■ It is not clear why the Muslim community did not agitate earlier with regard to Article 44 of the Constitution and Section 145 of the CrPC. What is more intriguing is how the members of Parliament as well as ministers, can agitate against it, both inside and outside the House. A careful analysis of the speeches made by various Muslim leaders—cutting across party lines—makes it clear that the recent agitation is politically motivated to regain the leadership of the Muslims.

New Delhi — DR V. SAGAR

■ Shahid Siddiqui's statement that "every maulana has become a leader now. These people will take the community behind by three decades if controversy is not resolved quickly," makes sense. It is time the Government forgot about its votes and took a firm stand and acted decisively to uphold national integration and secularism.

Kolhapur — TATYA TENDULKAR

■ Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi had said: "It's not for me to codify Muslim Law but some Muslim personality and senior people should come forward and see what can be done." Whenever the issue was raised, the Government had the same to say. Politics and religion should not be mixed or another Punjab-like problem will arise. There is a need for a group of progressive Muslims who can explain to their co-religionists that to deprive Muslim women of their rights is nothing short of an insult to Islam, which is more generous to women than any other religion.

Surajpur — P. RAMESH MENON

■ The best thing that the Shah Bano judgement has done is that Article 44, which remained a dead letter hitherto, is being debated. A country which boasts of secularism must have uniform personal laws for all the communities. This will also help the courts in awarding justice with simple and codified laws around. Thus the present day tendency of the so-called religious leaders to interpret laws according to their convenience will be curbed.

Lucknow — DHIRESH BAHADUR

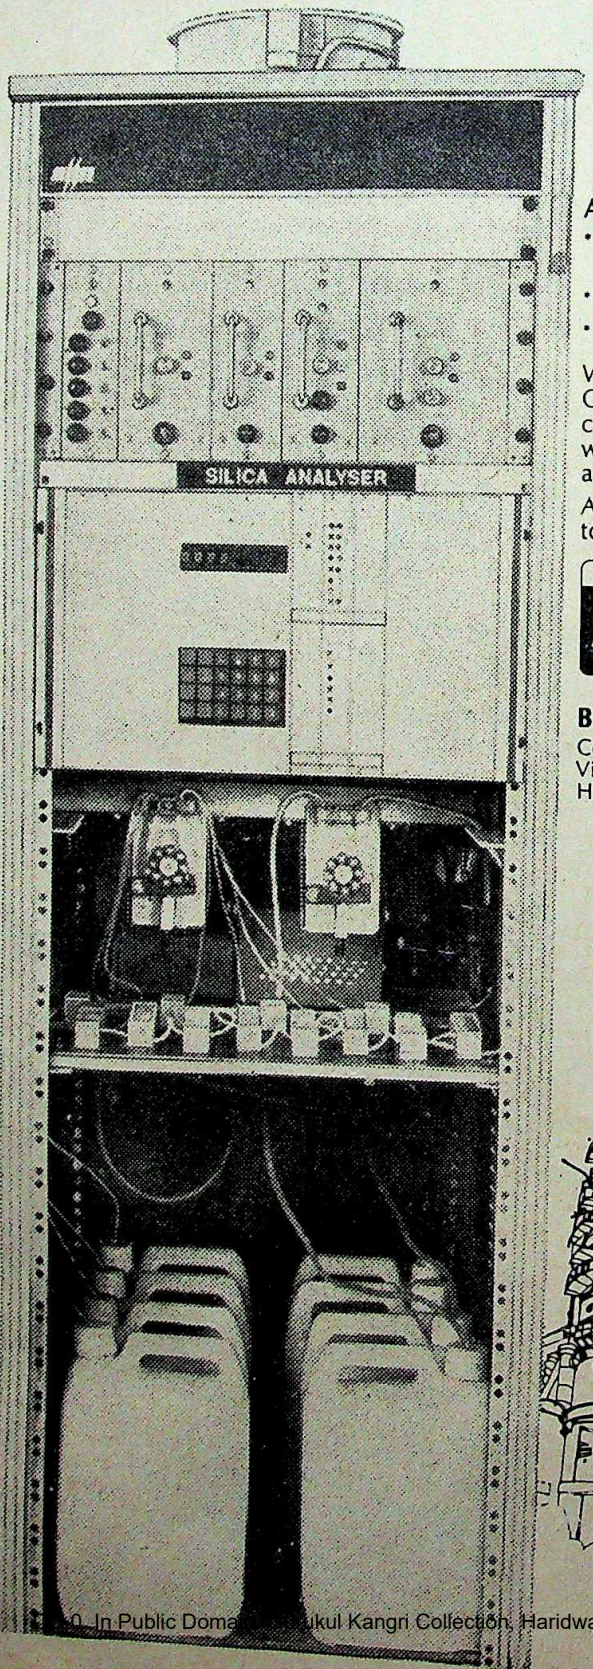
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Water Chemistry now in a new light



BHEL proudly presents Micro Processor-based On-line Analysers – for Silica, Copper and Chloride – to monitor purity of water and steam

A significant innovation, an indigenous R & D success of BHEL that has recently won the Meritorious Invention Award of the National Research Development Corporation of India... On-line Silica, Copper and Chloride Analysers.

An innovation that has done away with the laborious conventional processes that are, in any case, not conducive to measurement of impurities in low levels.

Measurements up to parts per billion

A major state-of-the-art development in water chemistry, these Analysers, based on an 8-bit Micro Processor, are capable of measurements up to parts per billion. A kind of measurement that allows preventive measures — to improve the efficiency of power output.

Advantages at a glance

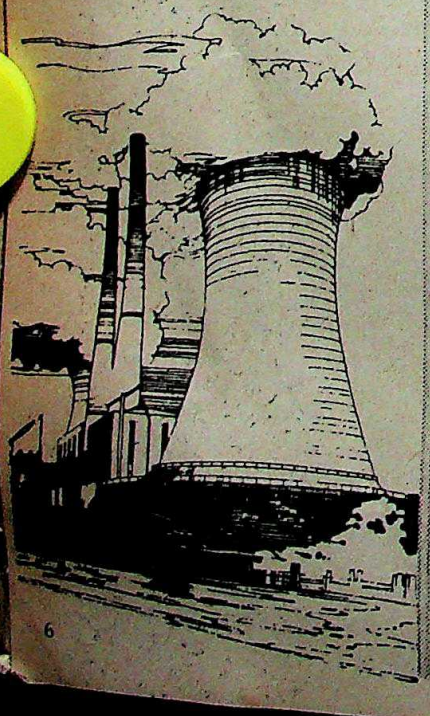
- Accurate measurement of impurities up to parts per billion
- Independent, free standing units
- Ease of operation and maintenance

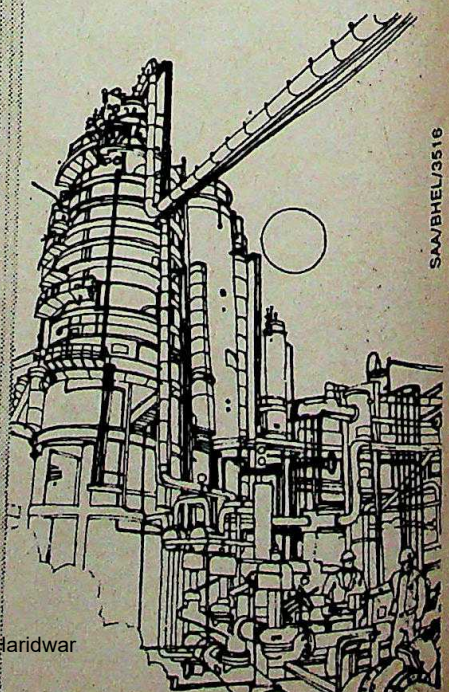
Wide applications : Power Plants ● Chemical Process Plants ● Petrochemicals ● Fertilizers. In short, wherever water and steam purity plays a dominant role.

Available on customers' specifications too. For further details, please contact:

बी एच ई एल
BHEL

Bharat Heavy Electricals Limited
Commercialisation Centre
Vikasnagar
Hyderabad 500 593





SAA/BHEL/3516

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LOOKING FORWARD

The entry of Ajit Singh into politics ("The Rising Son", January 31) can start a new era for the Lok Dal. The party only has people who have come from other parties, so a person beginning his career in the Lok Dal, with a clean image, might prove fruitful for a party which has never seen the face of triumph in the elections.

Surajpur — KAMLESH PRASAD

YOUTHFUL ACHIEVEMENT

"Coming of Age" (January 15) made interesting reading. There could have been no better achievement for the AGP boys in the International Year of the Youth than coming forward to shoulder the responsibility of building a new India. We are sure they will perform well, if not better, surely not worse, for there can be nothing worse than what has happened to the country in the last 38 years.

Dhaligaon, Assam — A. KALITA

■ The Congress debacle was expected when we look towards what the party had given the Assamese over the last seven years. It has once again proved that despite the Congress ruling at the Centre it cannot and should not ignore the regional issues.

Udhampur — KULDIP SINGH

■ The story on Assam was both enlightening and timely. The conclusion drawn by your correspondent, "though now perched atop lofty political heights the student leaders will need to show results quickly...a stiff test for a bunch of men and women with an average of less than 31", is interesting but there is no forgetting that the need of the hour is to mobilise all resources in Assam for economic development of all regions in a balanced manner. Central assistance, in a magnanimous way, would solve the starting problems and be the most welcome step.

Nasik — DEVENDRA BHARATI

POLITICAL GIMMICK

Your Comment "Trial by Publicity" (January 15) puts the basic facts about the tax raids on the establishments of a few well-known industrialists in its right perspective. By giving undue publicity to these raids, the Government is, in fact, turning them into political gimmicks. The only way to find an everlasting solution to the problem lies in making the system foolproof whereby the industrialists cannot bait the government officials.

Manipal — P. MADHAVA RAO

■ In your Comment you consider legalising donations to political parties as a sensible and welcome step. But one tends to disagree with this statement. At best you may call it a better step than under-the-table payments. All business houses are shrewd and if they make any donations they will definitely expect and get undue benefits. Besides, it will induce more chamchagiri.

The political parties must learn to manage their shows with their meagre revenue collections and not spend something like Rs 48 crore in three days, like the Congress(I) did at the centenary celebrations in Bombay.

Pune — M.N. BHIDE

CHAOS AND CORRUPTION

Kudos for your candid and forthright appraisal of the Congress centenary celebrations in Bombay ("Pomp and Chaos", January 15). Beyond doubt, gone are the days when the Congress used to be a symbol of reverence and dignity and Congressmen were synonymous with austerity and unrestrained demeanour. Today when the Congress is celebrating its 100th anniversary, the khadi-clad guys reek of corruption and tend to communicate a semblance of chaos and indiscipline.

Faizabad — ASHOK KUMAR PANDEY

TAXING TIMES

V.P. Singh's draconian measures against alleged wrongdoings in big business ("Raiders of the Lost Tax", January 15) are to be welcomed. But the people will judge his real intentions when he also cracks down on the shady financial dealings of the politicians. He can perhaps make a start with some of his own ministerial colleagues. But will he dare, is what remains to be seen.

Lucknow — M.S. JAIN

■ I appreciate what the Rajiv Gandhi Government is doing for the country and I fully agree with the finance minister's policy of going after tax evasion and coming down hard on those who practice it. But by giving so much publicity to the raids and the wealth recovered, he himself is bringing to light the inefficiencies of his predecessor.

Calicut — B. MANOJ

■ You have quoted the finance minister as saying "industry must create an environment in which the Government trusts them", but the pertinent question is—what is the Government doing for the common man to have trust in them? If it is indeed sincere about eliminating black money, raids should be conducted on politicians and political parties as it is a known fact that they thrive on it. Are the ministers able to account for their assets, and their expenditure?

Pune — A. VIKRAM

STRAIGHTENING FACTS

I was surprised to read "Cut Down" (Indianotes, January 15). The road you refer to was opened by me on December 3 in the presence of about 5,000 people, the entire 9-km route decorated and sweets distributed. Three days before this an old lady was brought in a jeep by some persons and she cut a ribbon in the presence of the driver and some others.

Kerala — P.C. GEORGE, MLA, Poonjar

The error is regretted. —Editor

NEED FOR CHANGE

It is very interesting to read about the Tourism Department of India's plans to attract more foreign tourists to India ("Bracing for a Boost", January 15). It is even more amusing to read about Rs 1 crore being budgeted for an advertisement campaign in the Time magazine. Tourists are not attracted by advertisements but by reasonable facilities. And the Bombay airport which is the gateway for most tourists is in the need for immediate attention.

Only if the tourism babus have the occasion to experience this long waiting time at the airport, will they realise that it is much better to spend the money on expanding the airport and increasing the facilities, than spending crores on advertisements.

Dhahran — M. JANARDHAN REDDY

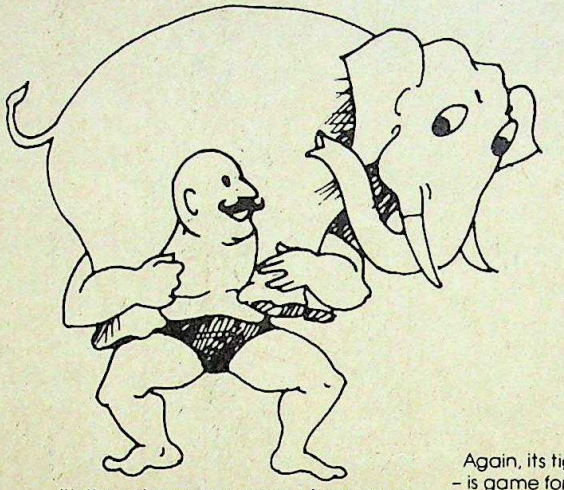
CORRECTION

It is regretted that the mast-head of the magazine Star & Style was erroneously included in the photograph showing pornographic magazines in the article "Sexual Mores: Changing Scene" (December 15, 1985). Star & Style is a well regarded magazine of the film industry and any misimpression created is regretted. —Editor

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Its inner strength is easy to see



One quick look at the sleek Allwyn Nissan Cabstar will tell you what it's made of.

A pressed steel rear axle that's 1½ times stronger. Springs that are 3 times stronger. A chassis with double the strength. A single-piece propeller shaft that is 50% bigger and two times stronger. A corrugated body for maximum strength – to shoulder all the heavy loads, backed up by an extremely powerful engine of 75 HP. Indeed, a remarkable vehicle that does the job of two LCVs single-handed – for double the return – on the lowest maintenance cost. Because, Cabstar is specially engineered to last longer under Indian road, load and operating conditions.

The only competitively priced, proven vehicle, with the latest technology

Priced lower for the class of features offered, Allwyn Nissan Cabstar is a proven product of pioneering Nissan technology, testified by the performance of over 1,92,000 Cabstars, world-wide. And that's more than all the LCVs we have in the country.

One that's worth two

It's like a medium-duty vehicle – with a better fuel efficiency than that of a LCV. How?

It's the only proven vehicle with a rated payload of 3 tonnes – with the ability to carry more.

Result: it takes, in one trip, the entire load that you would need two LCVs to carry ... Double the load without any extra fuel consumption. What's more, it offers you the flexibility of operating a wide range of loads, from one tonne upward, extremely economically. Because, its engine is highly fuel-efficient, compact and vibration-free. Plus, it has over-drive facility in the gearbox and a small knob to easily adjust 'idling speed', both features adding to fuel-saving. No wonder over 900 proud owners of Cabstar have expressed their delight on this score.

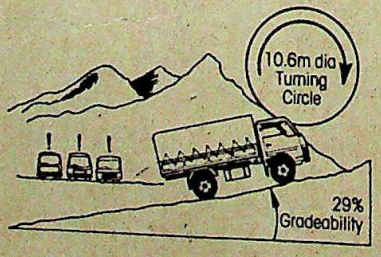
Uphill tasks solved



Its gradeability is 29%. Result: it climbs where other LCVs struggle.

Again, its tight turning circle – 10.6m dia – is game for any sharp bends. And all the wheels have dual-line circuit brakes, absent in some of the latest vehicles. Six wheels, as against the conventional four, make the tyres last longer, aided by uniform load distribution ensured by the structure of the vehicle.

Easy does it

A major constraint overcome: low slung platform with three sides opening, makes loading, unloading easier and faster.

A nice place to work

Unlike other LCVs, a noise, vibration-free spacious cab adjustable seats, the latest dashboard instruments, all-weather ventilation, single piece windshield, easy steering and a hundred and one innovative features, make driving safe, and a real pleasure.

The right commercial vehicle

Allwyn Nissan Cabstar easily wins on price to performance ratio ... More load on less fuel. Minimum maintenance cost and excellent dealer network for efficient after-sales service. Ready availability of spares. Greater versatility and reliability. Sleek look. Tomorrow's design features ... Yet priced low ... That's Allwyn Nissan Cabstar, the Right Commercial Vehicle, far more profitable for diverse transportation needs.

Adaptable to a wide range : Pick-up Van, Mail Van, Cash Van, Mini Bus, Ambulance, Municipal Van, Tanker, Police Van.

For further details, and literature, contact your nearest dealer.

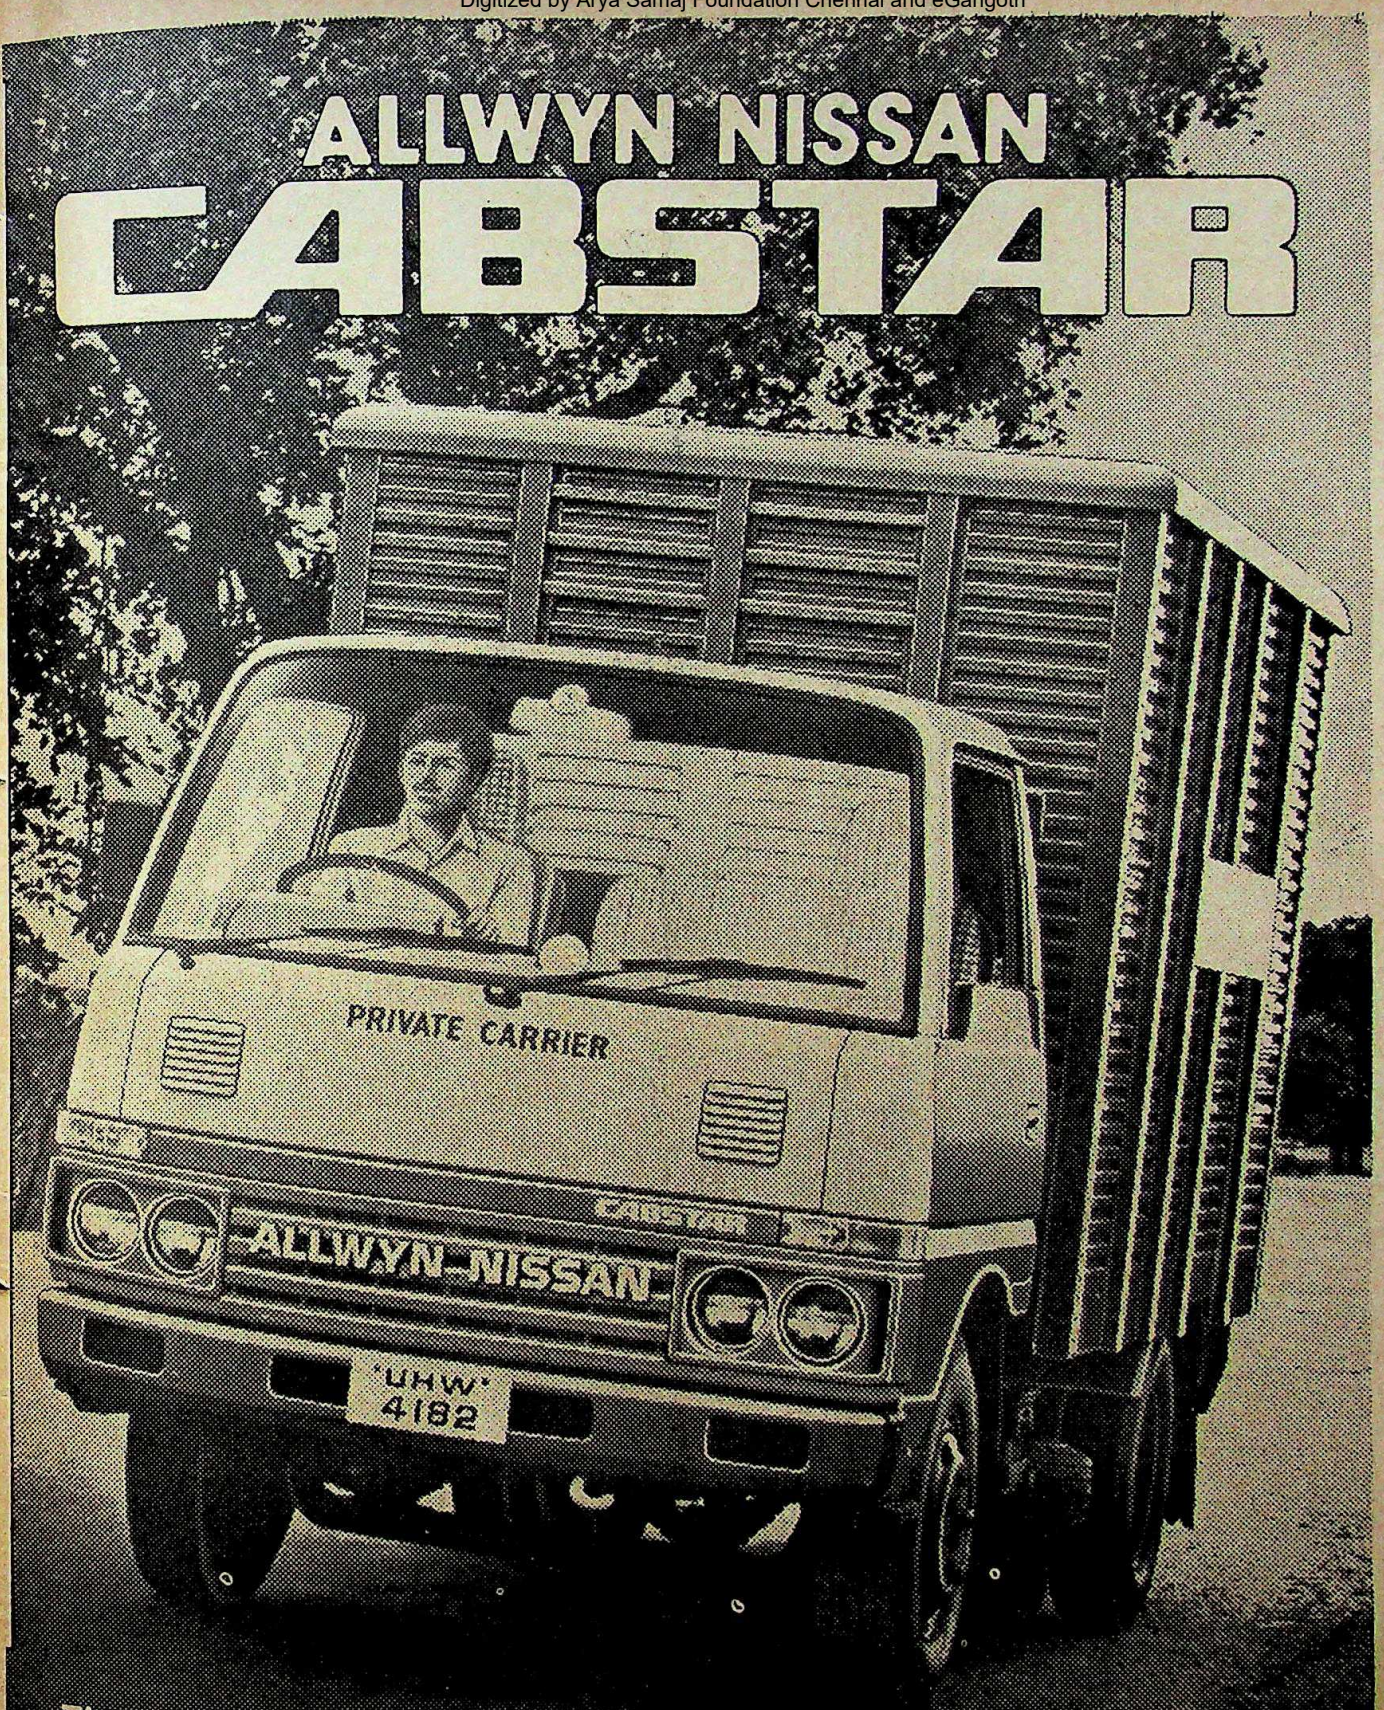
NISSAN

ALLWYN NISSAN LIMITED
Allwyn Bhavan, Sanathnagar
Hyderabad 500 018 (A.P.)

ALLWYN NISSAN

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ALLWYN NISSAN
CABSTAR



The difference between the light commercial vehicle and the right commercial vehicle

Versatile and most profitable for a wide range of loads

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SAA/AN/3291

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PROVEN QUALITY & PRECISION BUILT

pla RELAYS, REED RELAYS & ELECTRONIC TIMERS

COMMITMENT TO QUALITY
Continuous product improvement and development by the committed R & D team, and strict quality control by PLA quality control cell ensure that only the best comes to you.

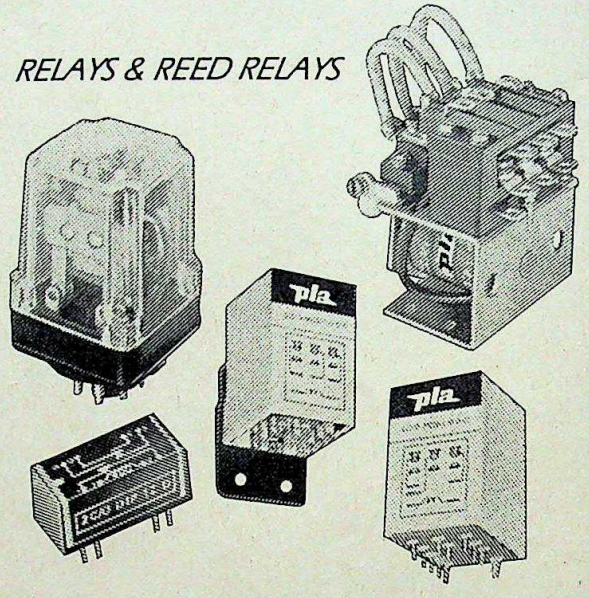
HERE ARE THE PROOFS

* PLA Relays & Reed relays are approved by LCSO/Defence and P & T.
* PLA Electronic Timers are approved by CIL/Defence/NTPC for specific applications.

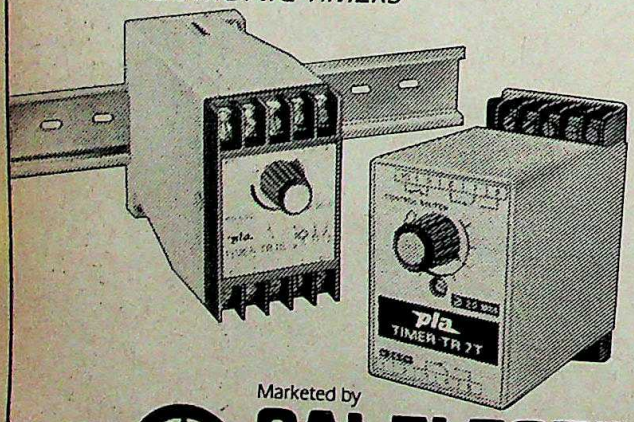
Some of the satisfied users of PLA products:
BEL, ITI, Keltron, Nelco, Uptron, CEL, Electricity Boards, NTPC, Siemens, L&T, KEC, HBB, BHEL, ECIL, BARC, MRPU, ISRO, LMW, MMC, Jyoti, IL Kota, GCEL, HIL, Bells Controls, Best & Crompton, Bharat Bijlee and BPL.

NATION-WIDE NETWORK
SAI is proud of its nation-wide network of committed and dedicated dealers and representatives with long years of association with the company. Their dynamism and expertise bring the best to you in terms of products and services.

RELAYS & REED RELAYS



ELECTRONIC TIMERS



THE WIDE RANGE

Series M	: General purpose Miniature relays in open/enclosed and plug-in-version — rated for 6 Amps. at 240V AC/24V DC. PCB mounting relays also available.
Series P	: 20 Amps Power relays upto 3C/O contacts.
Series DIP	: Dual-in-line Package reed relay with 1N/O, 2N/O, 1C/O and 2C/O contacts suitable for PCB/DIL Socket mounting.
Special Relays (not shown)	: R.F. Relays, High voltage relays, Textile relays, Proximity switches, Series DLM Dual latching relays, Series FFR Field failure relays, Series SIP, DRM, PRM, DRC and DRA Reed relays.
Series TR/TD	: Electronic Timers available upto 60 Minutes timing range with different timing actions e.g. ON Delay, OFF Delay and ON-OFF Re-cycling. DIN Rail mounting is also available.

Marketed by

SAI ELECTRONICS
A Div. of Starch & Allied Industries

ELECTRONIC DIVISION

Thakor Estate, Kurla Kirol Road, Vidyavihar (W), Bombay 400 086.
Cable: SAIELECT, Bombay 86, Phone: 5136601, 5131219. TLX: 011-72132 PLA IN

RADEUS/SE/2/85 MAG

AVAILABLE EX-STOCK

Ahmedabad: Radio Electronics Ph. 336535 o Uresh Electric Co. Ph. 380990
Bangalore: Manitronix Components Agencies Ph. 222160 o Deepam Electronics Ph. 221246
Baroda: Reliable Sales Corporation Ph. 553936 • Bombay: Ramesh Trading Corpn. Ph. 351624
Ramesh Electronics Ph. C/o. 351624 o Mahavir Electronics Ph. 254538 o Expert Enterprises Ph. 5128766
Calcutta: Printed Electronics Ph. 452091 o Krugg International Ph. 273025 o Naresh Electro (India) Ph. 265101
Venus Electronics (Cal) Ph. 275491 o Dinesh Electronics (Cal) Ph. 269029 • Cochin: Expo Electronics Components Ph. 31455
Coimbatore: Ingata Laboratories Ph. 25705 o Sunrise Electronics Ph. 35713 o Spinloom Associates Ph. 24586
Digitech Agencies Ph. 24148 • Delhi: Chawla Trading Co. Ph. 236031 o Kanbro Sales Corpn. Ph. 625206
Hyderabad: Aradhna Electronics P. Ltd. Ph. 822201 • Indore: Atlas Sales Agencies Ph. 33112 o Natwerlal & Co. Ph. 35328
Jaipur: El-tronics Ph. 65730 • Madras: Kins Electronics Ph. 411601
Poona: Fortibus Engg Pvt. Ltd. Ph. 34706 o Trio Radio Ph. 447129 • Trivandrum: Electrocraft Ph. 71443
Udaipur: International Electronics Ph. 27250.

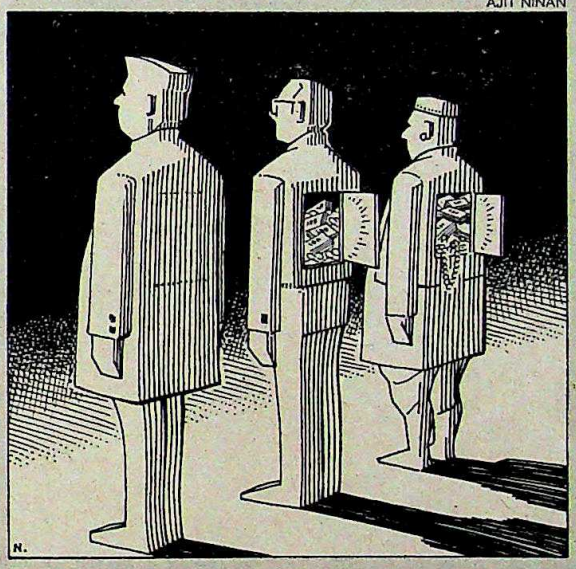
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Political Immunity

POLITICIANS are judged partly by the standards they set for themselves. And in setting his sights on a clean administration, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi has raised expectations of a less messy and murky political era. His government has already passed an anti-defection law early last year in an effort to put an end to political jobbery, legalised donations by companies to political parties, raised the ceiling on election expenses to slightly more realistic levels, taken disciplinary action against corrupt or inefficient government officials and ordered their premature retirement, undertaken the wholesale reshuffling of the boards of the government-owned banks following charges of large-scale bungling perhaps and malfeasance, and more recently, arrested or launched widespread raids on businessmen who the Government believesd have violated the law.

AJIT NINAN



All this is very welcome, and the only rider that can be attached to the Government's actions is that raids and arrests should not turn into a witch-hunt or lead to trial by the press. But more important than all this is the fact that there is one category of citizens which has been left conspicuously untouched throughout this period—the politicians. This is inexplicable because everyone knows that politics in this country has been funded by unaccounted money, that almost every candidate who stands for election on a party ticket spends far more than is allowed under the election rules (despite the raised ceiling on expenditure), and that it is the politician who has gained as much as a businessman through the creation and operation of the licence-permit raj.

Indeed, almost every major scandal that has erupted in recent years has had some politician or other involved—sometimes centrally, on other occasions peripherally. But the involvement has been there—in the Kuo oil deal, in some of the bank transactions that have hit the headlines, in the allotment of cement permits, in controversial take-over operations and in the issuing of key licences or permits. Yet it is the politician who seems to have the least to fear in the current environment, when officials, businessmen and others wonder whether they will next have the tax official at their door armed with a search warrant and a press release.

There is little to suggest that the legalisation of donations to political parties or the gradual dismantling of the licence-permit raj has altogether snapped the link between politics and black money, or between politicians and corrupt businessmen. After all, no one has seen politicians change their invariably expensive life-styles. If anything, the general tenor of politicians' life-styles has become noticeably more attuned to conspicuous consumption. Many of the Congress(I)'s leading lights stayed at five-star hotels during the party's centenary celebrations in Bombay a month ago, with no questions asked and none answered as to how they could afford to do so, or who was paying for them. Political campaigns in recent months have also not been marked by any significant drop in the level of spending. Worse, the prime minister has inducted personalities from the film world into his parliamentary party, even though it is well known that high-priced actors traditionally earn unaccounted incomes.

If the prime minister does indeed believe in clean politics, he must logically take steps that will demonstrate to the country that he means business, and that he wants not just clean politics but also clean politicians. There is no excuse for not immediately mandating the auditing of all political parties' accounts, and introducing legislation that will make it compulsory for every parliamentarian and legislator to annually declare his income and assets. After all, the last embarrassment a government professing honesty as its by-word wants is a repetition of the case of Jagjivan Ram in the 1960s, when it was discovered that the longest serving minister in the Government had not submitted his income tax returns for 11 years.

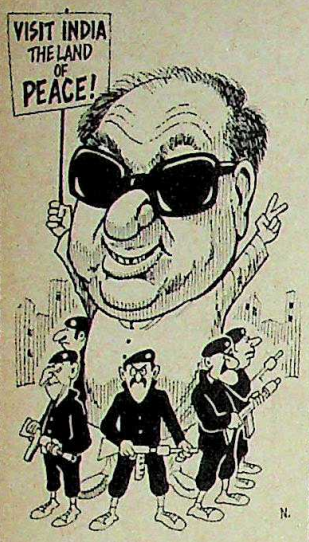
Admittedly, the prime minister has taken other steps to clean up both politics and the Government. Some of the questionable personalities who had surrounded the late prime minister Indira Gandhi in her final years in power have been sent to the wilderness. And his posting of reputedly honest men in key positions like the Finance Ministry and the absence of any credible suggestion that the current raids against businessmen are motivated by party fund-raisers have sent signals to all concerned that this government believes in conducting public affairs honestly, without surreptitious motives.

Elsewhere, the lower tax rates introduced in the last budget, combined with the promise of still lower rates contained in the long-term fiscal policy, should ensure greater tax honesty. Since this is being dovetailed with the widespread raids on suspected tax evaders and an as yet unspecified plan to deal with the black money menace, the country can look forward with some hope to a relatively more honest environment for conducting business operations.

All this is welcome. But the point is that the Government has not gone far enough and that other, obvious steps down the same road have not been taken. Indeed, given the wide range of measures that the Government has taken on other fronts, the absence of any crack-down on corrupt politicians cannot but be striking. If Mr Clean wants to carry conviction as Mr Clean, he has to take a closer look at his own ilk.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Captive Audience

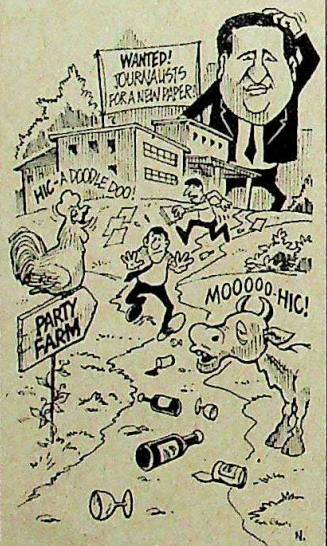
● Tourism Minister H.K.L. Bhagat's problems transcend those of his personal security. Ever since he took charge of the tourism portfolio, his major task has been to convince travel agents and tour operators that conditions in India are safe for large tourist groups and that foreign tourists need have no apprehensions. Conditions are safe, as tour operators have now realised after travelling around in India, but when Bhagat makes this argument it often proves counter-productive.

This was brought home recently when the minister addressed a group of leading British tour operators invited to India so that they could see for themselves that things were normal. This was also the theme of the minister's speech, but many of the tour operators left the meeting bewildered and confused. The minister had arrived ringed by commandos. Worse, they accompanied Bhagat into the room where the meeting was being held and flanked the minister, guns ready, even as he made his "everything's OK" speech. Many of the visitors appeared keener to photograph this aspect rather than heed Bhagat's remarks. The message they got was definitely not the one Bhagat had intended.

Welcome Aboard

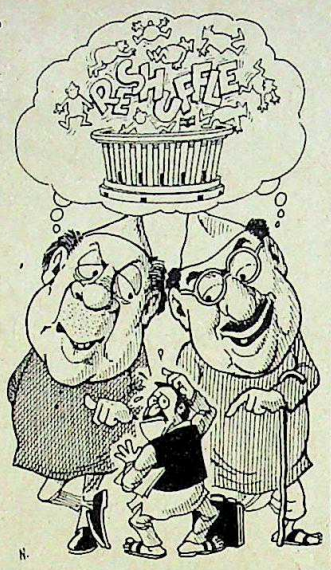
● Balraj Chopra, the Delhi businessman whose farm party attended by senior government officials raised a considerable stink in the media recently, is now turning his attention to fresh pastures. Going by the dictum of if-you-can't-lick-them-join-them, he now has plans to start a tabloid newspaper in the capital. In recent weeks, he has been sounding out various journalists in the capital with offers of jobs. According to him, the proposed paper will have no dearth of capital and neither will there be any shortage of advertisements.

Chopra says his intentions



Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

are to launch his tabloid in March and has also been confiding to friends that the newspaper will 'tell all' regarding politicians in New Delhi. He should know, since many of them have been frequent guests at his equally frequent parties. However, he is having lesser luck among the members of the fourth estate. Till last week, no journalist of any standing had taken up Chopra on his exceedingly generous offer though that has not slowed down his recruitment efforts. But one thing seems certain: if the paper does indeed get launched in March, the inaugural splash will not be at Chopra's farm.



Trying Time

● Calling on ministers before an impending cabinet reshuffle can be a trying business, as a young and up and coming Congress(I) member of Parliament discovered last fortnight. The MP happened to call on a minister who represents Delhi. But even before he could say his piece the anxious minister launched into a full and detailed account of how efficient he was in his portfolio, how he had introduced a host of changes, what further action he proposed, and so on. The young MP could barely restrain himself from saying that he was not the man in charge of the coming reshuffle.

He then went to see a minister who represents a Bihar constituency. This time he got a chance to say what he had to, but the minister merely threw up his hands in despair and said: "But why are you bothering me with all this? We (the veterans) are going and you (the young ones) are coming in."

The MP decided after this that there was no point talking to ministers till after the reshuffle and drew up a 10-day tour programme. A third minister came to know of this and told the MP that he was either mad, or foolish, or both, to be going out of Delhi at such a time.

Wet Property

● They were touted as the hottest property in town, in one of the most coveted parts of the capital. So there was no shortage of prospective buyers wanting to acquire the luxury flats in the Asiad village, built three years ago in an exclusive enclave of south Delhi to house athletes taking part in the Asian games held in the capital. But now the few non-resident Indians and large number of public sector companies which finally bought most of the flats at exorbitant prices find that hot property can be wet property too.

After the initial problems of running around to get water and other necessary connections, a number of occupants of the Asiad flats have been complaining of water seeping through the ceiling and walls, wetting household goods and in at least one case ruining a prized collection of books. It was only after the monsoons that repairs slowly started and most of the complaints have now been attended to. But considering the flats are barely three years old, questions are being asked again about the quality of the construction work that went on in the pre-Asiad rush, specially in the light of the premium prices that the flats eventually fetched.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A happy housewife, proud of her Racold Oven-cum-Griller.

Racold, the brand leader in electrical appliances, is committed to excellence.

The Racold oven-cum-griller has proved it. It is ideal as a multi-purpose kitchen aid. You can bake or grill with ease and efficiently.

Fitted with 1000W element at the top and 750W element at the bottom, a 3-heat control and thermostat.. Insulated on all sides.

The oven door is fitted with toughened glass for clear view of the food in the oven. The oven is automatic, controlled by a thermostat.

It serves also as a hot-case.

The Racold range includes round oven, mixer-cum-grinder, toaster, sandwich-toaster, kettle and hot plates, all backed by 30 years of experience. These new generation appliances are superior for design efficiency, quality materials and elegance.

Racold APPLIANCES PVT. LTD.

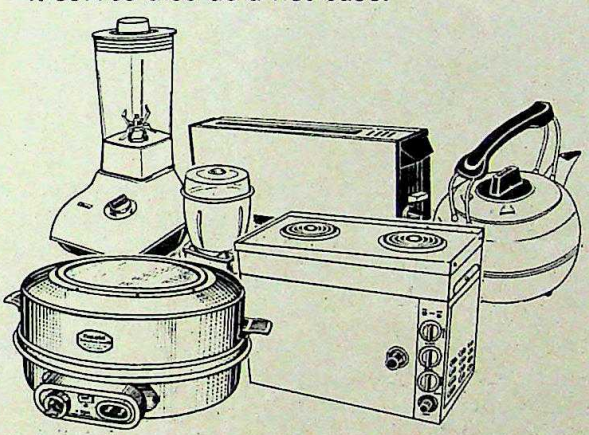
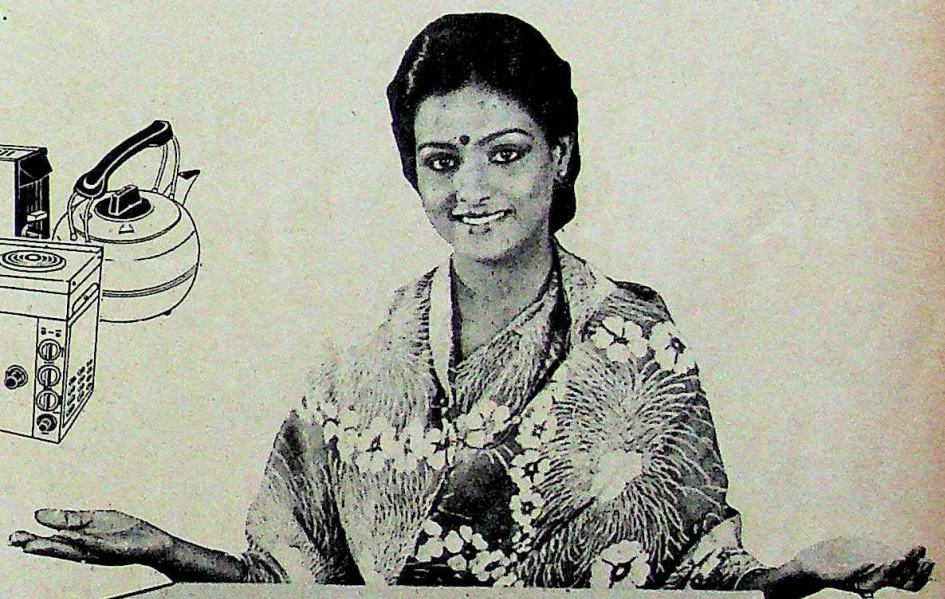
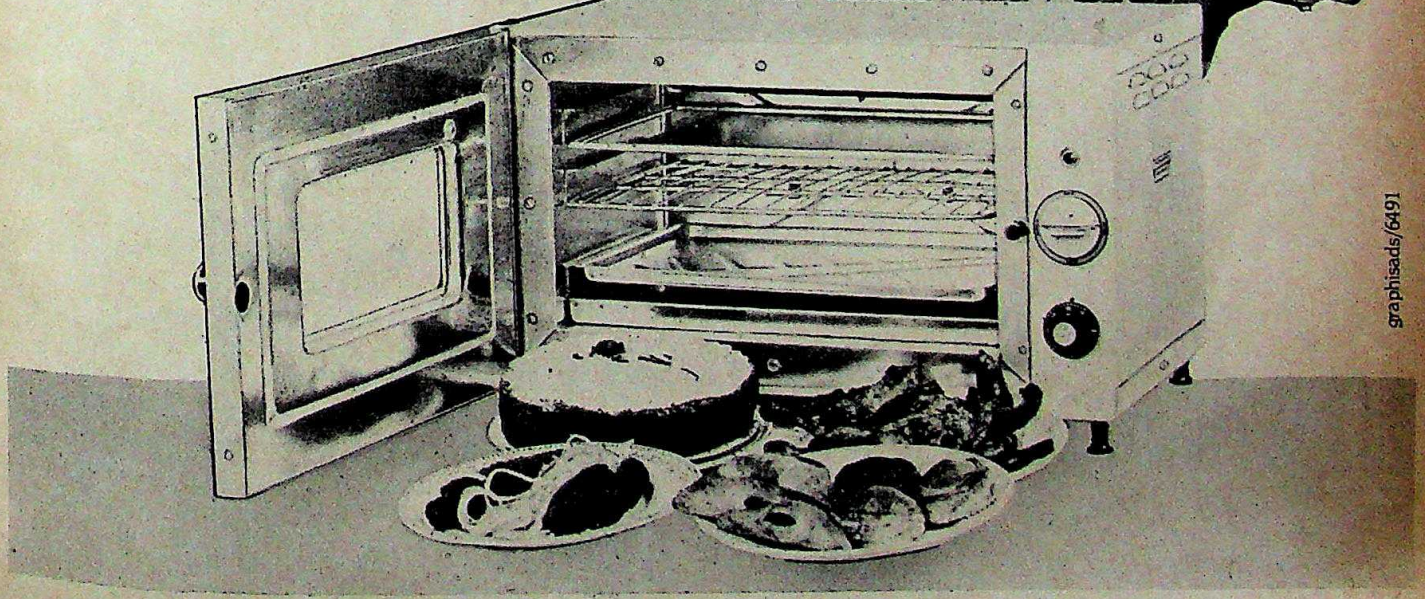
Pune ● Bombay ● New Delhi



Racold

A trusted name in electrical appliances





graphisads/6491

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs_____ payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME
ADDRESS
CITY CODE
COUNTRY

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 185
BANGLADESH
BHUTAN
NEPAL

Rs 345
AFGHANISTAN
BURMA
MALDIVES
PAKISTAN
SRI LANKA

Rs 385
BAHRAIN
CHINA
HONG KONG
INDONESIA
IRAN
IRAQ
KUWAIT
MALAYSIA
OMAN
PHILIPPINES
QATAR
SAUDI ARABIA
SINGAPORE
TAIWAN
THAILAND
U.A.E.
YEMEN

Rs 485
AUSTRALIA
EGYPT
ETHIOPIA
FRANCE
W. GERMANY
GHANA
GIBRALTAR
IRELAND
JAPAN
KENYA
SOUTH KOREA
LEBANON
LIBYA
MALAWI
MALTA
MAURITIUS
SEYCHELLES
SIERRA LEONE
SOUTH AFRICA
SUDAN
SWITZERLAND
SYRIA
TANZANIA
U.K.
ZAMBIA
ZIMBABWE

Rs 585
BAHAMAS
BARBADOS
BRAZIL
CANADA
FIJI
GUYANA
HAWAII
JAMAICA
NEW ZEALAND
PANAMA
U.S.A.

NH 943

• We are trying to involve them (the Opposition) in everything we do. But they don't have anything to say. All they say is that Mani Shankar Aiyar is a terrible fellow. And as long as that's the only complaint they've got we are very happy.

■ RAJIV GANDHI in The Illustrated Weekly of India

• The entire experience proves that it is unattractive to invest in India: the environment is not right. Patriotism brings me to India and then I get kicked.

■ SWRAJ PAUL in Sunday

• For the first time I'm being accused of not doing enough. It's not like my films. In three hours, I righted wrongs and handed out justice. But in politics, even a lifetime isn't enough to hand out justice.

■ AMITABH BACHCHAN in Imprint

• Despite our high sounding and platitudinous protestations about the rule of law and justice, we have constantly and continually denied justice to them (the underprivileged) by reason of an elitist court system inherited from the British.

■ P.N. BHAGWATI, Chief Justice of India, in Frontline

• My party has asked me not to make any statements about my stepping down. But working for 16 hours a day is too much of a strain on me. Another reason for wanting to retire is that in two years I will be 60. There should be an age limit for active political life.

■ RAMAKRISHNA HEGDE in Gentleman

• I am perhaps the most misunderstood and misrepresented public worker left today. The press calls me casteist, anti-Harijan, anti-woman, anti-industry anti-everything.

■ CHARAN SINGH in The Sunday Statesman

• He (Haryana Chief Minister Bhajan Lal) has declared war on Punjab. But we are determined to resist it with all the resources at our disposal.

■ S.S. BARNALA in a press statement

• My husband owes 50 per cent of his success in elections to me.

■ PRAMILA DANDAVATE in Eve's Weekly

• The steps taken by the institutions after the (Escorts case) judgement have proved that they have always been against destabilising the management of companies. However large the stake of the institutions, they have dispelled fears at the earliest opportunity. This has been a very important fall-out of the judgement.

■ S.S. NADKARNI, chairman, IDBI, in Business India

• When I make a film, the ideal audience for the film is me. I should know, I should be satisfied with the way the film is.

■ GOVIND NIHALANI in Filmfare

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

*"You cannot climb the ladder of success with your hands in your pockets."

Always remember : if you wish to project a confident, dignified image, the kind of clothes you wear do matter. They add to your self-esteem and to the opinion others have of you.

Here's a tip to help you up that ladder of success. Choose a fabric that lends you dignity and grace. A fabric that fashions suits and shirts, safaris and trousers which are elegant and comfortable. Like Graviera. It's wash 'n wear, easy-care fabric, with polyrich fast colour. There's a mind-boggling range to choose from. Deep sober colours and brilliant lights, in a variety of superb weaves and soft textures. You'll be able to select the exact suiting and shirting that match your personalised requirements. All Graviera fabrics are that rare blend of graciousness and good sense.

Graviera! It aids your confident march up that all-important ladder of success.

* (Henry Ford, Pioneer of today's automobile.)

MAPP-BTM-86-46

Nothin succeed lik success

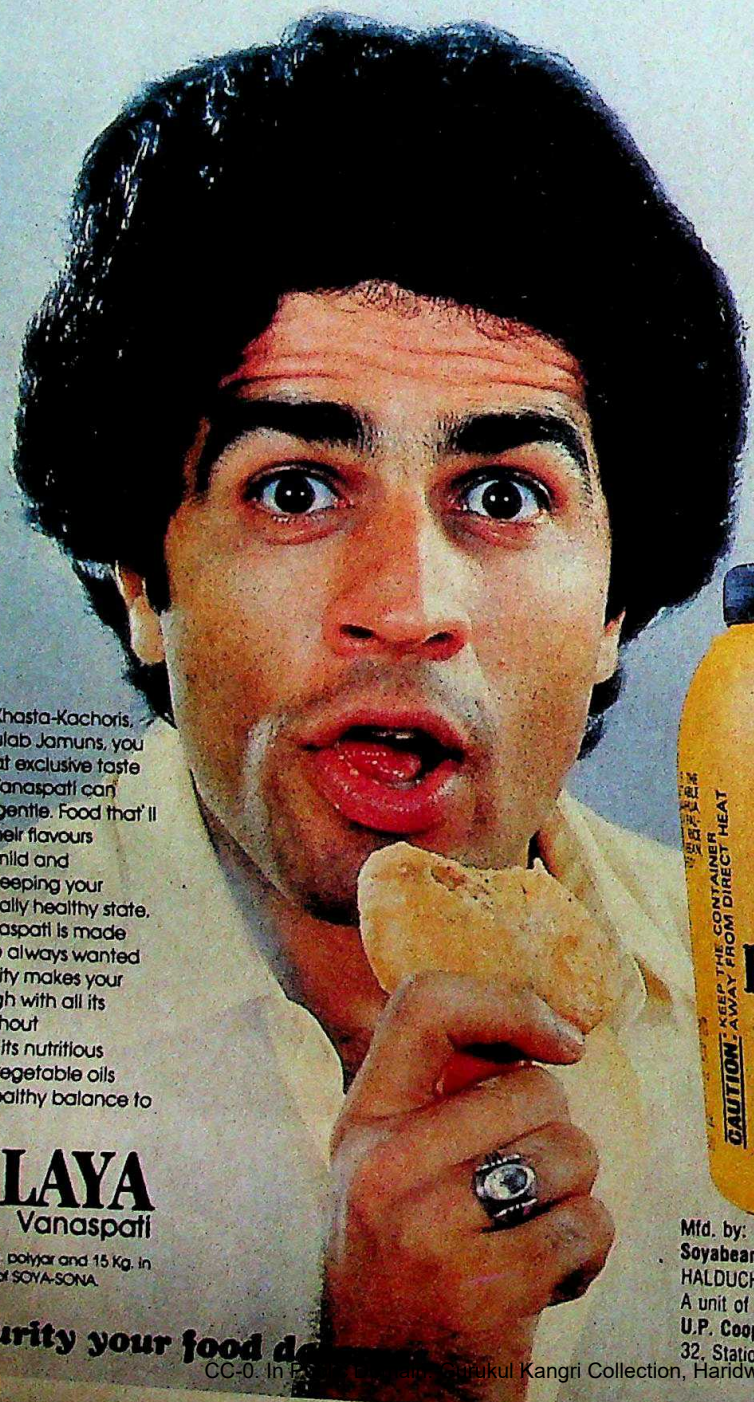
GRAVIERA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ask your husband what he wanted all along

His favourite food cooked in good vanaspati



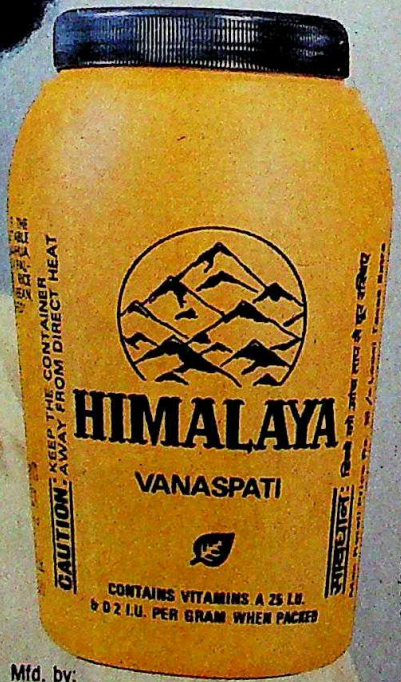
Whether it be Khasta-Kachoris, Puris, Jalebis or Gulab Jamuns, you can now have that exclusive taste that only a pure Vanaspati can create-pure and gentle. Food that' ll digest well with their flavours coming through mild and delicately spicy, keeping your system in its naturally healthy state.

Himalaya Vanaspati is made the way you have always wanted it. That Gentle Purity makes your food come through with all its natural taste—without compromising on its nutritious quality. The pure vegetable oils used, provide a healthy balance to your food.

HIMALAYA
Vanaspati

Available in 1, 2 & 5 Kg. polyjar and 15 Kg. in tin under brand name of SOYA-SONA

Gentle purity your food d



PAC/PCF

Mfd. by:
Soyabean & Vanaspati Industries Complex
HALDUCHAUR (NAINITAL) U.P.
A unit of
U.P. Cooperative Federation Ltd.,
32, Station Road, Lucknow (U.P.)

a pcf product

CC-0. In P... Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

9400

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

sakura film's famous quality now comes in a new box with our new name

Konica

COLOR FILM/CAMERAS/AUDIO & VIDEO TA
Konishiroku, Tokyo, Japan

9400

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Chennai and eGangotri

A NEW RANGE OF WORLD CLASS COLOUR TV SETS.

And that too at wonderful value for money. Choose from a range of hi-tech models including a set with wireless remote control.

Fully tropicalised with computer designed circuit, Telerama colour TVs incorporate the breakthrough-Hi-Gain colour technology. With built-in stabiliser and packed with all the features of advanced world class colour TV sets.

Each set is manufactured through the most modern technology by adopting zero-defect programme. The result: longer life, greater reliability.

With one year's guarantee including picture tube, you are assured of Telerama's prompt after-sales service and original spare parts for years to come.

CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MARK OF A MAN

■ The Assam elections, watched with bated breath all over the country, so crucial to the future of the state, had quite a few sidelights, one of which is from Sarukhetri constituency.

A couple went to the polling booth only to be told that while the lady's name was on the list, the husband's, by one of those cute bureaucratic oversights which do so much to spice up life, was not. The wife, hugely amused, teased her disenfranchised hubby: "What kind of a man are you? You've no right to vote but I have, and I'm a woman."

Hubby went into deep depression, not unlike the pit into which Bobby Riggs had fallen years ago when Billie Jean whipped him to the net and back some years ago. He—hubby, not Bobby—tried to persuade the presiding officer to let him vote as it was a question of prestige and all that. The officer, naturally, refused. But one more look at the stricken face and all his instincts of male superiority and solidarity came to the fore. He picked up the bottle of indelible ink and delicately dabbed some on hubby's finger. His face radiant, the husband went off to flourish the evidence in his wife's face. When it is a marriage that is at stake, what's a little lie now and then?

WAGES OF SIN

■ Show a human gold and the eyes glisten, knees falter and he or she starts blubbering. For if diamonds are forever then gold is eternal and to have a gleaming golden bauble round slender necks and fingers is bliss. The woman who visited the jeweller's in Vijayapura, Karnataka, obviously thought the same, for she made the jeweller pull out ring after ring from the tray before settling down to make her choice.

Which she did after agonised deliberation; only, when the jeweller did some arithmetic, he found that she had seen eight rings, chosen one and returned only six. In vain did she cry that she didn't have the missing ring; in vain did she turn out all her belongings; he was adamant: "You must pay, or I'll call the police." She paid up Rs 180.

As it turned out, the shopkeeper was right to be suspicious. That night, the woman suddenly groaned with what seemed like appendicitis but turned out to be a stomach upset. She was admitted to hospital the next day and admitted to doctors that she had swallowed the ring. Truly it is written by the all-purpose sage: "Nobody digests stolen goods."

COMMUTER'S ITCH

■ The local trains of Bombay are very convenient transport. Or were, going by the mutterings of a group of commuters last fortnight.

When they got off at Churchgate, the commuters were a little difficult to talk to, not because they were from a public school, but because they were all engaged in a disco version of St Vitus's Dance. With some difficulty, they blurted out their sorry tale:

On the run from one of the longer-distance suburbs, there where the nightingale no longer sings, the travellers were jolted out of their morning stupor by a shower of manna thrown by some urchins at a station. They reached eagerly for the holy gift only to discover that the manna was a particularly potent powder much beloved of B-grade comedy films: scratching powder, which causes one to try and skin onself whenever one comes into contact with it — preferably alive. Why the urchins had blessed the compartment with this itchy substance was not clear, but they had, and the travellers scratched from Andheri to Bandra to Bombay Central to Churchgate all the way to the toilets. It wasn't surprising that all of them were simply itching to get their hands on the so-and-so's who'd done this to them.

CHARMED RETURNS

■ Snakes are revered creatures, the companions of Gods and soul-mates of sadhus. No devout Hindu will kill a snake in the house, preferring to shoo it away after feeding it. Last month, however, a gentleman in a town near Bhopal, Madhya Pradesh, was discovering the truth of the old adage about too much of a good thing.

He sensed there were snakes in the house—at night they did the bhangra in the loft, which did not exactly make for restful slumber. In between nightmares of being choked to death he decided they had to go. So he called in a snake-charmer who made a few passes with his been and the snakes, like Mac's guests, stood not on the order of their going but went. A few days later they were back; the snake-charmer reappeared and lured them away. A few days later....

When the cycle of snakes, bhangra, snake-charmer was repeated five times, he got suspicious. He kept a close watch and soon caught the snake-charmer snake-handed smuggling the reptiles in. You might also call it, if you please, the recurring deposit scheme.

—Compiled by JAGANNATH DUBASHI

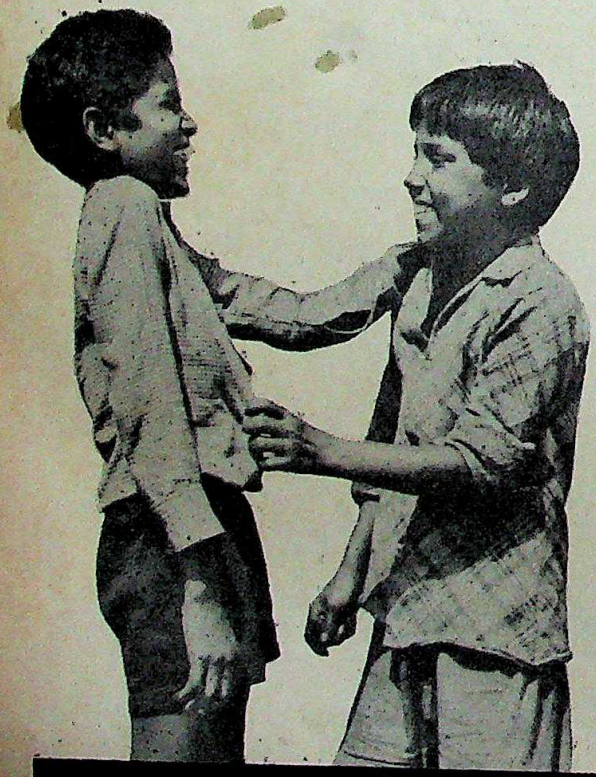
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"If leprosy were always infectious, you might have got it by now"

Some startling facts that shatter a myth

- Leprosy is the least infectious of all infectious diseases. Besides, four out of five leprosy cases in India are the non-infectious kind. Of those who come into prolonged contact with infectious cases, less than 5% actually catch the disease.
- Patients with severe deformities may not always be infectious.
- Leprosy doesn't strike overnight. It can take years to manifest itself.
- Leprosy is not hereditary.
- Leprosy is curable. A full course of medication and treatment is all that a leprosy patient needs.



The true identity of the leprosy patient has been concealed for want of community support.

- Leprosy need not result in deformities at all. If detected and treated early, it leaves no physical or psychological scars.
- Leprosy can be cured even at an advanced stage, though deformities cannot always be remedied then.
- Leprosy is not a poor man's disease. It can occur in any social or economic class, even among the affluent.
- Leprosy is not only an adult's disease; 30% of all newly detected cases are children.
- The treatment available today renders even the most infectious cases non-infectious within five or six weeks.

The first signs of leprosy

- A pale or red patch which could be oily, smooth or dry. The patch is neither painful nor itchy.
- Loss of hair and lack of sweating in the discoloured area.
- Numbness in the patch.
- A tingling or 'ant-crawling' sensation along the affected nerve.

Remember, leprosy is curable. All it needs is :

— Early detection
— Early intervention
— Sustained treatment
— Community support throughout.

You can help

Drive away the stigma. Encourage leprosy patients to lead a normal life. Remind them — and yourself — that they pose no threat to their family or friends. Only you can help them retain their place in society.

All you need is an open mind.

React-0414/85B

TATA STEEL

UNICEF

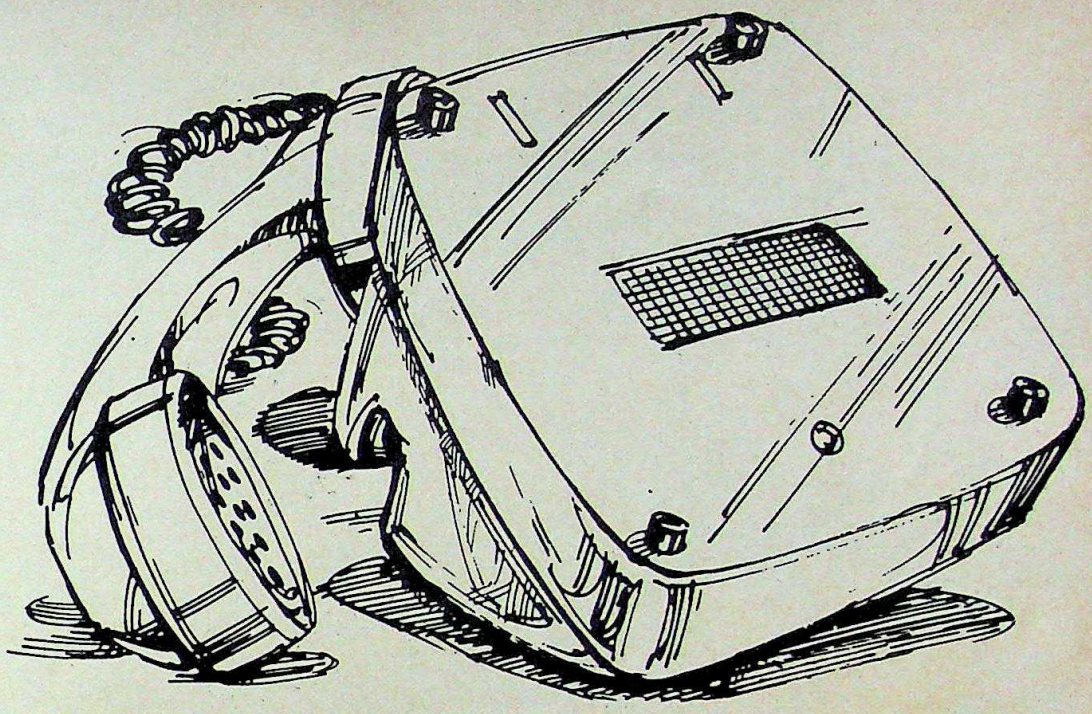
Issued in the interest of better understanding and support for the leprosy patient — by TATA STEEL and UNICEF.

The real healing touch must come from you

For further information, write to : Leprosy Awareness Campaign, C/o UNICEF Information Service, 73 Lodi Estate, New Delhi 110 003.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Who killed the telephone?

If the weather is fair, the exchange is still ticking and the instrument is fit but silent, then the cable's credentials need to be checked.

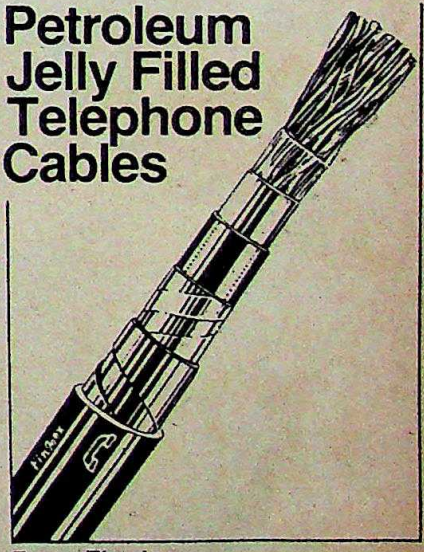
The trouble with a conventional cable starts with water seepage. The result is sound distortion, disturbance, cross talk and finally a dead connection.

It's time telecommunication in India can be relied upon.

Finolex has crossed this major communication hurdle. In collaboration with world renowned,Essex of USA, Finolex is perhaps the only one to make moisture-resistant jelly filled telephone cables in India today.

Now P&T's computerized exchanges, sleeker telephone instruments and a wider communication network, have Finolex cable efficiency to match.

Petroleum Jelly Filled Telephone Cables



From Finolex, the leaders in cables. In technical collaboration with United Technologies/ Essex Group Inc. USA.

Finolex gets people together

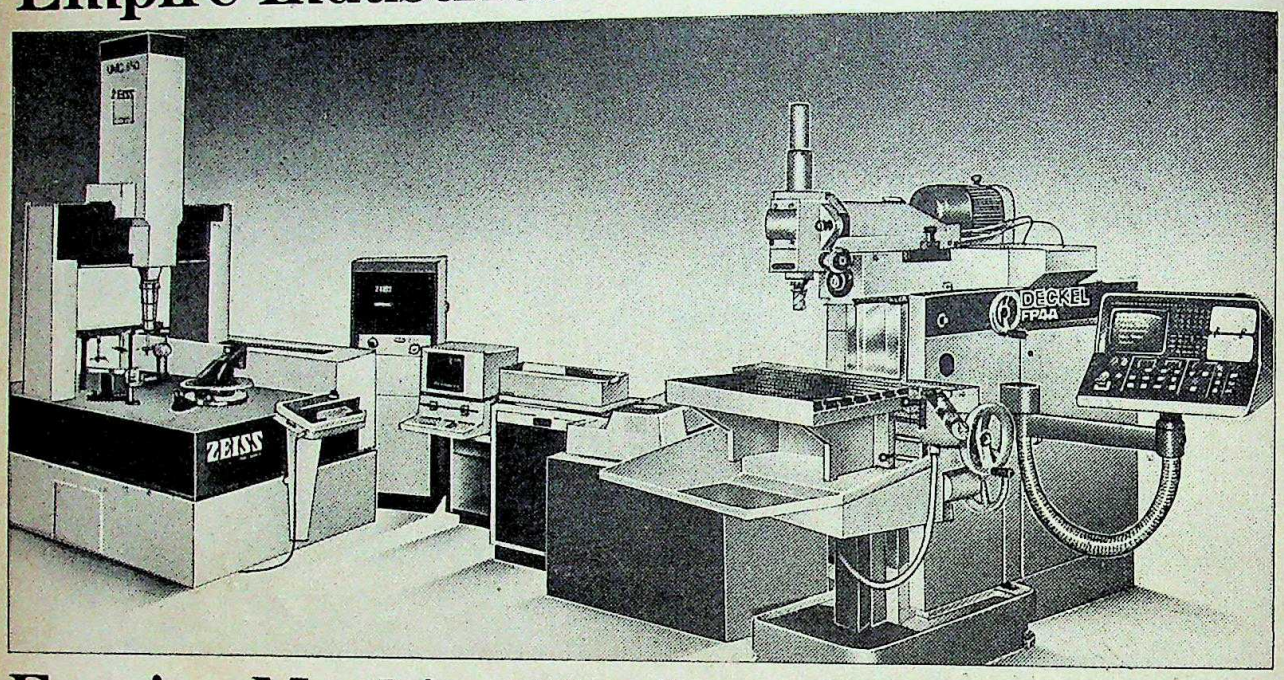
Finolex Cables Limited
26/27, Bombay-Pune Road,
Pimpri, PUNE-411018

Pratibha 85-457

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Another enterprise of
Empire Industries



Empire Machine Tools

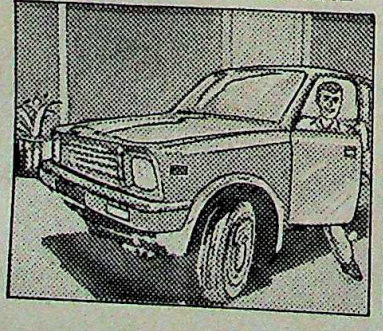
We sell and service test and measuring equipment of the highest technology to improve your standard of living.

Representing some of the world's premier manufacturers in metal cutting, metal forming and measuring and testing equipments, Empire Machine Tools focuses its efforts on serving the vital sectors of Indian Industry. Guaranteeing satisfaction through efficient after-sales service.

Of course Empire Industries Ltd. are doing a lot more than dealing in Machine Tools. Their manufacturing and marketing operations cover the areas of Medium and Heavy Crane manufacturing, Instruments and Instrumentation Systems, Finance, Glassware and Textiles.

The other enterprises of Empire Industries Ltd.

Garlick Engineering, Empire Instrumentation, Empire Finance Co. Ltd., Vitrum Glass and Empire Dyeing.



EMPIRE MACHINE TOOLS

AN ENTERPRISE OF

EMPIRE INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Empire Industries Ltd.
414, Senapati Bapat Marg,
Lower Parel, Bombay-400 013.
Phone: 4934149/4934170
Cable: EMPMACTULS
Telex: 011-73888 (EMPR IN)

Where Excellence Leads

6367

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

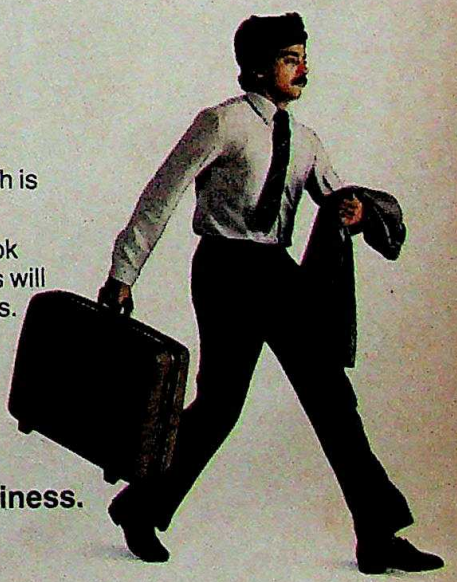
Shall we be indiscreet?
There's very little to talk about Safari.
Except that it's the most practical luggage.

Think about it in sober moments. If you are going abroad for new machinery, concentrate on the negotiations ahead.

Leave your clothes and other personal effects to the care of the luggage which is down-to-earth and aware of serious responsibilities.

Safari. Its buckle-down flap keeps your clothes in perfect shape. The suits look immaculately pressed. And you can pack quite a few. The detachable wheels will be a boon at international airports where nobody understands what a coolie is.

Safari. It survives.



safari

The luggage that knows its business.

ULKA-SL-600-84

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB

Capture of the Temple

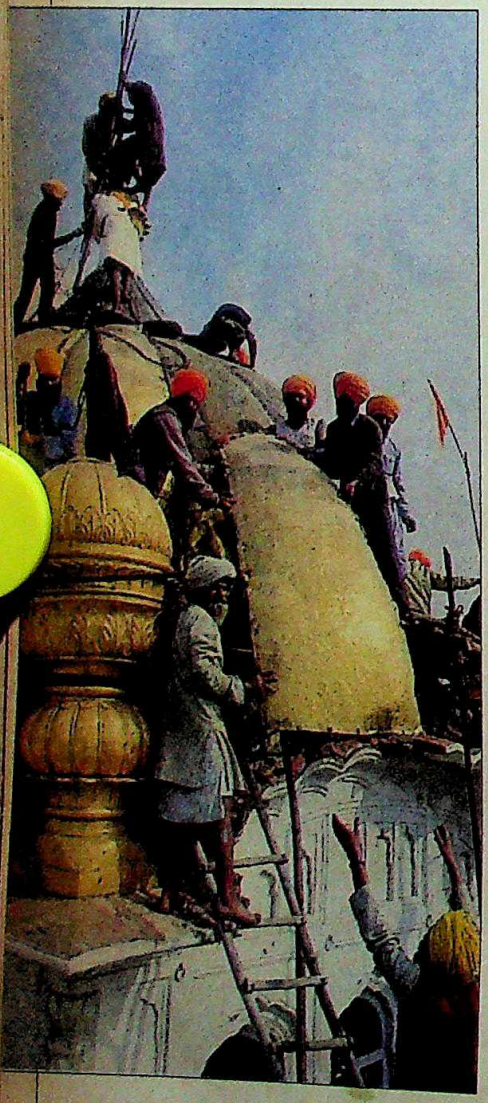
ONCE again the swords are out and the complex housing Amritsar's Golden Temple rings to militant cries. Once again the hotheads are back in control of the holiest of Sikh shrines which they wrested from a weak-kneed Shiromani Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee (SGPC) and plunged Punjab's fledgeling Akali Government into fresh uncertainty. Once again tremors of concern swept across the country as a volatile Punjab seemed drawn inexorably to the brink of a past no one wants to revisit. No one, except perhaps the inheritors of the Bhindranwale creed—the Damdami Taksal and the All India Sikh Students Federation (AISSF), whose cadres last fortnight took over the complex and awaited the inevitable government and SGPC action to oust them.

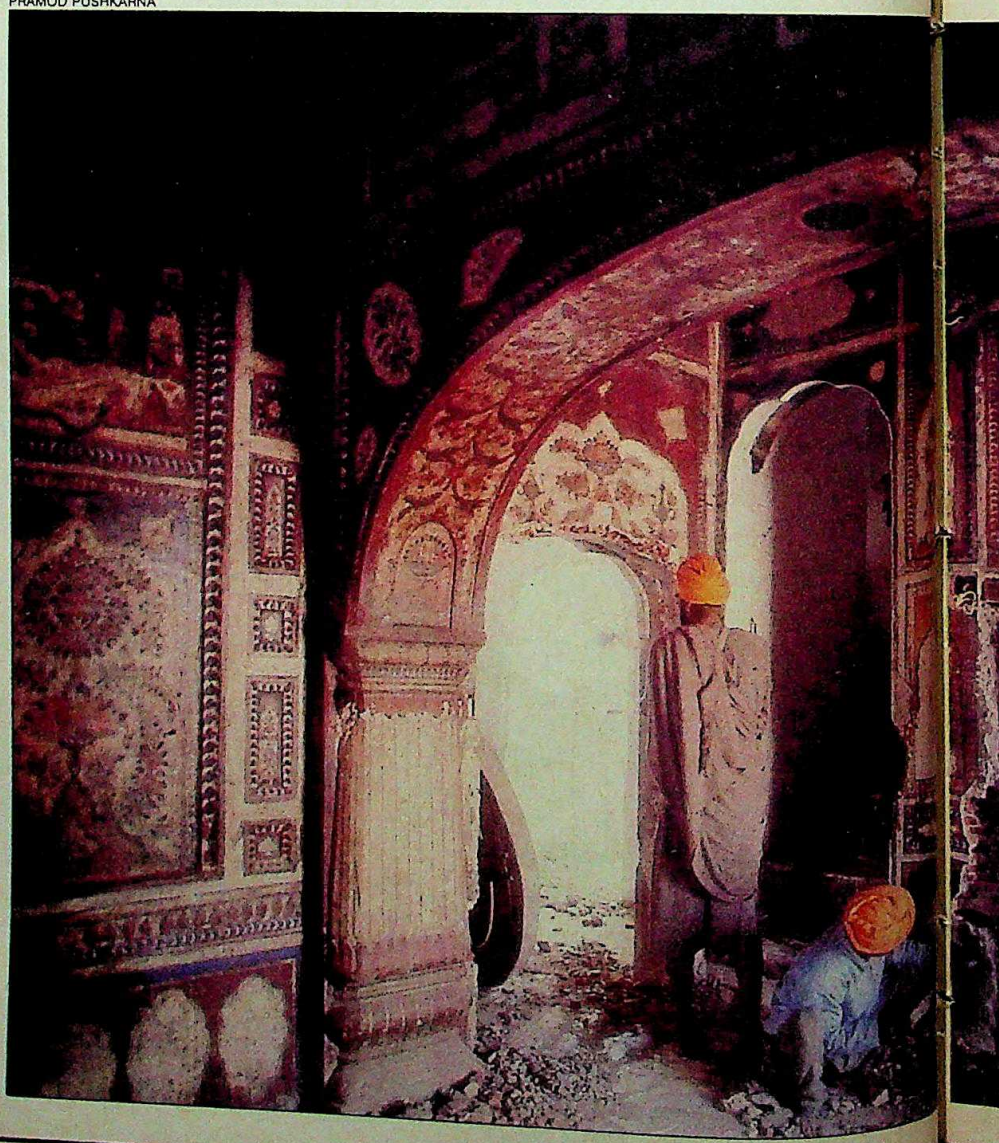
The Temple takeover was the boldest resurgence of extremist activity after Operation Bluestar, fraught with violent repercussions. The saffron flag emblazoned with the name "Khalistan" fluttered atop the Akal Takht, mocking both the state Government and the Centre. The national tricolour had been burnt in the Akal Takht on the day of the takeover, a new 'hate list' was brought out, and the slogans were as bad as in the days of Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale.

Sikhism itself faced an unprecedented crisis. The SGPC, created by law 61 years ago to look after gurudwaras, found itself unseated and had to abandon Amritsar and meet in Anandpur Sahib. The jathedar of the Akal Takht as well as the head priest of the Golden Temple were unable or afraid to go back into the complex, so that even the path (reading of scriptures) was in the hands of the hotheads. Indeed, the hotheads had 'appointed' extremists on the Government's wanted list, or people in jail, to key posts as a further jaunty challenge.

The crisis began with the insistence of the Damdami Taksal, the fundamentalist

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA





CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

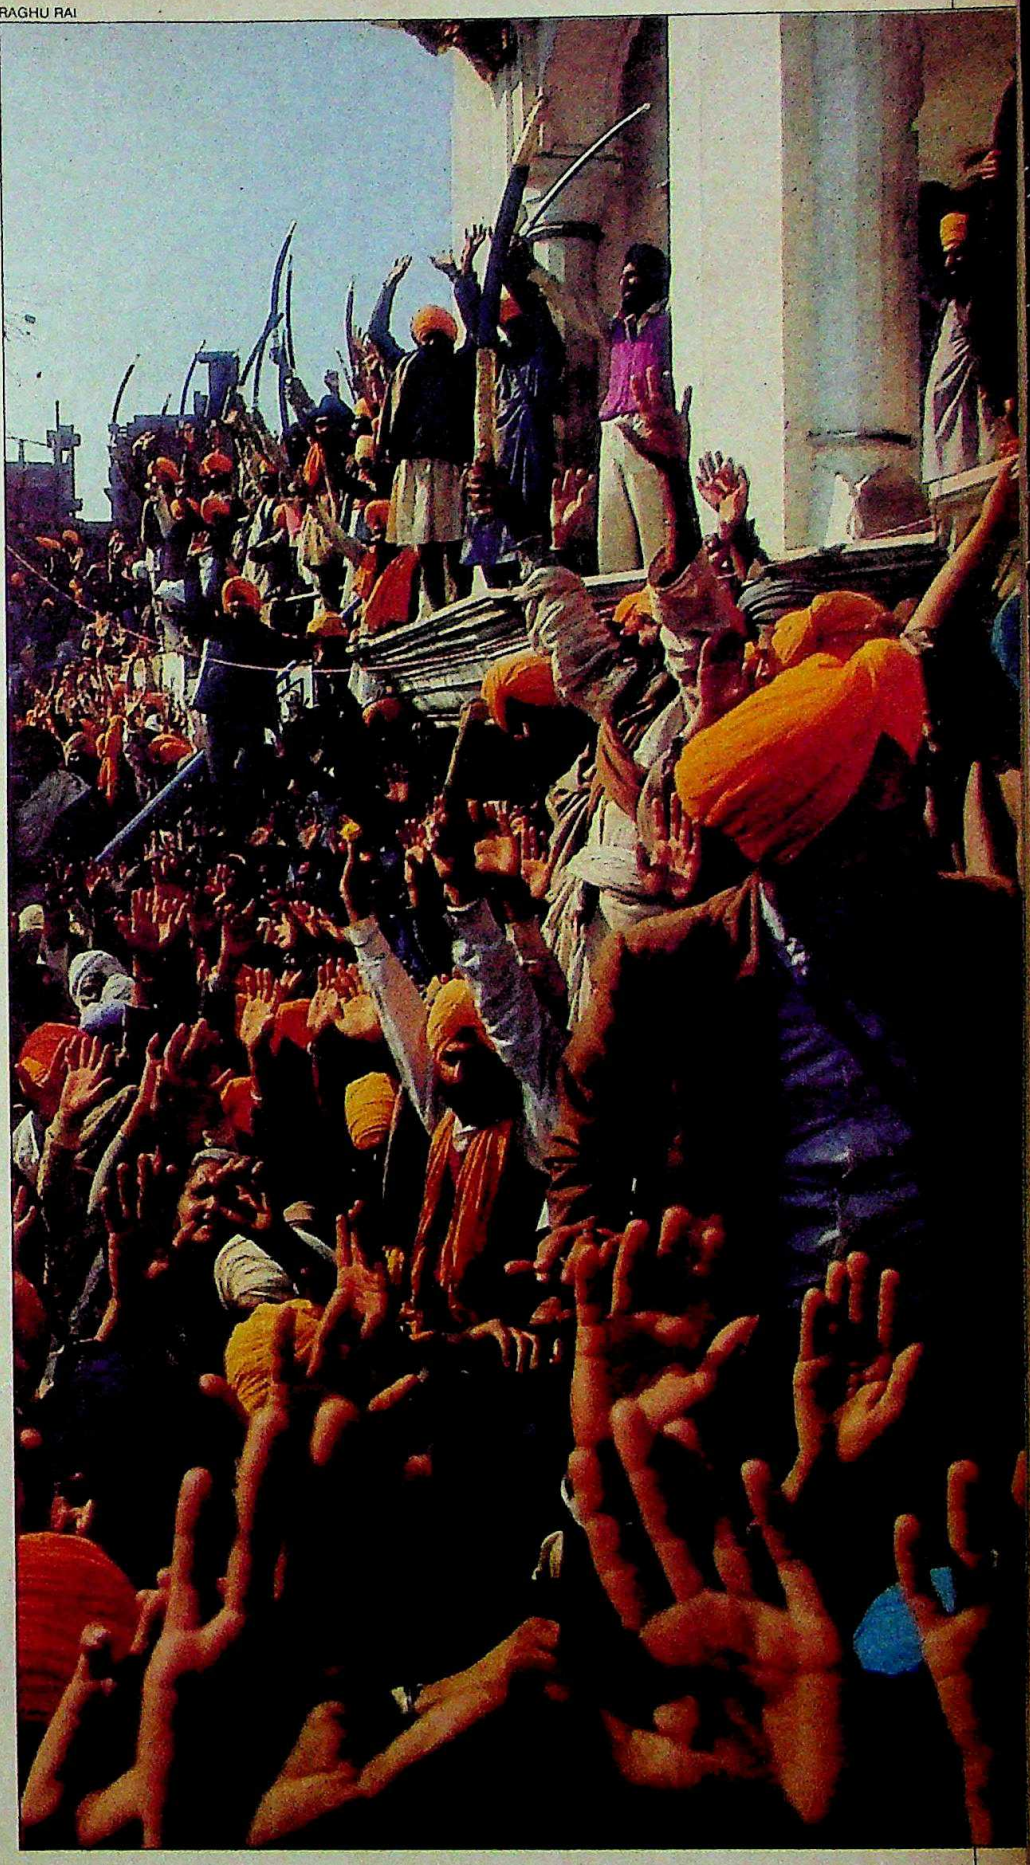
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

seminary once headed by Sant Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale, that it would perform the kar seva (reconstruction) of the Akal Takht, where Bhindranwale and many of the Taksal's students had died 19 months ago during Operation Bluestar. The SGPC resisted, then caved in through a face-saving compromise that talked of a joint kar seva. Once inside the complex, the Taksal and AISSF quickly took charge: even before the first volunteers started the kar seva a Taksal spokesman announced before a large crowd the disbandment of the SGPC, dismissal of the Takht and Golden Temple head priests and a host of other steps attacking the state and Central Governments. For added measure, there was the disturbing presence of determined, sword-wielding youth.

As alarm bells rang in Chandigarh

Gold comes off Akal Takht dome (left); chipping away the interior (below); and the sarbat khalsa: fresh crisis

RAGHU RAI



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

'I thought my wardrobe was comprehensive. Until I saw a new suiting range that proved me wrong.'

'They say that you often discover happiness right in your own backyard. I've always known that there is no country like India. And it's here that we produce some of the best textiles in the world: like the new range from Gwalior Suiting. Impeccable, international-class fabric, a perfectionist's dream. Gwalior Suiting's professionalism, research and quality control, astonished me. I said to myself that this deserves to be better known, and I wound up endorsing this range. Gwalior's Golden Glade Worsted Suiting and Dornfab.

The only drawback is, that now, more connoisseurs of the good life will get to hear of Gwalior Suiting and Shirting and I won't be able to keep them to myself.

But this is what democracy is all about, isn't it?'.

Gwalior Suiting –
In a class of its own.

M.A.K. PATAUDI

MAPP-GR-85-93-ENG.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

and Delhi, the Akali Dal held an emergency meeting in Chandigarh and exhorted the SGPC to "take solid steps to bring about unity among the Sikhs and defeat this nefarious game". As a contingency measure that brought the prospect of violence and bloodshed disturbingly close, security forces moved into some houses around the complex and sandbagged fortifications. Meanwhile the Akal Takht was being knocked down with not an SGPC sewadar in sight.

The response from the SGPC has been confused, muted and cautious. Its saturnine president, Gurcharan Singh Tohra, was visibly rattled in Chandigarh on the day the Golden Temple was taken over. But a couple of days later, at the SGPC meeting in Anandpur Sahib, he seemed more sure of himself. Nevertheless, the only action proposed so far is a campaign to "educate the Sikh masses" (implicitly recognising that the SGPC is not very sure of the community's response and mood) and then the calling of a second, bigger sarbat khalsa to overturn the decisions taken by the hotheads. This meeting is likely to take place in the Golden Temple on February 16. But by then the youngsters will have been in control of the temple complex for all of a fortnight, and the possibility of a confrontation looms large. So far only swords are in sight in the temple complex, but the guns may be hidden away.

The state Government has been reluctant to act, and Chief Minister Surjit Singh Barnala is anxious to avoid having to send in the police: such a step, reminiscent of Bluestar, might win sympathy for the Taksal and AISSF.

Meanwhile, pictures of Bhindranwale are hot-selling items in the complex. These were available even after Bluestar, but they used to be hawked surreptitiously; the sellers would sidle up and offer to sell the pictures and recorded cassettes of Dhadis narrating the whole saga of the Sant's last stand at the Akal Takht. Now there is nothing surreptitious about this trade. Large colour blow-ups of Bhindranwale, Major General Shubeg Singh in army uniform, and Bhai Amrik Singh crowd the facade of the kar seva office and pavement stalls.

NEW NAMES have also been added to the extremist pantheon. Alongside the martyrs of Operation Bluestar are newer pictures of Beant Singh and Satwant Singh, Mrs Gandhi's assassins, one dead and the other sentenced to die. The new star on the premises last fortnight was Bimal Khalsa, widow of Beant Singh. She had camped in Room 24 of the Guru Nanak Niwas, just above the SGPC secretary's room. Every time she ventured out of her room into the temple parikrama she was surrounded by a dozen saffron-turbanned, sword-wielding AISSF activists shouting "shaheed Beant Singh zindabad". In the middle of this armed escort, she managed to look slightly self-important; she has obviously overcome her earlier modesty and is no longer embarrassed at being lionised by the AISSF youth.

Gun-toting sewadars at the Akal Takht: militant revival

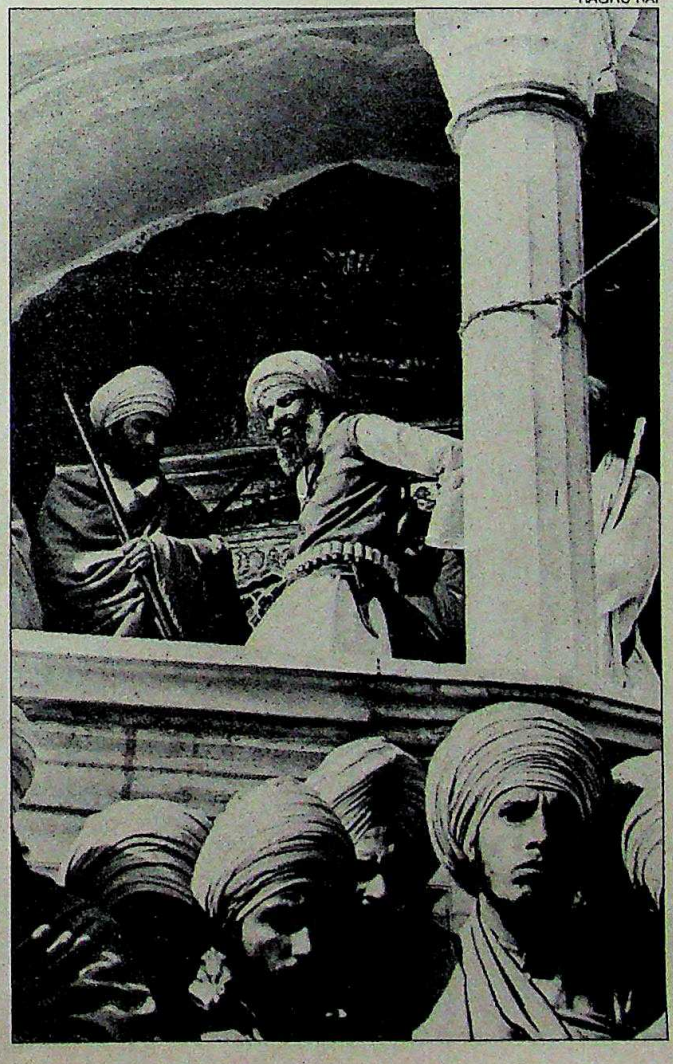
RAGHU RAI



The domination and control of the Taksal and the AISSF over the Golden Temple complex was complete. The Taksal's nominees as head priests were ceremonially installed. Tohra had hurriedly left town and in his absence it was left to an ill-at-ease Bhan Singh, the dimunitive and amiable SGPC secretary, to fob off enquiring newsmen. Bhan Singh shrank in his chair when asked how the SGPC had virtually acquiesced in the temple takeover: "We don't want to enter into any controversy. We have made a little sacrifice for a good cause." Now more force will probably have to be used to oust them than would have been needed to prevent them from entering the complex in the first place.

Most politicians and observers of Punjab affairs say Tohra's actions in the face of this latest challenge to his authority are of a piece with his previous record of avoiding any direct conflict. In the past he refused to stand up to Bhindranwale, and this time too he chose the easy path of cobbling together a loose compromise with the Damdami Taksal on the kar seva issue. The SGPC had announced it would start kar seva on January 27, but the Taksal at its meeting at its Chowk Mehta headquarters passed a resolution that it would come to the Temple complex and start the kar seva on January 26. Faced with the Taksal challenge, the choice before the SGPC—the statutory body which alone has the right to repair, knock down, or rebuild the gurdwaras under its control—was either to prevent the Taksal volunteers from entering the complex or to advance its own kar seva to January 26. The SGPC did neither.

Long before that, there had been ample warning of impending trouble. But Tohra remained inactive when the Taksal opened a kar seva office in the complex on January 14 in defiance of an SGPC ban. Two days later, Taksal volunteers started a chain of akhand paths outside the Akal Takht. The SGPC's failure to respond to even these challenges further emboldened the Taksal and the AISSF. In large posters put up in many towns as early as

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

January 20, the Taksal had proclaimed its resolve to "liberate" the gurdwaras from the SGPC. And then on January 21, Bhindranwale's father Baba Joginder Singh moved into a room adjoining the Akal Takht after exhorting the people to be ready for "any sacrifice" in connection with the kar seva. Suing for peace from what had become a position of weakness, Tohra went to the dera of Baba Kharak Singh—a veteran of many kar sevas—for a meeting with the acting Taksal Chief Baba Thakar Singh. They agreed on a compromise: the Taksal chief would be the "patron" of a a five-man committee.

But Taksal spokesmen made it clear the very next day that the SGPC had no role in the kar seva, supervisory or otherwise. Tohra preferred to wait out the storm in faraway Chandigarh and the five-man committee appointed for the kar seva merely served to distract attention from the real designs of the Taksal and AISSF. Even when the five Babas took the stage at the sarbat khalsa meeting on Republic Day, they could not prevent the proceedings from degenerating into a denunciation of the SGPC, the Punjab and Central Governments, the president, ministers and the press as traitors, enemies and

DAMDAMI TAKSAL

Up in Arms

BEGUN two centuries ago as a centre for training Sikh priests, the Damdami Taksal in more recent times has become synonymous with fundamentalism and violence. It was started in the 18th century by the legendary Sikh hero Baba Deep Singh, who felt the need for an institution which could develop into an authority on the Granth Sahib. His choice of the name for the seminary was indicative of his ambitions for the school—the word Damdami was taken from the Damdama Sahib gurudwara, where Guru Gobind Singh, the tenth guru of the faith dictated the Granth Sahib in its present form, and Taksal means mint, implying that it produced unalloyed Sikhs.

History has it that when Ahmed Shah Abdali's Afghan army desecrated and looted the Golden Temple, the Baba emerged from scholastic retirement and rallied together a peasant army of 5,000 drawn from hamlets and small towns on the road to Amritsar. Armed with rustic weapons, they were a poor match for the mighty Afghan army and were prevented from reaching the Golden Temple. But Sikh legend has it that though the Baba's head was severed during the fighting, he still managed to reach the Temple, sword in one hand and head in the other.

It was to the Taksal—in the village of Chowk Mehta off the Jalandhar-Amritsar highway— that Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale came as a boy of 11 to study the scriptures. Generally, boys between five and eight years of age are offered by their parents to the Taksal and initiated into a traditional and highly ascetic way of life. A rigorous 12-hour schedule of learning Gurbani, the different ragas on which it is based and the art of swordsmanship, is maintained even today. The last of these acquired an ominous twist when Bhindranwale—upon succeeding Kartar Singh as head of the Taksal—added martial training to the subjects being taught. The Taksal articulates Bhindranwale's essential appeal: that Hinduism will swallow Sikhism if proper measures are not taken to safeguard it.

Damdami Taksal headquarters: fundamentalist teaching

BHAWAN SINGH

The Taksal acquired a new militancy under Bhindranwale in 1978 when a bloody clash with the Nirankaris claimed 14 lives on Baisakhi day in Amritsar. "The time has come to take up arms and meet the challenge. Death has never daunted us," Bhindranwale had declared.

The Taksal has yet to decide on a successor to Bhindranwale and presently, Baba Thakar Singh is in charge. "The Sikhs were ordained to take up arms to get justice and if all other methods fail, they will once again fight," says Thakar Singh. The Taksal also plans to "cleanse" the historic gurudwaras as well as major rural gurudwaras.

The message of medievalism and militancy that Bhindranwale taught went down so well that after Operation Bluestar several youngsters arrested in the temple, when asked to identify themselves, said: "Our father is Guru Gobind Singh and we live in Anandpur Sahib." This simplistic determination makes the young cadres of the Taksal easy tools in the hands of leaders with messianic missions.

—TAVLEEN SINGH
with GOBIND THUKRAL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

anti-national. The five elders went up to the second floor of the Takht and chipped away some of the cement on the balcony parapet to symbolically begin the kar seva. Thereafter they took a back seat, allowing Mohkam Singh, the young, new spokesman of the Taksal, to take over. As far as could be seen, they did not protest when Mohkam Singh read out the resolution which disbanded the SGPC, dismissed two head priests of the Akal Takht and the Golden Temple, called upon the remaining three high priests of Sikhism to resign, excommunicated President Zail Singh, Rural Development Minister Buta Singh and Nihang chief Baba Santa Singh (who had helped in the kar seva after Operation Bluestar).

About 100 SGPC members gathered at Anandpur Sahib responded by accusing the Taksal and the AISSF of starting "a civil war among the Sikhs. In the guise of sarbat khalsa, these people have violated the basic Sikh tenets and principles, insulted the Guru and the Golden Temple." Tohra ruled out government help: "The Sikh masses are strong enough to thwart any mischief."

Inevitably, Tohra became the butt of general criticism for having failed to pre-

G.S. TOHRA

"A childish anti-Sikh action"

FOR THE first time since the Shiromani Gurudwara Prabandhak Committee (SGPC) was constituted by law in 1925 to take charge of gurudwaras—following six years of Sikh agitation—the historic body and its chief strategist Gurcharan Singh Tohra are fighting for control of the holiest of Sikh shrines—the Golden Temple and the Akal Takht.

The eight resolutions passed at the sarbat khalsa (a general house of Sikhs which issues edicts for followers of the faith) on Republic Day created a crisis. Tohra spoke to Senior Correspondent GOBIND THUKRAL about it:

Q. How do you react to the sarbat khalsa and the fact that the Damdami Taksal and AISSF are controlling the Golden Temple?

A. The congregation was organised to start the kar seva under Thakar Singh and four other respected Sikh sants. It had no authority to pass any other resolution. Only the jathedar of the Akal Takht can summon the sarbat khalsa. It was only after a valiant struggle by the Sikhs that the SGPC was constituted under the law in 1925 to manage the affairs of gurudwaras. It cannot be dissolved by a few thousand people. This is a childish, anti-Sikh action by some misguided people.

Q. It seems the Taksal totally ignored the SGPC in the matter of kar seva. Neither you nor any SGPC representative was present at the ceremony.

A. The kar seva is being organised under the SGPC's authorisation. I had agreed that Baba Thakar Singh of the Taksal, whom we hold in high esteem, should lead. It seems he could not control the youth there, who turned the holy occasion into a farce. Tomorrow five lakh people can gather in Delhi and dissolve Parliament. Can an institution be dissolved like that? I have requested Baba Thakar Singh to repudiate these resolutions and bring the misguided youth back to the right path.

Q. Suppose he cannot do that?

A. Let us wait. Why jump to conclusions?

Q. The Taksal claims a supreme right over the kar seva and has declared

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Tohra: trouble ahead that only "amritdhari" Sikhs will be allowed to participate. It seems even you will not be allowed to participate.

A. No, it is the five-member committee under Thakar Singh that will carry on the day-to-day kar seva. The SGPC shall have over-all control. All believers in Sikhism can participate.

Q. The Taksal and AISSF appear to have taken control of the Golden Temple complex and your writ does not run there.

A. The SGPC is a constitutionally elected body and it does not cease to exist because someone declares that it does not exist. We are very much there. Our efforts to maintain peace are being interpreted as if we have surrendered. I have appealed to the Sikh panth to be united and vigilant at this critical hour.

Q. The Akali Dal and the general house of the SGPC have given you a mandate to accept the challenge. What do you propose to do?

A. We are not running away and we shall certainly establish the authority of the SGPC. The jathedar of the Akal Takht, in consultation with the four other high priests, will summon the sarbat khalsa in the Golden Temple complex. All Sikh sants will be invited to participate, along with Sikhs from all over the world, to consider the critical situation arising out of the mischief of these misguided youth. I take it as a challenge to the very existence of the Sikhs.

Q. Your sarbat khalsa will be a challenge to the Taksal and AISSF. Won't that cause confrontation and bloodshed in the holy premises?

A. We have done everything to prevent a confrontation and a civil war situation from developing. There may or may not be a confrontation leading to bloodshed; our attempt will be to avoid it. I am trying to make these people see reason and desist from implementing their resolutions. On kar seva we accepted Baba Thakar Singh and four other Sikh sants, but the way they are conducting things it is hardly a kar seva. It is an attempt to destroy the pious traditions of the Sikhs.

Q. Suppose the Taksal and AISSF do not heed the command of your sarbat khalsa?

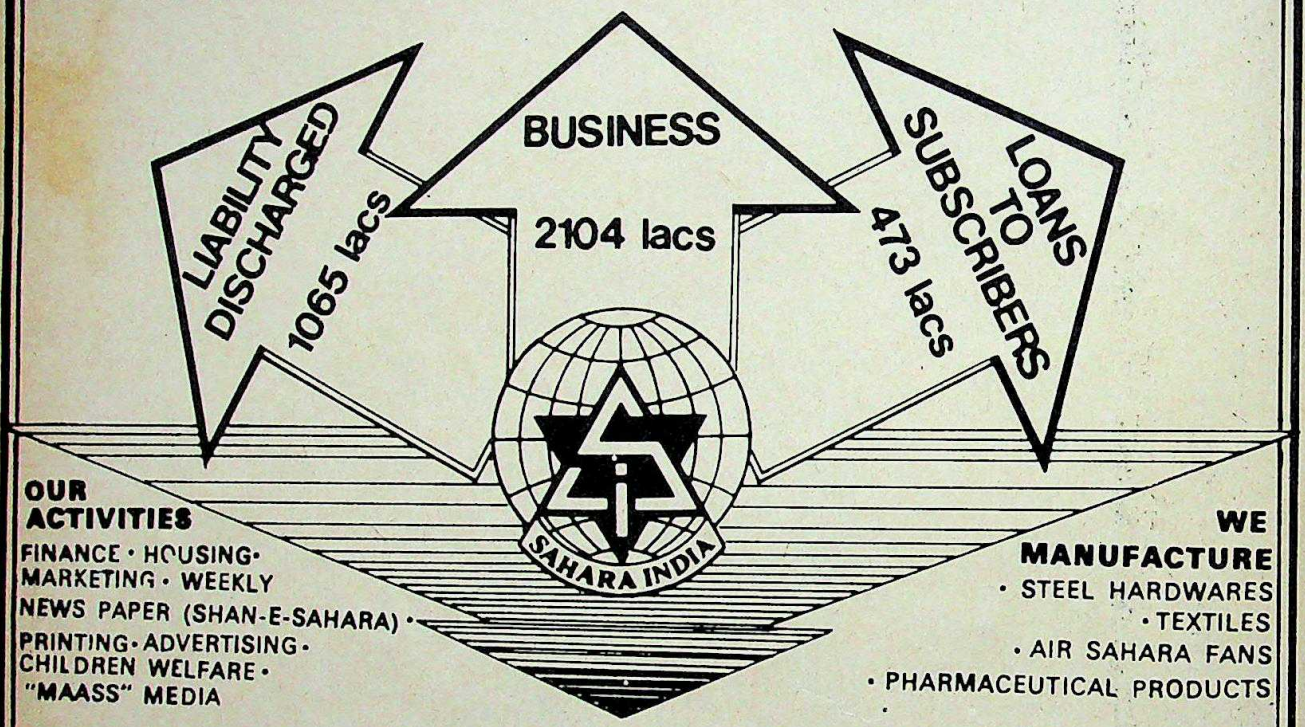
A. This is for all Sikhs and the sarbat khalsa to consider and decide. I am totally against bloodshed there. We have had too much of that already. If anything bad happens, it will be tragic. But these young men who are playing into the hands of the enemies of the Sikhs will be responsible for it.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SAHARA INDIA'S
7 YEARS OF HARD TOIL



OUR ACTIVITIES

FINANCE · HOUSING · MARKETING · WEEKLY NEWS PAPER (SHAN-E-SAHARA) · PRINTING · ADVERTISING · CHILDREN WELFARE · "MAASS" MEDIA

WE MANUFACTURE

· STEEL HARDWARES
· TEXTILES · AIR SAHARA FANS
· PHARMACEUTICAL PRODUCTS

WE ARE OPERATING THROUGH 170 OFFICES IN UTTAR PRADESH, MADHYA PRADESH, WEST BENGAL, GUJRAT, RAJASTHAN, BIHAR, ANDHRA PRADESH, KARNATAKA, ASSAM, BOMBAY & DELHI

SUMMARY OF BALANCE SHEET AS AT 30-9-85 (Rupees in Lacs rounded off)

LIABILITIES		AMOUNT	ASSETS	AMOUNT
CAPITAL		11.00	FIXED ASSETS	211.00
SECURED LOANS		NIL
UNSECURED LOANS		NIL	CURRENT ASSETS	274.00
SECURED LIABILITIES
Subscriber Deposits	2104.00
Less Liability Discharge	1065.00	1039.00
OTHER LIABILITIES
Current & Outstanding Liabilities & Provisions		22.00	LOANS & ADVANCES
			Secured Loans paid to subscribers	473.00
			OTHER CURRENT ASSETS	114.00
TOTAL Rs.		1072.00	TOTAL Rs.	1072.00

Command office, Lalbagh, Lucknow

CHHABI-85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

vent the crisis in the first place. "Tohra was trying to be too clever. Now he is stuck. There will be a scuffle and Tohra will have to face the music," remarked INA veteran and former Punjab minister Captain Rattan Singh. "Whoever controls Amritsar controls Sikh politics," argued Amritsar industrialist Dilbir Singh, "but today Tohra cannot hold his SGPC meeting in Amritsar." Kirpal Singh, Janata party MLA from Amritsar and president of the Chief Khalsa Diwan, used an Urdu couplet to sum up the SGPC's action in surrendering without a fight what the community had achieved after great sacrifice: Chaman ko chhorh dain, yeh dillagi bhi khoob rahi, Hamara khoon baha hai kali kali kay liye (To abandon the garden now? What a joke! When we have shed blood to nurture every bud). Tohra's explanation for his inaction and subsequent strategy was that he "wanted to avoid a bloodbath".

While the SGPC had remained a silent spectator during the build-up to the denouement, Akali Dal President Barnala and his main strategist Balwant Singh were preoccupied in New Delhi with the tangle over the transfer of Chandigarh to Punjab. Into this vacuum jumped Barnala's impulsive son Gagandeep. He led a few hundred members of the Akali Dal's youth wing to the Golden Temple to expel the Taksal and AISSF activists. Three sewadars of the Damdami Taksal were injured in an exchange of fire outside the Akal Takht, and eye-witnesses said the public present on the premises disarmed the Akali youth and drove them out. As the aged father of Bhindranwale, Baba Joginder Singh of the United Akali Dal, described it: "The youth tried jabr (force) and we replied with sabr (patience)."

This entire episode did little to help matters, for it alerted the activisits to the possibility of violence. If they were to intervene at all, they should not have withdrawn without wresting control of the complex, or at least expelling the Taksal members. Consequently, said one AISSF leader, a day before the kar seva the Taksal brought in about 200 young volunteers prepared to lay down their lives in the event of a clash. S.P.Singh, a lecturer in Punjabi at Amritsar, tells the story of a young Taksal activist, Jasbir Singh, who advanced the date of his sister's wedding from February to mid-January because, he told his friends, he was not sure he would survive January 26, the day the Taksal had threatened to forcibly start the kar seva. Committed Taksal men like him will confront anyone trying to recapture the temple complex.

The Barnala Government and the Akali Dal, meanwhile, face their own predicament. If the Government intervenes and there is bloodshed, the people might well start equating Barnala with someone like former Congress(I) chief minister Darbara Singh. One academic argued that "The youth have seen their counterparts in Assam forming a government, whereas in Punjab they have been left out in the cold after the elections." Many in the Akali Dal, therefore, oppose sending in the police. "These are our own children, how can we shoot them down?" asked one senior party legislator.

Captain Rattan Singh was certain last fortnight that the Taksal would not be able to sustain their actions as the people would boycott the controversial kar seva. This may well happen, because on the first two days there was almost no public participation in the kar seva. Relatively few people visited the Temple, and even those that came stood at a distance and watched the Akal Takht being dismantled. Those wielding the crowbars were almost exclusively AISSF men or Taksal activists. Also, not all is well between these two organisations. With authority not clearly defined, and no one in a position to coordinate their actions, the AISSF and the Taksal often worked at cross-purposes, one not sure what the other was up to. Both Mohkam Singh and Harinder Singh Khalsa, the AISSF convenor, said that the five-man committee would sit with the engineers to decide how much of the Takht building was to be demolished. But early next morning, before the committee could meet, young Sikhs of both organisations climbed the building and started hacking away at it. In the space of a few hours the dome had been shorn of its gold, revealing naked green cement. That day an elderly sewadar asked Taksal worker Lakha Singh to instruct the boys doing the kar seva to be careful while uprooting the expensive marble from the raised platform around the Takht. But Lakha Singh merely chided the sewadar and said: "Don't stop the sangat. The people will give enough money for new marble."

The day before the sarbat khalsa, Baba Joginder Singh had said: "I am not aware of any move to replace Kirpal Singh (head priest of the Akal Takht)." But the next day, in the presence of Joginder Singh, it was announced that Kirpal Singh had been removed. The AISSF too was annoyed that its advice was not being heeded by the Taksal. Hearing of the move to expel the priests and challenge the authority of the SGPC, the AISSF brains trust had advised Mohkam Singh to stick to the kar seva and not to expand the area of confrontation. This advice was not heeded. Moreover, the five-man committee named by Mohkam Singh to "guide panthic affairs" included some proclaimed offenders. All decisions were apparently being taken by one man—Mohkam Singh.

If Barnala believed in astrology he could have blamed all this on a malefic configuration of the planets. It did seem as if events were conspiring to gang up on him as he struggled to fend off attacks on all flanks—personal, political, inter-

RAGHU RAI

Mohkam Singh

RAGHU RAI

Thakar Singh

Baba Thakar Singh and the four elders allowed Mohkam Singh to take over and did not protest when he read out the resolution disbanding the SGPC.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

state, and intra-state. He was politicaly weakened by the failure to secure the transfer of Chandigarh in time, the first major step towards implementing the Rajiv-Longowal accord. While facing up to Bhajan Lal, who clamoured noisily for Fazilka and Abohar, and the Central Government which insisted he give 90 villages to Haryana in lieu of Chandigarh, Barnala had to keep looking over his shoulder at the ugly confrontation building up in Amritsar. To make things worse, his son Gagandeep was seriously injured in an accident while driving to Delhi.

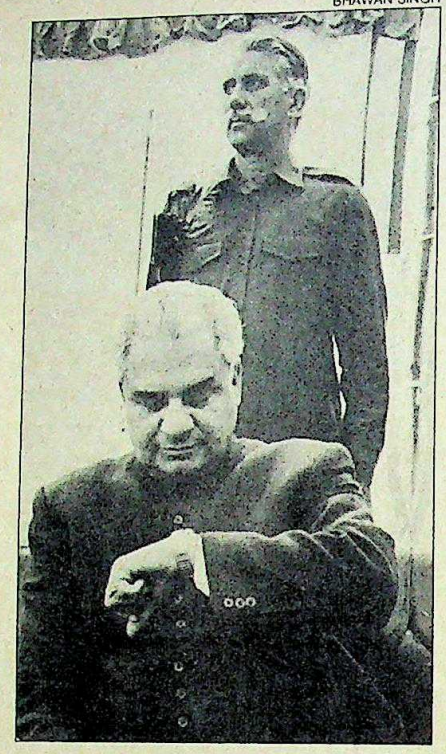
Over the coming days and weeks, the chief minister's political predicaments will mount. In the first flush of electoral victory, he had ordered the release of a number of youngsters arrested earlier on extremist charges. Now some of them are in the Golden Temple complex, and others have been named as the new high priests. Barnala may soon be forced into a corner where he has to take a tough stand against terrorists, lest law and order break down in the state (65 people have been killed in recent weeks), and yet not give the impression to his voters that he is no different from the Congress(I). As political tightropes go, this is a particularly difficult one to tread. But Barnala has no easy escape, because New Delhi must already be breathing down his neck.

Meanwhile, the extremists got a fresh opportunity to seek out martyrs when Pakistan announced a death sentence for five Sikhs who hijacked Indian Airlines flights to Lahore and when Satwant Singh and two others were sentenced to death in Delhi in the Indira Gandhi murder case. Mohkam Singh threatened from the sarbat khalsa stage: "If Satwant, Balbir Singh and Kehar Singh or the hijackers are hanged, they will become the first martyrs for the cause of Khalistan." Joginder Singh called for observance of February 2 as a day of protest against the "unduly harsh" sentences.

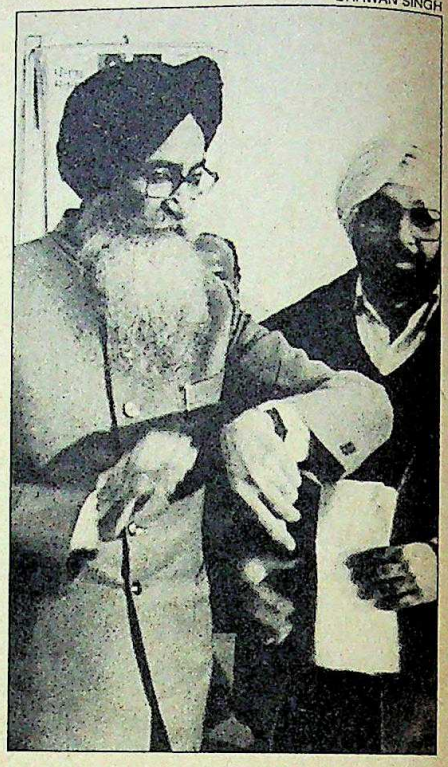
While these might be dismissed as the rantings of men on the extreme fringe of Sikh opinion, Barnala had to hop from Chandigarh to Delhi and Amritsar, interspersing state business with discussions with party advisers and central ministers. The string of setbacks appeared to be dissipating the euphoria of his election victory in September. And now he must put the Punjab accord back on the rails and restore control of the Golden Temple to the SGPC without too much violence or bloodshed. That is an onerous agenda, but there are no easy solutions in Punjab. Not last year. Not now.

—RAMINDAR SINGH with bureau reports

BHAWAN SINGH



BHAWAN SINGH



PUNJAB & HARYANA

The Bungled Accord

IT WAS a chilly night on January 25-26—the mercury had dipped to 5.5 degrees—when two cars carrying the chief ministers of Punjab and Haryana sped away from North Block, the seat of the Union Home Ministry. Inside the cars, Surjit Singh Barnala and Bhajan Lal sat stiffly, their eyes reflecting the anger inside. Left behind was their host, Home Minister S.B.Chavan, who had just had an infructuous 45-minute meeting with the twosome in his room.

The long silences that punctuated the meeting had been broken only by the ticking of the clock. It was literally the eleventh hour, and in a short while Republic Day would dawn on a country waiting for the transfer of Chandigarh to Punjab and of some Hindi-speaking areas from Punjab to Haryana. These were to mark the first step towards implementing the Rajiv-Longowal accord of July 24 last year.

But the ticking of the clock and the racing of hearts led to no solution. A day earlier, the Mathew Commission had delivered an unexpected anti-climax after a fortnight of mounting tension, drama and suspense, and said that 83 Hindi-speaking villages and two Hindi-speaking towns in Abohar and Fazilka tehsils of Punjab could not be transferred to Haryana because they were not contiguous with Haryana's border: the Punjabi-majority village of Kandukhera stood in the way.

The meeting in Chavan's office had been the last of a long run of parleys aimed at finding a way around the impasse. A compromise had been sought by transferring villages elsewhere on the Punjab-Haryana border, but the two chief ministers could not agree on this either.

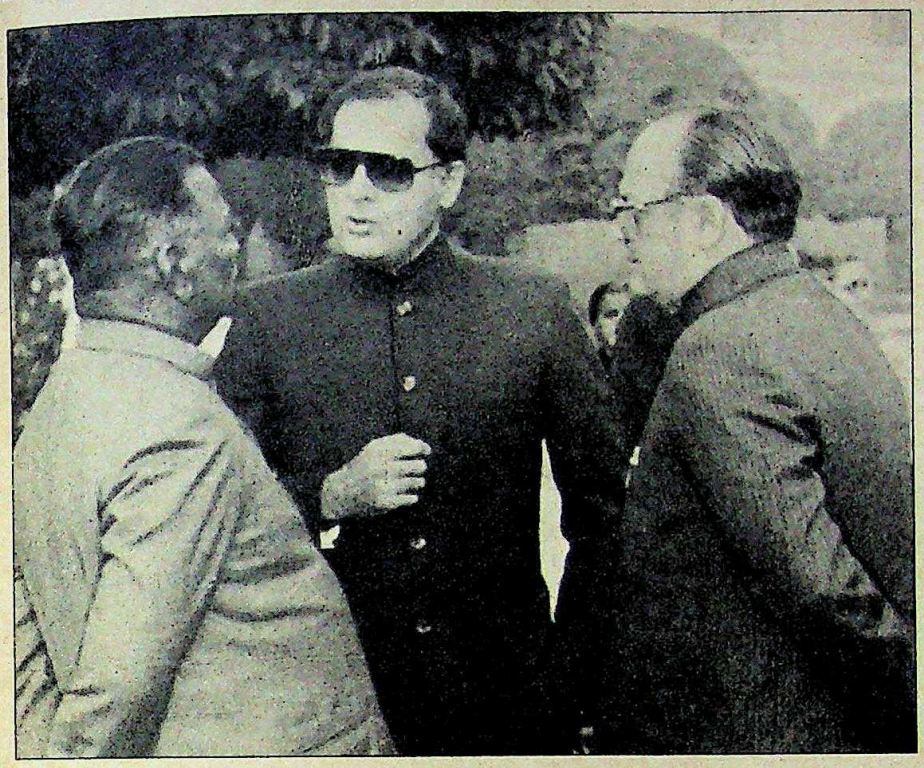
So Republic Day dawned to a stalemate, the Government slipped up on its schedule for implementing an accord which holds the key to ending the Punjab problem, and the future suddenly looked uncertain once again.

Undeterred, both chief ministers decided on the morning after to put a brave face on events. Barnala claimed credit for having prevented the transfer of Fazilka and Abohar to Haryana, stating that this had "vindicated our stand", and added that "Nobody can stop us from getting Chandigarh, today or tomorrow." Bhajan Lal in turn thundered that he had prevented Chandigarh from going without his getting the territory that he wanted.

The fact is, of course, that this is nobody's victory and everybody's defeat. And Rajiv Gandhi's only defence can be

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Chief Ministers Bhajan Lal and S.S. Barnala; Rajiv Gandhi with S.B. Chavan and Arjun Singh: continuing stalemate that he tried his best. He had deputed Arjun Singh, Arun Nehru, Minister of State for Defence Arun Singh and the newly appointed Commerce Minister P. Shiv Shankar to monitor developments. Arjun Singh, camping in the Punjab Government's hostelry in New Delhi, Kapurthala House, met Barnala and Balwant Singh no fewer than six times in 10 days and conferred twice with Bhajan Lal. To maintain complete secrecy, the meetings were held at the prime minister's residence, 7, Race Course Road, a venue which had the additional advantage that Rajiv himself could be consulted at short notice. And maintaining his basic optimism despite the stalemate, Arjun Singh said: "Our endeavour has always been to hammer the point that only mutual accommodation will see the accord through. We are still hopeful. Let the anger evaporate in the air and reason will have its day."

But the country's attention was focussed for the moment on the setback that had just occurred and the bungling that caused it: the raising of passions in both states through the process of linguistic enumeration, the communal divide this caused in the villages being enumerated, the building up of tension before the commission gave its no-go verdict at the last minute, and much more. There was the Congress(I)'s failure to keep Haryana Chief Minister Bhajan Lal in check even though he raised the banner of revolt as early as December, and the Punjab Government's go-slow on the canal project that will take water to Haryana.

For Rajiv Gandhi, there was the unhappy prospect of either losing Haryana to opposition parties in state elections due next year or finding an unhappy Punjab losing faith in the Akali Government and turning to hard-liners if it felt it hadn't got justice. And over-riding everything else, there was the stark fact that the peace process had suffered a setback.

INDEED, with both states readying to claim large chunks of each other's territory when the second land commission is set up under the terms of the Rajiv-Longowal accord, and when the river waters tribunal starts apportioning the waters of the Ravi-Beas system to Punjab, Haryana and Rajasthan, there could be much louder thunderclaps over a troubled part of the country, and agitations far more difficult to handle than the thoroughly convincing rasta roko campaign that paralysed Haryana for a day last fortnight.

The slide began with the Mathew Commission being given defective terms of reference, which enabled Bhajan Lal to claim more than 400 villages in Punjab even though they were not territorially contiguous with Haryana (one of the qualifying conditions included in the Rajiv-Longowal accord). The commission then declined to go into the question of giving Haryana territory from parts of Punjab other than Fazilka and Abohar (as Barnala had offered), and the commission's report itself was delayed by more than three weeks after it sought repeated extensions of its December 31 deadline: this after long periods that Justice K.K. Mathew spent in Kerala. But perhaps the real culprit responsible for the delay was the Government, because Mathew had asked for linguistic enumerators as early as the middle of November. The Government's response came two months later, in mid-January.

In New Delhi, leading political figures seemed to be playing their own games, with Punjab beginning to believe that some of the leading lights of the Rajiv Government were playing Haryana's card. Barnala once refused to show up for a meeting with Bhajan Lal and a central minister, who waited for hours for a joint session that never materialised.

It was not an atmosphere in which sensitive issues could be amicably sorted out. And the same Haryana legislators who had formally welcomed the accord six months ago by voting in support of a resolution on the subject in the Haryana Assembly, now began voicing directly contradictory opinions.

For a while centre-stage was occupied by Bhajan Lal, who in a desperate effort to stave off the political challenge from the Lok Dal, ended up by creating an atmosphere in which no accord was possible. And when he realised that Kandukhera would come in the way of his claiming the villages, he quickly initiated moves to exchange territory with Rajasthan in a manner that would give Haryana continguity with Fazilka and Abohar. But Barnala served notice of going on the offensive when he said that "Kandukhera is like a Khyber pass. This village provides us contiguity with 500 other Punjabi-speaking villages in Haryana's Sirsa and Hissar districts."

Bhajan Lal had raised his banner of revolt as early as December, at the Bombay centenary celebrations of the Congress, when he delivered a hard-hitting speech within Rajiv Gandhi's earshot. He thundered to the response of an applauding contingent from his state: "Haryana is a state of peace-loving people, but it will not tolerate any injustice. It will not accept the Mathew Commission's award if the award is unjust to Haryana." Added Chiranjilal Sharma, a senior party MP from Haryana at the same venue: "The politeness of the people of Haryana must not be mistaken for cowardice." These comments might normally have been dismissed as matters of no import, except that Rajiv sat there in indulgent silence.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Even at his press conference at the AICC(I) headquarters a week before Republic Day, Rajiv evaded probing questions about Bhajan Lal's role. When asked why he could not prevent the Haryana unit of the party from making discordant noises, he said everything would be all right after the Mathew Commission gave its verdict.

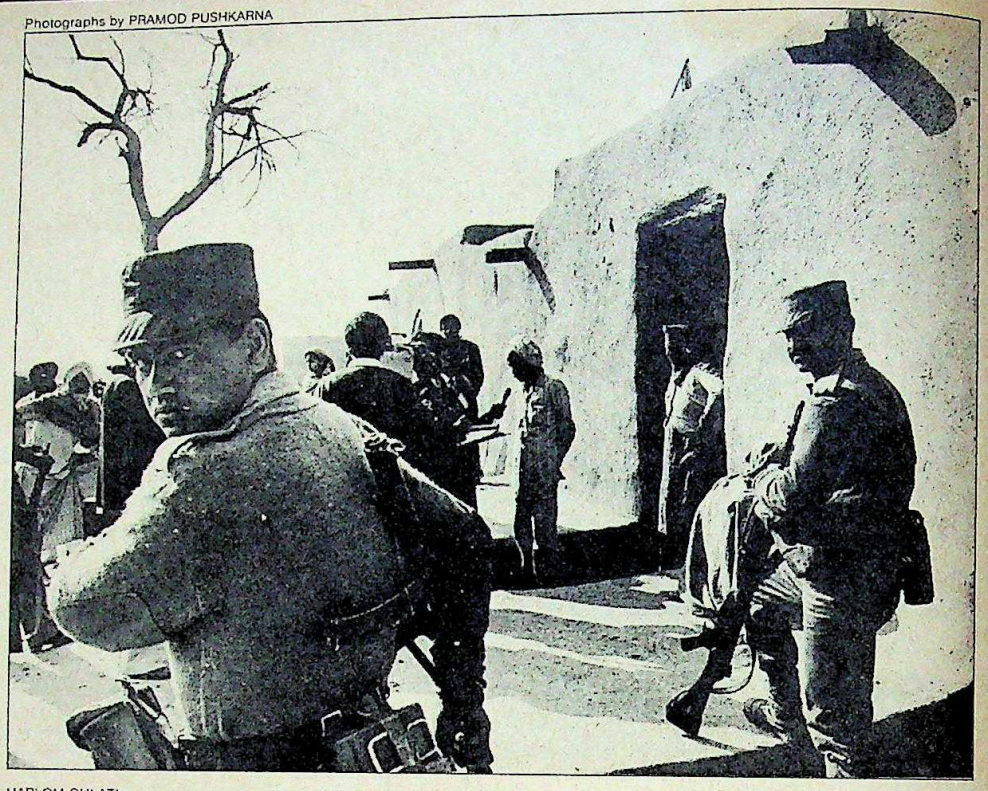
Delhi finally sat up very late in the day. While the term of the Mathew Commission was extended one last time, till January 25, negotiations began to try and save the accord. Arjun Singh met Barnala twice on January 24, and was then closeted with the prime minister for over an hour. Both Arjun Singh and Chavan made desperate efforts to get the two chief ministers to meet each other half-way, but Chavan finally declared: "We were preparing ourselves for a happy ending. But time was ticking away and we couldn't keep to the deadline."

Perhaps, in the last throw of the dice, Rajiv asked the unlikely person of Finance Minister V.P. Singh to take the Mathew Commission's recommendations to President Zail Singh. But the President kept his counsel. Still later, Arjun Singh summoned a meeting of Congress(I) MP's from both Haryana and Punjab, but the two groups spoke on different wavelengths. And Janata Party President Chandra Shekhar summed up the final situation when he said: "By now it is the Punjab accord that has lost its sanctity."

In a statement typical of the mood that resulted at the end of this period of high drama, Bhajan Lal declared that he would not accept even 500 villages in lieu of Kandukhera and added that he would not allow Chandigarh to go till water reached Haryana through the Sutlej-Yamuna Link (SYL) canal. The canal, of course, has nothing to do with the transfer of Chandigarh: the canal is due to be completed only on the next Independence Day.

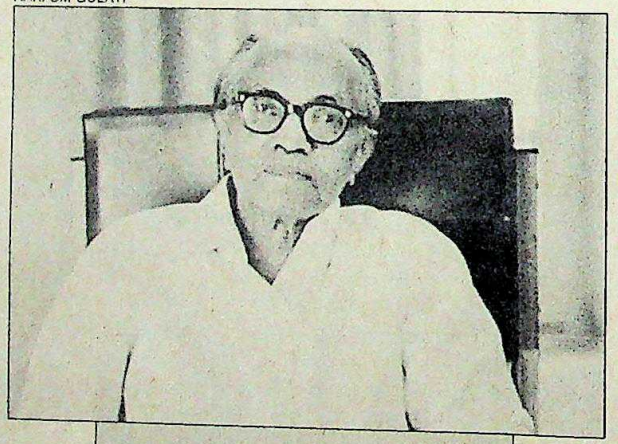
Perhaps the key factor that led to political temperatures rising to a point where no sensible action was possible was the order for carrying out a linguistic enumeration of villages in Fazilka and Abohar, and Kandukhera village in Muktsar tehsil. Two thousand enumerators were rushed to the site, jawans of the Central Reserve Police Force (CRPF) waited on the Haryana side of the border (Punjab refused to have anything to do with them), and additional Assam Rifles personnel were flown in when matters threatened to get out of hand. Finally, the enumerators themselves had to be changed, and replacements from southern India and West Bengal flown in so that impartiality could be assured in a charged situation.

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



Enumerator with armed escorts in Kandukhera: tense situation

HARI OM GULATI



The commission's report was delayed by more than three weeks after it sought repeated extensions of time; this after long periods that Justice K.K. Mathew spent in Kerala.

In between, the Hindu sarpanch of Kandukhera, Hanuman Bishnoi, disappeared amid misleading charges of kidnapping. And 300 outsiders who had obviously come to Kandukhera in an effort to be enrolled as local citizens were bundled up and sent packing.

The final result in Kandukhera is unquestionable: Minister of State for Internal Security Arun Nehru had ordered the use of modern technology (video cameras) to record for posterity every bit of the enumeration in the village. But the equally unquestionable verdict is that the enumeration need never have taken place: everyone has always known that the village is essentially Punjabi-speaking. In the event, a momentum built up in both states against any peaceable transfer

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Kandukhera villagers keeping watch: resisting change of territory.

The situation in Chandigarh, meanwhile, was farcical. Everyone, but everyone, had expected the Union territory to be transferred to Punjab on January 26, and the city decided to prepare for this in style.

For weeks, Chandigarh Administration officials raced against time to complete all the formalities of the transfer. The backlog of files was cleared, and officials did everything to exhaust budgets for the financial year. By midnight of January 25-26, tired officials of the State Bank of India had cleared over 3,000 bills totalling Rs 1 crore by way of salary arrears, medical allowances and overtime bills. Scores of employees whose services had not been confirmed since 1970 not only got confirmation but out-of-turn promotions and increments, and one employee got the selection grade plus Rs 20,000 in arrears. The sports department left everyone aghast by distributing its budget of Rs 6 lakh as awards to sportsmen and sportswomen, and the engineering department ordered new electric fittings and mercury vapour lamps instead of ordinary bulbs on the streets. Numerous cases had to be cleared by New Delhi, and a caravan of cars moved every day between Chandigarh and the national capital. One officer counted 46 visits that he had made to Delhi in three months, to discuss details concerning the transfer.

Officials had also been wrestling with the problem of valuing assets (a matter that should have been sorted out months earlier), and wrangling continued between Punjab and Haryana over who should retain the water heads, the source of the supply of potable water for the city.

BUT AS matters finally turned out, the 18,000 administration employees who had expected to join the Punjab cadre as well as the 4,000 employees who had expected to be reverted to Haryana stayed put where they were, and the entire preparatory exercise took on the air of a bad joke.

Haryana had some legitimate fears too: work on the SYL canal has been slow, and there is every likelihood that it will not be completed by the deadline of August 15, 1986. Haryana claims that it has been paying Punjab for the cost of the project, but that work is not going on apace. In Punjab, the farmers meanwhile had launched an agitation against the alignment of the canal, arguing that fertile land would be ruined by its construction.

Punjab may have its problems, and Barnala complains that "The digging of the canal was stopped by the Darbara Singh regime. It stopped acquiring land, and did not finalise its alignment. Even during President's rule, Haryana and the Central Government did not pay money to Punjab to acquire the land. Now they put all the blame on us. What are we supposed to dig now?"

But the Akali record is not very good either. The Centre has promised liberal funding and told the Government that it will suitably compensate the families likely to be displaced by its construction. But nothing much has happened so far.

If that spells trouble, Haryana has something to be worried about. And Chowdhary Birendra Singh, president of the Haryana Pradesh Congress(I) Committee, said: "Since Punjab is not allowing the digging of the canal, it will only be correct to hold the accord in abeyance till the canal is completed." Later, at a meeting of the state party's MP's and MLA's, a resolution was adopted which said, "The completion of the SYL canal is a question of life and death, and there is no question of the state Government agreeing to the transfer of Chandigarh without a proper settlement of territorial and water disputes." Copies of the resolution were sent to Rajiv, who does not seem to have admonished his partymen for adopting a stand contrary to the terms of the July 1984 accord.

Certainly, Haryana's belligerence was fully in evidence during the rasta roko agitation on January 23. Especially in the Jat-dominated districts of the state, the agitation touched a popular chord that resulted in thousands of people with no particular party affiliation pouring out on

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH

Belligerent Jats blocking the roads and disrupting rail traffic on January 23 to the state's roads, pulling tree branches, boulders and trucks with deflated tyres across the major arteries, preventing all traffic. Trains too were stopped, and in places passenger bogies were detached from trains and pushed along to isolated spots. Five people were killed during the day in police firing. Said retired captain Dewan Singh, an 85-year-old Jat farmer at Rohtak who is anxious to get water on to his farm: "I stand on this road to see that no car passes this way today, and I do it only in the interest of my farm and my family, which depends on it.

Bhajan Lal was more than aware of this mood and the political oblivion it spelt for him if he failed to respond. So he camped for days in the capital, taking his public relations machinery with him. There, they used cyclostyling machines to crank out till the late hours copies of memoranda, appeals and statements addressed to everyone who mattered in the city. Bhajan Lal called on each member of the Cabinet Committee on Political Affairs, and when he met Rajiv on January 13 reiterated his stand that the accord should be implemented in both letter and spirit. Rajiv's response is not known, but Bhajan Lal seems to have been sufficiently encouraged by it to start pressurising the Mathew Commission over its earlier demand of a fresh enumeration in Fazilka and Abohar on the plea that the demographic character of the area had "undergone a sea-change" since the 1981 census.

What was particularly intriguing was Haryana's emphatic rejection of Punjab's offer of villages elsewhere on the states' common border. Apparently, Bhajan Lal had been confident that the sarpanch of Kandukhera, Hanuman Bishnoi, who was his friend, would be able to tilt the balance in some way.

It was probably the Congress(I)'s over-confidence which prevented Rajiv from giving Bhajan Lal a rap on the knuckles early on. If Rajiv Gandhi's greatest triumph in 1985 was the pulling off of the Punjab accord, he needed to cap that in 1986 by anticipating the complications that could come in the way of the accord being implemented, and taking suitable preventive action. But he failed to anticipate the size of the very first hurdle in his way, and came a cropper. He can pick himself up and start again, and it is certainly possible that once passions have cooled, some kind of give-and-take can be worked out. But the only judgement possible last fortnight was that the momentum that had been built up for finally putting the Punjab problem behind the country had been lost, at least for the moment.

—SUMIT MITRA, PRABHU CHAWLA and GOBIND THUKRAL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INFORMATION AT YOUR SERVICE...

ELECTRONICS FOR YOU

Our prime publication. A monthly magazine catering for the information needs of the student, the researcher and the electronics industry—in fact, for any one who may be interested in electronics in any manner.

With a wide variety of articles by our writers and contributors, we also keep our readers up to date on recent trends, ideas and products and include easy to make projects with complete instructions.

FACTS FOR YOU

Our specialist magazine. This monthly deals with the latest economic trends and has proved an invaluable asset to students and researchers alike. Prepared by a panel of experts it also prints contributions from eminent economists which help disseminate new ideas and theories from around the world.

PUBLICATION DIVISION

Apart from our two main magazines we also publish books and directories. A variety of books have been published particularly on electronics, which cater for both amateur experimenters and expert researchers.

We also stock some selected books on electronics and computers. These are sold through our sales offices, our distributors' offices and their agents, and also supplied through our Books Mail Order Service.

PHOTOTYPESETTING DIVISION

Keeping with the times we have a phototypesetting computer to carry out all typesetting and layout jobs for our publications. Occasionally, job work is also accepted for books and company annual reports.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT DIVISION

Apart from Kits 'n' Spares—our supplier to hobbyists and researchers—we have a well equipped laboratory to carry out tests and research on new products in the market and those under development. Most circuits and projects published in Electronics For You magazine are first tested in this lab.

Please send at your earliest:

- ☐ Subscription/Advertisement rates for Electronics For You/Facts For You
- ☐ List of books available with you.
- ☐ List of components and kits available from Kits 'n' Spares.
- ☐ .....

Name _____

Address _____

_____

_____

Beautex

For details, write to:

EFY Enterprises Pvt Ltd

605 'Siddhartha', 96 Nehru Place

New Delhi 110019

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sheer sound. Anyone would sit up and take notice!

Ultimately, when a system like this comes along, there's magic in the air.

And for the first time, sound seems to have a presence. Full-bodied. Compelling.

The music wells up like wine and fills your room. And before you know, it's filled your life...

So, we are not talking of ordinary sound. No.

We are talking of the AKAI BUSH Hi-Fi system. PRO-A1 to be specific. Quite simply, you've never heard anything like this before!

Designed to kill...

Hold your breath and take a look! A silent symphony in silver. A majestic column of superb components engineered around the most recent advances in audio technology. Just one glance will tell it all!

Turn it on... and face the impact! Take in the magic of a series of AKAI BUSH marvels one by one...

The Turntable. Let the heads turn...

Belt driven and exquisite, the turntable has an ultra-sensitive cartridge and an automatic tonearm return. Specific cuts can be manually selected with a cueing lever.

The Graphic Equalizer. Make your own music...

Since your room has its own specific acoustics, the graphic equalizer lets you achieve music response that sounds best to you! Nine slider switches play with each channel at the command of your fingertips!

Raise a voice... or mute a beat... you almost have a music conductor's control over output!

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Amplifier.
Get into big time sound...

224 Watts of crystal clear peak music power! Yours to tame it all with easy controls and meters.

The brightly lit LED function indicators display the existing mode of operation. Even a whisper holds you spell-bound!

The Cassette Deck.
All music, no noise...

Good-bye tape hiss! The Dolby B Noise Reduction makes sure there's no more interference with your listening pleasure!

While the High Density Head provides greater saturation and ensures perfect metal tape compatibility. The latest in the world.

The Speakers.
Speaks volumes on quality sound...

A three-way bass-reflex design for rich, full bass and thrilling highs.

The final window to great sound output!

So that's the AKAI BUSH PRO-A1. If it already sounds like music, you owe it to yourself to visit the nearest BUSH dealer for a glimpse of the real thing!

After all, will you go through life without experiencing the ultimate in sound?

AKAI BUSH

Hi-Fi Systems

Sound from another world.

Price Rs. 11,400/-
(including excise duty, sales tax and local taxes extra)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

And in case you don't have the space but still want the power:

AKAI BUSH

System M 10

...ul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

* Price Rs. 8,625/-
Optional equalizer Rs. 1,925/- extra.
* (including excise duty, sales tax and local taxes extra)

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

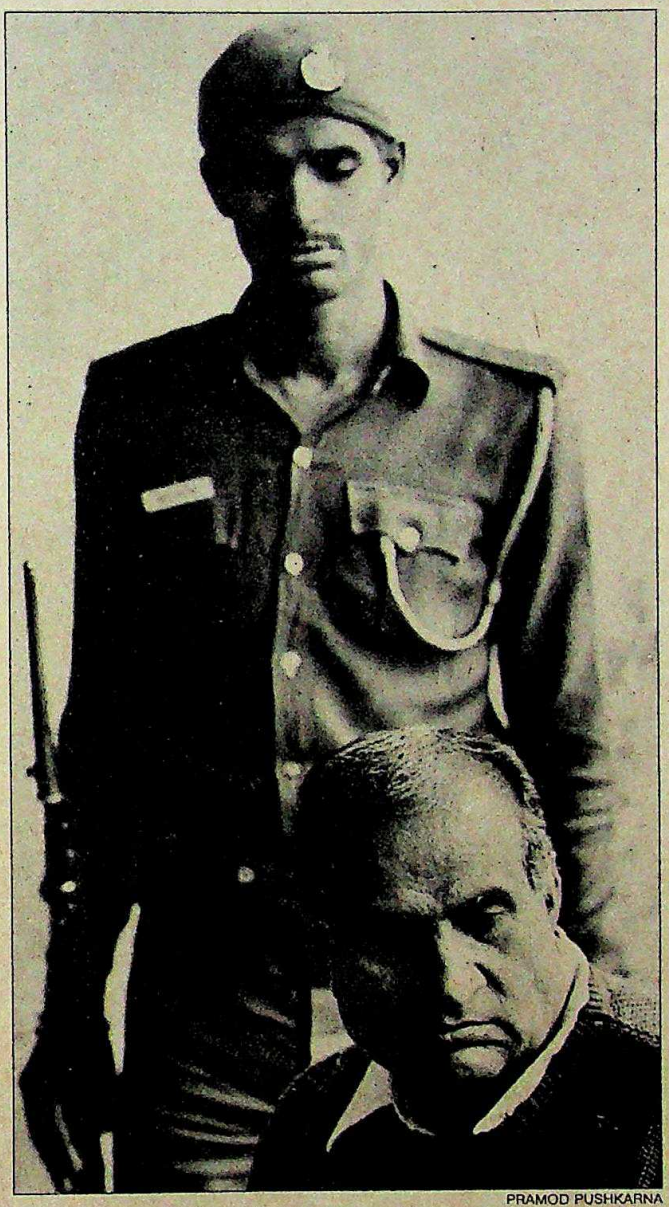
RAMA SWARUP

Double Edged Scandal

THERE is more of the cloak than daggers in evidence in the latest cause celebre of the Indian media—the Rama Swarup spy sensation. The case took a dramatic turn last week when two Central ministers of state, K.P.Singh Deo and Chandulal Chandrakar, and Dr M.S. Sanjeevi Rao, chairman of the Electronics Commission, who also holds ministerial status, quit the Government. The resignations, which were promptly accepted, came just one day before Swarup appeared in Delhi's Patiala House courts under heavy police guard for the official filing of the chargesheet against him. The three men have been named in the chargesheet, along with a number of other current and former members of Parliament, as having been sent by Swarup, an alleged spy for US interests, on trips to Taiwan.

Swarup had made it clear in his interview to INDIA TODAY (November 15, 1985) that if he was not granted anticipatory bail he would name prominent ruling party members and MP's who had accepted his generous hospitality on behalf of various anti-communist organisations and the Taiwan government for whom he was acting as unofficial representative. Thus, the resignations were not particularly surprising. But INDIA TODAY learnt that last week's disclosures are only the tip of the iceberg. In a conversation with Swarup during his brief appearance in court, the alleged spy claimed that he is prepared to blow the lid off several scandals involving the Government and its secret dealings with Israel in which he has been involved as a clandestine conduit.

More sensationally, he stated that if he is indeed an American spy, he qualifies as India's first double agent since he was actually working for the Intelligence Bureau (IB) and the Directorate of Military Intelligence (DMI) on and off for the last 20 years. Swarup's claim got no ready confirmation from India's intelligence agencies, so his credibility on the subject is yet to be established. But he provides a fund of convincing detail, and says that he supplied valuable information to DMI between 1962 and 1970 and that he was working for the IB till as late as August 1985. (He was arrested in October).



PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Rama Swarup: cause for crisis

Swarup claims to have proof in the form of confidential correspondence, that the then Israeli chief of staff and head of military intelligence were secretly invited to India by the DMI in 1963 in the wake of the border war with China. The DMI, he says, put them up in Rooms 208 and 209 of Delhi's Imperial Hotel while he himself stayed in Room 210. At that time, he was working for the DMI and the Government wanted Israeli help because of the poor quality of Soviet weaponry they were receiving then. He claims that all this was done with the full knowledge of the Government which, during the Janata rule, also used him to arrange a meeting between the then Israeli defence minister, Moshe Dayan, and Prime Minister Morarji Desai in 1978. Since then, he says, he has been used by the Government on numerous occasions to convey secret messages to and from Tel Aviv. He also named the senior officials in the IB to whom he claimed he was passing on information.

If indeed Swarup is the spy in the ointment, as the chargesheet makes out, then he seems determined to apply it where it hurts the most—to the ruling party and the two houses of Parliament. Singh Deo, Chandrakar and Sanjeevi Rao were actually named in the original complaint registered by the special branch from documents seized from Swarup's office, Far Eastern Trade Services (FETS), prior to his arrest. In the latest disclosures, the others named as having accepted trips to various countries from Swarup at some stage or the other are Atal Behari Vajpayee, Kanti Desai, son of former prime minister Morarji Desai, D.S. Jadeja and Arvind Netam (both Congress (I) MP's), P. Upendra, leader of the Telugu Desam Party in the Rajya Sabha, M. Gurupadaswamy, Janata Party MP, and Khushwant Singh, Rajya Sabha member and well-known columnist. Upendra, however, has flatly denied that he visited Taiwan through Swarup.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If the Government's objective in naming such prominent and influential personalities in the chargesheet is to prove the extent of Swarup's contacts, the ploy seems to have boomeranged. The resignations of Singh Deo, Chandrakar and Rao have been a serious blow to the ruling party at a time when it can least afford it. Swarup in fact told INDIA TODAY last week that he intends to name more members of the cabinet and ruling party who are guilty of the same 'crime' as the three who have quit. If he is as good as his word, Rajiv Gandhi's council of ministers could soon look somewhat denuded. The Government, in that event, will look particularly silly, because most members of Parliament accept a variety of junkets abroad in between sessions with scarcely a thought about espionage links, or indeed any culpability on this score.

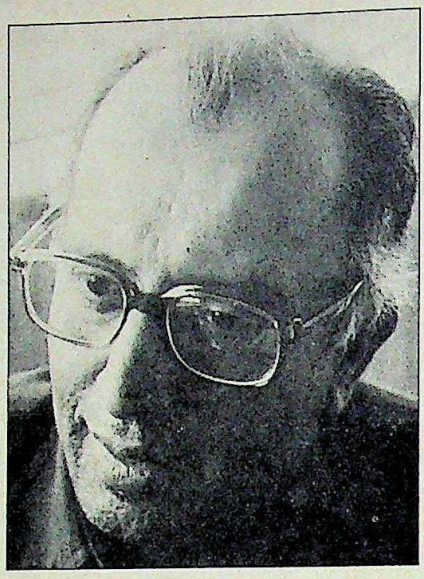
NEVERTHELESS, Swarup is in hot water, as a reading of the chargesheet makes clear. Through Kanti Desai, he is supposed to have got details of the talks between the then prime minister, Morarji Desai, and Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev during Morarji's visit to Moscow. This information is stated to have been passed on to US diplomats, among them the man who figured in the Larkins case two years ago.

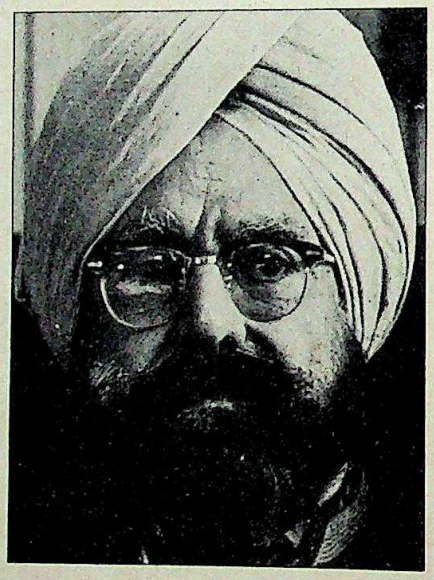
Swarup is also supposed to have used Kanti Desai to try and get the Janata government to put an end to the rupee payment arrangement for Indo-Soviet trade. The matter was apparently discussed by the Janata Cabinet, but shelved following strong opposition by Jagjivan Ram, H.N. Bahuguna and Mohan Dharia.

The other facts and allegations contained in the chargesheet are:

- The passing on of information and profiles on the key political power brokers in the Indira Gandhi and Rajiv governments, as well as the addresses of MP's taken from the Who's Who, to the counsellor of the West German Embassy and the Israeli consul;
- The recovery of four documents connected with the air force and a restricted army map from his office premises;
- That he was being "paid funds by the Americans" in exchange for information and for organising anti-Soviet activities.

Swarup and his defence counsel, Pran Nath Lekhi, have taken the line that Swarup has been arrested under pressure from the Soviet Union, against whom some of his anti-communist activities were aimed. In fact, the first paragraph of the chargesheet clearly states that Swarup had been indulging in activities prejudicial "to the friendly relations with foreign states", which, judging by the contents of the complaint, can only mean the Soviets.





Desai (top); Kushwant Singh; and Upendra: exaggerated affair

It is, in the context, entirely likely that the tip-off about Swarup and some of the details of his activities came from the Soviets. The chargesheet states somewhat mysteriously that the original information about Rama Swarup was received by the Tughlaq Road police station on September 28, 1985, from a "reliable source". The complaint goes on to state that "the source also informed that at present he (Swarup) was keeping certain documents which were directly or indirectly useful to an enemy country and unless an immediate raid was done there was every chance of the documents being destroyed". At no stage, however, is the source named.

The surprising thing is that the raid on Swarup's offices, on November 8 when the defence papers were found, came a full five weeks after this tip-off, as the chargsheet itself admits! The delay is inexplicable. It is also inexplicable why a government which believed Swarup to be a high-level spy did not seal his offices or freeze his bank accounts till one week after his arrest on October 28.

It is also unlikely that all the information was obtained by the police, because the detailed information goes back 30 years. The chargesheet relating to Swarup's supposed espionage activities names a series of Swarup's American "handlers" over the decades (only the last names are mentioned). The charges go further and claim that his code name was '72', a number he used to give when he rang up his "handling officer" in the American embassy. He would then ask whether he should come for tea or coffee. Coffee meant 11.00 a.m. and tea meant 3 p.m. It then gives details of how Swarup used to switch cars for his clandestine meetings, when secret documents were allegedly exchanged. All this took place well before the investigating agencies got into the act.

Certainly, the Soviets could not have been happy with Swarup's activities. As an effective lobbyist with influential contacts, Swarup had organised numerous seminars and parliamentary groups which were anti-communist in nature. He was also organising testimony by various people before the Human Rights Commission in Geneva regarding alleged Soviet atrocities in Afghanistan, and had convened an Indo-FRG Parliamentary Group made up of prominent MP's which must have been looked askance at by East Germany. And his successful pro-Israeli activities were a further embarrassment.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

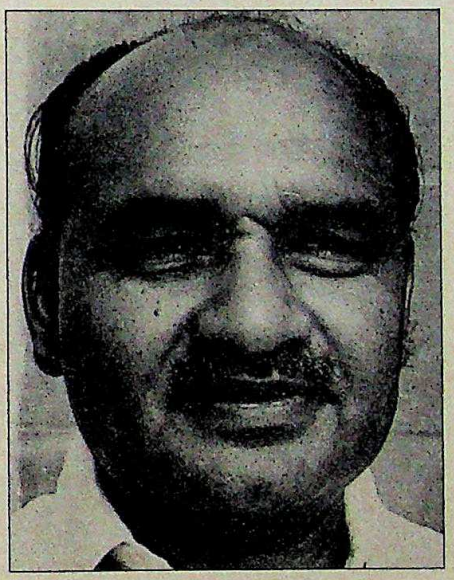
The odd aspect of the case is the arrest of Swarup's teenaged peon, while his manager seems to have been let off the hook. The peon, Javed Siddiqi, has been charged under the Official Secrets Act even though the chargesheet only mentions that the papers relating to the air force and army were recovered from his desk. A more serious charge is levelled against Swarup's manager, Anita Sethi, who, the complaint claims, used to act as a courier and meet the American embassy "handlers" in cinema halls to pass on secret documents, allegedly given to her by Swarup. Yet, incredibly, no charges have been framed against her. Presumably, the prosecuting authorities are hoping that she will turn a witness.

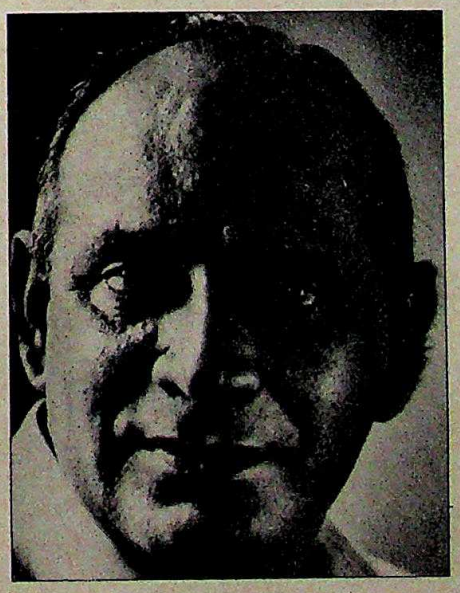
BUT THE real irony is in the fact that Lekhi has himself been named in the chargesheet as having been involved in the whole affair and also as having been paid large sums of money by the Americans. Considering the fact that Lekhi will be fighting the case on behalf of Swarup, this must set some kind of precedent even in the bizarre world of espionage.

Right now, Lekhi and his assistants are planning to argue that the entire sordid saga has been a plant and are demanding that the trial be held in an open court rather than in camera. That is hardly likely, considering that the case involves the Official Secrets Act. But the defence strategy is to ensure that the scandals and names Swarup intends to expose receive due publicity and further embarrass the Government.

Some of that has already been achieved even before the actual hearings have begun, as last week's resignations proved. And it is difficult to understand how the ruling party allowed itself to get into this uncomfortable position. The names of Sanjeevi Rao, Singh Deo and Chandrakar had been mentioned in the original first information report (FIR) filed last September. Why then did the Government wait till the last minute to ask for the resignations, in fact the day before the complaint was to be filed in court and, consequently, appear in the press?

Information from high-level sources indicates that the Government bungled the affair badly. The contents of the complaint were known months ago though it was filed in court on the evening of January 24. Before that, Rajiv had discussed the affair with President Zail Singh on at least two occasions but nothing was decided regarding the action to be taken. It was only on the night of January 26 that copies of the complaint went to the prime minister and Minister of State for Internal Security Arun Nehru. Singh Deo and Chandrakar were summoned by Rajiv the next morning and after some discussion it was decided that the best thing would be for the two to resign. The same day, the issue was discussed at a cabinet meeting where the resignation decision was ratified by all present. But the delay in the action, and the obvious error in timing, only added to the general impression that free junkets to Taiwan had been blown out of proportion.





Singh Deo (top); Chandrakar; and Rao: sudden exits

As some kind of an afterthought, the Government has decided to try and exonerate the three men who have resigned by referring the matter to the Supreme Court and asking the highest judicial body in the land to determine whether a case exists against Singh Deo, Chandrakar and Rao. But even if they are exonerated ultimately, the possibility of fresh resignations is not ruled out.

Meanwhile, both the West German and US Embassies promptly issued strong denials that they had ever received classified material from Rama Swarup at any time. A source in the West German Embassy confirms that they were accepting material in the form of parliamentary proceedings and related matters from Swarup for a nominal payment of a few hundred rupees, but none of the material was classified or not a matter of public record. Almost every embassy receives similar material, notably in a weekly digest called News behind the News published by a private Delhi organisation. In fact, the US ambassador in New Delhi has reportedly filed an official complaint with the Ministry of External Affairs denying the charges about Swarup's alleged espionage activities on their behalf.

But if Swarup was indeed a spy for US interests—and it is entirely possible that the circumstantial evidence will be enough for a conviction—any further disclosures are only certain to damage the Government further. Similarly, if Swarup fulfils his threat of producing the names of other cabinet ministers or senior Congress(I) functionaries he had dealings with, the Government after having set a precedent will have no choice but to ask for further resignations. The ultimate paradox will be, of course, if it is firmly established that all along Swarup was actually operating as an intelligence agent for the Government of India.

—DILIP BOBB

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONGRESS(I)

Shuffle Puzzle

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH

IT BORE the unmistakable stamp of Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi. When newsmen were summoned individually on a chilly Sunday morning by officials of the All India Congress(I) Committee (AICC-I), with the invitation stating that "Rajiv Gandhi will address his first-ever press conference in Delhi as the Congress president", another headline-grabber seemed in the offing. But, as Rajiv took his seat under a makeshift shamiana put up on the grounds of the AICC(I) headquarters on Akbar Road, the proceedings were anti-climactic.

In a move that sparked off more questions than it answered, he reassembled the jigsaw puzzle of who's who in the party, for the third time since he rode into the office as the party's nominated president. The shuffle offered no clues as to how long the party would remain the tail of the Government, and whether the tail would at all wag the dog. The question was specially poignant in a year when Rajiv had firmly resolved to hold the organisational elections, after a lapse of 14 years.

At the same time it was abundantly clear that the well-publicised Sunday afternoon exercise was more in the nature of political jugglery than a serious attempt to hand over the organisation to people of proven integrity and ability to manage what is the largest non-communist party in the world. If the changes announced were any indication, it was evident that Rajiv's attempt was to ensure that only those who owe their political existence to him personally would be the party bosses.

However, Rajiv asserted: "The party will be supreme from now on." And at least the induction of the prime minister's trusted trouble-shooter, Arjun Singh, as vice-president seemed in keeping with this claim. Singh had an hour-long discussion with Rajiv a day earlier and was present under the shamiana. The same day, he resigned as Union commerce minister and returned to the AICC(I) headquarters later in the afternoon to unceremoniously take charge. "Getting Arjun Singh over there signifies that Rajiv means business," quipped an enthusiast. But the other changes he announced seemed to dilute the contention.

To follow Singh, and join a rung below as general secretaries of the AICC(I), were two ministers of state: Nawal Kishore Sharma, who was in charge of the Petroleum Ministry, and Tengthuri Anjiah, in charge of the labour Ministry. Both

Rajiv addressing press conference in New Delhi: political jugglery

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ranked fairly low in the rating of ministerial performance. Sharma's ground was cut from under his feet during the cabinet reshuffle last year when he lost the key Petrochemicals Department to the Industry Ministry. And Anjiah was ill-at-ease from the beginning, unable to instil a new "work culture", as Rajiv had ordained, among the three million employees of the public undertakings.

To keep the duo company was the party's glamour woman, Najma Heptullah, who in her uncomfortable role earlier as the deputy chairman of the Opposition-filled Rajya Sabha, had often behaved as the damsel in distress. "I think I'll do better now," cooed Heptullah. With Harijan leader Ram Dhan and former minister from Bihar Bhagwat Jha Azad brought in as general secretaries, the AICC(I) secretariat has now reached a record strength of eight. Together with a high-powered vice-president, a treasurer emeritus in the form of Sitaram Kesri, and a somnolent "working president" in the octogenarian Kamalapati Tripathi, not to speak of a new seven-member Congress(I) Parliamentary Board (CPB-I) and a 20-member Congress(I) Working Committee (CWC-I), it is now heavily laden at the top.

More significant, however, was the swearing-in next morning of the party's think-tank P. Shiv Shankar, former energy minister who had been put on ice since he had lost the election in his native Andhra Pradesh. Shiv Shankar occupied the seat of the commerce minister that had been left warm by Arjun Singh. As the former counsel for Mrs Gandhi at the Shah Commission, Shiv Shankar's image is a bit too deeply associated with the ancien regime to jell with Rajiv's public protestation of cleanliness. Shankar's rehabilitation at the Centre, however, was due to his ability to put the aggressive opposition on the defensive by his well reasoned arguments mixed with sarcastic comments. During the last few sessions of Parliament the Goverment was often embarrassed by the absence of a strong speaker.

While Shiv Shankar came back into the Cabinet like a homing pigeon so did Chandrashekhar Singh, albeit into a smaller room as minister of state in independent charge of petroleum. Singh's rehabilitation could indeed mean cocking a snook at the entrenched Jagannath Mishra lobby in his native Bihar. In fact, one of the main themes of last fortnight's changes was to show the mailed fist to the erstwhile Indira-loyalists who have been steadfastly refusing to fall in line.

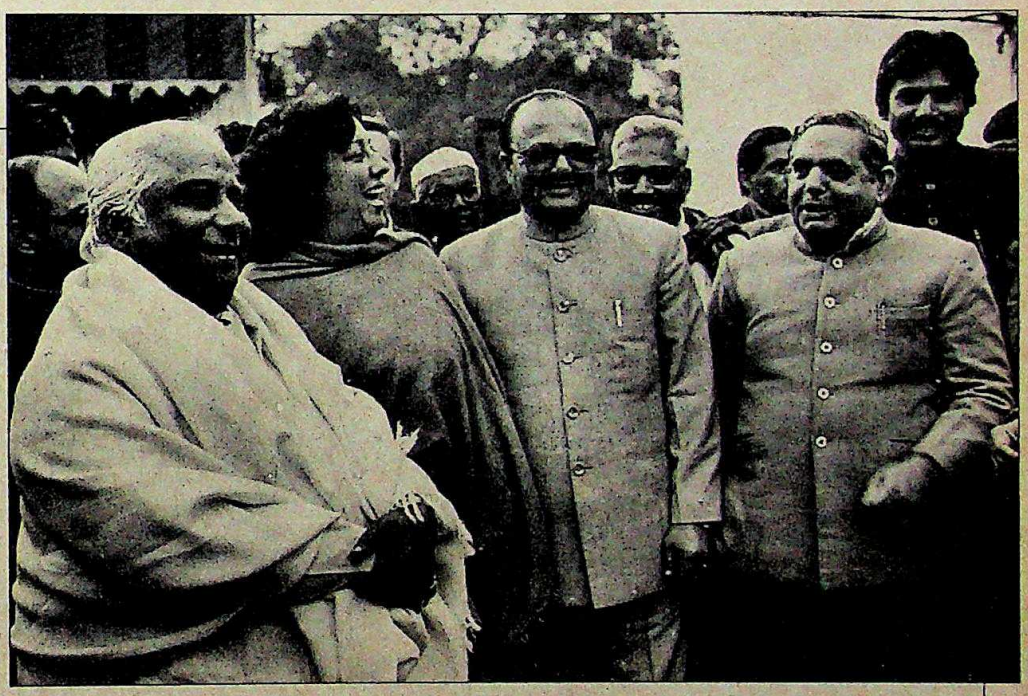
Conversely, the rehabilitation of Singh showed a new spirit of indulgence towards the party's rootless wonders. Singh, a Rajput had been shunted out of the council once earlier and was reinducted only after he had defeated the redoubtable George Fernandes in the Lok Sabha by-election from the Banka constituency. Justified Kesri a fellow Bihari, "Singh is an experienced politician and he has trounced a giant like George. Such leaders have to be encouraged."

But encouragement was certainly not profferred on the diehard Indira-loyalists. Most notable among them is Gundu Rao, the Karnataka strongman, who, after a long wait on the edge of a precipice, finally slid down it as he was dropped from the CWC(I). "I've no regrets," said Rao after his removal. And equally stoic seemed Pranab Mukherjee, the former finance minister, who was dropped not only from the CWC(I) but also from the CPB(I). Rao got the chop despite an hour-long meeting with Arun Singh, minister of state for defence and Rajiv's neighbour, barely 48 hours before his unceremonious removal. Yet another notable evacuee from the CWC(I) was Buta Singh, the solitary Sikh in the Union Cabinet.

The pep talk surrounding the reorganisation had a keyword: autonomy. "Everyone of my colleagues will have autonomy," declared Arjun Singh in the first flush of assuming the party office. But it is doubtful whether that will be possible in the case of Ahmed Patel and Oscar Fernandes, the Rosencrantz and Guildenstern duo in the Prime Minister's Secretariat who were sent out to Gujarat and Karnataka respectively to head the Pradesh Congress(I) Committees (PCC-I) there. Fernandes' pitch was queered right away when four state-level party leaders sent in their resignations from the party in protest against his appointment.

There were thus glaring contradictions between Rajiv's pronouncements and his

The shuffle offered no clues as to how long the party would remain the tail of the Government, and whether the tail would at all wag the dog.



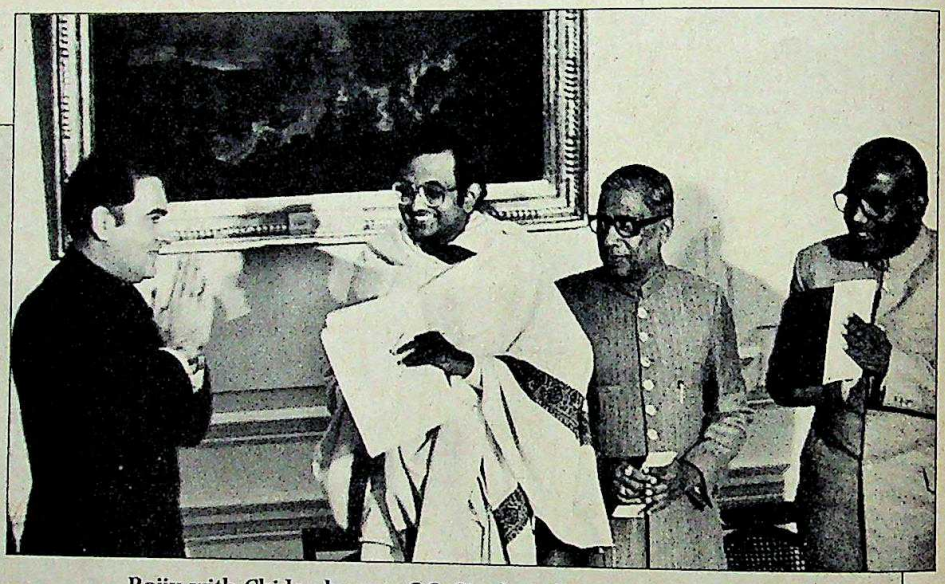
Anjiah, Heptullah, Singh and Sharma: top heavy

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

actions. He spoke about decentralisation of the party and drafting people into it who could take decisions by themselves. But the new list of people who filled up the committees showed a preponderance of carry-overs, a trait that he seems to have inherited from Mrs Gandhi. The tell-tale evidence came from the newly-selected CPB(I), supposed to be the highest party forum, which included, barring Tripathi and Arjun Singh, not one name who could boast of even a semblance of following in their own surroundings. P.V. Narasimha Rao, who had lost the elections in his native Andhra Pradesh, retained his CPB(I) seat nevertheless. So did Maragatham Chandrashekhar, almost by proxy, after having been dropped from the Union council of ministers earlier and as AICC(I) general secretary later. K. Karunakaran, who is hard-pressed to retain the chief ministership of Kerala, somehow carried on in the CPB(I). And so did A.B.A. Ghani Khan Chowdhury, Union minister for programme implementation. Even Darbara Singh, a hangover from Punjab's past, stuck to his party chair by what seemed to be a sheer miracle.

"While Shiv Shankar came back into the Cabinet like a homing pigeon, so did Chandrashekhar Singh, albeit into a smaller room..."



Rajiv with Chidambaram, C.S. Singh and Shankar: bad pennies

Equally bizarre was the selection of the octave of the AICC(I) general secretaries, three of whom—Heptullah, Azad and Ram Dhan—had never held even a PCC(I) president's post. In fact Ram Dhan, who had left the Congress in the tempestuous year of 1977 to join forces with Jagjivan Ram, replaced Jitendra Prasad, a Rajiv-loyalist from Uttar Pradesh, as one of the party general secretaries.

The CWC(I) also seems to have lost its weight and importance. Barring the eight general secretaries, the treasurer and the seven CPB(I) members—who are its obligatory members anyway—it did not include any name of importance. Its crowning jewels remained two sitting chief ministers, Bir Bahadur Singh of Uttar Pradesh and Janaki Ballav Patnaik of Orissa, besides the former chief minister of Assam, Hiteswar Saikia. Quite inexplicably, the state organisations that were seething with dissension were either ignored or were given only theoretical representation. Like Heptullah, for the state of Maharashtra where dissension runs to the grassroots. Or Khan Chowdhury, for West Bengal, where the Congress(I) is riven with dissensions and infighting.

Rajiv himself kept everybody guessing about his own role in the party "Maybe, may not be," was his double-meaning reply to the question whether he would continue as party president once the three million or so of its members are properly enrolled and a new AICC(I) is elected, hopefully, in April.

Even a political sophomore could realise that Rajiv was not willing to take any risk at this juncture and that he would gladly respond to the 'unanimous appeal' from the newly elected members of the AICC(I) to become an elected president. But the mechanics of the party elections begins now since in a few weeks from now the enrolment of members will be complete.

Thus the dominant groups will have the ultimate sway over the basic electorate—the primary members—who will in turn elect the block committees, and, further up, the District Congress(I) Committees and the PCC(I)'s. The PCC(I)'s will subsequently elect the AICC(I), the final electoral college for the party presidentship. It was in this context that the selection of new office-bearers made some sense. Had Rajiv left the conduct of the organisational elections to weak leaders and those of doubtful loyalty, the hawks in the party could have grabbed control of the various party wings. In fact as soon as the process of election began in October last the AICC(I) headquarters were flooded with numerous reports about the enrolment of bogus memberships to the party from all over the country.

With Arjun Singh at the top, Congressmen hope, the fear of 'bogus membership' will not cramp the prime minister. Arjun Singh has been given absolute power to cancel any membership which he suspects is not in order. In addition, the entire election process will be handled by observers to be appointed by Singh. In turn the election to the various bodies will be on the basis of the membership certified by these observers.

The Congress(I), with its three million members, is itself bigger than the aggregate of four fairly large and mixed Lok Sabha constituencies in the country—with at least as many shades of opinion, interests and loyalties. Rajiv, thus, cannot afford to lose control. But, in order to win the party election, and legitimise his own position as president, much will depend on the leadership newly nominated by him. Their failure will ultimately be his.

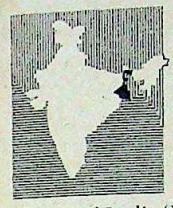
—PRABHU CHAWLA and SUMIT MITRA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WEST BENGAL

A Sensational Exit



"I AM NOT a gentleman, I am a communist," Ashok Mitra had once snapped at a crusty bureaucrat in 1979, two years after his affair with the Communist Party of India(Marxist) (CPI-M) had begun. Last fortnight, when the acerbic 58-year-old economist resigned as the finance minister of the CPI(M)-dominated Left Front Government in West Bengal, the gentleman and the communist seemed once again to be switching roles.

Mitra attributed his bombshell decision to indifferent health, and spoke in his resignation letter about his "acute and long-standing allergy". While he remained incommunicado thereafter, his "allergy" caused political goose-pimples in his party and government. And a day after driving out of the Writers' Buildings for the last time into Calcutta's wintry smog he also resigned from the state Assembly and the CPI(M).

Mitra, who had been elected to the party's powerful state committee only a month earlier, suggested with a hint of double entendre that his ailment was not just physical. He mentioned in his two-paragraph exit note to Chief Minister Jyoti Basu that his doctors had advised him a "stress-free existence".

The fall of a fellow-traveller from West Bengal's leftist bandwagon would normally have received only passing notice. But Mitra's departure created ripples that reached well beyond the party and the state because the ex-finance minister is no ham leftist. His own stature was never circumscribed by the many ideological compromises made by the Marxists during their nine-year rule in West Bengal. First as a left-supported independent MLA and finance minister between 1977 and 1982, and then, as a full-fledged party member and finance minister since 1983, the bespectacled, dhoti-clad Mitra had been both respected and feared for his vitriolic campaign against the Centre's fiscal policies as well as for his opposition to economic populism in his own state.

In 1980, it was Mitra who was largely responsible for the militant anti-Centre stance adopted by the CPI(M). He also provided the theoretical ammunition to the party's charge that the Congress(I) had been persistently denying the states their due share of the nation's resources by expropriating colossal amounts as direct and indirect Central levies. The ensuing demand for constitutional reforms to re-define Centre-state relations was picked up by other opposition parties and non-Congress(I) state governments. Said Karnataka Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde: "Dr Ashok Mitra has been an important soldier in the Indian people's fight against the Congress(I) for justice."

Mitra (centre) at a party meet: free-wheeling thinker

A brilliant scholar who got his doctorate in 1953 at the Netherlands School of Economics under Jan Tinbergen (who later won the Nobel Prize), Mitra has never pretended to be a pure academician nor clung to office at any stage. He served the World Bank for a while, then became chairman of the Agricultural Prices Commission and was for two years the chief economic advisor to the Government of India. In between, he made his mark as a columnist, writing for many years an acid but eminently readable column in the weighty Economic and Political Weekly, and penned books on popular sociology, including a collection of articles, Hoodlum Years.

For all that, his latest step was unexpected. "Mitra was never an organisation man and is therefore quite unpredictable," said one of his economist friends in the Central Government. His lightning resignation also embarrassed his Marxist colleagues no end, especially Basu. "Why should I tell you the reasons for his resignation," fumed an exasperated chief minister when questioned by newsmen. "What can I do but to accept (his resignation) if a man says that he is dying?" lamented Saroj Mukherjee, the secretary of the CPI(M) state committee to whom Mitra had sent in his resignation from the party and all its forums.

Nevertheless, at least some members of the CPI(M) leadership reacted promptly. M. Basavapunnaiah, politburo member and one of the main ideologues pursuing a new line of non-collision with the Congress(I) on the plea of "national unity", was the first. He said that Mitra had been an "individualist" right through—which is Marxist pejoration reserved for independent thinkers whom the party fails to convert.

But other members of the politburo would not comment till the party forum's next session in the capital, slated for February 17, when Basu is likely to furnish his formal report on the episode. Nor would Mitra speak up—the standard reply from his home before the telephone was slammed down was that "he is not in Calcutta". But what filtered through suggests that Mitra had lately been fighting not so much against Delhi but against bureaucratisation and populism in his own party.

The straw that broke the camel's back could well have been Basu's refusal, the day Mitra resigned, to concur with his decision that principals of colleges should be paid according to the student strength on their rolls, instead of their academic qualifications. But this was not a lone issue. Mitra had been sternly resisting wasteful expenditure. He was against the opening of 17 new colleges in North Bengal, colleges that till today have fewer than six students each. He also opposed the showpiece stadium where the CPI(M) held its 12th party congress last year-end, as well as the payment of Rs 10 lakh to the Ramkrishna Mission, the grant of a large sum for opening 16 schools in Midnapore district, and allowing indiscriminate salary hikes to government employees.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SUCH measures should normally have been discouraged by the Marxists themselves, wedded as they are to the objective of providing as much relief as possible to the common man (and not merely to clerks in the Government). But ironically, their recent tendency to prolong their rule through what Mitra might term populism has been masterminded by a crop of young economists who have not been seeing eye to eye with him. The highfliers among these are Ashim Dasgupta, 41, member of the State Planning Board and Mitra's former student who received his doctorate from the prestigious Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Biplab Dasgupta, an economist in his mid-40s with a doctorate from Sussex University. The two Dasguptas have lately been riding high on a subtle anti-Mitra wave both within the party and the Government. Ashim Dasgupta was recently made a member of the West Bengal state committee, simultaneously with his teacher-comrade. And Biplab Dasgupta went a step higher last year when he was elected to the central committee of the party.

Earlier, Mitra had resigned once six months ago, and gone abroad on some academic assignments. Mukherjee and Basu had rushed to his house and tried to dissuade him from quitting. But this time Basu did little to hold back his mercurial ideologue. Mitra himself did not wait for such Marxist niceties as reporting to party forums. The news was leaked to The Statesman, edited by a long-time friend, Amalendu Dasgupta. Said an evidently irked Basavapunnaiah: "This behaviour (of rushing to the 'bourgeois' press) is particularly galling." Both the party and the Government accepted his resignation without fuss.

The differences between Mitra and the Dasguptas could have been swept under the mat had his ties with others in the Left Front Government been better. But public works minister Jatin Chakravarty alleged that he could not

"Why should I tell you the reasons for Mitra's resignation?"

JYOTI BASU
chief minister, West Bengal repair the state's roads because the Finance Ministry would not give him funds. Then, at a recent meeting for determining plan spending, Mitra argued against increasing the fleet of buses run by the loss-incurring Calcutta State Transport Corporation and instead demanded better maintenance of the existing fleet, most of which is in a state of disrepair. But he was shouted down by Ashim Dasgupta, who almost like an authoritative commissar told him: "Your casual cynicism is no substitute for hard empiricism." In today's West Bengal, "empiricism" is shorthand for generating unproductive employment.

The irony is that for all his hardheadedness on such issues, his period as finance minister saw the budgetary position deteriorate—despite unprecedented levels of additional taxation. His heroic resource mobilisation effort came to nought because the money was frittered away on avoidable expenditure, and by the end of the sixth plan West Bengal was the only state that failed to spend close to 40 per cent of its allotted Plan outlay. From a zenith of 21.89 per cent of the state's total expenditure spent on plan investment in 1976-77 (the last full fiscal year of Congress rule in the state), the figure has now plummeted to around 12 per cent. Party insiders claim that Mitra had been fighting to reverse this trend, but was hamstrung by opposition from his colleagues.

"This behaviour (of rushing to the 'bourgeois' press) is particularly galling."

M. BASAVAPUNNAIAH
politburo member

But, of all the harsh words that are being dredged up from Marxist demonology to condemn him, the one that perhaps fits him like a glove is that he is an individualist. It was individualism that had egged him on all along, prompting him to move from the World Bank to the Government of India to Marxist politics. His melodramatic exit from the Union Government in 1972, an action he never bothered to explain, followed controversy over the fact that a speech that he ghost-wrote for Mrs Gandhi had been culled from an article by Mahbub-ul-Haq, then a World Bank expert and now Pakistan's finance minister.

A free-wheeling thinker, Mitra probably enjoyed writing more than anything else. "I'm itching to write," he often told his callers while seemingly buried under files in his ministerial chamber. In office as finance minister, he had to discontinue his Economic and Political Weekly column, "Calcutta Diary", which he signed A.M.

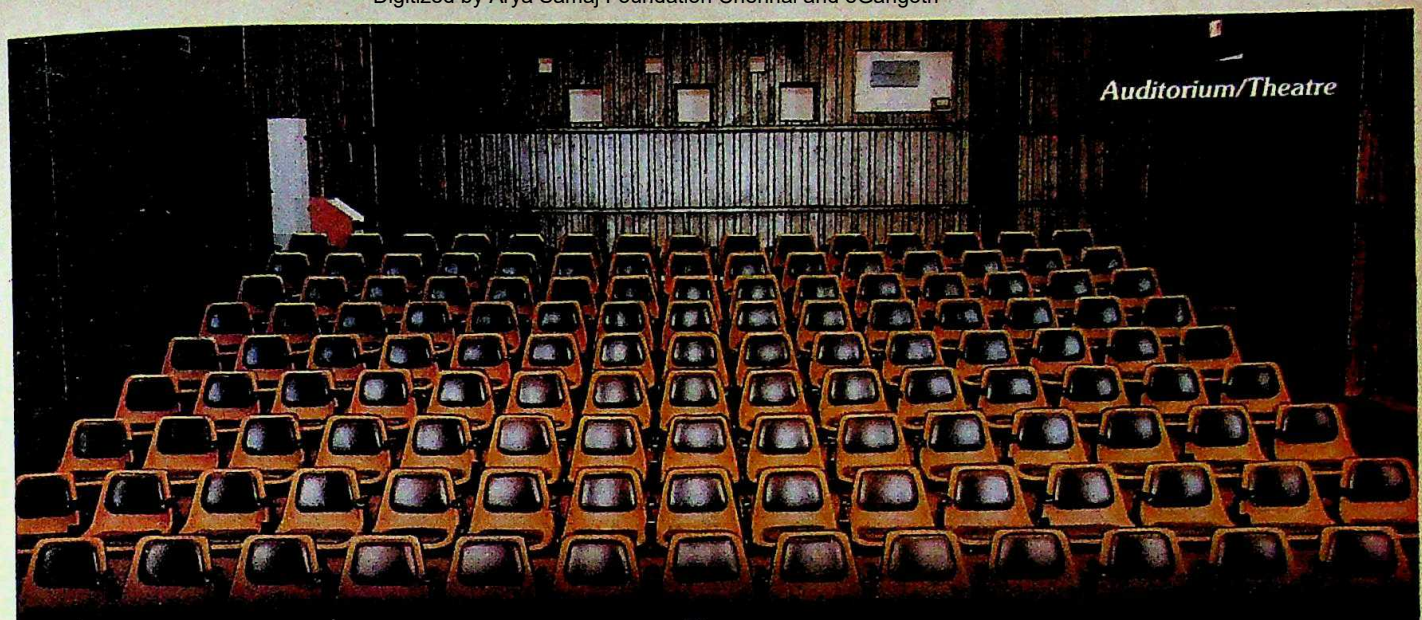
Nevertheless, he kept making occasional forays into journalism. A recent three-part article on Indira Gandhi, timed for the first anniversary of her assassination got him into further trouble with the party bosses. He struck a discordant note when he wrote: "At the personal level, I feel cheated: How much I would have enjoyed the spectacle of Indira Gandhi being humiliated at the polls, a second time and forever. Instead she went out a martyr..." Basavapunnaiah found this in "bad taste", and complained to Basu.

The CPI(M) perhaps needed a friendly outsider like Mitra in 1977, to set off the long history of alienation from the middle class intelligentsia and gain a broad-based acceptance in Bengal's bhadralok society. This was specially so because most of the leading intellectuals had opted out of it in two instalments, having chosen to stay with the Communist Party of India (CPI) during the split in 1964, and, later on, joined the Naxalite bandwagon in 1969-70. But Mitra, despite his Marxist commitments, is too deeply cut in the nutty-professor mould to be absorbed into any system. Inevitably, therefore, the dialectics of instinct and discipline ensured that the party was over for the fiery academician.

—INDRANIL BANNERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

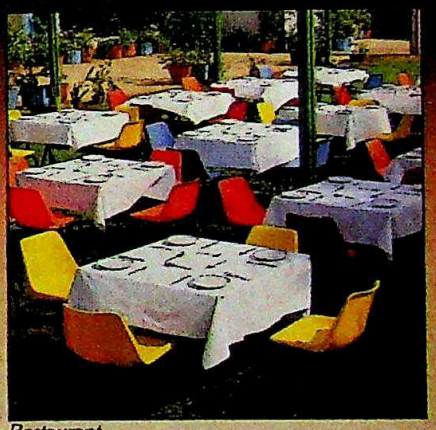


Moderna

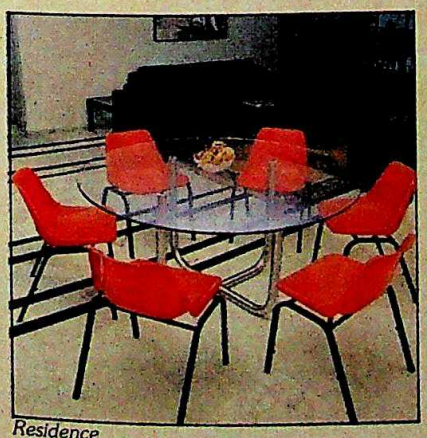
The international concept of sitting pretty. Just anywhere.

Reception

Training Centre



Restaurant



Residence

Elegance and functionality perfectly blended. That's Moderna.

Totally flexible. Eminently adaptable. Moderna Seating System is tailor-made to meet the needs of any seating situation. Indoors and outdoors.

Made from the wonder material, polypropylene, Moderna is lightweight. Portable. Tough. And it's ergonomically designed to provide maximum seating comfort for years and years. But that's not all. Moderna needs the minimum of looking after. No painting. No polishing. Just an occasional wash keeps it clean and bright.

Moderna. Offers you exciting ways to sit. In comfort and elegance. In a blaze of beautiful, non-fading colours.

Moderna. Naturally at home... in stadia, auditoria and theatres. In canteens, lounges, conference rooms and at poolsides. In a balcony or in a dining room.

Moderna. The functional seating system that offers you the best value for your money. Come, discover its many benefits.

Blow Plast Ltd.
V.I.P. House
Prabhadevi
Bombay 400 025.
Tel: 430 1011
Telex: 011-71595 BPL-IN
Grams: BLOWPLAST, Dadar.
Bombay 400 014.

MODERNA
the versatile seating system

FIRA MEMBER

Regional Offices: Bombay: V.I.P. House, 88C Old Prabhadevi Road, Bombay 400 025. Tel: 4301011. Delhi: Rattan Jyoti, 6th Floor, 18 Rajendra Place, New Delhi 110 008. Tel: 5719820. Calcutta: 19, R.N. Mukherjee Road, Calcutta 700 002. Tel: 234025/230768. Bangalore: No. 5, Siddaiah Road, Bangalore 560 002. Tel: 226706.

Contour Ads-BP-669A/85R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. Panini Gurukul Kangri Collection

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Six good reasons to fly British Airways to Hong Kong.

We now fly non-stop to Hong Kong six times a week, with four flights from Bombay and two from Delhi. And not only do we offer the most convenient flights but we offer them at the lowest excursion fares.

Our service is second to none as well. Both in the air, with Indian stewardesses and vegetarian meals, and on the ground, with the new India Gateway Service meet and greet — for our business passengers at Bombay and Delhi connecting from other flights.

With reasons like these, there's only one airline to choose.

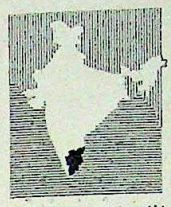
BRITISH AIRWAYS
The world's favourite airline.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAMIL NADU

Tables Turned



IN THE continuing game of upmanship between political foes Jayalalitha and R.M. Veerappan, the wheel seems to have come full circle. Five months ago, the charismatic film star-turned-politician seemed to be on top when State Endowments Minister Veerappan was stripped of the prestigious information portfolio even as she was restored to the post of the propaganda secretary. But last fortnight it was obvious that Veerappan, the Chanakya of AIADMK politics, had come bouncing back. Not merely was the information portfolio restored to him and three more subjects added to his care, partymen were directed by MGR to disband all fans organisations and associations named after Jayalalitha.

In a signed statement on the front page of Anna, the party's official newspaper, the chief minister said: "Associations like Jayalalitha Peravai (Jayalalitha assembly), and Jayalalitha Narpani Manram (Jayalalitha good deeds club) and similar associations started in Ms Jayalalitha's name should be immediately wound up. The starting of such associations is a breach of party discipline, and persons who continue to run them will face disciplinary action." In an explanatory note, which gave the declaration a ring of finality, he reminded his partymen that this directive was only a reiteration of his earlier warning issued in December 1983.

Jayalalitha herself chose not to react, making herself incommunicado in the confines of her plush residence in Poes Gardens. However, her supporters' reacted curiously if not ominously. In the past, any such adverse dictat has met with the response that they still continued to have faith in the leadership of MGR. This time around Salem Kannan, Jayalalitha faction MP and spokesman, surprised political observers by a statement that the manrams cannot be disbanded because the members were not primary AIADMK members at all in the first place. This is a clear case of flouting party discipline.

The Veerappan camp was understandably jubilant. Said a senior leader close to Veerappan: "Our leader has now definitely put a full stop to Jayalalitha's political career in the party. Otherwise, as the party's propaganda secretary, she should now have been vociferously making announcements about party programmes and functions. In fact, she hasn't even gone to the party office in the last few months."

Jayalalitha's fade-out has been unexpected. When she was reinstated to her earlier post of propaganda secretary in September last year it seemed the chief minister was planning to bring her back to centre-stage. He also issued two statements asking partymen not to criticise Jayalalitha and openly showed his displeasure of Agriculture Minister K. Kalimuthu for his diatribes against her.

But thereafter, as she went off for a one-month cure at the nature cure institute in Bangalore, the tide turned against her. A Veerappan camp loyalist V.Kuppusamy, was given the AIADMK ticket to fight the Cheyyar assembly by-election in the North Arcot district last December. Confident that she was only next to MGR in drawing crowds, Jayalalitha half hoped that she would be invited to campaign for the party. The invitation never came as the Veerappan faction made it a prestige fight, intent on showing their leader that they could win without her campaigning. Kuppusamy won by a large margin of 20,000 votes over his nearest rival, 8,000 votes more than in the last elections.

A Veerappan associate crowed triumphantly: "Cheyyar, if anything, conclusively proved that MGR is the only leader in the party who matters. All this talk about Jayalalitha's crowd-pulling talents is bunkum." Party sources say that complaints were also carried to MGR that Jayalalitha Manrams were making conscious efforts to promote the former actress' image, even at the expense of the party and the chief minister. The manram's, they told MGR, were trying to create the impression that Jayalalitha was indispensable for the party's future survival and popularity.

Veerappan: bouncing back

Going by MGR's latest decisions, it is clear that R.M. Veerappan has stolen a march over his political foe, Jayalalitha

Jayalalitha: slow fade-out

Going by MGR's latest decisions, the point seems to have been taken. Jayalalitha's name was not on the party panel for selecting candidates for the local body elections scheduled for this month. In a cabinet reshuffle, MGR gave molasses and deputy collectors, previously under his care, to Law Minister C. Ponnaiyan, now a staunch Veerappan associate. And slowly party heavyweights began deserting her camp. "MGR's actions are now clear. You can draw the obvious conclusions from them and you will be right," said a minister who had once been close to her.

The writing on the wall is clear. What isn't is Jayalalitha's game plan. Will she be content to wait in the wings hoping that her beloved chief minister will in the end reward her patience? Or will she breakaway? Veerappan has again managed to overtake her in the race to the mantle of MGR's successor, but the real contest is for the people's hearts. That decisive battle is far away. Meanwhile, Tamil Nadu awaits the next turn of the giant wheel.

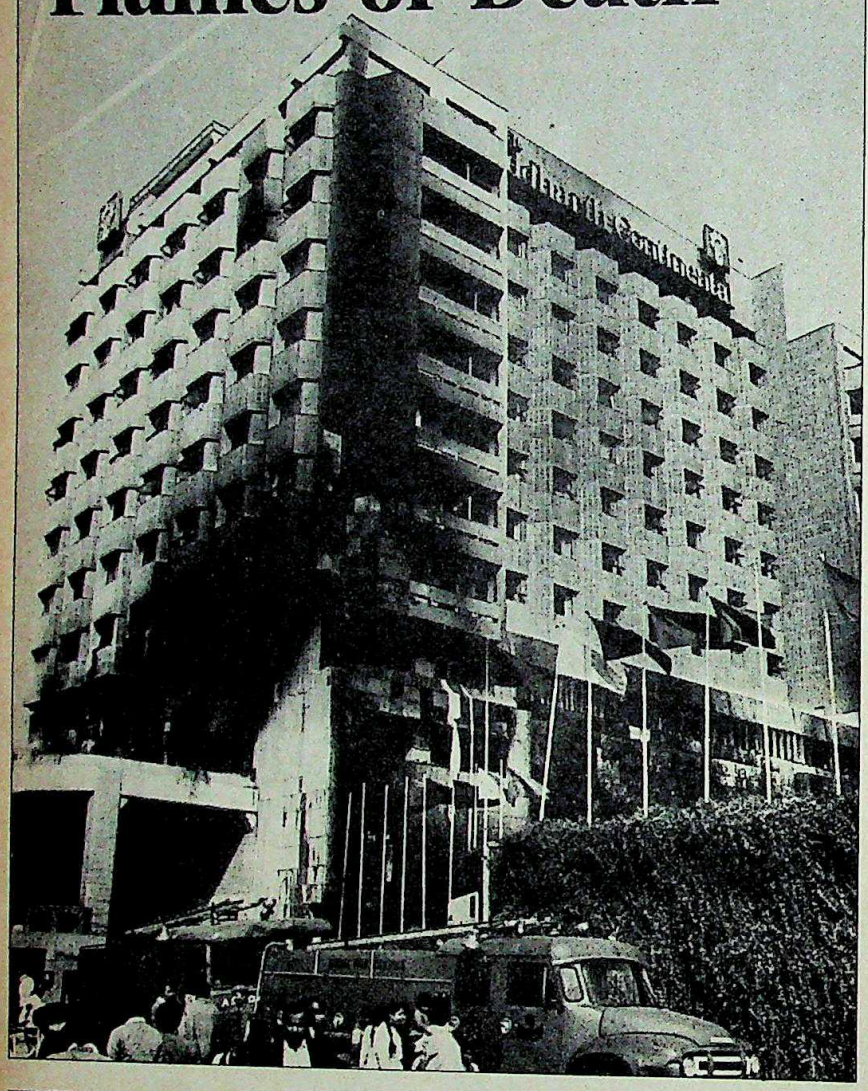
—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

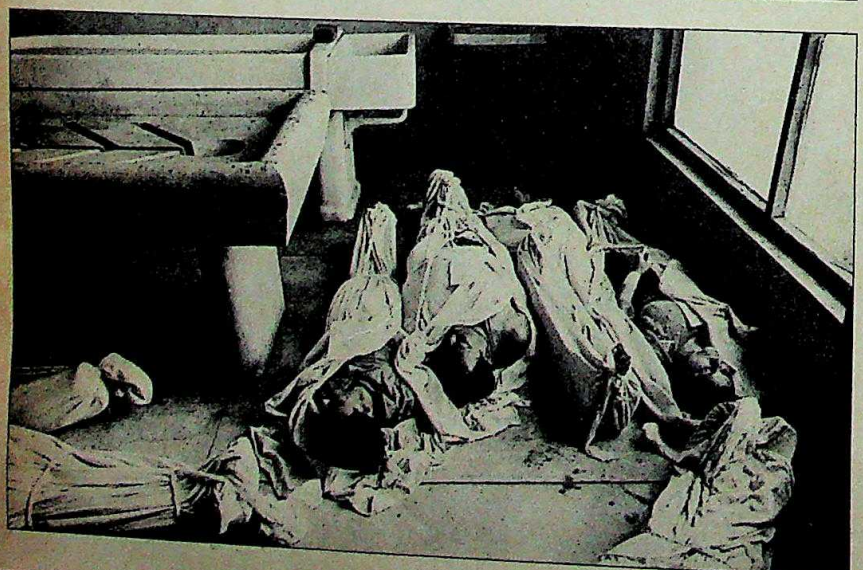
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SIDDHARTH CONTINENTAL

Flames of Death





Photographs by HARI OM GULATI

MANY had seen it happen in The Towering Inferno. Some had read about the 1982 fire in the MGM Grand casino at Las Vegas that consumed 468 lives. But, for most people in India, disasters of that variety were almost an alien proposition, belonging to the fast-moving, modern western world. The illusion was shattered rudely on January 24.

Suddenly, the kind of horrifying spectacle that many in India thought belonged entirely to the unreal world of Hollywood films became a real proposition where it was least expected, in a spanking new five-star hotel standing proudly in south-western Delhi flanked by the exclusive Vasant Vihar locality on one side and the upper middle class Munirka Enclave on the other. Within a few hours, the lower half of the nine-storey Hotel Siddharth Continental, owned by a private firm called Jaiprakash Associates, was reduced to a sooty, blackened shell and the casualty count was mounting to finally touch a mind-boggling figure of 37 dead and 46 injured. In one cruel blow the most disastrous fire in the capital's history had exposed the inadequacy of its fire-fighting machinery and the fire risks literally built into the numerous high-rise buildings which have mushroomed in Delhi.

Coming at the height of the city's busy tourist season the disaster also put the Indian tourism industry through a traumatic ordeal by fire. There was no getting away from the fact that many of the victims were foreigners, including tourists who customarily descend on Delhi in winter. Besides the usual complement of Indian businessmen, large groups of Russians and Japanese had checked in. Most of the remaining rooms had been taken up by a pharmaceutical company INFAR for a conference. To add to the embarrassment there was the odd diplomat couple, staying at the hotel till more permanent lodgings could be found.

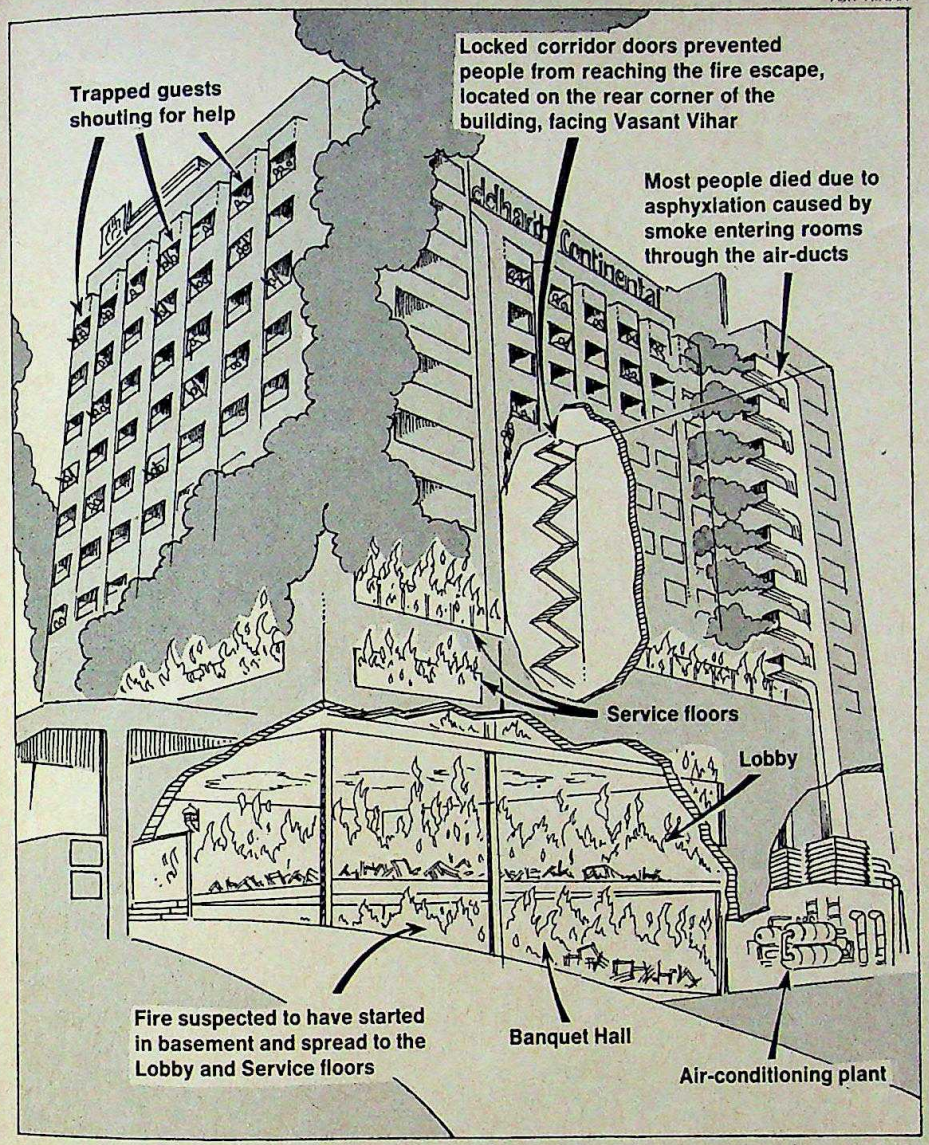
Many of them never made it out of the hotel alive. Among the victims of the blaze that first began in Mandala, the banquet hall in the basement, and then consumed the lobby and first three floors of the hotel were some representatives of the pharmaceutical company. West German diplomat Guenter Gerlach and his wife were discovered dead in their beds. The body of a young Australian girl Eva Funnel was the last to be carried out of the smouldering hotel nearly ten hours after the fire had started. Also among the dead were: V.

The blackened hotel (above); and the dead in Safdarjung Hospital: an inferno

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AJIT NINAN



Subramony, managing director of the Rourkela Steel Plant, Argentine dilplomat J.J. Rinaldini , Kirloskar company executives R.B.Naik and A.S.Limaye, three Japanese experts working with Maruti, a couple from Bahrain who died leaving their two daughters, aged seven and five in a state of delirium, two Iraqi women, two Englishmen, and a victim each from Pakistan, the US, France, and the USSR. Identification was not made easier by the fact that the registration books and records kept in the lobby had been destroyed in the fire. While going through the rooms the police recovered some passports, including that of an American, and efforts were underway to trace its owners. Most of the foreigners staying in the hotel were either vacationing or on a business trip.

Till three days after the disaster, the evidence of the panic and the desperate longing for life that must have seized those in the burning concrete monolith still hung out of many windows, long makeshift ropes made up by stringing together bedsheets and linen, a device that brought instant death to some when loosely-tied knots slipped and opened.

THE MOHANTY family, in Delhi on its way to Montreal, was one to run into mixed luck. Jai Gopal Mohanty, a biochemistry researcher at Montreal University was busy, along with his wife and two sons, aged 12 and 8, packing for the 3 a.m. flight to Montreal when he suddenly noticed smoke sneaking into the room "perhaps from the false ceiling" and realised that something was wrong. "We rushed out, but the corridor was full of smoke and we felt suffocated, so my wife said let us rush back to the room," he now recalls with a forlorn look in his eyes. Soon the family had the mortification of seeing that the ladder put up by the fire brigade people was too short to reach their eighth floor room. Says Mohanty: "At this stage people below shouted to us to use bedsheets to get down and we sent the children first." He succeeded in lowering his two sons to the ledge below from where they were picked up and rescued. But disaster followed. Mohanty fell unconscious halfway to safety but was rescued. But his wife choked to death in the room.

The superstructure of the hotel still stares down bleakly at the vast expanse of desolate blocks of flats filling up the horizon in the south-west, the direction from which the murderous breeze came in on that fateful evening, fanning the flames and, more importantly, churning up large clouds of smoke that choked the nostrils and blinded eyes of the helpless guests and firemen giving the sense of panic a suicidal quality. Three persons jumped to their death from windows.

Amidst all the controversy, there is no doubt on one point, that most people died of asphyxiation, suffering brain death as carbon monoxide, loaded in the smoke emitted by the fire filled their lungs and bloodstream and overwhelmed the brain—according to experts at the All India Institute of Medical Sciences, the brain cannot survive without oxygen supply for more than three minutes and though a person's heart may keep pumping, he is clinically dead.

Large-scale asphyxiation was possible because of the panic created by the fact that the hotel was plunged into darkness. The first casualty of the fire was the lighting. Either they were switched off or they went off and the stand-by generator in the basement never came on. The result was that even those guests woken by the smoke groped about the hotel corridors trying to locate the fire escape. The doors leading to the fire escape were locked and in the dark the helpless guests could not locate the keys kept in glass cases along the corridor.

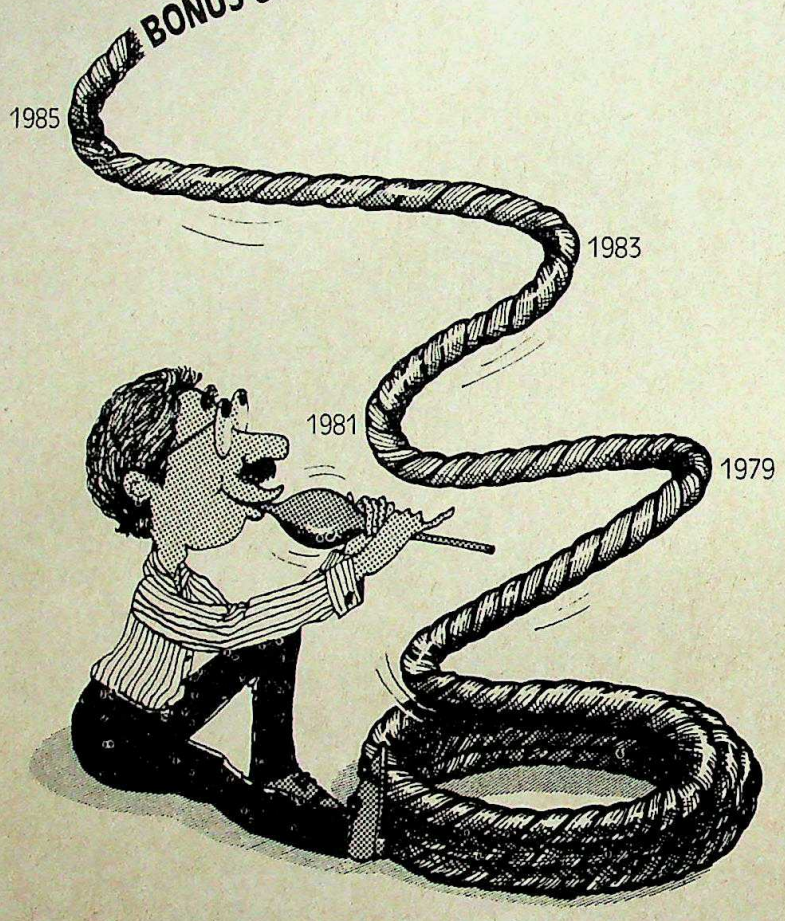
Asked a fire service officer: "Anywhere in the world you will find good hotels having separate power supply system for the fire alarms, there was none here. There wasn't even an internal public address system on which we could tell the inmates what precautions to take." In desperation, the firemen and some hotel staff members even thought in terms of calling up each inmate on the internal telephone exchange individually but the phone operator had gone off to sleep along with the keys. Firemen themselves were hampered by the lack of snorkels and cushioning nets on which they could get people to jump.

In retrospect, a lot of people could also

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BONUS UP... YOUR LIC POLICY NOW EARNS EVEN MORE



Consequent on the biennial Acturial valuation of the Corporation's assets, all with-profit policies in force on 31st March 1985 will qualify for the following bonus:

Whole Life Policies:
Rs. 55.00
per Rs. 1000 sum assured per annum

Endowment Policies:
Rs. 44.00
per Rs. 1000 sum assured per annum

An LIC policy is more attractive now then ever before. Insure and be secure.

LIC in the service of the people
Life Insurance Corporation of India

RADEUS/LIC/9/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

 Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

have survived had they had any previous training in fire-fighting—something most Americans learn. Four of them, executives of the Gillette company, survived merely by consigning themselves to filled up bath-tubs after sealing all the main points of ingress for smoke and flames with wet linen and towels. They waited there till help came. "Most people could have survived if they just tried to breathe through wet towels or linen, or had they not made the error of opening windows and doors for an instant and then shutting them in panic, thus trapping the deadly smoke in the rooms," a fireman said.

These afterthoughts, now, have no meaning. But one mystery that needs to be solved is what caused the fire in the first place. The first suspicions, obviously, were on the power supply system but others talk in hushed tones of sabotage, a theory floated by the hotel management.

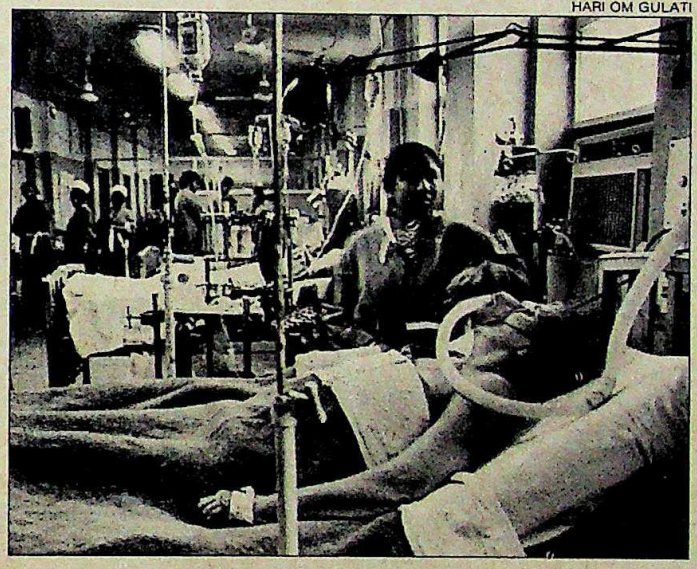
Hotel General Manager J.S.Malhotra and architect S. Jain tended to think it was sabotage. Malhotra said: "Sabotage cannot be ruled out." Said Jain: "I think it was sabotage." Both found it difficult to understand how in a matter of 15 to 20 minutes the fire had engulfed four floors. "It's difficult to visualise, there was no wind and the air-conditioning was not working. How did the smoke get into all the rooms so fast?" asked Jain.

He also said there was no connection between the (air-conditioning) ducts of the banquet area in the basement, where the fire is believed to have started, and the ducts in the upper floors where the guest-rooms are located. But fire brigade officers said the smoke had risen and probably entered the rooms through the ducts from the lobby, the service floor above it and the third floor, where the fire raged.

Even Minister of State for Civil Aviation Jagdish Tytler, who visited the site, seemed to have a fixation on the sabotage theory. He was informed by fire brigade officials that the body of a hotel steward Shekhar had been discovered in the banquet area where the fire is believed to have started. He questioned the firemen on how they could be sure the charred body was that of a staff member and not of a saboteur. It was only after they told him that the victim's nameplate was still on his chest and the papers in his pocket and watch he was wearing was identified by his colleagues that he relented. The fire brigade men informed Tytler and Works and Housing Minister Abdul Ghafoor who also spent some time examining the wreckage of the banquet area, that several gas cylinders were stored in a kitchen near the banquet area and some of them were suspected to have been leaking.

R.K. DAYAL

HARI OM GULATI



Victim being rescued (above); and at the hospital: painful ordeal

But the cause of the fire is a relatively insignficant aspect of the disaster at the moment. The key question, on the other hand, is how adequate were the fire precautions and survival equipment in the hotel. It is well-known now that the smoke alarm did not function, that the hotel did not have sprinklers nor a system to efficiently guide the inmates to the fire-escape. And it is not as if the inadequacy of the hotel's fire-fighting equipment was not known to the authorities. Since 1982 the hotel had been functioning on temporary licences of the kind granted to many other five-star hotels in Delhi, including the Government-owned Ashok and Kanishk, and the new Meridien on Janpath, none of which meet safety requirements.

This cavalier attitude upsets the Delhi firemen a great deal who say they get the blame everytime a major fire takes place while nothing is done to enforce safety regulations. "Once a fire begins, no fire brigade in the world can put it out without any damage. But casualties of this kind only take place due to ignorance and callousness," said a senior Delhi fire service officer. The fire also exposed the Delhi Administration's own callous disregard for the fire risk in the numerous high-rise buildings in Delhi. In early 1983, there was a furore after the Gopala Towers fire and it led to the formation of a committee headed by retired major-general H.C. Singhal which drew up a list of over 200 multi-storey buildings with a fire risk. Hardly one of the committees' recommendations has been implemented so far. Delhi firemen say that even more than the hotels the fire threat today exists in commercial buildings which are very heavily populated during working hours when the electric systems also have a massive load, particularly during summer when the air-conditioners are on. "One of Singhal committees' recommendations was that at least 450 more men should be added to the Delhi fire brigade. Has anything been done about that?" asks S.K. Dheri, the city fire chief.

Sure enough, even this time, the Government's immediate reaction to the tragedy was the formation of yet another committee to investigate into the fire. Union Tourism Minister H.K.L. Bhagat also flew in from Bombay and ordered a review of all the five-star hotels in the country. But this time in the background of a perennial terrorist threat in the capital there is a new sense of urgency. And unless it results in a substantial improvement in safety conditions in the high-rise building the capital could see many more morbid encores of the tragedy.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ASSASSINATION TRIAL

Day of Judgement

IT WAS not as if the verdict was unexpected. When Pran Nath Lekhi, 60, Satwant Singh's ebullient lawyer, visited his client the day before the judgement on the Indira Gandhi murder case was due, he told him to be prepared for the worst. The same evening Lekhi told journalists that the judgement by Additional Sessions Judge Mahesh Chandra was going to be 268 pages. Lekhi was wrong by six pages: the 52,000-word judgement on the most important case of its kind since Nathuram Godse took up 262 pages.

Yet, when Chandra announced his sentence the next day, condemning Satwant Singh, Balbir Singh and Kehar Singh to death for the assassination of Mrs Indira Gandhi on October 31, 1984, the defendants and their lawyers reacted with a mixture of either simulated or genuine outrage and disgust. Satwant got up from his stool to tell journalists: "Yeh faisla to pehle se ho chooka tha" (This was a predetermined judgement). Charged Lekhi: "This judgement is a farce." Added Prem Prakash Grover, 55, counsel for Balbir Singh and Kehar Singh: "This is an unacceptable judgement."

However, the prosecution lawyers and the judge have no doubt that the guilt of the accused has been established beyond reasonable doubt. Said Special Public Prosecutor Kundan Lal Arora, a sprightly 73-year-old who came into prominence when he appeared for the State in the Vidya Jain murder case: "This was the most brutal case of assassination I have handled. It is the prosecution's duty to help the court by producing all the evidence and I am glad we could do this conclusively."

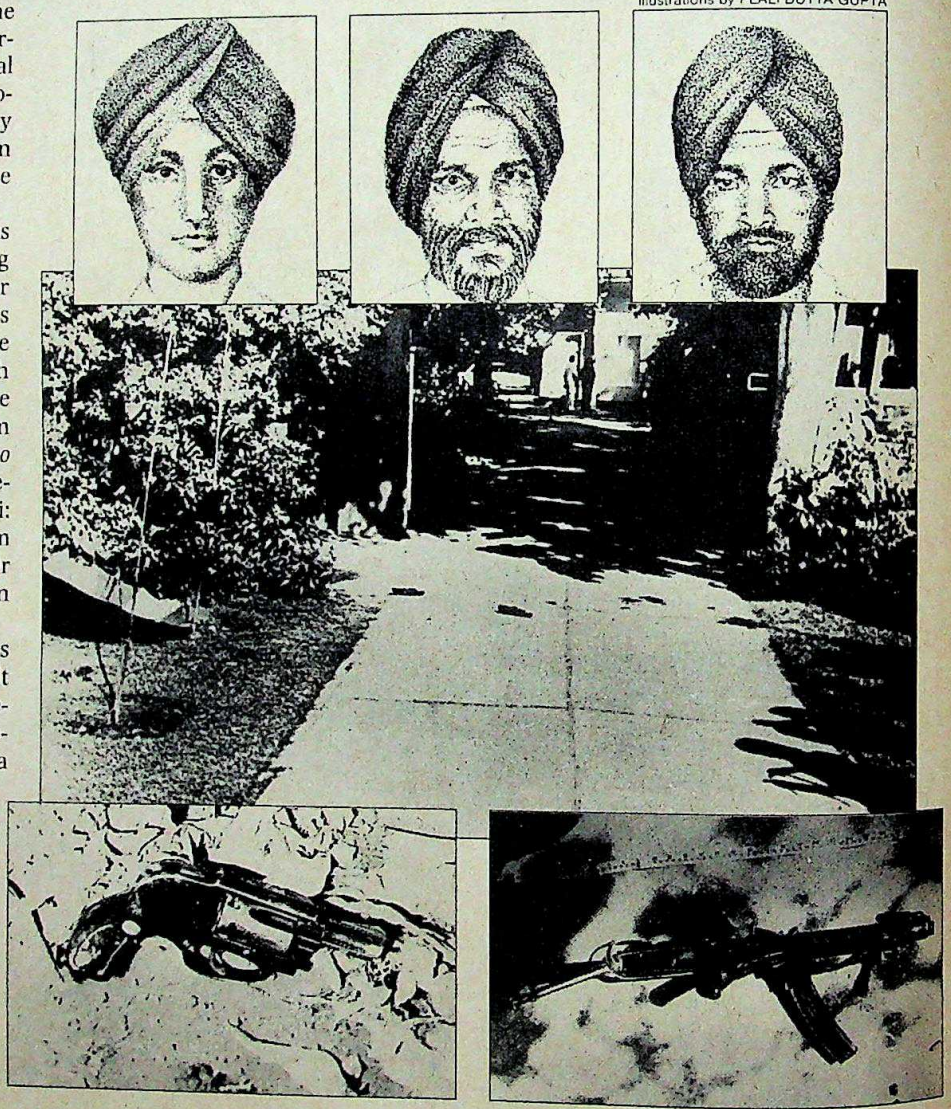
Relaxing in the sparsely furnished drawing-room of his government flat off Tilak Road, guarded by armed policemen equipped with metal detectors, Mahesh Chandra, 57, admitted that the tension of hearing the case over 113 drama-filled sittings had left him with a blood pressure problem. But the death sentence, his first ever, does not weigh on his conscience: "We don't think as much that a life has been lost but that by some mistake of ours no more lives should be lost. We never return a verdict which cannot be supported by evidence. We don't take our responsibility lightly, no matter what others say."

But Lekhi was infuriated that Chandra had already pronounced his verdict before he could enter the court, and told newsmen while Chandra was writing out his sentence: "We have not read the judgement. Even the court has not read the judgement. He is reading it now." But Chandra and Arora were just as dimissive about the quality of the defence. Said Chandra: "It is difficult to say what Lekhi was aiming at." Arora maintained: "Till today I don't know what was the defence."

The prosecution's case, as accepted by Chandra, was straightforward. Kehar Singh, 54, an assistant in the Directorate General of Supplies and Disposals, Balbir Singh, 45, a Delhi police assistant sub-inspector, Satwant Singh, a constable in the Delhi Armed Police, and Beant Singh (the last three on duty at Mrs Gandhi's house), had entered into a criminal conspiracy to kill Mrs Gandhi. "In furtherance of the said conspiracy," said Chandra in his judgement, "on October 31 at 9.10 a.m., accused Beant Singh (deceased) and Satwant Singh...while posted on security duty at TMC gate in No.1 Safdarjang Road, New Delhi, had fired firearms bullet shots upon Mrs Indira Gandhi, the then prime minister of India, from their service arms...and as a consequence thereof she sustained grevious and dangerous injuries which resulted subsequently in her death."

The judge found Satwant guilty of murder mainly on the testimony of three eyewitnesses: head constable Narain Singh, assistant sub-inspector Ramesh-

Illustrations by PEALI DUTTA GUPTA



The murder site; and (inset clockwise) Satwant, Kehar Singh, and Balbir Singh; and the murder weapons: brought to book

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

war Dayal and personal attendant Nathu Ram. Narain Singh was shielding Mrs Gandhi with an umbrella while Dayal and Ram trailed along with Rajendra Kumar Dhawan and Makhan Lal Fotedar. All five, said the prosecution, saw Beant and Satwant fire on Mrs Gandhi. The judge accepted that Beant and Satwant had both changed duties to be together near the TMC gate and that the bullets that killed Mrs Gandhi had come from the firearms known to be with Beant and Satwant.

Despite being faced with such damning evidence, Lekhi argued that:

- Of the 148 witnesses the prosecution had listed, 75 were eventually not called. These include two crucial eyewitnesses, Dhawan and Fotedar.
- In his police statement Dhawan had not mentioned Ram's name as an eyewitness.
- There were no blood samples at the spot where Dayal claimed to have fallen. He had been trained to fire, why then did he try to jump on the alleged assassins? According to the standing orders, nobody lower than an assistant sub-inspector could be in the inner security cordon at the prime minister's residence. So how could head constable Narain Singh have been near Mrs Gandhi?
- The two bullets which killed Mrs Gandhi had no traces of human tissue.
- Mrs Gandhi's body had three exit bullet wounds. Four bullets had been found in her clothes. This, according to Lekhi, proved that bullets had come from all sides.
- Satwant's fingerprints had not been found on the murder weapon.
- Hospital records show that Mrs Gandhi was given blood after the post-mortem is supposed to have started.

How significant these arguments are is open to question. For, in his judgement, Chandra said Lekhi had not been successful in casting doubt on any of the crucial evidence. Said he: "Men may tell lies but the circumstances do not. Apart from direct evidence, the prosecution has also produced circumstantial evidence and the chain of circumstances is so well-connected that no element of doubt arises...Minor discrepancy here and there in the testimony of a particular witness does not dislodge the case of the prosecution, rather such discrepancies are natural."

CREATIVE EYE

"We never return a verdict which cannot be supported by evidence. We don't take our responsibility lightly, no matter what others say."

MAHESH CHANDRA
additional sessions judge

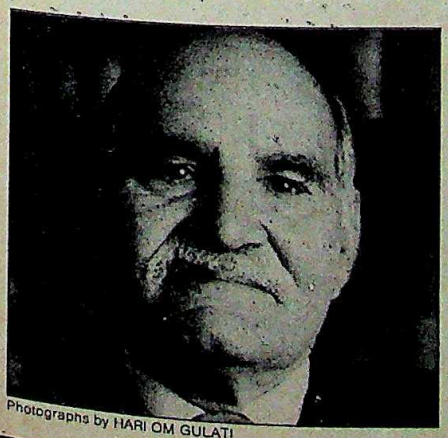
ARORA argued that he did not produce all the witnesses listed because he found he didn't need them. Besides, he asked: "If you do not believe three witnesses, are you going to believe the other two?" Chandra concurred: "Evidence has to be weighed rather than counted. Multiplication of witnesses is meaningless."

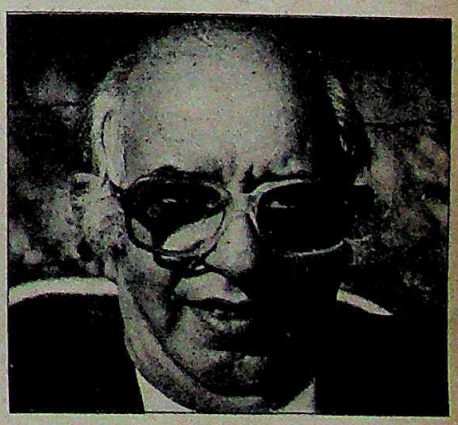
Lekhi had of course gone off at a tangent, arguing in court that Rajiv Gandhi himself was implicated in the murder. And he had asked for 34 witnesses to be summoned, including Rajiv and President Zail Singh. But Mahesh Chandra turned down the request as irrelevant. Said Chandra: "My brief was to find out if these four had entered into a criminal conspiracy to kill Mrs Gandhi and if Satwant and Beant had killed Mrs Gandhi as a result of that conspiracy. Whether there was another conspiracy was not something this court had been asked to judge."

It is clear that, confronted with the evidence, Lekhi had decided that offence was the best form of defence. And Rupinder Singh Sodhi, 40, Satwant's original counsel who later roped in Lekhi, accepted as much when he said: "We faced two main problems. Firstly, since the prosecution's witnesses had all appeared before the Justice Thakkar Commission they knew what they had to say and we had to work very hard to pick out discrepancies. Secondly, since they were hiding witnesses we had no option but to try and flush them out by levelling allegations against them." But it was always a losing battle. As one lawyer commented: "It is very difficult to defend somebody who was caught in the act and arrested from the spot of the crime."

In contrast, conspiracy cases are never easy to prove since direct evidence is rarely available. Recognising this, Chandra explained: "All that the prosecution has to do is to present a set of interrelated facts from which a conspiracy can be deduced." Chandra is convinced that the prosecution established this. But the defence lawyers and the families of Kehar Singh and Balbir Singh continue to argue against this. Said Grover: "If you will believe the evidence presented against my clients you will believe anything."

The crucial bits of evidence against Kehar and Balbir, which Chandra found





Arora (left) Lekhi; and Grover: a bitter battle

Photographs by HARI OM GULATI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HARI OM GULATI

Satwant's family after the verdict: grief, surprise and anger convincing, were:

► The testimony of Inderbir Singh, a Sikh, who said that he had overheard Kehar Singh console and exhort a sobbing Beant Singh: "Ro mat, badla lo." (Do not cry, take revenge). This happened at the Moti Bagh Gurudwara when they were listening to the famous ragi, Professor Darshan Singh.

► The testimony of Amarjit Singh, a colleague of Balbir and Satwant, that Beant and Balbir used to often say they wanted to kill Mrs Gandhi. When a baz (falcon) appeared near Mrs Gandhi's house, Balbir and Beant had offered ardas (prayers) taking it as a sign from Guru Gobind Singh that they must "do something". In early October, according to Amarjit, Balbir told him that Beant "was very garam and he had won over a sepoy". Later that month Kehar Singh had taken the two for an amrit chakhna ceremony.

► A handwritten note, which an expert testified was in Balbir's hand, which has the months July to October on the left side while the right side has damning notings like "Army operation", "felt like killing" and the names of all the accused in various compromising contexts.

Doubting this, Grover and members of the two families point out that:

► The testimony of Inderbir was recorded seven months after the case had started. Arora admitted that they had got on to Inderbir after a report in The Tribune in June. But asks Satwant, Kehar's son: "Inderbir says he did not tell anybody about this incident, not even his father. Then, how did the police come to know about it ?" Asks Grover: "Is it likely that a conspirator will openly and loudly exhort a co-conspirator?"

► The testimony of Amarjit Singh, who has been twice suspended, indicting the three accused was not contained in his first statement to the police. That, said Grover, came in subsequent statements on November 24 and December 13. "After a murder, wouldn't a responsible police officer immediately rush to his superiors if he knew the details of such a conspiracy?" Grover charged that Amarjit, whom Satwant had named and who was detained along with many other suspects, was turned around by the police after he agreed to testify against Balbir and Kehar.

► The prosecution says that the note was found with Balbir Singh when he was arrested on December 3 by Chief Investigating Officer Rajinder Prakash Kochar. Asked Grover: "Is it logical for a police officer who knows he is a suspect to carry around such a damning piece of paper which is as good as a death warrant?" But Chandra maintained: "A lot of people get caught because they think they are very smart."

Meanwhile, the judgement caused grief, surprise and anger among the families of those who stood condemned. Pyar Kaur, Satwant's mother who had come down from Dharamkot in Punjab's Gurdaspur district to hear the judgement, was a picture of grief as she emerged from Tihar Jail. Slumped in the back seat of her lawyer's car, her face was stained with tears and even a battery of mikes could not coax her to voice her grief. Later, sitting in a room in Gurudwara Sisganj on Chandni Chowk, Satwant's father, Trilok, spoke for the family: "We have lost our faith that we can get justice in this country. We know our son is innocent."

Kehar Singh's son, another Satwant Singh, said: "We had great expectations from Mahesh Chandra because we had heard that he does not give any punishment more than necessary. But he has really disappointed us." And Balbir Singh's wife, Devender Kaur, 36, who has been staying with her husband's brother since they were turned out of the official accommodation in the police lines, cradled her two-year-old daughter and said: "We didn't expect this at all. My husband is absolutely innocent. How can they call him a kattar Sikh when the fact is that he has never even been to Amritsar. They say he was very upset after Operation Bluestar but do you know that he used to play badminton with Rajiv Gandhi's children even after that?"

The times are tough on these family members. Trilok Singh has had to mortgage three of his 18 acres of land to raise money for the case. Kehar Singh's family has been asked to leave their Ramakrishna Puram flat.

In Tihar jail, security around the three was tightened after the judgement. The three were reportedly shifted to death row and all personal articles, including chappals, taken away from them. Their families complained that they had been left with only one blanket to counter the cold.

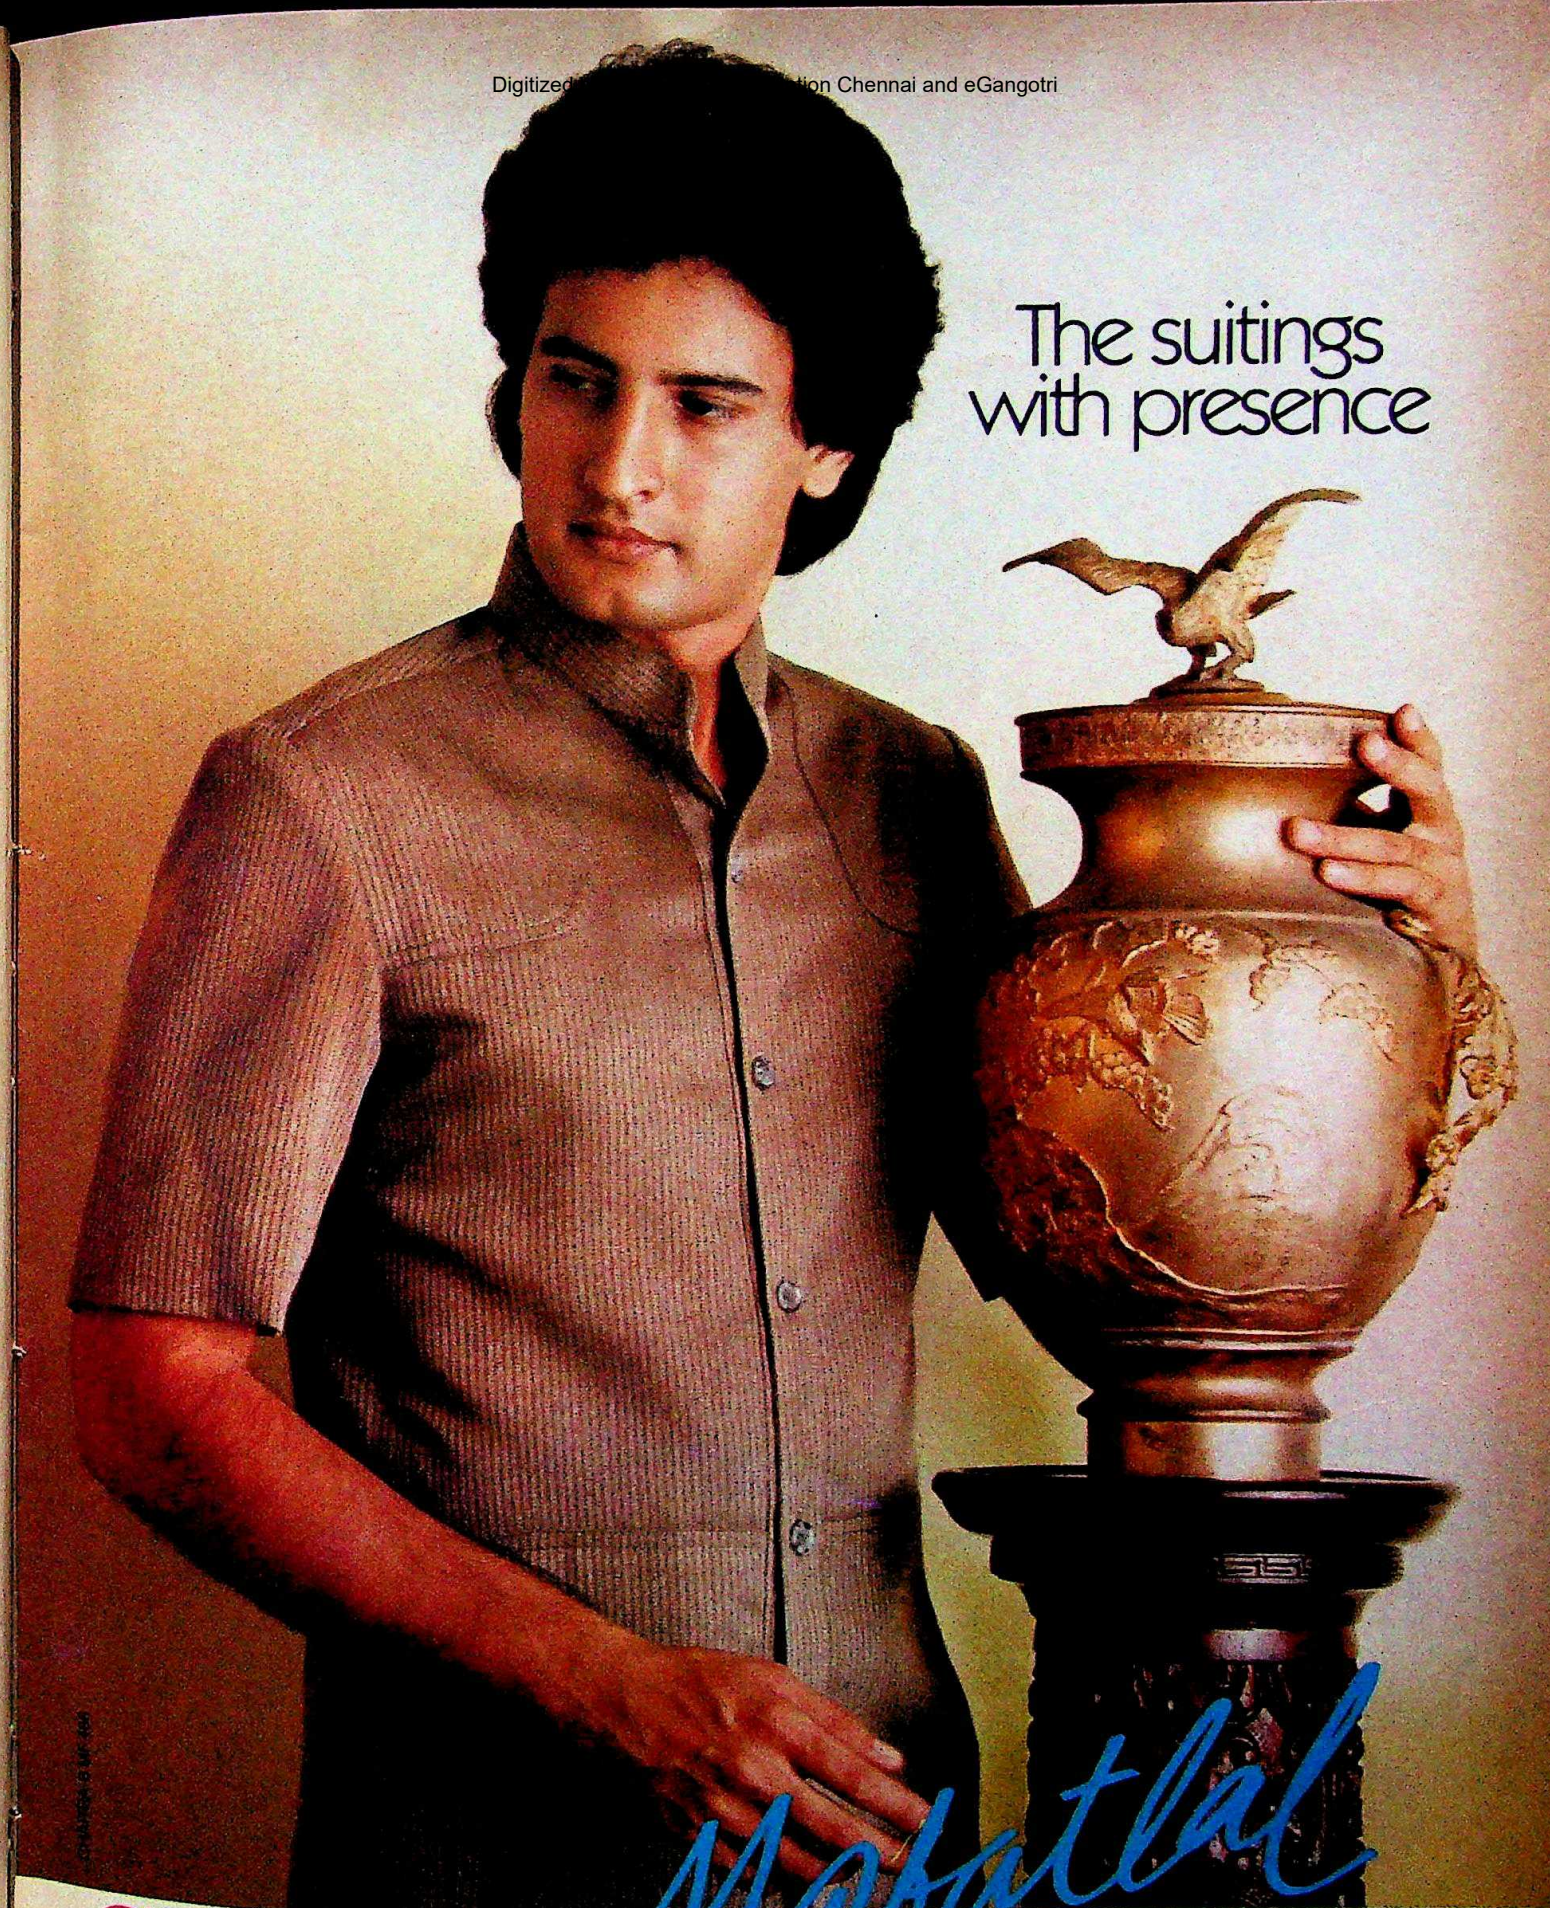
But their lawyers continued their valiant battle. Even as the death sentence was referred to the high court for confirmation, Lekhi and Grover moved the court against the judgement, calling it unexecutable because Chandra had not specified the manner of execution. But, asked Chandra: "Where is the need to specify that when there is only one manner—hanging—being followed now?"

Lekhi may not have covered himself with glory, given the manner in which he conducted the defence. But as the first act in the ongoing case of the murder of Mrs Gandhi came to an end 247 days after it had started, it was difficult to resist the feeling that for all the mountain of evidence presented—1400 foolscap pages of testimony—the prosecution had struggled to prove what everybody thought was an open and shut case. The High Court upheld the appeals on the ground that Chandra had contravened the Criminal Procedure Code by not specifying the manner of execution. Now it is for the High Court to decide whether the conspiracy case is in fact thin, or whether all three men will die for the assassination of a prime minister.

—AJAY KUMAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized ... tion Chennai and eGangotri



CLASSIC Suitings by Mafatlal — the name you can trust

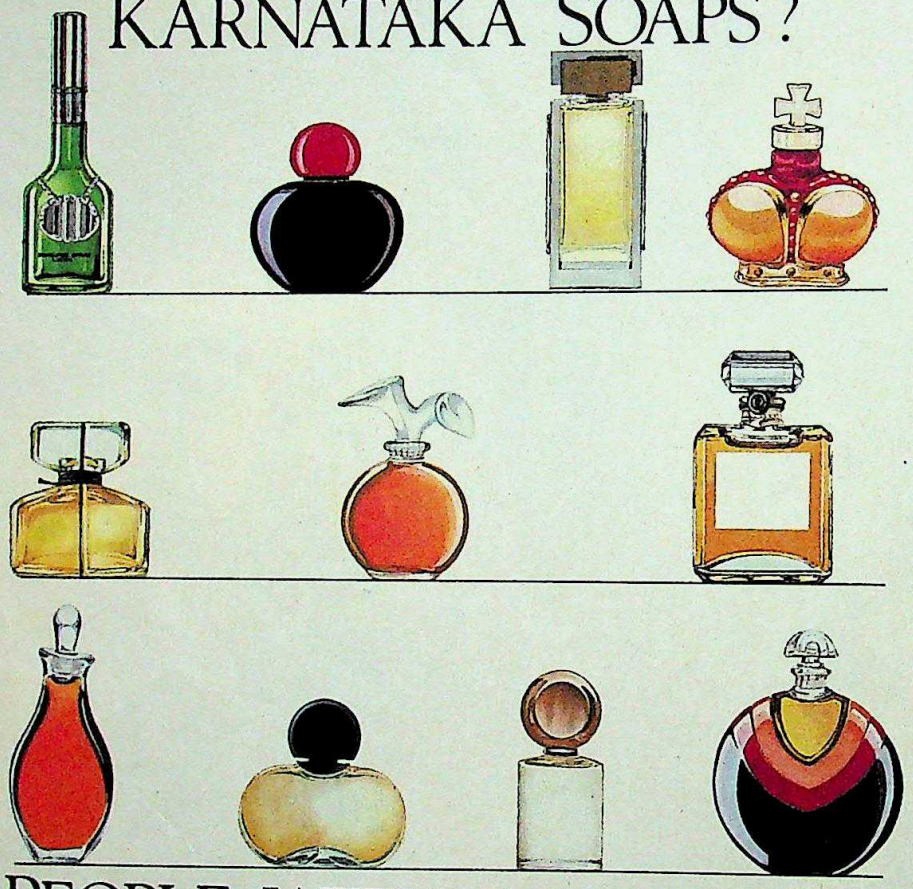
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mafatlal Suiting

Regd. Trademark of Mafatlal Industries Ltd. (New Shorrock Mills) and

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IN THE ENCHANTING WORLD OF FRAGRANCE, WHERE NAMES ARE LEGENDS, WHO KNOWS KARNATAKA SOAPS?



PEOPLE WITH A 'NOSE' FOR EXCELLENCE.

Karnataka Soaps. The name that breathes magic for leading perfume manufacturers in USA, UK, France, Germany and Japan.

The fact is, sandalwood oil is an essential element to most perfumes. It's used as a fixative for the fragrance. And some of the best known perfumes in the world stake their reputations on our product.

And so it has been for seven decades. Ever since an early connoisseur of excellence, the Maharaja of Mysore, set up the country's first modern sandal oil factory near Bangalore in 1916. Later shifted to Mysore, this factory is still the world's largest and most modern sandal oil distillery.

For Karnataka Soaps, the pursuit of excellence is a challenging, dynamic process. Though creators of world standards, we're forever looking to push back the frontiers of excellence. All the while exploring new areas of growth. Establishing ourselves in the competitive world of soaps and detergents. Entering into a wide range of industrial products like stearic acids, glycerine acid slurry and soap noodles.

At Karnataka Soaps, we have a rare fragrance to preserve. A message from the past expressing an abiding faith in excellence. The sweet smell of success that, we are determined, will infuse our every new venture.

KARNATAKA SOAPS

Karnataka Soaps & Detergents Limited, Yeshwantpur, Bangalore 560 055. Mfrs. of Mysore Sandal Soap and other quality soaps & detergents

KSDL/1841/E

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Evening Rose...
a creation from Transasia—
the fashion house of carpets

Woolmark
(ऊनमार्क)

PURE NEW WOOL PILE

Woolmark. The internationally recognised symbol guaranteeing the matchless qualities of pure new wool— exceptional durability and easy maintenance, looks that last for years and rich colours that never fade.

TRANSASIA

TransAsia Carpets

In collaboration with Besmer of West Germany.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

JAISONS T.C.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Nerolac paints protect. Beautifully.

At Goodlass Nerolac we believe that a paint must do more than just coat a surface beautifully. So we've taken our paints one step ahead. To give your painted surfaces the best protection against the corroding effects of weather and time.

Protection offered by India's largest-selling industrial paint company. Protection that's enjoyed by 2 out of every 5 refrigerators and sought for many more industrial applications everyday.

Protection already trusted by many reputed clients, including Godrej, Maruti Udyog, Bajaj Auto, Telco, Kelvinator, Mahindra & Mahindra and OGL.

Protection constantly being perfected in our R & D labs ... to give you the technological edge. In industry. And in more and more beautiful homes too.

Decorative Paints: Emulsions. Enamels. Distempers.

Specialised Industrial Paints & Pigments.

NEROLAC PAINTS

Technologically too, always a shade better.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

everest/85/GNP/385

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAJASTHAN

Marriage Mystery

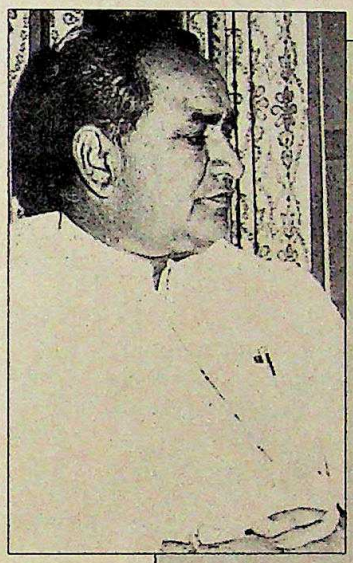
INDRA Vishnoi is one of the lucky few whose birthday falls on Republic Day, January 26. However, when she celebrated her 20th birthday last week, the circumstances were anything but happy. For she found herself embroiled in an ugly controversy which threatened to mar the career of her 50-year-old father, Ramsingh Vishnoi, Rajasthan's minister of state for animal husbandry. To Vishnoi's good fortune, however, the opposition parties somehow seemed uninterested in making an issue of it.

It all blew up when a two-part article in the Jaipur edition of Navbharat Times alleged that her father had married Indra off when she was barely seven years old to a three-year-old boy. Claiming to be based on an interview with Indra and backed with extracts from desperate letters written by Indra to a Jaipur lady lawyer, the article recounted how the family had subjected her to torture to make her accept the marriage. Her husband came to fetch her in November 1984 and though she went with him under coercion she continued to offer resistance; with the result that humiliation and beatings, especially at the hands of her father, only multiplied.

Vishnoi's denial was quick in coming. "These allegations are nonsense," he said. "It is a well-known fact that I never lie." Indra, he said, had been married last year when she was 19; but when asked on what precise date, he fumbled and could not provide an answer. Nonetheless, he insisted: "My daughter is absolutely free." And to prove that he had Indra brought over from their hometown Bilara in Jodhpur district and presented before the press at his Jaipur residence. A nervous and tense Indra repeated her father's version and flatly denied giving any interview to Navbharat Times or writing any letters.

The real drama came later. A furious Vishnoi abused Manimala, the young social activist-turned-reporter who had written the articles, calling her a blackmailer and threatening to settle scores with her. Later, when Manimala wanted to play a tape which carried her interview with Indra in late December, Vishnoi leapt up and snapped the tape-recorder's cord.

MANOJ/Navbharat Times



Ramsingh Vishnoi Indra Vishnoi

Indra Vishnoi found herself embroiled in an ugly controversy which threatened to mar the career of her father, Ramsingh Vishnoi, Rajasthan's minister of state for animal husbandry.

As it transpired, there was more to come. Bharati Chaturvedi, the lawyer Indra reportedly wrote to asking for help, alleged that Vishnoi had threatened her with a pistol just two hours before the press conference. According to her, she had visited Vishnoi's Jaipur residence the same afternoon in response to Indra's repeated sos's. She was permitted inside but had barely begun talking to Indra when a livid Vishnoi allegedly barged in, pistol in hand, and threatened to shoot her. He had to be restrained by some of his men. While Vishnoi denies the incident, Chaturvedi claims that she has written and posted a first information report (FIR) to the superintendent of police, Jaipur.

Next it was the turn of the paper. On January 26, Navbharat Times carried an article claiming that Indra had filed an FIR at Bilara Police Station on August 26, 1985, complaining of having been married off as a child, physical abuse and the danger to her life. The case had been closed, but if all was indeed well, why then had she made a formal complaint to the police.

In retrospect, it does seem Vishnoi had overreacted. Since more than a year has passed after the alleged child marriage he could never have been prosecuted. In any case, the case seems to have hardly created a ripple in the normally voluble circles: the opposition parties and the other sections of the press. Only the BJP's Pushpa Jain and the Janata Party's Manik Chand Surana tried to raise the issue in the Assembly but, said a disappointed Surana: "Some important questions are being raised but we are not discussing them; we are quietly swallowing them." Leader of the Opposition Bhairon Singh Shekhawat rationalised that since the allegations had been denied by Indra herself, very little remained to be said now. Said he:" How can one raise questions based solely on newspaper reports? We are trying to verify the whole affair."

The unfortunate reality is that child marriages are not news in Rajasthan. Even official statistics have it that the average Rajasthani girl marries at the age of 14-and-a-half and a boy at the age of just over 19. And since official figures in such matters are usually watered down, the actual average is probably much lower. The controversy has had one beneficial side effect: it has stirred some kind of a debate into the inadequacies of the Child Marriage Act. For one, the Act fails to answer a basic question: is a child marriage void, voidable or valid? It looks suspiciously that this, however, might be the only good thing to emerge out of the strange case of Indra Vishnoi.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR

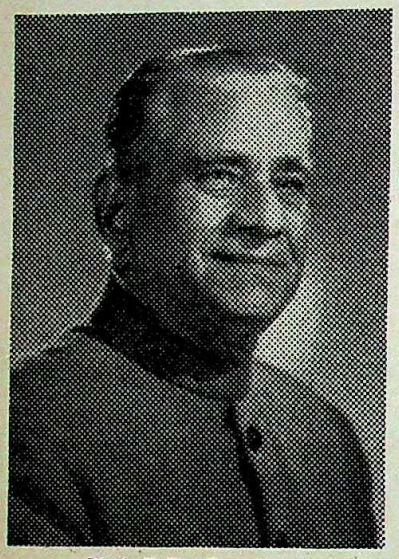
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Company Meeting

GARWARE NYLONS LIMITED

Registered Office : Chander Mukhi, Nariman Point, Bombay-400021.



Shri B.D. Garware

STATEMENT OF SHRI B.D. GARWARE, CHAIRMAN, GARWARE NYLONS LIMITED, ON THE OCCASION OF THE 28TH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF THE COMPANY ON 8TH JANUARY, 1986.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I have great pleasure in extending to you all a very warm welcome to this twentyeighth Annual General Meeting of your Company.

PERFORMANCE HIGHLIGHTS

2. The Annual Report, together with the Audited Statement of Accounts and the Directors' Report, for the year ended 31st August, 1985 has been in your hands for some time now. I presume that you have had an opportunity of going through the same. I, therefore, take it as read. I am sure, you must have noted satisfactory results during this year.

DIVIDEND

3. The Board of Directors of your Company have recommended, subject to your approval, a Dividend @ 18% (subject to deduction of tax), absorbing a sum of about Rs. 1.75 crores.

EXPANSION

4. The projects pertaining to increase in the capacity of Nylon Yarn to 6000 tons and Polyester Filament Yarn to 3500 tons, per annum, as also the manufacture of Nylon Industrial Yarn/Tyre Cord (2000 tpa) and Tyre Fabrics (1700 tpa) are actively under implementation.

DEBENTURES

5. The Company proposes, subject to the approval of the Controller of Capital Issues, to make an issue of Rights - 15% Secured Non-Convertible Debentures upto an aggregate face value of Rs. 25 crores, to finance, in part, the projects under implementation as also to augment the long-term resources for working capital. I am confident, you will, as in the past, extend your fullest co-operation and support.

ECONOMIC SCENE

6. We are indeed fortunate to have a strong and stable Government at the Centre, with an unprecedented massive mandate from electorate, under the able and inspiring leadership of our young and dynamic Prime Minister, Shri Rajiv Gandhi. Positive and pragmatic as also youthful and refreshing approach that he brings to bear on the multifarious issues—political, economic and social—is, indeed, most commendable.

The various liberalisation moves initiated by the Central Government have infused a great deal of enthusiasm and have also imparted a new thrust to the economy. The long-term fiscal policy recently announced promises stability, flexibility as also simplicity and rationality in the fiscal legislation. But, as a measure of stimulating investment and economic growth, to my mind, it has lost much of its sharpness due to proposed withdrawal of Investment Allowance with effect from 1st April, 1987, which had amply proved, over the years, its efficacy as a major incentive for capital formation.

EXCISE DUTY— RELIEF/CRUSHING BURDEN

7. The Government has recently announced substantial excise relief for polyester staple fibre and its blends and acrylic staple fibre. The relief is welcome, but I regret to state that the relief granted is partial, in that, it has not been extended to the other equally dominant segment of filament yarn, with which your Company is vitally concerned. This has made filament yarn fabrics far costlier than blended yarn fabrics and caused the consequent slump in the demand for filament yarn, so much so that, it has not only reduced its profitability but also threatened its survival. Substantial reduction in excise duty on filament yarn and its fabrics has, therefore, become imperative to restore its health.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

There is no justification whatsoever to discriminate between the two segments of the same industry. Despite the surveys—both official and non-official—having established that the filament yarn fabrics are popular among the middle and lower classes due to their inherent qualities, it is a pity, the false notion that such fabrics are consumed by a privileged few still persits. Inspite of the wave of relaxation and liberalisation, the announcement of textile policy as also the series of concessions and reliefs granted under its auspices, the long-standing grouse of the filament yarn industry—the crushing burden of excise duty, which has now acquired entirely a new dimension—still continues to plague it.

BROAD-BANDING

8. Broad-banding facilities, it is heartening to note, have been extended to Synthetic Filament yarn industry including industrial yarn/tyre cord. It is a step in the right direction, which would afford the spinners operational flexibility so as to adjust the product range to the changing pattern of demand.

CAPACITY EXPANSION

9. The existing filament yarn spinners have been permitted to expand the capacity for Nylon Yarn upto 12000 tpa and Polyester Filament Yarn upto 15000 tpa, which will enable them to achieve the economies of scale and the consquent reduction in the unit cost of production. I am pleased to note that the long-standing grievance of the industry that it had to operate with uneconomic size has now been redressed to some extent.

BASIC RAW MATERIALS

10. The supply of the basic raw materials — Caprolactam for the manufacture of Nylon Yarn and Pure Terephthalic Acid (TPA) for the manufacture of Polyester Yarn—of acceptable quality at reasonable prices so as to meet the objectives of the textile policy cannot be overemphasised. The industry has necessarily to depend heavily on imports for its raw material requirements, because of the yawning gap between the demand and indigenous supply. TPA, originally placed in OGL and rightly so, has been now shifted, since May last, to Limited Permissible Items, inspite of the fact that the question of indigenous angle consideration does not arise (TPA is not indigenously produced at present). I would urge the authorities to restore it as also Caprolactam to OGL so as to ensure their steady and regulated flow at competitive prices, so vital to the industry.

HIGH RATES OF CUSTOMS DUTY

11. The textile policy, even though, specifically enunciated to reduce the duty on raw materials, customs duty on TPA, which was already at a high level @ 140% ad valorem has been hiked, since last September, to 190% ad valorem. I would also urge the authorities to reduce substantially this prohibitive customs duty so as to enable the industry to sustain and grow.

CURRENT OUTLOOK

12. In view of the increasing cost of inputs and falling sales realisation, consequent on shrinkage in demand for filament yarn, the margins are continuously under pressure. I am, therefore, constrained, you will appreciate, from making any forecast on the working results for the current year. I, however, sincerely hope that the Government will shortly extend similar fiscal concessions to filament yarn and its fabrics, perhaps in the next phase of relief, as the fiscal levies, as spelt out in the textile policy, are proposed to be reduced progressively. Needless to add, the Management will strive very hard to achieve the best possible results.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

13. Before I conclude, first of all, I would like to express on behalf of my colleagues on the Board and on my own, our warm appreciation of the dynamic role played by your Jt. Managing Director, Shri Ashok Garware, who has initiated various measures to improve operations and reduce costs and is largely responsible for the impressive performance of this year. I am also grateful to my colleagues on the Board for their continued support and valuable guidance.

I also express my appreciation of the services of the functional directors, senior executives, officers, staff and devoted employees who have contributed to the efficient operation of the Company. I would also like to express my sense of gratitude to the financial institutions and bankers for their continued and active support, and last but not the least, I warmly appreciate your presence here this afternoon, which reflects your keen interest in the progress and well-being of your Company.

With the New Year just commenced, I take this opportunity to wish all the Shareholders a Happy and Prosperous New Year.

Thank you.

CHAIRMAN

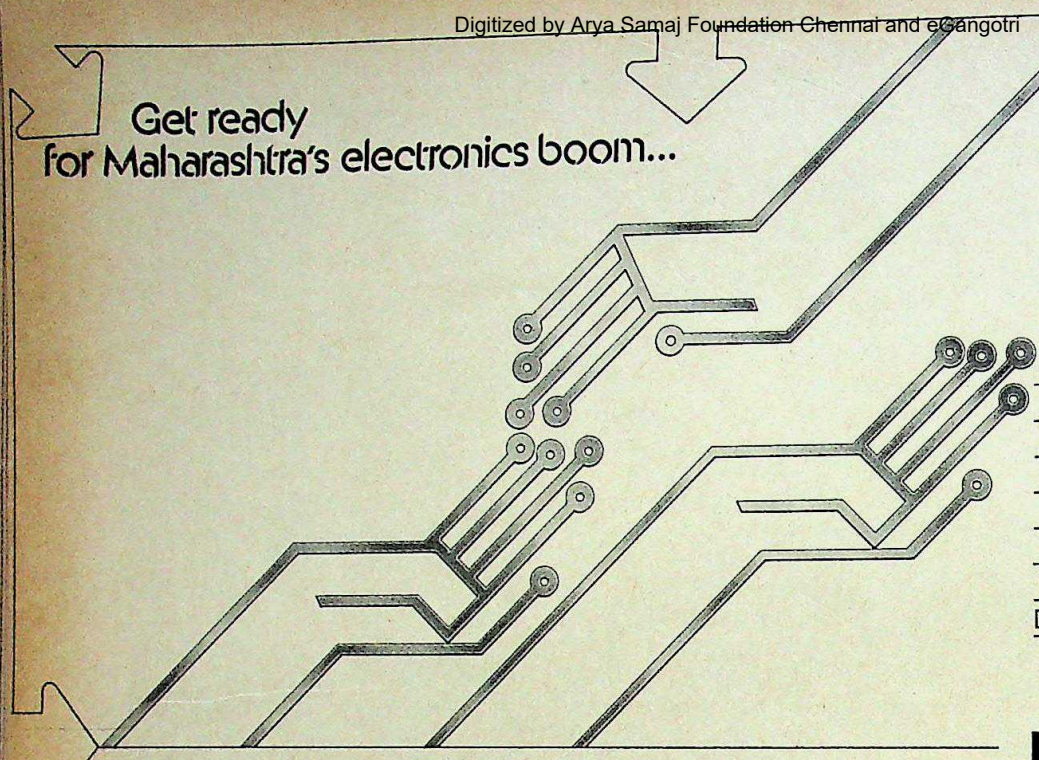
Bombay, January 8, 1986.

This does not purport to be a report of the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Get ready for Maharashtra's electronics boom...



MIDC
SICOM
MSFC
MSSIDC
MSEB
MELTRON
Directorate of Industries

UDYOG MITRA

(A Government of Maharashtra Organisation)
Nirmal, Nariman Point,
Bombay 400 021.
Phone: 202 1855 Telex: 011-3066.

with an attractive new scheme of incentives.

To accelerate the growth of Maharashtra's electronic industry, the State now offers special incentives to new electronic units.

Under the scheme, you may defer your sales tax, purchase tax and central sales tax for seven years and get the benefit of covering 85 to 100 per cent of your fixed capital investment, depending on the location of your unit.

These incentives are available to new electronic units in Maharashtra including metropolitan areas of Bombay (zones III & IV) and Pune.

What's more, this scheme is applicable to large, medium as well as small scale industries.

This is just one of the steps to prepare the electronic industry in Maharashtra for a quantum leap.

To boost this leap still further, the State has slashed sales tax to just 4%. And it is also establishing electronic industrial estates in Pune, Nagpur and Aurangabad.

To meet the industry's growing need for trained manpower, Maharashtra is expanding training facilities in electronic as well as mechanical fields.

So that when you set up your electronic plant in Maharashtra, you'll find the most fertile soil to grow. With excellent sites, trained manpower, the biggest market, total infrastructure and enlightened tax laws. But wait, there's more!

Udyog Mitra

To speed up the process of getting land, water, power and finance for your unit, there is Udyog Mitra.

As a team of chief executives from different development corporations and heads of Government departments, our main function is to liaise with the respective organisations on your behalf.

Whether you're a big industry planning expansion, a medium industry that wants to diversify or a small scale industry looking for help — we, at Udyog Mitra are with you every step of the way.

Come, join Maharashtra's electronics revolution.

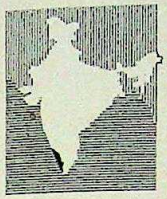
Contact SICOM at the above address for further details of this special scheme of incentives.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KERALA

Cutting to Size



THE COME down was sudden and caught the firebrand Marxist by surprise. For the last three years, CPI(M)'s Kerala legislature party secretary M.V. Raghavan had lorded it over ruling party and opposition MLA's alike, hogging the headlines and building an enviable following among the state's youth by ceaselessly exposing corruption and nepotism in the Karunakaran Ministry. So when last fortnight Raghavan, along with opposition Left Democratic Front Convenor P.V. Kunhikannan, was suspended from the party membership, the carpet had suddenly been pulled from under their feet. That was not all: seven others of his 'gang of nine' were stripped off their party posts.

But the comedown was not entirely unexpected. For some time now, Raghavan had been openly critical of the party's policies. The differences eventually came to a head at the party's state conference in Cochin last November. According to a party communique after the suspensions, Raghavan and his cohorts had "raised the banner of revisionism" at the conference by presenting an alternative document in defiance of party discipline. Raghavan, the communique added, "boycotted the voting on the official document when he found that his manipulations had not succeeded".

Raghavan: chastised

While loyalists of party General Secretary E.M.S. Namboodiripad and ideologue B.T. Ranadive think that the traitors had it coming, the large section which disagrees with the state leadership's rigid hands-off-communal-parties attitude feels that the politburo has been too severe with committed members who had merely been airing honest differences over the official party line. Said a prominent dissident: "Raghavan wanted the CPI(M) to join hands with the Kerala Congress and the Muslim League to get rid of the corrupt Karunakaran Ministry but the politburo wanted to strike an ideological posture to keep off communal parties and flounder in the wilderness."

There is some truth to this argument. The party policy of not having any truck with the Kerala Congress and the Muslim League was first opposed by former chief minister E.K. Nayanar in the politburo itself, but he was effectively silenced and later dropped from the politburo. This, however, did not deter Raghavan, who went ahead and argued against the party line in the state committee. Perhaps what fortified his courage was his large following among the youth in the party who are just as vehemently critical of the idealistic posture adopted by Namboodiripad and others. The prominent Marxist leader from Palghat, T.Sivadasa Menon, who is one of those stripped off his post, had even gone to the extent of telling Namboodiripad at a party meeting that this official line would reduce the Kerala unit to something like the Communist Party of UK, both politically and electorally.

Namboodiripad: crackdown

For Namboodiripad the action against heretics like M.V. Raghavan is yet another step forward in his campaign against communal politics.

For Namboodiripad the action against the heretics is yet another step forward in his campaign against communal politics. Namboodiripad characterised Raghavan and his group's stand as the result of falling prey to "the cancer of parliamentary opportunism". He went on to say: "The CPI(M) does not want to mortgage its prestige by aligning itself with communal parties like the Muslim League and Kerala Congress. Nor should these parties have any illusions about basking in the sunshine of power by forging an alliance with the CPI(M)."

But perhaps the real reason behind the whole affair is not revisionism but regionalism. There is a feeling within the party that this is more a fight between the Travancore and Malabar groups in the party. Namboodiripad and the powerful state unit secretary V.S. Achuthanandan are from Travancore, while the majority of the 'gang of nine' are from Malabar. The rumblings in the party over the action may yet snowball into a serious crisis since the party's solid base lies in the northern districts of Cannanore and Kasargod in the Malabar area. To smother this brewing trouble, Namboodiripad and Achuthanandan went on a whirlwind tour of the crucial districts, beginning with Cannanore.

Meanwhile, the Muslim League and the Kerala Congress are now watching every CPI(M) move with keen interest. Said Muslim League MLA P.M. Abubacker: "Our hopes of ever having an alliance with the Marxists has vanished forever with the suspension of Raghavan." Other opposition parties too cannot remain immune to the developments in the CPI(M). Remarked a prominent Congress(S) MLA: "The CPI(M)'s big brother attitude is sickening. It looks like the Opposition in Kerala is going out of electoral politics."

One fall-out of all this has been a sudden affinity among the other opposition groups, who now want to forge a third front without the Congress(I) and the CPI(M). In fact, Revolutionary Socialist Party strongman Baby John and Kerala state unit president of the Congress(S) P.C.Chacko have already started talking to the Muslim League and the Kerala Congress. On the other hand, there are those like the BJP who have commended Namboodiripad's decision to keep communal parties at arm's length. This, despite the fact that the RSS and the CPI(M) were at each other's throats not too long ago.

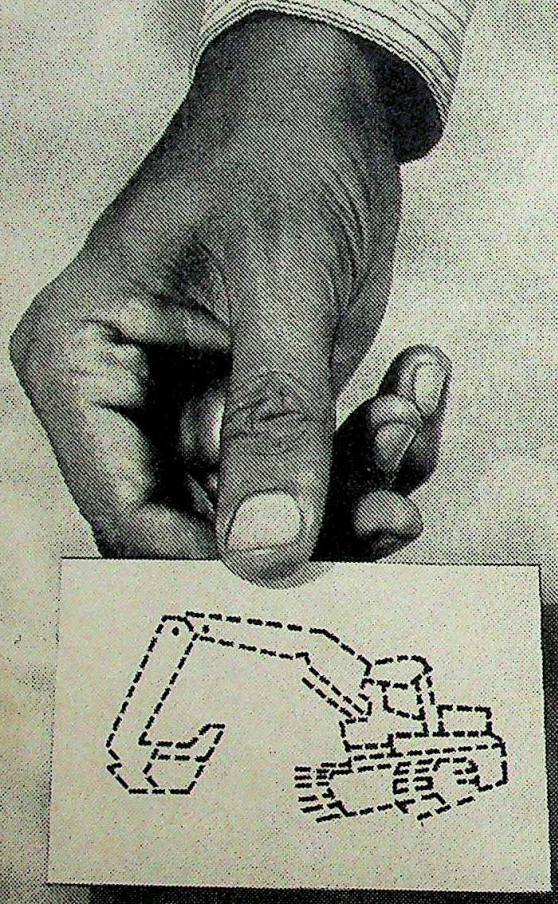
What pattern will eventually emerge from these shifting alignments is anybody's guess. Last fortnight, Raghavan himself meekly accepted the punishment and went off to his home town Cannanore, while his associates let it be known that they would abide by the party's decision.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When you are selecting excavators would you bank on...



Promises or the PERFORMANCE RECORD ?

Add up these factors:

- 800 machines in work sites all over India.
- 10 year proven record of manufacturing and product support.
- Specially adapted and designed for Indian conditions.
- High Indian content for ready availability of parts.

RESULT!

High percentage of repeat orders year after year.

L&T - Poclain machines are manufactured by L&T in collaboration with Poclain S.A. of France – the world's largest manufacturer of hydraulic excavators.

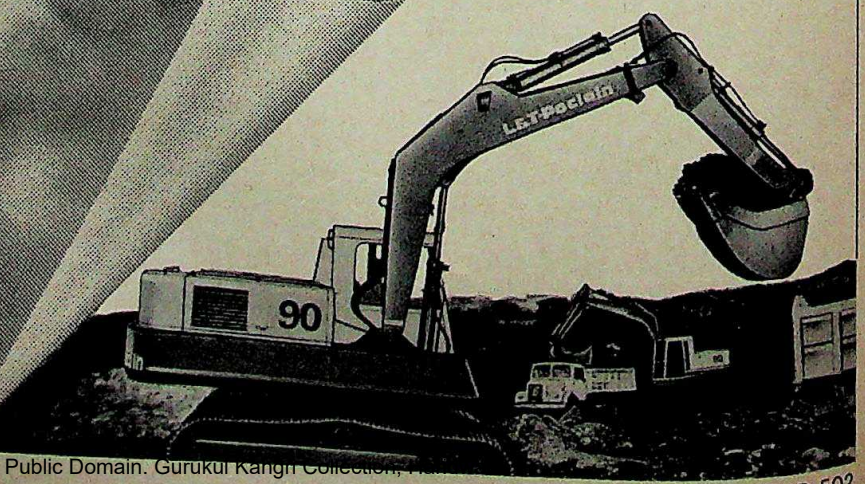
Poclain

Earthmoving Machinery Division

LARSEN & TOUBRO LIMITED

Laxminarayan Complex, Palace Road
Bangalore 560 052

L&T - POCLAIN for PROVEN PRODUCTIVITY

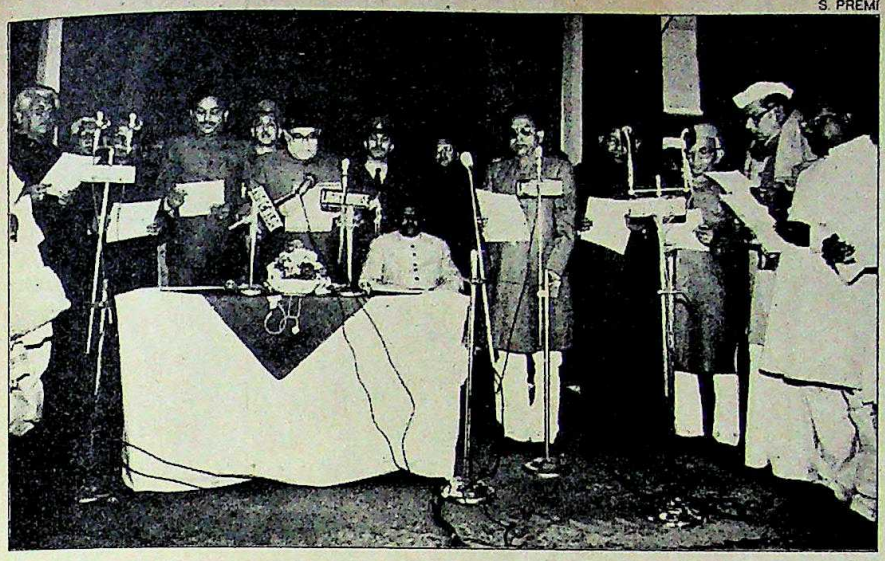


CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, H

L&T/ADV Dept. EMD 502

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

S. PREMI



Singh at swearing-in ceremony: coming to terms

UTTAR PRADESH

Cabal Strife

UTTAR PRADESH Chief Minister Virbahadur Singh has not been as good as his word. When he took charge of the reins in the country's largest state last September, he had announced that he would induct new, efficient and young people in his council of ministers. But he faltered just 48 hours later when he included 12 of the 17 ministers of the previous government in his new cabinet. Last fortnight he repeated the performance while inducting 10 ministers of state, raising the strength of the ministry to 27.

Only two of the appointees were new while the remaining eight had been ministers under former chief ministers Vishwanath Pratap Singh, Sripati Misra and Narain Dutt Tiwari. In fact, many of them had been dropped in the past because of non-performance. Said a visibly defensive Singh: "Mine is an attempt to provide a mix of experience and fresh blood. After all, we have to govern the country's biggest state, and administrative experience matters a lot."

Despite his disclaimers, the long-delayed cabinet expansion marked an attempt to come to terms with his formidable detractors in the state, led by Health Minister Lokpati Tripathi, who enjoys the support of not only his own Brahmin community but also the party dissidents. Indeed, this bid to buy peace marked a sharp departure from the chief minister's earlier no-holds-barred attack on those ranged against him in the state Congress(I). Even state government officials who, Singh believed, were aligned with his rivals had got a bit of the stick from the chief minister.

Thus, during his first 100 days in office Singh had transferred over 20 senior IAS officials including the chief secretary, barred his ministers from visiting Delhi without his prior approval and tried to rein them in by insisting on office attendance at the stipulated times and meeting targets that he laid down for them. Then, in a far-reaching move aimed at breaking the well-known nexus between politicians and criminals in the state, he had promulgated the draconian Gangsters and Anti-social Activities (Prevention) Ordinance. As a follow-up, directions were issued to the state police to arrest anyone carrying even licensed arms in public—a move that annoyed many of the party's MLA's.

But Singh's effort at ruling with an iron hand quickly began to come unstuck. His detractors, including senior cabinet colleagues, soon began to openly flout his orders and make frequent trips to New Delhi to convey "their feelings" about the chief minister. The delay in expanding the cabinet did not help matters because over 150 MLA's and MLC's moved in droves to New Delhi, camping there for days on end, and met senior party leaders, central ministers and prominent state MP's to lobby for ministerial berths. And barely 48 hours before the cabinet expansion, more than 20 ministerial aspirants virtually laid siege to the spacious offices of both Industry Minister Narain Dutt Tiwari and Finance Minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh, hoping that these senior politicians from the state would be able to prevail on the chief minister.

Earlier, MLA's and MLC's had been sending their assessments about the state Government's performance to Minister of State for Defence Arun Singh and Minister of State for Internal Security Arun Nehru. While charges of "brash behaviour" and the more routine "inefficiency" were aired, others complained of the Congress organisation weakening throughout the state, bureaucratic apathy and lack of any development thrust in backward eastern Uttar Pradesh.

The Opposition added its voice to this chorus of complaints, writing to the prime minister about Singh's refusal to summon the Assembly and drawing his attention to the deteriorating law and order situation. The party high command thus heard very little in praise of Singh. Among his few supporters was K. K. Sharma, Congress(I) MLA from Ghaziabad, who said: "We are impressed by the work done so far by the chief minister. But he can do better if he is given enough freedom and time by us to do things in his own manner."

Even as the central leadership began to take note of the dissatisfaction brewing in an apparently growing section of the party, a barrage of adverse reports, some of them inspired, began appearing in important newspapers, with adverse editorial comment to boot. It was about this time that a beleaguered Singh changed tactics abruptly. Gone now was the stick that was brandished earlier, and instead came the carrot.

He held secret parleys with Tripathi and other leaders of various groups in the PCC(I), assuring them that he would not harm their interests in the state. And anxious to keep track of the currents in New Delhi, he made the national capital a second headquarters: on average, every fifth day found Singh in New Delhi.

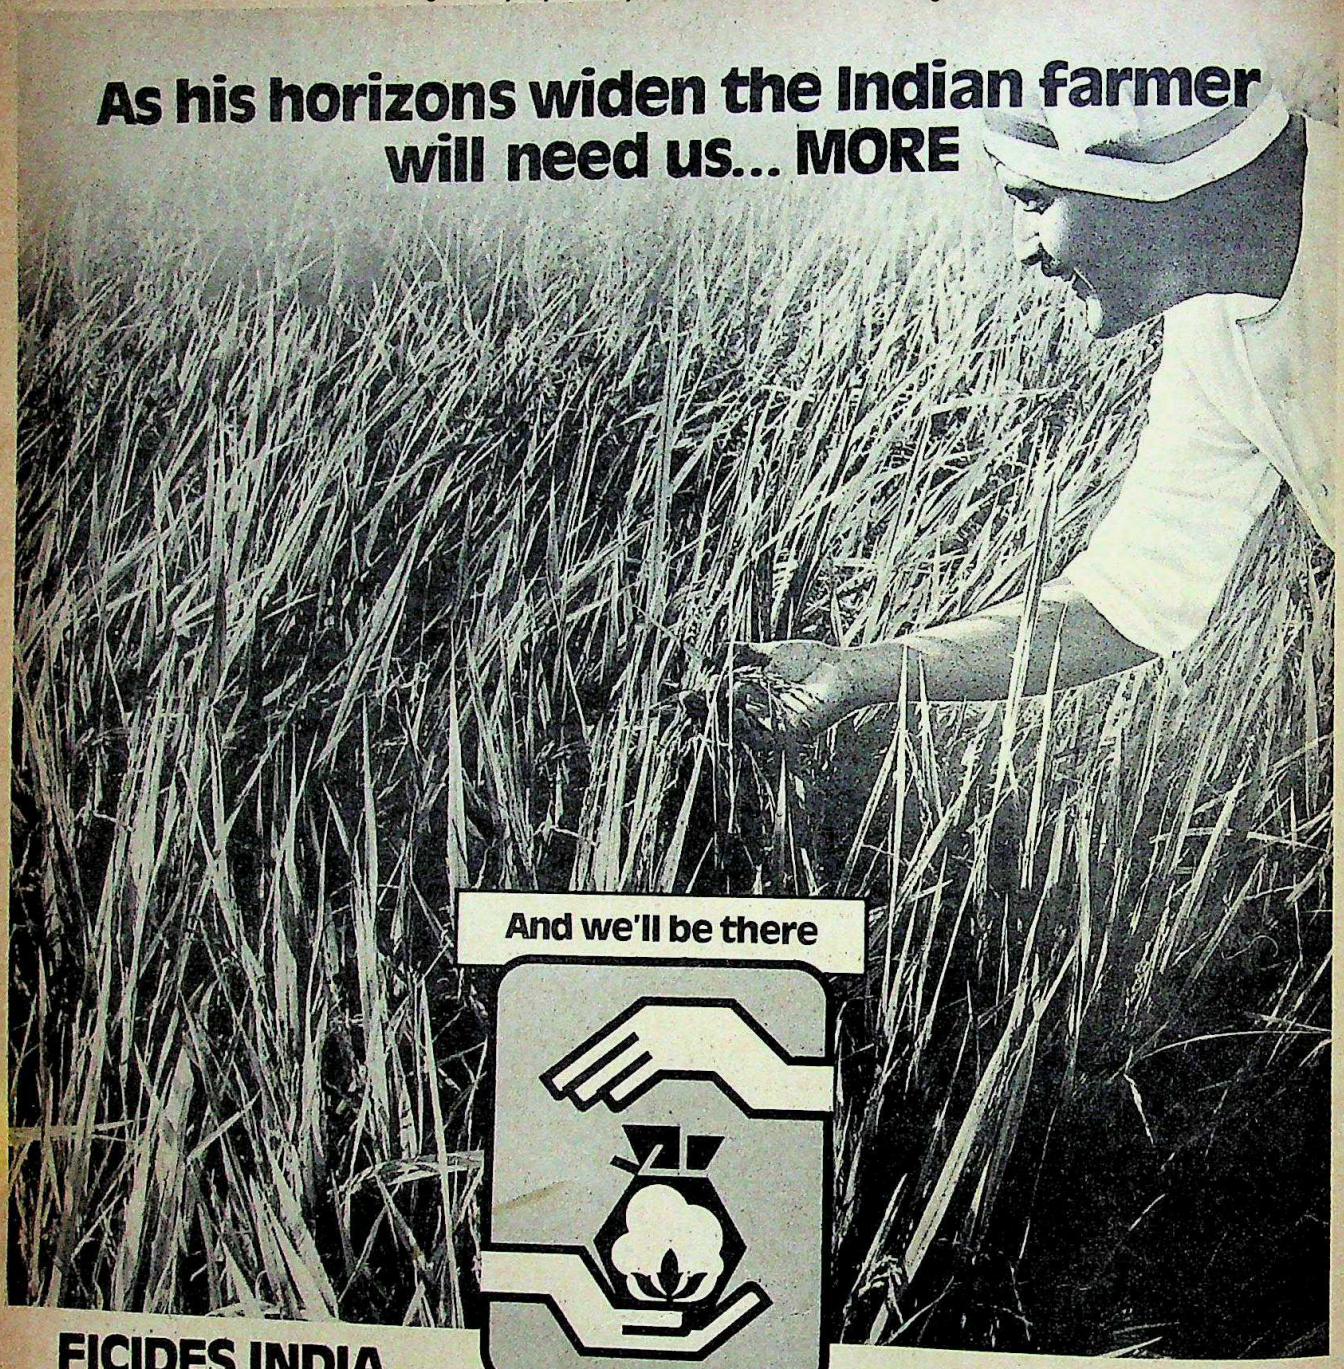
If the chief minister had decided that he would stoop to conquer, he succeeded to some extent. The same party high command that had kept his cabinet expansion proposals in abeyance now gave him the green signal and dissolved 14 district Congress committees which were hostile to him. Moreover, changes in the PCC(I) leadership were promised.

But this victory has been at a price. For Singh has had to give the maximum representation in his Cabinet to Brahmins (8), followed by the backward castes (6). While every sixth backward

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

As his horizons widen the Indian farmer will need us... MORE



FICIDES INDIA

For an expanding agriculture - Complete crop protection - economically balanced

India is on a progressive path to becoming a global agricultural power. Rural India is abloom with an expanding agriculture that promises more crops, better yields - and, correspondingly, needs better crop protection. Enter FICIDES INDIA.

As a wholly Indian Company, FICIDES INDIA have access to, and the freedom to implement in India, the world's latest crop protection practices.

Our products - The FIGHTING FORCE - make up a complete range of pesticides, covering every crop protection need from sowing to harvest - cost effectively. Giving the Indian farmer the best value in the market - for the first time.

Untroubled by Pests

FICIDES INDIA

Sweeping Green Fields to Golden Harvests

LINTAS-M-FI4-2417

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

 Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

caste MLA and every seventh Brahmin MLA became a minister, only every 12th Thakur MLA (Singh's community) could be given a berth in the ministry. In his eagerness to woo the Brahmins, the chief minister also ignored the legitimate claims of the 75-member strong group of Harijan MLA's, who got only four berths. Singh insisted last fortnight that "I have selected people on merit and not on any caste basis because I want my government to perform." But this would not wash with anyone even remotely familiar with the state's politics. And state Lok Dal chief Mulayam Singh Yadav asked: "Can he perform with the help of people who have blemished records and represent caste lobbies? The state is already in a mess, with every section revolting against this inefficient and corrupt government."

Yadav certainly has a point, for the state does seem to be in more turmoil than before Singh took charge. Despite Singh's strong-arm methods and the order concerning the carrying of arms, violence of one form or the other continued to make the headlines while disgruntled sections registered their protest in a variety of ways. Advocates clashed with court staff in Lucknow, police killed a pregnant woman at a railway station, and five Harijans were killed in eastern Uttar Pradesh. Government employees, engineers and doctors went on the warpath against the administration and senior officials sat on the chief minister's orders to summarily dismiss or prematurely retire their colleagues. And signalling the limited reach of the chief minister's fiat, decisions taken at his daily meetings were not being implemented seriously as cabinet ministers had their own axes to grind. Said a secretary in one of the government departments: "The chief minister is convinced that he alone can revolutionise the administration. He doesn't know that against his one order, there are 12 contradictory directives from his cabinet colleagues. There is no collective thinking."

The embattled Singh's ability to survive against mounting odds will be tested to the full in the coming assembly session, called for the first time since Singh became chief minister five months ago. And in the absence of formidable speakers and seasoned politicians willing to defend Singh's government, the Opposition is likely to score quite a few points. If that happens, the alarm bells will certainly ring in New Delhi.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

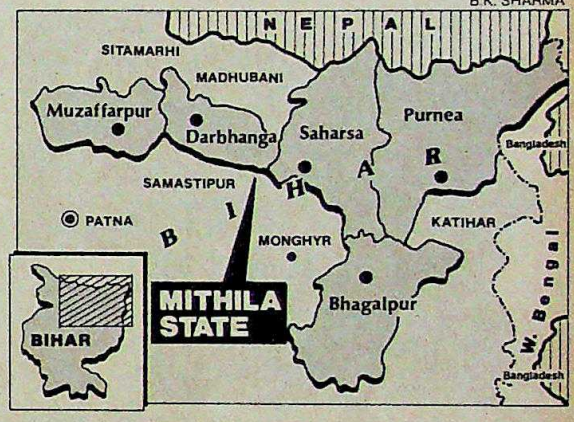
MITHILA

Political Pawn

MITHILA, one of Bihar's most backward regions, has for long owed its sole claim to fame to its internationally known paintings. But it is now painting its name in colours that are ominously darker. Under the aggressive leadership of Vijay Kumar Mishra, the Janata MP from Darbhanga, the region is witnessing a revival of the ancient—and rather dubious—demand for a separate Mithila state comprising the districts of Muzaffarpur, Darbhanga, Saharsa, Purnea and Bhagalpur.

The revival came in the form of a three-day rail roko agitation organised by Mishra, eldest son of the late Congress stalwart L.N. Mishra. Over 5,000 members belonging to local units of the Janata, Lok Dal and the CPI courted arrest in a symbolic attempt to highlight the economic backwardness of the region compounded by official indifference.

B.K. SHARMA



Vijay Kumar Mishra: cat's-paw?

The success of the rail roko was, however, more of a testament to Mishra's meteoric rise in the cooperative movement in the state than the seriousness of the separatist call. The fact that he is also the nephew of former chief minister Jagannath Mishra gives him added political clout—he had been elected to the Lok Sabha by the Maithili-speaking voters on his promise of fulfilling the commitments made by his father to improve conditions in area of constant neglect. "The vote for me in the election was the people's sanction for this fight," he said righteously.

With preparations underway for further demonstrations including the call for a general strike in Darbhanga, Mishra threatens to prove a prickly thorn in the side of Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey. Clearly on the defensive, Dubey's spokesmen have stressed the steps taken to remove regional imbalances during the last eight months, but Mishra makes clear that "ours is not a fight against the Government or the Congress(I), it is simply to wake up the Centre and if it fails to respond the agitation will spread."

Mishra's grievances are genuine enough. Most of the districts have no industry worth the name and the entire population pressure has fallen on uneconomic holdings owing to the abject failure of land reforms. But there are also indications that his uncle, the wily Jagannath Mishra, is using his nephew's campaign to undermine Dubey's standing. His Hindi daily, Patliputra Times, in a series of news stories has been highlighting the "conspiracy" to perpetuate socio-economic stagnation.

The politics behind such analysis was pretty clear—to buttress the claim that 'Mithilanchal' had been ignored and also, very coincidentally, highlight those decisions which Jagannath Mishra had taken as chief minister. "The development of Mithila has been ignored after I left the Government. All schemes initiated by me have been stopped. I feel disturbed," he says piously.

With the growing popularity of his nephew's campaign, the concept of 'Mithilanchal' has given him just the handle to beat Dubey with. But this time there is a subtle difference—he has left the sabre-rattling to his nephew and his newspaper thereby staying in the background himself. Meanwhile his nephew has been busy storming the region passionately vowing: "This is just the beginning. The people are not in a mood to tolerate injustice any more."

However, the demands can hardly be met by either the Centre or state government overnight. And if the economic backwardness of the region is any indication, the people's strength in sustaining a long-drawn agitation can only be in doubt, specially if it all turns out to be merely a political gimmick of political vengeance.

—FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

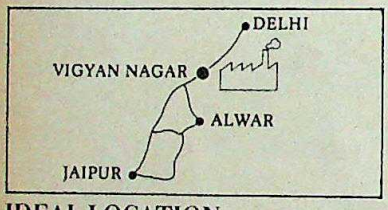
RIICO's highway estate for hi-tech prosperity –

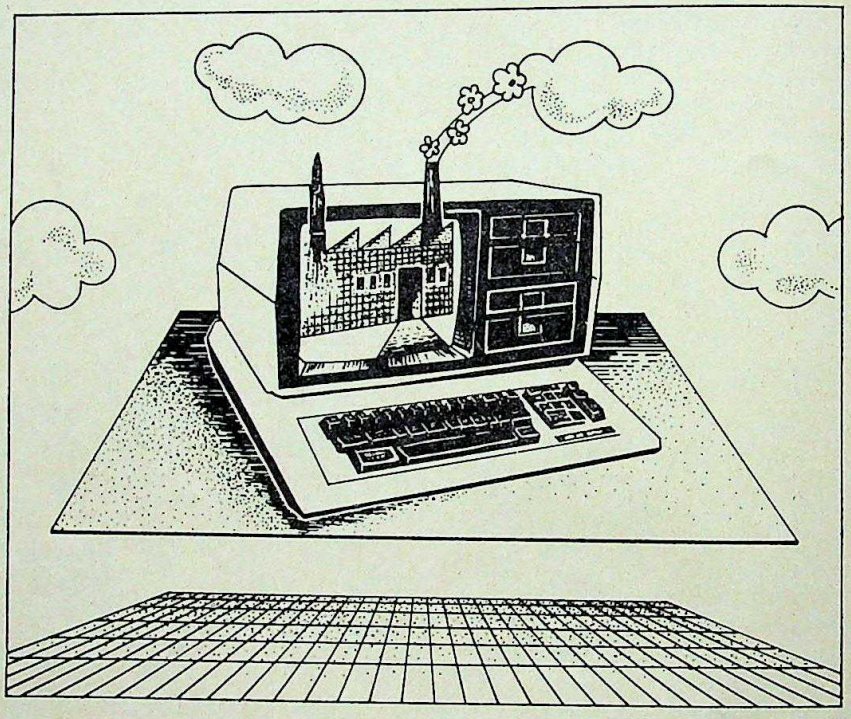
VIGYAN NAGAR

A genuine move to save DELHI from the overgrowth and congestion. By developing VIGYAN NAGAR. So that:

innovations in science . . .
absorption of technology . . .
developing know-how . . .
attaining competence . . .

and many similar efforts of entrepreneurs are implemented in this ideal habitat: VIGYAN NAGAR at Shahjahanpur in the Centrally Backward district of Alwar (category 'B') in Rajasthan.





IDEAL LOCATION

Vigyan Nagar is just 105 Km from Delhi, along the National Highway No. 8, which is now becoming the 'Express Highway'. It falls within the National Capital Region (NCR) and is poised to share the needs of people desirous to be closer to Delhi: new residential complexes, market yards, commercial centres, and industrialisation as well.

TREMENDOUS POTENTIAL

Vigyan Nagar is a new Industrial Township, promoted by RIICO. It ensures common facilities like:

* developed land
* each plot opening on road
* abundance of water
* post office
* bank
* residential zones
* commercial zones

VITAL PUSH

Other than physical facilities is the vital push you get at Vigyan Nagar because all efforts are engineered by RIICO, a specialised organisation representing the will of the Government. Through RIICO:

— 200 medium and large scale projects have been set up
— 171 new industrial areas established
— fresh investment of Rs. 660 crores catalysed

In fact RIICO is taking up the cause of entrepreneurs in a big way for obtaining Letters of Intent, securing viable Technology, setting up Joint/Assisted sector projects, providing financial help and technical consultancy.

RIICO ties up with Rajasthan Financial Corporation and/or banks for entrepreneurs.

'TECHNO-PARK'

Have a look at this habitat: Vigyan Nagar is far from the madding crowd. It is lush countryside. A flat, fertile land. Shadowy trees and electric posts dot the landscape as birds chirp and nest. This up and coming 'Technology Park' beckons you.

CONTACT

Regional Manager
Bhiwadi Industrial Area
Bhiwadi. Tel: 11(0), 41 (R)

Assistant Regional Manager
Behror Industrial Area
Behror. Tel: 84

or
Chief Manager (IPI), Udyog Bhawan,
Jaipur: Tel: 69744(0), 73799 (R)

Sobhagya/497/85

RIICO
the Industrial Catalyst

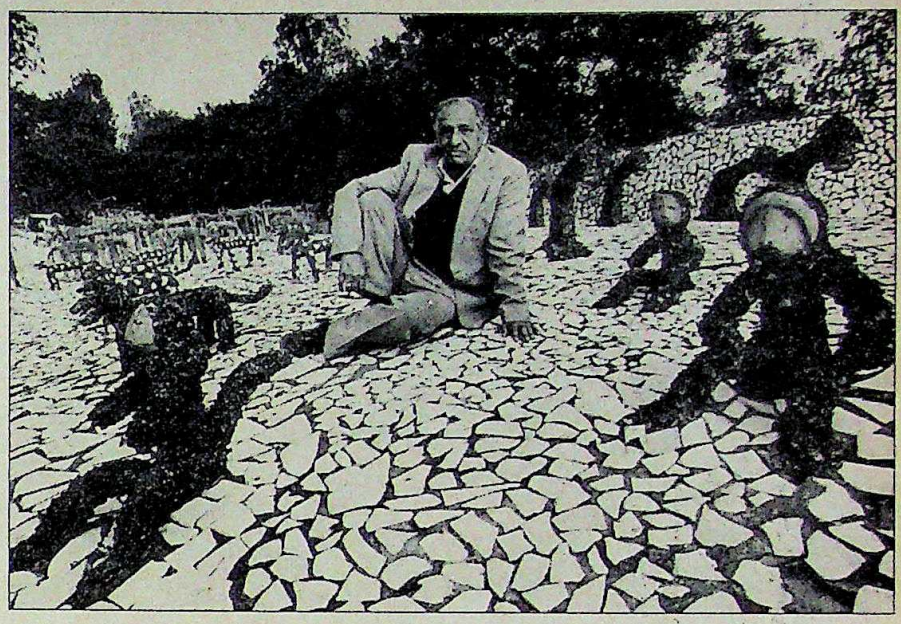
Rajasthan State Industrial Development & Investment Corporation Limited
Udyog Bhawan, Tilak Marg, Jaipur 302 005
Tel : 78751 Gram : RIICO Telex : 0365 335

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NEK CHAND

Love's Labour



Nek Chand's works: official indifference

THE RETURN of the quiet modest creator of Chandigarh's rock garden, Nek Chand, to his home town from Washington was wreathed in laurels and widespread acclaim. The fantasy garden at the Childrens' Museum in the Capital there won him the Superior Craftsmanship Award of the Washington Building Congress. Made from bits of refuse, the garden has the distinction of being the only permanent Festival of India exhibit in the US.

There were other honours and accolades too. A grateful mayor of the district of Columbia celebrated October 5 as 'Nek Chand day' in recognition of his "magnificent gift to our city". The media praised him as a visionary genius. "I felt as if I was walking through a man's soul," said Ann Lewin, director of the Childrens' Museum. US companies wanted him to sign a 10-year contract to design more such gardens in other cities. But he preferred to return to the rock garden where he spent the most creative years of his life.

But back home, instead of welcoming arms, official recognition and a respectable job, he was greeted with an appointment as a consultant for a pittance of Rs 1,500 a month—the going wage for masons and carpenters. Worse, his contract could be terminated at three months' notice. Not surprisingly, he has yet to accept the offer.

Nek Chand retired from his job as a road inspector in the Public Works Department in December 1984. The job had enabled him to create the Chandigarh garden, and since retirement he was kept going by the Festival project.

Chandigarh's Chief Engineer J.S. Kohli and his colleagues admit the terms are not the best for an artist who has brought home laurels, but blame the Centre. Despite repeated requests, the Union Housing and Works Ministry refused to re-employ him as superintendent of the rock garden.

Nek Chand had no designs, no plans or lay-outs. He accumulated bits of junk, broken glass and china, scrap and rags and from these sculpted figures. He started work on his secret garden in 1958 and kept working quietly for about 12 years.

It was only in 1970 that the Government took note of this work of art and allotted him the land and funds to continue. The first phase was officially inaugurated in 1976 and the second in 1983.

Today, along the paths in the 12-acre plot at the foothills of the Shivalik range are thousands of dancing women fabricated from mudguards of motorcycles and bicycles, birds and warriors made from myriad, colourful bits of broken glass and a life-size cavalry regiment of rag dolls.

The childrens' garden in Washington

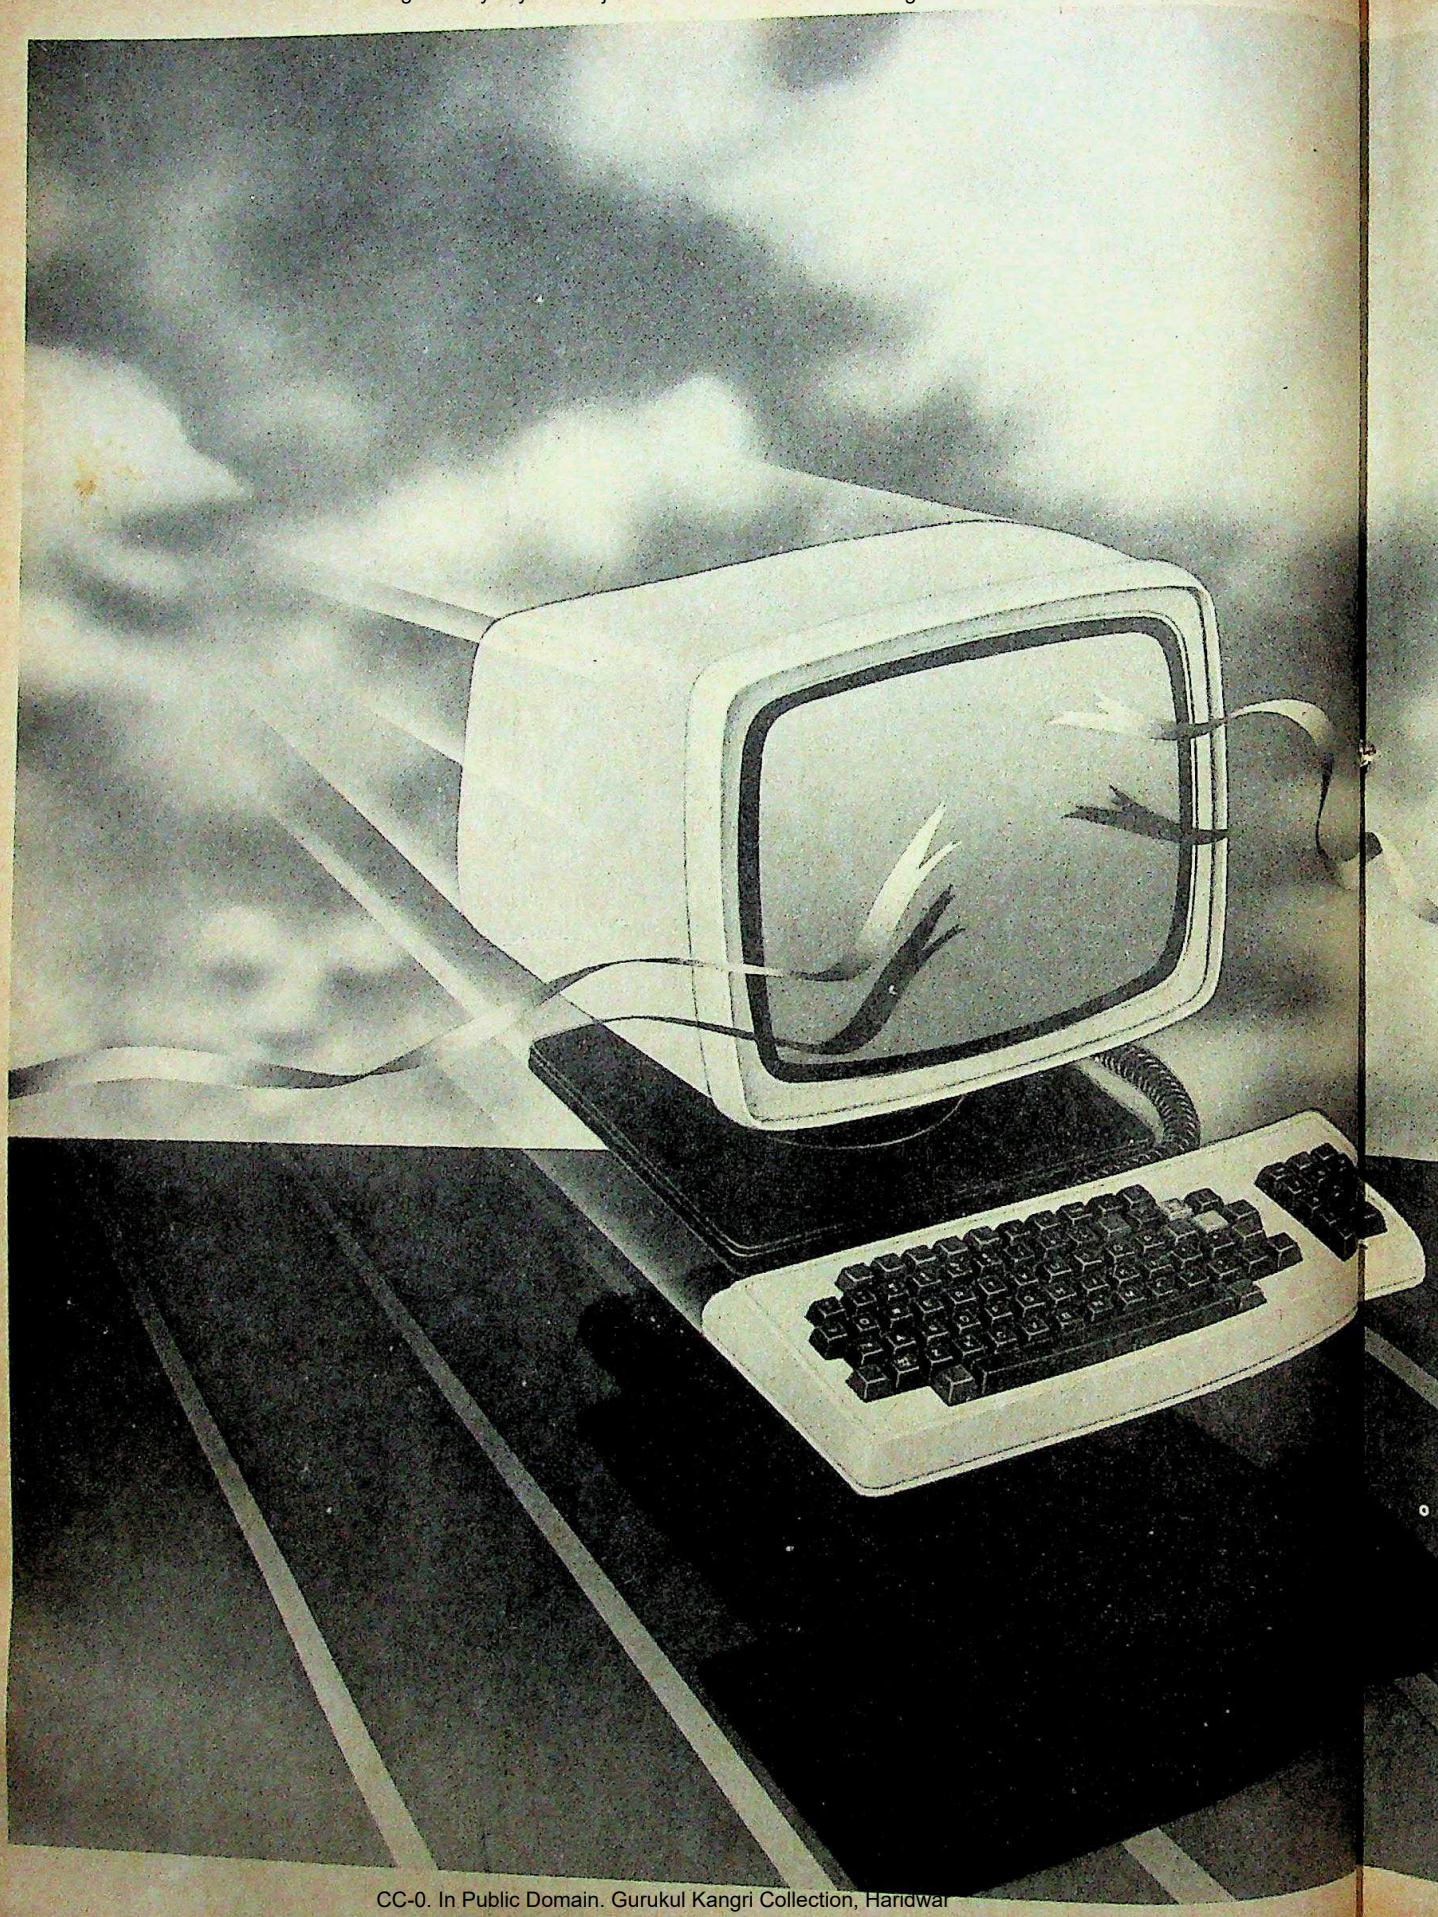
But for the help he received from two former chief commissioners and great patrons of the arts, Dr M.S. Randhawa and T.N.Chaturvedi, Nek Chand's garden would have remained unfulfilled, and wouldn't have enthralled the more than 80 lakh people who have already visited it. He now plans further expansion of his garden—he is growing different trees as a backdrop to his extensive landscaping. A theatre is among the proposed fixtures, as also a four-acre garden for children to experiment in, to create and embellish their own figures and images. "There is an artist in each child and I want that artist to flourish," he says.

Whether he will be allowed to accomplish this is a moot point. The local administration doesn't even supply him with sufficient water to keep the waterfalls and fountains in the garden going. A plan to make him chief custodian for life of an autonomous organisation to look after the place could have materialised had Arjun Singh, an admirer who wanted to put a revolving fund at his disposal, stayed on as chief administrator of the city. Nek Chand's admirers have now pinned their hopes on the new administration which will take over on Republic Day. If it too belies their hopes, then love's labour will have been irretrievably lost.

—GOBIND THUKRAL

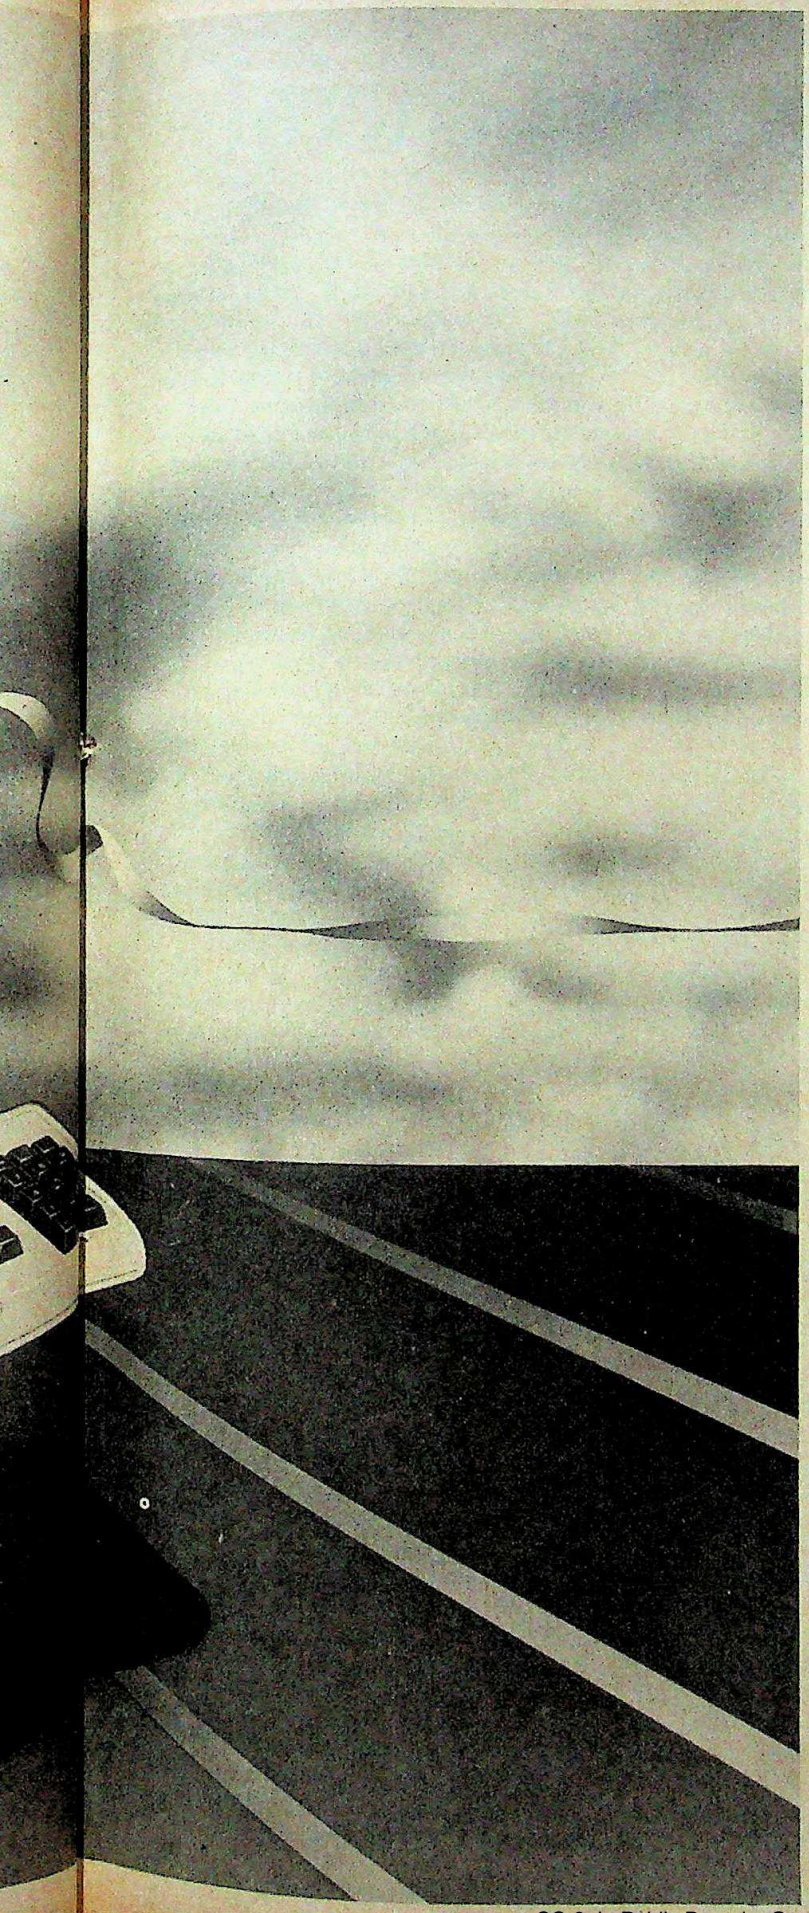
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



The latest in a long line of firsts.

- 1979-80: Uptron enters the computer market with the D-10, a data entry system. With over 3500 installations, D-10 is now an acclaimed industry standard.
- 1981-82: Uptron announces the S-800, India's first computer to shatter the Rs. 1 lakh price barrier.
- 1982-83: The Uptron S-850 becomes India's first computer to integrate DP, WP and Graphics.
- 1983-84: The Uptron S-1650 emerges as India's fastest 16-bit multi-user EDP machine.

Now The Uptron S-1600. A 16-bit multi-terminal, desk-top computer that's redefining price-performance ratios.

UPTRON

Uptron India Limited
10, Ashok Marg, Lucknow-226 001.

Computer Sales Offices at: Bangalore 71, Millers Road, Bangalore-560 052. Tel. 71919, 28927. Bombay 203, Dalamal Towers, Nariman Point, Bombay-400 021. Tel. 223645, 222561, 231393. Calcutta 52D, Ballygunge Circular Road, Calcutta-700 019. Tel. 476859, 483249. Delhi D6, South Ext. II, New Delhi-110 049. Tel. 665412, 667084, 665662. Hyderabad 5-9-12, Samrat Complex, Opp. A.G.'s Office, Saifabad, Hyderabad-500 004. Tel. 226085. Madras Mowbrays Flats, 282, Mowbrays Road, Alwarpet, Madras-600 018. Tel. 454022, 454625. Lucknow 19, Vidhan Sabha Marg, Lucknow-226 001. Tel. 47131, 34684.

ULKA-D-UIL-1007

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GENERAL KRISHNASWAMI SUNDARJI

The Thinking Man's General

KRISHNASWAMI Sundarji was sworn in as the nation's fourteenth chief of army staff on February 1 for an 820-day stint during which he promises to usher in major structural and personnel reorganisations within the army. But the 'new look' he has in mind for the army will not be an exercise in cosmetics. Sundarji is commonly described as a thinking man's general—a man with a modern mind who is determined not to let the 21st century catch the army napping in a business-as-usual posture. And in order to hit the ground running as army chief, Sundarji retreated for the last two weeks to a hideout in Goa where he wrote and mulled over position papers and recommendations designed to break new ground in areas such as training, equipment, mechanisation, compensation, computerisation and tactics.

Army officers around the country hailed his appointment because they consider his choice to be a splendid example of selection by merit in the wake of the patchy demoralisation that was palpable during the controversial period of debate over supersessions.

Eminently qualified, Sundarji was, of all things, working towards a zoology degree from his native Madras before he joined the Mahar regiment at the tail end of the Second World War and immediately saw service in Baluchistan. He was posted as a brigade major with the United Nations forces in Congo, and saw action in the Indo-Pak war of 1965 and during the Bangladesh operations. He is a recipient of the Param Vishisht Seva Medal.

At 57, he looks more like the quintessential matinee idol rather than the stereotyped Blimp one expects to encounter. His appearance characterises a life-style in which he combines flamboyance with flair and a disarming informality. Sundarji is known as a formidable and persuasive debater, a man who rarely ducks a challenge or passes the buck.

Perhaps the most spiritually trying, turbulent and cathartic task of his career was launching Operation Bluestar in June 1984 when he headed the army's Western Command. When he discusses that troubled chapter of Indian history he is overwhelmed by obvious emotion. In a refreshingly candid, free-wheeling interview with Features Editor INDERJIT BADHWAR, he discusses, for the first time, the Bluestar Operation as well as the changes he sees coming in the army under his command. Excerpts:

HARI OM GULATI

Q. You're often referred to as the 21st century General. Where do you see the army headed in terms of modernisation?

A. Until the last plan we were in the process of modernising discrete weapons systems and equipment. This is now complete in some cases. Now the time has come when we must look at the totality and decide on changes. The changes I see are basically in the areas of man-machine mixes in the plains sector, with the emphasis shifting towards the machine. This would mean greater mobility, better firepower, better command control and intelligence, including surveillance and nightfighting capability.

Q. Why is this occurring now?

A. In the past, manpower assets were cheap and plentiful. There was a dearth of equipment, little indigenous capability and little foreign exchange. That has changed dramatically. Men will still be plentiful but are no longer inexpensive. Some 52 per cent of the army's budget goes directly for manpower expenses. Our capability of producing weapons systems within the country has increased tremendously. By the turn of the century, I don't expect any major weapons systems for the army being imported.

Q. Does this diminish the importance of the soldier?

A. Don't misconstrue this. Man is most important and no amount of sophistication in land warfare can replace him. What I'm talking about is more mechanisation.

Q. What can the soldier expect to see on the ground in the future?

A. Modernisation would first involve restructuring all formations in the plains and in the mountains. In the plains there would be more mechanisations to include tanks, infantry combat vehicles, helicopters of all types, self propelled artillery and assault engineers. Similarly for the mountains the formations will get much greater combat potential.

Q. How would you handle a nuclear threat from across the border?

A. There are enough indicators to suggest that Pakistan has achieved or is close to achieving a nuclear weapons capability. This is definitely a cause for concern as it adds a new dimension to the security environment in the subcontinent. The Government is aware of these implications and is taking adequate measures to ensure the security of the country. While it is for the Government to decide on policy regarding our own nuclear posture, we cannot legislate for our potential adversaries. We, in the armed forces, are gearing our organisation, training and equipment in such a manner that it is not only effective in conventional use but in the unlikely event of nuclear weapons by an adversary in the combat zone, we will limit damage both psychological and physical.

Q. What does this mean?

A. While for obvious reasons I cannot disclose any details, I am convinced that the measures taken are effective. I am also convinced that not only will the security of the nation be properly safeguarded but our armed forces will not be made to fight in a disadvantageous situation.

Q. How badly have Operation Bluestar and its fallout shaken the mo-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

rale of the army?

A. The harder the test, the more difficult the conditions—and if you succeed despite all this—the higher the morale. The bottom line is we're effective as a group, our heads held high.

Q. But surely you were aware from the outset that you might encounter severe morale problems in conducting the operation?

A. From the outset it was a very sad thing. All of us hoped it would never come to this. But when I finally was charged with the mission I was convinced at that time that there was no other option. None. It was a duty to be performed.

Q. What was your message to your troops once the clearance to go in had arrived?

A. On June 2, before Bluestar, I told my commanders that it was a very difficult mission, a very sad mission and also that we would do our utmost to be fair, humane, and to use minimum force even at the risk of accepting more casualties than we normally would. Having said this I also told them: "I can assure you that we will come in for intense criticism no matter how well we do it. One school of thought will think we used too little force and too late, showed extreme constraint and took too many casualties. Another school would feel we used too much force too soon and caused too many casualties and damaged too many buildings."

Q. People are still asking those questions.

A. You can't help this kind of reaction. But at that time I told my commanders that they were to go in and do an honest job, "so that you can come out with a clear conscience. When you look into the mirror and can look straight into your own eyes, it's going to be your only reward". Every man was spoken to by his senior officers. They were told that the army was going in against our own people.

Q. So what was the emotional upshot?

A. The very first battalion to enter the Golden Temple was the Tenth Guards—— half its members are Jat Sikhs from Amritsar district. The fact that they went in and did such a magnificient job, notwithstanding the emotional turmoil within themselves, is the best indication of what army morale was like.

Q. Was like or is like? What about the desertions?

A. I'll take you up on that. Is like. Much has been made of desertions and mutinies within the ranks. We have a little over 50 battalion-size units which are 100 per cent Sikh and about the same number with a very large number of Sikhs. Instances of mutiny took place in just three units of the first category and in two units of the second.

Q. But don't officers share equal blame for lack of communication?

A. I'd attribute the primary cause to poor leadership in these units. There was a failure of command. The second reason was the unprecedented emotional trauma and pressures under which all Sikh troops were when the Golden Temple was entered.

Q. Did that shake your faith in the loyalty of Sikh soldiers?

A. The way I look at it is this: I've always held the Sikh soldier in the highest esteem. But after this my esteem for them has risen even higher than ever before. The fact is that the vast majority of them stood staunchly loyal. I don't think any other class of soldier has passed through such a traumatic experience. Some people in the country—and in the service—speak loosely about Sikh loyalty and their need to re-establish their credibility. But the Sikhs have been through fire and have come out flying high. What hurts them are these kinds of patently unjustified doubts. The Sikhs don't need to make any further demonstrations (of loyalty).

Q. Was this one of the most distasteful experiences of your life?

A. Distasteful? Of course it was distasteful, but it was a legitimate mission. There was no other solution at that time. However distasteful, a legitimate mission has to be carried out. That is the hallmark of a soldier.

Q. What about the question of other means being available, such as the use of gas or laying a siege?

A. Non-lethal CS gas was used. It did not work for a variety of reasons, one of them being the impenetrability of the sandbagged area. Gas as a sophisticated method may have worked if there had been sophisticated circulation, plumbing and ducting in and around the Akal Takht. Our commandos were also asked to go in with non-lethal stun grenades. And behind the assaulting men we sent sappers with two fire extinguishers each—one in the hand and one in the rucksack, to put out fires. They were asked only to fire in self-defence. But that didn't work.

Q. What about an air drop?

A. Descent from above would have been suicidal. Slithering down from helicopters would have been sheer folly. The men would have been sitting ducks. Also, there was no underground means of approach. So we were left with four coordinate points of approach. We used three because the fourth—from behind the Akal Takht—was too obvious. Why not a seige? The terrorists inside had sufficient stocks of food and water, even if the langar area had been cut off. They had taken the precaution of stocking provisions—gur, channa, atta—in every battle position. And water was available from the sarovar.

Q. All said and done, wasn't the timing bad with all the pilgrims in there?

A. This is not entirely true. Around the end of the previous month there was a continuing firefight between the CRPF and the terrorists. On the first of June or thereabouts some pilgrims were killed. The flow of pilgrims before the army went in, therefore, was nowhere near normal. It had petered down to a trickle. There were no more than 1500 inside and they were concentrated in the serais in the buildings in one corner.

> Our capability of producing weapons systems within the country has increased tremendously. By the turn of the century, I don't expect any major weapons systems for the army being imported.

> I told my commanders that it (Operation Bluestar) was a very difficult mission, a very sad mission, and also that we would do our utmost to be fair, humane, and to use minimum force even at the risk of accepting more casualties than we normally would.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

We used loudspeakers to persuade them to come out. Many came out, others were prevented by the terrorists from coming out, and some of them were killed by terrorist grenades.

Q. After Bluestar was over, wasn't there civilian resentment about the army administering Punjab?

A. At no stage did we ever administer Punjab. We were there to aid civilian authorities. Our role was strictly law and order at that time. And even as far as that was concerned we started handing over districts to civilian law and order authorities in July 1984. By August-September we were in reserve.

Q. With that behind now, what is your most immediate priority?

A. The first thing, even more than modernising the material side, is to improve the quality of the man in the army without which no material modernisation will pay off. But the point is, is the army getting a fair share of the available talent in the country? To attract this talent—at every level—the incentives offered, both tangible and intangible, must be adequate.

Q. You're implying this is not so?

A. Unfortunately, there has been a steady and inexorable erosion in the compensatory package offered for a career in the army. This package should not be something special vis-a-vis other government services, but it should be equitable. This is not the case today.

Q. Why?

A. The single biggest factor that contributes to this is the erroneous principle of relating pay to rank. For functional purposes the hierarchical structure of the army is like the Eiffel Tower—a needle above a broad base. The number of officers or men being accommodated by selection in every successive rank is very small compared to the base at every level.

Q. What does that mean in practical terms?

A. For example, if 40 or 50 majors are selected to become Lt.Colonels it is because of the compulsions of structure and not because the other 60 left out are unfit for promotion. Those who continue to perform as majors are the salt of the earth commanding the bulk of the companies, squadrons and batteries. They're not kept on till age 50 as a philanthropic measure. The same applies at every level of rank. I believe that a payband which ensures that an officer who serves for 28 years before he retires should bear a relationship to what any entrant to any other civil service would expect to be earning at that length of service.

Q. So a major with a certain length of service could be making more than a colonel?

A. It should be a rank pay and running pay and in sum, equitable with any other service. If this is done for every rank at respective retiring ages the present inequity and lack of attraction will disappear.

Q. You're saying the army is less attractive to a jobseeker?

A. We've told this to the pay commission and they are sympathetically aware of the problem. In a recent survey of preferred careers of eight services, the armed forces ranked seventh because of poor cadre progression, low compensation, discipline, unsatisfactory social and family life.

Q. Surely this must have something to do with morale?

A. There are also the intangibles such as the the pecking order of ceremonial importance recommended by the Centre. Here the army is degraded enormously. In some states, a brigadier with 30 years of service is ranked junior to a district collector with seven years of service. It's a question of self-esteem. But happily the prime minister has promised a review.

Q. What can the younger officers expect from you?

A. I want to give them a chance to get a better feel for technology; to give them greater opportunity to use their initiative, get greater job satisfaction and grow professionally; to develop greater elan and dash and be encouraged to speak up. Finally I would like to help them to develop a better quality of life.

Q. What about the problem of supersessions?

A. If the compensatory package is reformed much of the sting will be taken out of the stigma of non-promotion. But we also need some reforms in the method in which complaints are processed in Army Headquarters. The general impression is that the complaint is processed by the same segment against whom the complaint is lodged and therefore the system is seen as prejudiced. I think the system should appear to be fair. Some structural reforms are called for.

Q. Do you see any resistance to the changes you're contemplating?

A. Resistance to change is inevitable in any institution. While some resistance may be due to old dogs not wanting to learn new tricks, resistance comes from the fact that changes in doctrine and tactics have to be carefully thought out—an error can be catastrophic in war. One has to articulate the need for change but one cannot take a sledgehammer approach.

Q. Finally, what would you like to leave behind as your stamp?

A. An increase in the self-confidence and self-esteem in every man in the army. I have 820 days in which to achieve my goals. My staff already has a tear-off calendar beginning with day one. I find the atmosphere in the government, at the ministerial, scientific, bureaucratic levels, and with my sister services so positive, practical and eager that if I do not achieve all that I set out to achieve I'll have no one else to blame but myself.

HARI OM GULATI

I find the atmosphere in the Government and with my sister services so positive, practical and eager that if I do not achieve all that I set out to achieve I'll have no one to blame but myself.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

When the immaculate taste of aristocracy spills beyond classic cars and stately mansions...

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...it finds colour in Aristocrat

Jagatjit Industries Limited

The Spirit of Excellence

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

For your requirement of coloured and flint glass, write to Jagatjit Industries Limited.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tata... Tata Bearings.
The name that is a byword on Indian roads.

Tata Bearings... built tough, with the strength of Tata Steel. Built tough... to take the rough with the smooth.

Tata Bearings... built to take the load and the lead... to set new standards in quality and reliability.

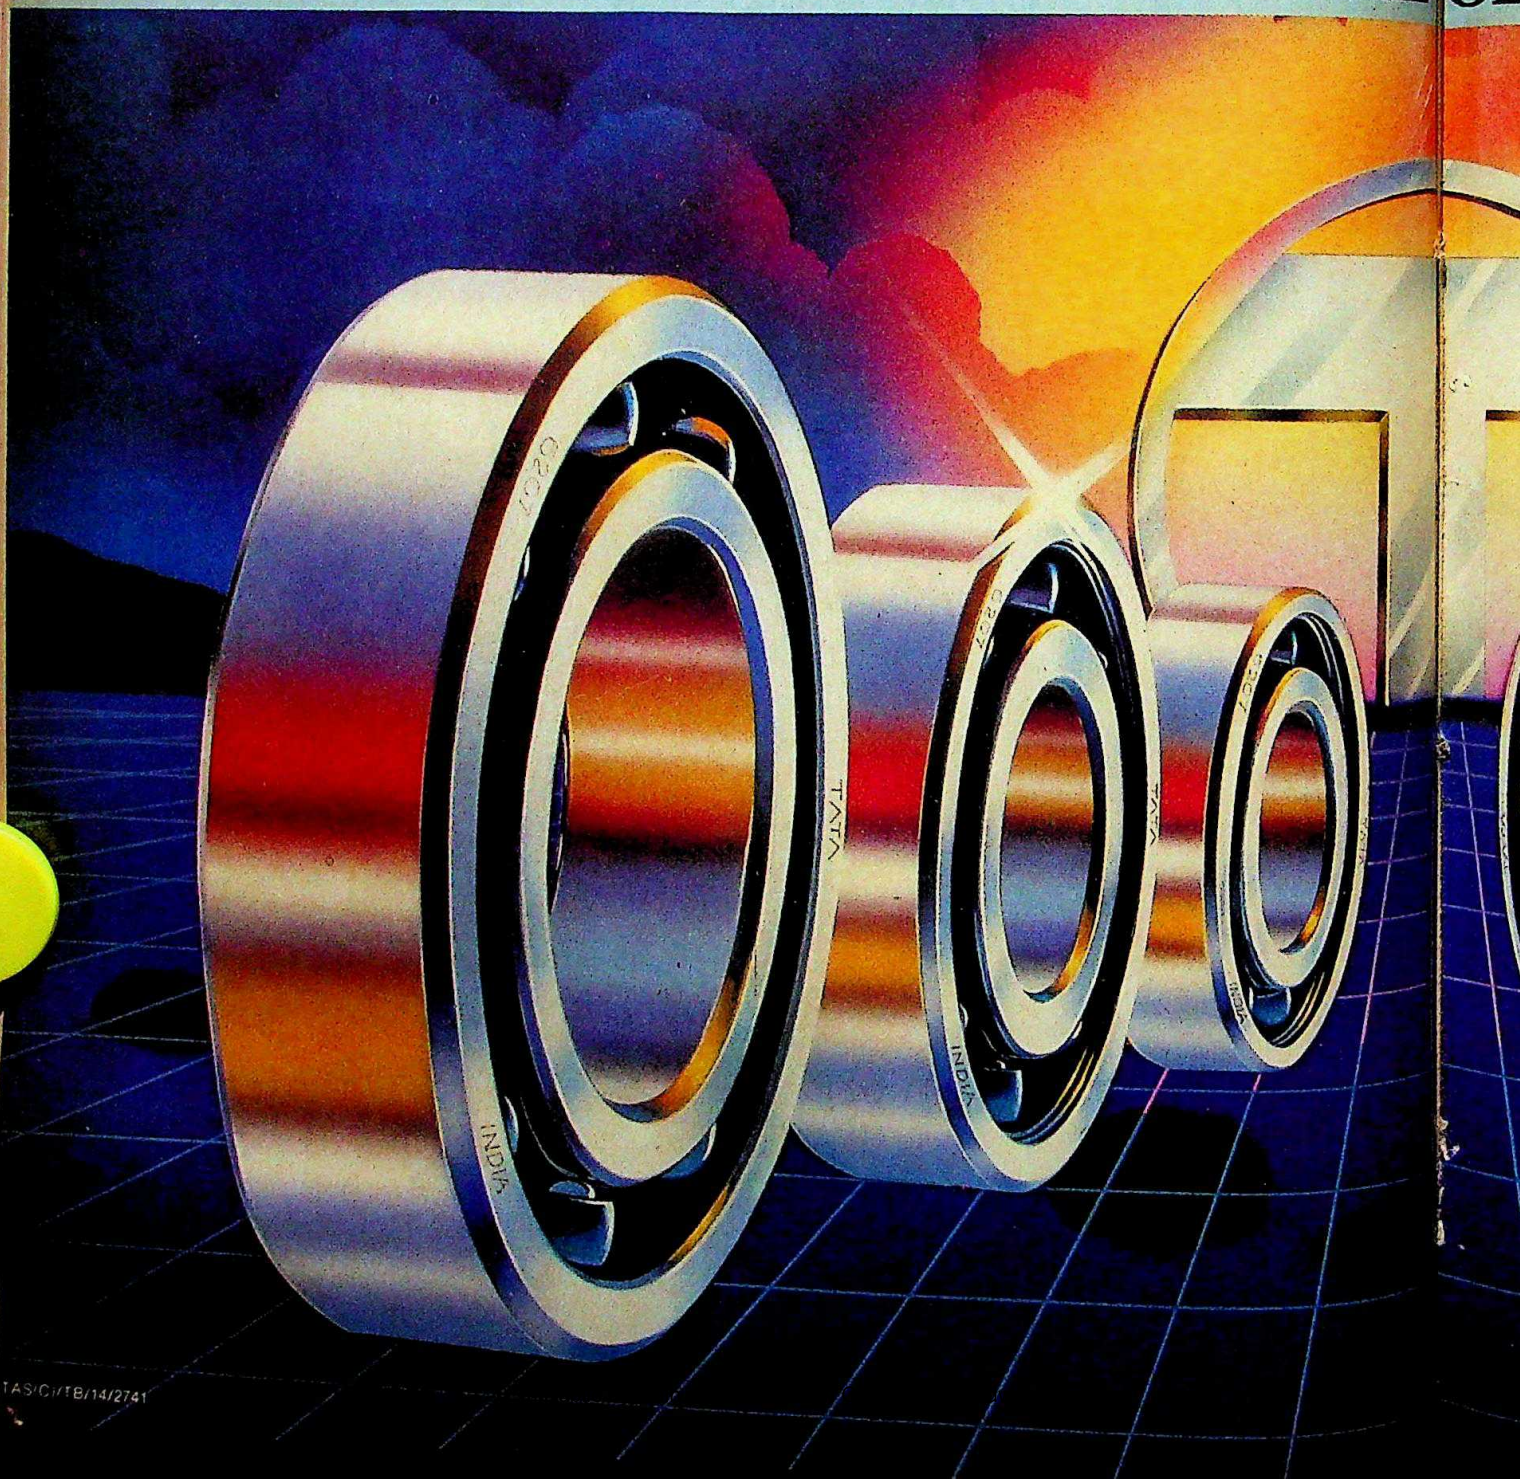
TOMORROW'S LEADER.
BORN TO START A REVOL



TAS/CIT/B/14/2741

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

And, so, when Tata Steel moves ahead—from rings to precision bearings surely, it is the beginning of a great movement that will go on... and on...

Tata Bearings... born to set the pace.

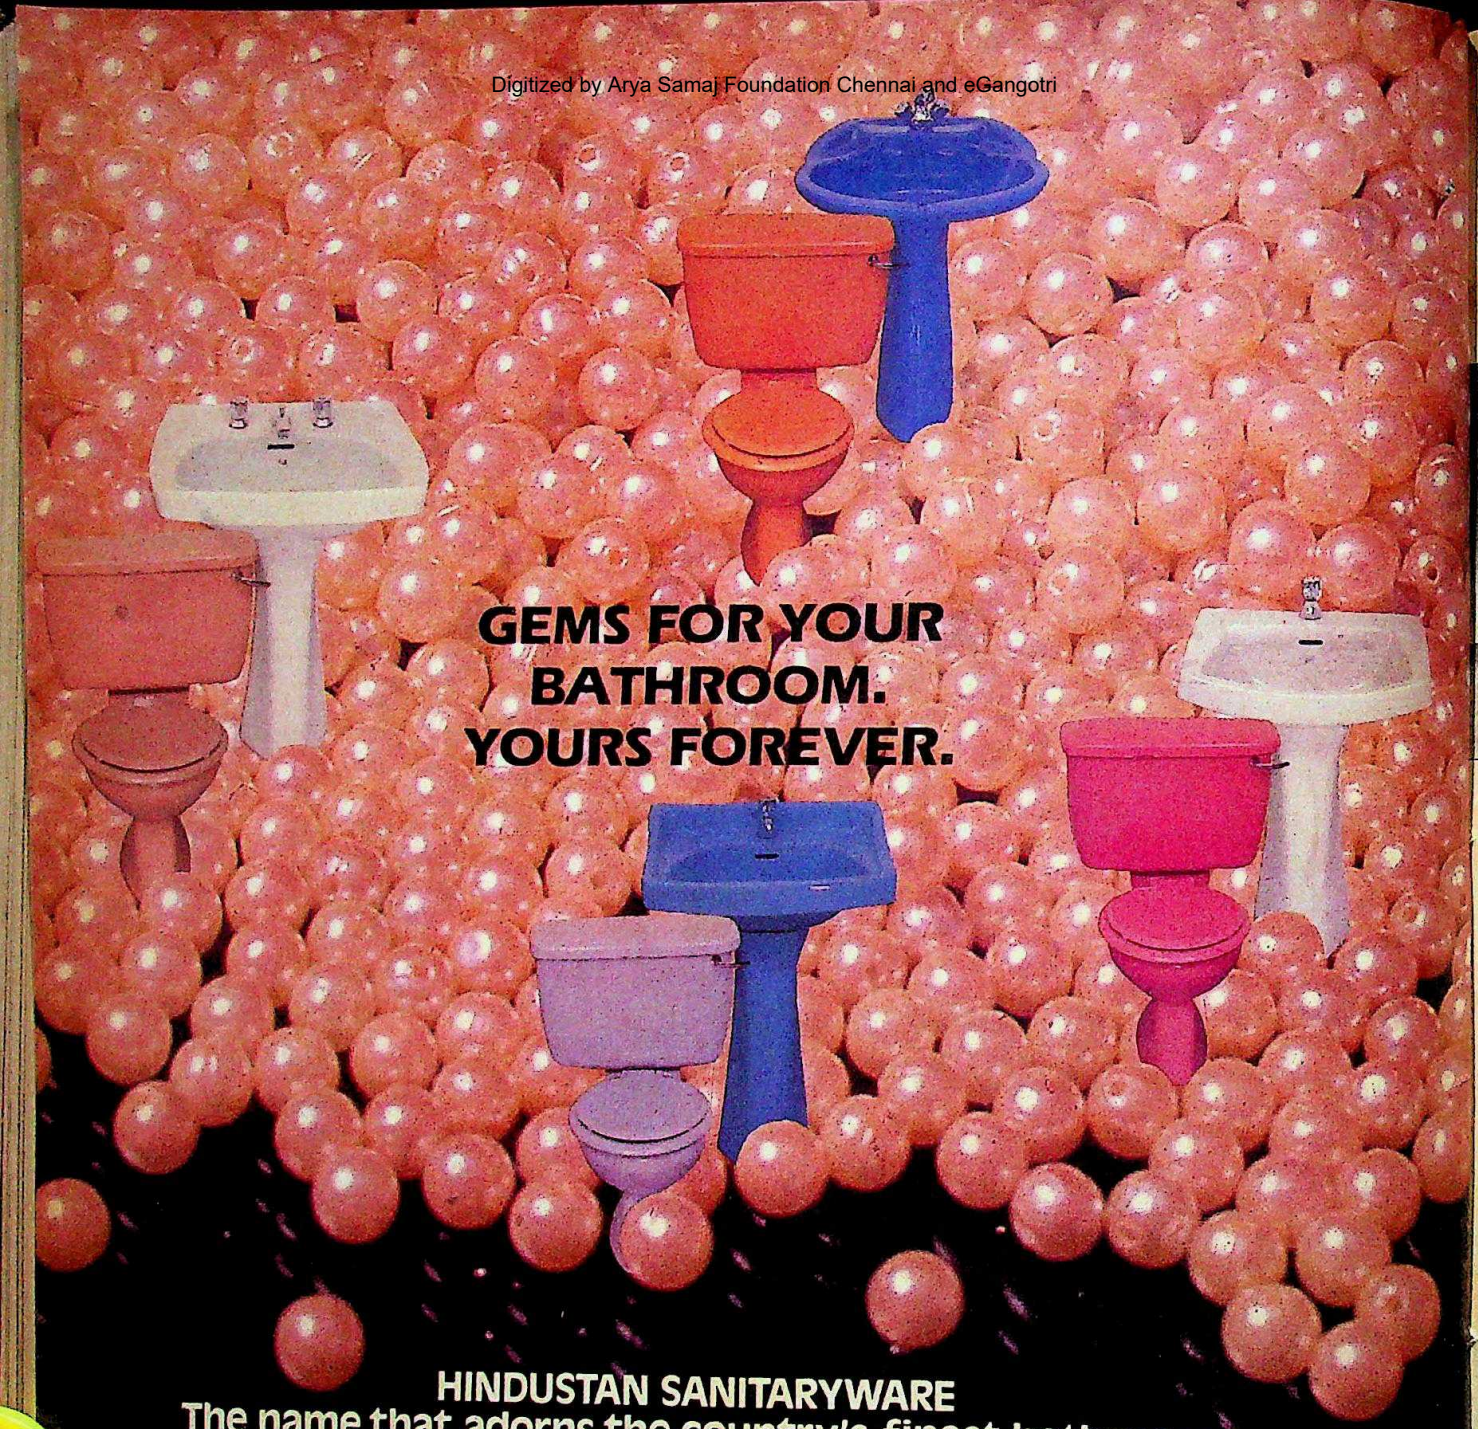
TATA
BEARINGS

Born of steel... born to lead.

DE.
RE OLUTION ON WHEELS.

A Division of
TATA STEEL

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



GEMS FOR YOUR BATHROOM. YOURS FOREVER.

HINDUSTAN SANITARYWARE
The name that adorns the country's finest bathrooms

HSI colours are gently fired in Muffled Kilns so that direct flames and fuel impurities do not impinge on the richness of the colours.

An exclusive range for a complete bathroom

Also in many more colours

HINDUSTAN SANITARYWARE SOMA METAL FITTINGS SOMANY-PILKINGTON'S TILES

2 Red Cross Place, Calcutta 700 001, India

IS : 2556

SAA/HSI/26A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Winter's Tale

MAKAR Sankranti, as always, was a cold, cloud-smothered day in Bihar this year. But for Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey, the chill got a bit too unbearable as he flew to New Delhi on the prime minister's summons to discuss the long-pending expansion of his eight-month-old ministry. Barely had he opened his mouth when the prime minister gave him the cold shoulder and asked him to meet trusted aide M.L. Fotedar, who silently handed him a 64-page charge-sheet listing various charges of corruption, nepotism, inefficiency and financial mismanagement by his ministry. Dubey was asked to reply before he left Delhi. So he quickly extended his stay, flashed an sos to Patna and had state officials burning the midnight oil for nights on end. Finally he returned to Patna, ostensibly with the green signal. But soon he was summoned for a meeting at the Raj Bhawan, after which Governor P. Venkatsubbiah flew to Delhi to brief the prime minister on the situation. If the political weather-vane is to be believed, Dubey still has a lot of rough weather ahead of him.

Dubey: cold snub

Unholy Show

OUR ADVERTISERS know a good thing when they see one. Or, to give them their due, even long before they see one. The latest good thing for them is the Pope's visit—or rather the Pope himself. His Holiness has yet to tread on this native soil but as far as admen go, he is already their catchiest bottomline. Suddenly in Kerala, pretty young things have been replaced by the glowing countenance of the Pope on TV screens in commercial ads. The same face smiles down benignly from larger-than-life billboards, from tiny mementoes and souvenirs and from ads for hotels claiming to be the official hosts to the papal delegation. As an adman in Kerala put it: "All our clients want their products to be identified with the papal visit." But the church frowns over such commercial stunts. Said Archbishop of Veerapalli Joseph Kelenthara: "Unscrupulous businessmen are trying to cash in on the papal visit. We can do little about it, since we don't have the copyright of the Pope's photographs." There must, after all, be a definite line between religion and commerce somewhere.

One of the ads: papal boom

Pen Pushing

ONCE upon a time, there used to be a scribe in Orissa called Janki Ballav Patnaik. But things have changed a lot since. Janki Ballav Patnaik is no more a journalist. He is, of course, the chief minister. And chief ministers, it is known, want very little to do with journalists—especially if they are the wretched type who insist on uncovering embarrassing Kalahandis and Koraputs. So Janki Ballav Patnaik misses no opportunity of making his distaste for this inquisitive breed known. Indeed, he often goes out of his way to do so. Like in the case of a national newspaper's correspondent who was recently told that his application for the allotment of his predecessor's house to him had vanished from official records and that he should kindly see Estate Department officials in this regard, yours etc.... The journalist then rushed to the Estate Department where he was told to please discuss the matter with hon'ble chief minister who was holding his file. Naturally, he gave up in disgust and despite being entitled, as an accredited journalist, to government accommodation, moved into a private house forthwith. This, however, was not the first instance of harassment of a journalist. There have been other equally unlucky scribes in Orissa who have been transferred or shunted back and forth under official pressure for not toeing the Government line.

Patnaik: bad vibes with scribes

Ticklish Issue

IT WAS clearly a case of hair today and gone tomorrow. Six Muslim policemen in Kerala were given a choice between their beards and their jobs. And they chose their beards. So last fortnight, they were suspended—all six of them—and the officers shrugged that there was little they could do about it since the Kerala police manual categorically said that long hair and beards and policemen just didn't go together. The Kerala High Court too, they pointed out, had upheld this in the case of an Alleppey cop, Mohammed Fasi, last year. The policemen shot back that in that case the Sikhs on the force should be asked to not only shave their beards but cut their hair as well. Said Jamaluddin Sharief, one of the suspended policemen: "I realised I cannot be a Muslim without a beard. It would be a sin to remove it now." As for his lost livelihood, he says: "I have faith in God." But the deputy commissioner of police too has a point. "If I allow these six to grow beards," he says, "all the 3,500 men under me will fancy 3,500 ideas and what about discipline?" Now what is the way out of this hirsute tangle.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar
SAA|HSU|26A

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In Search

THERE are no distinctions here. There is only faith. A deep, abiding, ageless, palpable faith. Caste, riches, religions crumble to dust. Thousands journey here from distances unknown, from places unheard of—the forlorn, the weary, the wicked, the wretched, the incurably sick and insane, the rich, the landless. They demand miracles—karishma. And miracles—if the pilgrims are to be believed—rain down in benevolent abundance.

The ziyarats (shrines) of Badaun—one of the holiest of Muslim cities—in western Uttar Pradesh, date back to the mid-13th century. Here lie the graves of two Sayyeds (Muslim saints), Sayyed Hassan, known as Bare Sarkar, and his brother Shah Vilayat Saheb, or Chhote Sarkar. A small distance away, under a canopy of banyan trees, lies their sister, Banno Bi.

It is Jumeraat (Thursday)—a day of Believers gather at the ziyarats to pray and meditate

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

n of Miracles

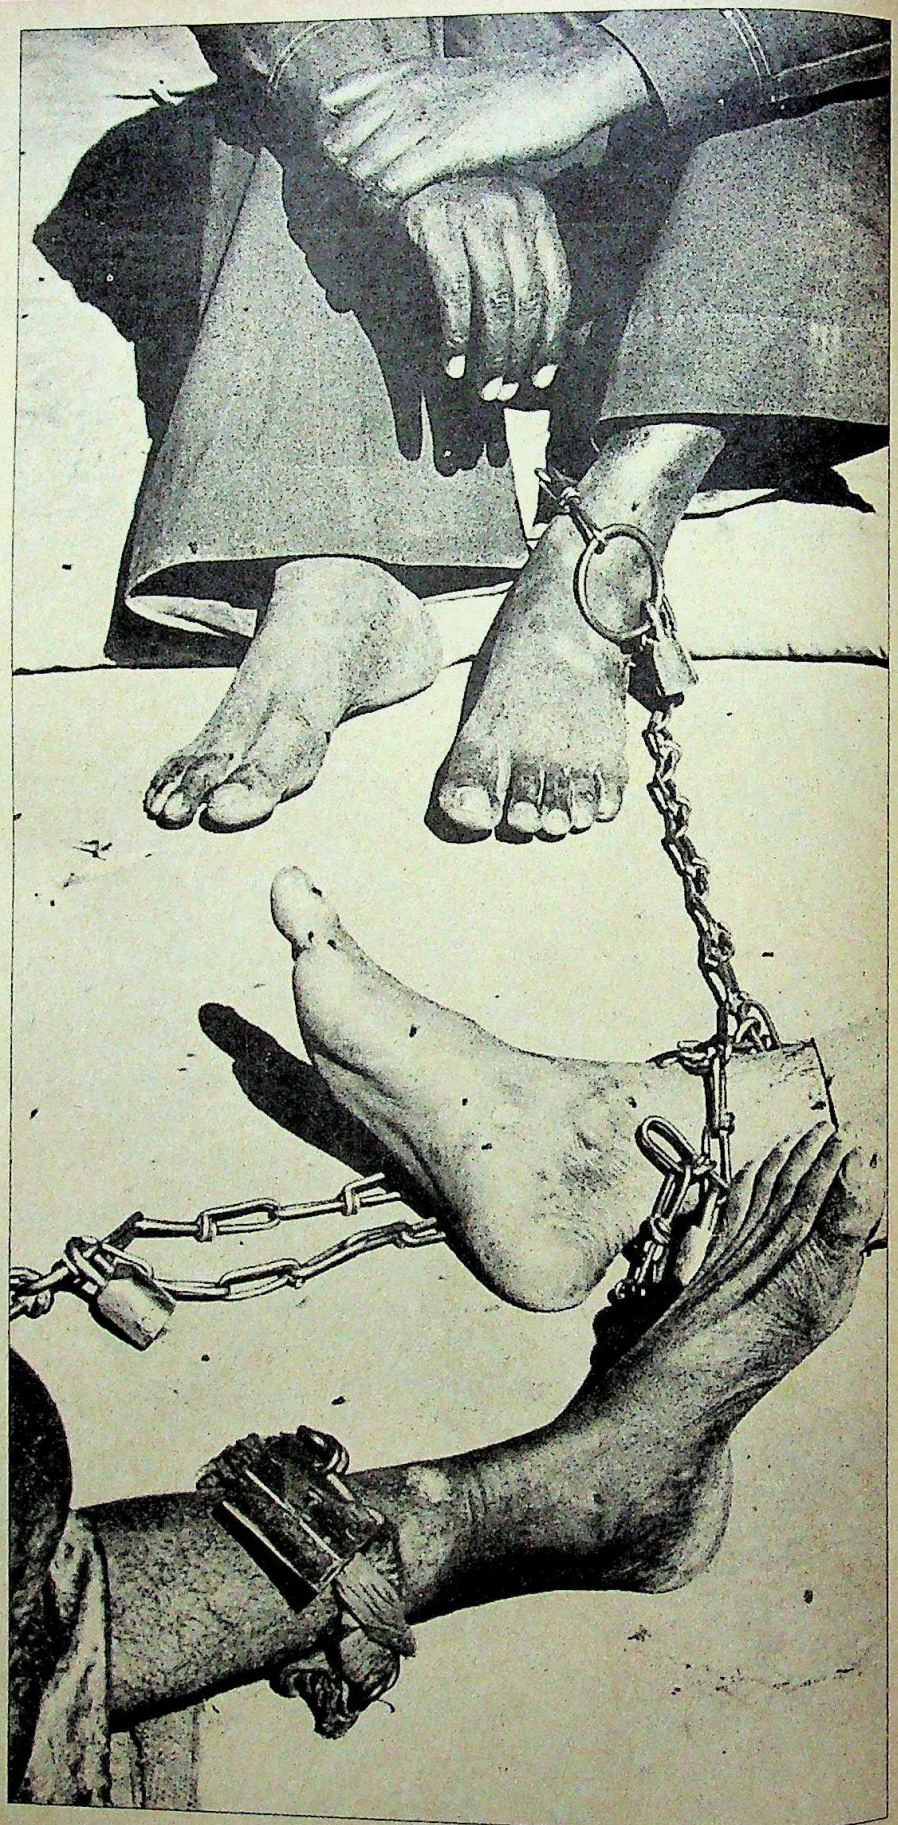
In Public Dom... Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

special prayers for Muslims. Oxcarts, donkeys, rickshaws, limousine taxis, pedestrians on foot and on crutches, plough their way along a narrow, dusty trail that winds its way through ramshackle food-stalls into a grove on the banks of the Sotnadi, where Bare Sarkar is enshrined. A cold, watery sunshine bathes the open tomb. Lazy birdsong gives way, suddenly, to a frenzied, frenetic cacophony of growls, gurgles, wails, pleadings, and incantations. Throngs of pilgrims circumambulate the grave. Some sit in silent meditation. Others thrash about in convulsive contortions, their eyes glazed, their shrieks piercing the still afternoon air. They are under the influence of a self-imposed hypnosis brought about within minutes of some inexplicable mental contact with what they call the spirit of the ziyarats.

Women of all ages develop states of cathartic frenzy in which they throw open their hair, shake, shudder and jerk in paroxysms of delirious, non-stop, violent motion, crying, pleading, beseeching, begging, cursing, fighting, cajoling. They continue tirelessly for hours, their eyes open but seeing nothing except the light that illuminates some impenetrable inner world of pain, suffering, or ecstasy. In this state—assar, as it is called—they troop from grave to grave, from Chote to Bare Sarkar to Banno Bi, and to the graves of the saints' contemporaries whom they call Compounder Sahib and Doctor Sahib and Banke Miyan. Some give thanks. Others beg for miracles. A few simply spit out venomous abuse.

For six hours, in a state of trance, a young woman walks about blindly, begging Chhote Sarkar: "Mujhe maaf kar de. Ab main nahin karoonga, Chhote! (Forgive me. I won't do it again.)" She talks in the male gender. A middle-aged woman shakes her fists at Banno Bi's grave: "Haramzadi Banno toone mujhey maar diya. Ajaa mere saath punga le! (You bitch Banno, you have done me to death. I dare you to come and fight with me.)" Another man screams at Bare Sarkar: "Kutte ki aulad, main tujhe dekh loonga! (Son of a dog, I'll show you.)" Here there are no gods of vengeance. The saints are all-forgiving, ever merciful to their enemies. They answer abuse with compassionate benediction. The pilgrims— Sikhs, Hindus, Christians and Muslims from all over India— continue to circumambulate. They ask for settlement of land disputes, forgiveness for robberies committed, punishment for



The mentally sick brought in chains to the shrines

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

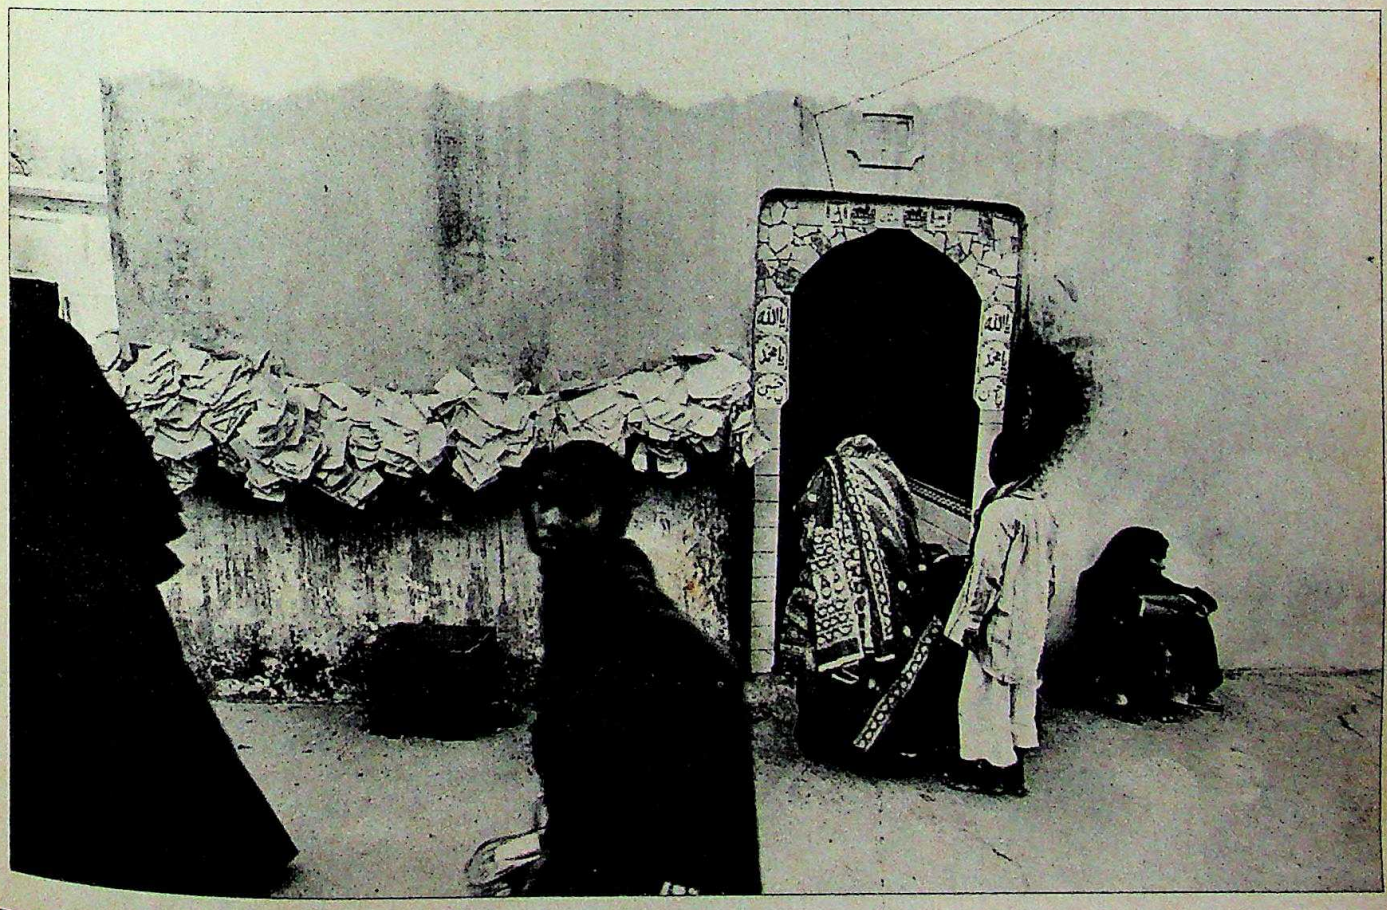
errant lovers, sanity for the insane, health for the sick, vindication for crimes.

They shower the graves with roses and marigolds and garlands and colourful lace-cloth in which they offer prasad. The grave sites are thick with the sickly sweet smell of burning incense. Along the pathways are trees and wooden posts with knotted string to which the believers tie letters addressed to the spirits in which they ask for miracles and dispensations. There is no violence. There are no vicarious thrill-seekers. No one stares at or even mocks the most bizarre demonstration of penitence or pleading. Late in the afternoon, a tall gypsy woman from Bilari growls, spits and hisses at Bare Sarkar. She is left in peace to her own devices.

A middle-aged Hindu woman smiles and chats normally with her little daughter as she walks to Banno Bi's shrine. She kneels outside and stares at the grave for a minute. She begins shivering. Her daughter pulls off her mother's ghoonghat and quickly opens a ribbon and two clips that hold her hair together in a braid. The woman looks heavenward, her eyes glazed, and opens her mouth wide as if to devour everything she sees. Her body becomes rigid. She begins convulsing and growling, and then shaking in fitful jerks from side to side. She keeps this up for two hours, screaming about injustice done to her husband in a land dispute. In the evening she walks home to her village, chatting and smiling again.

Across a small field in a guava orchard sit the insane who have been rejected by their families and government asylums and put in charge of a contractor. They are chained to one another or to trees. Every evening they are made to do the rounds of the ziyarats for their well-being. Shravan Kumar from Aligarh—a member of the home guard—was totally incontinent when he was brought to the ziyarat four months ago. His contractor says he is now almost normal. Sayyed Nazir Ali from Modinagar used to have

Pilgrims hang written messages to the spirits of the Sayyeds



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

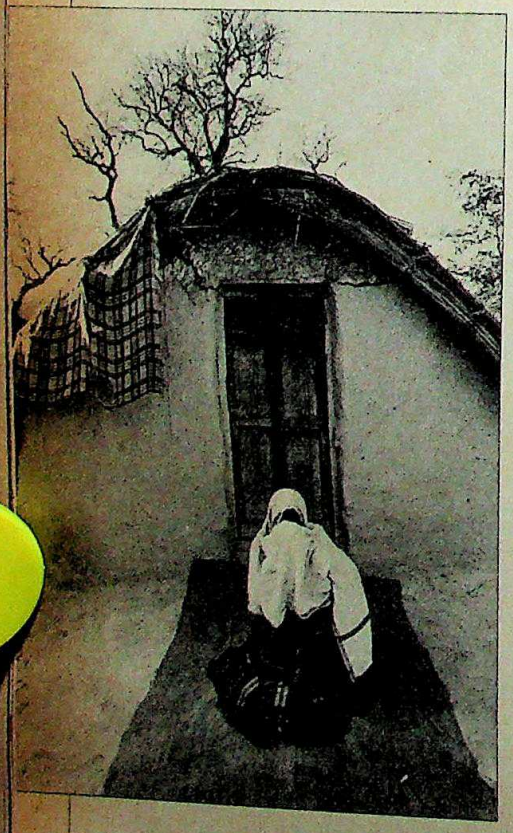
uncontrollable temper tantrums and beat his wife. Today, six months later, after being rejected by medical institutions, he is better, says his wife, who sees him everyday and feeds him while he is chained to a wooden post.

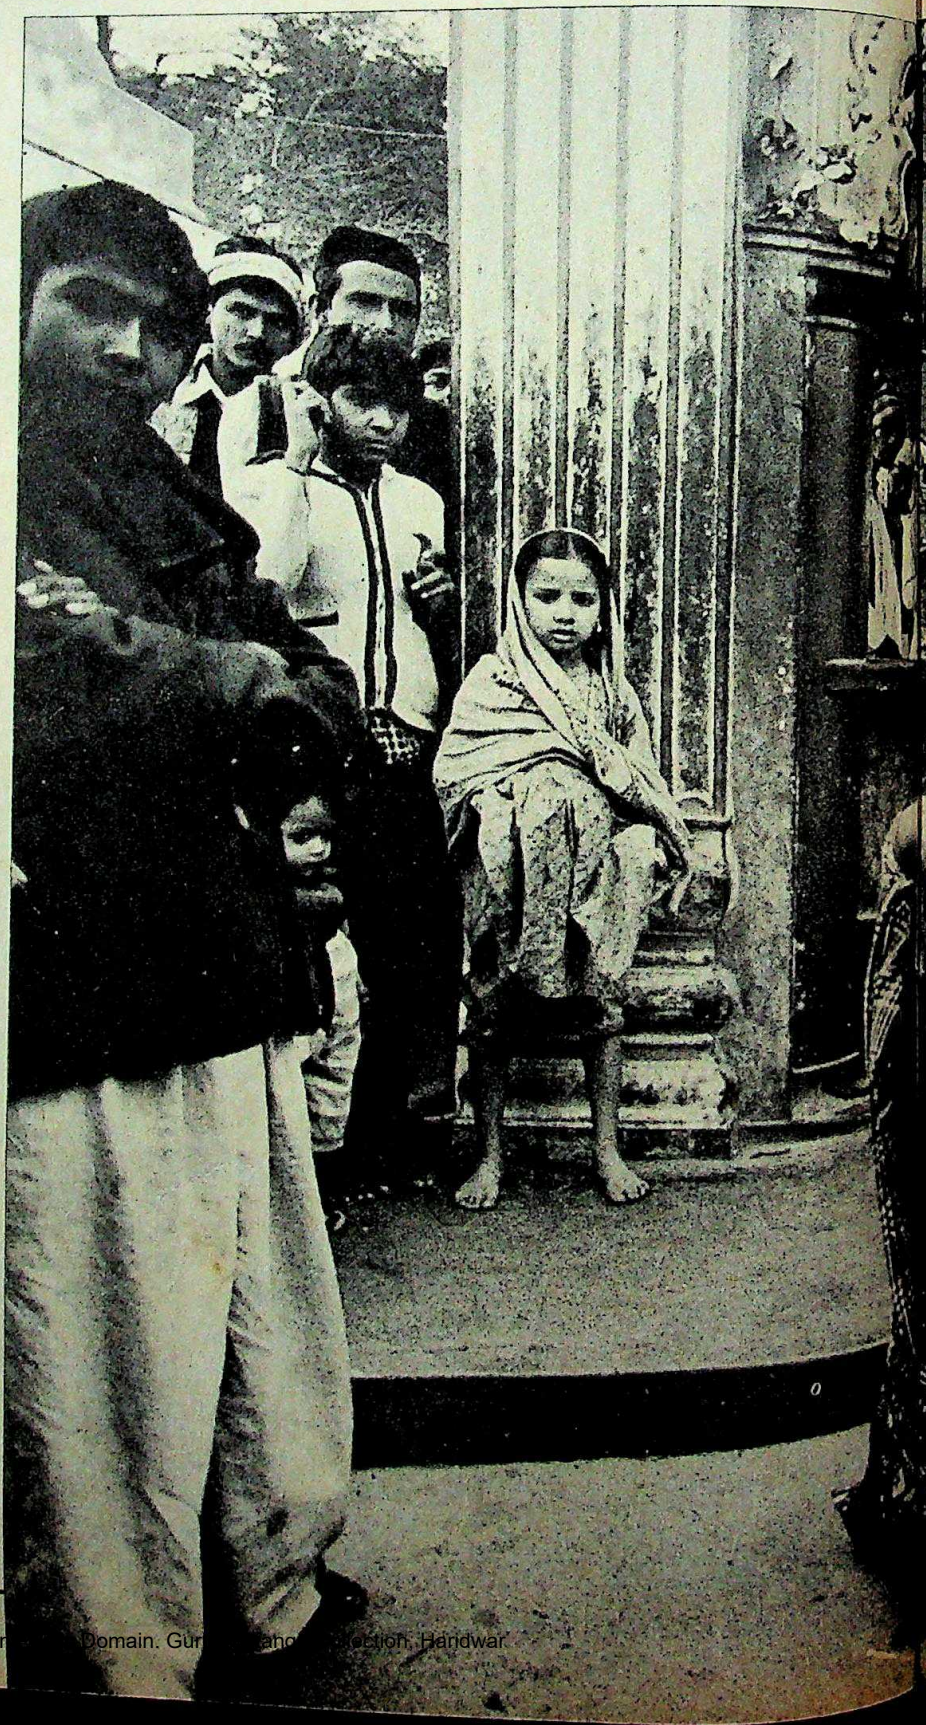
"Miracles?" repeats Jabbar Hussein, whose family has taken care of the ziyarats for nearly 700 years. "They happen every day. The blind see. The lame walk. We hardly even talk about these things." Hussein, for two years, had throat cancer. He was treated at the All-India Institute of Medical Sciences and Ganga Ram Hospital in Delhi. There was no improvement. "I was in the hospital," he says, bursting into tears, "when I had a dream. Bare Sarkar told me I was cured. I left the hospital. I have been back for check-ups. There is no cancer any more." The pilgrims who beseech the saints claim that they usually get a signal in their dreams—within 40 days—that their wishes have been granted.

Gokaran Singh Thakur, pradhan of Sukora village in Dataganj, is on bail, along with his son, for attempted murder. Every Thursday, he treks to the ziyarat asking for relief. He says he is confident because of certain developments and that he will soon be a free man. Champa is from Faridabad. She brought her 11-year-old daughter to Bare Sarkar after all efforts to revive her with glucose drips, following severe vomiting and diarrhoea, had failed. Within a day, the child opened her eyes and recovered.

Seth Devendra P. Garg, a pottery industrialist of Khurja, travels to the ziyarats every month because, he says, Bare Sarkar miraculously saved his business from what had seemed inevitable ruin. Ziauddin from Aurangabad was childless after being married 15 years. Medical measures failed. He came to the ziyarat, he says, and within a year, he became a father. He celebrates his good fortune by giving free food to the pilgrims.

Suplicants wait and pray daily for several months at a stretch awaiting a miracle





CC-0. In... Domain. Gur... ...ection, Haridwar.

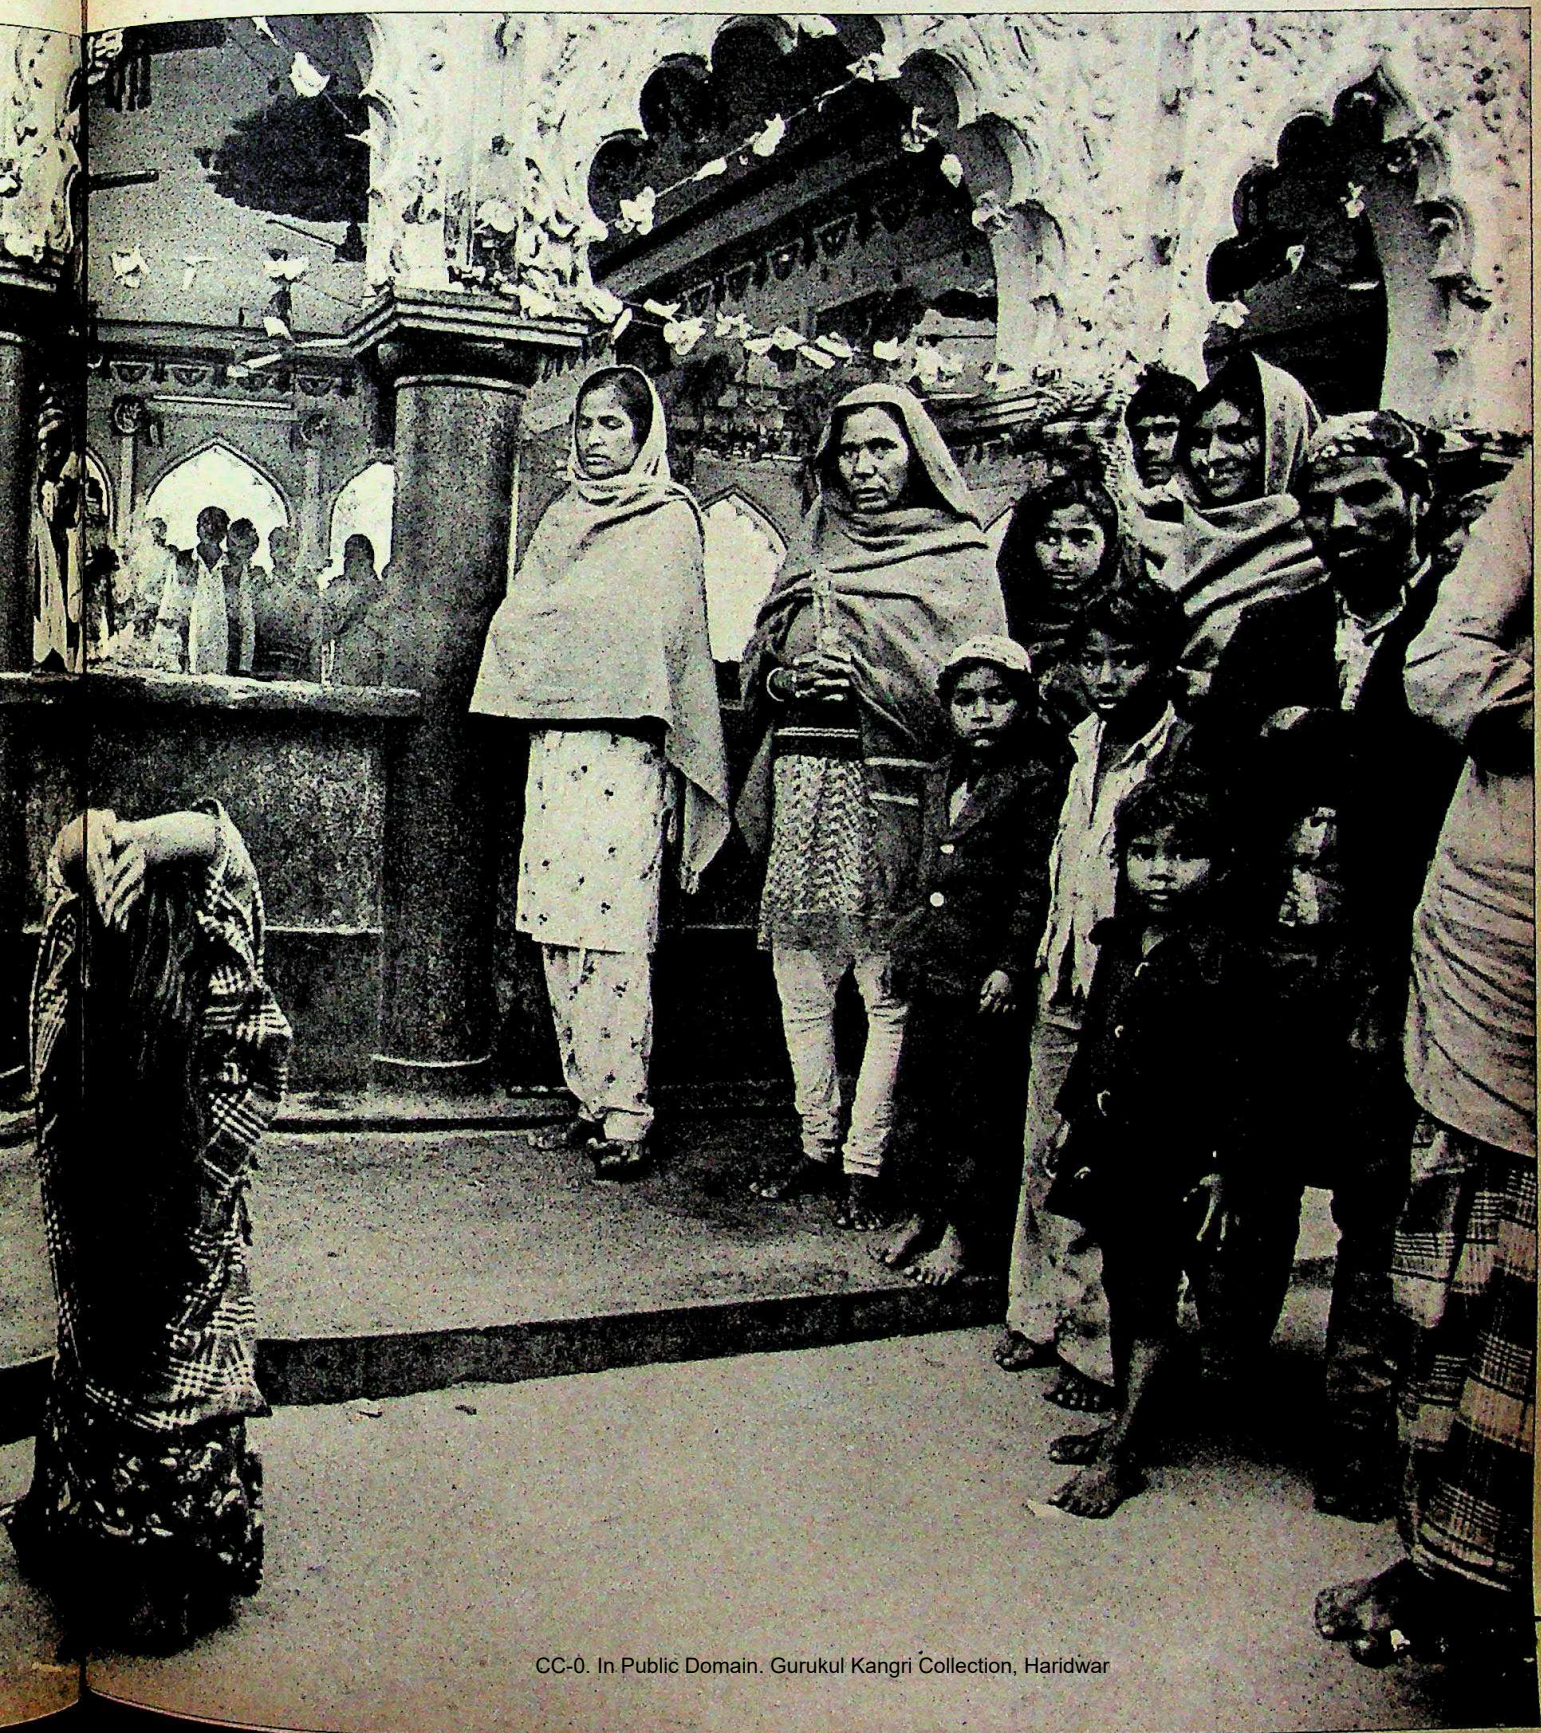
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

At any given time some 2,000 pilgrims camp, or live in rented huts in colonies near Bare Sarkar. There are no Hindu or Muslim or Sikh or low-caste or high-caste areas. Here they all live together, eat together, pray and curse together. Luvjeet Singh, a cloth trader from Bijnor, lives with his family in a tiny hut opposite a Harijan family. He has been there three months praying for the deteriorating mental health of his father who, he says, is improving.

As night falls, hurricane lanterns light up the shrines. Qawwals gather and belt out song and rhythm that drown the wailing and chanting of the pilgrims. On Jumeraat, the qawwals are singing: "Sada mere dushman ko rakhna salaamat; nahin to mere marne ki dua kaun karega....(Keep my enemy in good stead forever, or who will do the good deed of wishing me dead?)"

The miracle, ultimately, is that there are no distinctions here.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR



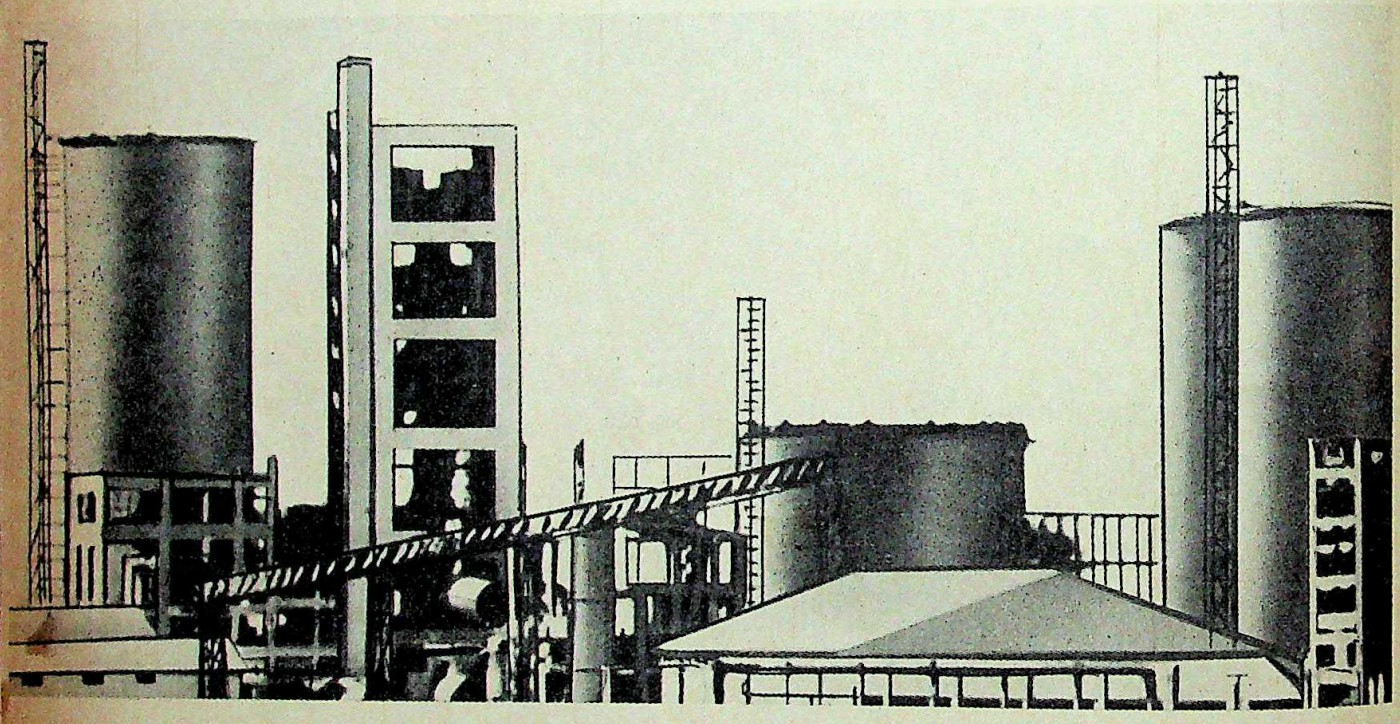
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MODI CEMENT

A CEMENT PLANT WITH A DIFFERENCE!

What makes the 1.2 million tonne per annum MODI CEMENT plant so unique?



SPECIAL FEATURES BEING INTRODUCED FOR THE FIRST TIME IN INDIA

- CIRCULAR COAL BLENDING SYSTEM
  – to ensure lower coal consumption and provide consistent high strength cement.
- CLINKER SILO
  – instead of conventional clinker shed to avoid weathering of clinker, thus yielding premium quality product.
- DOUBLE STACKER RECLAIMER
  – to ensure consistent quality of limestone feed.
- POLTAKT COMPUTERISED CONTROL SYSTEM
  – to achieve full production right from day one.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TECHNICAL COLLABORATION WITH

BLUE CIRCLE INDUSTRIES PLC, U.K.

– the world's largest Cement manufacturer.

The Modi Group – one of the fastest growing groups in the country – now make a prestigious entry into cement. Modi Cement's massive 1.2 million tonne per annum cement plant is rapidly nearing completion at Modigram, Dist. Raipur, M.P.

Acknowledged for their ability to tie up the best foreign collaboration for their projects, the Modi Group have collaborated with BLUE CIRCLE INDUSTRIES PLC, U.K. for setting up this plant using the latest dry process precalcination technology.

Blue Circle is the largest cement manufacturing group in the world with 19 operational plants in U.K. and financial/ managerial interests in 45 plants all over the world. Their cement production in a year in U.K. alone almost matches the total cement produced in India annually.

Blue Circle is not only providing basic technology and process knowhow but are assisting in the supervision, erection and commissioning of the plant. Their continued technical assistance during the first five years will ensure consistent premium quality cement, maximum capacity utilisation and low cost of production. It will also enable Modi Cement to keep abreast of and incorporate in the plant the latest technological developments on an ongoing basis.

The main plant and machinery has been supplied by POLYSIUS LTD., U.K. — a subsidiary of the world renowned KRUPP POLYSIUS of WEST GERMANY and BUCKAU WOLF — their Indian associate. Other well known equipment suppliers include AMERICAN AIR FILTERS, U.K.; ORENSTEIN & KOPPEL, WEST GERMANY and BRUSH ELECTRICAL MACHINES,U.K.

The plant incorporates several innovative features like a clinker silo, a double stacker reclaimer, a circular coal blending system and the ultimate in control system – a completely automatic centralised POLTAKT computerised instrumentation control system for the first time in the country. Indeed, when it comes to sophisticated technology, Modi Cement has not cut any corners.

Modi Cement is off to a flying start! The collaboration with Blue Circle – the first foreign collaboration for a cement plant in India – will ensure low production cost, maximum capacity utilisation and consistent premium product quality. All leading to higher profitability.

At Modi Cement, we are all set to usher in a new era in the Indian cement industry. A future that we look forward to sharing with you.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Low Capital Cost
- Ideal Location — proximity to cement deficit zones
- Low production cost
- Better price realisation due to premium quality cement
- Maximum capacity utilisation from day one
- Trial runs by April, 1986. Commercial production soon thereafter.
- High profitability

MODI CEMENT LIMITED

Regd Office: Modigram, Baloda Bazar 493 332, Dist. Raipur (M.P.)
Admin. Office: 6/7 DDA Shopping Centre, New Friends Colony, New Delhi-110 065.

A BLUE CHIP in the making

PRESSMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Bhandari delegation in Islamabad: putting on the pressure

INDO-PAK RELATIONS

The New Offensive

RELATIONS between India and Pakistan have always resembled a slow fox-trot performed by a drunken couple—one lurch forward followed by a sideways stagger and a stumble backwards. But the recent flurry of diplomatic activity on the Indo-Pakistan front finally promises to enable the duo to steer a straighter course. Three high-level Indian delegations have crossed the border—both literally and figuratively—in quick succession over the past fortnight, loaded down with various agreement drafts and proposals to which their Pakistan counterparts have responded to with unusual alacrity.

The motivating factor for the current resurgence of mutual efforts to try and vault over long-standing hurdles is, predictably enough, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and the series of meetings he has had with Pakistan President Zia-ul-Haq, particularly the latest one in mid-December. Just prior to that meeting—the sixth between the two—Rajiv had summoned a meeting of key officials of the Pakistan desk in the Ministry of External Affairs (MEA) and told them that he had decided to give Zia the benefit of the doubt. "Let's take him at his word and put the ball in their court," he said.

Officials handling Pakistan affairs consider the strategy significant. "There has always been a chasm between promise and performance as far as Zia has been concerned," says one, "and the strategy enabled us to seize the diplomatic initiative." Zia was pressured into agreeing to speed up the process of "normalisation" which, in the last fortnight, has moved at a much faster pace. In a tightly-scheduled action programme, Finance Minister V.P.Singh's delegation spearheaded the invasion, followed by the one led by Defence Secretary S.K. Bhatnagar with peripatetic Foreign Secretary Romesh Bhandari and his team bringing up the rear. And next month, Foreign Minister B.R.Bhagat will keep the pressure on with an official visit to Islamabad. All three delegations returned with what the MEA phrasebook terms "cautious optimism" but that is more a reflection of the current political flux in Pakistan rather than any lack of effort.

What is more significant is the fact that the new atmosphere has surfaced during the build-up to the historically vital visit to Pakistan by Rajiv himself, probably in March. The two issues which have so far clouded the air—Pakistan's alleged support to Sikh extremism in Punjab and the country's nuclear ambitions—were consigned to the back burner in an effort to get moving on various other fronts. Thus, V.P.Singh and his aides were able to extract a pledge by the Pakistan side to expand the list of 42 items permitted for private trade to between 200 and 250 items within the next month. Though convinced that the list of items will favour Pakistan business interests, the Indian delegation, in the words of one member, "let them set the pace".

What encouraged that attitude is the appointment of Mahbub-ul-Haq as Pakistan's finance minister. Haq is a forward-looking personality with a genuine desire to forge an improvement in Indo-Pak relations, including trade relations. He has so far been shackled by a group of his cabinet colleagues which is set against any improvement in relations with India. In fact, during the talks, it was Zia himself who intervened on the side of the pro-liberalisation group in the cabinet, giving Haq the leverage he required.

The issue that the second delegation led by the defence secretary went to discuss was infinitely more sensitive and complex—the recent armed clashes between the two sides in the frozen wastes of the Siachen glacier area bordering Kashmir. Siachen is a prickly issue in Pakistan, mainly because army has lost considerable face because of the heavy losses it has sustained in its periodic assaults on Indian army positions. Bhatnagar and his aides, however, stuck to their guns, namely, that the Indian army is in control of the area and has no intention of budging. Even so, the fact that an issue of this nature is being discussed by the two is additional evidence that a genuine effort to improve relations is well underway.

That was again underscored by Bhandari's talks with his counterpart and old college mate, Niaz Naik, which embraced the entire gamut of Indo-Pakistan relations. The immediate areas of agreement was the acceptance of India's long-standing demand over the large number of Indian defence personnel who have been reported missing in action. Pakistan has now agreed to an extended visit by relatives of the missing personnel and promised them all help. The other agreement concerned the civilian detainees from both sides. There are about 800 Indian civilians in Pakistani prisons. Under the agreement, both sides will free the prisoners on or before March 31 this year.

The crucial question, of course, was Pakistan's non-aggression pact proposal and India's more comprehensive counter proposal for a treaty of peace, friendship and cooperation. Though a draft agreement was finalised on the separate issue of a mutual pledge not to attack each other's nuclear installations, the more vital no war pact still remained elusive. The two major hurdles in the way are the concept of bilateralism as a means of solving disputes between the two countries and the question of allowing foreign bases on each other's territory. Both are issues that Pakistan has stubbornly opposed. "The argument they give is that they don't want to do anything that would bind future governments in Pakistan or compromise their option to ask for military assistance from a foreign power," says an official involved in the talks, "instead, they gave us the old line about Afghanistan and a rather vague formulation designed to prevent both countries from allowing a third power to engage in a hostile act from its territory."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

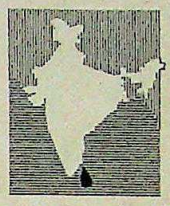
But behind that deliberately vague formulation lies Pakistan's growing paranoia about the threat of India using Israel's help to bomb Pakistan's key nuclear facilities. And, the reluctance to accept the bilateralism formula is because of their other paranoia—Kashmir, an issue that they have been overly keen to internationalise. Under the bilateral formula, it would have to be restricted between the two countries. In fact, what cast an initial shadow over the talks was the statement issued by the newly-formed Muslim League, the projected ruling party in Pakistan, that the Kashmir issue could only be resolved on the basis of the United Nation resolution and not the Simla Agreement, a statement that is contrary to what Zia has been saying to Rajiv. However, senior Pakistani leaders made some amends by assuring Bhandari that the Pakistan Government was not in agreement with the League's statement.

But that also underscored the reasons why India has taken a wait-and-watch policy on the no war pact issue. Pakistan's internal politics is currently in a state of flux and its future form and content is difficult to predict. "In that situation, you can't really be identified with one group or another," says a senior MEA official. But over all, the good news overwhelmed the bad and the most welcome news of all as far as India is immediately concerned was the death sentence handed down to the leaders of the hijackers of the two Indian Airlines aircraft while Bhandari was in Karachi. Though the timing was purely coincidental, it did succeed in adding to the general impression that India and Pakistan finally seem to be coming to terms with each other.

—DILIP BOBB

SRI LANKA

Silver Lining



CELEBRATED lyricist Algernon Charles Swinburne's contention that "even the longest river winds somewhere safe to sea" seems to be applicable to the Sri Lankan situation. Last fortnight it looked as if the chronic Tamil ethnic problem had edged nearer some kind of a settlement, and that Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, as the mediator, was close to pulling off a hat-trick after the Punjab and Assam accords.

There were many pointers to a round-

PIB

Jayewardene and Rajiv: new hopes the-corner settlement. Sri Lankan President J.R. Jayewardene, who had recently been speaking in very aggressive terms about the need to militarily crush the Tamil militant movement, suddenly began to coo and woo. Last fortnight he told The Hindu newspaper of Madras: "Let the militants say we are giving up violence. Let them surrender their arms, close their camps, and begin a democratic life. I promise them a pardon, an unconditional pardon."

A subtle indication of the way things were being worked out was provided by the Sri Lankan National Security Minister Lalith Athulathmudali who observed in an interview: "The Eelam National Liberation Front (ENLF) believes in a military solution and to my mind it is the biggest stumbling block. The People's Liberation Organisation of Tamil Eelam (PLOTE) is more accommodating and the Tamil United Liberation Front (TULF) is prepared to talk."

The minister also said: "In 1986 I see the military position for the (Sri Lanka) Government improving, unless the terrorists get military help from outside. As this process goes on we must somehow activate a process of dialogue. The signs are not entirely unhappy. I think some process of discussion will re-emerge."

That was perhaps an understatement. Some kind of an indirect negotiation is already going on between the Sri Lanka Government and the TULF with the Government of India acting as the mediator and messenger. The Sri Lanka Government had proposed autonomous district and provincial councils for the Tamils. All the Tamil groups had rejected them as not even remotely satisfying the aspirations of the Tamil people. The Government of India in turn asked the Tamil groups to state what they wanted.

Then the TULF submitted a detailed set of counter-proposals to the Government of India, which passed it on to Sri Lanka. These TULF counter-proposals sought state autonomy for all the Tamils of the island based on the federal principle. The first part of the counter-proposals clearly laid down that "Sri Lanka, that is Ilankai, shall be a union of states, and the northern and eastern provinces—which are predominantly Tamil speaking—shall constitute one Tamil linguistic state." Added was a rider: "The territory of a state, once established, shall not be altered without its consent." The TULF also wanted the Tamil state to have full control over law and order and land settlement in its area.

According to reliable sources, the Sri Lanka Government circulated copies of the TULF counter-proposals to its ministers, experts, consultants, and advisers for comments so it is only a question of time before the Government officially reacts to the counter-proposals. The informal but categorical assertions of Jayewardene and Athulathmudali that the Government cannot grant linkage between the northern and eastern provinces under any circumstances (in other words ruling out one united Tamil linguistic state), and the TULF's repeated declarations that the merger of the north and the east as one united region is its minimum demand which it cannot compromise on should not make one lose hope. Said a Sri Lanka Government source: "There are intermediate positions between the TULF demand and the Government's stand, and Jayewardene is prepared to concede some

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WELL OVER

20,000

STUDENTS

have enrolled for

BRILLIANT'S COURSES

this year

(1985-86)

We don't believe in half-measures. We go the whole hog. All out. We believe in the 'total approach'. Also in the personal touch. Ever solicitous of our students' needs we sometimes exceed their expectations. That's the profile of Brilliant for you. Profile of a constant winner. Brilliant's track record is unparalleled. It is strewn with 'First Ranks' in diverse areas of effort. Hundreds have won seats in Medical, Technological & Management Institutions, thanks to Brilliant's famed Postal & Classroom Courses. Our students who do not make it at the entrance exams, still praise our courses acknowledging a general strengthening of their study base.

BRILLIANT TUTORIALS

12, Masilamani Mudali St., T.Nagar, Madras-17.
Ph : 442099, 443308

EMINENCE THROUGH EXCELLENCE

BRILLIANT FOR *IIT-JEE * Y.G. FILE *MBBS ENTRANCE *MBA ENTRANCE
*IAS PRELIM *TOEFL *TARGET-IIT.*SEVEN-DAY SEMINAR FOR IIT-JEE'86

Efficient/BT/367/85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

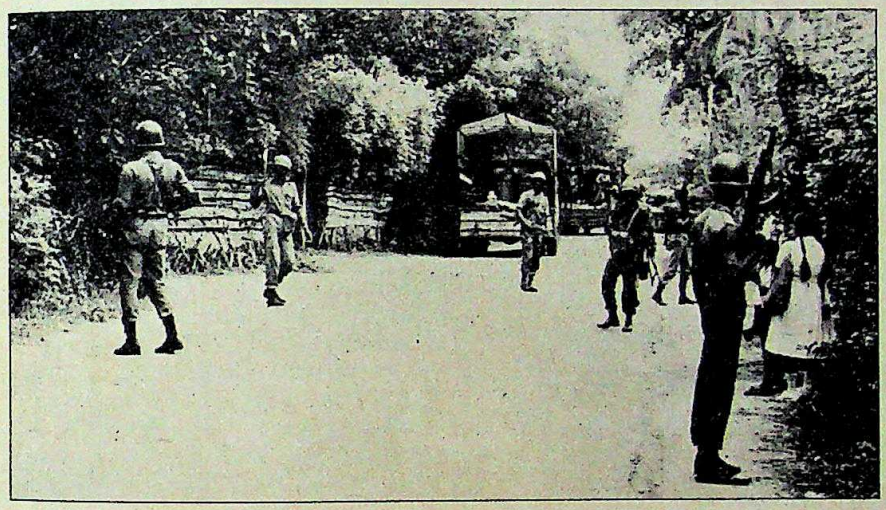
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ground if the Indian Government can persuade the TULF to do the same."

That kind of an in-between meeting point did sound possible. Reports from Colombo indicated that Jayewardene was ultimately veering round to substantially conceding what was in the earlier annexure-C— which had in effect, granted the concept of a Tamil regional council, certainly an improvement over the district and provincial councils that the President has been playing around with from the Thimpu talks. There were also whispers in Colombo that the Sri Lanka Government was thinking of revoking the controversial sixth amendment to the constitution which required all MP's to solemnly declare their opposition to the idea of a separate state to retain their parliamentary membership.

These signs of hope bode well for the new active mediatory strategy that India has adopted on the Lanka problem. The Thimpu talks were a serious attempt by the Rajiv Gandhi Government to bring the Tamil militants for the first time face to face with the Sri Lankan side and get them to have fruitful discussions. The two rounds of discussions failed, because, as the convener of the Organisation for the Protection of the Tamils of Eelam from Genocide, S.C. Chandrahasan, observes: "The militant groups are not like political parties to sit across a table and come to a mutually acceptable solution with the Sri Lanka Government. They are guerrilla groups who have vowed to fight for Eelam and who have trained and committed cadres all the way down. So the leaders will run the risk of being done away with by their own cadres if they, on record, express themselves as being amenable to something short of Eelam."

The Government of India seemed to have realised this and the militants also explained to the Government of India their difficulties as guerrilla groups in negotiating directly with the Lanka Government and signing for something short of a separate state. Said an activist of Eelam Peoples Revolutionary Liberation Front, (EPRLF), a constituent of the ENLF): "But we need India's help. After all we have sought refuge here. And the Indian Government is keen that a negotiated settlement should be found for the ethnic problem. So we assured India that we would have no objection if the TULF negotiated with the Sri Lanka Government."



Sri Lankan troops combing Jaffna

It was a new language of peace and conciliation, therefore, that both the sides were speaking last fortnight. On the debit side, violence again erupted in the northern provinces of Sri Lanka. In and around Jaffna, there were street battles between the militants and the army.

Said Appapillai Amrithalingam, the secretary-general of the TULF: "We have told the Government of India that till the Sri Lankan Army stops its killings and the Sri Lanka Government positively responds to our counter-proposals we cannot negotiate any further."

The TULF obviously would like to do some hard bargaining. But the Government of India has now subtly reversed its priorities. Last year Rajiv Gandhi operated on the assumption that the killings will have to first stop for a negotiated settlement to be worked out. But now the Government of India, insiders say, feels that the killings will taper off once some kind of a speedy settlement can be worked out. The Government reasons that any kind of accord is bound to be opposed by hardline elements on both sides, as it happened in Punjab. A pragmatic settlement between the moderate TULF and the Sri Lanka Government would, therefore, be the best bet under the circumstances. India can then see what to do with the recalcitrant militants, while hoping that many of them will gradually opt to go back and resume normal life. The Sinhalese hardliners and the Buddhist clergy, not to speak of Sirimavo Bandaranaike, would be Jayewardene's headache.

The Government of India is also confident now that it can successfully apply pressure on both the Sri Lanka Government and the Tamil militants to ensure some kind of a settlement and gradually get it implemented. India has been able to make Colombo see reason and undertake to grant Sri Lankan citizenship within one-and-a-half years to 94,000 people—mainly plantation workers of Indian origin who are now stateless in the island. These people hadn't opted for repatriation to India under the Srimavo-Shastri pact of 1964, and had been denied Sri Lankan citizenship. India was also able to convince Colombo that it would not be in a position to take back repatriates who qualify for Indian citizenship but who have not yet been ferried across till the Lanka refugees in Tamil Nadu return.

India is also in a position to force the hands of the militants when it comes to it. More than ever, the militants are now divided amongst themselves and demoralised. Confided an EPRLF leader: "Till now violent incidents, whether in Tamil Nadu or in Sri Lanka, used to take place only between a particular militant group and its dissidents. But now there are incidents between different major groups themselves."

Tamil militants are also accused in a number of criminal cases in Tamil Nadu, and assaults on local people are making them slowly lose sympathy. The Meenambakkam airport bomb blast of 1984 is an important case in point. One of the main accused in the case, Thambapillai Maheswaran—who is the leader of the Tamil Eelam Army—jumped bail and is still at large.

The Indian Government is thus in a position to twist the arms of the militants, specially with the large number of criminal cases pending against many of them hanging like the proverbial Damocles' sword over their heads. In that situation, the chances of a settlement are at its brightest in a long time.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UNITED KINGDOM

Moderate Targets

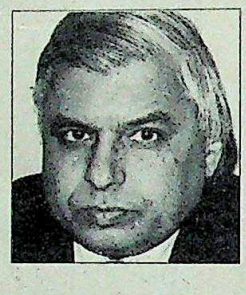
IN London's "little Punjab"—Southall—Tarsen Singh Toor's off-licence liquor shop and cash and carry were popular spots with local Indians. In this west London suburb where bucolic Punjabi and florid salwar-kameez outfits take precedence over cockney and leather skirts, Englishmen who venture this far are usually from neighbouring suburban sprawls or the inveterate "hot curry" aficionados. Toor, working late last fortnight with his assistant Ranjit Singh, had little reason to doubt the swarthy white man who entered his shop asking for a bottle of whisky. As Singh went to get the whisky, the man, with a "gypsy appearance" and light-brown hair produced a single-barrelled shotgun and blasted Toor with a shot in the head. As he slumped forward in a pool of blood, the assassin fled. For the stunned Sikh community in Southall and Indians in the United Kingdom in general, Toor's death was a wrenching body blow.

Widely respected, Toor was a nerveless spokesman for the entire community. Although a marked man, local Indians here seem appalled that his opponents—whom they describe as extremists and pro-Khalistan elements—had struck yet again with such ludicrous ease this time through a hired assassin. For them the latest killing served as a grim reminder that the grisly cycle of killing in the Punjab had now become a fearful and incessant pattern in the UK.

At 54, Tarsen Singh Toor was a spunky activist for a myriad causes. A resident of UK for close to two decades, he was a former secretary of the influential Indian Workers Association and a general secretary of the 10,000-strong Indian Overseas Congress for almost 18 years. A resolute supporter of Indira Gandhi, Toor was a visible presence during Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's visit to London last October.

His close friends say that Toor often mentioned the existence of a hit list in which he figured prominently. With his growing reputation as an unbending and unbowed moderate, Toor was sought after by the local media for his views as Punjab's political fortunes ebbed and flowed. Six days before his killing, Toor had appeared on a Thames television news bulletin to condemn an assassination attempt on a colleague and fellow moderate, Sangtar Singh Sandhu. Appealing for peace he accused the extremists of wanting to "create chaos" in India. Toor was offered police protection but had declined it.

What has specifically distressed large sections of the Indian community in the UK is the startling inability of the police, Scotland Yard's crime branch and anti-terrorists squads to either apprehend the terrorists operating in the UK or protect the community's moderate leaders.



Toor's assassination served as a grim reminder that the grisly cycle of killing in the Punjab had now become a fearful and incessant pattern in the UK.

Questioned about the latest shooting, detective superintendent Guy Mills in charge of the investigation told reporters, "it might have been drugs, smuggling or robbery which went wrong. We are keeping an open mind." As the police have maintained this remarkably "open" attitude, other killings and assassination attempts have spiralled.

In November last year, Sohan Singh Lidder, head of the Luton branch of the Overseas Congress was shot dead in Luton. Sandhu, a 49-year-old moderate leader survived an ambush last fortnight in front of his home in Cranford, Middlesex. His assailant fired a shotgun from the bushes and escaped. Singh lost an eye and is now convalescing in hospital where he has been given round-the-clock protection.

The unremitting violence against moderate Sikh leaders has deeply worried Indian officials here. The High Commissioner P.C.Alexander, after calling on Toor's family in Southall, also met Home Secretary Douglas Hurd to express the Indian Government's grave concern. The continuing mayhem would hardly have done brittle Indo-British relations any good either. During Rajiv Gandhi's visit to Britain last year, the activities of Sikh extremists topped the agenda. Thatcher, then anxious to bring the lurching friendship to a more even keel, even virtuously offered to extend to India the Suppression of Terrorism Act of 1978. Since then legal experts of both countries have met for discussions but little has emerged so far.

Instead there were further setbacks. One was when British citizenship was granted to Gurmej Singh Gill, the self-styled prime minister of Khalistan. Since then, he and fellow separatists, have freely publicised their dangerous doctrine. Militants—under the garb of the International Sikh Youth Federation(ISYF)—like their counterparts in Canada and the United States have gradually taken control of gurudwaras. At last count 24 out of the UK's 130 gurudwaras are now controlled by the ISYF. Moderate Sikhs,often hectored and menaced, have accused the militants of collecting temple funds—sometimes as much as Rs 200,000 a week to arm and finance extremists in the Punjab.

Sukhdev Singh, a lawyer of another west London suburb, equally blames the Indian Government for the current ominous state of affairs by not applying enough pressure on British officials.

Some British officials have blandly offered assurances that it would be easier to extradite known extremists from this country once the upcoming white paper on terrorism is approved by the Government. It appears that radical changes in this country's extradition laws which go to the heart of the British system of justice are being envisaged in the white paper. Home Secretary Douglas Hurd, has apparently concluded that a major relaxation is needed in the legal requirements foreign countries have to fulfil to secure the return of the offenders. This does sound propitious. But the one catch in this buoyant, inspiring scenario is that the "offenders" have to be caught first. Until then—moderate Sikhs in the UK seem doomed to continue living in dread.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN in London

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Gangotri

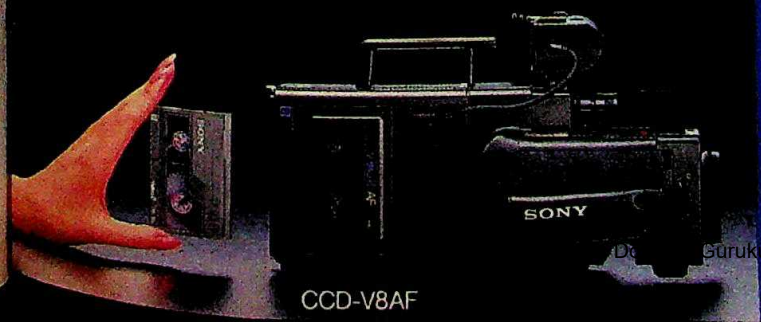
REACH FOR THE TOP.

Top quality movies come easily with Sony's new Video 8. You don't even have to focus — a sophisticated Auto Focus system does it for you. While a highly advanced CCD Image Sensor gives you better picture resolution and improved sensitivity in low light.

Video 8 is so light and compact you can use it to make movies virtually anywhere. Up to 3 hours worth on a single cassette. And immediately review what you've shot through the unit's viewfinder. Or simply hook it up to any TV for instant playback.

And best of all, Video 8's 8mm cassette delivers a picture as impressive as that of a larger cassette.

So if it's top quality movies you're after, better start with the top video camera recorder — Sony's Video 8.



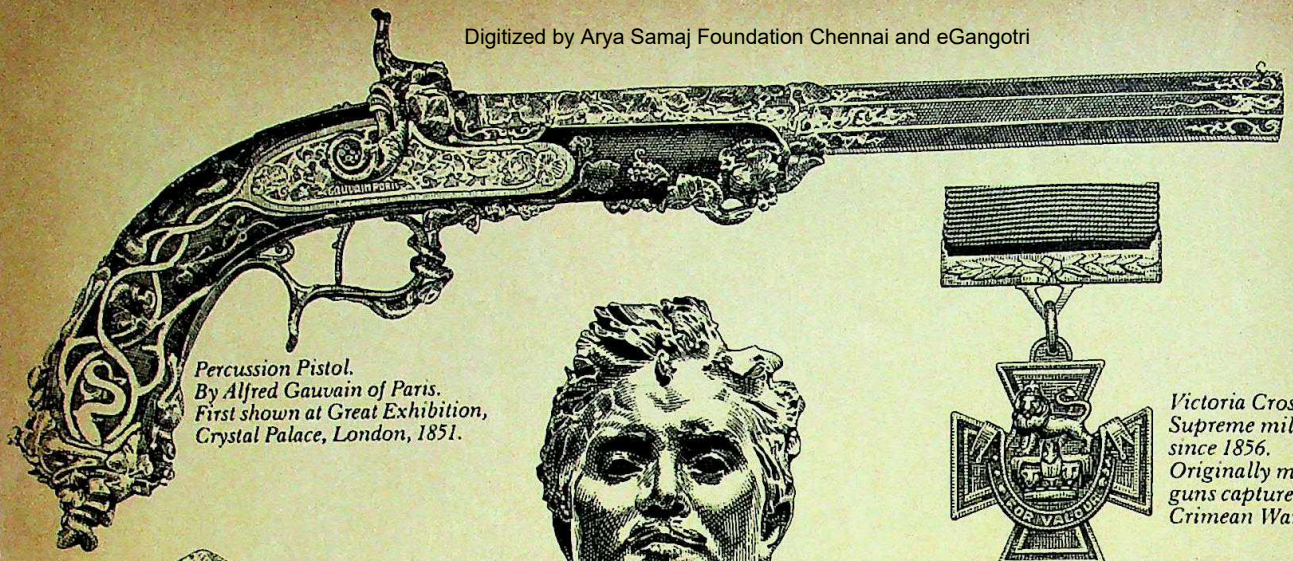
CCD-V8AF

CCD-V8AF

Video 8

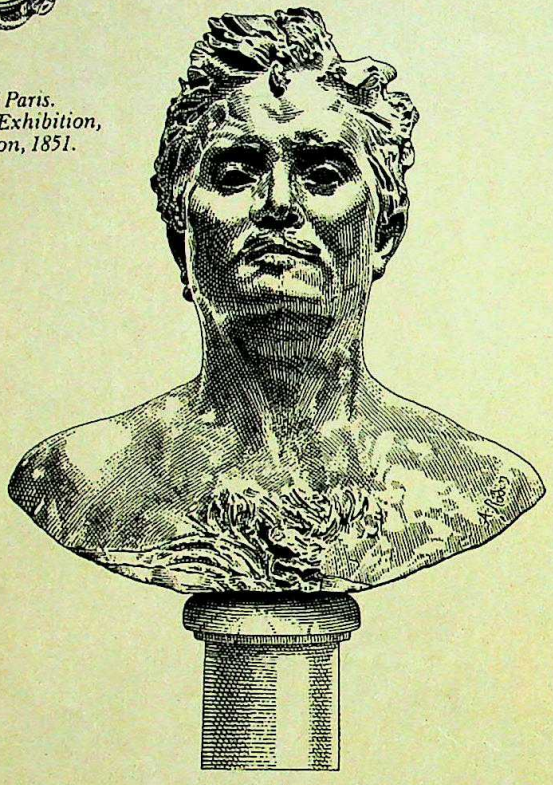
Digitized by Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



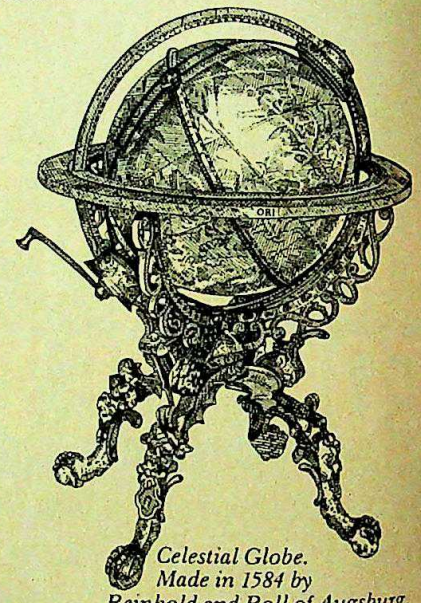
Percussion Pistol.
By Alfred Gauvain of Paris.
First shown at Great Exhibition, Crystal Palace, London, 1851.

Victoria Cross.
Supreme military honour since 1856.
Originally made from guns captured in Crimean War.



Head of Balzac.
Study in bronze by Auguste Rodin, 1840-1917.

Waterford Decanter.
Classic full lead crystal brought to life by the breath of a master glassmaker.



Celestial Globe.
Made in 1584 by Reinhold and Roll of Augsburg. Almost certainly sold in 1854 to Emperor Rudolph II, Prague.

Another certain something that's extravagantly male.

Danish Freehand.
Completely hand sculpted and finished to bring out the exquisite grain.

Aramusk. A bathing experience that pleasures the senses.
Capturing the timeless aroma of musk, said to be rarer and costlier than gold.
From Shaw Wallace.

Now available at select stores in Delhi only

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ed by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

everest/85/NML/457

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Kashmir Velour

The wall-to-wall difference in pure new wool

Rich in colour and gentle to the touch, every centimetre of a Kashmir Velour wall-to-wall carpet is a superb blend of pure, New Zealand and Indian wool.

Which means, you are assured of a carpet that survives fire, heavy furniture, dirt and years of use with ease.

Little wonder, Kashmir Velour bears the Woolmark. The symbol of quality recognised by over 400 million people, the world over.

Woolmark (Registered) PURE NEW WOOL PILE

modifloor
modi carpets ltd.

India's No.1 Carpet Manufacturing Company

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

OBM/6245

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAMKRISHNA MISSION

Odd Claims

I AM proud to be a Hindu", Swami Vivekananda had declared at the historic Chicago Parliament of Religions in 1893. But officials of the Ramkrishna Mission—an institution set up by him to spread the teachings of his spiritual guru Sri Ramkrishna Parahamansa—obviously feel differently. In a controversial legal petition, they now claim that they are not Hindus but followers of a minority religion called Ramkrishnaism. The petition contends that they should be granted minority religion status and attendant constitutional benefits. The Calcutta High Court has already upheld the mission's claims but whether the Ramkrishnaites will ultimately get favoured status depends on the Supreme Court where the issue will come up for hearing this fortnight.

Swami Vivekananda (left) and college: turning point

KALYAN CHAKARAVORTY

Not surprisingly, the mission's astonishing claim has caused considerable dismay among many of its followers since they have no desire to be deprived of their Hindu faith. The situation would have, perhaps, never arisen were it not for a clash between the mission authorities and the teachers of a college under its control— the Vivekananda Centenary College (VCC). The teachers have been embroiled in a dispute with the mission authorities over the latter's refusal to recognise their claim to come under the purview of the recently enacted West Bengal College Teachers (security of service) Act. The mission has instead accorded them the same status as that of any other whole-time worker of the Ramkrishna Mission Boys Home—which in effect means they can be sacked or transferred at will. The teachers took the issue to court in 1980 backed by the state Government, Calcutta University and the West Bengal College and University Teachers Association—an organisation with pronounced pro-CPI(M) leanings. The petition contended that the college could not be administered by the mission since it was a government-sponsored one.

In fact, the college—when it was set up in 1963 to accommodate refugees from erstwhile East Pakistan—was entirely funded by the state Government, the Union Rehabilitation Ministry and the University Grants Commission. But in 1969, a state government notification gave the college a "special constitution" under which the nine-member governing body would comprise three mission nominees, the college principal, three government nominees and two from the college teachers. This gave the mission complete control over the college, more so since the state Government never interfered in its working. The mission's control has continued undisturbed all these years even though the government nominees have long since retired from service.

> The mission's astonishing claim that they are not Hindus has caused considerable dismay among many of its followers.

This the teachers claim is contrary to the 1969 notification which specified: "The term of the governing body will be normally for a period of three years and the committee may be reconstituted or extended with the approval of the Education Department." But an Education Department official admitted that the mission could not be faulted since the Left Front Government had not taken any steps to reconstitute the body even three years after coming to power.

There is thus substance to the mission's charge that the teachers have been acting against the interests of the college. Moreover, instances of inordinate delays in sanctioning funds to some of its institutions coupled with the communist support to the agitation, has made the mission suspicious of the intentions of the Left Front Government.

Faced with what it viewed as a combined onslaught, the mission countered by declaring that "the college is a specially sponsored college and not an ordinary sponsored one and enjoys a special constitution under a special agreement between the Government and the mission." It argued that it did not have to adhere to normal rules since it was a minority religious organisation and hence enjoys the "special rights and privileges guaranteed under Articles 26 and 30 of the Constitution." Dismissing the idea that Ramkrishnaism is at best a sect of Hinduism, the mission claimed it was a distinct religion practised by only about 1.06 lakh people in the country and therefore, a religion of a minority group.

Predictably, the teachers hotly contested the claim charging that the religious issue has been dragged in simply in order to suppress their agitation. But the mission was serious enough. Its affidavit to the high court submitted: "the religion of Sri Ramkrishna is the religion separate and different from that of the Hindus...Ramkrishnaism has its separate god, separate name, separate church, separate worship, separate community, separate organisation and above all, a separate philosophy."

There is little doubt that these arguments work against Swami Vivekananda's aim in founding the Ramkrishna Mission to create "an organisation that will teach the Hindus mutual help and appreciation." But as the Calcutta High Court judgement points out: "Neither Buddha, nor Mahavira nor Christ ever thought of founding a new religion, yet three great religions bear their name." And even if the circumstances contributing to what has been claimed to be the birth of the new religion were hardly propitious, the fact that it took place 100 years after the death of Parahamansa amply compensated.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CHILD WORKERS

The Wages of Innocence

UNCOUNTED millions of children across the country are missing out on the carefree joys of childhood as hunger, deprivation or the indebtedness of their parents force them into adult occupations. In Varanasi and Mirzapur districts in Uttar Pradesh, hundreds and thousands of eight and nine-year olds provide hard labour for the Banarasi sari and carpet weaving industries. The children, recruited from far-away villages , usually work at dead-end jobs paying them between Rs 60 and 90 a month. Many of them can never go to school, others are drop-outs. Official reports reveal that these child apprentices are abused and physically maltreated. Government efforts to provide proper training centres, better wages and to raise the age of young trainees have so far shown poor results. Manufacturers claim that if regulations against child labour are strictly enforced the cost of carpets will rise by 60 per cent and India will lose out to stiff international competition in the export market. Correspondent RAMESH MENON reports.

THE NARROW lanes and by-lanes in the Gauriganj area of Varanasi usually hum with the noise of busy looms. But the looms were silent for a day last month, when weavers (both young and old) struck work demanding a better wage. The next day, however, it was back to work for eight-year-old Gita, who says she desperately wants to go to school and stop working in a dark, dingy room, straightening balls of entangled wool.

Worksheds like the one that confines Geeta are the rule in this town that does a booming business weaving saris and carpets. Most of the sheds have no windows, and the doors are so low that little light gets in. Inside, children sit on the floor with their legs in soggy pits. And in winter the children clad in tattered clothes have little warmth.

It is all very Dickensian, including the long hours and the absence of holidays. And it is not a fate that should have befallen 11-year-old Muhammed Ali. Born in a hamlet near Sewapuri in Varanasi district, he used to be the pride of the village with his ready wit, intelligence and gregarious nature. But two years ago, his father, a carpet weaver, pulled him out of the school to start working on the loom, making carpets. His dream of studying and going out to the big cities in search of a fortune crumbled. "I want to study, but it is not possible now," he says mournfully, realising that his monthly wage of Rs 60 is more important to his destitute family.

Saeeda Begum, 11, was married two years ago. She now works at a loom helping two younger boys weave saris and floral sari patterns. "When I start living with my husband four years later, I will stop doing this detestable job," she says hopefully. Says Ramu, 9, who singlehandedly operates the loom at Gorai village earning about Rs 6 a day: "We have to carry on working to keep our stomachs atleast half full".

These are only a few of the over one-and-a-half lakh children aged between six and 16 in the districts of Varanasi and Mirzapur who have missed out on childhood. They are part of an overworked, underfed child brigade which operates some 45,000 looms serving the handloom and carpet industries of Varanasi district.

The eastern districts of Uttar Pradesh have traditionally been a stronghold of weavers and artisans. In the last decade, handloom and carpet weaving have flourished in Varanasi, Bhadohi and Mirzapur. This year, exports are likely to touch over Rs 250 crore in carpets alone, thanks to the underpaid labour of these exploited children.

They do not usually come from the villages where they toil. Many of them are migrants from nearby villages and also from backward areas in Bihar. They are inducted into the industry by labour contractors and their scouts. After selling dreams to their parents about how their offspring would become skilled carpet weavers and amass wealth, they take them away to the village sweatshops. As Professor B. Juyal, a sociologist, says:

Child labourers at work in Varanasi: exploited workforce

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

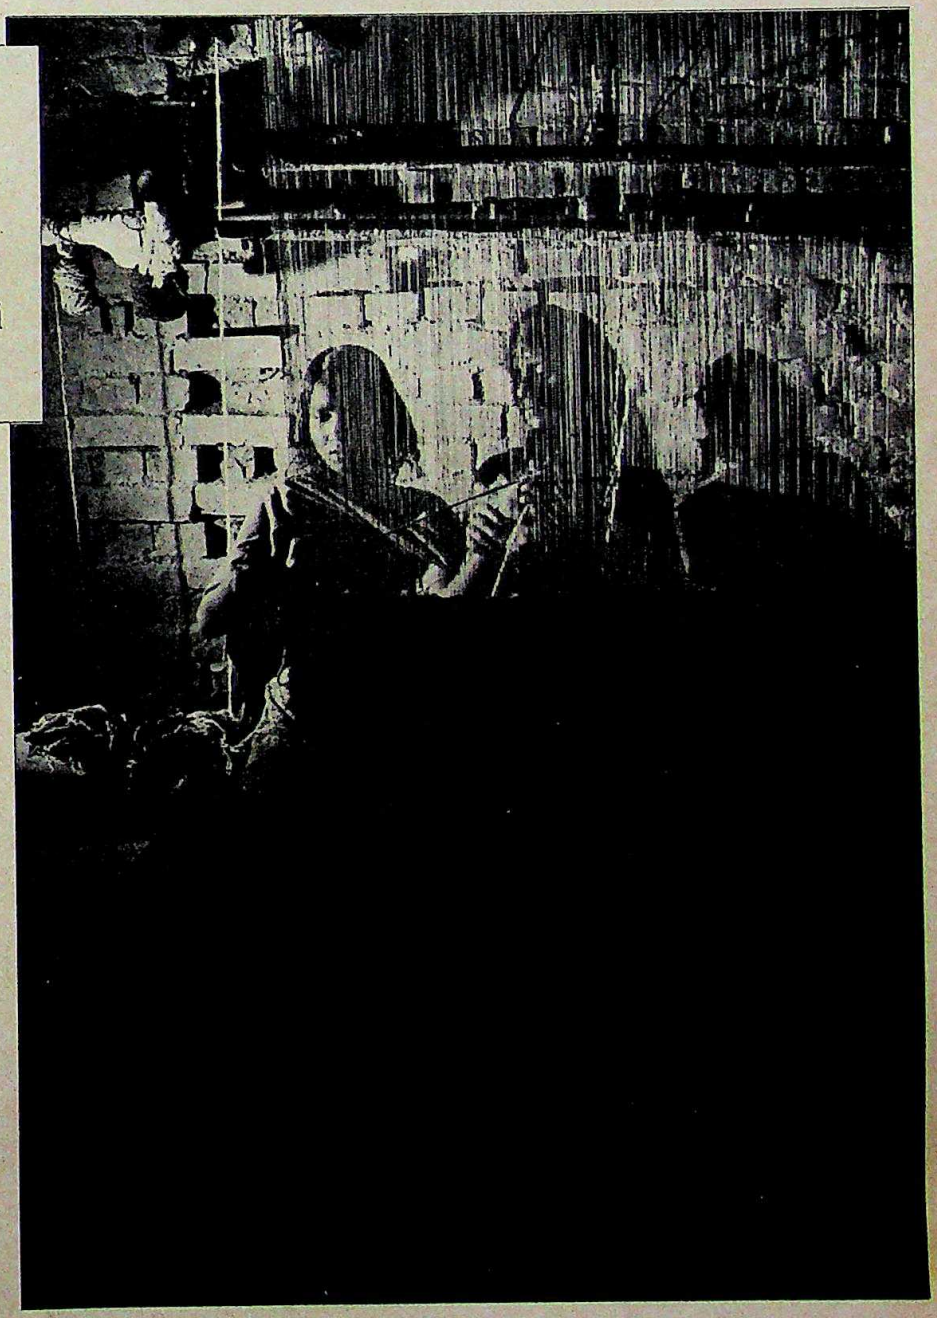
"Poor parents send away their children thinking that the carpet industry is manna from heaven. They think that their children will instantly grow very rich once they learn the skill."

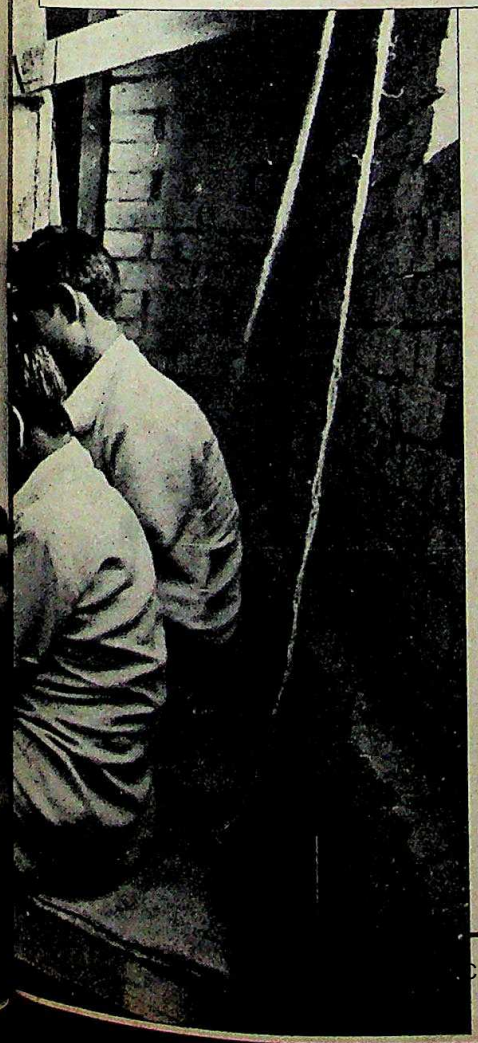
In many cases, parents send their children away as a means of paying off a debt to a contractor. For other parents, it is simply a matter of survival. As Taiyab Ali, who has been a carpet weaver for 35 years, put it: "I have taught the skill to 26 boys by now. I did not want my son to become a weaver. But I have now forced him to do it. We will otherwise starve."

Initially, the child aged around eight, is made to work as a trainee without wages. Depending on the whims of the employer, the child starts earning a wage of around Rs 40 a month. In the third year, his wage is increased to about Rs 60 a month and after around four years to Rs 90. Children who can weave Banarasi saris with zari borders can earn Rs 90-100 a month. Master weavers are usually hard taskmasters. Abusing, scolding and even physically beating the child apprentices is their style of instruction. A study done by the Banwasi Sewa Ashram in Uttar Pradesh on the condition of child labourers in Varanasi, Palamau and Mirzapur reveals that 91.5 per cent of them come from poor and backward communities and 76 per cent were illiterate. About 60 per cent of them put in 9-12 hours of work a day.

A child labourer earns half the wage of an adult doing similar work for the same length of time. Provision of food, lodging and clothing is considered a part of the wage and cuts into the paltry sum they earn. Around 45.5 per cent of them get only Rs 3-4 a day and if provided with food. Rs 30 are cut from their pay. In Palamau, 57.7 per cent reported that they did not get enough food. Parents are also forced to live with the uncertainity of their children. Last year, 30 parents from Palamau were so upset because they had not heard for long from their children who had gone to work in Varanasi that they approached human rights activists for help. As a result, the district administration in Varanasi was forced to search for the missing children. Only a few children were found. Others are still missing. It is feared they

Over 1.5 lakh children are part of an overworked, underfed child brigade which operates 45,000 looms in the handloom and carpet industries of Varanasi and Mirzapur districts.





CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

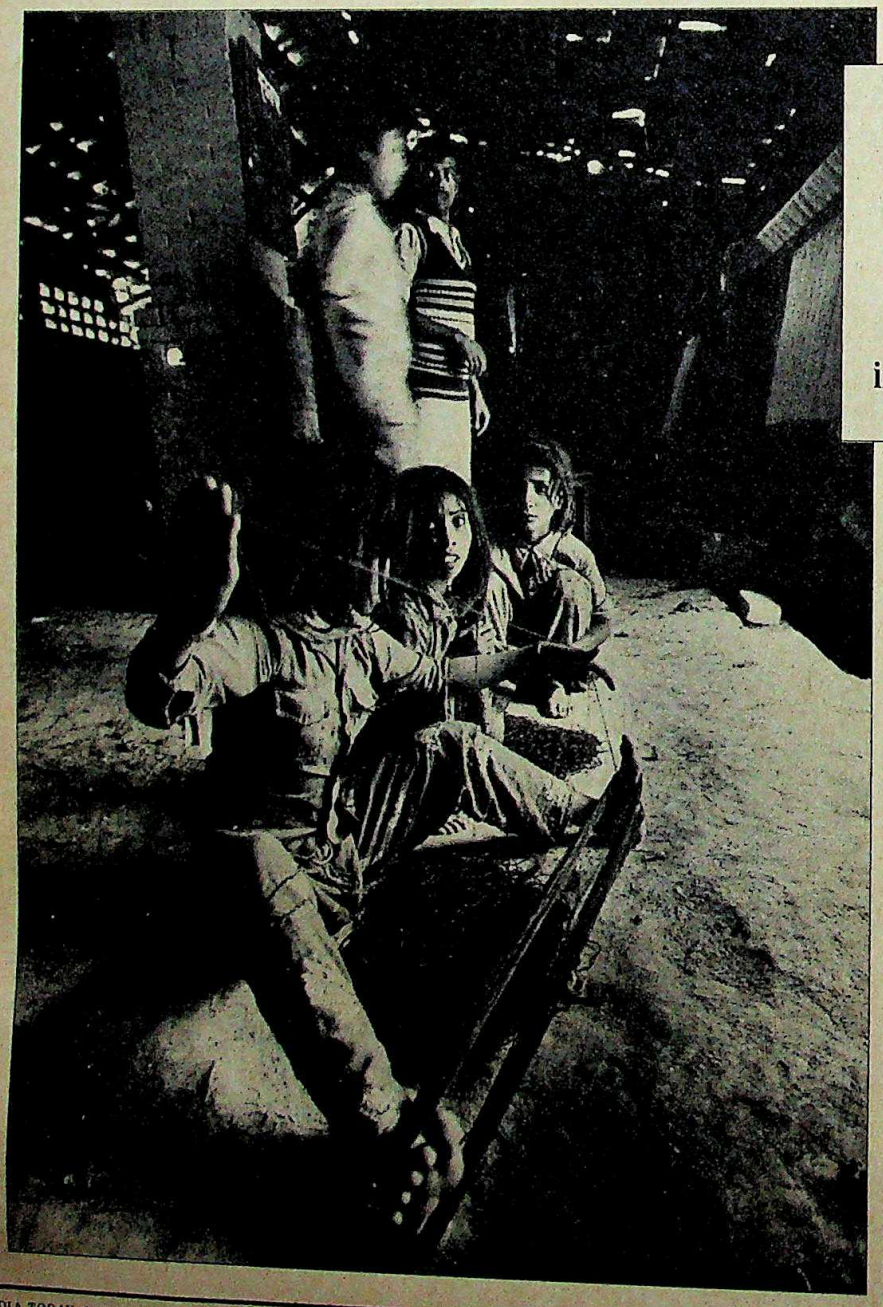
were sold by one employer to another—a common enough practice in the industry. Since no records are maintained, nobody is held accountable. The All India Carpet Manufacturers Association at Bhadohi, instead of using this opportunity to cleanse the system, alleged that vested interests in Bihar had launched this tirade as "they were jealous of the prosperity of carpet manufacturers in Uttar Pradesh".

Even though there is plenty of labour available in local villages, carpet and sari manufacturers prefer to get child workers from outside as it is easier to control them. Having no savings, the children also cannot go back home. There is also an element of bondage involved—it is common for the parent or the guardian of a child to take an advance from the employer. The advance is usually interest-free up to a limit, usually Rs 200. More borrowings are possible at interest-free rates. Since the facility is normally available, few are able to resist the temptation not to avail of it. The amount is then adjusted against the child labourer's earnings which means he or she cannot quit until the entire money is repaid.

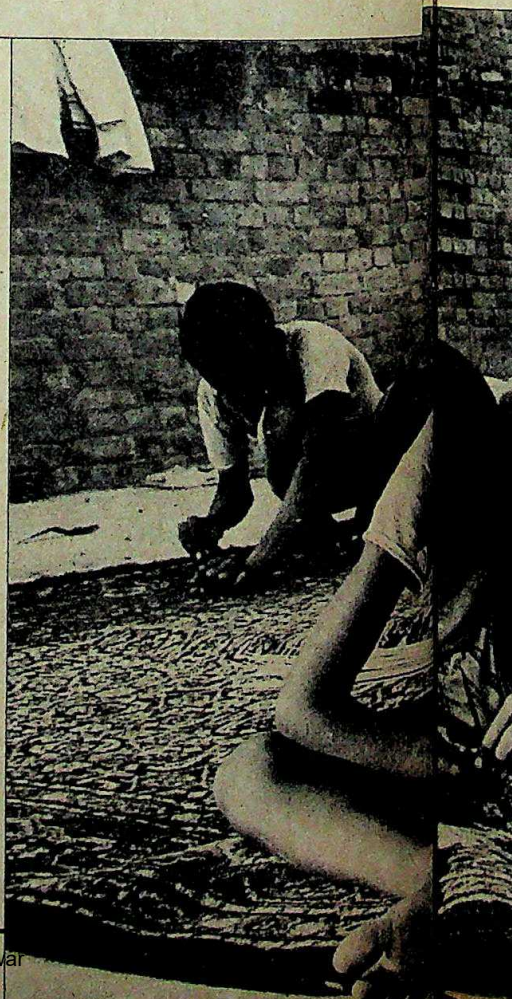
In addition, no parent is allowed to withdraw his child from one employer until he has cleared the entire debt so incurred. Alternatively, a new employer has to undertake to first pay off the old employer. No one wants to do that and the child has to remain with one employer. There is little or no mobility. They grow up doing the same job and very few end up as master craftsmen or are even able to buy a loom of their own.

A weaver in his 30's still earns just about Rs 300 and it is not possible to save enough to install a loom at a cost of Rs 2,500. And even those who are able to purchase a loom of their own, ultimately wind up running it solely on child labour. And so, the circle of exploitation endures.

Four years ago the Central Government started over 60 carpet-weaving training centres in the Varanasi-Mirzapur belt to be run by the All India Handicrafts Development Board. The idea was to encourage the cottage industry in Uttar Pradesh. The training centres were to give training to children above 14 years so they could get into the trade within a year. But in most of the training centres, children



A child labourer earns half the wage of an adult for the same amount of work. Provision of food, lodging and clothing is part of the wage and cuts into the paltry sum he earns.



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

under 10 are employed on a monthly stipend of Rs 100.

A Central Government team which visited the training centres recently reported that most of the children were below the stipulated age. In Hathi village for example, 30 of the 33 trainees are girls, most of them under 10. But the centre insists that they are all above 14. None of them is interested in becoming a weaver. They were pulled out of school and forced to join the centre by their parents..

Ironically, even these government centres have served the interests of the private manufacturers—not only because they got readymade cheap trained labour but also because they could buy the carpets from these centres at rock-bottom rates, finish the carpets and then sell them at good profit.

As the awareness of child labour has grown, children have been taught to give false names and ages. In most villages, children just do not talk—elders answer questions of any visitor. In Sardarnagar near Bhadohi, an elerly man supervising the finishing of a carpet by six boys, all below 10, has instructed them not to give their real names whenever questioned. When asked, he reeled off their names—all names of places in Uttar Pradesh.

THE WORKING conditions of these children and they being employed on low wages is none of our concern, as we do not directly employ them," says K.C. Khanna, joint secretary of the All India Carpet Manufacturers Association. Khanna's annual turnover is nearly Rs 2 crore. He adds: "In fact, they should be grateful that they are being trained in such an intricate art." Carpet and Banarasi sari manufacturers profiting from the sweat of the children in Bhadohi and surrounding areas are oblivious to their needs. They hide behind the excuse that they choose to employ child labour not because of lower wages but because, as one of them said: "Their fingers are very nimble and can work with dexterity in carpet and zari making".

A report on the alarming conditions that children work in Varanasi and Mirzapur circulated by Sanat Mehta, chairman of the committee on child labour, in July 1984 recorded that "children work in conditions of semi-slavery". It also revealed that the working conditions posed serious health hazards as the children were exposed to breathing fluff and dust of cotton, silk and wool and in course of time would develop poor eyesight due to the nature of the work, as well as tuberculosis, filariasis and enlarged lymph glands.

But Khanna dismisses these hazards with a wave of his hand: "Those who work in the carpet indusry are healthier than others." According to Mehta: "With lower wages, children are not only replacing adult labour but also depressing the wages of adults doing similar work. The myth that children are better suited for the job as their nimble fingers can work with greater speed and accuracy has been in vogue too long to disprove."

The industry sucks in a large number of schoolchildren each year. Says Rama Wahal, a teacher in Sewapuri: "There is a high rate of drop-outs. With such a system of child labour prevailing, this sad situation is inevitable." The Chagankshetra Vikas Samiti, a social service agency in Sewapuri, had volunteered to run non-formal classes for children working in government training centres. All they asked for was an hour a day. But the All India Handicrafts Board did not respond.

District Collector of Varanasi Raghunandan Tolia does not dispute the wide prevalence of child labour in the area. "What is important now is not finding out ways to ban child labour but to ensure that these poverty-struck children work in better conditions and earn dignified wages," he says. During informal sessions with carpet manufacturers last fortnight, Tolia suggested that their working places should be made cleaner and better ventilated. He has asked them to open savings accounts in post offices in the names of the children where all transactions would have to be shown.

The manufacturers have not yet reacted to these suggestions. Representatives of the All India Carpet Manufacturers Association have cautioned the Labour Ministry that if it bans child labour, the cost of carpets would rise by 60 per cent and India would lose out on the export market which is at present facing stiff competition from China and Pakistan. But the basic fact remains that if children are to employed at all, then they deserve better wages and above all, the right to be treated with dignity.

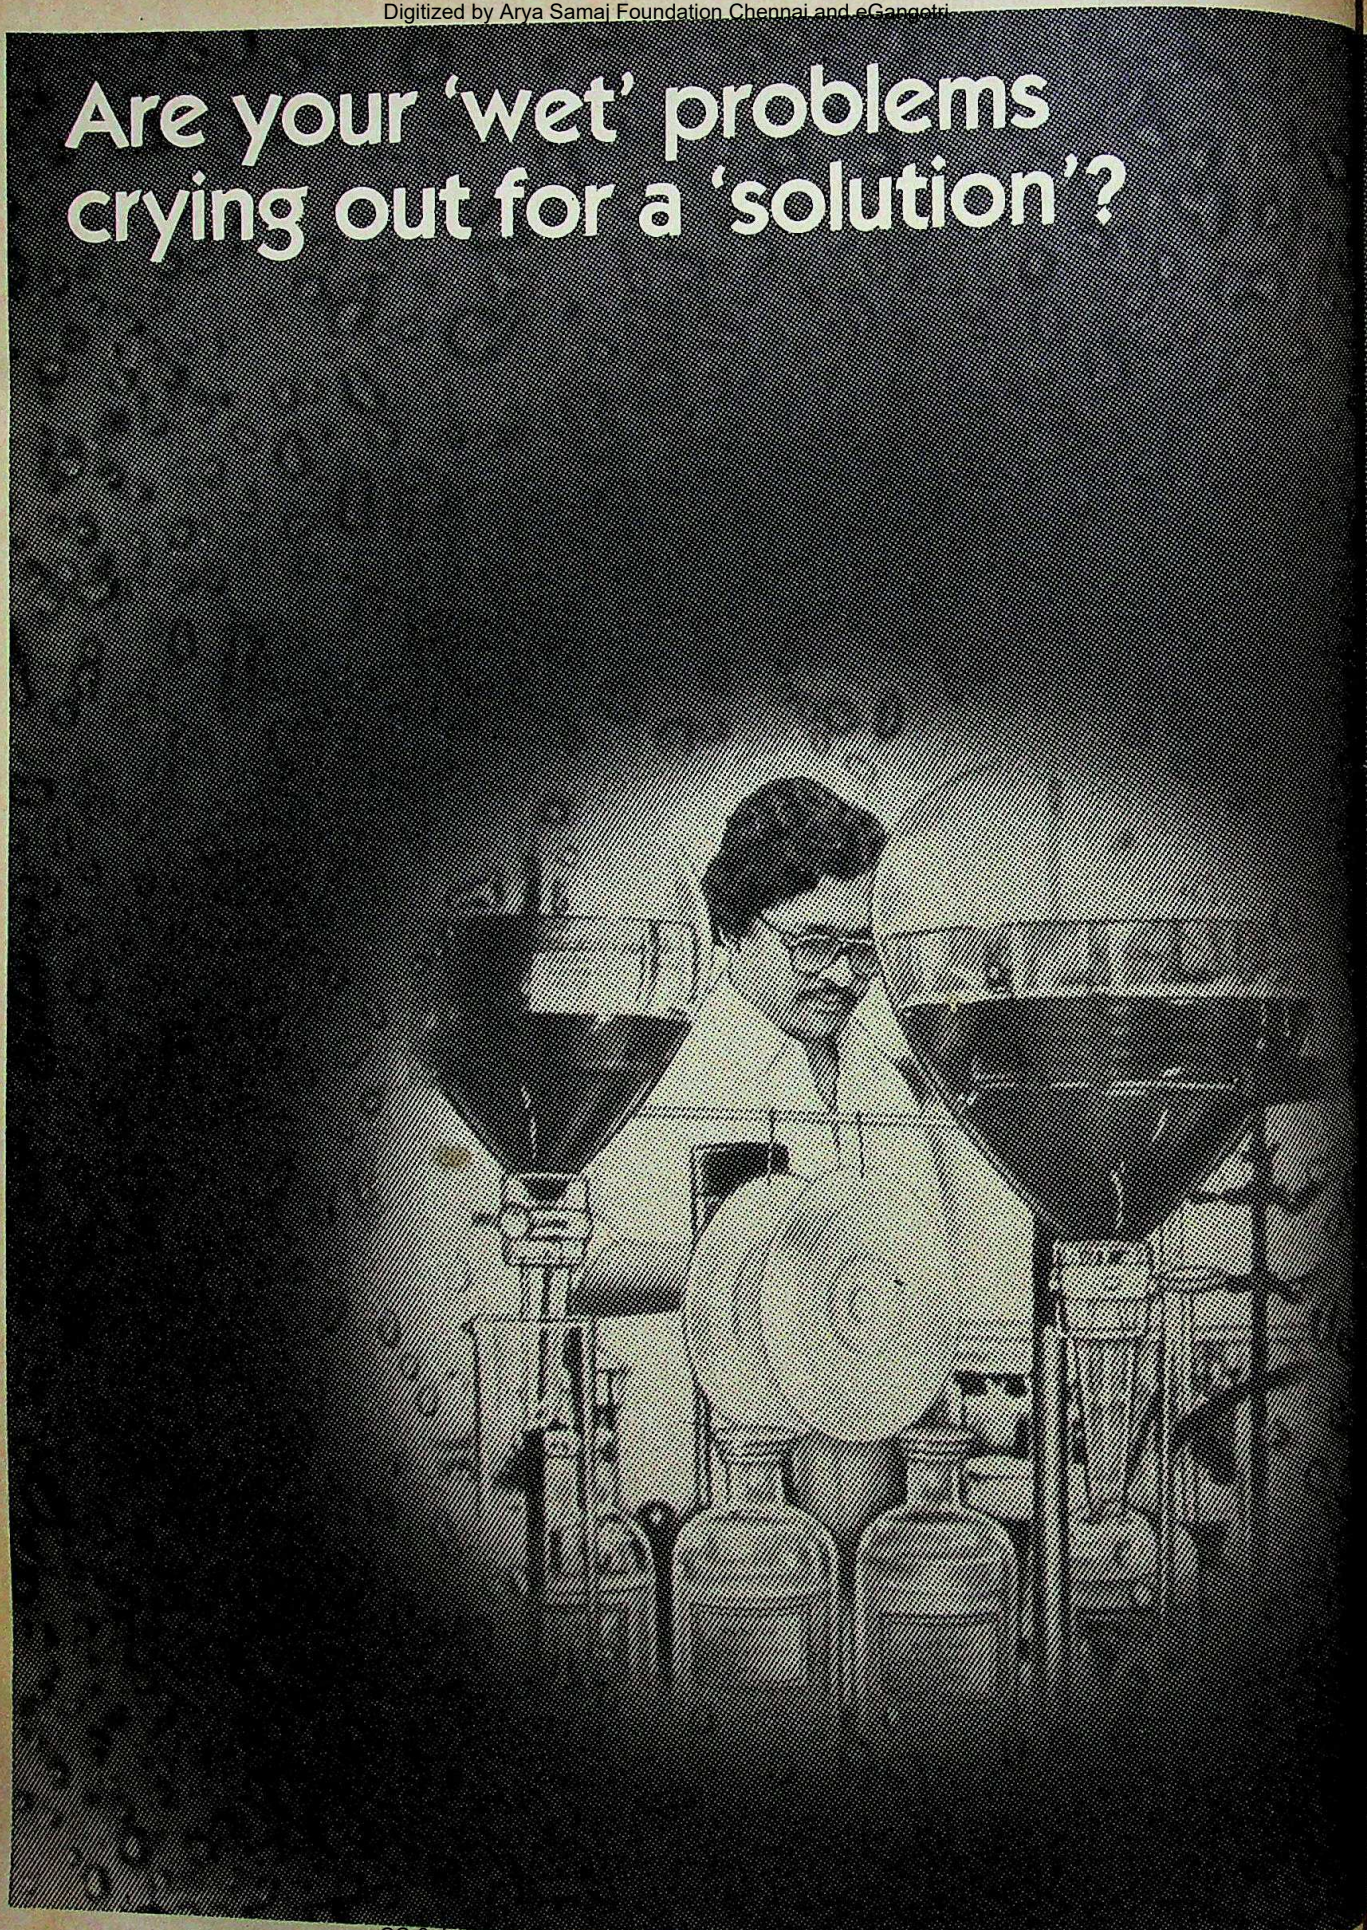
Signs of awareness among the workers are becoming evident. But employers do not appear to recognise the fact that these children deserve to see a better day. As social worker Ramakant Rai sums it up in his impassioned question: "Children work so hard because they are driven by poverty. But does this give a licence to thousands of prospering businessmen to continue exploiting them?"

Young apprentices toil under master craftsmen: maltreated lot

CC-0. Mumukshu Bhawan Varanasi Collection. Haridwar

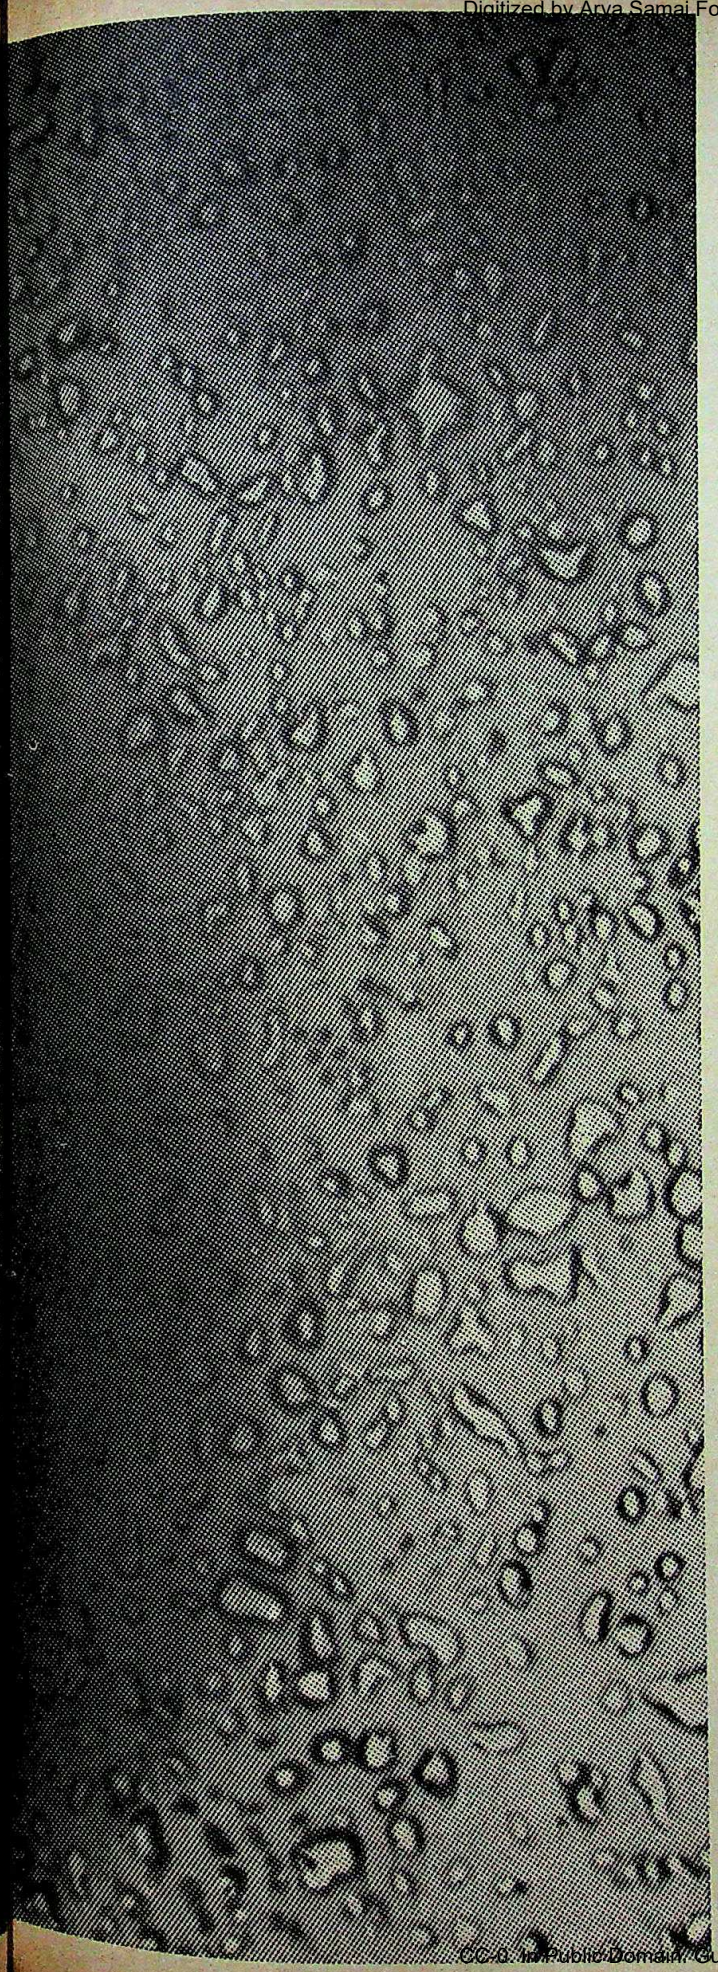
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Are your 'wet' problems crying out for a 'solution'?



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



It's time for IPCL's DEG–Di-ethylene Glycol

Di-ethylene Glycol. It's just the right 'solution' for all your moisture problems. DEG can be used as a humectant in conditioning the moisture of tobacco, composition cork, glue paper and synthetic sponges. In the manufacturing of laminating agents a nd adhesives, polyurethene and unsaturated polyester resins, Tri-ethylene Glycol, Morpholine and Dioxene. And as a solvent for Udex extraction.

Moreover, DEG is used as a softening agent and lubricant for textiles. As a solvent in printing inks and emulsifier in cutting oils, spray oils and resins. For anti-freeze blending and for dehydration of natural gas. It is also used as a dehumidifier.

And you need not import DEG anymore. Because IPCL's DEG comes to you with a high degree of purity. Colourless and odourless, DEG can be mixed with water, alcohol, benzene, toluene or ether to match your needs.

IPCL – your source for new generation solvents.

DEG and TEG are available from IPCL's offices at Vadodara, Bombay, Bangalore, Calcutta, New Delhi, Ludhiana and Madras.

Marketing Division
Indian Petrochemicals Corporation Limited
(A Govt. of India Undertaking)
P.O. Petrochemicals 391346, Dist. Vadodara

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

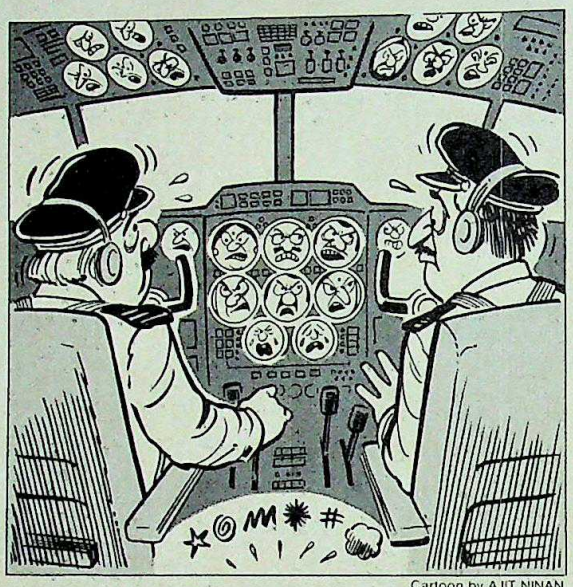
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIAN AIRLINES

Travellers' Checks

THE AMBITIOUS seminar jointly hosted last fortnight by Air-India and Indian Airlines on the theme "Civil Aviation at the turn of the Century", witnessed a galaxy of aviation experts airing their views on the industry. Very few of the speakers, however, talked about the actual bread and butter of the airlines—the passengers.

But there could also be another reason for the glaring gap in the seminar proceedings: the fact that passengers have now decided to speak for themselves, and quite forcefully too. The first stirrings of revolt surfaced on Indian Airlines flight 406, a daily, direct Bombay-Delhi service popular with day tripping businessmen and executives.



Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

On the January 15 flight, the passengers were asked to emplane at the scheduled time, 9.30 a.m. For the next 45 minutes, the passengers sweltered on board as the auxiliary power unit which feeds the air-conditioning plant on the aircraft was out of commission. Finally, Captain Bhatnagar, the flight commander, informed the irate passengers that "because of non-coordination between the engineering and traffic wings, you have been put to this inconvenience".

The announcement was greeted with the usual mixture of jeers and groans but up in the executive class cabin, one long-suffering passenger decided that enough was enough. R. Mohanty is a frequent traveller on Indian Airlines, in fact so frequent that most cabin crews know him by name. Summoning the purser, Mohanty demanded a sheaf of suggestion cards the airline has recently started carrying on board its flights and dashed off a lengthy letter of complaint to the captain. According to airline sources, the letter essentially blamed the captain for not getting the ground staff to move faster and threatened to report Bhatnagar to the aviation minister on arrival in Delhi.

Whether Bhatnagar could have avoided the delay is debatable. Airline sources say that the reverser on one of the engines was malfunctioning and the engineering department had been working on it for some hours before the scheduled take-off time. When the traffic personnel asked the engineering staff how long it would take, the reply was "10 minutes". The traffic personnel then allowed the passengers to board but the fault actually took a further 45 minutes to rectify.

Mohanty, refusing to be fobbed off by excuses of "non-coordination", was invited to the flight deck a few minutes after take-off by the captain. From then on, the versions of what took place naturally vary. The captain's version is that Mohanty was abusive and threatening and claims that Mohanty hit him. Mohanty's version is that it was Captain Bhatnagar who was abusive and rude and claims that it was Bhatnagar who used physical force to push him out of the flight deck.

Ultimately, it was the unfortunate passengers who paid the price. Bhatnagar immediately called up Bombay control tower and informed them that he had a violent passenger on board and was turning back and asked them to have security personnel standing by to arrest Mohanty on arrival. He then went further and informed his passengers over the public address system why he was turning back and then added: "If any passenger misbehaves, he will be handed over to the police."

This was a bit too much for the rest of the passengers to take, not knowing what exactly had happened on the flight deck and already irritated at the delay. Before the aircraft could land at Bombay, they had organised themselves and blocked all the exits. When it landed they refused to let the security personnel on board and also flatly refused to fly with Bhatnagar in charge of the aircraft.

This unprecedented sequence, signalling a new mood among airline passengers in the country, had the inevitable downstream dislocations: a bridegroom on board the plane missed his connecting flight from Delhi; and managed to make it to his wedding only by switching to surface transport.

Airline officials tried pacifying the crowd, but realising that they had a revolt on their hands, finally requisitioned the services of another pilot who flew the aircraft to Delhi four hours behind schedule but with both Mohanty and Bhatnagar aboard, the latter as a passenger.

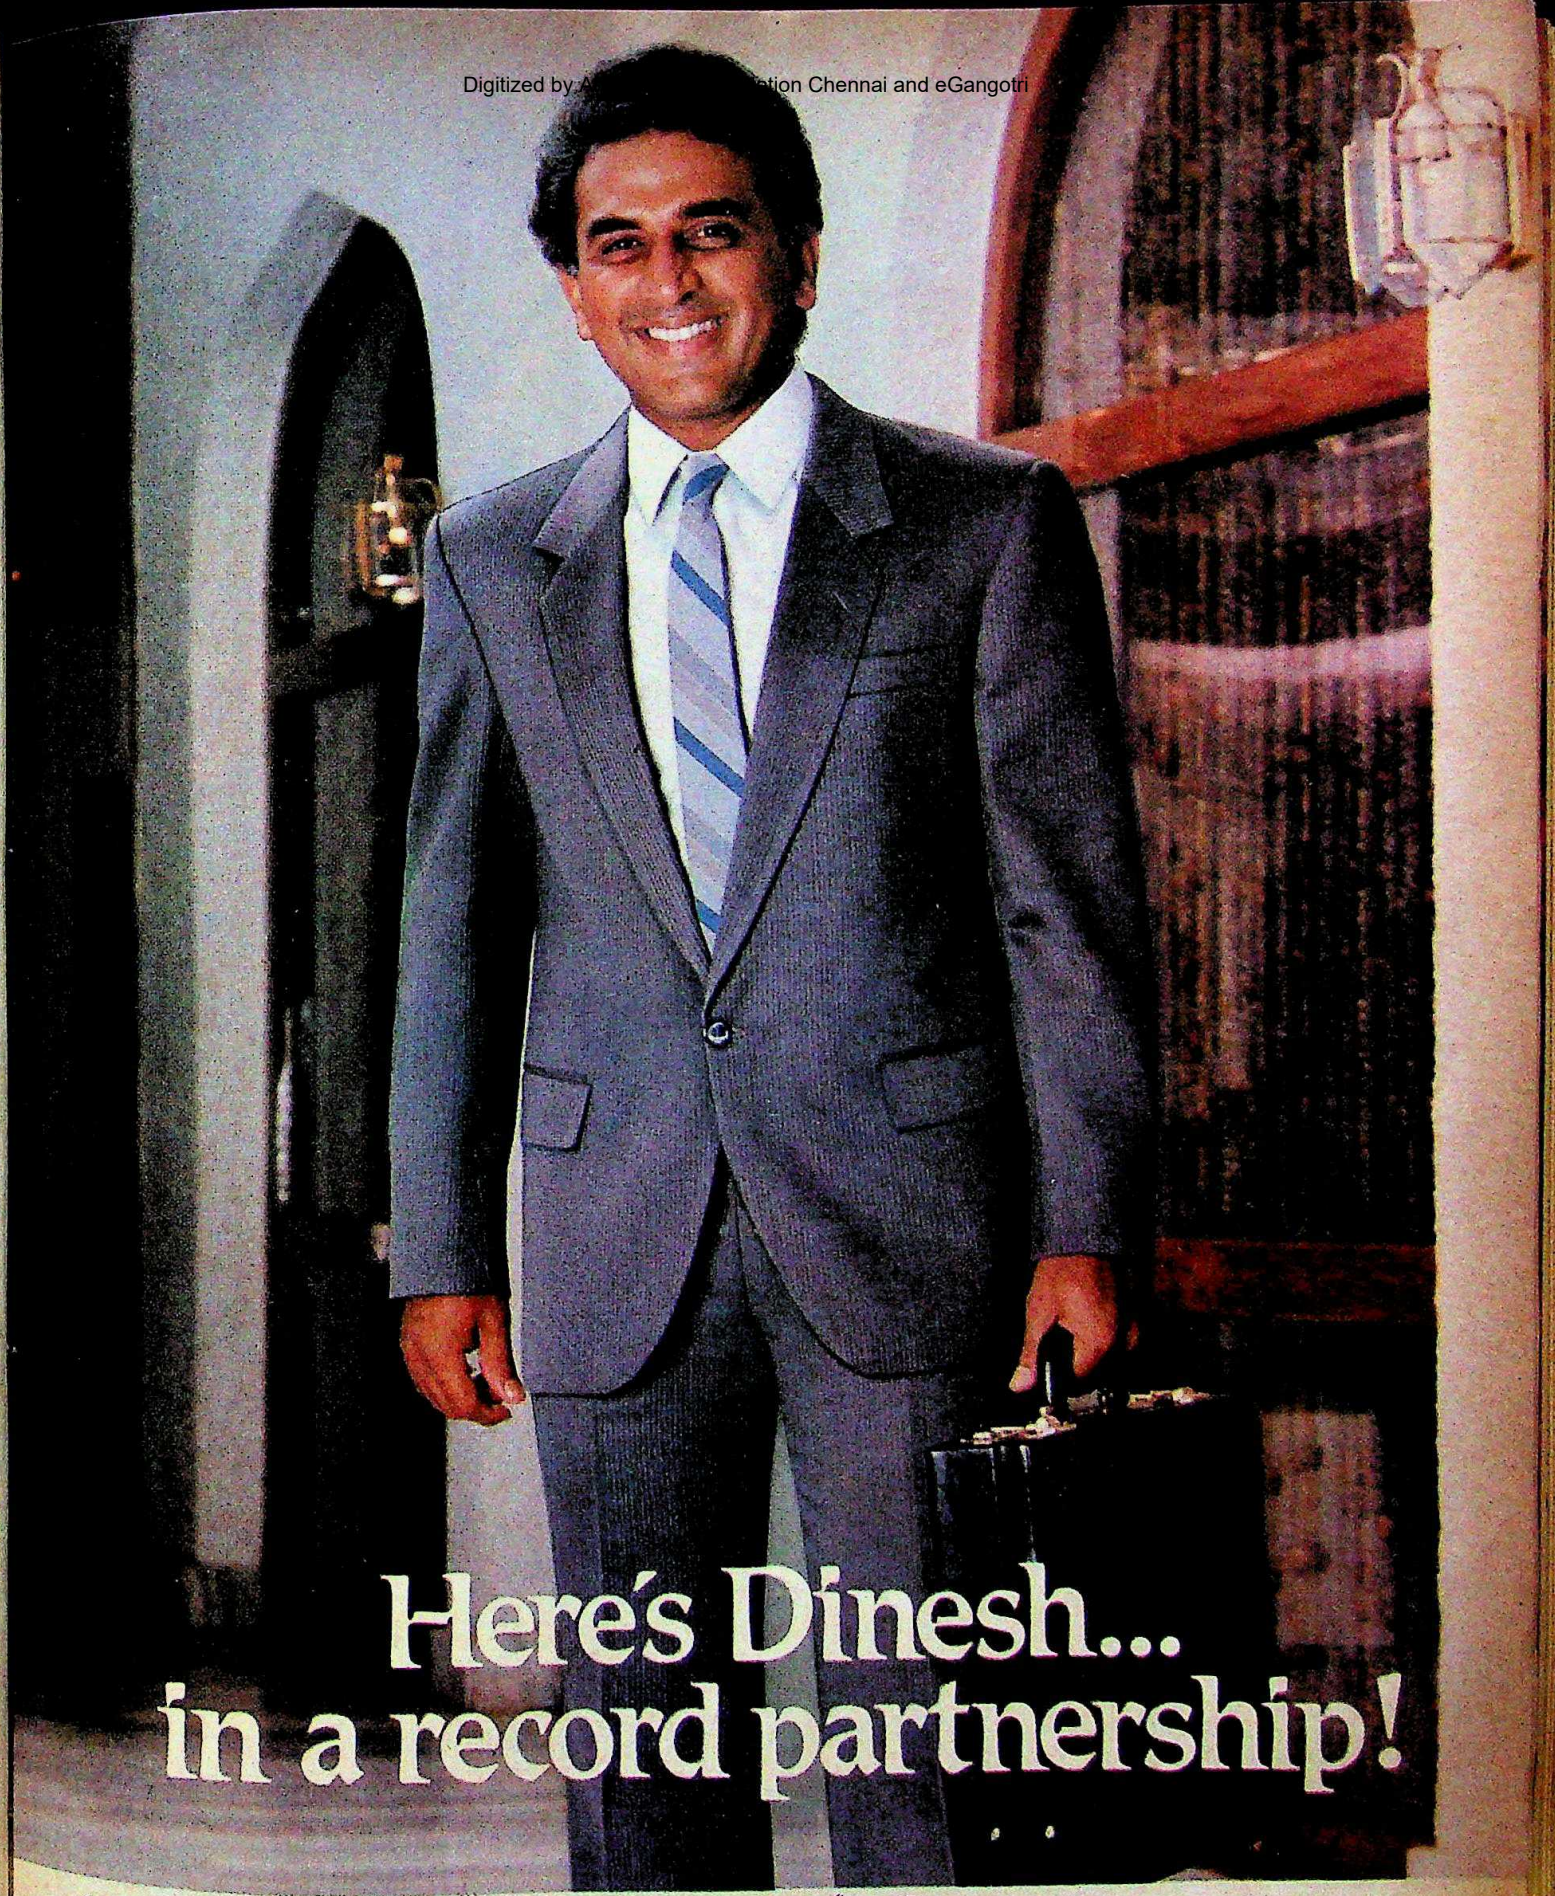
According to senior airline sources, it is difficult to establish the true facts of the altercation. Bhatnagar is known as a level-headed pilot and a colleague says that it would take excessive provocation to make him behave the way he did. The other crew members on the flight deck naturally back Bhatnagar's version. But the incident was embarrassing enough for the airline to officially admonish Bhatnagar and temporarily suspend him from flying. "Mohanty is a regular and well known to the airline. The captain had no business aborting the flight for the reasons he did," admitted a senior airline executive.

That minor victory for the passengers seems to have inspired similar displays of resistance. A week later, the departure of an airbus flight from Calcutta to Delhi was again delayed for 15 minutes. Angry passengers were told by the pilot that the reason was because the lt-governor of Arunachal Pradesh had still not checked in. When the lt-governor arrived, passengers refused to let him board and demanded a personal apology. He refused and the flight left without him. He, it later transpired, was hardly at fault since his connecting flight from Silchar had been delayed by two hours. But the incident offered further proof that a growing number of Indian Airlines' passengers are no longer willing to be taken for a ride.

—DILIP BOBB with JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by A tion Chennai and eGangotri



Here's Dinesh... in a record partnership!

Matching the inimitable Sunil Gavaskar – stride for stride.
In pin stripes, whip cords, cavalry twills and more.
Dinesh Exclusives in 100% pure wool. A fitting tribute to the distinguished and the discerning. Look for the Woolmark – the international assurance of pure, new wool.

Woolmark. Your assurance

Woolmark (ऊनमार्क) PURE NEW WOOL

dinesh Exclusives

Give you a distinct identity.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kang Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Decolam lasts.

Ever since Pizza King opened shop in Delhi, its tables and counters have been subjected to a constant barrage of plates, glasses, forks, knives and eager young customers. Not surprising, when you consider the quality of the food—which, of course, includes potato chips.

But there are no chips in the table tops. No cracks. Hardly any scratches. You see, they're all surfaced with Decolam. As are the tables in thousands of restaurants all over the country.

Unlike cheap laminates, Decolam lasts almost forever. It's solid. It's tough and very resistant to scratches, acids and heat. And it has the right thickness of 1.5 mm. So it smooths over any imperfections in the surfaces it tops.

Surfaces aren't the only things that Decolam tops. Look how it scores over cheaper laminates in these tests for durability:

Brand	Wear Resistance	Impact Strength	Cross Breaking Strength
Decolam	100	100	100
Brand X	66	31	51.6
Brand Y	57	24	54.3

Figures have been indexed for easy comparison. Test results are available on request.

This means that Decolam protects your expensive furniture better, longer and more elegantly than anything else. Isn't it worth paying a little more for Decolam today?

The fastest growing food chain in the country takes pride in the excellence of its decor. That's why every one of its branches is Decolaminated.

decolam
DECORATIVE LAMINATE

beautiful... forever.

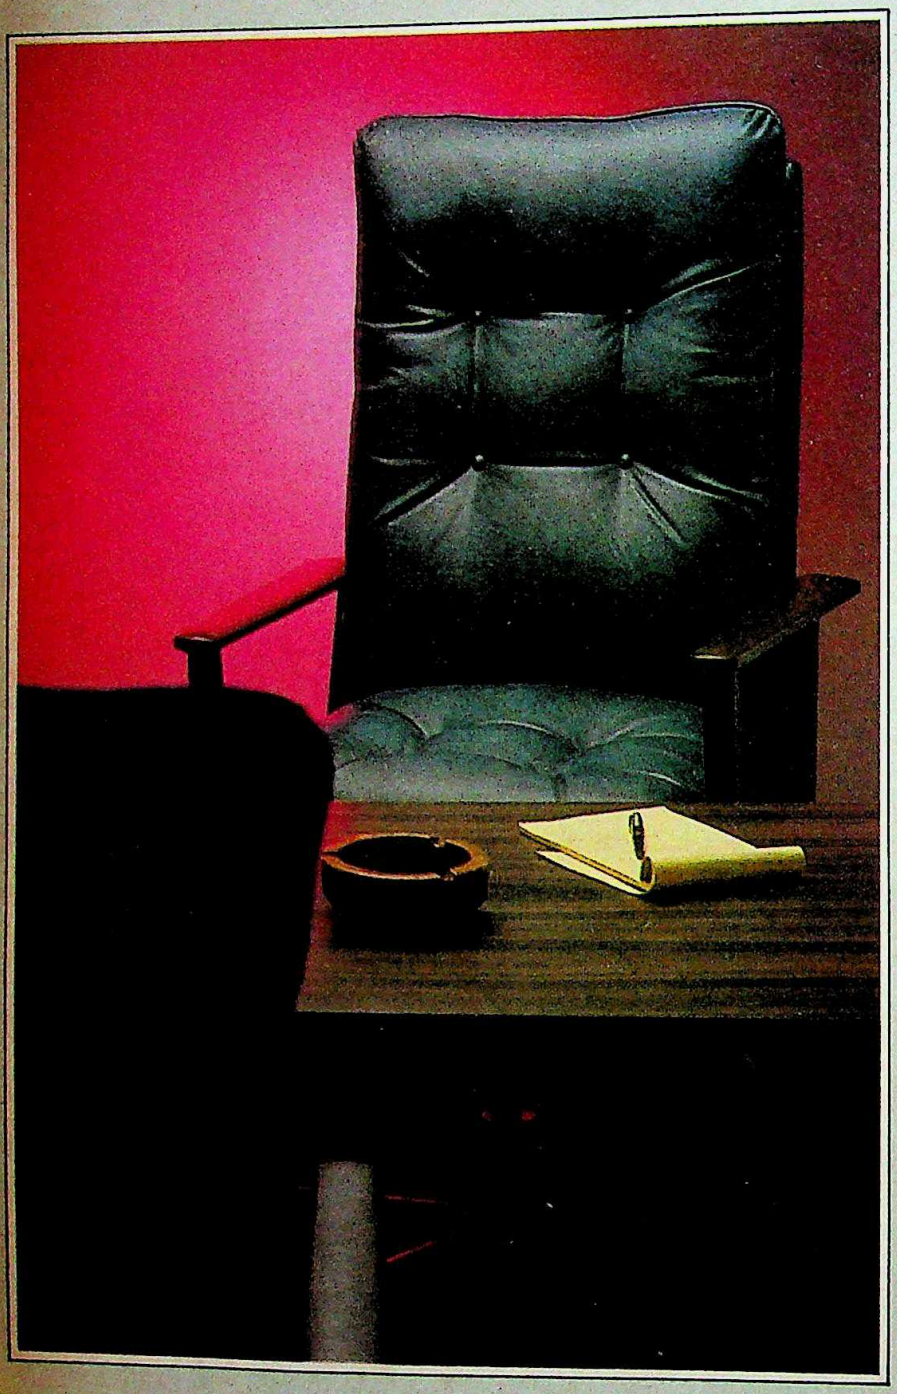
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

A quality product of Bakelite Hylam

LINTAS SM DLM 29 2741

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Elegance enjoys an unequalled status!



Bilbo. Known by the company it keeps

Executive furniture that is designed and crafted to perfection deserves nothing less than superior quality covering material. Bilbo.

Cool and comfortable, soft and supple, Bilbo can be stitched like fabric with pleats, ridges and folds. Just wipe with a damp cloth and Bilbo keeps its subtle colours, its stylish elegance for years.

Bilbo. The touch of distinction fine executive furniture deserves.

Bilbo

A rich, rare elegance to cover the finest executive furniture

Manufactured by:
BHOR

The Bhor Industries Limited 392, Veer Savarkar Marg, Bombay 400 025 Phone: 4222241

Branch Offices: Station Road, P.O. Maneja, Baroda 390 013. Phone: 4691/2 □ 4/24A, Asaf Ali Road, New Delhi 110 002. Phone: 269813/271563 □ 10A, Ho Chi Minh Sarani, Calcutta 700 071. Phone: 449194/433413 □ Raji Buildings, 730 Anna Salai, Madras 600 006. Phone: 811274

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

STATEMENT OF INTENT

THE GOVERNMENT is getting ready with a sequel to its statement on long-term fiscal policy: a long-term industrial policy. Expected in the next three months, this document will be a statement of intent. It will look forward to the country's industrial position in the next five years. It will also formally place between two covers all the recent changes in the Government's policy on industrial licensing and growth, and enshrine steps to be taken in the medium-term future. But this policy document is not expected to place the Industrial Policy Resolution of 1956 on its head.

TROUBLED PICTURE

THE PROPOSED million colour television picture tube venture between Philips of Holland and the Andhra Pradesh State Electronics Development Corporation seems to have run into a hitch over the location of the plant. The electronics multinational and the state government agency have been holding talks on the project since last June, but the Dutch firm wants the factory to be set up near Hyderabad, while the state agency has suggested two sites near Vijayawada (these are close to supplies of natural gas, which is a raw material). The two sides signed a memorandum of understanding under which Philips would invest 60 per cent of the equity and the state government organisation, 15 per cent. But the differences over the location of the plant now cast a shadow over the whole project. Meanwhile, Philips' Indian subsidiary has got past one hurdle in its effort to start manufacturing colour TV sets in India, with the Union Cabinet deciding recently that firms with less than 40 per cent foreign shareholding are not barred from this field of enterprise.

MODELS OF SERVICE

AFTER triggering off a technological revolution in the car industry, Maruti Udyog seems intent on extending the revolution down the line. The public sector vehicle manufacturer has on its drawing boards a model vehicle service station. By the end of the year, the station may provide drivers with computerised print-outs on the state of their vehicle's health. Better still, after their vehicles are repaired, drivers will be handed another print-out showing whether the faults have been actually rectified. The project, expected to cost a few lakhs, is still at a preliminary stage, but action is expected soon on acquiring land in the capital.

FAVOURITE SOAP

TOILET soaps suddenly seem the industry favourite. After Shaw Wallace's unexpected diversification into this field a few months ago, the next large unit to be straying into toiletries is Shriram Foods and Fertiliser Industries, the money-spinning DCM unit which has so far concentrated on chemicals and vanaspati. The unit plans to set up a factory in a backward district in Haryana with a licensed capacity of 16,500 tonnes a year. Shriram already makes some laundry soap, but with vanaspati output having gone up substantially over the years, more fatty acid (a vanaspati by-product) is available to make soaps. The Rs 30-crore venture will add some Rs 33 crore to Shriram's annual turnover of Rs 180 crore. The only hitch, however, is that its vanaspati unit in Delhi is lying closed at the moment because of safety hazards.

POWER PLAY

A NUMBER of international power giants are knocking at the doors of the Government and the National Thermal Power Corporation (NTPC) with offers of power projects tied to financing arrangements. The French company Stein (managed by the Alsthom group) has offered a project using a new type of boiler technology suited for the high-ash coal found in Talcher, Orissa. The British have made an offer too, but the NTPC is in no mood to consider this until Britain's NEI improves its record on the Rihand super thermal power project that has fallen behind schedule because of NEI's project management limitations. Finally, the Russians are keen to extend the scope of their Vindhyachal super thermal project by adding two 500-megawatt units. NTPC is keen on accepting at least some of these offers because that seems to be the only way in which new projects for completion in the Eighth Plan can be taken up during the current planning quinquennium. The Government has given the company a Seventh Plan investment allocation of only Rs 5,600 crore, compared to the original demand for Rs 13,000 crore, and NTPC is anxious to make up for this shortfall.

UNWELCOME TREND

DESPITE the boom in the capital market and rising levels of bank deposits, the country seems to be saving and investing progressively smaller proportions of the net national product (NNP). Reserve Bank of India figures released last month show that domestic savings as a percentage of NNP dropped from 17.6 per cent in 1980-81 to 16.4 per cent last year, while aggregate investment (which includes foreign resources) fell from 19.5 per cent to 17.7 per cent. Both savings and investment fell in three of the last four years, marking a sharp change from the earlier trend of steady improvement on both fronts. If this new and largely negative trend continues, the planned growth of the economy could be in more trouble than it actually is.

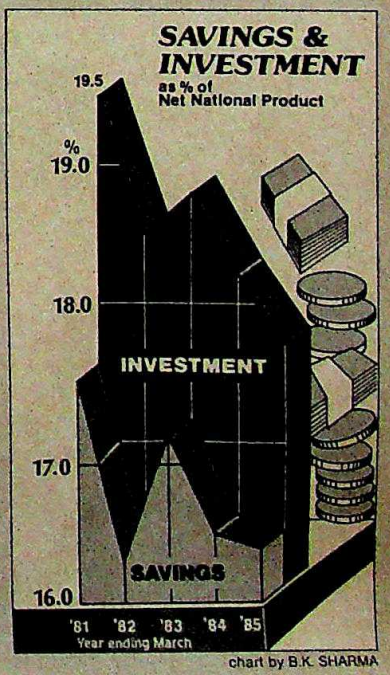


chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gearing up for Inc

9793 A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

What's up at Dunlop: 1

for India's transportation revolution...

Dunlop introduces world-leading Sumitomo tyre technology

A logical choice in Dunlop's search for the latest and the best is Sumitomo Rubber Industries (SRI) of Japan. Acknowledged as one of the world's leading tyre manufacturers, and holder of the highest share in the Japanese original equipment market.

Sumitomo's worldwide experience coupled with Dunlop's own R&D has much to offer.

More durable tyres with new tread patterns and improved compounding technology.

Tyres which provide better safety and comfort. As well as savings in fuel consumption.

A whole new range of tyres to meet the needs of the rapidly changing Indian automotive market.

And tyres belonging to the radial generation. After all, SRI radial tyres are amongst the best in the world.

But that's not all.

When two of the world's leading tyre manufacturers get together, things begin to happen.

That set the leaders apart.

Quality consistency.
Higher productivity.
A saving on energy.

And better acceptance in export markets.

All this is an indication of the revitalisation of Dunlop.

Where further investments are being made in R&D to match the new technology.

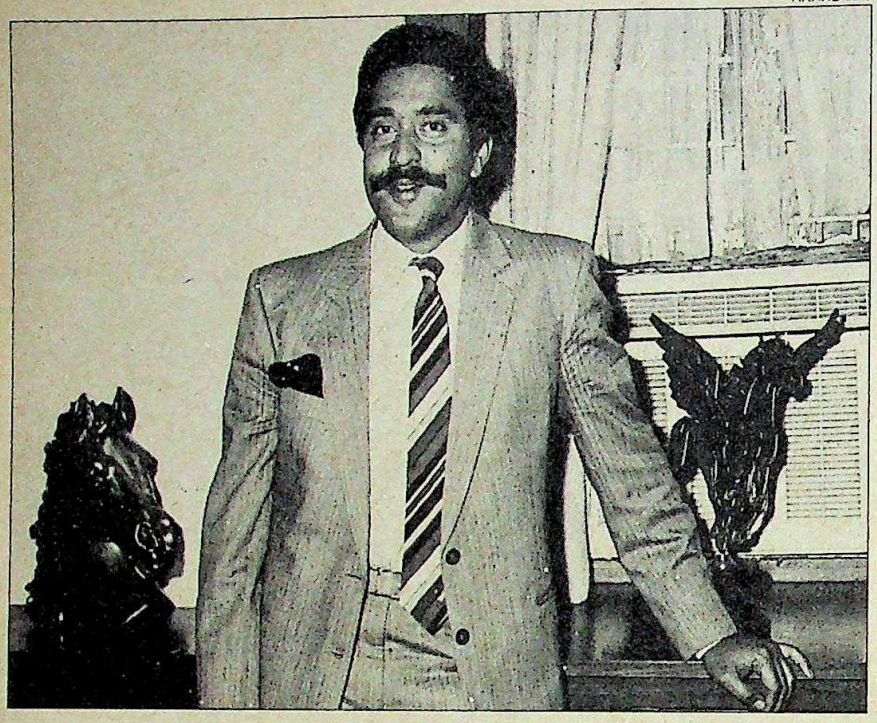
Yet another way in which Dunlop India contributes to Indian industry's march into the twenty-first century.

DUNLOP INDIA
The first name - the latest technology

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ANAND RAJ



Vijay Mallya flanked by his company symbols: troubled times

VIJAY MALLYA

Fighting Spirit

HE DRIVES a red BMW, and also uses three Mercedes and an old Fiat. He owns a stable of eight thoroughbreds, and has won three Grand Prix races, driving a Formula 1 car. In addition, he has a pilot's licence to fly. And, at 30, he is perhaps the youngest man in the country to head a group the size of United Breweries, which with some 30 subsidiary companies and other companies like Hoechst and Berger Paints (all of which Mallya heads) have a combined turnover of around Rs 800 crore.

But life is not a bed of roses for Vijay Mallya. He is neck deep in trouble with the Government for his alleged role in the takeover of Shaw Wallace's overseas shareholdings and for the conduct of business operations abroad, allegedly without the Reserve Bank's permission. His homes and offices have been raided, one of his companies' bank accounts have been virtually frozen as the Government has launched tax recovery proceedings, his passport has been taken away pending investigations, he himself was arrested in January, and he has been subjected to endless hours of questioning by officials of the enforcement directorate.

All this at a time when he is trying to launch an ambitious diversification programme that will take his empire into a host of new high-technology and core sector areas. Indeed, Mallya was busy last month stomping across the country, addressing share brokers in connection with a public issue of debentures meant to raise working capital for his expanding operations. And while some of his new projects have been cleared by the Government, others haven't as yet got the green signal.

In more senses than one, Vijay Mallya's future hangs in the balance: he has to get all the Government approvals, get the projects off the ground, keep his existing businesses on even keel, and clear himself of the serious charges laid at his door.

Sitting in the drawing-room of Brewery House, the sprawling Bangalore home that his late father Vittal built, Mallya is deeply conscious of his image problem and his predicament, but declares: "In 20 years I will be known not as a spoilt kid who inherited a business, but as a king in my own right. Also, I'm a born fighter, with nerves of steel. I have withstood this tension for six months, and I will fight my case in court."

One thing is immediately clear: Mallya may be in a tight spot at the moment, and he is probably worried about the final outcome of the Government's cases against him. But he is not short of confidence in himself, and even his critics (of whom there is no shortage) admit that he is both intelligent and hard-working.

Far from being awed by the prospect of stepping into the shoes of his father, who founded the empire and built for himself an unmatched reputation as a takeover wizard and financial genius, Mallya has confidently assumed the controls and set about initiating a series of far-reaching changes in his companies.

Indeed, Mallya is openly critical of the way his father ran the business. Sitting in what was Vittal's office chair, across from a safe that dates back a few decades to when the daily sales of United Breweries used to be stashed away in it, he acknowledges his father's vision and foresight, but talks of poor management information systems, a lack of delegated authority down the line, the failure to see a market opportunity when Coke left the country in 1977, the failure to plan investments in a manner that would save on taxes, and a great deal more.

So the son has created a new corporate management group that is now in overall charge of the operations of all the companies, organised the various businesses into coherent groups such as liquor, brewery, foods and beverages, industrial products and international operations, and put each of them under a president.

He took the decision early on to move into non-liquor businesses and decided that a group his size should be in high technology and core sector areas. Since this meant tying up with companies that had the technology to go into these new areas, Mallya over the last two years has shopped around the world for suitable business partners, with creditable success: GTE-ATEA of Belgium and Ericsson of Sweden in telecommunications, Picker (a subsidiary of General Electric) in medical electronics, JFP Well Service and Eaton Industries for oil drilling, Heli-Union of France for aviation services and Pharmacia of Sweden, which Mallya says is the Rolls Royce of bio-technology.

His first project is now about to go into production: a joint venture with the Orissa Government for manufacturing electronic PABX and telephone instruments. He has already bid for an onshore rigs tender floated by the Oil and Natural Gas Commission (ONGC), and Heli-Union's contracts with the ONGC will be transferred to Mallya's joint venture with them. The tie-up with Picker initially involves marketing the company's products in India, and should lead later to a manufacturing arrangement. Last fortnight, he talked of bringing into India laser technology in medical electronics.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

That is not all. He intends broadening the product range of Hyderabad Electronic Instruments, a small company taken over fairly recently, while his entry into Tamil Nadu, Alkaline Batteries will help him get into nickel cadmium technology for batteries. He says he is also looking at solar energy, and he has received a letter of intent from the Government for manufacturing acrylonitrile butadiene styrene (ABS). Another application for manufacturing linear alkyl benzene (LAB), a raw material for synthetic detergents, is pending with the Government.

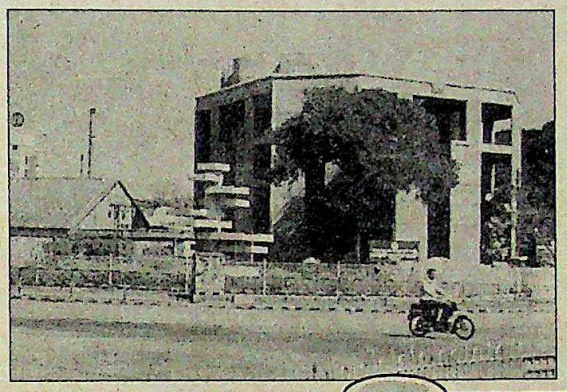
That is an impressive array of projects, judged by any yardstick, and Mallya talks of investing Rs 200 crore in them over the next few years, plus another Rs 100 crore if the LAB licence comes through. Finally, he has sought to be a co-promoter in a Rs 900 crore oil refinery project in Mangalore.

While Mallya's ability to get the required government clearances, as well as to set up large projects and find niches for himself in competitive markets remains to be proved, he is among the first to be close to launching a PABX and electronic telephone instruments.

HE HAS also to prove that he can keep his various existing businesses running smoothly. While many of the companies (like McDowell) are doing well, there are problems too. In a recent communication to his managers and staff, Mallya talks repeatedly of the need for cost control, threatening underlings with "inquiries" and "disciplinary action" if they fail. Group information systems "leave much to be desired", the breweries have had to curtail production for the first time because of sluggish off-season sales, United Breweries had to undergo a three-month lockout, the ketchup business faced new competition in the market from Voltas and Food Specialities (no mean rivals, both), and UB-MEC Batteries is going through a rough period, as is Phipsons, the liquor marketing company.

The figures show that the United Breweries group's turnover has been growing quite rapidly, but that profit margins have been under pressure. While total sales climbed from Rs 316 crore in 1981-82 to Rs 522 crore last year (66 per cent growth in three years), profits dropped from Rs 38.7 crore to Rs 33 crore before recovering last year to Rs 37.8 crore. So the stress on cost-cutting is understandable. But Mallya says that profits in the first half of 1985-86 have grown faster than sales, which have been growing at over 20 per cent.

The new corporate office in the United Breweries complex: ambitious plans



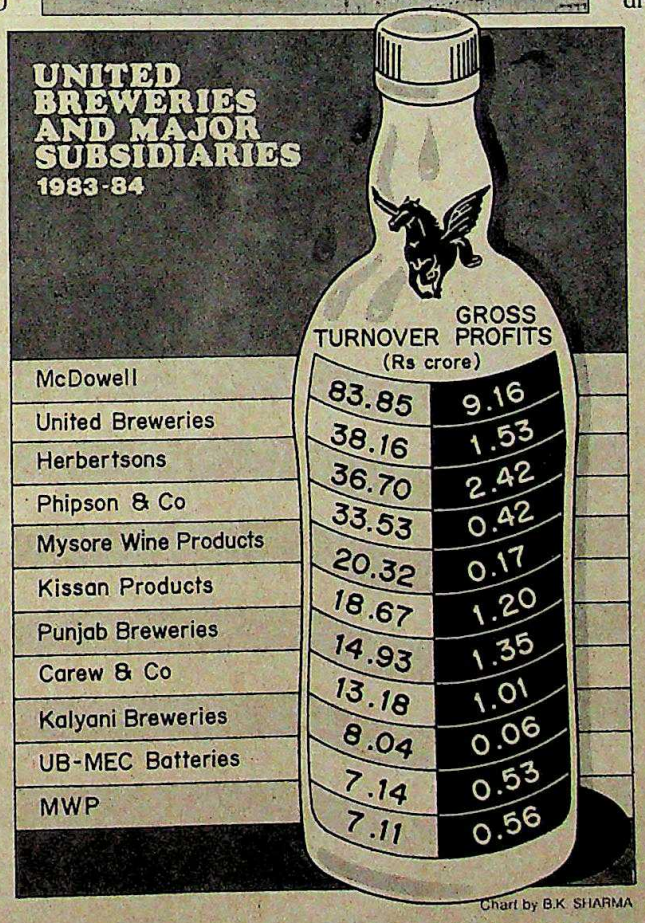


Chart by B.K. SHARMA

COMPANIES IN WHICH MALLYA HAS CONTROLLING INTEREST

	Year	Turnover	Profit (Rs in Crore)
Hoechst	1984	109.28	13.00
Berger Paints	1984–85	73.76	4.73
Roussel	1984	19.13	2.93

Nevertheless, there is no shortage of critics who dismiss the young tycoon's ambitions and business acumen. One well-informed observer pointed to the creation of a host of new (and allegedly superfluous) positions in the corporate headquarters and his hiring people at "wastefully high" salaries, and charged that the current issue of debentures was forced by the fact that many of United Breweries' subsidiaries were desperately short of funds and that they were window-dressing accounts, a charge that Mallya denies. Another critic argued that Mallya was brash rather than confident, and that the young tycoon in fact suffered from a host of internal uncertainties which he sought to cover up with an external aggressiveness. Yet others pointed out that his father would never have got into the kind of scrape that the son has over Shaw Wallace. Accounts vary on whether the old man thought well or badly of his only child.

Mallya seems more than aware of these criticisms, and dismisses them as being born out of jealousy or the inability to accept that a 30-year-old can run a large business. He repeatedly says that "I would have had no problems if I had been 20 years older," and goes as far as to claim that his being dragged into the Shaw Wallace affair was also a product of jealousy and "vested interests".

His business acumen will be proved beyond debate (one way or another) in the next couple of years, when the results of his corporate reorganisation and expansion projects will be there for all to see, but the Shaw Wallace affair is a more immediate nutcracker. In an interview with INDIA TODAY, the since he was linked to the controversial acquisition abroad of Shaw Wallace's 38 per cent overseas shareholding, he explained last fortnight that he had never considered buying the shares himself because he did not have the money abroad, and that his sole objective had been to prevent a rival liquor chain from getting control of the company. This he tried through a friend in Britain, Anthony Chatwell, and other business groups, but to no avail.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Nevertheless, a long chain of circumstantial evidence has linked Mallya to the ultimate purchase of the shares by the Dubai-based M.R.Chhabria. These include the involvement in a variety of ways of his employees or business associates in Singapore and London, and also the involvement of the Hong Kong-based employee of an associate company. There have also been newspaper disclosures of a letter that he wrote to a business associate in Calcutta, claiming that he was buying

INTERVIEW

"I am no takeover king"

FOR SIX months since his offices and homes were raided by the Government, Vijay Mallya has avoided the press. But Mallya, who at 30 is the youngest head of any Rs 800 crore business in the country, is anxious to prove that he is not a spoilt kid but a serious businessman in his own right.

Breaking his long silence for the first time, Mallya spoke to Senior Editor T.N. NINAN for three-and-a-half hours last fortnight at his Bangalore home, on his father's business record, on his corporate plans, and on his involvement in the controversial Shaw Wallace deal. Excerpts:

Q. What was it like to be trained under your father?

A. My father said I would have to either work like any other employee, or not work at all. My first salary of Rs 400 remained unchanged till I took over as chairman. I was not given an office for two years, and then I got a poky corner of an office. After two years I asked for a car, and got a Herald with difficulty.

As for my father, God, he was terribly strict. Initially, he would examine every letter that I wrote. It was only after he got confidence in me that he began to leave things in my hands.

Q. You have this image of a high-flier, with expensive cars and your record in Grand Prix racing.

A. I do have some expensive cars, but I object to this image of a high-flier. I am a serious businessman. The problem is my age. If I was 20 years older, no one would say anything.

Q. You seem to like horses: you have busts of horses in your office, and you own racing horses.

A. Yes, I like horses. The horse is the company symbol. And I own eight horses. But I do not bet on mine or other people's horses. In fact I do not bet at all.

Q. You also have this image of being a spoilt son of a rich father. People talk of your expensive watches, your estate in Hertfordshire outside London, and a house in Singapore with expensive gadgetry.

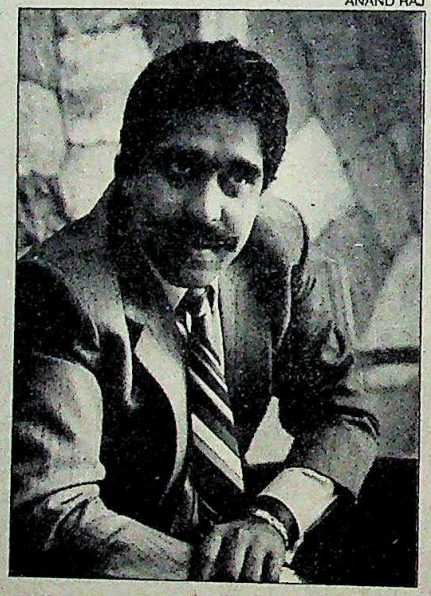
A. All this is rubbish. This watch is Swiss, it isn't very expensive, and you can see the strap is steel. I know I have the image of being a spoilt kid, but in 20 years I will be known as a king in my own right.

ANAND RAJ



Mallya: "I have nerves of steel"

I do not own any estate in Hertfordshire. If I am in England over a week-end, I stay with a friend, Anthony Chatwell, who has an estate. And in Singapore, I stay with friends or in a hotel.

Q. You have changed a lot of things after you took charge. Why?

A. My father's vision and foresight were brilliant. But I found several managerial inadequacies, including a lack of accountability and cost consciousness. My father's style was too personal and forgiving. And he didn't believe in delegation. Every invoice had to go to him.

Q. So what changes have you made?

A. I had to decentralise. I introduced a new personnel policy in terms of grades, proper job definitions and accountability. I upped pay scales after I found what other companies were paying. I created the corporate management group. I set new standards of performance.

Q. How has restructuring helped?

A. I grouped the business under different heads, with a president in charge of each group. Earlier, Kissan and Dipy's were separate brands and companies, and each was spending money to promote himself and kill the other brand. But both are my companies and my brands. So I have stopped this.

Q. Did you run into problems in stepping into your father's shoes?

A. Some people couldn't accept a man half their age as boss. But I proved that I am more competent than them.

Q. Do you believe in takeovers, like your father?

A. I do not believe in unfriendly takeovers, and my father didn't either. I have two or three takeover prospects, but I don't want to be a takeover king.

Q. Why are you entering unfamiliar areas of business through your diversification programme?

A. Hindustan Polymers and UB-MEC Batteries were unfamiliar business too, when my father took them over. Both are now doing well. The point is that liquor does not find favour with the Government. So I am using the profits for going into core sector and high technology areas. But liquor will of course remain the mainstay of our business.

Q. What is the problem that you now have with your bank accounts?

A. The Government says that we should not have claimed a tax benefit on a company merger in 1982-83. But if not in that year, then the benefit would be available in the next year, when the merger was formally okayed. But they have frozen all McDowell bank accounts and asked our debtors to pay money directly to them.

Q. What exactly was your role in Shaw Wallace?

A. In May 1984, I heard that a rival liquor group was planning to take over Shaw Wallace. This was confirmed to

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Shaw Wallace offshore, and of a document from Standard Chartered Bank which mentions him as half-owner of the company that eventually bought the shares.

Mallya, however, has his explanations for each of these points (see interview), and insists that he has not invested in Shaw Wallace, a point on which the evidence that has surfaced so far does not provide a clincher. And as Mallya rightly points out, this is a criminal case and the onus of proof is on the Government.

If the country's liquor prince is finally able to put Shaw Wallace behind him, he will get the chance that he desperately seeks to prove to the world that he knows more about life than driving fast cars round tricky corners, and that he is just as adept at being a businessman in the fast lane.

—T.N.NINAN

me by my Singapore-based president, Morris Mathias, who had also been approached by a middleman, Horace Langois, who is a friend of mine as well as Mathias. I told Morris we couldn't afford the takeover and to prevent this rival group from getting the company.

Morris then called and asked me if it was all right if he asked other overseas groups to come in, and among several others he approached Anthony Chatwell, the friend I stay with in England. Chatwell runs the largest foods business in the UK, and his business interests tied in with Shaw Wallace's operations. He was also interested in getting Thames Rice Milling, one of the companies that held the Shaw Wallace shares, because he had dealt with this company earlier and wanted the name and goodwill.

But in October 1984 Mrs Gandhi was assassinated, there was unrest in India, and the pound also lost heavily in value. So Chatwell said he was no longer interested. Apparently, Langois had by then already been in touch with M.R.Chhabria, who eventually bought the Shaw Wallace shares.

Q. But you wrote to one Mr Bhagat, a business colleague of yours in Calcutta, telling him that you were getting control of Shaw Wallace.

A. That's when Chatwell was involved.

Q. Why did you ask Bhagat to destroy your letter?

A. He also asked me why he should destroy it. I told him that every employee of United Breweries would invest in Shaw Wallace.

Q. Morris Mathias seems to have been involved right through.

A. He only allowed the use of his office and telex by Langois. Let anyone prove that I invested in Shaw Wallace.

Q. The enforcement directorate says you have a stake in Carrasco and Amarante, the two Hong Kong companies involved in the takeover.

A. I have no investment in either.

Q. But Bhattacharya, who is your employee in a restaurant company, was a director of Amarante.

A. Bhattacharya was a director of Amarante for only two months. And he is not my employee. He is an employee of a company which is managed by another company with which my people have a management contract. The owner of Bhattacharya's company in fact has 30 restaurants in the Far East.

Q. Your London employee, Walavalkar, was involved too.

A. Walavalkar is not my employee. And he merely signed on behalf of Langois because Langois could not be there on the spot. He did this after Langois gave him full personal indemnity. Suppose I am in Bangalore and you as a friend are in Delhi and I ask you to sign for me with full personal indemnity, won't you sign?

> "I object to this image of a high-flier. I am a serious businessman. The problem is my age. If I was 20 years older, no one would say anything."

Q. There is the document from Standard Chartered Bank which says you owned half of Carrasco.

A. For all I know such a document never existed. In any case, I have never talked to Standard Chartered, and am not aware of any proposal made by the bank.

Q. Did you talk to an officer of Grindlays in London, who then talked to Standard Chartered?

A. Brijesh Mathur at Grindlays is a friend, but I do not discuss business with him. In any case, if Grindlays spoke to Standard Chartered who in turn floated a document, this was without my knowledge or permission. So there can be no criminal liability on me. The onus of proving this is on the people who make the allegations.

Q. A newspaper has suggested that you financed the Shaw Wallace purchase by using a $ 10 million loan from the State Bank in Singapore.

A. Ninety per cent of that is in the form of advances against letters of credit. So there is no cash credit involved.

Q. Do you regret your involvement in the Shaw Wallace affair?

A. Not at all. It was never my intention to participate in Shaw Wallace. I achieved my objective of preventing a rival group from getting control of the company.

Q. What of all these companies in Singapore that the Government says you own, and which you say you have a management contract with.

A. We had written to the Reserve Bank about this, we had remitted home the money earned through the management contract. The Reserve Bank never objected. So what is the point in now charging us with crime?

Q. I understand the enforcement officials were very rough with you and your people, and that you broke down before Swaminathan, the additional director of enforcement.

A. No I did not break down. I have nerves of steel, and I have withstood this for six months. I have great respect for Swaminathan. He is a very intelligent interrogator. Nobody brutalised me or anyone else in my group. Swaminathan did lose his temper and shout a few times, but you see my submission and decide who broke down.

But my general manager in Singapore, V.S.Kumar, objected to the manner in which he was questioned by Swaminathan and resigned.

Q. Even after your home and offices were raided last July, you did not return to India for over a month.

A. Because I had nothing to hide, nothing to rush back to hush up.

Q. Do you believe that V.P.Singh is after you for any reason?

A. V.P.Singh is not after me, he is after all people he believes have broken the law, and he is backing his officers in the same fashion that I would back my executives.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SWADESHI POLYTEX

A Battle Royal

"CHOOSE the right management," the front page advertisement in the Indian Express exhorted. And with that, Mahendra Swarup, vice-chairman of Swadeshi Polytex, formally plunged the troubled company into a fresh controversy and a renewed fight for managerial control.

The attention-grabbing notice followed close on the heels of a letter which Swadeshi Polytex Chairman Rajaram Jaipuria sent last fortnight to the staple fibre firm's 12,000 shareholders soliciting their votes at the company's next shareholders' meeting in March. Some days later, a lawyer in the capital served notice on the company's directors that an unnamed client wanted to remove Swarup, his son Gaurav and two of their nominees from the 12-member board.

The two events may have been unrelated, but they seemed to have severed the uneasy marriage between the Swarups and Rajaram, a marriage that had helped them take control of the Rs 68-crore company last August after ousting Rajaram's nephew, Ashok. In any event, the Swarups swiftly went on the offensive. Mahendra Swarup shot off a letter to shareholders soliciting their proxies, charging "directors of the other group" with "dilatory tactics" with regard to the company's expansion plans.

A battle royal is clearly on, though an unruffled Rajaram insists that there is nothing unusual in his seeking proxies: "This is a common practice every year, and there is no question of a proxy war." This would make little sense given the company's shareholding pattern (around 24 per cent of the stock is held by the public; the balance is held by four major shareholders). He also dismisses the lawyer's notice as of little consequence, saying that it cannot stand legal scrutiny because the client has to be named in such notices. And he claims the company is not plagued by any tensions or problems: "Things are going well, much beyond my expectations when I took over."

Swarup, who is also chairman of Paharpur Cooling Towers, thinks otherwise, for he said: "It cannot be said that all is well. There are differences in management style and philosophy."

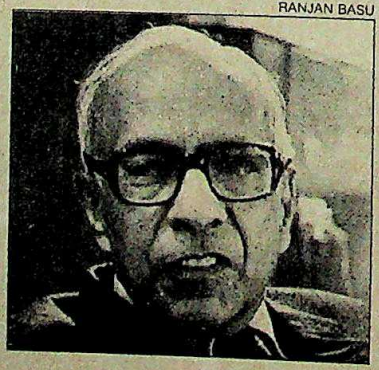
The differences surfaced shortly after the new management assumed office six months ago. Reflecting precisely this, the Swarups had gone shopping for Swadeshi Polytex shares on the market on a modest scale. Then, the Swarups say they sounded Ashok Jaipuria on a re-alignment of partners, so that both could get together against Rajaram. Meanwhile, Rajaram himself went to Ashok for support, turning his back on a decade-long tussle between Ashok's late father Sitaram and Rajaram (the two are foster-brothers). These rapid and unexpected developments have made Ashok the key figure in the latest round of tussling, so that just six months after making an exit from the money-spinning company he is once again poised to become its chief arbiter.

RANJAN BASU

"There is no question of a proxy war. Things are going well, much beyond my expectations when I took over."

RAJARAM JAIPURIA
Chairman, Swadeshi Polytex

RANJAN BASU



"It cannot be said that all is well. There are differences in management style and philosophy."

MAHENDRA SWARUP
vice-chairman, Swadeshi Polytex, and chairman, Paharpur cooling Towers

The company's shareholding pattern makes the outcome of the face-off unpredictable. Ashok says he controls "over 14 per cent" of Swadeshi Polytex stock (others put the figure at 9.7 per cent), while the Swarups have 17 per cent. Rajaram in turn controls 34 per cent, most of them through his company Swadeshi Cotton Mills. Finally, the financial institutions hold around 16 per cent of the shares. Thus, Ashok could swing the balance if he decides to team up with Rajaram, but will probably need the financial institutions' support if he backs the Swarups. The institutions, therefore, are the joker in the pack.

Ashok confirms that he has been meeting both uncle Rajaram and the Swarups, but says "I have not yet made up my mind on what to do." Rajaram insists that his meetings with Ashok have no special significance: "After all, we are one family and we meet on social occasions. This does not have much relevance."

But Rajaram's disclaimers are less than convincing. Notes an independent member of the company's board: "The whole history of conflict in Swadeshi Polytex is now being repeated, and this is very unfortunate." Certainly, few could have expected that the marriage of convenience between Rajaram and the Swarups would prove so short-lived. Earlier, they had been backing Ashok's father Sitaram (who died shortly before the results of the crucial vote last year were known). But the Swarups switched sides after striking a management-sharing deal with Rajaram. Under the agreement, Rajaram and Swarup would be non-executive chairman and vice-chairman, respectively. The board-managed company would have a three-member committee monitoring the firm's functioning, with senior managers reporting to the committee. Other stipulations included leaving the day-to-day affairs of the company in the hands of the professional managers, non-interference by the committee, and imple-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SINGAPORE GIRL, YOU PUT A SMILE ON THE FACE OF THE EARTH.

A great way to fly
SINGAPORE AIRLINES

2S85

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

India is the land of freedom. She is a lesson in tolerance. A living, breathing example that brotherhood is a state of being even absolute strangers can share.

In India, you can hear the music of fifteen languages, experience the divinity of three world religions and taste the flavour of a life seasoned with variety. The world finds India fascinating because her mystery cannot be easily fathomed. She means different things to different people.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

To discover India, you must travel and see her as she lives day to day in all her diversity. A fear many of us have about travelling to unknown places is that we cannot speak any language other than our own. In fact, for an Indian this is hardly a handicap. Almost all Indian languages have common roots. In no time, you'll find yourself picking up a few choice phrases of the language of the state you happen to be visiting. In addition to being of invaluable assistance during your holiday, these phrases will become a souvenir to bring home from the trip.

Besides the facility with which your ears become attuned to the languages of India, you also have the never-failing advantage of body language. A form of communication that is older and sometimes more

How to speak just one a country that sp

CC-0. Public Domain. Digitized by eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

loquent than words. Over the years, ome classical Indian gestures have ome into being.

The 'namaste' gesture, like the alaam' means a greeting in any nguage. In fact, thinking up gestures communicate your need can be ery good fun and you can be sure the ther person will join in the spirit of hings and help as much as he is able.

Travel is an adventure that aturally includes strange lands, strange people, strange customs, strange food, strange everything. What you get out of the experience depends on how you approach it. A healthy curiosity and a readiness to enjoy every novelty will do what travel is meant to... i.e. enrich the mind.

Department of Tourism
Government of India

Discover India
Discover yourself

anguage and travel in speaks fifteen.

CC-0. In Public Domain.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Often, fun is measured in handfuls.

NP Mini CHEWING GUM

Pioneers in chewing gums and bubble gums.

Manufactured by: NATIONAL PRODUCTS, Bangalore 560 032.

Dattaram-NP1/82

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

mentation of the company's expansion and diversification programme.

But soon enough the fur began to fly. The two factions crossed swords on numerous issues—from the choice of foreign technology for plant capacity expansion to Rajaram's alleged improprieties in using company perquisites as non-executive chairman.

The Sitaram-run management had signed up with Britain's ICI for know-how to step up plant capacity. Rajaram, however, regarded their technology as obsolete, favouring instead a tie-up with Zimmer, the German firm that had originally supplied know-how to Swadeshi Polytex. Rajaram said that their technology was even then superior, and that competitors who are now expanding their production capacities have stuck to similar know-how. On the other hand, the Swarups have argued that work on jacking up capacities could have begun much earlier had Rajaram agreed to the ICI collaboration, and that speed is of the essence when facing competition.

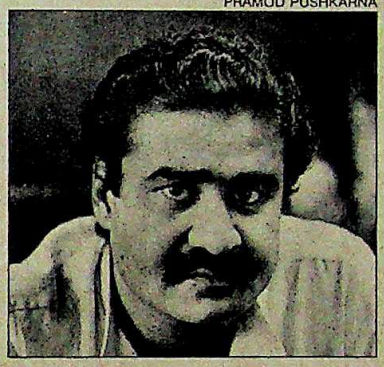
More serious are the charges levelled at Rajaram himself: interfering with the company's day-to-day running, thereby violating the terms of the understanding with the Swarups, and seeking the exit of a vice-president. Tagged on to this are such minor accusations as using company cars and distributing boxes of pistas worth over Rs 39,000 as Diwali gifts. Indeed, Swarup seems to have raised these matters in letters to Rajaram. However, the Swadeshi Polytex chairman argues that "anyone who is a large shareholder has to protect his interests. And even assuming that the company's executives spent some Rs 30,000, will it make any difference to the company's fortunes? The previous management gave Diwali gifts. This is customary with every company."

BUT A businessman close to the Swarups insists that the expenditures should have been clearly listed or explained, and that broader issues of clean management and of observing the proprieties in corporations are at stake. Going further, he says that the Swarups talked to Ashok Jaipuria on the understanding that he would stick to such principles. Finally, he claims that the staff is demoralised, and that many senior employees have left Swadeshi Polytex.

Not all those who have been closely following events in the company buy this. Says an interested observer: "Much of the opposition to Rajaram is opposition for the sake of opposition. The Swarups may have come on the board of the company to protect their share investments, but their aspirations changed." This may not be true. The Swarups say they would be willing to let the institutions run the firm. In any case, at a board meeting last fortnight, the Swarups and their nominees seem to have suggested the appointment of a whole-time managing director for the company, but the matter was deferred till February 22, when the board meets next.

If these developments have the ingredients of a corporate thriller, high drama had unfolded itself on other fronts. Nearly two months ago, the Uttar Pradesh Government moved to dispose of 10 lakh Swadeshi Polytex shares owned by Swadeshi Cotton Mills. The shares themselves were attached some eight years ago against dues that Swadeshi Cotton owed the Uttar Pradesh Government. Since much of Rajaram's stake in Swadeshi Polytex is through these shares, selling them would jeopardise his position in the company. But G.K. Daruka, a Swadeshi Cotton shareholder, got an interim court order staying the sale of the shares. (Interestingly, the Rajaram-owned daily newspaper, Pioneer, carries Daruka's name on the print line, but Rajaram contends that Daruka has a separate entity as a shareholder.)

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



"I have not yet made up my mind on what to do."

ASHOK JAIPURIA
Chairman, Cosmo Films

Shortly after the Uttar Pradesh Government's initiative became public knowledge, a number of companies wrote to state government officials in Kanpur expressing their interest in buying the shares. This included Swarup's Paharpur Cooling Towers, which enclosed a photo-copy of a draft for Rs 50 lakh to show that the firm meant business. Ashok Jaipuria is also believed to have written to the state Government in this connection, but declines comment.

Apart from the action in Uttar Pradesh, the key to controlling Swadeshi Polytex lies with the Government. Almost eight years ago, the Centre took over six Swadeshi Cotton textile units, but not the company itself, and slapped a moratorium on their liabilities. The Government has repeatedly extended the take-over and the moratorium every year. Now it is likely to nationalise the units in April, and Rajaram may in fact be able to use the compensation he gets at that stage to clear his dues to the Uttar Pradesh Government. But the state Government, after waiting for so long to get its money, decided to act and sell the Swadeshi Polytex shares so that it gets its money immediately. The court stay order has, however, put a stop to this.

In another sense also, the Government will be a key player between now and March, because the financial institutions will have to decide how they use their 16 per cent shareholding strength in the coming proxy battle. So one thing is certain: both the institutions as well as the ordinary shareholders of the company will be hotly wooed in the coming weeks, as indeed will Ashok Jaipuria.

While the ultimate outcome of this latest round in a long-running saga remains unpredictable, the diminutive chairman of Swadeshi Polytex thinks that he will have an edge in any fight. Company profits are up from Rs 3.55 crore the year before to Rs 5.80 crore last year, and dividends have been raised from 20 per cent to 25 per cent. The snag in this is that the Swarups too claim credit for the better performance ("realisations are up"), while Ashok Jaipuria points out that the new management took over in August and could not have done much by October, when the company's financial year ended. Rajaram has a ready answer to this too: he was in the company along with Ashok by last February, under a compromise out by the Supreme Court.

The truth in all this is difficult to determine. What is clear is that Rajaram is a dogged fighter, the Swarups are bracing for battle and the shareholders' meeting in March is unlikely to mark the end of the story.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CIGARETTES

The Tobacco Tussle

SUDDENLY the stalls are full of them. Nestling cheek by jowl with well-known cigarette brands are a host of new names: Lords, Now, Stride, Golden G1 and many more. Manufacturers are launching mint-new brands in rapid fire succession, with the promise of many more to follow. And the market-place is full of the smoke and fire associated with a major battle for the smoker's attention.

As the sales graphs of some of the new brands have climbed swiftly, established brands have taken a beating and industry sales as a whole have tumbled by 10 to 15 per cent. Undaunted, the tobacco companies are even now scrambling to fill what they see as vacant market slots. "Everything has turned topsy-turvy," says Dipak Basu, chief of marketing and sales at Godfrey Phillips India, the Modi-owned cigarette company that ranks third.

What has turned the cigarette industry on its head is the official notification last September which did away with an earlier multi-layered excise structure. Instead, the Government clubbed cigarette prices into five slabs for excise purposes, the duty changing at the 60 paise, Rs 1.70, Rs 3, and Rs 5.50 points. Apart from simplifying the tax structure, the move was meant to prevent firms from floating deceptively similar brands priced differently, a practice that tax men believed led to excise fiddles (INDIA TODAY, October 31, 1985). The new tax rates forced tobacco companies to jack up prices by 30 per cent or more. And the battle was on.

Cigarettes are price sensitive, and the first result was that the overall market shrank. Smokers today are puffing away at about a billion fewer cigarettes a month (almost 13 per cent) and many have moved downmarket to cheaper brands (see chart). A quick analysis by one cigarette company executive suggests that smokers are also switching to filter-tipped cigarettes from non-filtered ones, partly because of the new excise structure.

Inevitably, all this is mirrored in the sales of the leading brands. ITC raised the price of Wills Filter (once the country's largest selling filter cigarette), from Rs 3.60 to Rs 5.15, and the company's flagship product dropped an estimated 130 million (almost 32.5 per cent) in monthly sales. Sanjay Dalmia, president of GTC Industries (formerly Golden Tobacco Company), acknowledges that the sales graphs of Panama Filter Kings and non-filtered Panama cigarettes have dipped.

But in the case of both the firms, this has been partly offset by other brands taking up some of the slack. ITC's non-filter Scissors, whose price was marked up from Rs 1.30 to Rs 1.70, has been going great guns, and some other ITC brands have been faring well too. Also, GTC's regular Panama filter cigarettes and the company's Style have surged ahead in the market-place. Indeed Style is now the envy of the company's rivals.

Clearly, new slots have been created almost overnight, and the companies have been quick to recognise this. ITC launched Now (Rs 1.70 for 10) in three metropolitan cities recently, and is poised to extend the brand to Calcutta this month. Says a company official: "Style was sweeping the market and we needed a low-priced filter cigarette to match it." A company spokesman claims that 45 million Now cigarettes are sold every month, and that ITC has set itself an ambitious monthly sales target of around 250 million. The tobacco giant followed this up last fortnight by hawking a brand called Stride (Rs 5.60 for 20) in Madras. That may take on GTC's Lords which at Rs 6 for 20 is only marginally more expensive. Amidst this flurry of activity, firms such as Godfrey Phillips are unlikely to remain on the sidelines for long. The Modi company could be eyeing the Rs 1.70 slot as well as more expensive segments of the market, though company officials decline to comment on this.

The skirmishing is not limited to the middle of the market. GTC and others are now focusing their attention on the bottom-range 60 paise (for 10 cigarettes) price slot. GTC has launched or will introduce half a dozen brands in this price range, with such unlikely names as Golden A1, P1, and G1, and the Calcutta-based New Tobacco Company is expected to follow suit with similar cigarettes. Even ITC is planning "to expand the market" by launching cheaper brands, though the tobacco giant does not have a 60 paise brand on its drawing-boards at the moment.

If that promises a further hotting up of the action, Dalmia believes that the market turbulence is temporary. But others

Some of the new brands in the market: switch in strategy

	*Monthly Sales million cigarettes		% Change
	Before Sep '85	NOW
KING SIZED PREMIUM FILTER PRICE BEFORE SEP '85: 40-50 PAISE PRICE NOW: 60 PAISE	543	450	-17
KING SIZED POPULAR FILTER PRICE BEFORE SEP '85: 25-30 PAISE PRICE NOW: 25-35 PAISE	975	1170	+20
REGULAR PREMIUM FILTER PRICE BEFORE SEP '85: 25-30 PAISE PRICE NOW: 35 PAISE	970	715	-26
POPULAR REGULAR FILTER PRICE BEFORE SEP '85: 15-20 PAISE PRICE NOW: 20 PAISE	1109	1265	+14
ALL NON-FILTER	4555	3500	-23

* Quick estimates

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

argue that things will get worse before they get better. For one, further excise changes could be in the offing in the coming budget, and the cigarette majors will clearly show their full hand only after March. Industry men claim that the latest duty rates have made pricing a difficult business: all cigarettes priced at between 61 paise and Rs 1.70 have the same excise burden, so that there are at the moment no cigarettes priced between 60 paise and Rs 1.70. But this could change soon.

More important, the new excise structure does not seem to have reduced excise evasion in the industry, which was one of the Government's stated goals last September. Some industry executives darkly hint at fiddles continuing in the 60 paise range of cigarettes. They contend that cigarette packets priced at 60 paise are not really viable because the excise burden is as high as 42 paise. So most cigarettes continue to be sold in the market at higher than the printed price, and it is entirely possible that a part of this extra take finds its way back to the companies or those who run the companies. Argues an executive of a major firm: "At 60 paise, the duty is 42 paise. That leaves the manufacturer with just 18 paise to meet profits and expenditure on everything from raw tobacco to processing costs, packaging and advertising. How can he do so unless he resorts to a fiddle?" But Sanjay Dalmia, whose GTC is heavily into 60 paise cigarettes, dismisses the charge. Nevertheless, the Central Board of Excise and Customs (CBEC) may decide to make another move on the cigarette excise front.

With most cigarettes sold at far above the price marked on the packets, huge amounts are clearly escaping the excise net. The Government has imposed excise on the printed price for the last two years in a bid to reduce tax disputes, but firms cut the trade margins which were included in the price and traders tagged on their own extra margins. Tobacco companies, however, shrug and point an accusing finger at the trader. Says an ITC spokesman: "As far as we are concerned, the mark-up is done by the traders and it is up to the weights and measures directorate to check this."

Here too, the Government could take action soon. Says a senior CBEC official: "The basic malady has not been taken care of. Cigarettes are sold at more than the maximum price and something will have to be done about this." No one can argue with that statement, but if it is translated into action more upheavals in the cigarette market are certain

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

BUSINESSPEAK

MOHAN SINGH OBEROI

Gracious Host

MOHAN Singh Oberoi has a problem. Two months ago, the 85-year-old founder and chairman of the Oberoi chain of 26 hotels received from the Egyptian Government the "Order of the Republic-First Class". The award comes in the form of two multi-pointed stars that are worth their weight in gold, because they are mostly made of solid gold. A mildly worried Oberoi says he has written to the Reserve Bank to make sure that it is in order to keep so much gold.

There are numerous other awards in the show-case cabinet in Oberoi's compact farmhouse, set in a 100-acre farm where he tends his 50,000 chickens, grows wheat whose quality he is inordinately proud of, and crosses cauliflowers with flowers to get a hybrid strain that he happily displays in his drawing-room. But the gentleman farmer remains an active hotelier, cheered by the Government's recent decision to exempt hotels from the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, and by the decisions of various state governments to grant hoteliering the status of (and therefore the inducements due to) an industry. "The Government is on the right track," he says.

He is less enthused by the official talk of giving a new thrust to tourism. "The Government talks big, let us see how far the plans are implemented. Each new minister makes long speeches, but so far our experience has not been good."

Nevertheless, the stocky hotelier is busy planning the future: a new chain of three-star hotels as well as five-star projects in Agra, Jaipur and Varanasi. And he will be off soon on an inspection tour of hotels in the United States, Australia and Indonesia. "All my visits abroad have been business holidays," he says. On his first visit abroad 40 years ago, he drove his family to distraction because he would do nothing other than look at hotels. Every day he dictated his observations to his daughters, who came back with 11 notebooks full of comments.

Even today, the sprightly chairman goes through every one of the suggestions made by his hotels' customers. And he clearly has an eye for detail: "Take toilet rolls. If you put two of them side by side in a bathroom, the guests will use both of them. You must put them one on top of the other, so that only the top one is used and the bottom one remains as reserve." He says he learnt most of his hoteliering himself: "No hotelier abroad has done better than we have. I have seen almost all the hotels in the world, and we're competing with them."

He is critical of most rival hotel chains in the country: "Take the Siddharth Continental fire last week. The whole thing was badly handled. They should have warned the guests. Instead, they switched off the lights. There were gas masks downstairs, but no one used them. And most of the deaths were because of suffocation. It could easily have been avoided. The people were not trained properly. How can you function without trained staff?"

The day after the fire, Oberoi went to his flagship hotel in New Delhi, inspected the fire-fighting arrangements, and ordered that fire drills be conducted every fortnight. "The guests might complain about the frequent fire drills, but it is better to get complaints than to lose your life."

Looking back on an eventful life, Oberoi is amiably candid about his brief political career: "I didn't want to be in politics, I just wanted to be a member of Parliament. It is nice to be an MP, and to sit in the House." So he sat in the Lok Sabha as a member of the tribal Jharkhand party, and then in the Rajya Sabha as a member of the Bharatiya Kranti Dal. Explaining this odd choice of political colour, he says simply: "I couldn't have got in as an independent."

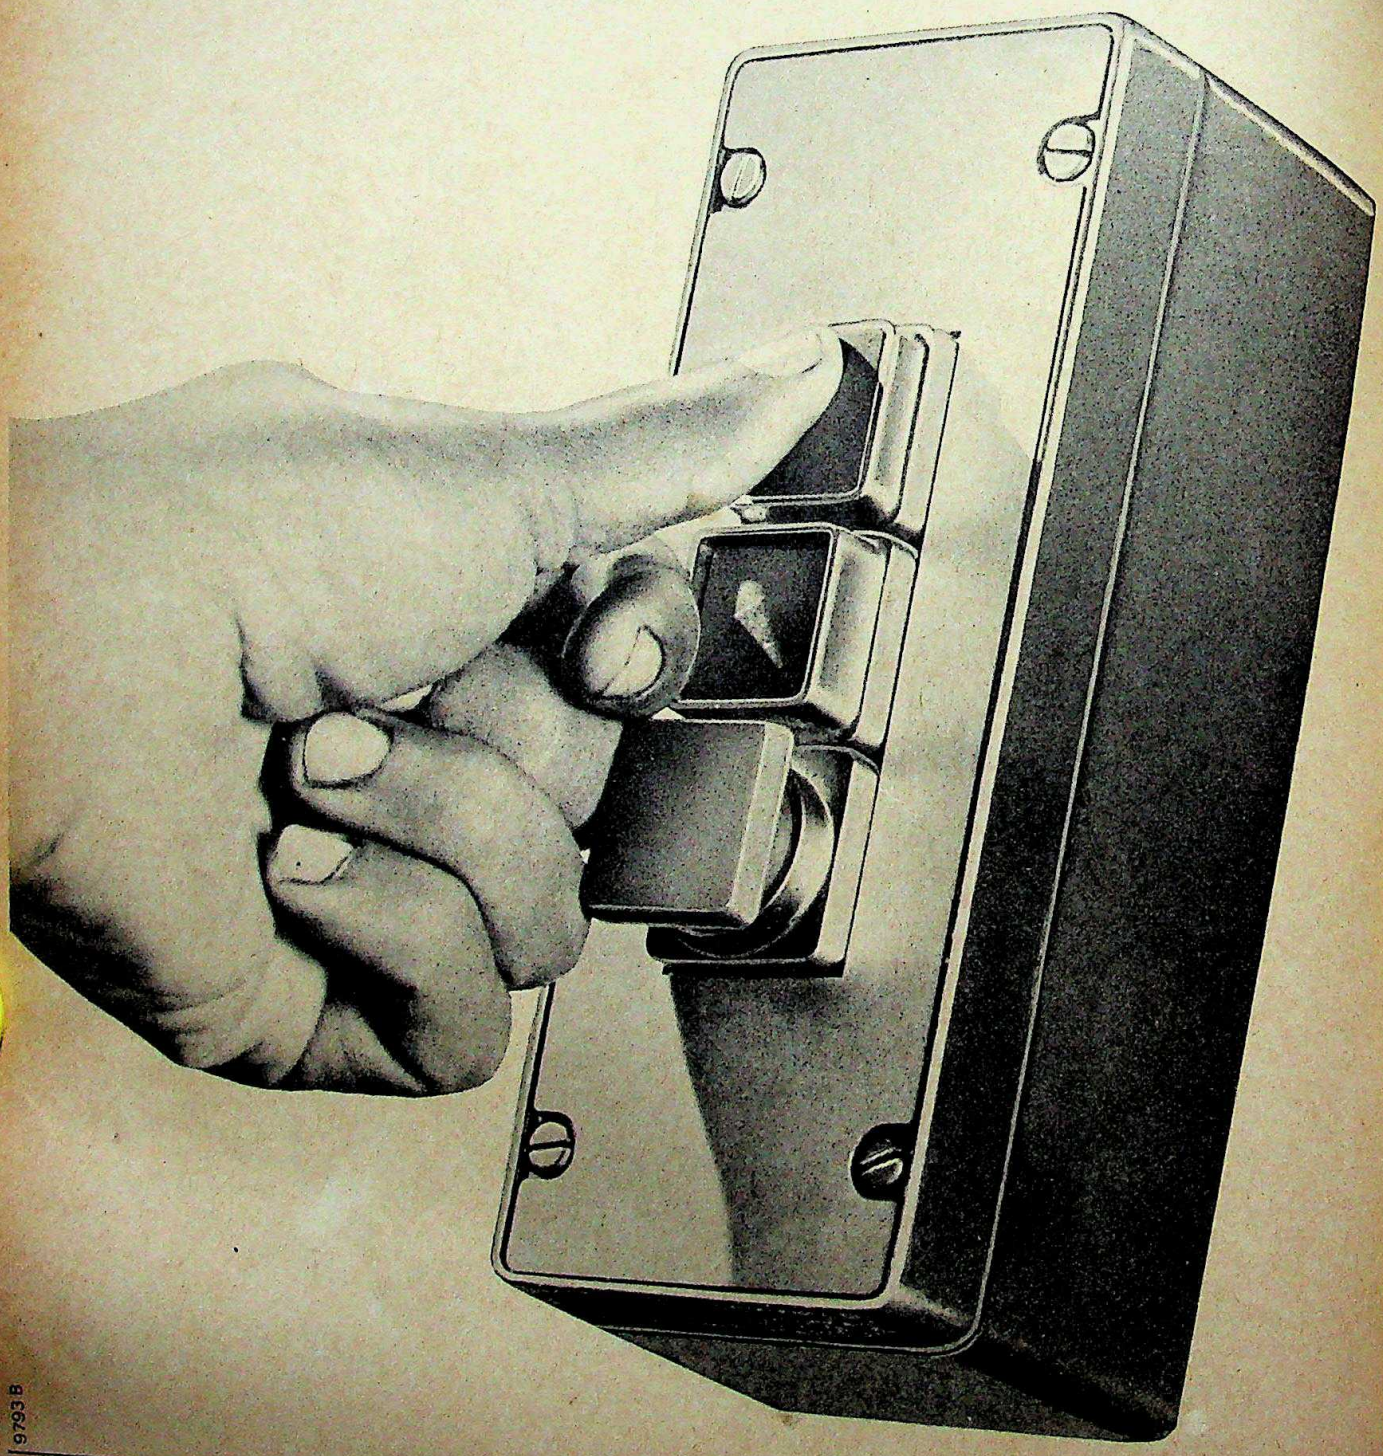
Asked if he isn't bored after 52 years of reading complaints about toilet rolls, he shoots back: "I love hoteliering. How can you be bored with something you have created? Do you get bored?" So while pottering around his well-tended farm, he continues to look ahead, to the prospect of perhaps diversifying into air charters, and to India "becoming a big power one of these days".

—T.N.NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

To accelerat



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

What's up at Dunlop: 2

India's industrial movement...

Dunlop introduces world-leading BTR conveyor belt technology

Now Dunlop India sets up a Rs. 20 crore project to manufacture steel cord conveyor belting.

For the first time in India.

In collaboration once again with none but the best.

BTR Belting Limited. The British conglomerate acknowledged as the pioneer and world's leading manufacturer of steel cord conveyor belting including the internationally famous 'Silvercord'.

This new project will soon make Dunlop India's Conveyor Belting operation at Sahaganj, West Bengal, one of the most sophisticated of its kind in Asia.

What are the other far-reaching implications of the Dunlop-BTR technical tie-up?

In a word : quality.

Cross-section of a steel cord conveyor belt — designed for increased working strength, higher flexibility and greater safety.

Superior quality steel cord belting which allows for longer hauls, larger capacities and higher speeds.

And, for the first time in India, a belting that is specially designed for use in steel plants, port handling and coal, lignite and iron ore mines.

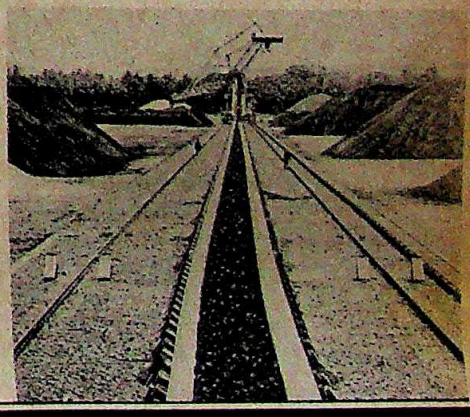
But that's not all.

The Dunlop-BTR tie-up will save the country a large amount of foreign exchange. By manufacturing indigenously a world-class advanced technology steel cord belt. And, most importantly, Dunlop's commitment to investment in R&D continues to bear fruit in terms of high technology products for the country.

All this is an indication of the revitalisation of Dunlop.

Yet another way in which Dunlop India contributes to Indian industry's march into the twenty-first century.

DUNLOP INDIA
The first name - the latest technology



Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CALCUTTA

The Take-over Fever

INDIA'S stock-markets have now got accustomed to boom times and spiralling share price graphs. But jumpiness on the stock exchange is another thing altogether. And Calcutta's Lyons Range stock exchange has been unusually excitable in recent weeks, with even hard-nosed brokers and major players on the market getting bitten by the take-over bug. Reports have surfaced every few days about a fresh blue chip company being taken over by local businessmen, and the concerned companies' share prices have quickly gone through the roof.

Indian Explosives Ltd (IEL), the chemical giant with a turnover of Rs 520 crore, was reported to have been bagged by the redoubtable Aditya Birla. Cigarette monolith ITC's parent company in Britain was believed to be trying to disinvest; B.M. Khaitan of Macneill and Magor moved into Metal Box; battery manufacturer Chloride India (sales: Rs 75 crore) was said to be up for grabs; R.P. Goenka took control of the ailing Gramophone Company of India, and his younger brother G. P. Goenka was trying to get a firm grip on Kolay Biscuits while simultaneously negotiating a joint venture for the West Bengal Government-owned Webel Video Devices after taking charge of the company's management.

Some of the talk of take-overs, however, seemed at best premature and perhaps altogether baseless. G.P.Goenka, for instance, flatly denied newspaper reports that he had negotiated a deal for acquiring a controlling interest in Britannia Industries and told INDIA TODAY: "Britannia is a damn good company, but I don't have the money to buy the damn thing. And there is nothing to all these rumours that I am trying to acquire companies like Glaxo or even ITC." ITC spokesmen similarly dismissed all talk of a change of hands as unfounded rumour, and although Aditya Birla could not be reached, people close to him denied any link with IEL. It also seemed far from clear whether there was anything to the talk of Chloride India changing hands.

But the stock-market would not be quietened by the denials, recalling a similar phase in late 1984, when Shaw Wallace shares continued to register new price peaks despite repeated denials of any take-over bid. Finally, a take-over bid did materialise. The Gramophone Company of India too had in the past repeatedly denied any disinvestment by its British parent company, as indeed had Dunlop India before the Goenka take-over two years ago.

So IEL's share climbed from Rs 55 to Rs 82 in a matter of weeks. Other shares behaved in similar fashion: Chloride India's share jumped from Rs 70 to Rs 108, and ITC's from Rs 45 to Rs 55. More understandably (given the Khaitan entry), Metal Box's share climbed from Rs 16 to Rs 27.50. If there was indeed any evidence of corporate battles looming ahead, it was limited for the moment to these share price movements.

Nevertheless, the city's business circles were abuzz with speculation that M.R. Chhabria's brush with the Government in his bid to acquire the overseas shareholding in Shaw Wallace might have made the buyers in companies like IEL wary of announcing their acquisition just now, particularly when the Government was busy raiding business premises across the country. But at least in IEL's case there may be little substance to the reports of a take-over. Apparently the four ICI companies that came together under the IEL umbrella not long ago had given a specific commitment to the Government that if ICI in Britain decided to disinvest, the shares would be first offered to the Government.

For the moment, the biggest formal move had been made by Khaitan, who worked out a tie-up with the ailing packaging giant Metal Box (turnover in the last 18-month financial year: Rs 198 crore) and was waiting for the Government's green signal for picking up a 10 per cent stake in the company. Meanwhile, he himself, his son Deepak and a British nominee moved onto Metal Box's board.

The Goenka brothers were also making the headlines with their moves. R.P.Goenka was waiting for Thorn-EMI of London to agree to a rights issue that would give him a stake in the Gramophone Company of India (sales: Rs 13.33 crore, loss: Rs 3.97 crore), which he and a Bombay-based associate, Udayan Basu, have been managing for the last couple of months. G.P.Goenka, meanwhile, had already struck a deal with the owners of the virtually defunct Kolay Biscuits, which has been lying closed for the last five years, but he continued to face problems with the company's 2,500-strong labour force. "Biscuits are a line that can be developed into a reasonably profitable industry, but I am not going to take on a surplus work-force," Goenka said even as he continued to negotiate with the state government to find a way out of the impasse.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Meanwhile, the younger Goenka plans to use Webel Video Devices as a "spring-board for diversifying into a vast range of electronics items." The company currently manufactures only black and white TV tubes, but has put in applications for producing items like video cassette recorders and microwave receivers.

Much of the turbulence in Calcutta's corporate world seemed to originate from the activities of ambitious and expanding businessmen like Khaitan and the Goenka brothers, from the fact that the overseas principals of large Indian companies were finding the going difficult abroad, and that these principals might, therefore, be considering disinvesting in India in order to raise cash for staying afloat elsewhere. Dunlop of UK did precisely this in the case of Dunlop India two years ago, when R.P.Goenka moved in. Thus, Chloride India is doing well, but its parent company is not.

Every few days, reports of fresh blue-chip companies being taken over by local businessmen are sending their share prices shooting through the roof and stockbrokers are getting increasingly bitten by the take-over bug.

BUT IT is also true that many of the pucca boxwallah companies in Calcutta have not been prospering (Metal Box being a standing example with losses last year of Rs 5.63 crore), and the foreign principals might well have realised that these companies needed new managerial tie-ups with desi entrepreneurs. Said a senior company executive in the city: "Many foreign parent companies, particularly those based in the UK, have of late come to believe that the highly westernised managers in their Indian subsidiaries are not able to compete in the complex Indian business environment."

The normally reticent B.M.Khaitan, typical of the kind of local businessmen who are being favoured by the foreign principals as new business partners, concurred: "I think we have the right blend of professionalism and entrepreneurship required to make sick companies tick again. Professionals have to be given the freedom to operate, but at the same time the entrepreneur has to provide the push for a little bit of change." Khaitan in fact believes that a number of old British companies could have been saved had a partnership between professionalism and entrepreneurship been evolved earlier. His own record in Macneill and Magor bears this out: the company's net worth has shot up from just Rs 14 crore to Rs 40 crore in the last three years. And he has been able to take over the management of India Foils by reaching an agreement with its British parent company.

As a part of the same trend, the Birlas' Texmaco had in the past associated itself with the sick AVP dairy firm while the Tata Iron and Steel Company (TISCO) had bought Metal Box's Kharagpur ball bearing unit and moved into the Calcutta-based Davy Ashmore. Meanwhile, other giants of the East continued to flounder. Guest Keen Williams, the Calcutta-based engineering giant, was considering offloading its manufacturing division at Andul Road in Howrah, after having earlier sold the Durgapur-based Sankey Wheels and the forging units in Howrah.

The ambitious plans of the new entrants into troubled companies stands in sharp contrast. Khaitan has promised to inject new working capital into Metal Box and to work out a new marketing strategy, while R.P.Goenka has been pulled into the Gramophone Company at a time when India's audio equipment market is looking up. The company's accumulated losses have already wiped out its capital and reserves and the dividend has been skipped for three years in a row. But audio cassette production has quadrupled recently to 8,000 a month and, according to a company insider, it will stop incurring cash losses from next month.

The Calcutta Stock Exchange: buzzing with activity

Goenka's main strategy for the company is to beat the cassette pirates at their game, with low-priced cassettes competing with the pirates and higher-priced ones offering quality and reaching for the upper segment of the market. In another move typical of the change that fresh blood infuses into a company, Goenka's son Sanjeev announced a Rs 50-crore investment package for modernising and diversifying Dunlop India's production facilities. "We are graduating to radial tyres with Sumitomo technology, and moving into V-belts and steel cord conveyor belting," Sanjeev Goenka said.

Such examples might in fact encourage disinvestment by other companies abroad, providing yet more opportunities for prowling local businessmen. And the next few weeks will show whether there is in fact anything more to the action than what is already known in companies like Metal Box and the Gramophone Company. Indeed, if share market specialists are as well informed as they were in the Shaw Wallace case a little more than a year ago, Calcutta's corporate grapevine could soon be buzzing even more than it already is.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

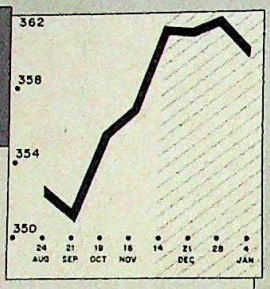
THOUGH inflation is still under control, both the wholesale and consumer price indices have started rising at higher rates than before. Money supply is steady at around 17 per cent per annum while bank credit has contracted marginally. The foreign trade front continues to be grim with exports falling and imports growing at 28 per cent per annum.

All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trends are computed on the basis of the last six months data to which regressions are fitted.

Wholesale Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
4.3% p.a.

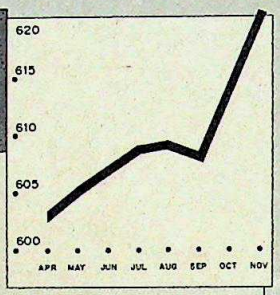


Though inflation is under control, the long-term trend in wholesale prices has been rising from 1.3 per cent to 2.9 per cent to 4.27 per cent.

Consumer Price Index

1960 = 100

Current Trend
4.7% p.a.

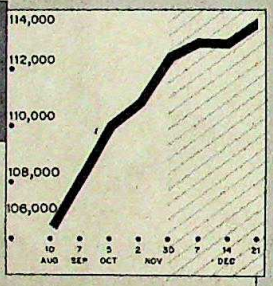


The Consumer price index rose by one per cent by November, well above the long-term trend which rose from 2.9 to 4.7 per cent per annum.

Money Supply (M3)

Rs Crore

Current Trend
17.1% p.a.



Money supply jumped by 5.9 per cent in the third week of December, above trend. The long-term trend has, however, stabilised at 17 per cent.

Commercial Bank Credit

Rs Crore

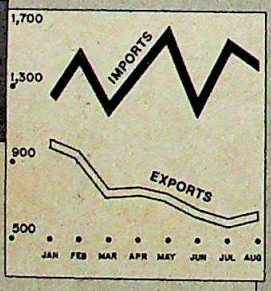
Current Trend
12.0% p.a.

Commercial bank credit has tightened marginally, with the long-term trend dropping by 0.44 per cent to 11.96 per cent.

Foreign Trade

Rs Crore

Current Trend
–4.4% p.m.
EXPORTS
28.3% p.a.
IMPORTS

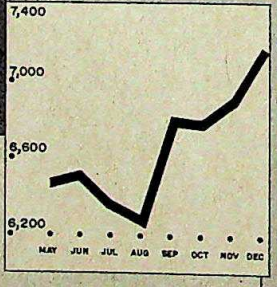


Exports have continued to fall despite a hiccup in August. Imports have risen at over 28 per cent a year. August 1985 Trade gap was Rs 740 crore.

Foreign Exchange Reserves

Rs Crore

Current Trend
29.8% p.a.

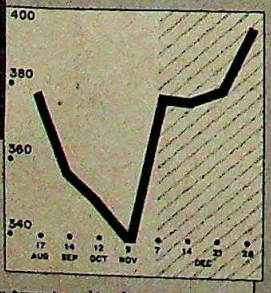


Foreign exchange reserves continued to grow at a handsome rate, despite the yawning trade gap, because of remittances and capital flows.

Share Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
6.4% p.a.

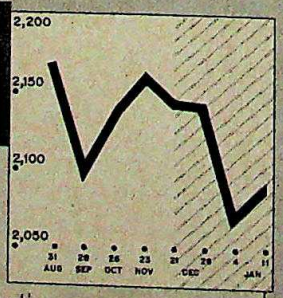


Though the long-term trend in share prices is no longer hyper-inflationary, share prices rose 4.9 per cent between December 7 and 28.

Closing Gold Price

Rs per 10 gms

Current Trend
–4.7% p.a.



Despite a mild 0.95 per cent upturn in the first week of January, gold prices have continued their downward trend.

WHOLESALE PRICES

Items with maximum growth in December, 1985

	%Growth
Tea	7.54
Vanaspati	6.26
Tobacco	6.12
Groundnut Seeds	6.11
Electrical Motors	5.74
Sugar	5.66
Oranges	5.26
Groundnut Oil	5.13
Gingelly Oil	4.66
Solvent Extracted Oil	4.12
Raw Hides	4.00
Maida	3.84
Ragi	3.69
Urad	3.64
Boilers	3.62
Copra	3.12
Coffee	3.12
Maize	2.95
Rape & Mustard Seed	2.93
Jowar	2.85
Bananas	2.83
Raw Silk	2.81
Tapioca	2.76
Mustard Oil	2.73
Linseed Oil	2.72
Linseed	2.62
Cashew-Nuts	2.22
Tanned Hides & Leather Belting	1.93
Ghee	1.89
Cables & Wires	1.88
Atta	1.80
Eggs	1.65
Aviation Spirit	1.39
Jute Textile Machinery	1.30
Polythene Moulding Powder	1.12
Transformers	1.12
Coal	1.09
Petrol	1.06
Soda Ash	1.04
Coir Yarn	1.04
Milk	1.01
Bolts & Nuts	0.98
Diesel Oil	0.97
Pig Iron	0.92
Rails	0.90
Aluminium	0.85
Coir Fibre	0.85

Of the 139 series considered, 88 of them with a total weight of 52.221 had a positive growth and 51 of them with a total weight of 34.405 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1985	1984
Coal
Thousand Tonnes, December	14496	14179
Saleable Steel
Thousand tonnes, December	718.2	649.0
Cement
Thousand tonnes, December	2678	2526
Fertiliser
Thousand Tonnes, December	529.0	490.0
Thermal Plant Load Factor
Per cent, December	54.4	54.0

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

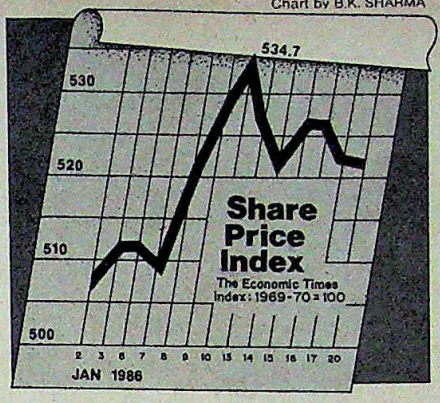
THE MARKETS

Sunny Days

THE STOCK market continued its climb to new levels of optimism last fortnight, despite the market authorities imposing trading margins on 60 per cent of the forward traded scrips and on some cash shares as well. Initially, this resulted in buyers beating a hasty retreat, but they were soon back in strength—encouraged almost certainly by the flow of good news from New Delhi.

The Government came out with one policy liberalisation after the other for the industrial sector. It announced a fresh scheme for the sanctioning of excess capacity in selected industries, removed some of the roadblocks that had come in the way of earlier liberalisations being effective, de-listed 250 items that had been exclusively reserved for the small-scale sector, and on the export front extended the cash compensatory scheme to several non-traditional items of export. Various reports also suggested that the cement industry might get some fiscal incentives, while a virtually open door policy on pharmaceuticals is being finalised.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA



Investors who had been worried by the raids on leading business houses and individual industrialists got a shot in the arm when the Government said it was willing to go easy on tax evaders who decided to come clean. Although tax officials denied that there would be any let-up in the raids, the signal was unmistakable that a new scheme to encourage tax honesty was under preparation.

Finally, the industrial production index for October, released last fortnight, signalled an upswing after the earlier slack, while prices were under control.

These factors were more than enough to offset the effect of the imposition of trading margins as high as 20 per cent. As a result, even high-priced shares (as in the case of some fertiliser and pharmaceutical companies) found fresh buying support. The margins themselves had come in the wake of a Bombay broker defaulting on his commitments after defying orders prohibiting him from doing fresh business. Consequently, they were seen as an administrative measure, and not as a 'cool down' signal. So the boom continued.

Nevertheless, everything is far from rosy. The textile industry continues to be in the doldrums despite the new textile policy having gone into effect, and the investment rush into areas like cement, polyester, commercial vehicles and cars will almost certainly result in overcapacity being created. Some of the new commercial vehicle companies have already seen their share prices drop from previously astronomical levels, and the same fate could befall companies rushing into fields like polyester yarn and fibre. But these clouds remain far away, and last fortnight the sun continued to shine on an optimistic stock market.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1986 HIGH	LOW	CLOSE 20.1.86	Change on Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	45.00	44.00	45.00	1.00 +
Associated Bearings	860.00	775.00	835.00	50.00 +
Associated Cement	386.00	349.50	362.00	14.00 –
Atlas Copco	86.00	77.00	78.00	2.00 –
Bajaj Auto	2030.00	1950.00	2010.00	25.00 +
Ballarpur	62.00	55.00	59.00	4.00 +
Baroda Rayon	445.00	410.00	410.00	30.00 –
Bata India	82.50	75.00	77.50	1.50 +
Bayer	470.00	445.00	460.00	5.00 –
Bharat Forge	86.00	73.00	81.00	4.00 +
Birla Jute	97.00	92.50	93.25	0.75 –
Blow Plast	160.00	122.00	150.00	25.00 +
Blue Star	110.00	92.50	105.00	nil
Bombay Dyeing	120.00	86.00	101.00	8.50 +
Brooke Bond	83.75	74.00	82.00	8.00 +
Ceat Tyres	310.00	240.00	305.00	55.00 +
Century Spinning	1560.00	1460.00	1490.00	35.00 –
Chloride India	122.00	99.00	107.00	3.00 +
Citurgia	63.00	53.00	63.00	8.00 +
Colgate	262.50	220.00	230.00	17.50 –
Cyanamid	100.00	70.00	100.00	20.00 +
DCM	58.50	50.00	50.00	5.50 –
Dunlop	52.75	49.75	52.00	1.25 +
Elecon Engg.	90.00	82.50	82.50	2.50 –
Escorts	94.00	81.50	81.50	9.00 –
Food Specialities	255.00	235.00	240.00	15.00 –
Garware Nylon	61.50	52.00	55.00	3.00 –
Glaxo	87.00	66.00	80.00	7.00 +
G.E. Shipping	36.00	27.75	32.50	3.75 +
Gujarat St Fertilisers	1195.00	925.00	1120.00	100.00 +
Gwalior Rayon	88.00	82.50	82.50	4.00 –
Hindustan Lever	138.00	127.50	134.00	2.00 –
Hindustan Motors	128.50	120.00	123.50	2.00 –
Indian Explosives	83.50	69.00	83.00	12.50 +
Indian Hotels	130.00	115.00	127.50	2.50 +
Indian Organic	90.00	82.00	84.50	2.50 –
Indian Rayon	137.00	127.00	130.00	6.00 –
Ind. Suzuki	81.00	58.00	75.00	13.00 +
Indrol	330.00	285.00	310.00	15.00 –
Ingersoll-Rand	480.00	360.00	440.00	15.00 +
ITC	57.50	53.00	55.50	1.70 +
J K Synthetics	122.00	106.00	110.00	2.00 –
Kinetic Engineering	325.00	285.00	295.00	30.00 –
Kirloskar Cummins	700.00	675.00	692.50	7.50 –
Lakme	195.00	172.50	190.00	15.00 +
Larsen & Toubro	198.00	180.00	187.00	2.00 +
Lipton	57.25	46.50	56.75	4.88 +
Lohia Machines	70.00	65.00	68.00	2.00 –
Mahindra & Mahindra	86.00	72.00	77.00	2.00 +
Motor Industries	910.00	810.00	840.00	25.00 –
National Organic	660.00	585.00	652.50	42.50 +
Nirlon	77.00	61.00	73.00	6.00 +
Orkay Silk Mills	167.00	125.50	158.00	28.00 +
Peico Electronics	104.50	83.50	84.00	7.25 –
Premier Auto	745.00	632.50	692.50	37.50 –
Raymond	97.00	88.00	93.00	nil
Reliance Industries	281.00	226.00	278.00	42.00 +
Richardson Hind	215.00	182.50	212.50	7.50 +
Sandoz	86.00	62.00	86.00	11.00 +
Shriram Fibres	78.50	71.00	76.50	nil
SPIC	146.00	129.50	138.00	2.00 +
Tata Steel	1240.00	1150.00	1195.00	5.00 –
Telco	880.00	780.00	866.00	58.50 +
Vulcan Laval	135.00	85.00	135.00	35.00 +
Zenith Steel	97.00	73.00	89.00	11.50 +
20th Century Leasing	77.50	67.00	67.00	8.00 –

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	8.6842	8.6011
Austria	Schilling	100	72.3212	71.5582
Bahrain	Dinar	1	32.3320	32.2717
Bangladesh	Taka	100	41.0437	40.9920
Canada	Dollar	1	8.8689	8.7835
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.3808	1.3678
Egypt	Pound	1	14.8332	14.7913
France	Franc	1	1.6542	1.6515
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.5849	1.5720
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	1.0833	1.0717
Iran	Rial	100	14.4332	14.3732
Italy	Lira	100	0.7137	0.7127
Japan	Yen	100	6.1503	6.0973
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7463	0.7401
Kuwait	Dinar	1	42.0920	41.8730
Malaysia	Dollar	1	5.0290	4.9809
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.8332	0.8101
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.5832	0.5703
Netherlands	Guilder	1	4.5028	4.4633
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7553	0.7437
Singapore	Dollar	1	5.8087	5.4024
Spain	Peseta	1	0.0780	0.0717
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4490	0.4480
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.6322	1.6128
Switzerland	Franc	1	5.9721	5.9209
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.7430	0.7331
Thailand	Baht	100	45.9320	45.0133
UK	Pound	1	17.5162	17.3958
USA	Dollar	1	12.4625	12.4375
UAE	Dirham	1	3.3032	3.2917
USSR	Rouble	1	14.9732	14.8017
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	5.1308	5.0050

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 21.1.86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

36 Pages

Share them with your mind. And looks.

Vimal's Executive Excellence & Fashion Scene Winter '85.

A dainty 36-page volume of good, meaningful messages. And some helpful notes on elegant good looks.

All yours. Just fill in the coupon and mail it to us.

Advertising Dept.,
Reliance Industries Ltd., Naroda, Ahmedabad 382 330.

Name: _____

Designation _____

Office Address _____

_____ Age _____

EXECUTIVE EXCELLENCE & FASHION SCENE WINTER '85.

VIMAL®
A RELIANCE PRODUCT

WORSTED SUITINGS

The commitment to excellence continues.

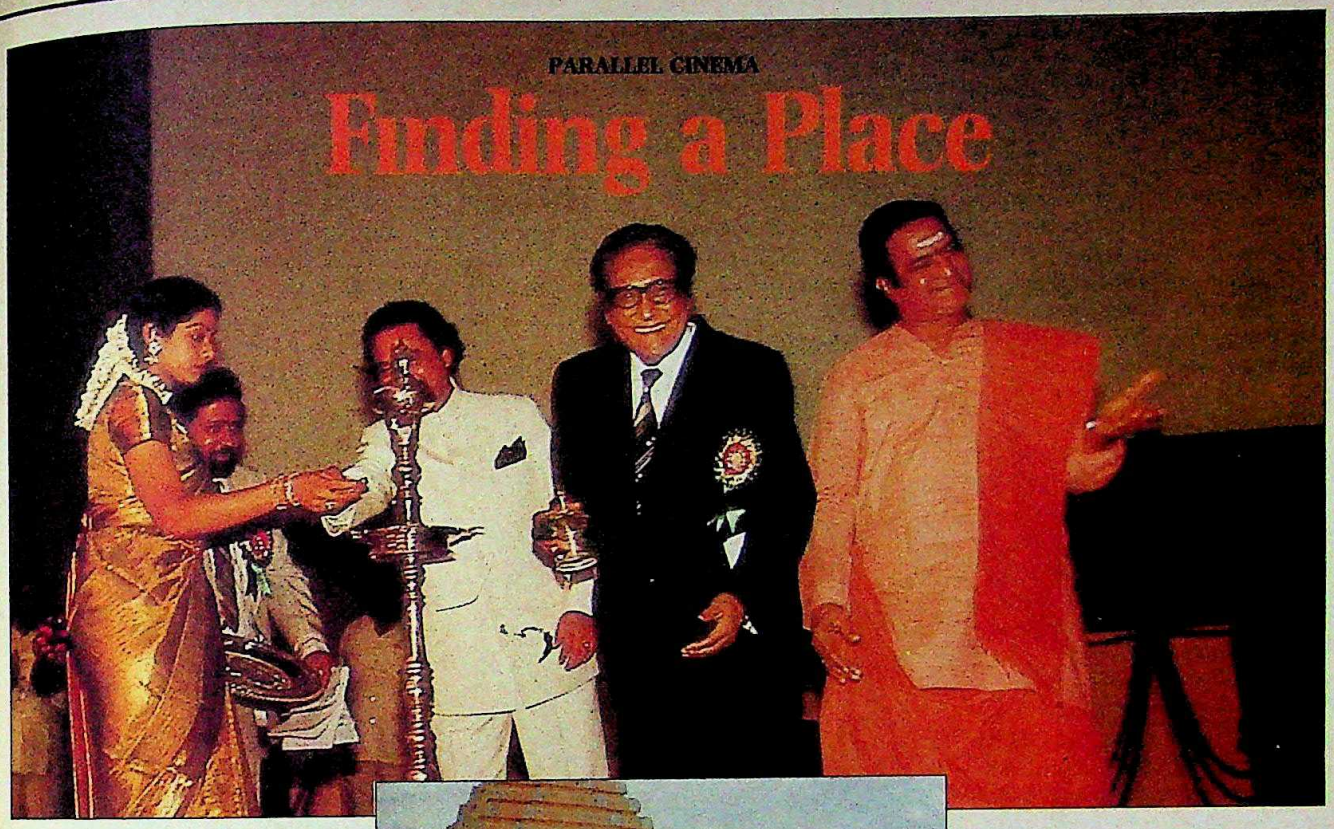
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

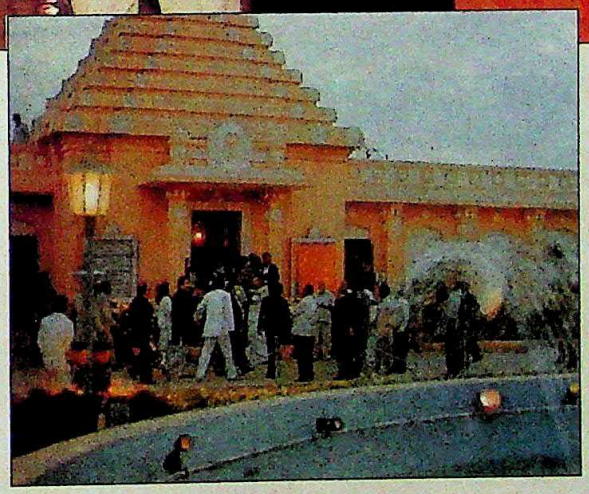
Mudra: A: RTI: 2915 R

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PARALLEL CINEMA

Finding a Place





N.T. Rama Rao with Ashok Kumar and Sridevi at the Filmotsav opening (top); and outside the venue

CRITICS and audience alike have loosely labelled it "intellectual cinema". Though a type that is hardly likely to blitz the box-office, a glimpse of India's minority cinema, provided last fortnight by the 21 films screened at the Indian Panorama section of the Filmotsav 1986 held at Hyderabad, testified at once to the vigour and durability of the genre. The makers of the Panorama films included the aging doyens, like Shyam Benegal, Govind Nihalani and G. Aravindan, as well as the fledgeling film makers like Aparna Sen and Prakash Jha, restless to reach the top after having won their spurs in their early films. But the common thread that ran through their work could best be described in terms of a new audience-awareness.

Gone are the shoe-string budgets, the ulcers caused by each roll of raw film used up in shooting, the willingness to make do with inadequate lights, poor sets, untrained actors and sequences that do not call for expensive crowd scenes. Gone too is the snooty lack of concern about selling a film. On the contrary, the parallel cinema today is vibrant with the expectation of a market and is driven by the gutsy hope to experiment with new forms, and explore new areas of existence.

In 1981, G. Aravindan, the acknowledged celluloid "poet" of Kerala, made his Pokku Veyil for only Rs 4 lakh and yet its producer could not recover its cost. But Chidambaram, Aravindan's 1985 film, made for Rs 7 lakh, is pre-sold and is expected to gross Rs 17 lakh this year from television and theatre rights. Nihalani's 1983 opus, Ardh Satya, was made at Rs 16.5 lakh—a fact that earned him the opprobrium of being dubbed the "prodigal son" of the industry. But his recent film, Aghaat, made at Rs 30 lakh, is patiently awaiting release and Nihalani seems to be suffering no jitters on that score.

These, together with Benegal's exquisite Trikal (Rs 24 lakh), Aparna Sen's Paroma (Rs 20 lakh) and Ramesh Sharma's debut film, New Delhi Times (Rs 30 lakh), testify to the new courage to experiment with both style and theme—and money. Unlike in the mainline cinema industry of Bombay, Madras and Hyderabad, where star payments and production values account for most of the spending, the serious cinema has to use (or is expected to use) budget to explore new areas, to create new idioms, and to perfect techniques.

There is no dearth of such adventurism in today's new cinema. In Damul, Jha leads his camera unit into the labyrinth of the caste politics in Bihar: he even shows on screen the mechanics of the state's unique contribution to parliamentary democracy—booth-capturing. In Paroma, Aparna Sen pulls out all the stops to put together a feast of "props", which again makes the interiors of the bourgeois home credible on screen. And Sharma's New Delhi Times, though torn between the conflicting desires to communicate and to be admired for its fancy photography, is still a dream based on great expectations of the market. But it stepped with great eclat into what was hitherto forbidden territory for films: the soft underbelly of the Fourth Estate which showed a crusading journalist being unknowingly manipulated by forces on which the media has little control.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Special Correspondent SUMIT MITRA has chosen to review three films out of the 21 screened at the Panorama: Trikal, Aghaat and Chidambaram—which present a unique dissimilarity and show the range and amplitude of the new cinema whose makers are hoping to finally discover their audience this time round.

TRIKAL

TWELVE years ago, when Shyam Benegal graduated from advertisement films to his first feature, Ankur, Satyajit Ray, in an article on what was regarded as the "new wave" at that time, sounded a note of warning. He wrote on the plot of Ankur which had four protagonists instead of the traditional trigonometry of drama: "As a firm believer in geometry as a guiding principle in art, I should strongly advise Benegal to keep away from quadrangles in the future."

Benegal, who is a Ray-buff himself and is credited with a documentary on the master, apparently heeded the advice but reacted to it in his own way—drifting away from the taut narrow-canvas dramas of his earlier career and opting instead for the "circular" stories. Like Junoon (1978), the spectacular extravaganza; Kalyug (1981), the modern parable of the clash of corporate titans; and Mandi (1983), a funny comedy about the best little whorehouse in a nowhere town in India.

But Trikal is even more circular. With a cast the size of which was last seen in Coppola's The Godfather, Benegal confidently announces in Trikal his ultimate mastery in directing a large number of people without raising doubts regarding who is doing what to whom and when. And he does it without losing out on the very Latin character of his locale, Goa at the time of its merger to the Indian Union, or the political complexities that enwrapped the stamping out of the last ember of colonialism.

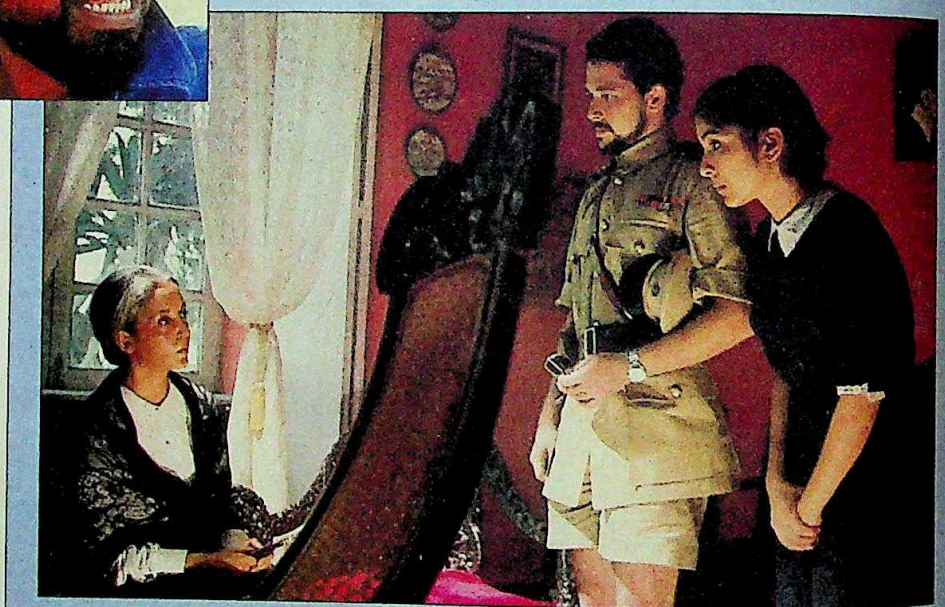
The film opens with the voice-over narration of Naseeruddin Shah, returning to Goa in the wake of the visit by the CHOGM delegates. It ends with the man driving back down the roads, with the haunting question: "Why did I return to Goa?" The interim is crowded with sepia-tinted memories of the Souza-Soares mansion, standing in the middle of the paddies and calling up images from the past that simply refuse to be buried.

But it is not so much in the story than in the brilliant filigree of his characters and situations that Benegal scores in Trikal over his earlier broad-brushstroke films. At the centre of the filigree lies Dona Maria, the widow of recently-deceased Ernesto Soares, who would not believe that her husband could die, would insist on an old fado being played on the hand-wound gramophone while her husband's body lies in state, and would vainly summon his spirit through a medium, Ernesto's illegitimate daughter Milagrenia. Leela Naidu, the screen siren of the '50s, lends to the role of Maria both the eccentricity and the extraordinariness of a dowager queen, while Neena Gupta, playing Milagrenia, lifts her unique role far above the clinical and the predictable, to turn it into a celebration of the absurd and the unknown.

But Benegal has not spun his Latin yarn only around this twosome. What stands out in the film is the brilliant draughtsmanship of the building, its corridors, its bedrooms lit through skylights, its snaky corridors, distinctive kitchen, sun-washed courtyard and the baroqueness of its architecture. It is against this interesting backdrop, and seen through a kind of nostalgic autumn-haze created by the magic of cameraman Ashok Mehta's filters, that Benegal recreates the vision of an old colony. The huge family, with its members including those who are born within wedlock as well as the children of love, mingle in the vast dining-room and clink glasses with one another.

Yet Trikal is far from what might be described as a monochromatic film. Grimness and side-splitting laughter seem to alternate through the film in incredibly rapid succession, reminiscent of Chaplin as well as Gabriel Garcia Marquez's One Hundred Years of Solitude, based again on a Latin society written off by history. In Benegal's film, a dead march and a sombre funeral scene is followed by a sudden gust of dust-storm in which one of the pall-bearers loses his denture. A funeral speech suddenly veers off its ceremonial course when the family doctor begins to talk with apparently great relish on the dead man's amorous misadventures. A young lover, who comes to serenade his lady-love under her window in moonlight, suddenly finds himself in the embrace of another woman. An engagement party, with wild foot-tappings to a mando song, is broken off with the news that the bride is pregnant. Maria calls up her husband's spirit, but is visited instead by

It is in the brilliant filigree of his characters and situations that Benegal scores in Trikal over his earlier broad-brushstroke films.



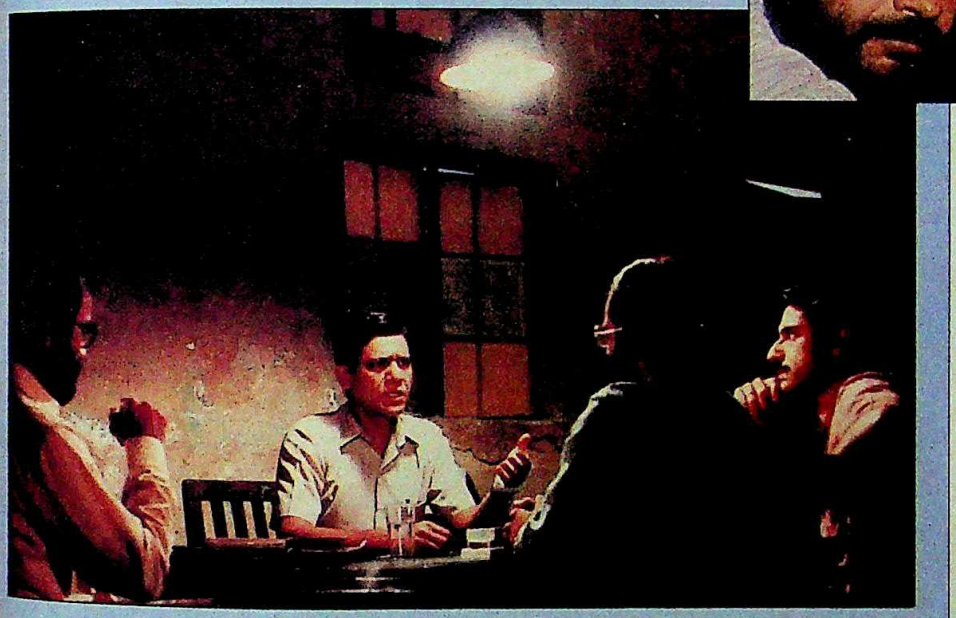
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the spirit of a Hindu rebel who had been done to death decades ago.

However, Benegal's saga of four hundred years of solitude ends on a strong epic note when the spirits come back to Maria to tell her that Ernesto had found his ultimate peace and had become one with the four elements. The key colour at once changes from golden sepia to daylight tones. And, as the narrator asks, "Why did I come to Goa?", there is a feeling of a rondeau winding up, extending in the process a bitter-sweet dream which might have lasted only a fraction of a second.

Nihalani makes the structure stand on its head in Aghaat by smothering the hero's idealism under the dialectics of opportunism.



AGHAAT

GOVIND Nihalani's hard-hitting film on the self-delusion of a Marxist trade-unionist is the most clinical among his ongoing series, Aakrosh (1981), Ardh Satya (1983), and Party (1985), all aimed at depicting the vulnerabilities of the Indian middle class. No wonder that Nihalani exposed for Aghaat 128 rolls of raw film against a projected 72 rolls, often shot one scene after 20 retakes, and on occasions gathered hundreds of professional "extras" (or junior artistes) to shoot a single crowd scene. Because the budget of the film shows not in any extravagant wayward-ness but in the superbly etched authenticity of its locations and in the lived-in quality of its sets. For no recent film with a workshop background, including the jute-mill sequences in Goutam Ghose's award-winning Paar, captures the atmosphere in the unobserved interiors of a factory with more meticulous adherence to details.

In the near-documentary verve of its portrayal of the trade union set-up, Aghaat marks a quantum leap from a dozen or so of the overtly leftist films made recently through the munificence of the Marxist Government in West Bengal.

Though woven around Nihalani's trade mark hero, Om Puri, Aghaat is in a different league from his earlier commercial success, Ardh Satya, the tale of a young police officer torn between his idealism and his instinct for survival. In Ardh Satya, it is the idealist streak that at last scored over the materialism, and Om Puri wormed his way to the heart of average cine-goers by killing, almost in the manner of a Dostoyevsky hero, the ugly politician of the prevailing establishment.

But Nihalani makes the dramatic structure stand on its head in Aghaat, and deliberately invites commercial risk by making its hero's idealism get smothered under the dialectics of opportunism. It is this anti-heroic resolution that makes Aghaat a risky proposition at the box-office but a distinct progression in artistic terms.

The main protagonist in Aghaat, Madhav Verma, is a lecturer-turned-trade-unionist, a typical communist organisation-man who has his dreams set on a classless Utopia, and to whom "economism" (fighting purely for higher wages, and not for changing the society) is the ultimate in the degeneration of the working classes. But the veneer of placidity on the labour front is shattered when Rustom Patel, a clone of Datta Samant, surges ahead, capturing union after union around the industrial suburbs, pitching demands on a scale that no industry can support, and literally knifing his way to prominence on a simple slogan: "We Want More."

As Patel, and his henchman, Krishnan, played with an almost sinister delight by Kerala actor Gopi, muscle into Verma's factory, his idealism comes into conflict with the party diktat: survive at any cost today, for if you don't survive today how are you going to bear the torch of the revolution tomorrow? His followers are assaulted or terrorised. And, more significantly, the workers are infected with the virus of the mad lust for more. The management is bullied to talk peace with Patel, and, before long, the traditional and known world of the genteel Marxist falls to pieces.

Nihalani works the story out to the climax, depicting the crisis of Verma's conscience, with the austerity of a film maker who is determined to produce a film of ideas. However, the "party" intervenes at one stage, and the comrade sent from the headquarters quotes Mao to yank Verma out of his idealist stupor. "Class struggle is not a tea-party", he says. Om Puri plays out the grim catharsis with a rare aplomb when he joins Rustom Patel in his game, resorts to violence, outsmarts him, and spouts a poem of defeat with his head hanging low in the final moment of Pyrrhic victory.

Aghaat's statement is perhaps a bit too mannered, and Nihalani is perhaps too eager to prove a point. But the film travels much beyond the statement to capture the human condition of industrial slums, and, on occasions, to break away from the format and portray ineffable moments. One such sequence is that between Pankaj Kapoor, a worker who has lost his body from waist downwards in a factory accident, and his sensuous wife, played by Deepa Sahi. It is in the midst of a passionate embrace that they realise the irony of an existence from waist downwards. The message of Aghaat may not shake the earth. But it is the film's superbly crafted inner weave that makes it worth a glowing mention, if not its budget.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CHIDAMBARAM

IMAGINE a film running through its length of 103 minutes with hardly any background score, except for a few brief vocal passages, a burst of nadaswaram and a roll of Carnatic drums. Imagine a face held in close-up for over a minute, the head fixed like a Rodin sculpture, cracking into a smile only when the wait seems intolerable, but dredging up in the process the seemingly inarticulate layers of emotion. Imagine the scenic splendour of the Kerala hillsides, and their forested slopes, drowned in sunburst colours, only to provide the dramatic counterpoint to a tortured man escaping from his memories. Imagine a body of a suicide hanging in a grimy cowshed, with birds twittering outside in the fields and spears of sunrays lunging into the darkness of the interior.

Chidambaram is the first worthwhile foray on the Indian screen into the surreal.

Cartoonist-artist and Carnatic musicologist G. Aravindan's Chidambaram is all that and a lot more. After Mani Kaul's disorganised non-narrative cinematic experiments carried out a decade ago, and Aravindan's own tentative Pokku Veyil, Chidamabaram is the first worthwhile foray on the Indian screen into the surreal. At another level, it is a major triumph of its lead players, Gopi as a forest official and Smita Patil as a forest guard's wife, in their ability to emote and to get their timings right in a film that turns grammar upside down. And Aravindan is like an ET in filmdom. "I have never learnt film grammar", he says, "for I have always followed my own judgement about where to cut a shot and when, and I feel I have almost instinctively been guided by the long time-circle of the Carnatic music."

Chidambaram is woven around Gopi, an actor with a capacity to convey emotions in understatements which can be expected only in the land of Kathakali. Aravindan builds up the first half of the film purely through subtle hints and spatial relations that become surcharged with dramatic possibilities. There are only four brief scenes between Gopi and Smita, yet they convey a tale of passion and betrayal—almost with Biblical purity—against the background of a pristine forest. Aravindan almost paints the day and night in the forest, the golden orb of the sun setting behind the slopes, and captures the right aural surprise of the intrusive motorbike noisily meshing its gears down the hillside. Smita is absorbed into the plot almost by the force of nature, though she is forbidden by her weakling husband—just as Adam had said—to travel to "that side" of the forest.

But she has already got a taste of Chidambaram. In a haunting scene, where she asks Gopi to write the address of her parents on a letter, she mentions her village, "via Chidambaram". Where on earth is Chidambaram? Is it where the temple of the mind (the word literally means the dress of the mind) is located? Is it the mystery destination of the soul? Is it the next town? Does it exist on the planet?

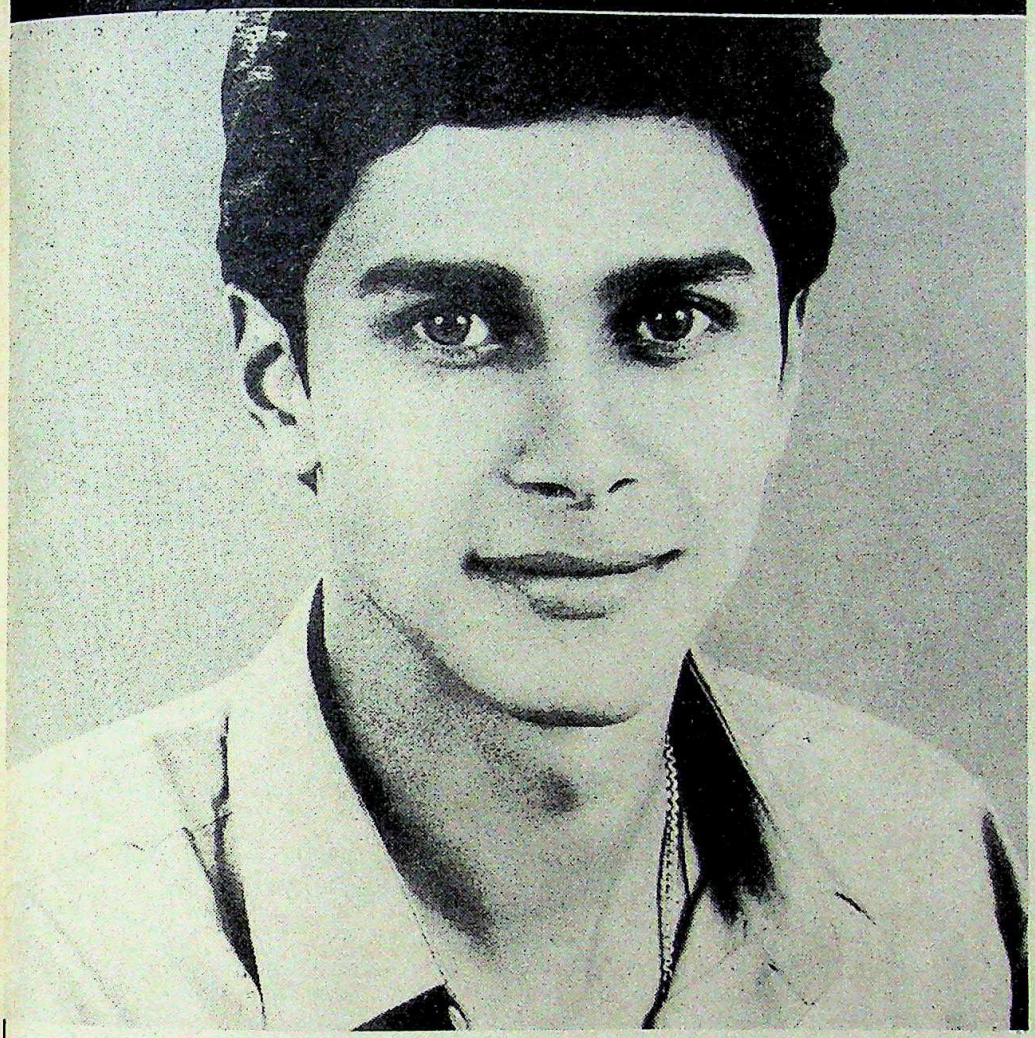
The second part of the film has the quality of a vibrant and moving dream. It begins with the dicovery of the woman's body, who had been hacked to death by her husband before he killed himself. In a Rashomon-like tracking shot through forest foliage that lasts nearly seven minutes, Gopi runs away from the past straight into a phantasmagoria. The situations from now onwards are all projections of his fear and guilt, stuff that dreams are made on.

A doctor and a couple of policemen weave in and out of the film. The somnambulance ends only with a surreal encounter with Sivakami(Smita), the woman dead long ago; in the courtyard of the ancient temple of Chidambaram. The flight from the past ends as the camera ascends rhythmically, to the beat of the mridangam, towards the spire of the temple.

Absolutely overpowering in its ingenious cutting rhythm, Chidambaram will go a long way in finding a distinctive style for Indian film makers. And Aravindan is not quite alone in Kerala. For a decade now, both he and his peer, Adoor Gopalakrishnan, the maker of Mukhamukham and Elipathyam, have been trying to develop a reflective cinema of the Indian kind that speaks a universal language and at the same time retains its distinctive flavour just as the Japanese cinema did since the advent of Kurosawa and Mizoguchi. Chidambaram may be too abstruse a film, too cloistered from its life and times to merit a rating as high as Ray's Apu films or Donskoi's trilogy on Gorky. But, more assuredly than India's 910-films a year movie industry, it is a small but firm milestone along the journey towards a national cinema.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

"In these times of erratic and crowded public transport, I depend on my Hero-Majestic Moped to reach anywhere in time. Conveniently."

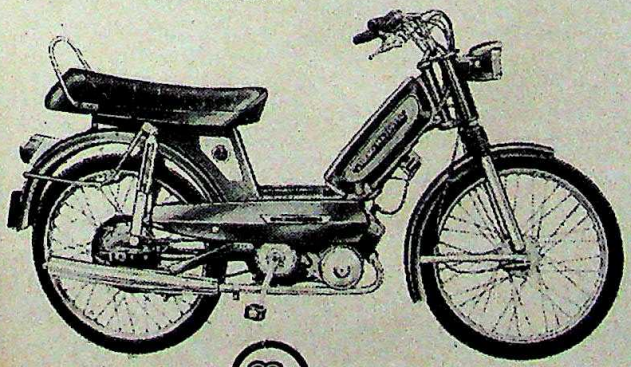


It is safe and economical too!

The common plus-points of both the models are uncommonly remarkable, which include fuel economy at 70 Kms. per litre. The power packed 2 B.H.P. engine will carry the two of you at a speed of 45 Kms. per hour. Telescopic front suspension to avoid bumps. More efficient braking mechanism. What is more, they are attractive in looks and come in several pleasing colours.

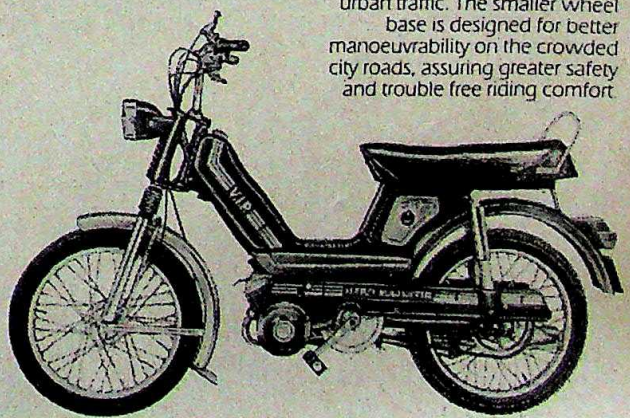
Hero-Majestic POPULAR

Ideal for carrying heavier loads on longer journeys. The larger wheels provide an added advantage of a more comfortable ride even on rough terrains and rural areas.



Hero-Majestic V.I.P.

The vehicle is specially suited for urban traffic. The smaller wheel base is designed for better manoeuvrability on the crowded city roads, assuring greater safety and trouble free riding comfort.



MAL-NP-194

MAJESTIC AUTO LIMITED C-48 Focal Point, Ludhiana-141 010

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CATARACT

IOLs : The MIRACLE LENS for NEW EYES, ONCE AGAIN

1. What is an IOL?

An Intraocular lens (IOL) aptly called the 'Miracle Lens' by Readers Digest is a lens fitted inside the eye in place of the natural lens which has become cloudy due to cataract formation. An IOL restores earlier vision and requires absolutely no handling or adjustment after the implantation.

2. No more thick glasses or delicate contact lenses:

After a traditional cataract removal operation a person has to wear very thick glasses which require constant adjustments. It takes a while to get re-oriented to the glasses and side vision is reduced. Through cataract spectacles the vision is magnified by 34% which creates tremendous amount of visual discomfort. Moreover, glasses cannot be used at all in cases of cataract in only one eye because this would result in double vision. Contact lenses also pose a problem as they are difficult to handle, especially by elderly people.

With IOLs, ordinary bifocal glasses is the most you will ever need.

3. Secondary implantation :

Even if your eyes were operated with traditional methods many years ago, secondary IOL implantation can be performed on that eye very easily.

4. Absolutely safe and effective procedure:

The entire implant surgery takes less than an hour. No special diet, no bed rest; in fact, you can start walking and use the other eye right from the first day of the operation.

5. Traditional methods obsolete today:

Millions of such IOL implants have been performed over the past 40 years in countries all over the world with outstanding results. In fact, the traditional cataract removal operation is almost obsolete in the West today.

In India too, tens of thousands of such operations have been performed, with excellent results. Almost all of these people are seeing the world through Shah & Shah IOLs.

6. You too can have an implant:

IOLs are now available in India at the renowned Shah & Shah laboratories. Shah & Shah use the world's finest technology and with American collaboration make IOLs which compete with the best anywhere.

Shah & Shah IOLs are exported the world over. You too can have your vision restored to normal by the magic of Shah & Shah IOLs. You too can have new eyes, once again.

Trust your eye surgeon. He/She is the best judge for your eye care. Should you have any difficulty in finding an IOL surgeon in your area, you may write to us, with a self addressed envelope.

SHAH & SHAH
2, RUSSELL STREET, CALCUTTA, INDIA.
TelePhones: 29-4687, 29-5328

• Intraocular Lenses • Visilon • Low Vision Aids • Finest Contact Lenses from the U.S.A. and West Germany
• Contact Lens Solutions • Colour blindness and Albinism Correction Lenses.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ZENITH STEEL PIPES AND INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Speech of the Chairman Shri Ashok Birla
Twenty Fifth Annual General Meeting, 10th December, 1985.

Ladies & Gentlemen,

Welcome to the Twentyfifth Annual General Meeting of Zenith Steel Pipes And Industries Limited.

This year, I am more than usually happy for two reasons. The first of these is that Zenith has completed 25 years of its eventful operations. The second is that we are meeting in a business environment that has been pulsating with challenges and opportunities which no member of the growing corporate community can fail to respond to.

The completion of 25 years of sustained activity is, in my view, a good time to pause and take stock of the situation. It is an occasion when one can look back and see with fair objectivity the hows and whys of what went wrong and what worked well. The exercise is not all sentimentality; its value lies in giving one an accurate measure of one's strength and weakness and, thus, enables one to chart out a course for the future.

It is in this spirit that I look back on what we have achieved since the establishment of the Company on June 20, 1960 as a manufacturer of steel pipes. We have, of course, established many landmarks over the years in the conduct of our business but I view them essentially as the inevitable manifestations of those all-important basic qualities we were blessed with from the start. I acknowledge these basic qualities gratefully because these are naturally our most priceless assets.

Over the years, Zenith has grown and diversified as many companies have done. Besides the facilities for the manufacture of pipes, steel, rolled products and a wide range of intricate, sophisticated tools at Khopoli, we have been operating a Chemical Plant at Tarapur and a Paper Plant at Banah in Punjab. We have an excellent R & D Division which keeps pace with the times and a well equipped computer centre at Khopoli.

We have been exporting pipes consistently from the third year of operations and have won recognition for our efforts in the form of numerous official awards. Indeed, we have been the largest exporter of pipes for several years now. Over the years, we have exported 3.47 lakh tonnes of pipes worth more than Rs. 100 crores. We have also been exporting chemicals on a modest scale. We have catalysed industrial ventures abroad, the P.T. South Pacific Viscose being the largest single Indian investment in Indonesia.

I recall these achievements only to show that your company has amply demonstrated its ability and its will to work. And that brings me to what I see ahead of me.

I believe,as do millions, that the country is on the threshold of a future that is both exciting and challenging. I do not have to describe in great detail all the developments that have taken place in the course of the past one year or so. For the first time in the country's post independence history of nearly 37 years, we seem to have managed to drop many of the old inhibitions and ideological hang-ups.

This is not to underestimate the achievements on various fronts registered in the preceding decades. Indeed, looking back one can see that the country would not have been able to turn a new chapter, a task it is engaged in at present, without the solid foundation laid during these decades.

Perhaps, the greatest tribute that one can pay to the native Indian genius lies in the fact that far from collapsing morally on the fateful day of October 31, 1984 when Mrs. Indira Gandhi was assassinated, the country has rebounded with renewed vigour under the undisputed leadership of Mr. Rajiv Gandhi.

What is more, it is rapidly reflecting contemporary aspirations and is preparing itself for its entry into the 21st Century, which is just 15 years away.

The new Government has taken a series of pragmatic measures on economic and political fronts which have together instilled a sense of confidence and direction so necessary for the arduous task ahead.

ASHOK BIRLA

Starting from the realistic union budget that marked a significant, though overdue, change in the Government philosophy, New Delhi has taken several steps to relax outmoded restrictions in a bid to promote rapid industrial growth in several directions. Simultaneously, much has happened to improve the political climate in the country. India was a force to reckon with in world affairs despite its poverty and backwardness even at the worst of times. It has emerged once again on the international scene as a country determined to forge ahead, and nations of the world have been quick to sense this resolve as is seen in the keen desire of several developed countries to participate actively in the country's march ahead.

At home, the new mood of optimism has served as a big impetus to the growth of industries. Realising afresh that the country's economy offers vast scope for expansion and growth because of its huge domestic market, many more ventures are imminent on the industrial landscape of the country.

Various economic measures taken so far form parts of a definite new design for India's growth. What is particularly encouraging is the Government's clear and categorical assurance, given by the Prime Minister, that the basic aim would be to inspire confidence in the business community to undertake further investment. And I have no doubt that the perspective Five Year Economic Policy will usher in a new economic order.

Already, some of the facets of the emerging pattern have become clear. Its basic goals are development and absorption of new technologies, improvement in quality, reduction in costs and promotion of competition.

In other words, the industry in this country is being given, perhaps for the first time, a framework that offers active cooperation and assistance, abandoning an attitude of suspicion and confrontation.

In response the industry will have to exert to the maximum to satisfy the consumer as he will, and should in the ultimate analysis, have the final say.

We in Zenith are fully conscious of these implications. In fact, it is against this very background, that we have been planning our growth in various directions with the confidence that we have the necessary infrastructure in terms of expertise and manpower.

While we are identifying opportunities to broaden our activity in steel and steel tubes, our first love, we have applied for a letter of intent for an INTEGRATED STEEL PLANT in Madhya Pradesh. Starting from Sponge Iron with down stream steel melting, castings and rolling facilities, the plant will have an annual production capacity of 150,000 tonnes of steel. This will involve a capital outlay of Rs. 150 crores and we have every hope of getting the necessary Government approval.

We are actively pursuing the proposal to manufacture annually 50,000 tonnes of SEAMLESS TUBES at Khopoli in our bid to assist the programme of import substitution. It will meet the fast expanding requirements of Oil, Gas and Automobile Industries. Simultaneously, we are diversifying our Chemical Division to cover OIL FIELD CHEMICALS, which are imported at present and offer good growth potential. Because of a very high levy imposed by the Andhra Pradesh State Govt. on limestone, we were advised by the Financial Institution to pursue the CEMENT PROJECT with caution. This has delayed our implementation schedule

We expect that the completion of these projects in the next 3/5 years will involve an investment of about Rs. 250 crores. These projects will no doubt test our ability seriously but we are confident of making a success of them.

It is in the context of these plans to diversify into Capital Intensive Industries with a high growth potential and of vital relevance to the national economy that it is proposed to change the Company's name to ZENITH LIMITED.

To return to matters pertaining to the Company's working for the year ended June 30, 1985, I hope that you, Ladies and Gentlemen, would be satisfied with the results which show a rise in turn over from the 1983-84 level of Rs. 104.03 crores to Rs. 132.64 crores and in gross profit from Rs. 3.17 crores to Rs. 5.60 crores. As far as the current year's operations are concerned, the Company's turnover for the first 5 months (July to November, 1985) has amounted to Rs. 45.93 Crores against Rs. 38.35 Crores in the same period of the last year.

Before I conclude I would like to acknowledge with gratitude, during this Silver Jubilee Year of the Company, its unredeemable debt to people who brought into existence and nurtured it through thick and thin. What we have with us today is the product of the courage and vision of the late Shri R.D. Birla and the late Shri Shree Gopal Nevatia, who established this Company. It was Shri B.K. Birla and the late Shri Kamal Nevatia, who piloted the company for several crucial years.

If these were the architects of the enterprise, there are numerous others who toiled hard to bring it to its present position, and I acknowledge their contributions most gratefully.

Thank you,

Note: This does not purport to be a record of the proceeding of the Annual General Meeting.

ZENITH
-the first twenty five years

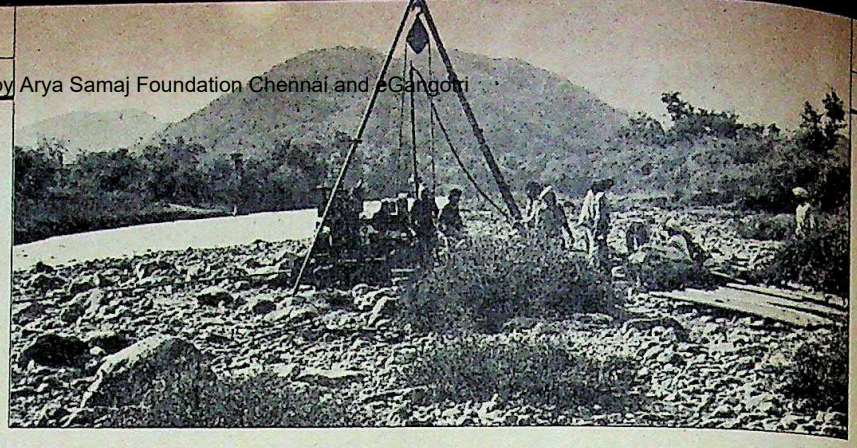
PRESSMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SARISKA

Wild Plans



Surveyors mapping out the dam site: a short-sighted scheme

A HYDEL generation unit plumb in the middle of a wildlife sanctuary? Incredible though it sounds, that is precisely what is being contemplated in Rajasthan's famed Sariska Sanctuary, 100 km west of Jaipur. Ironically, a survey of the proposed project—which will effectively destroy the sanctuary—was being carried out even as Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi was savouring the delights of the Ranthambhor National Park, the state's only other well-known wildlife reserve.

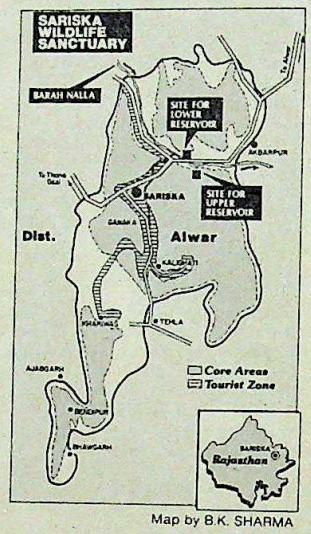
A team of the National Hydroelectric Power Corporation (NHPC) is presently surveying a portion of Sariska to examine the feasibility of putting up a 500 MW unit here. While the final decision is still several months away, the evidence gathered so far in the last 9 months of the Rs 1 crore survey is reportedly very encouraging from NHPC's point of view.

Opposition to the project has been vociferous, if somewhat belated. Says Rajasthan's Chief Conservator Bharat Singh: "We are totally opposed to it because it will not only ruin the forests but disturb wildlife as well." Adds the state's Chief Wildlife Warden O.P.Mathur: "Unfortunately the proposed site is adjacent to some of the thickest forests in the sanctuary which is the favourite spot for tigresses delivering their cubs." And a furious Kailash Sankhala former chief wildlife warden and the country's first director of Project Tiger, storms: "The idea is ridiculous. How can they even permit a survey in the heart of the sanctuary? If the project comes up it will finish off the very core of the sanctuary."

According to state government officials, the survey is the outcome of the near total breakdown of power supply to Delhi on July 19, 1984. A committee headed by A.N.Singh, chairman of the Central Electricity Authority, was set up to examine why the crises had occurred. The officials say the proposed unit at Sariska will ensure that this failure never repeats itself.

Official estimates predict that by 1992 the northern power grid will have an excess capacity of about 2000 MW during low demand hours—between 11 at night and 5 in the morning. At the same time, however, demand during the day will outstrip supply by more than 2000 MW. The idea, therefore, is to generate electricity at Sariska during peak demand hours and use the excess power available at night to pump water back into the upper reservoir.

Initially two possible sites had been identified by state and central officials in January 1985 near Alwar town, headquarters of the district in which Sariska lies. But later the sanctuary was chosen since the proposed new dam would be located on a local stream—the Barah Nallah—with a large catchment area of 270 sq km and an annual yield of 35 million cubic metres of water at the lower reservoir. Moreover, a natural bowl-type formation has been located on a nearby mountain top which could be converted into the upper reservoir and provide live storage for 14 million cubic metres of water. To generate 500 MW as per the proposed plan, the water flow rate from the upper reservoir will have to be 250 cubic metres per second. The area submerged has been calculated at about 4-5 sq km which, NHPC argues, is a small price to pay for so much of power.



Map by B.K. SHARMA

Valid though this argument seems, it does not stand close scrutiny, specially in the light of the fact that there is a proposal pending to upgrade Sariska sanctuary into a national park and a notification was issued to this effect by the state Government in August 1982. It's current area is 492 sq km but its upgrading will take this figure to about 700 sq km. According to the animal census figures for the summer of 1985, there are 35 tigers, 32 leopards, about 11,000 sambhar, 7,000 nilgai, 5,000 cheetal and nearly as many wild boar. Besides there are innumerable langoors, rhesus monkeys, peacocks, hyenas, jungle cats, mongoose, jackals and porcupines. The sanctuary, moreover, is home for such endangered species as the caracal and the four-horned antelope.

Interestingly, a forest cover of just over 31,000 sq km makes up a mere 9 per cent of Rajasthan's geographical area. Privately, forest officials admit that half this area is actually denuded and the only worthwhile forests remaining are those covered by sanctuaries. The Sariska sanctuary alone has about 10 per cent of the real forests.

The project will bring other problems in its wake. Explains Bharat Singh: "A project as large as this means hordes of labourers—perhaps as many as 10,000 during the peak hours of work. These people will stay for years right in the middle of the sanctuary and who is going to control them when they go about cutting wood from the forests for fuel? By the time construction is complete, there will be nothing left to save in the area. Worse, these schemes may get delayed and so much human movement will disturb wildlife." Also, the lake in the valley will submerge the road to Alwar and about 7 km of this road will have to be realigned which will literally pave the way for further destruction.

There is no harm in a survey—that seems to be the attitude of decision-makers in both Jaipur and Delhi. It buys time and deliberately sidesteps the basic issue of whether a well-endowed sanctuary can be endangered in this way. But the idea of having a hydel project inside Sariska makes a mockery of all the statements in support of wildlife made by people as prominent as the prime minister himself.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR in Sariska

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CLARION C DMHV-1

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Ever thought of consulting a doctor about hair loss?

I did!"

It is reassuring to know that the scientific formula of Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer has been tested and approved by a panel of doctors.

It was found that Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer provides all the proteins, vitamins and coenzymes essential for a healthy scalp condition.

Read this research report:

"66.66% of the cases gave excellent and 33.33% gave good result with complete disappearance of dandruff and nearly cent per cent stoppage of hair loss... So, success rate with Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer may be stated to be cent per cent."

(Indian Medical Gazette 118 223, 1984)

KEO-KARPIN

HAIR VITALIZER

The proven scientific way to prevent hair loss.

This is not a toilet preparation

Dey's® Care you can trust

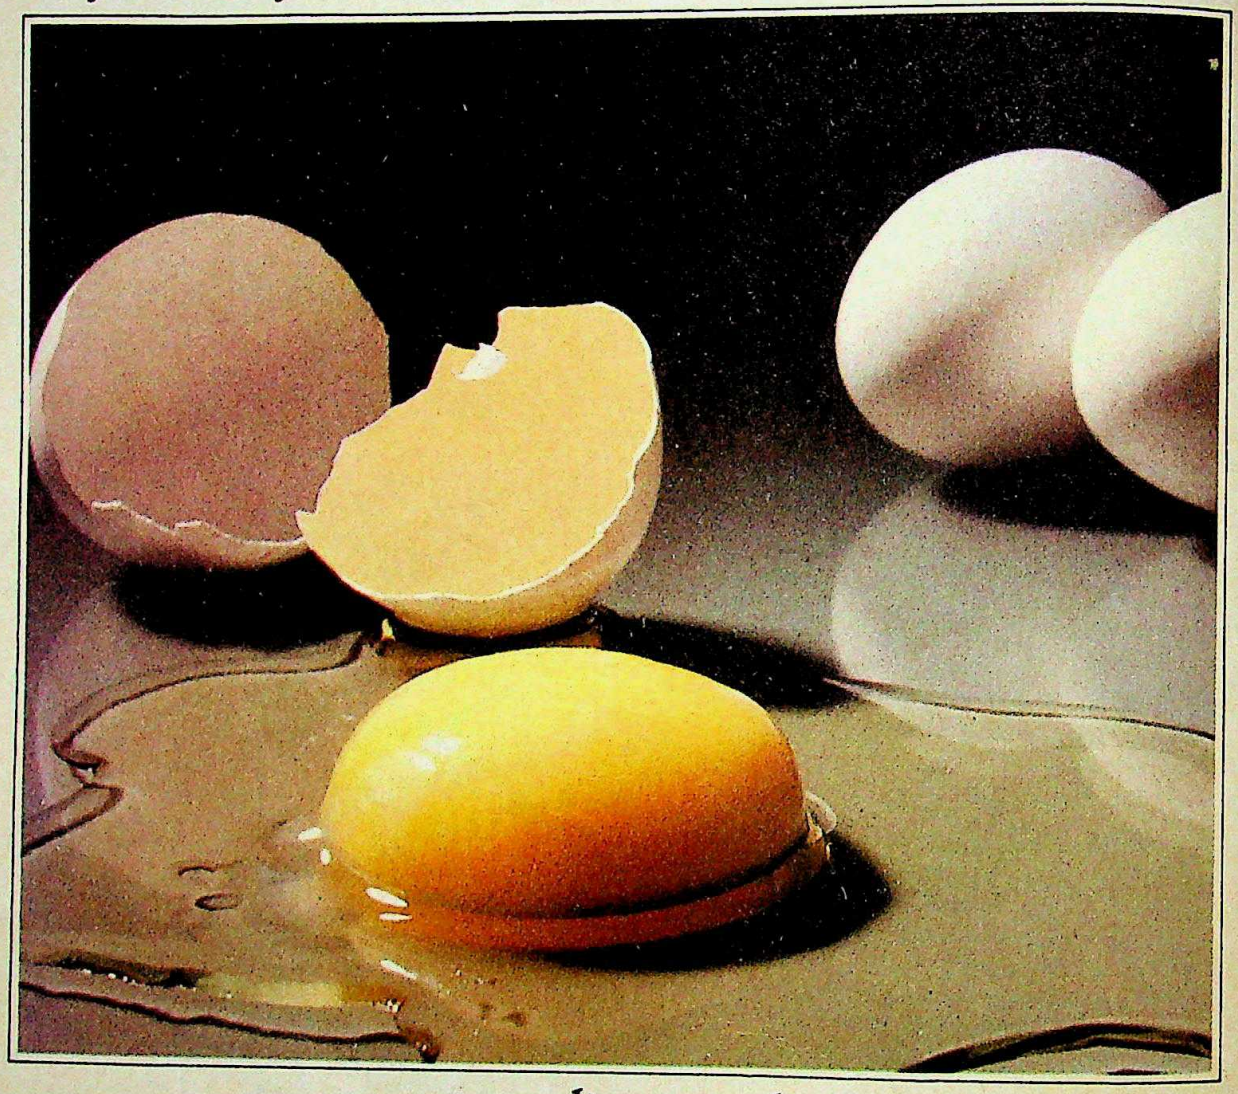
CLARION C DMHV-1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

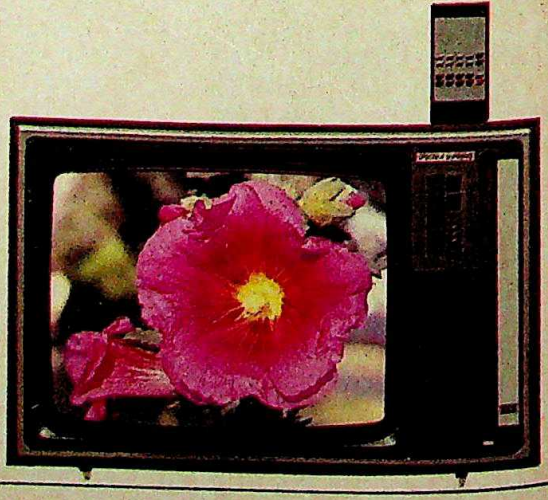
Only when you break the mould...



can you discover the vibrance of colour

ECtv
SPECTRA SUPER
SPECTRA SUPREME
with Remote Control

ECIL
Electronics Corporation of India Limited
Hyderabad-500762



ECtv - truly SPECTRAcular !

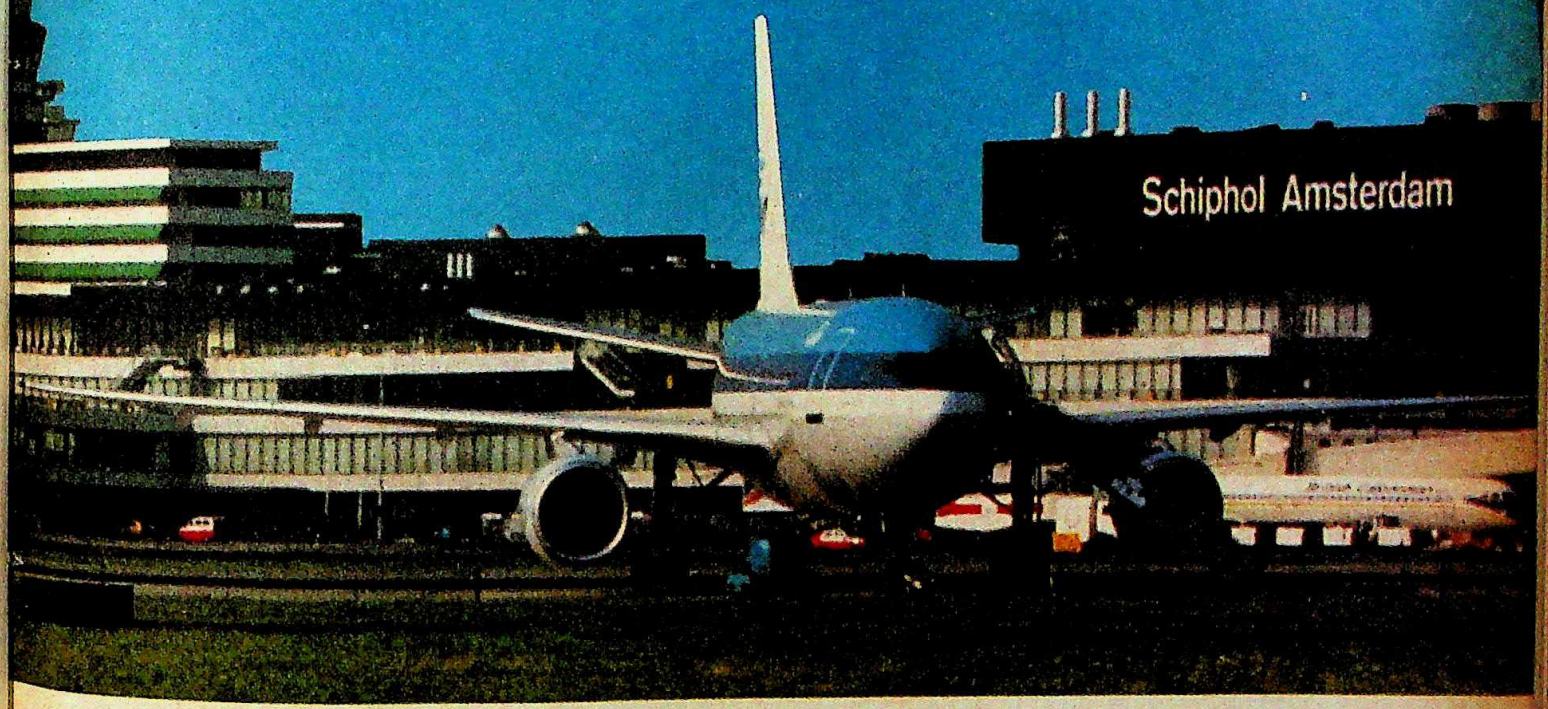
A & M 85 ECIL 43-2

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Which is the best place to start my European Tour?"

"Why?! Choose Schiphol at Amsterdam. It's the best airport going!"



Its no mean achievement. Readers of the British Magazine, 'Business Traveller', chose Schipol as the best airport in the world.

How we landed the award!

Thousands of passengers pass through the massive terminal building and nobody feels crowded in.

The baggage handling is smooth.

Checking in is swift and transfers to connecting flights are easy. Add to that, the ever-available transport from the airport to the city centre.

Finally, Schiphol's duty-free shops stock over 40,000 articles at prices that are the lowest in Europe! These are some of the reasons.

They also-ran

Singapore, Zurich, Frankfurt and Heathrow Airports were in the running too. And that's the order in which they finished.

Schiphol does it again!

Earlier this year, Schiphol was selected by the International Airline Passengers Association (IAPA) as the finest airport in the world. Again!

So the next time you are flying to Europe give yourself a little reward.

Stop over at our award winning airport and see what it's all about.

Contact your travel agent, or call us at:

Ahmedabad 77677, Bangalore 28703, Bombay 221013, Calcutta 441221, Cochin 39165, Delhi 343998, Goa 2298, Hyderabad 36042, Jalandhar 76088, Madras 86356, Patna 25437, Pune 61358, Kathmandu 214895 and Dhaka 250357.

The Reliable Airline KLM

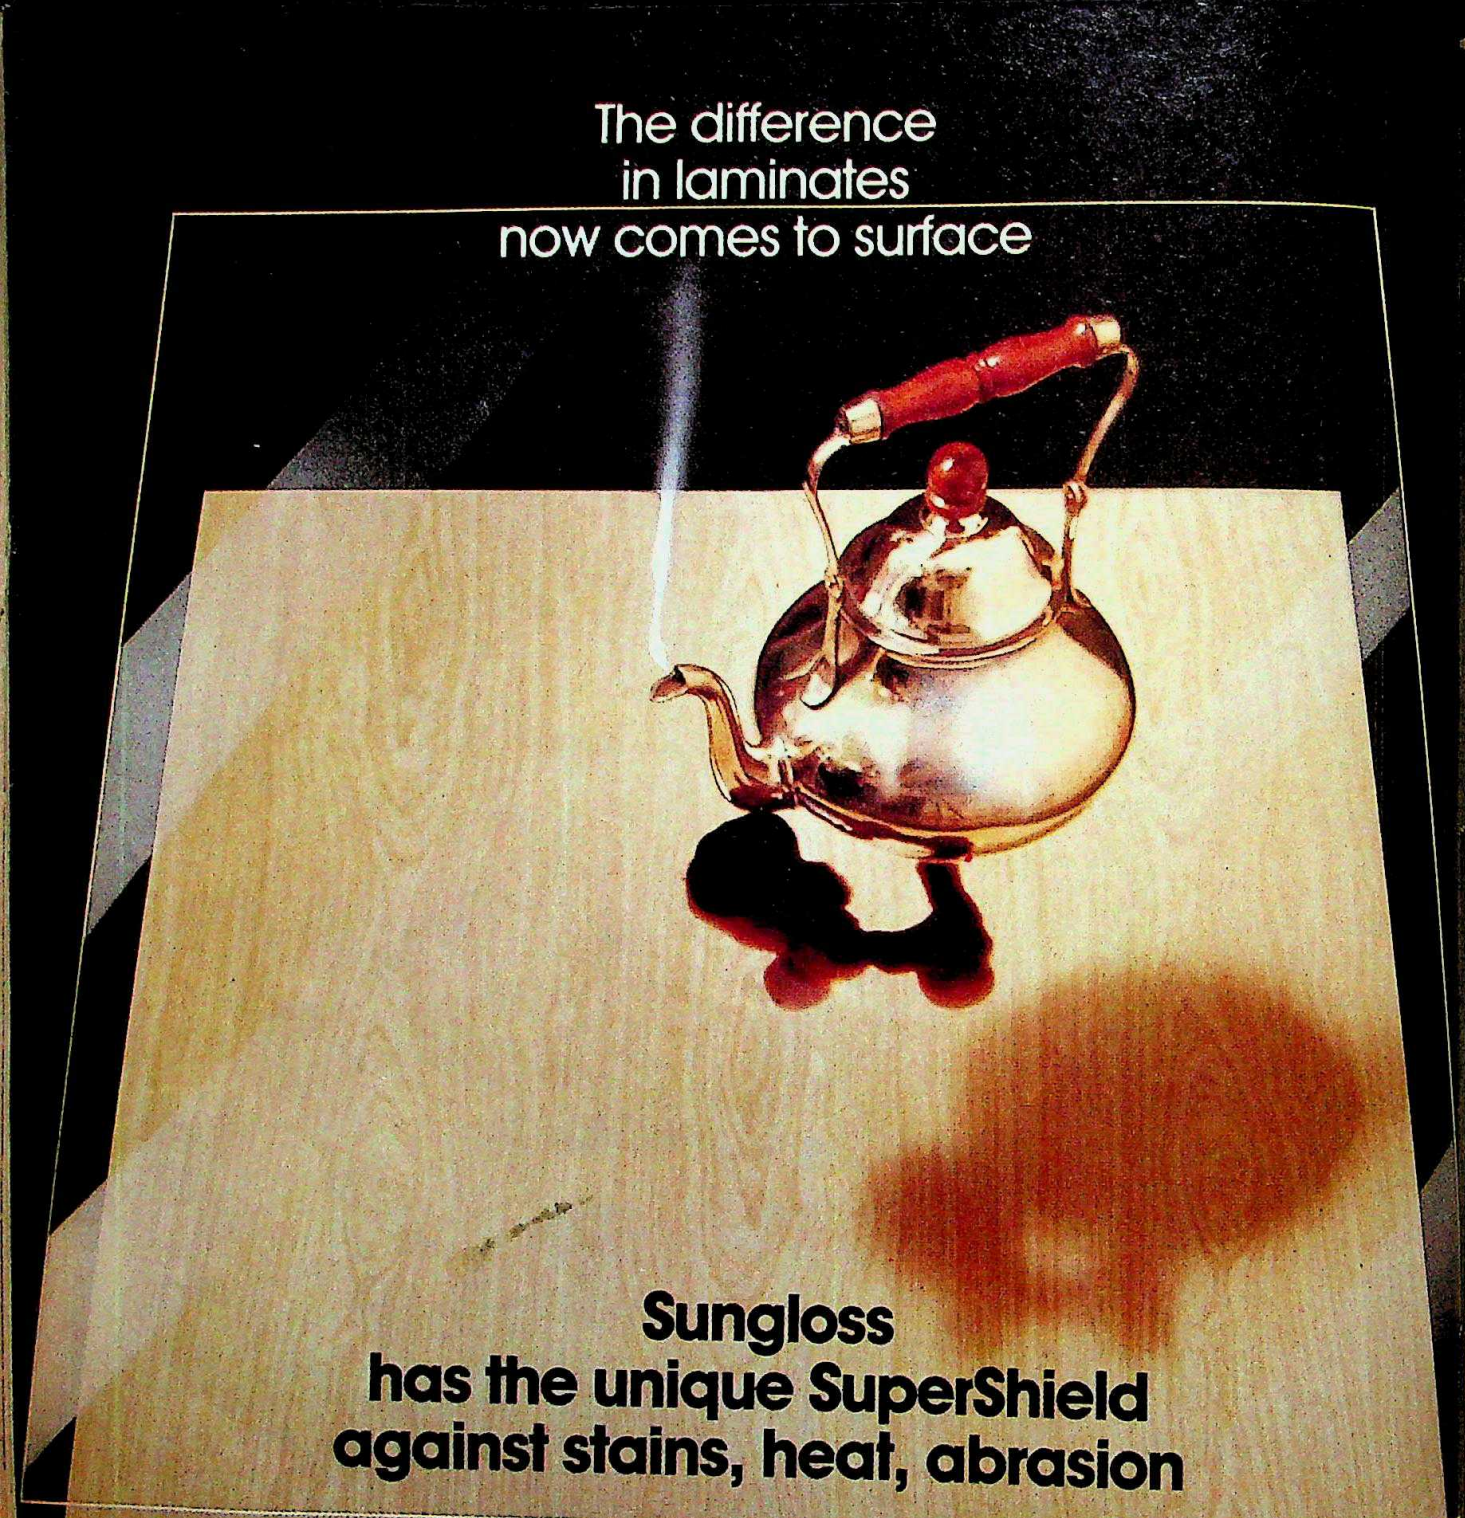
ARION-D 132

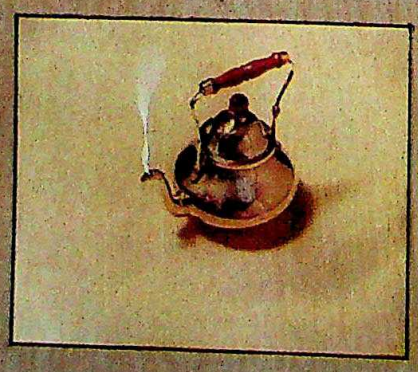
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The difference in laminates now comes to surface



Sungloss has the unique SuperShield against stains, heat, abrasion

The SuperShield on the Sungloss surface gives the laminate super protection, greater resistance. No worrying about everyday wear and tear, no fretting over little incidents and accidents. The extra-protective SuperShield surface keeps the laminate looking beautifully new, almost forever.



Discover new meaning in the colours and designs of the Sungloss SuperShield range. Enhance any decor with the exquisite finishes in brilliant Gloss, muted Matt or natural Woodtex. Or with any of the several attractive textures.

When you get laminated furniture, make sure you get the Sungloss SuperShield on it. You'll be glad you insisted.

SunGLOSS Decorative Laminate SuperShield

caprihan

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanga

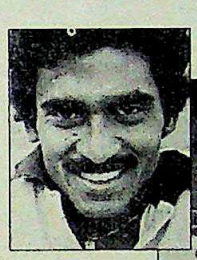
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HOCKEY

Back in Form

THEIR last international triumph had come five years ago, at the Moscow Olympics. And most of the country had ceased to hope for very much from India's hockey eleven when, last month, they did the unexpected and emerged winners in two of three tournaments. Suddenly, there was no shortage of optimism regarding the future either. Said former captain Zafar Iqbal: "There is no reason why we should not win the gold at the Seoul Asiad later this year."

Those were brave words, for in the last Asiad, Pakistan had thrashed India 7-1 in the finals. But Iqbal knows what he is talking about. Pakistan, once India's nemesis, is no bogey at all: in the last five encounters India has beaten them four times, drawing the fifth. Even other sides hold no terror. India's comeback started at the Sultan Azlan Shah international tournament at Ipoh, Malaysia where it beat less-than-full-strength Australian and English teams to finish an unexpected winner.



India playing against West Germany in Dubai: (inset) Shahid (top) and Iqbal

There was nothing unexpected about the next victory. Participating in a four-nation $30,000 prize money tournament in Dubai last month, India prevailed over Pakistan (Olympic and world champions), West Germany and Great Britain (Olympic silver and bronze medallists respectively) to take the top spot. The team then went on to Kuwait where it trailed behind Pakistan, Holland and Great Britain in a similar tournament, but its confidence is unfazed. Says Captain Mohammed Shahid: "We had no business losing to Great Britain there. It was our over-confidence that was the cause of our undoing." M.A.M. Ramaswamy, the president of the Indian Hockey Federation (IHF), agrees: "Indian hockey is certainly seeing better days now because our boys are good. Even the defeat at Kuwait was not really a defeat—one goal made all the difference there."

For the Indian team what seems to have made the vital difference is 26-year-old Shahid himself. Shahid realised after two disastrous forays with his new-look team that the Indian team and he personally could not do without the services of three stalwarts who were inexplicably on the sidelines—Iqbal, full back Manohar Topno and forward Marcellus Gomes. When Ramaswamy, soon after taking over as IHF president, met Shahid in London and asked him if he wanted anything, Shahid told him that Iqbal and the others must be persuaded to come back.

Back home after the Malaysia tournament, Shahid personally got after the three, especially Iqbal. Shahid used every argument he had to convince Iqbal that he owed it to himself and the country to play for as long as he could—speaking mostly over the telephone from Varanasi, where Shahid stays, to Iqbal's house in Delhi. Shahid's sincerity and persistence worked and the players Iqbal, Topno and Gomes came back.

Shahid is quite categorical about the impact of the return of his team-mates: "Having played with Zafar bhai for five years, I know exactly what he is going to do in any given situation. There is no substitute for experience. You take myself. I do not want to boast but today I have the confidence that if I get the ball I know I can make something happen. But it is only now, after having played in more than 100 internationals, that I can say with confidence that I am not in the least concerned about who the opposing side is."

Says Iqbal: "There is no doubt that had it not been for Shahid's persistence I might not have agreed to come back. And let us not kid ourselves about what new blood can do: tournaments like the Champion's Trophy are not where you throw in freshers. There is so little to choose between the top six or seven teams in hockey today that self-confidence can make all the difference. It is this confidence that we have got back."

The core of the team now comprises those who have played together for at least three years: back Topno, halves Joachim Carvalho, Hardeep Singh and Victor Somayya and forwards Iqbal, Shahid, Jalaluddin and Gomes. Goalie Rajendra Singh Rawat and backs Pargat Singh and M.P.Singh, though relatively fresh, have shown evidence of class. The only weak link is the left half. "Give us a top class left half and we will take on the world," says Iqbal.

There are, of course, other lacunae. Says Ramaswamy: "It is high time our players began to concentrate on the short corner and the penalty. Also their stamina needs to be built up—they just fade out in the last 10 minutes." Hockey writers feel the Indians have to work out a response to the current trend of scoring from sudden, breakaway moves. The latest development in this is the goal scored after a hit scooped up from the home 25-yard to the opposing striking circle, much like in football: the strategy being to capitalise on any error by the defence. "That's not hockey," scoffs Shahid. Yet, the pragmatic Indian team has decided to do as the Europeans do and Carvalho is currently mastering the art of the scoop. What's important is that the Indian team is adapting, and consequently, winning.

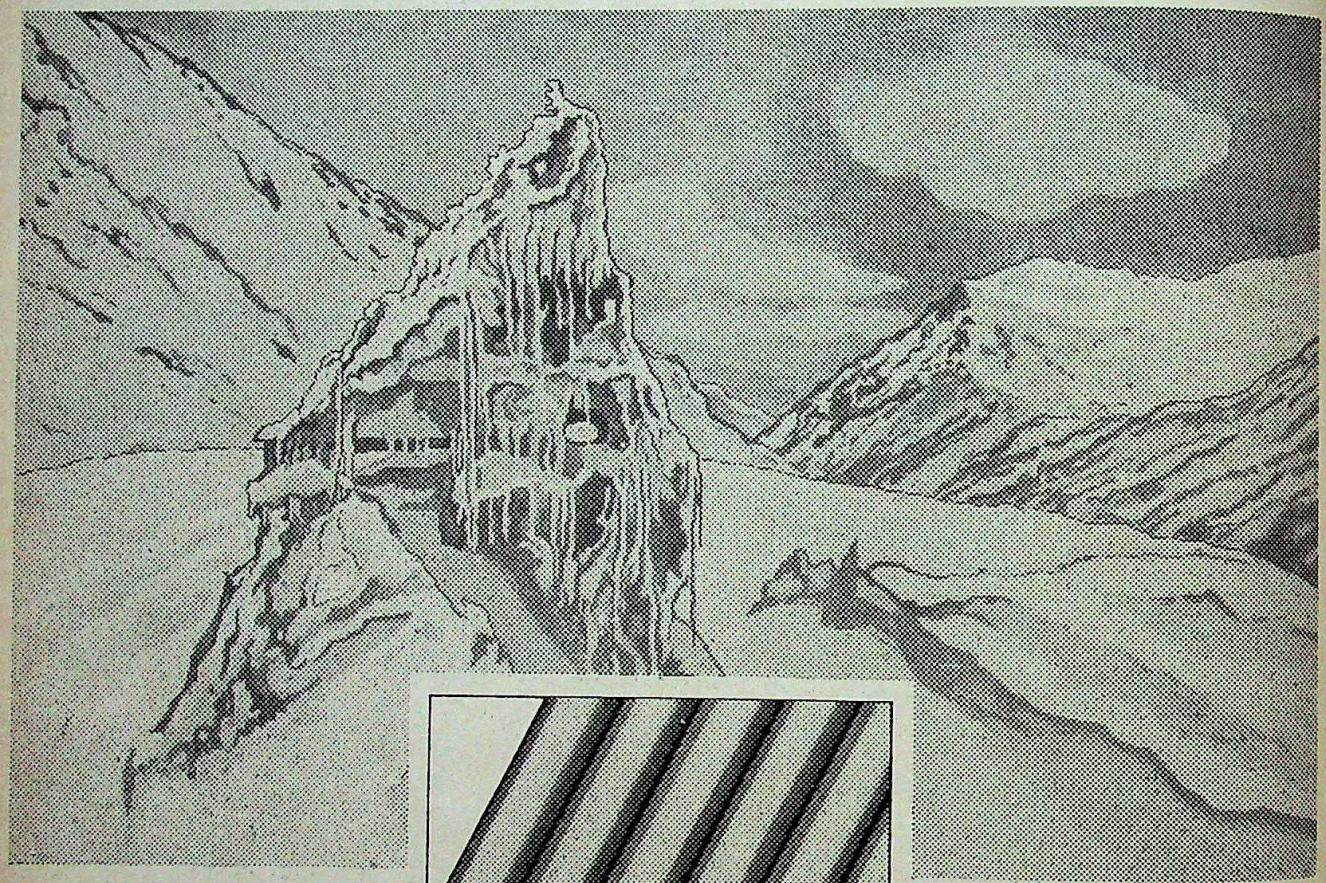
The time may not be far off when the country will again be proud of its national game.

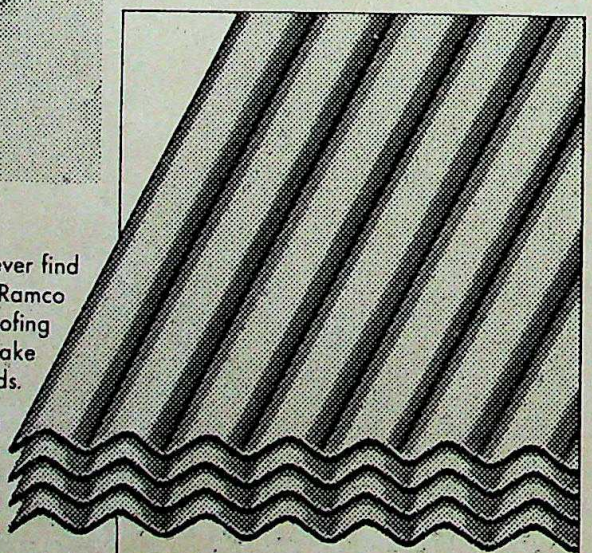
—AJAY KUMAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

After a heavy blizzard in Ladakh, which roofing sheet do you think could bear the burden of piling snow?





Though they may never find their way to Ladakh, Ramco asbestos cement roofing sheets are made to take great loads.

Ramco roofs have a life-time of strength built in. Fastidious raw material selection is followed by sophisticated production technology and systematic quality control.

That's why, Ramco stands the test of time. Whatever the weather.

No wonder, Ramco is the top roof today – the choice of all top-ranking architects, engineers and contractors.

CAS/SACU/27/85

Ramco

Because high quality production ensures excellent load-bearing capacity, strength and durability in any weather.

Ramco—More than a roof, permanent protection.

SOUTHERN ASBESTOS CEMENT LIMITED
739 Anna Road, Madras 600 002.
Phone: 82006
Sole selling agents : RAJA CHARITY TRUST
Offices : Bangalore ● Ernakulam ● Hyderabad ● Pune ● Vijayawada ● Visakhapatnam
Factories : Arkonam (Tamil Nadu) ● Karur (Karnataka)
Pressure Pipe Unit : Maksi (Madhya Pradesh)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CRICKET

Over Rated

WORLD SERIES CUP

TEN MONTHS after winning the so-called world championship of one-day cricket, India were engaged in a desperate struggle to qualify for the finals of the three-nation Benson and Hedges competition with Australia and New Zealand. After winning two of their first three matches in grand style, India tasted no success until the seventh of their 10 qualifying matches.

It was the intervening sequence of three defeats that revived speculation and rumours about a rift between the captain, Kapil Dev, and his predecessor, Sunil Gavaskar. They sprang from Gavaskar's slow batting during the closing overs of the match against Australia.

Having conceded to Australia a massive total of 292, India had no chance of winning and Gavaskar's loss of momentum did not alter the result. Where it did affect the interests of the team was that it diminished the overall scoring rate which could come into account in the event of two teams tying on points at the end of the qualifying competition.

The dust would have settled very quickly had Gavaskar not been missing from India's ranks when India played New Zealand two days later. His non-participation in that crucial match, due to a sciatic pain in the lumbar region, sparked off fresh speculation about an internal row.

On the eve of the match, manager Srinivas Venkataraghavan told the correspondent of his home town newspaper, The Hindu, that he had officially reprimanded Gavaskar for disregarding the interests of the side.

Gavaskar, speaking to the press during the Melbourne match, was emphatic that there was no rift between him and the captain. He said: "There has never been one harsh word exchanged between Kapil and myself in the seven years that we have played together for India." He also denied, just as vehemently, that he had been "ticked off" by the manager.

Kapil Dev himself was not happy with the way Gavaskar had batted in Sydney, but did not speak to him on the issue. There certainly was no row between them, nor is there reason to believe that Gavaskar on that occasion was consciously sabotaging the Indian effort. It must be appreciated that his own income from prize money is related to the team's success. Moreover, there are no more grounds for a personal conflict between past and present captain because Gavaskar voluntarily relinquished the captaincy.

There are various cricketing reasons why the performance of the team has not measured up to the standards achieved last year. The most obvious one is that the pitches are so different on this occasion. The world championship of cricket was played at Melbourne and Sydney at the end of the season when the pitches were worn from heavy use and favoured spin. They suited India and particularly leg spinner Sivaramakrishnan, who was a consistent wicket-taker. Not only have the pitches been less amenable to spin this time, but Sivaramakrishnan has been hopelessly out of form right through the tour.

Indian think tank of Kapil, Shastri and Gavaskar in Australia: short on ideas

The average age of the Indian side is much higher than its rivals, a fact that is reflected not only in its low mobility in the field and its efficiency in catching, but also in running between the wickets. More than one match has been lost through muffed catches and one defeat against Australia could be attributed to bad umpiring, particularly Umpire Ray Isherwood's unfavourable response in a run out situation involving Australian batsman, Steve Waugh. Waugh, who was three at the time, went on to play a match-winning innings of 81.

The Indian batting also does not have the firepower to score at speed in high-scoring matches. Their potential in this respect has been greatly limited by Srikkanth's loss of form since his rousing 50 in the first match in Brisbane, against New Zealand. Kapil Dev, another who has the eye and the timing to take an attack apart has seldom gone in with enough runs behind him to give him the confidence to cut loose straight away.

But largely it is the bowling that has let India down. The only two bowlers who have bowled well and economically match after match are Kapil Dev and Ravi Shastri. Roger Binny and Chetan Sharma have picked up some useful wicket, but most times have bowled too short a length and have been expensive in the currency of no-balls and wides.

Captaincy is another area in which India has suffered. Kapil Dev is not very sensitive to the nuances of one-day cricket. The timing and duration of his own bowling spells have often been awry and his placing of the field has been unimaginative, specially when it comes to stopping the lesser partner in a stand from feeding the strike to the more aggressive associate. This however, does not take away from Kapil Dev's intelligence or his grasp of the game. It is extremely hard to combine the roles of a frontline bowler, specially a pace bowler, and captain.

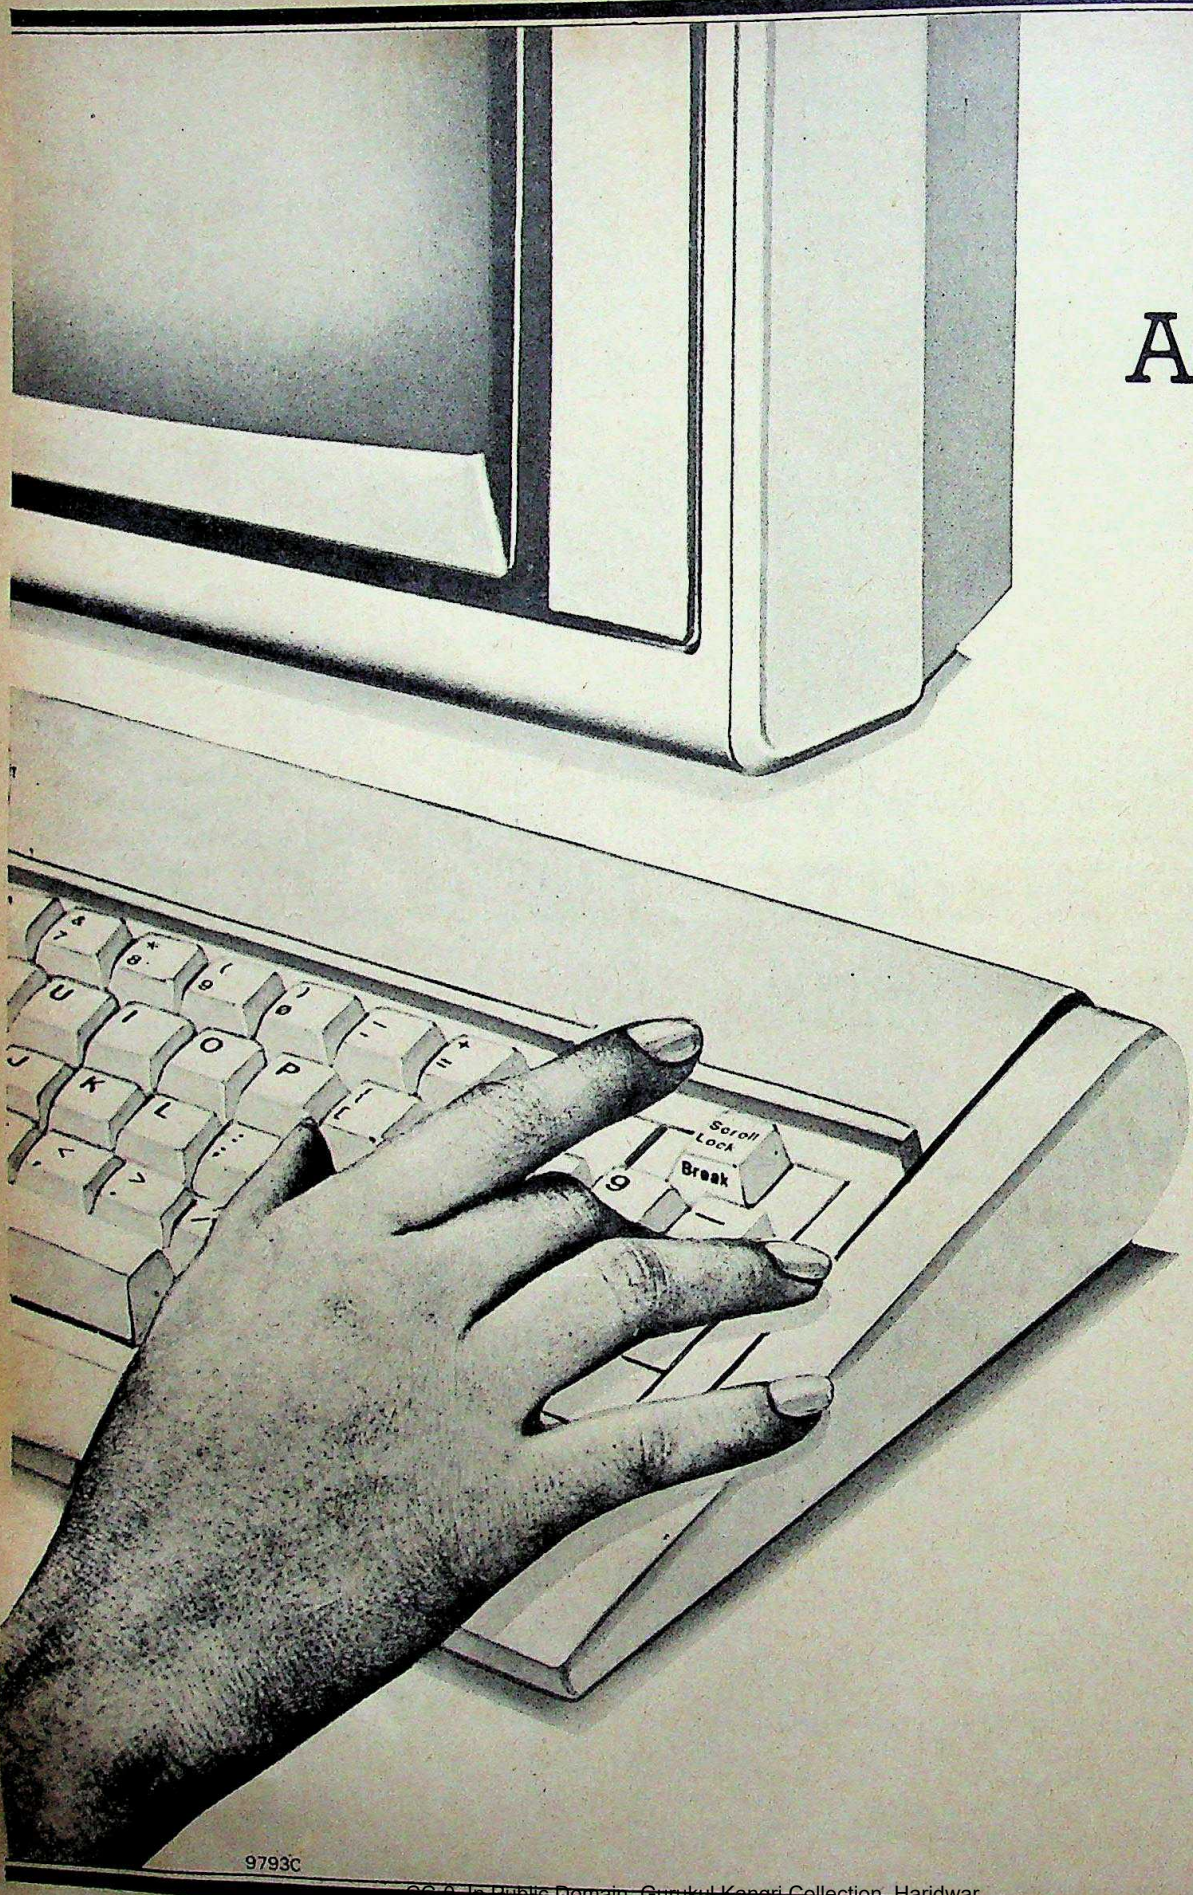
India's weaknesses alone have not marked the course of the competition. It would be short-sighted not to acknowledge the qualities of their opponents, Australia and New Zealand. Australia's bowlers have not only been remarkably accurate, but also penetrative when they have had scope to attack. As for New Zealand, Martin Crowe has batted with authority and consistency and has not lacked for support from Wright, Edgar, Coney and his brother Jeff. The great Richard Hadlee has touched high peaks and Ewen Chatfield has hardly had a bad match. Stewart Gillespie too has turned in notable performances.

If India is to remain a force in one-day cricket, it must build a young side which will field more aggressively and run more sharply between the wickets. The current squad clearly lacks the fitness to stand the rigours of a long campaign.

—DICKY RUTNAGUR in Sydney

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Adding

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

What's up at Dunlop: 3

ing new surge of power to India's industrial modernisation...

Dunlop introduces world-leading Mitsuboshi Vee belt technology

Dunlop's Rs. 10 crore project Sahaganj, West Bengal, will rther modernise and diversify e Company's power nsmission belt manufacturing nlities.

Yet another example of the mpany's efforts to ntinuously update its hnology. Another example of nlop's new vitality.

A vitality that will help meet growing demand for phisticated and quality belts in lia.

And once again Dunlop laborates with no one but the st.

Mitsuboshi Belting Limited. far the largest belt manufacturer in Japan and currently acknowledged to be one of the best internationally.

The new power transmission belt project will shortly be operational at Sahaganj, West Bengal.

What are the far-reaching implications of this Dunlop-Mitsuboshi technical tie-up?

The latest, more up-to-date automotive and industrial Vee belts...

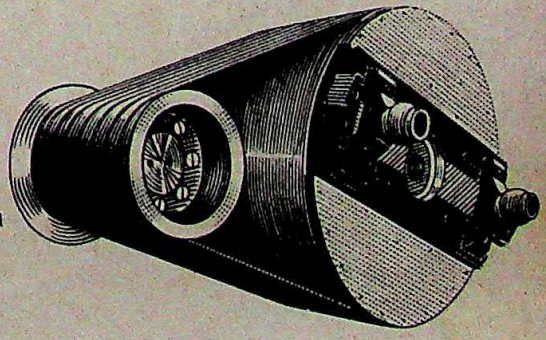
A complete range of modern transmission belts and accessories like raw edge, raw edge cogged, variable speed, timing, banded belts along with pulleys, bushings and couplings...

Sophisticated, energy efficient compact belts for industry, mining, agriculture, automotive and the service sectors...

Yet another way in which Dunlop India contributes to Indian industry's march into the twenty-first century.

DUNLOP INDIA

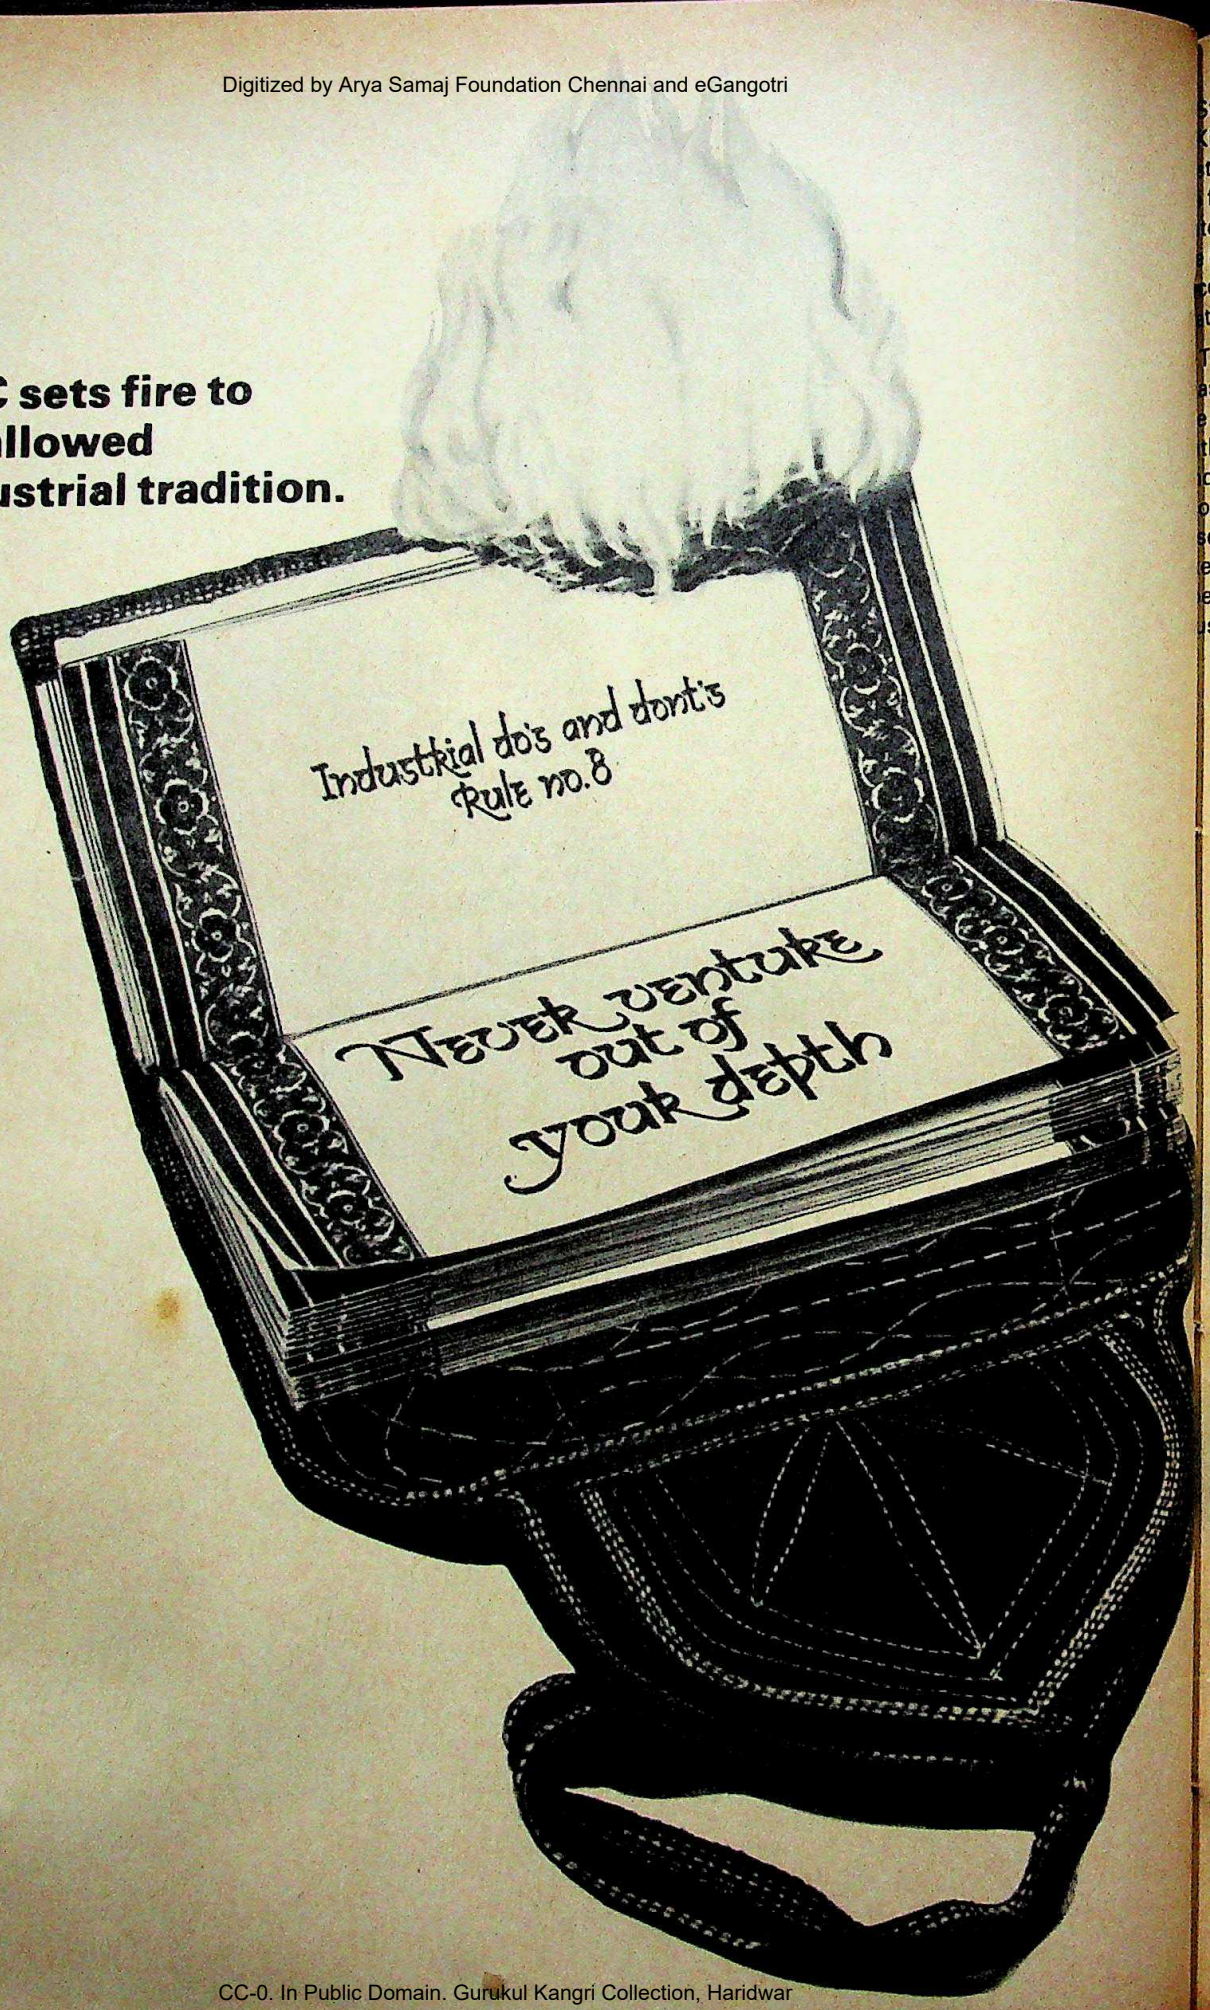
The first name - the latest technology



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KEC sets fire to a hallowed industrial tradition.



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Strange as it may sound, our success KEC and the total confidence of our tomers is due in some measure to fact that we plunge into untested ters. Once we take on a project, we it through, no matter what the cost consequences. And we deliver, no tter what the problems.

Take the case of the Kathara Coal asheries, to cite just one example. In middle of '81, we met the coal thorities at Kathara Washeries to derstand their indigenisation ogramme. Together, we pooled our sources and capabilities to find an ernative for the foreign motors erating heavy duty gyratory ushers.

We had worked in the bowels of the earth in collieries in the past. Thanks to Coal India's patience and faith in us we had licked some really tough problems and successfully supplied the drives for coal cutters. But this time the physical site was even more daunting. Kathara (it's so remote hardly anyone's heard the name) is a village in a perpetually water-logged valley 60 to 70 kms. from Ranchi. Coal from the adjoining coal mines is washed here to reduce its ash content before it's used in steel mills.

Kathara is not for people with weak stomachs or feeble wills. It's a lonely place and the living amenities would give pause to the hardiest of pioneers. What appears like hard rock-like land surface is really floating coal boulders. One false move and you can literally sink forever in the water pockets. Our team of engineers had to wade through such dangerous waters and descend along spiral paths to the crushers which were often 15 metres under water in extremely narrow and cramped spaces.

It required an exceptional degree of dogged determination of the kind displayed by tough Indian miners, for our experts to go under repeatedly for fifteen days till they had studied the power supply, environment and stress factors on the machines.

The heavy duty gyratory crushers use two motors in tandem. Each motor handles an amazing 50 tonnes of coal per minute. The twin direct drives are located at the bottom of the crushers. The rating of the motors is 320 kW, 10 pole, 600 r.p.m., slipring type, 6.6 kV.

Site analysis revealed three salient points. One, the ambient atmosphere was humid and dust-ridden. Two, frequent bearing failure was observed. And three, single phasing caused failure of motors.

The intensive study of operating conditions and on-site discussions with mining experts in that difficult sub-marine environment paid rich dividends. Our engineers got back to their designing tables and made recommendations for nearly twenty applications. Direct observation and the insights they had gained guided them to the right design philosophy. The new motors were supplied immediately. In the process we also managed to substitute imports of these expensive motors.

Kirloskar

Converting energy to serve the millions

KIRLOSKAR ELECTRIC CO. LTD

P. B. 5555, Malleswaram West,
Bangalore 560 055

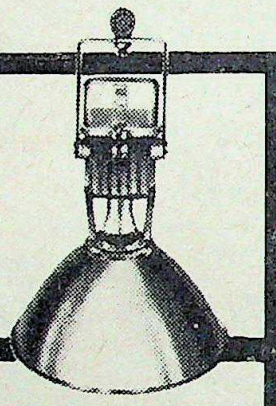
Thanks to our sophisticated technological expertise, our capacity to take on new challenges and the fact that we never abandon our customers or products, KEC is today one of the leading manufacturers of AC, DC machines in South-East Asia, making over 80,000 motors and generators a year. KEC also produces electronic equipment and systems, AC and DC controls, geared motors, welding equipment and transformers. Our machines are in use in almost every conceivable industry. In India and in over 20 countries of the world including the U.K., U.S.A. and Canada.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

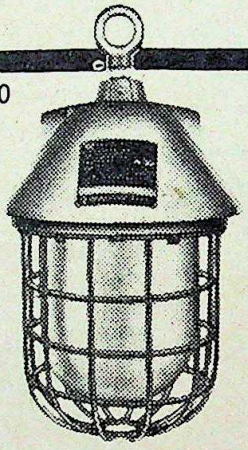
bajaj

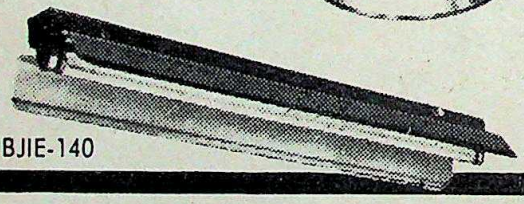
brings you a complete range of energy-efficient Industrial Luminaires.



BJHBI - 250-400

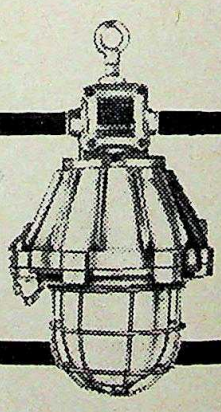
BJIW-200

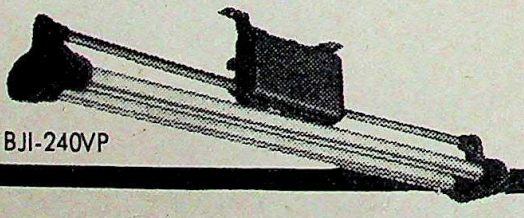




BJIE-140

BJFW-200





BJI-240VP

Engineered for high efficiency and designed to suit any high, medium or low bay application as well as different atmospheres like high ambient temperature/humidity in rolling and textile mills, corrosive vapours in fertiliser and chemical plants, etc.

Bajaj offers a total integrated lighting service from the designing to the electrification and installation of lighting fittings on a turnkey basis for any indoor/outdoor location.

For details write to:

Lighting Project Services
Bajaj Electricals Limited
45-47 Veer Nariman Road
Bombay 400 023.

Heros' BE-780 A

bajaj

The lighting people since 1938.

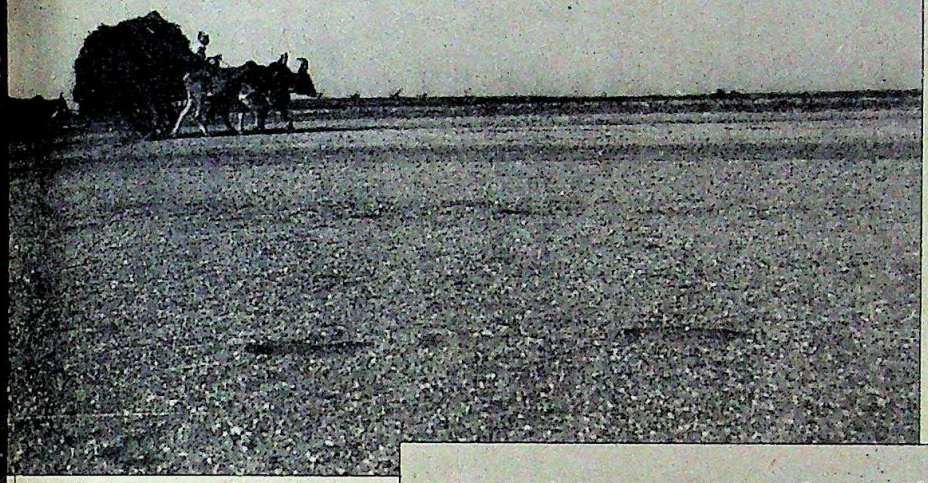
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by RAMESH MENON

SAURASHTRA

Tears of Salt



Coastal Gujarat is grappling with a man-made environmental disaster: 1.2 million hectares of fertile land has turned saline, affecting over 1.33 million people in 779 villages.

THE VILLAGERS in Saurashtra pride themselves on their hospitality. No visitor to this western corner of the country is allowed to return without having a cup of tea and home-made snacks. But the times are changing, and serving tea has become a problem in many of Saurashtra's villages—not because the villagers are any less hospitable but because tea cannot be made with the saline water available in the area as it spoils the milk.

Coastal Gujarat is grappling with a man-made environmental disaster: 1.2 million hectares of fertile land stretching for 1,059 km between Bhavnagar and Lakhpat has turned saline, affecting over 1.33 million people in 779 villages. The area between Una and Madhavpur is the worst affected, with salinity ingress reaching 10 km inland and affecting 120 villages in the Junagadh and Amreli districts.

The residents of the area had never dreamt that such a fate would befall them. In the 1960s, Gujarati poets had been inspired to write poems on this lush area, calling it "Lili Nager" (green creeper). The area was dotted with prosperous fruit plantations and fields of sugarcane and groundnut. But now, for miles on end, not a blade of grass grows and the reassuring beat of diesel pumps has been replaced by a deathly silence.

Prosperous farmers have been forced to leave their fields and become menial labourers in nearby areas. Laments Baval Sidi, whose four acres of land in Miyani village of Junagadh district was blighted by saline water: "My land is useless. No one wants to buy it and I have been reduced to a labourer."

Ironically, coastal Saurashtra's fertility contributed in no small measure to this distressing state of affairs. In the zeal to usher in a green revolution in this fertile tract, the state Government in the mid-1960s liberally granted loans to farmers to install irrigation pumps. Soon an astonishing 90 per cent of the fields had diesel pumps. The withdrawal of groundwater increased fivefold. Crops like sugarcane—which require large amounts of water—flourished and sugar factories sprang up in places like Talala.

But the revolution upset the delicate balance of nature. Rainfall used to replenish the water table and thereby keep sea water at bay. But the massive withdrawals of water led to a steep drop in the water table, and sea water seeped in. In 1974, Mangrol's water table was 22 feet below the surface; today it is 40 feet and the wells on the coast have become brackish. Worse, many farmers realised too late that the water had turned brackish and continued to use it for irrigating their fields, ruining the top soil.

Environmentalists like Lavkumar Khacher had sounded warnings of disaster over a decade ago, but his was a voice in the wilderness. Khacher says today with some bitterness: "When we warned people, they laughed at us and dismissed us as idealistic dreamers."

Consecutive droughts from 1972 to 1974 led to the water table falling further, and the sea water flowed in. Wells in villages like Adri, Sutrapada, Dhamlej, Antroli and Shil registered a staggering salt content of 10,000 parts per million (PPM). Water becomes undrinkable after 600 PPM and unfit for irrigation after 2,000 PPM. Sea water has a salt content of 30,000 to 40,000 PPM. Predictably, crop yields plummeted. In the area between Una and Madhavpur, the mango yield fell from 40 tonnes per acre in the early 1970s to 20 tonnes, coconut from 20,000 nuts to 8,000 per acre, bananas from 19 to 10 tonnes, sugarcane from 110 to 55 tonnes and bajra from 2,800 kg to 1,400 kg. Farmer Kana Barad of Badalpara village in Junagadh district ruefully examines the sickly-looking jowar in his fields and voices a common local sentiment: "Only God can help us now."

Land prices have fallen dramatically, when there are buyers at all. Prices in the mid-1960s used to range up to Rs 25,000 or more per acre, but now most land goes abegging. "There are no buyers," says farmer Naga Narain, whose two acres lie barren in the hot sun.

Some cultivation is still possible in many places because the farmers depend on the rains to provide one rain-fed crop a year. Many farmers have also switched to crops like cotton and groundnut as these need 80 per cent less water than sugarcane, bananas and other fruits. But even one crop a year is often not possible, because the monsoons fail, as happened this year. Some, like Laka Rana Vala, pay a heavy price when this happens. Vala had sown 370 kg of wheat, resting his hopes on the monsoon. Today, he is a broken man, and his torn clothes and gaunt cheek-bones tell the tale of a pauper even though he owns 10 acres of land.

Polarama Barad talks nostalgically of the time his parents in Adri used to grow fruits on their six-acre farm. "It was very profitable," he recalls but now, the field is used to grow only one crop of rain-fed groundnut. And it speaks volumes that among the 'happiest' farmers in the area today is Varjang Barad, who owns two acres in the same village. His groundnut crop fetched him Rs 4,000, enabling him to make a profit of Rs 1,000. "It is ridiculous to think that I can be happy with earning such a small amount in a whole year, but 90 per cent of the farmers lost everything they sowed," he says.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

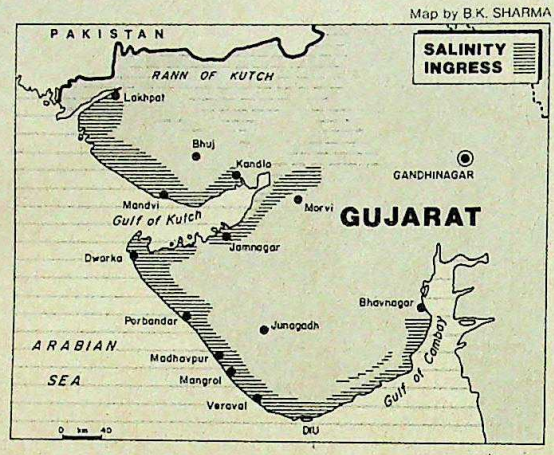
Driven by poverty, most of the Adri villagers desperately want to sell their cattle but refrain from doing so for fear that they will end up in the slaughterhouse. Says Barad: "Bullocks have been the mainstay of our lives. If they have to die, let them die in our courtyards." Many farmers have begun migrating in search of work. But others, like Kanabhai Haridas, refuse to consider that option: "We were born here and we will die here. How can we leave our land behind? All these years it gave us so much." Haridas sold his family jewellery last year for Rs 5,000 as there was nothing to eat.

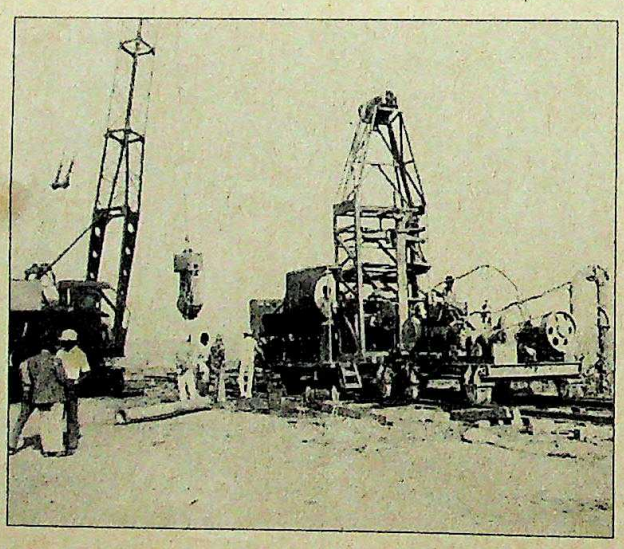
Awakening to persistent complaints from villagers in Saurashtra, the state Government appointed a committee in 1974 under the then chief secretary H.K.L. Capoor to go into the complaints. The report unequivocally stated the only solution was to artificially recharge the subsoil with water. The catch: it would cost a staggering Rs 65 crore just to reclaim the 160 km stretch of land between Una and Madhavpur. So the report was shelved. But as the salinity problem got worse, another committee was appointed in 1978 under Capoor's successor, K.Shivraj. This committee recommended bunds on rivers, artificial recharging of the subsoil with water, massive afforestation and other measures—and the cost had escalated to a whopping Rs 800 crore. The Government finally started moving in a small way—a Rs 36 crore plan was drawn up, with Rs 24 crore coming from the World Bank alone.

A spate of construction is now under way in the area for erecting 150 checkdams, two tidal regulators (to prevent sea water from entering dry rivers during high tide), and bunds across rivers to facilitate water storage, while an afforestation drive is on along the coast. The most ambitious project is the Rs 6.27-crore Medha Creek project—a concrete bund to prevent the sea from flooding flat land. When completed in 1990, it will also help store 1,340 million cubic feet of fresh water, thereby recharging the water table and irrigating over 10,000 acres of land in Junagadh and Jamnagar districts.

However, all this is confined to the 160 km belt. The rest of the coastal area still cries out for attention. But a senior state government official offered little hope: "Finances do not permit us to even think of what we can start doing in the other areas," he said. Officials are also sceptical about how the Government is going to get the Rs 800 crore it needs for further conservation work, and the fact that this is the first time in the country that such a multi-disciplinary effort is under way makes the going even tougher.

Map by B.K. SHARMA





Construction at Medha Creek: ambitious project

But the limited effort already made has started showing results. The Irrigation Department—which has been closely monitoring salinity levels in 1,500 wells—indicated that 15,000 of the one lakh acres affected by salinity had improved, and farmers had started cultivating them. Salinity levels in wells near bunds or tidal regulators had dropped, and wells in 35 villages had become potable again. But with the failure of the monsoon, salinity levels had once again shown an increase last month. Says J.F.Mistry, irrigation secretary: "Our projects can only be successful if there is enough rain. We cannot fight nature."

The situation is likely to get worse in the coming months as none of the checkdams now hold water, making sea water ingress inevitable. And since the rock strata all along the Saurashtra coast are of miliolite limestone—full of cavities and very porous—water easily flows in. But 10 km ahead, the formation ceases and non-porous rock checks sea water ingress. And a checkdam in Visenvel village in Junagadh district wards off sea water while stopping the river water from flowing into the sea. Tarmohammed Daud, who lives near the checkdam, says his wheat crop is now flourishing. "If more such dams come up thousands of farmers will be freed from the curse of salinity," he says.

Rather late in the day, the Government has also decided not to permit any more well energisation in the coastal zone, and the land development bank and commercial banks have been restrained from advancing loans for buying motors. But this is hardly enough. Capoor and Shivraj had called for water legislation to prevent farmers from drawing excess water. "It is impossible to tell a farmer that he should use water sparsely as that would stunt his profits," laments geologist Anil Bhatnagar. "The legislation will ensure that water becomes fit for irrigation purposes, but if the farmers start withdrawing too much we will have the old problem again on our hands."

Water legislation is one solution, but as Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary pointed out "it will be politically impossible." The multi-dimensional plan for all of coastal Gujarat seems equally unlikely because of the state government's shortage of funds. Said Chaudhary: "We may need about Rs 1,000 crore to control salinity for which we will have to ask the World Bank for loans. And we do not know whether such a huge loan will be possible." And there is no third solution in sight at the moment. In that situation, the thousands of farmers in Saurashtra may be fated to see only mirages of fresh water.

—RAMESH MENON in Veraval and Porbandar

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

2.1 kg of Pure Fun VideoMovie

JVC

VHS C

AUTO FOCUS

- VHS-C compactness
- VHS compatibility
- Auto-Focus convenience

JVC's VideoMovie with auto-focus makes home video recording easy, exciting and really fun. No experience necessary. Just load a cassette, point, shoot and enjoy great VHS recordings of your family and friends right on television in full color, immediately after you record.

Everything you need is together in one single, lightweight (2.1 kg) unit.

But, best of all, VideoMovie recordings are made with 1/2" VHS tape, the most popular video system in the world. Recordings, with a cassette adapter, can be played back on any VHS recorder, so you can share them with your friends and family.

HR-D141EM VHS

VIDEO CASSETTE RECORDER

- PAL/MESECAM* dual-system recording and playback
- Multi-voltage adaptability: 110/127/220/240 V AC, 50/60 Hz
- Shuttle search, still and frame advance

*Applicable to the Middle East.

HR-D257MS VHS

VIDEO CASSETTE RECORDER

- PAL/SECAM/MESECAM*/NTSC 3.58/NTSC 4.43 5-system recording and playback with PAL/MESECAM built-in tuner
- Double-Azimuth 4-head (DA-4) system for field stills and flicker-free slow motion at 4 different speeds
- Automatic voltage switching to 110 – 240 V AC, 50/60 Hz

NIDA

JVC Authorised Service Centres in India

NEW DELHI MONICA ELECTRONICS PVT. LTD. TEL. 632143, 638293, 631351
BOMBAY MIRC ELECTRONICS PVT. LTD. TEL. 6042134, 6321133, 6300228
CALCUTTA MONICA ELECTRONICS PVT. LTD. TEL. 265886
MADRAS MIRC ELECTRONICS PVT. LTD. TEL. 443331
COCHIN BIONIX TEL. 369422, 351595

JVC Authorised Distributors in the Middle East

UNITED ARAB EMIRATES OASIS ENTERPRISES DUBAI TEL. 283171
SAUDI ARABIA SAID EL-AJOU TRADING CORP. TEL. JEDDAH. 6609780, 6606456, 6606080, RIYADH. 4763039, 4763040, 4763044, AL-KHOBAR. 8641347
SULTANATE OF OMAN JUSBANI STORES, MUTTRAH. TEL. 772407, 734587, SALALAH. 460251
KUWAIT AL-ALAMIAH ELECTRONICS. TEL. 2414140, 2414141, 2414142
QATAR NASIR BIN ABDULLAH & MOHD. SIDDIQ TRADING CO. DOHA. TEL. 321486, 424249
BAHRAIN GAJRIA ELECTRONICS W.L.L. TEL. 253453, 258396, 272477

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Come to think of it, it's very simple to be happy.

And happiness has always been an easy part of simple life.
Like yours. Natural. Warm. Simple.
And reaching out for more of the same.
Reach out for Mayur.
Mayur fabrics. A large range of Polyester blends.
For you and your family. Wholesome good looks. And pure quality.
At easy prices.
Mayur. Like everything else in your life.
Good. And easy to be happy about.

MAYUR®
Suitings • Shirtings • Sarees • Dress Material

For people who think twice before they buy.

A product of The Rajasthan Spinning & Weaving Mills Ltd. Gulabpura-311 021 (RAJ.)

A:RSW:2909A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Charms is the spirit of freedom.
Charms is the way you are.

A great cigarette. Now even better.

Charms has always been a great cigarette.

And now it's even better.

There's the blend for a start. The same superior blend of fine Virginia tobaccos as the one that's exported.

A cellophane wrapper to keep it fresher, longer.

An acetate filter like all leading international brands.

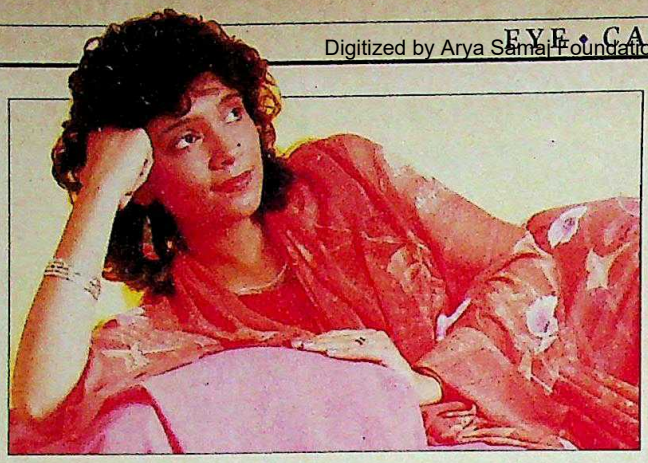
And now it's also available in the smart new cardboard carton.

Charms Virginia Kings.
It's got your kind of taste.
Your kind of flavour.
And your kind of style.

Collection, Haridwar

WARNING: CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Masani: audio-visual

◆ The postman rang only once but it was more than enough for Manique Cooray. For the shy, dusky, 12-year-old schoolgirl of Colombo's Moratuwa suburb, it was a dream come true. She had wanted to become an air-hostess when she grew up—just so she could meet him. But here was his letter. "Be my guest," he had written; and she flew to Delhi to meet her famous pen-friend for the first time in her

HARI OM GULATI

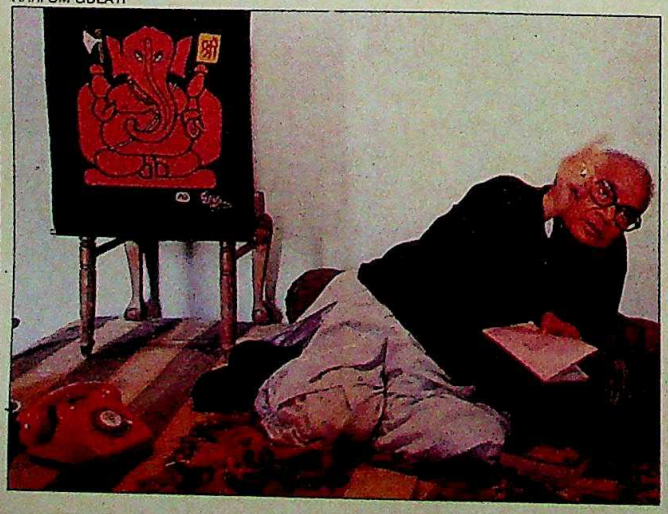
Cooray: red-letter week life—the Prime Minister of India Rajiv Gandhi himself. Cooray, as Rajiv's personal guest, went sight-seeing in Delhi and Agra, watched the Republic Day parade and could not understand why their countries could not be friends like she and her pen-pal. She went back happy, breathless and gushing over her friend Rajiv: "He is so nice and friendly and he loves children." There's one snag, though. Now that she has met him and needn't become an airhostess, poor Cooray doesn't know what she wants to be when she grows up.

◆ They always said her looks were better than her voice. She took them on their word and now, after making herself heard, she is bent upon making herself seen too—if only in a soap opera. Penaaz Masani, the bawi ghazal singer from Bombay, will now breeze into living-rooms—perm and all—every once in a while through the national tube. The serial is Suwarnarekha and the role—you've guessed it—is of a singer all set to make it big despite a couple of odds—rich, obstinate parents in this case. The odds too are for real—it took weeks of smooth talk by the serial-makers to convince her father, who was averse to the idea of his daughter acting in a serial to begin with. But once allowed, it didn't take long for Masani to slide into the role. "I am singing the title song and have already recorded a Meera bhajan for the second episode," says the singer. Her only bother is: "There is a boy opposite me and the least we can do is hold hands. I don't know how Dada will react to it." As if ghazals were all about the birds and bees!

◆ You can't keep a good man down and guess what he's pulled out of his green bandana this time? A role in a movie—Raj Narain as Guru Nanak, if you please, shooting begins February 1. No, it's no comedy of errors. For once, the former Janata jester is dead serious. "It's a social-religious film called Sadbhav (goodwill) and I'm doing it to cleanse society," comes the lofty pronouncement. It's the beard that did it. "My friend who's making the film said my beard was just like Guru Nanak's," says the leader, stroking a chin that's ironically shorn of its glory these days. But what of the sammelans and padyatras? "I won't have any problems finding time, since I always have time for noble deeds," he assures. To the coterie of bhaiyas surrounding him, he is already something of a star as he chortles: "So far we've only had actors becoming MP's; now I will reverse this trend." Competition at last for Amitabh Bachchan.

Narain: star turn

HARI OM GULATI



SIGNPOST

◆ Nikhil Bannerjee, 55, who died of a cardiac attack in Calcutta last fortnight, was the only sitar-player in India who could manage to retain his identity without being a clone of either Ravi Shankar or Vilayat Khan. A musician of extraordinary depth, Bannerjee learnt his sitar from Baba Alauddin Khan.

But the sitarist ploughed a lonely furrow, absorbing the grammar and discipline of Alauddin Khan's Senia school, yet coming under profound influence of vocalist Amir Khan. By the late 50's, Bannerjee was reckoned as an original artiste, with a style that had the formal symmetry of the Senia school and the spiritual depth of Amir Khan's singing. He cut several discs, both at home and abroad, and performed and lectured extensively in Europe and the US.

Bannerjee: autumn raga

It was all this and more that got him the Sangeet Natak Akademi Award in 1974, as well as the Padma Shri, besides other frequent honours. Three days before his death, he aptly played at a public concert in Calcutta, Raga Hemant, created by Alauddin, which, in its austerity, captures the melancholy of the autumn.

—Compiled by MOHAMMED ASLAM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

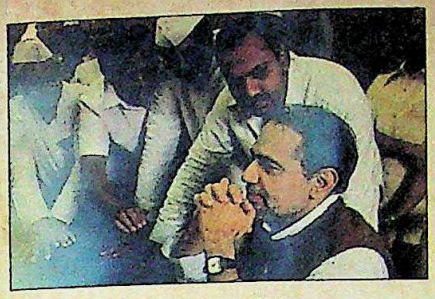
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

2036
2035
2034
2033

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

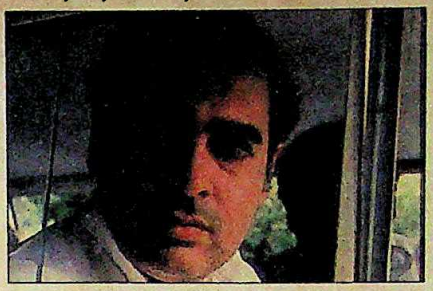
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



The Resignation Drama

The dramatic resignation last week of R.K. Hegde, chief minister of Karnataka, took the nation by storm. By one stroke, he turned the table on his critics who had been gunning for him in the wake of the adverse high court judgement against his government.

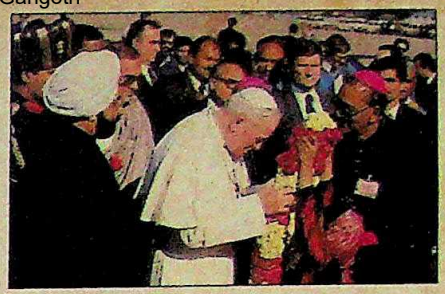
COVER STORY 26



The Fading Glitter

The harsh popular reaction to the Government's petroleum price hike coming close on lost by-elections and the bungled Punjab accord spelt the end of the Rajiv Gandhi euphoria. A special report on the changed mood.

SPECIAL REPORT 38



A Pope's Pilgrimage

Last fortnight's whirlwind tour of India by Pope John Paul II was as much an event for the faithful as for the curious. Despite protests from fanatic Hindu groups, the "People's Pope" lived up to his image with multitudes swarming around him. A pictorial feature.

PHOTO FEATURE 78

Rewarding Links

Dealerships for Maruti cars have become surefire business propositions. But the manner in which Maruti Udyog Ltd has gone about selecting its dealers has become a questionable issue with people close to the Congress(I) being favoured.

INVESTIGATION 74

Calling the Shots

If Punjab today is different from what it was a year ago, it is also uncannily similar. The guns and saffron turbans of yore have been replaced by grim, more portentious symbols. And it is Bhindranwale's young inheritors who are now in charge.

SPECIAL FEATURE 90

Going Down Under

India's standing as world-beaters in one-day cricket suffered a serious setback in the Benson and Hedges Cup in Australia last fortnight. The team's performance raised serious questions, not the least about the captaincy issue. An on-the-spot report.

SPORTS 116

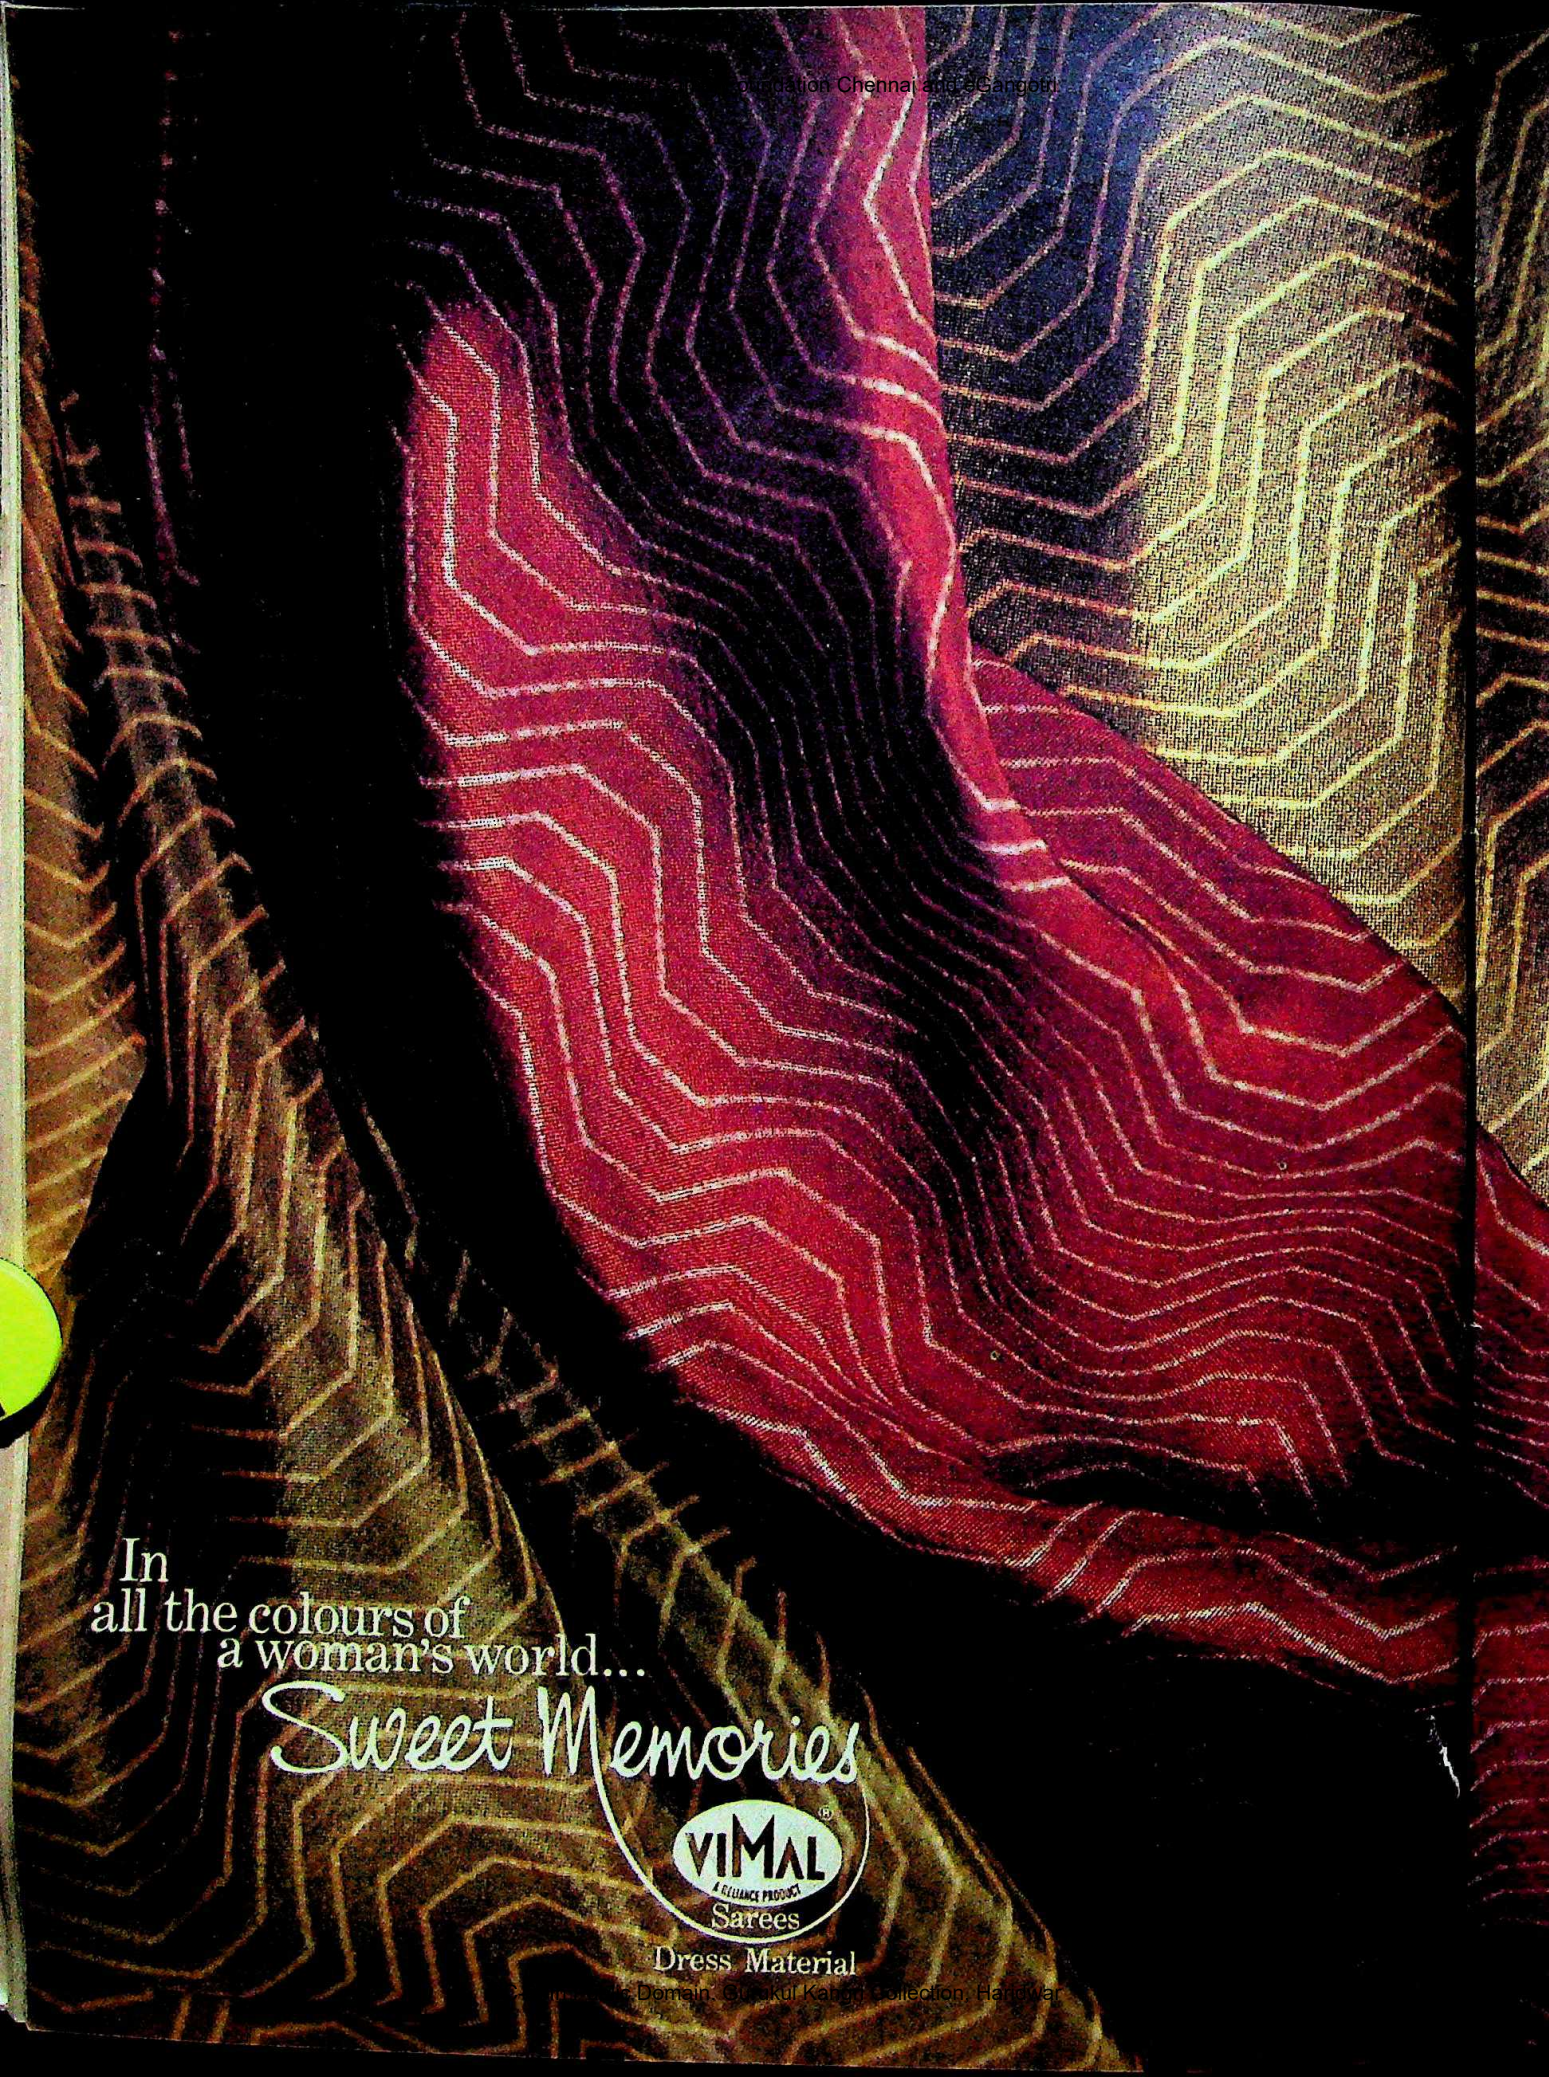
CONTENTS

COMMENT 11
CAPITALOOK 12
VOICES 18
INDIANOTES 23
COVER STORY
R.K. Hegde: The Resignation Drama 26
SPECIAL REPORT
Rajiv Gandhi: The Fading Glitter 38
CURRENT EVENTS
Punjab: Grim Portents 44
Rajasthan: Sudden Exits 51
Maharashtra: Election Upset 52
Bombay: Tall Order 57
Andhra Pradesh: Fare Charge 58
Gujarat: Caste Carnage 61
Bihar: Image Making 63
Delhi University: Striking Lesson 69
Bureaucracy: Revamping the Service 70
Karnataka: Vote Banks 73
INVESTIGATION
Maruti Dealers: Rewarding Links 74
PHOTO FEATURE
A Pope's Pilgrimage 78
STATENOTES 89
SPECIAL FEATURE
Punjab Extremists: Calling the Shots 90
GLOBE TROTTING
United Kingdom: Growing Anger 96
Hong Kong Indians: In the Cold 101
Mughal Miniatures: Priceless Sale 103
DEVELOPMENT
NOIDA: From Land-trap to Gold-mine 104
RELIGION
Ayodhya: Unholy Row 113
SPORTS
Cricket: Going Down Under 116
TRADE WINDS 125
BUSINESS
Economy: Forever Amber 126
Public Sector:
Tapping the Market 128
Hotel Banjara: Snapping Ties 133
The Economy Monitor 137
The Markets: Bonus Fever 139
LAW
Kashmir Jewels: Tax Ploy 142
CRIME
Uttar Pradesh: Quick Quacks 147
MEDIA
Doordarshan: The Missing Telecast 153
SCIENCE
Research Establishments:
Formula for Efficiency 154
CINEMA
Censor Board: Cutting Charges 158
BOOKS
Subtle Magic 160
EYE-CATCHERS 164

Cover photograph by BHAWAN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

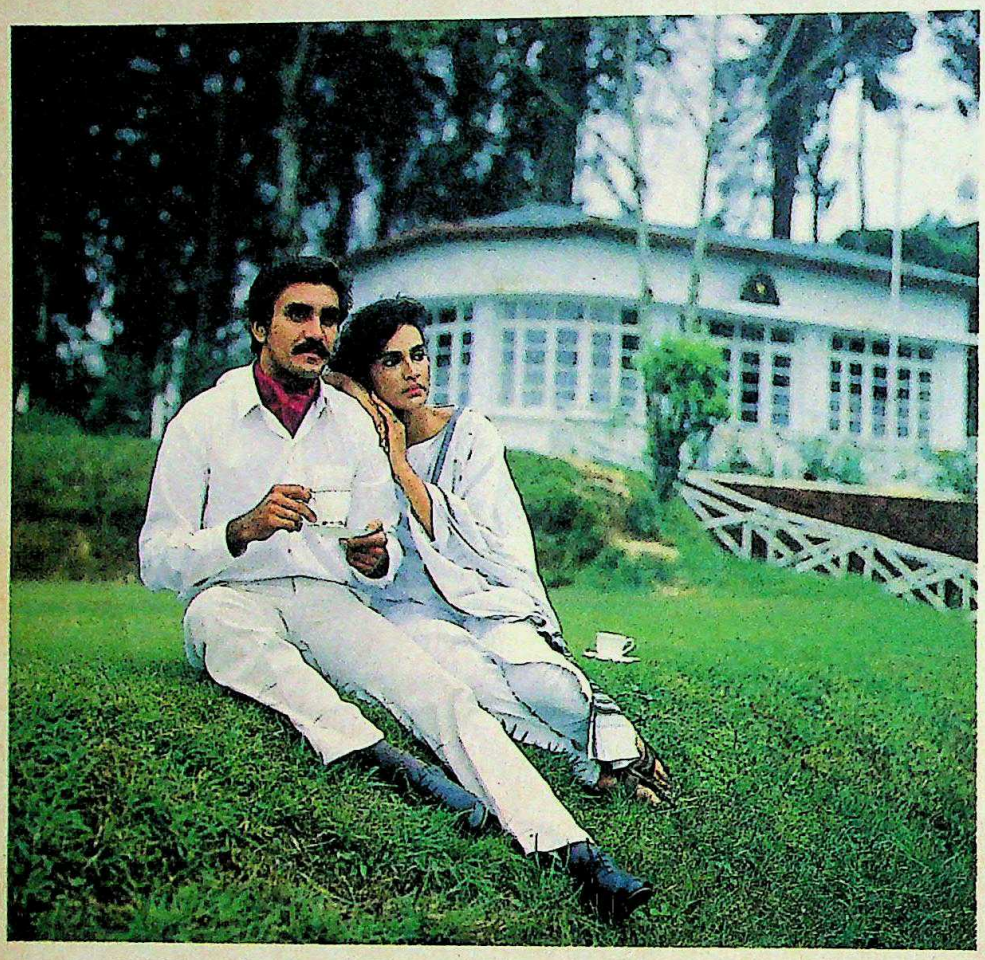
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



From the mist-wrapped slopes of the Darjeeling hills comes a tea so distinct, so impeccable in flavour...

Nurtured in the finest tea estates. Carefully and discerningly hand-picked. And sealed into a unique gold foil pack to retain that garden-fresh flavour.

FLAVOUR SO DARJEELING, IT DESERVES A GOLD LABEL.

Brooke Bond GOLD LABEL

The very essence of Darjeeling

BBI-1834

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XI NUMBER 4
FOR THE FORTNIGHT FEBRUARY 16-28, 1986

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

MANAGING EDITOR — SUMAN DUBEY
SENIOR EDITOR — T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR — RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR — INDERJIT BADHWAR
ASSOCIATE EDITOR — DILIP BOBB
ASSISTANT EDITORS — PRABHU CHAWLA, AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS — RAMINDAR SINGH, SUMIT MITRA
NEW DELHI — SHEKHAR GUPTA, PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI, RAJ CHENGAPPA
AHMEDABAD — RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE — SRINIVASA PRASAD
BOMBAY — JAGANNATH DUBASHI
CALCUTTA — INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH — GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD — AMARNATH K. MENON
JAIPUR — SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
MADRAS — S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA — FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM — SREEDHAR PILLAI
NEW YORK — MADHU TREHAN
LONDON — RAMESH CHANDRAN

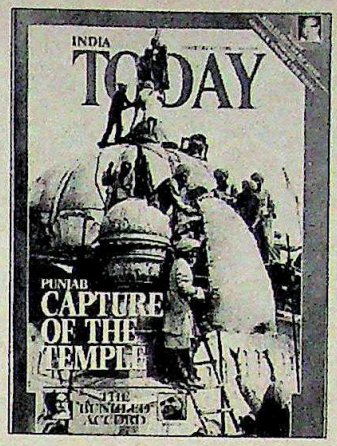
NEWS COORDINATOR — RADHIKA ROY
DESIGN CONSULTANT — AUROBIND PATEL
CHIEF OF PRODUCTION — SHIRLEY JOSHUA, ANURADHA KAPOOR
COPY DESK — ANUPAMA GOPAL, SIMRAN BHARGAVA, ANN NINAN
CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER — BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHER — PRAMOD PUSHKARNA
CARTOONIST — AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER — B.K. SHARMA
LAYOUT ARTISTS — LOKESH BHARGAVA, ANUP GUPTA, PEALI DUTTA GUPTA
MARKETING DIRECTOR — MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY — GEORGE SEBASTIAN
DELHI — NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA — MEERA PAUL
MADRAS — R. ANAND
BANGALORE — ANITA BAVEJA

GENERAL MANAGER — CHANDER RAI

• EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD, F-40 CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4, TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI • SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT, POST BOX 69, FARIDABAD HARYANA • TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER, F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIRCLE, NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8, TELEX: 31-4724 INTO IN • ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2029435, TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN, CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BOMBAY • 13-K CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 312841, 312070, 321776, TELEX: 31-5308 THOM IN, CABLES: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI • FAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105, PHONE: 477188,477770 CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS • 74/1ST. MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001, PHONE: 568448, 579037, 579089, CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BANGALORE • 12 EVEREST 46C CHOWRINGEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016, PHONE: 445398, 447726, CABLE: LIVMEDIA, CALCUTTA •
COPYRIGHT 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD, NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD, FARIDABAD HARYANA • INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL •



DIRECT ACTION

What is happening in Punjab ("Capture of the Temple", February 15) is deplorable and the sooner it is controlled the better it will be for the entire country. Whatever the consequences of the takeover, the blame will be on G.S. Tohra and S.S. Barnala. The excuse of avoiding bloodshed put forward by Tohra is very flimsy. There will be a lot more bloodshed if the situation continues to be the way it is.

Delhi — UDAI KHANIJOW

■ The takeover of the Golden Temple complex by the followers of Bhindranwale has thrown out an aura of sinister and powerful menace in Punjab. The situation is once again in a labyrinth. The arrogance of the Taksal and the AISSF is a lucid indication of the burgeoning of yet another crisis. To add insult to injury, the implementation of the Rajiv-Longowal agreement was not carried out on Republic Day. This, beyond a shadow of doubt, spelt the doom of the implementation of the first phase of the accord.

It seems Punjab is unfortunately going back in time. This is something that has to somehow be stopped immediately. Otherwise the situation will get totally out of control.

Bangalore — CHIDANAND KUMAR

■ As a leader of the ruling party, Surjit Singh Barnala should change his attitude towards the followers of Bhindranwale, and instead concentrate on maintaining law and order within the Golden Temple and strike a peaceful settlement with the militants and try to rebuild a prosperous Punjab. Barnala should implement the accord and get control over the temple without any kind of violence or bloodshed.

Madras — K.V. RAJAGOPALAN

■ It is very surprising to see the Central Government not taking any action against the extremists. What is alarming is the fact that not a single Sikh seems to oppose the activities of the extremists. The breaking down of the Akal Takht makes no sense, but who has opposed it?

Falna — SANJEEV KUMAR DEV

WINDOW DRESSING

Ever since Independence there has never been a politician who has not made money for himself. Your Comment, "Political Immunity" (February 15) is a widely known fact and repeating the same story does not serve any purpose for no politician can reform himself at least in the near future. It is doubtful whether the Government has been successful in carrying out its drive against corruption in the big industrial houses since everyone at the top seems to escape without punishment, probably due to political backing.

Madras — FRANKLYN STANLEY

■ Your editorial has rightly blamed politicians for the present corrupt life of the country, they have gained as much as businessmen through the creation and operation of the licence-permit raj. And the fact that those who surrounded the late prime minister in the last years of her power have been sent into wilderness shows that there was something wrong with the old regime, but a lot of the beneficiaries still occupy important positions. Your suggestion that the politicians should now be included in the taxman's net is a sound proposal but whether the finance minister would like to attack his own tribe has to be seen.

Moradabad — V.S. GARG

POWER PLAY

Cabinet reshuffle seems to have become an important tool in the hands of the new leadership to strengthen its grip on the party ("Shuffle Puzzle", February 15). In the process, the veterans get sidelined on the pretext of their being power brokers. It should be remembered that it was the very ideals and principles of these traditional professionals which made the Congress Party such a big organisation.

Saharanpur — NARENDRA M. PANT

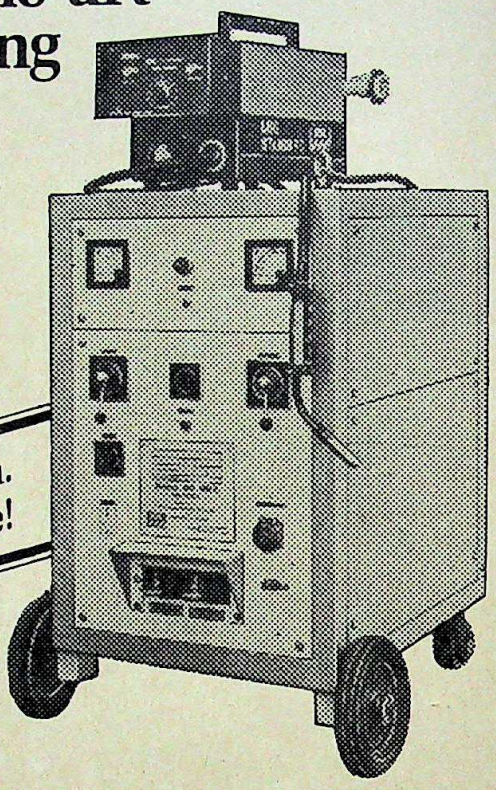
A MUSLIM PROBLEM

The cover story "Muslims: A Community in Turmoil" (January 31) shows

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

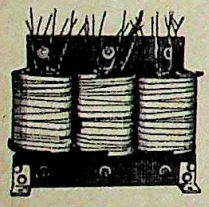
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Presenting the state-of-the-art in semi-automatic welding



Indarc MIG/MAG welding system

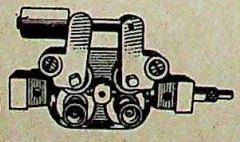
Each component beyond competition. All together— incomparable!



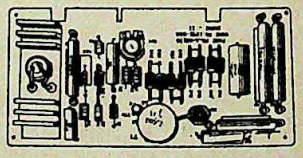
The power source: unmatched duty cycle rating—the most reliable.

Quite simply, India's best. So rugged, it works on 75% and 85% duty cycle ratings, depending upon the model (while others can offer only 60%). So reliable, it's produced no complaints in the last 10 years! And steadily improving in its dynamic characteristics... with ongoing technology upgradation by IOL research and development.

The wire feeder: precision engineered 4-roll drive and solid state control module.

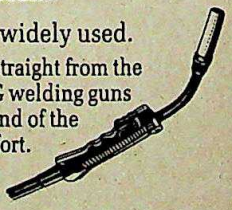


Taken apart, and redesigned all over! The modified feedblock is manufactured with precision tooling to give it unmatched welding performance continuously, through ensuring uninterrupted kink-free as well as distortion-free wire feeding.



The electronic control module is in a detachable black box, with PCB's of glass epoxy base. All contacts gold plated for maximum reliability and fail-safe operation.
You cannot find a more dependable wire feeder.

The torch: internationally the most widely used.



The torch is now made with components straight from the world's most reputed manufacturer of MIG welding guns to ensure the longest life for the business end of the system as well as maximum operator comfort.

Capacities tailored to the varied needs of industries

Four models—MIG 150, 200, 400, 600. Ratings chosen to suit different application needs—from automobiles to freight container manufacture, earth moving equipment to heavy engineering. More models in the pipeline.

Choose INDARC MIG and leave the rest to IOL service.

Backed by India's widest sales and service network of 13 branches, over 40 depots and numerous dealers. Prompt delivery of equipment and spares. Immediate response to service requests. A complete solution to all your welding problems.

Indarc — The trusted name in welding.

For further information, please contact
Manager—Arc Welding Equipment

Indian Oxygen Limited
P43 Taratala Road, Calcutta 700088
A member of The BOC Group

CLARION C-10×MIG-1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

how unaware the Muslim women are about their rights and the protection enjoyed by women of other communities in the same country. The reactions of the educated class came as a shock and discouragement to those who want to improve the status of Muslim women.

New Delhi — K. PRASAD

■ When the Muslim fundamentalists say that a divorced woman cannot claim maintenance from her former husband, they ignore the dependence of a woman upon her husband and therefore treat the woman at par. If that be the case, then why are most Muslim women forced to wear a purdah. And why do they forbid a woman from marrying four men?

Madurai — K.S. RAMESH

■ If the Congress(I) leaders think in terms of Muslim 'vote banks' and play into the hands of Muslim fundamentalists and shirk their responsibility to strive for a uniform civil code, they are indeed doing grave injustice to our proclaimed 'secularism'.

Z.R. Ansari, the minister of state for environment, who lambasted our courts and judges and talked for three hours as a neurotic in Parliament should know that under secularism "all are equal and no one should claim to be more equal". They should realise that Muslim fundamentalism may strengthen the Hindu fanaticism.

Madras — A. SESHAGIRI RAO

■ What has touched, rather shocked the Muslim sentiment is the portrayal of the holy Quran being weighed against the Constitution of India. The Quran is the words of the creator, and the Constitution of India has been framed by the created. Hence, a comparison between the two is sheer desecretion of the holy Quran, which is absolutely unconstitutional.

Ranchi — NAHEED SHAKEEL

■ How and why the Supreme Court judgement has come into conflict with the Islamic faith is still incomprehensible. What is wrong in granting a maintenance allowance to divorced helpless women? It is actually much ado about nothing. There should be no separate law for different communities in a single country. There should be a common law for all Indians. The Government should be very careful and not yield to such pressures of fundamentalists.

Rangpur, Gujarat — DAVID C. THOMAS

■ I fully commend the decision of the Supreme Court to decide in favour of Shah Bano. The Quran's views on women are very backward and clearly emphasise their inferiority. However, what is most surprising is that most Muslim women are not prepared to fight for equality. It is such a paradox that educated women like the two teachers from Kasganj vehemently defend old values that are incompatible with today's society.

Kent, England — SUNITA BHAMBRI

PUPPET PRESIDENT

It had once been thought that the President had not been making a good impression wherever he went on state visits abroad and that this was the reason for his being confined to the barracks ("Grounded President", January 31). But had that been the case he would not have got so many invitations from fellow heads of state. Is it not indicative of bad blood between the President and the prime minister?

While constitutionally the President is a mere figure head, his position was made more so during the prime ministership of Indira Gandhi. She introduced the precedent of nominating a President of her choice, someone who was malleable. In fact when Zail Singh became President it was remarked that while one had heard of presidents becoming puppets, here was the case of a puppet becoming a President.

Bangalore — A. BRITO

LEFT IN DISARRAY

Some people never seem to learn but some refuse to. The Marxist party has debated for a long time the reasons for its sluggish growth in the Hindi belt ("Status Quo Ante", January 31). It has conveniently glossed over the the fact that in Andhra Pradesh and Maharashtra, which witnessed fairly strong communist movements earlier, the party is not in a position to win even 10 seats in the Assembly. It is strange that the CPI(M) never asks the reasons for the party organisation being in a shambles in the states.

The only strategy that can revitalise the party is to remove all such persons who represent none but themselves, from important positions and replace them with people who have shown results. A task which will not be done by the present leadership.

Dehra Dun — A. BANERJEE

AREA OF DARKNESS

Your special feature on money-lenders in Rajasthan (January 31) was shocking. Indeed, the evils of money-lending die hard. It is bound to continue as long as the problem of poverty is not confronted and removed. The World Bank, a money-lender to the developing countries in the guise of 'aid' is not welcome in Philippines now. It imposed on the country more debt than it developed. The Commonwealth Heads of Gooovernment Meet also declared that the IMF and the World Bank were discriminating against the poor nations.

Agartala — L. ZATHANG

■ It is shocking to note that neither the Government administration nor the legislators feel responsible for safeguarding the basic rights and interests of the tribals living all over the country. The bania community not only controls the economy of the tribals but also the district level Congress(I) politics. Unless the ruling party extends its influence from the top to grassroot level, the banias will defeat all further tribal developmental programmes of the Government and continue to exploit the tribals brashly and without restraint.

Bombay — MAHIPAL BHURIYA

WASTEFUL EXPENDITURE

It is abominable to give such publicity to a family outing (January 31) in which perhaps crores of rupees were spent uselessly. What India needs today is not what is being done by the prime minister and his sycophants during electioneering, an outing or at the fanfare organised in Bombay, but the maximum utilisation of money, power and other resources for eradicating poverty and striving for mass development, thus bringing the country into the streamline of economic and social prosperity. If money continues to be squandered the way it has been by the ruling party one can't hope to achieve much.

Deoghar — MRINAL KANTI

SON SHINE

It is surprising to note that yet another son of a political leader is entering politics ("Rising Son", January 31) and that too in the capacity of nothing less than a party president. The way political parties and their followers are accepting inexperienced sons is amazing.

Motihari, Bihar — ALOK KUMAR TILAK

CLARION C-10×MIG-1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tap the powerso

In the city of Nagpur and in the rest of Central India, the majority amongst English readers has one thing in common. Their newspaper, The Hitavada.

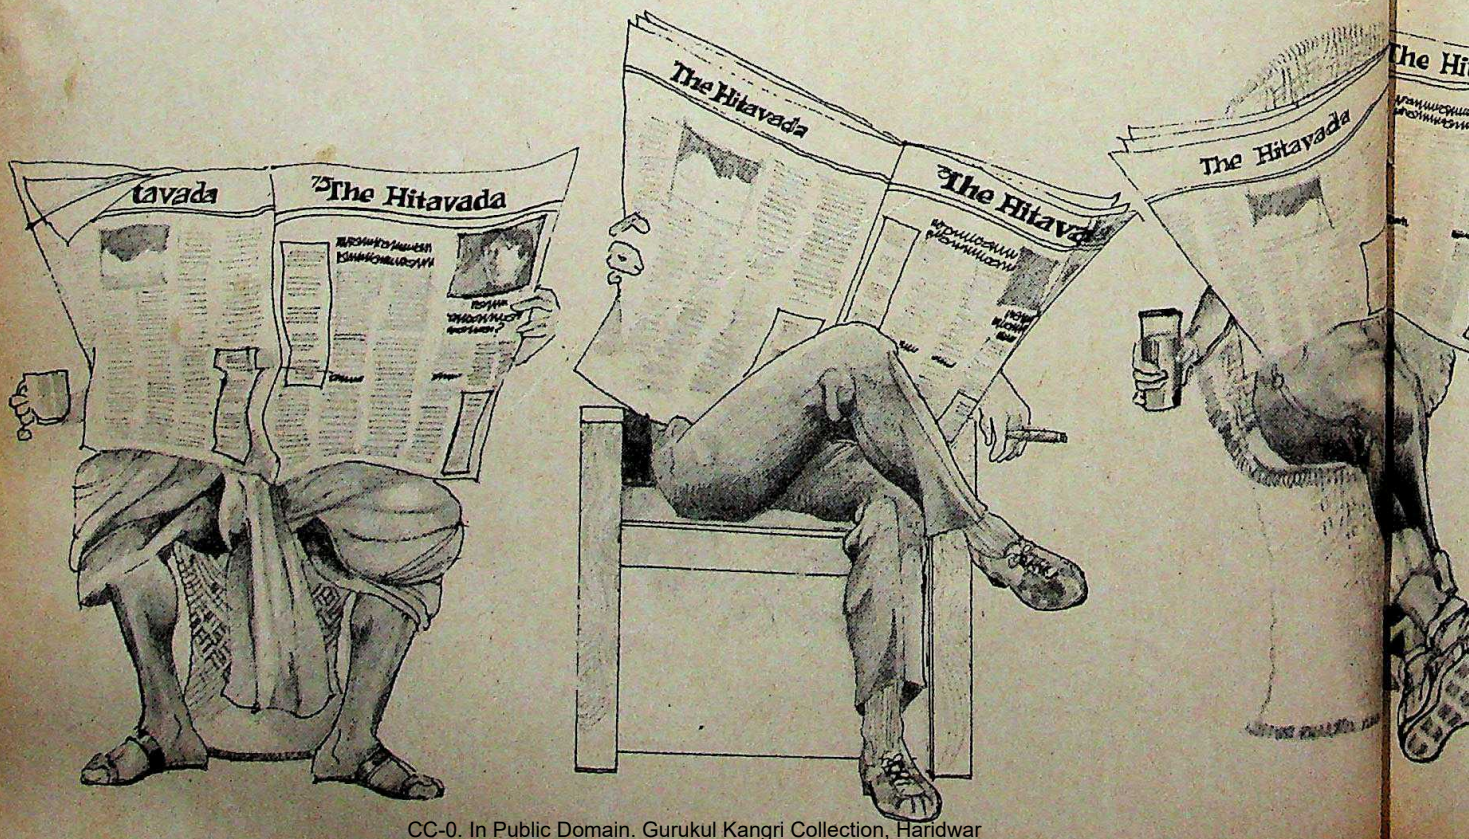
With an average ABC certified circulation of 27,000 during January-June '85, The Hitavada has proved to be the highest circulating English daily in the region.

During the last five years, the circulation of The Hitavada has shot up by an impressive 300%.

This is the result of the extensive, in-depth and well-written news coverage of this daily.

And its superior print quality. A quality that has won it the First Prize for Excellence in Printing and Designing, both in 1981 and 1982.

Today, The Hitavada is read by the most vital demographic segment of Central India.



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

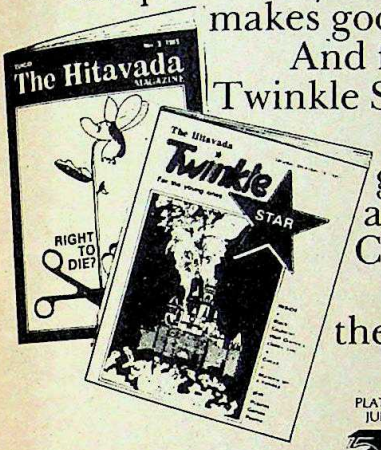
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

rsof a best-seller

A segment comprising the decision makers, the opinion leaders and the bulk of the region's elite, cosmopolitan market.

Equally popular amongst them is The Hitavada's complimentary Sunday Magazine. A four colour publication that makes good, worthwhile reading. For every kind of reader.

And for children, The Hitavada publishes Twinkle Star. Every Saturday.



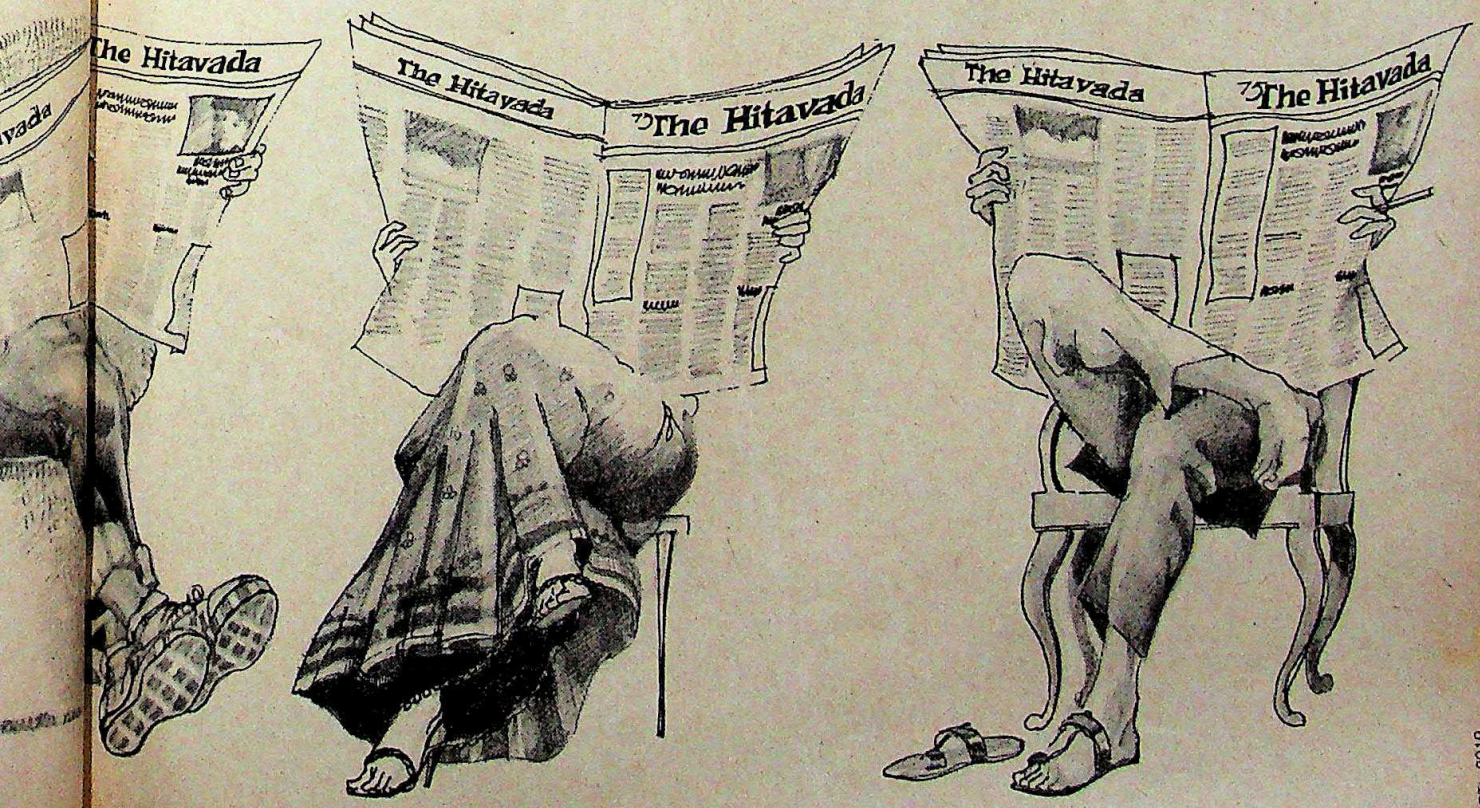
Today, beyond doubt, The Hitavada has grown to become an excellent courier of news and advertisements for Nagpur, Vidarbha, Mahakoshal, Chattisgarh. And the rest of Central India.

With the power to make an impact where the market lies.

PLATINUM JUBILEE

The Hitavada

Central India's largest circulating English daily.

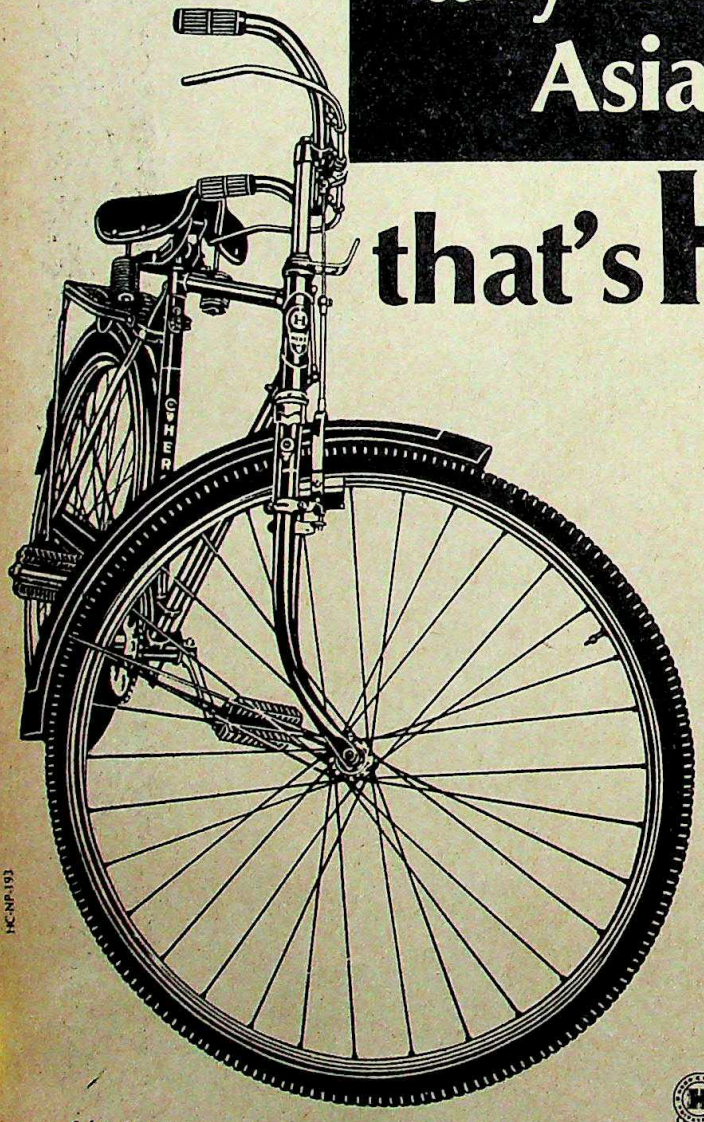


PTL-8919

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In India, there's one company that produces more bicycles than any other maker in Asia & Europe



that's HERO cycles

Committed to the concept of unmatched quality, popular prices, widest range and lustrous look.

HERO JET Black
Yours for
Rs. 485/-*
with Saddle and
1/4 Chain cover

Hero Royal Black Rs. 10/- extra
*Maximum recommended retail price. Local taxes extra.

And this spectacular achievement is a natural consequence of over a quarter century's saga of sagacity, dedication and absolute professionalism in fields of research, development, engineering and marketing.

Ultramodern machinery and equipment coupled with the most exacting standards of workmanship have made HERO a functional beauty. Here is the Hero range to suit your style, meet your mood and match your purse. No wonder, more and more people are going for HERO. So would you!

HERO CYCLES PRIVATE LTD., LUDHIANA

HC-NP-193

Sale price in Punjab will be less by 2% because of exemption of Central Sales Tax in the State.

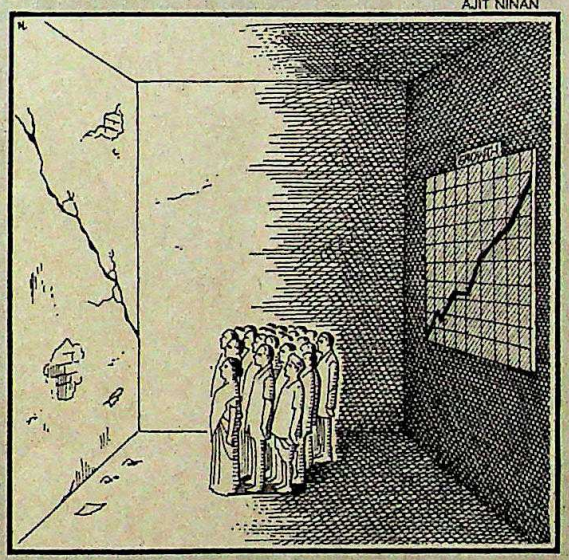
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Projection Perils

IMAGES once formed tend to stick, and if the wrong kinds of images have attached themselves to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and his government then it is more a failure of the Government's public projection and the high hopes aroused a year ago than the substance of its policies—or the lack of them. Time and again, the Government has come across as functioning in an amateurish and shortsighted manner. Decisions taken one day seem to be reversed the next; people appointed to one job are abruptly shifted to another; the prime minister says he believes in one thing, his government does quite another. Mercifully, the official media's overkill on Rajiv has been halted, but nobody has replaced that sort of thing with a well-thought-out projection of what the Government is trying to do and why, and what thwarts its efforts. The Government's public relations machinery—whether it is Doordarshan, All India Radio or the Press Information Bureau—cranks along in such low gear that it doesn't matter who is in the driver's seat, it just hasn't been able to pick up momentum.

AJIT NINAN



In some instances, the projection is laughable. The night of the Opposition bandh in Delhi protesting the recent hike in petroleum prices, Doordarshan wanted its nation-wide audience to believe that the bandh had been a failure. It was, in fact, a near-total success and not all of Doordarshan's subterfuge could produce convincing evidence to the contrary. Two days later, the network seems to have suddenly realised its mistake: the Left Front sponsored West Bengal bandh was declared a total success!

In fact, the Government found itself in an unenviable mess on the petroleum prices issue precisely because it somehow manages to send out the wrong signals. When Finance Minister V.P. Singh unveiled his Long Term Fiscal Policy, he went on television in a carefully arranged interview to educate the public. Doordarshan even arranged a panel discussion though the subject was somewhat obscure; and beyond the fact that Singh promised to leave direct tax rates unchanged for the next four years, the policy didn't really impinge on anybody's day to day activity.

This time round, with a sharp increase in the prices of items of daily consumption, nobody felt it necessary to get up and defend what is in economic and national terms a highly defensible decision. The timing may have been wrong (on the eve of the budget, the day before the two by-elections, at a time when the Government is caught on the rebound in Punjab) and at the best of times a price increase is unpalatable medicine. But the fact is that kerosene and cooking gas are heavily subsidised when they shouldn't be, that the Government is short of resources for the seventh plan, that a small increase in petroleum prices yields handsome revenues and that a high-price energy policy does in some measure encourage reduced consumption.

The Government is ill-served in the projection of most of its economic policies. The image that it is pro-rich and not for the poor is tending to stick and not all the raids on big business nor a revamped 20-point programme will peel it of. Why? Because the Government doesn't bother to project its own achievements—the relative improvement in plant utilisation in power generation, the control until the January price increases on inflationary pressures, the relatively high industrial growth rate—and what it is doing to cope with on-going problems such as the balance of payments problem, the resources crunch and so on.

If good cases are shelved by default, what can be said of instances where the Government hasn't, in fact, performed with distinction? Such as Punjab where, in the ultimate analysis, the spirit of the accord could not be mobilised to serve the letter of the accord. Punjab was a cliff-hanger for most of January even though it was patently clear day by day that elbow room was shrinking as the January 26 deadline loomed closer. Prognosis by hindsight is an easy way out, but it was clear all along that the damage in the public mind was being needlessly exacerbated by the lack of clear, authoritative information and the unchecked speculation it inevitably resulted in.

If the idea is to promote open government, a phrase which was heard freely a year ago, to take people into confidence, to project and justify actions and policies to the electorate than the Government—and that in concrete terms means ministers and top civil servants—have to accept that they owe it to the country to explain what they are doing, to come forward and explain what is going on. Not merely in isolated venues like Janavani on Doordarshan, a commendable effort which for some reason seems to have slacked off, but at times when decisions are taken or policies unveiled.

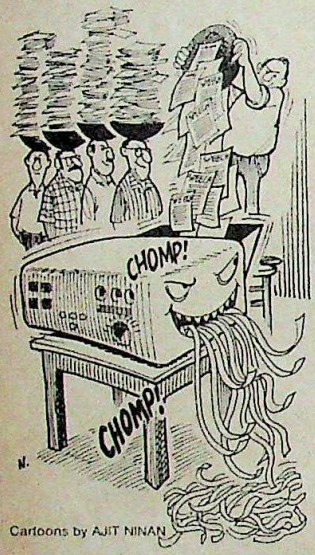
Nobody is likely to disagree with this in principle; it is the practice which is lacking. Why has the prime minister held no free-wheeling press conference in the last four months. How many times do Cabinet ministers come forward to explain policy announcements? Or party luminaries take the initiative to keep the public informed of what is happening except at times of crisis? Why is there a dearth of radio or television programmes which inform and educate through discussion and elucidate facts without degenerating into coarse propaganda? If the Government is not willing to make its own case, then it has no one to blame but itself if the public believes whatever it hears.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Shredder Happy

● It started off as the erstwhile minister of state for power Arun Nehru's little obsession with gadgets, but now it seems to have grown to become an obsession in a belatedly secrecy-conscious government. Last September, when Nehru was moved from his office at Shram Shakti Bhavan to North Block, as minister in charge of internal security, the only office equipment that followed him was a



Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

Japanese paper shredding machine. Now a shredder has been installed in each ministerial room in the capital, under orders from the Ministry of Home Affairs, of which internal security is a department. And shredders are making their way into the rooms of key bureaucrats—such as those in the prime minister's rapidly burgeoning secretariat.

The accompanying circular, distributed with the sleek Sony Panasonic set, says that all jottings made by ministers on loose papers are to be shredded first, and that the minister, before leaving office, should personally make sure that "dispensable letters" are not kept "floating around". The private secretaries are not entrusted with this sensitive job. One result: each minister is now obliged to spend about 10 minutes at the end of the day's work putting piles of disposable paper to the shredder's teeth. Recently when one minister was spotted by a visitor walking off with a shopping bag full of presumably sensitive documentation, he smiled his response: "Must light a bonfire at home."

The shredder is certainly not the lost cordon of security for sensitive papers in ministerial offices. The brand new Xerox machines set up next to the private secretaries' desk are now fitted out with a device that numbers each copy in the middle of the text, so that even a copy of a copy cannot shield the "mole". Or so is it hoped.

Back Track

● Janata party president Chandra Shekhar indicated some time ago that he intends to step down from the office in May. Hearing of this, Morarji Desai dashed off a postcard to Chandra Shekhar that if this were so, former Union minister and Congress(O) colleague, Ravindra Varma, should be made the president. But Chandra Shekhar let it be known that if Morarji should decide to sponsor Varma, he would get him trounced by putting up a rank outsider like Mohan Guruswamy, the Harvard-trained social scientist who forms part of Chandra Shekhar's brain's trust but who has little following in the party. The news late last fortnight was that Varma was still going around the country drumming up support for his candidature but Chandra Shekhar's men were sceptical of Varma's chances.

Big Apple

● With India's ambassador in Washington K.S. Bajpai, due to retire soon, speculation has hotted up on the choice of his successor. To the foreign service's dismay, the Government is considering two politicians for the plum post: former Kashmir maharajah Karan Singh, and former external affairs minister Dinesh Singh. The latter, however, is not interested as he will have to report to a foreign secretary who was no more than a middle-rung officer when Dinesh Singh headed the ministry.

Originally, the career candidate for the Washington post was A.P. Venkateshwaran, currently a secretary in the External Affairs Ministry. But he is likely to be posted as ambassador to Moscow. The post of foreign secretary is also expected to be up for grabs after it is vacated by Romesh Bhandari, who is reportedly Rajiv's choice to replace veteran G. Parathasarathy as chairman of the Policy Planning Committee.

Little Big Men

● After the last major Cabinet reshuffle, ministers of state now get their portfolios from the prime minister, without the risk of being shuffled around by the Cabinet ministers who oversee their work. But in the last few months it has quickly become evident that some ministers of state are more equal than others. Arun Nehru practically runs the Home Ministry, with S.B. Chavan happy to be kept informed of Nehru's decisions. But Janardhan Poojary in finance is virtually under the thumb of Finance Minister V.P. Singh. In industry, R.K. Jaichandra Singh (in charge of petrochemicals) has managed to wrest relative autonomy from the 'strong' Cabinet Minister N.D. Tiwari, but not M.V. Arunachalam (industrial development), who is more of a newcomer. And in the Ministry of Parliamentary Affairs, Ghulam Nabi Azad (Lok Sabha) has been able to get a relatively free hand because he has struck an equation with Cabinet Minister H.K.L. Bhagat. In transport, Bansi Lal has quite happily given a free rein to his three juniors, Madhavrao Scindia (railways), Jagdish Tytler (civil aviation) and Rajesh Pilot (surface transportation): perhaps because all three have direct access to the prime minister.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

'This time I'm doing something different. I'm autographing a suiting range!'

'I've lived with creases all my cricketing life. I've played well within them when a good ball came along or stepped out to punish the bad balls.

Believe me, it's not always so easy to mind your creases on the social circuit. Sometimes fabrics let you down badly. And you feel really miserable. Like you've played at a ball outside your off stump and missed!

Recently, I discovered fabrics which always provide a perfect fall and an immaculate crease. Gwalior's Golden Glade Worsted Suiting and Dornfab. I decided to endorse their new range. After autographing so many cricket bats, here was my chance to autograph a quality suiting.'

Gwalior Suiting – In a class of its own.

M.A.K. PATAUDI

MAPP-GR-85-94-ENG.

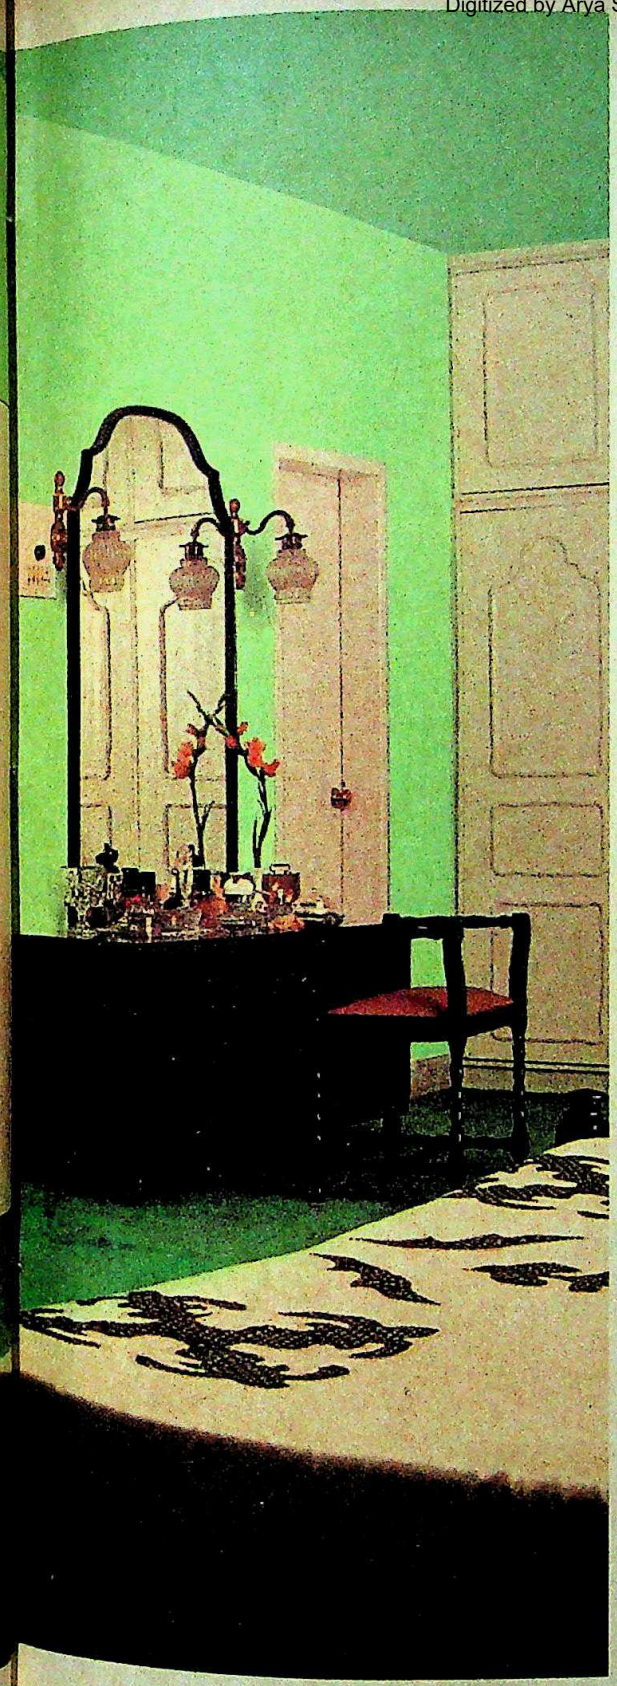
...nain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When elegance whispers, the world stops to listen.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Into this world of music, melody and rhythm, comes an exquisite new wall finish. Garcoat Petals.

Experience nature's most elegant expression. Captured in a paint so distinctive. So luxurious.

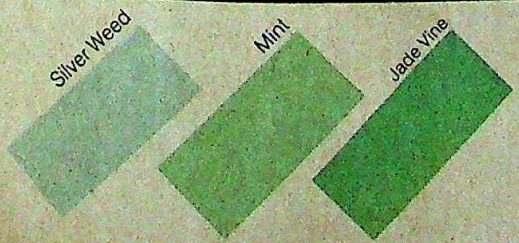
Surround yourself with the quiet feel of flowers softly blooming on your walls.

Let your home whisper your exquisite taste. With Petals. Garcoat Petals.

We've tied up for high performance paints, with Sherwin Williams, USA, the world's largest paint company.

GARCOAT PETALS

You have good taste. Let it show.



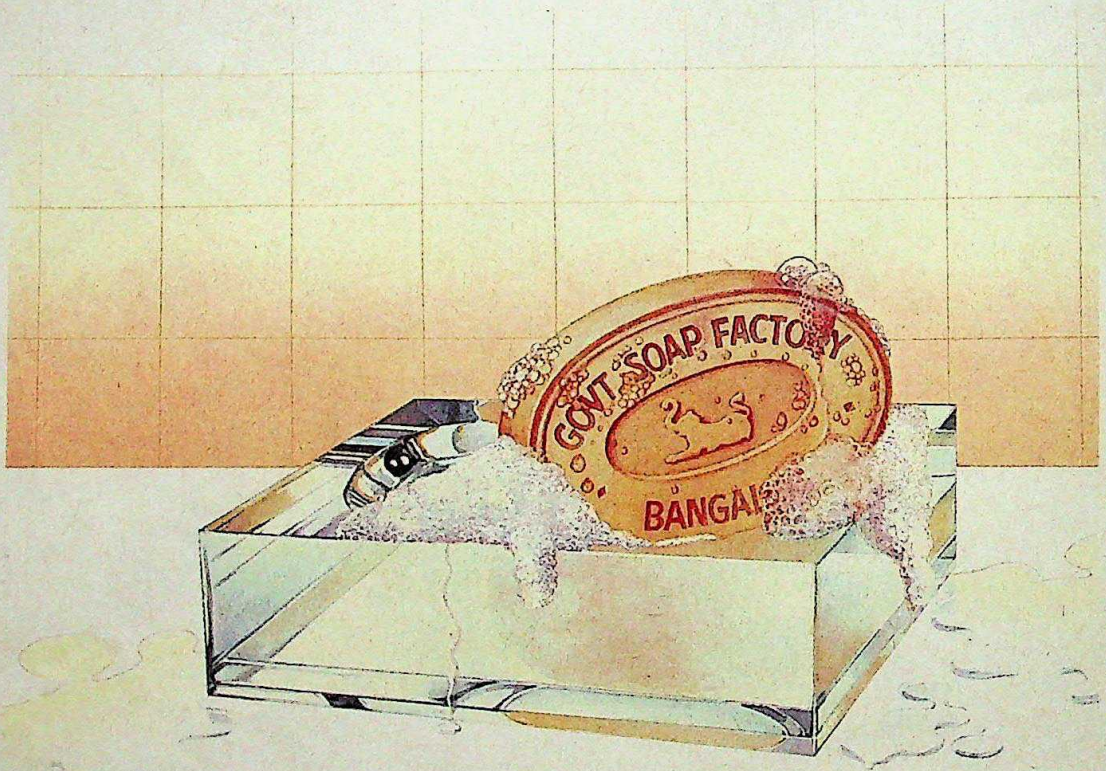
Garware Paints Ltd. GARWARE गरवारे

SPEER 110 86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

VERY FEW THINGS IN LIFE CAN MAINTAIN THEIR STANDARDS OF EXCELLENCE FOR SEVEN DECADES AND MORE.



HERE'S ONE FROM KARNATAKA SOAPS.

Delicately fragrant Mysore Sandal. One of those rare soaps that have become synonymous with an exclusive way of life. Sought after not only in India but all over the world.

A lesser known fact is that Mysore Sandal comes from Karnataka Soaps.

Beginning with sandal oil distillation, Karnataka Soaps went on to set up the modern Government Soap Factory in as early as 1918. Mysore Sandal was only the first in a range of luxury soaps. Washing soaps and detergents like Point followed. Still more recently, we have developed essential industrial products like stearic acids, glycerine, acid slurry and soap noodles.

Each of our products remains worthy of its seven-decade-old tradition of excellence. And many more projects lie ahead.

At Karnataka Soaps, we have a rare fragrance to preserve. A message from the past expressing an abiding faith in excellence. The sweet smell of success that, we are determined, will infuse our every new venture.

KARNATAKA SOAPS

Karnataka Soaps & Detergents Limited, Yeshwantpur, Bangalore 560 055 Mfrs. of Mysore Sandal, Point and other quality soaps & detergents

KSDL/1842/E

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Polyspin HDPE Woven
Silver Sacks

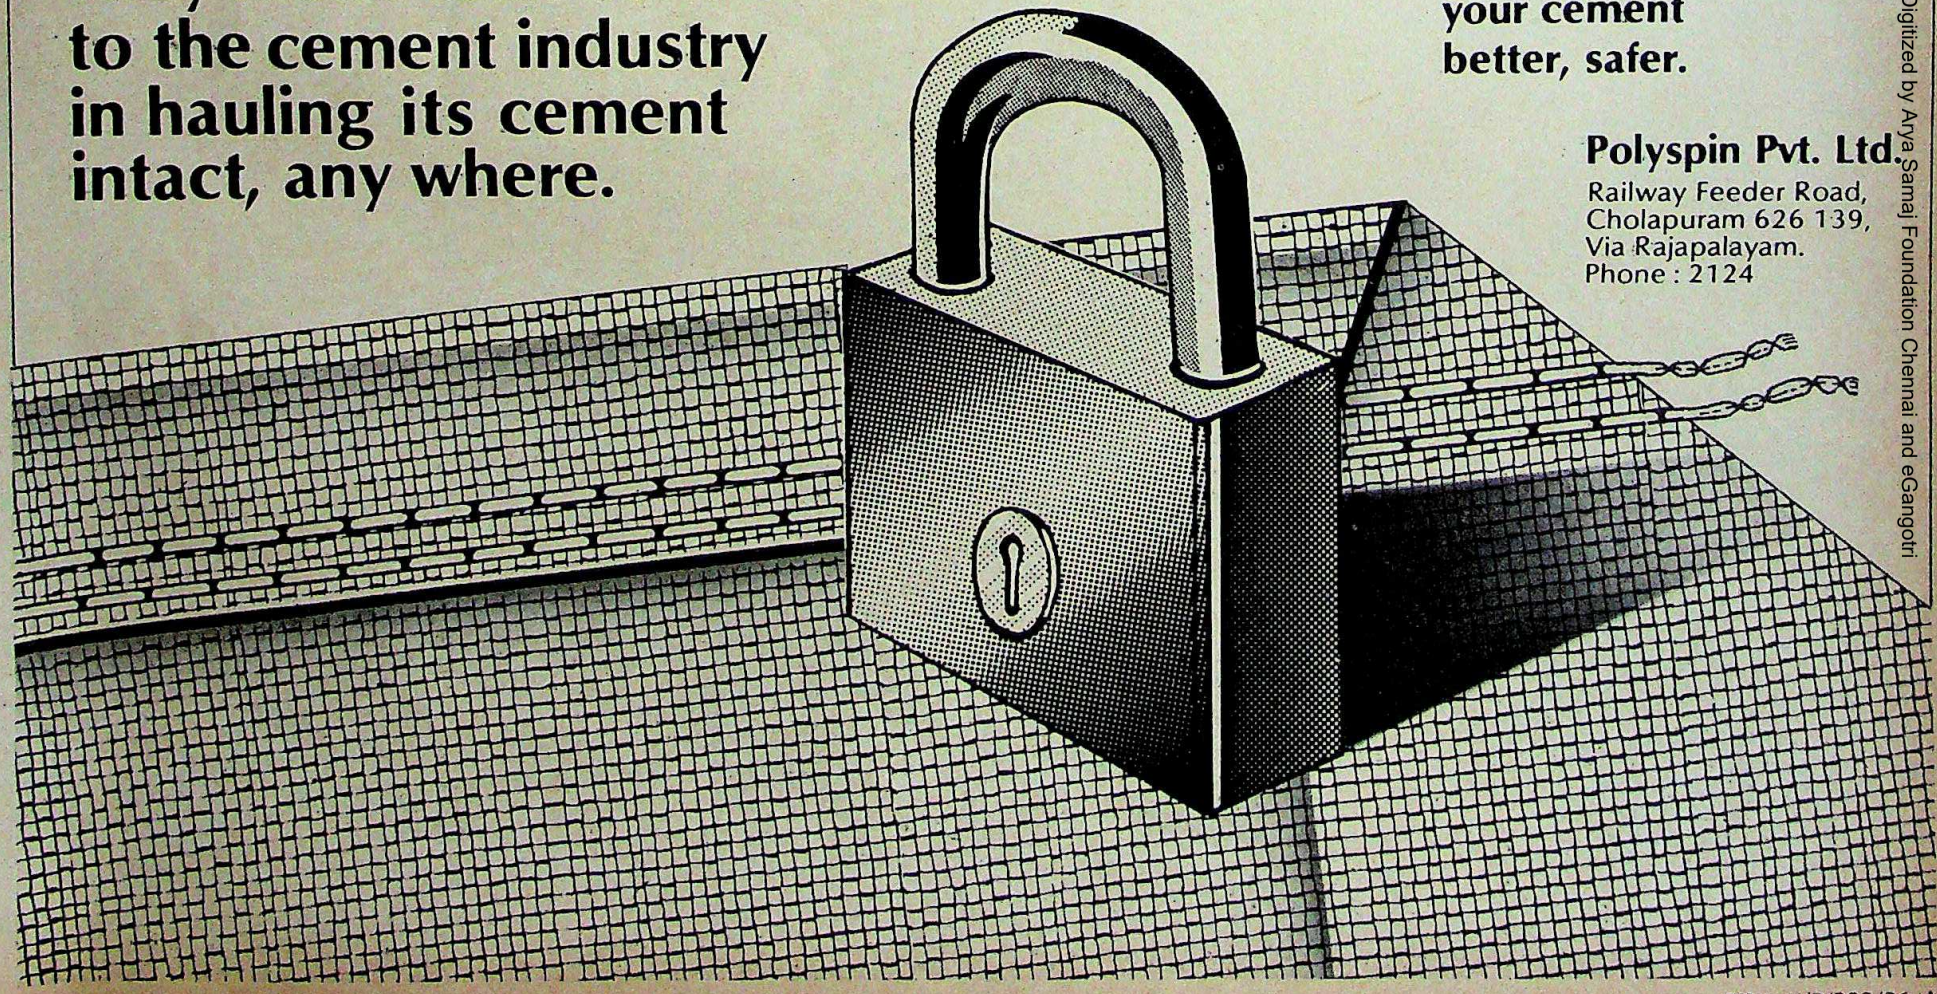
Ten years ago, Polyspin introduced its HDPE woven Silver Sacks, undoubtedly a superior alternative to conventional packing materials.

Today, they're used to pack a number of products: cement, fertilisers, chemicals and even food grains.

Polyspin HDPE woven Silver Sacks, your guarantee of safe packing.

Silver Sacks
Nothing else carries your cement better, safer.

They mean total confidence to the cement industry in hauling its cement intact, any where.



Polyspin Pvt. Ltd.
Railway Feeder Road,
Cholapuram 626 139,
Via Rajapalayam.
Phone : 2124

Efficient/P/388/86 A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ CODE _____

COUNTRY _____

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs_____ payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ CODE _____

COUNTRY _____

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 185
BANGLADESH
BHUTAN
NEPAL

Rs 345
AFGHANISTAN
BURMA
MALDIVES
PAKISTAN
SRI LANKA

Rs 385
BAHRAIN
CHINA
HONG KONG
INDONESIA
IRAN
IRAQ
KUWAIT
MALAYSIA
OMAN
PHILIPPINES
QATAR
SAUDI ARABIA
SINGAPORE
TAIWAN
THAILAND
U.A.E.
YEMEN

Rs 485
AUSTRALIA
EGYPT
ETHIOPIA
FRANCE
W. GERMANY
GHANA
GIBRALTAR
IRELAND
JAPAN
KENYA
SOUTH KOREA
LEBANON
LIBYA
MALAWI
MALTA
MAURITIUS
SEYCHELLES
SIERRA LEONE
SOUTH AFRICA
SUDAN
SWITZERLAND
SYRIA
TANZANIA
U.K.
ZAMBIA
ZIMBABWE

Rs 585
BAHAMAS
BARBADOS
BRAZIL
CANADA
FIJI
GUYANA
HAWAII
JAMAICA
NEW ZEALAND
PANAMA
U.S.A.

NH 943

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Times of India

● Ultra-sensitive to his self-image as the country's most upright and principled politician, Mr V.P. Singh may resign; he should if only to save the prime minister's face.

■ Editorial on the petroleum price hike in The Times of India

● The Pope is here to bless and communicate with those who believe in him, and he has every right to do so. It would be a sad day—a disastrous day—for our country if we began to define secularism in the terms the RSS uses.

■ Editorial in The Telegraph

● The days of Mr Vasantdada's 'kho-kho' team are over.

■ MADHU DANDAVATE on the Congress(I) defeat in the Sangli by-election, quoted in The Times of India

● If I had enough money I would have defended Satwant in a much better way. I would have used the computerised screen to prove that Satwant is innocent.

■ P.N. LEKHI in Onlooker

● The most important achievement of Punjab in 1985 is that it has remained united with the rest of the country.

■ KHUSHWANT SINGH in Surya

● My competence is not for me to judge and if my leader has a "fancy" for me, if I may use the word because in politics the word "fancy" has no place, I am the last one to complain on that ground.

■ ARJUN SINGH in Sunday

● It was not as though we needed a reason to be corrupt, so I joined the Congress.

■ VYJANTHIMALA BALI, Congress(I) MP in Society

● Rajiv Gandhi, unfortunately, has not been overburdened with brains. But he is a sincere man and means good, as far as I can see. He is trying to do his best.

■ MORARJI DESAI in The Illustrated Weekly of India

● Critics used to scold me for not writing in my native tongue. Now they seem happy that I have a world public.

■ R.K. NARAYAN in Newsweek

● We believe in domestic harmony and professional diversity.

■ ANUP JALOTA, on why he and wife Sonali never sing together, in Sunday

● I think the audience likes south Indians. There are so many other girls, beautiful and talented, but somehow the south Indian girls catch the eye of the public.

■ HEMA MALINI in Surya

● I know it is high time I got married. But does anyone realise how difficult it is for an actress to find a suitable husband? I am not a teenager any more to go out and pursue a relationship.

■ SULAKSHANA PANDIT in Stardust

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The difference in laminates
now comes to surface

Sungloss
has the unique SuperShield against stains, heat, abrasion

The SuperShield on the Sungloss surface gives the laminate super protection, greater resistance. No worrying about everyday wear and tear, no fretting over little incidents and accidents. The extra-protective SuperShield surface keeps the laminate looking beautifully new, almost forever.

Discover new meaning in the colours and designs of the Sungloss SuperShield range. Enhance any decor with the exquisite finishes in brilliant Gloss, muted Matt or natural Woodtex. Or with any of the several attractive textures.

When you get laminated furniture, make sure you get the Sungloss SuperShield on it. You'll be glad you insisted.

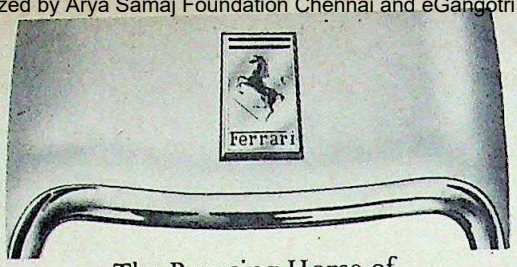
SunGLOSS Decorative Laminate SuperShield

Make sure you get it. Then you can forget it

caprihan

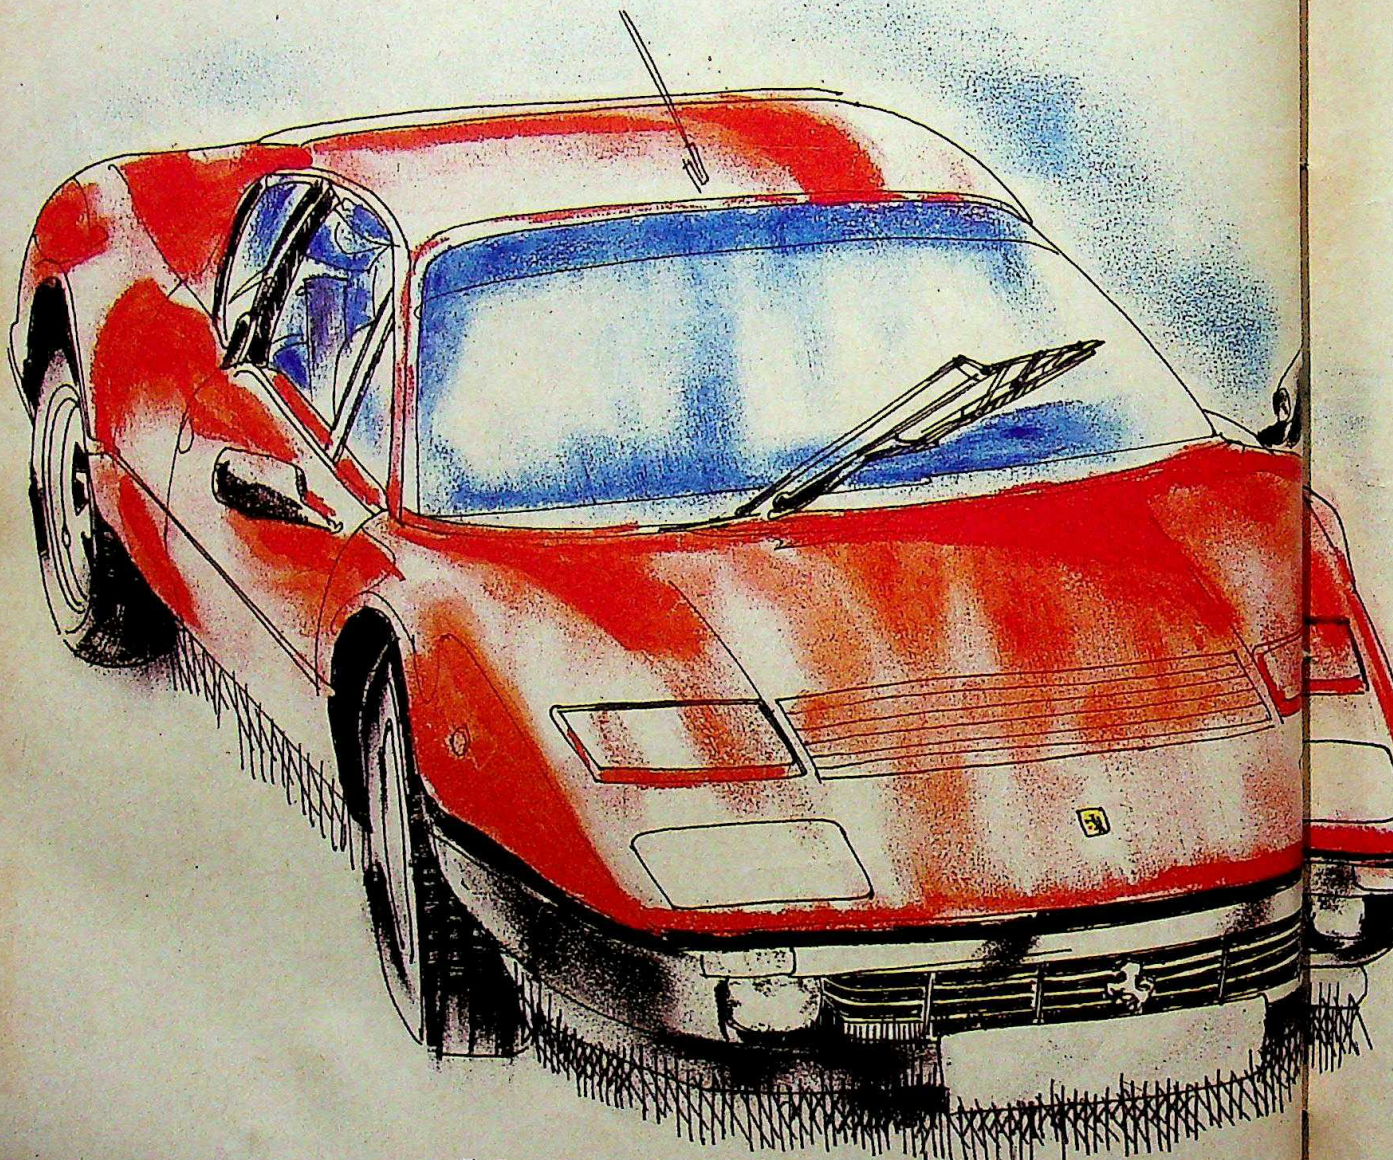
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Coll

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



The Prancing Horse of Maranello. Ferrari's emblem is possibly the most revered one in racing.

The Great Exotics of Motoring presented by Engine Valves Ltd.



The Ferrari Boxer Berlinetta 512. One of the finest exotic cars in the world – and Ferrari's fastest road car.

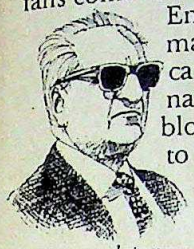
The name 'Boxer' is derived from its flat 12-cylinder engine, in which the cylinders oppose each other. The 5-litre engine with a Grand Prix racing heritage is mounted amidships – and gives the car balanced weight distribution and remarkable cornering ability. This 360 bhp projectile has been clocked at a blistering 197 mph!

OBM 9464

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"For pure theatre, the Monza autodrome in Italy has no equal," writes a motoring correspondent. "Monza is the shrine at which the fans come to worship one God, Enzo Ferrari. This man single-handedly carries the hope of a nation every time his blood-red cars take to the track..."



Il Commendatore Enzo Ferrari. He was awarded the title by Mussolini's government.

Enzo Ferrari was born in Modena, Italy in 1898. Like most young Italian romantics of the time, he wanted to pursue opera singing or race driving. His ambition to be a racing driver was fuelled by his visit to a race in Bologna. He was ten at the time. There he was mesmerised by those artistes of automobile racing ... Felice Nazzaro and Vincenzo Lancia.

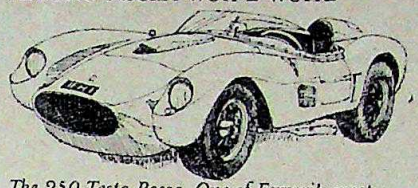
When World War I was declared, Ferrari was called upon to serve the Italian Army. After the war he travelled to Turin to seek employment with Fiat – but was turned down !

The Prancing Horse on the shield of Modena. The initials 'SF' stand for Scuderia Ferrari – the Ferrari racing team.

In 1920, he joined Alfa Romeo as a driver and tester. His most famous victory was during the 1923 circuit of Savio at Ravenna, behind the wheel of a 3-litre Alfa Romeo RL.

Ferrari quit Alfa in 1939 after a disagreement and decided to design his own cars. The first racing car to bear his name emerged in 1946. A 60°V-12 of 1498 cc was designed by the great Colombo and was the foundation of Ferrari power for many years.

The '52 and '53 seasons were highly successful for Ferrari. Alberto Ascari won 2 world championships in a Ferrari 500.

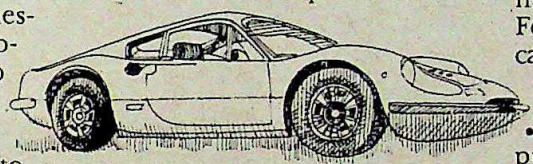


The 250 Testa Rossa. One of Ferrari's most successful sports racing cars. The name came from the red crackle finish on the engine's camshaft covers.

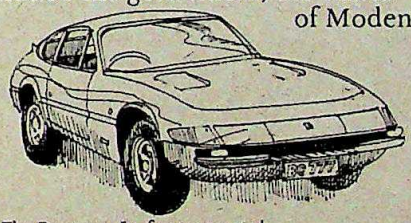
Ferrari had made his indelible mark on racing.

Ferrari facets

• The prancing horse symbol, the 'Cavallino Rampante' was used by Franco Baracca, a legendary pilot in World War I on the side of his airplane. He shot down 34 adversaries before being killed. Countess Baracca gave Ferrari permission to use the symbol on his cars. Ferrari then added the gold shield, the shield of Modena.



The Dino. Named after Ferrari's son, and one of the loveliest bodies built by Pinin Farina.



The Daytona. Its front-mounted V-12 engine gave it a top speed of 174 mph.

• Though Ferrari had no formal engineering education (he refused to go to technical college) he was particular about being called "Engineer Ferrari".

• In 1951, when Ferrari finally beat Alfa Romeo in the British Grand Prix, he said "It was like killing my mother ."

• After Ferrari's son Dino died at the age of 24 (of leukemia) he decreed that all his V-6 engined cars would be named Dino. Dino had been actively engaged in the V-6 project.

• During the Le Mans race of 1961, a Dino entered by Ferrari was out of the running due to a blunder made by the pit crew – the car ran out of fuel !

• Ferrari is a very direct person as champion racing driver Jody Schecter discovered at their first meeting. As Schecter recalls, Ferrari said "Hello," and then came across with his first question "How much do you want?" !

Niki Lauda at speed in a Ferrari 312 TF1. Lauda was one of the most successful drivers for Ferrari.

• Which of his cars did Ferrari prefer to use? None. He usually drove a Fiat !

As fiery as his cars

Back in 1969, Fiat bought 50% of Ferrari. But they had no intentions of tampering with the genius of Il Commendatore, and largely control only the production side. Ferrari who is highly temperamental has often threatened to withdraw from racing. Fortunately, his passion for the motorsport has always persuaded him to return. Racing would be very much poorer without the red cars from Maranello.

The 308 GTS. Its V-8 engine produces one and a half times the horsepower of a Detroit V-8 twice the size!

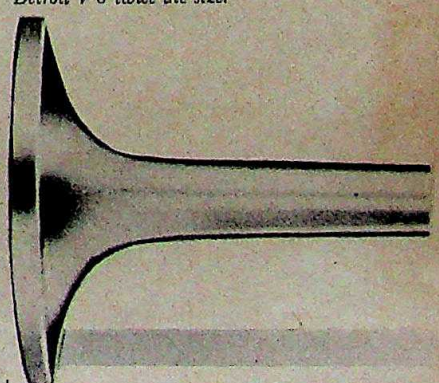
World-famous cars use EVL valves

Did you know that EVL valves are used on cars like BMW, Jaguar, Mercedes-Benz, Peugeot and Volvo? EVL, a member of the Rane Group, began operations in 1959, collaborating with Farnborough Engg of UK, makers of the famous Tranco valves. EVL exports mainly to UK, USA, Australia, Singapore, Malaysia. In India, EVL products are original equipment on every vehicle... more recently on the Maruti-Suzuki.

Engine Valves Limited

32, Cathedral Road, Madras 600 086.

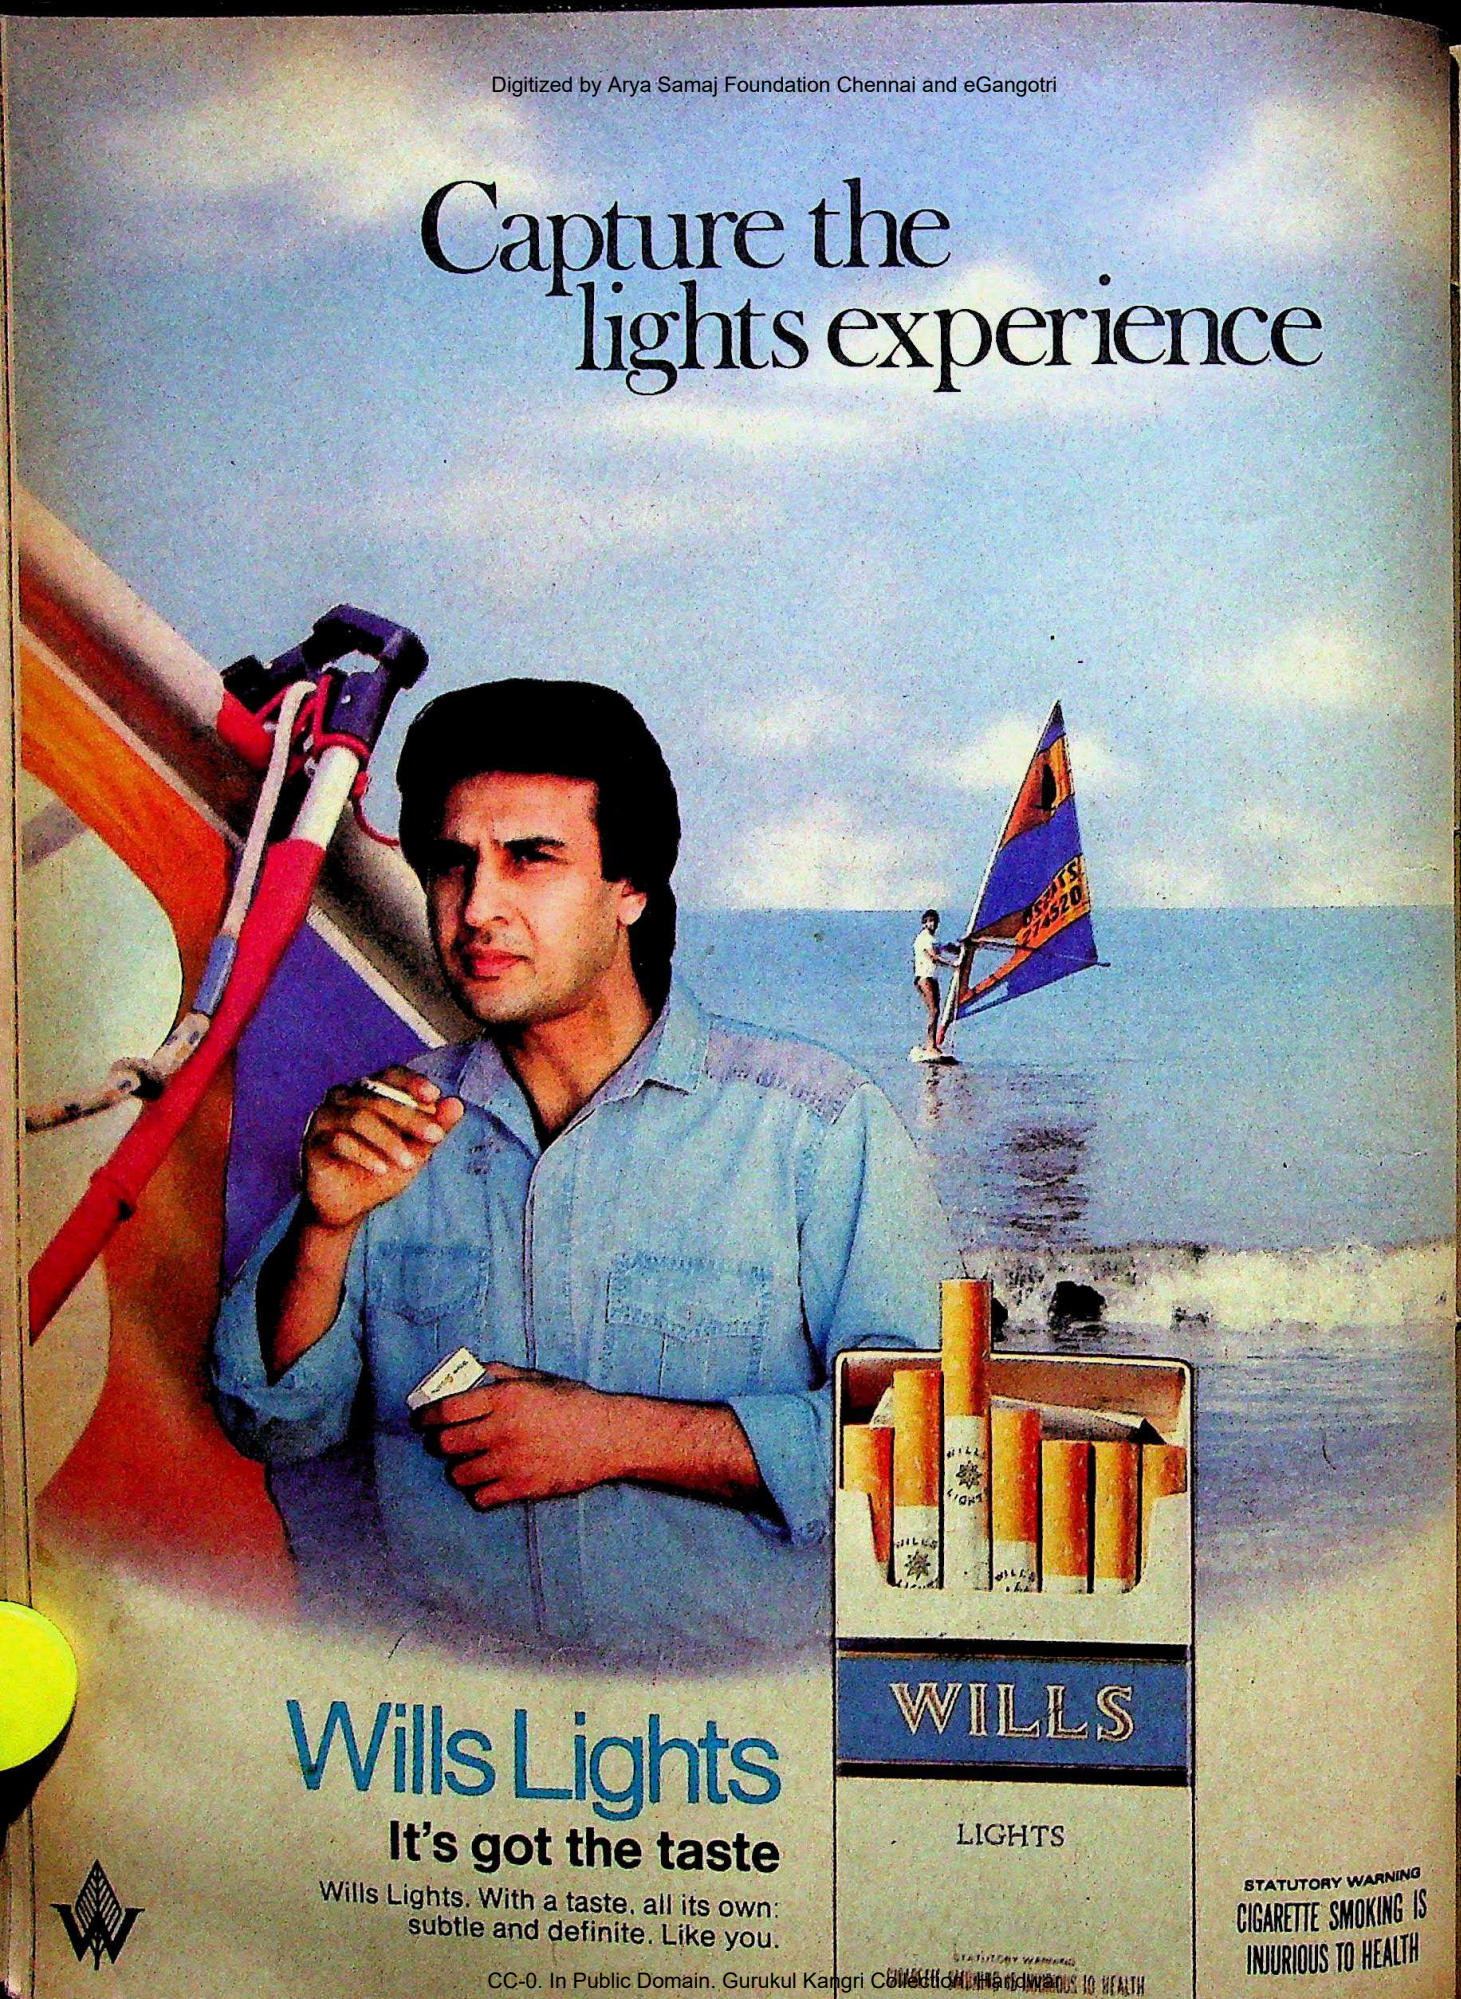
EVL



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Capture the lights experience



Wills Lights

It's got the taste

Wills Lights. With a taste, all its own: subtle and definite. Like you.

STATUTORY WARNING
CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FATHERS & FRIENDS

■ Charles Darwin once pointed out that man is just a few evolutionary steps removed from the monkey. Although he was scoffed at when he first said so, proof comes from Kaikalur in Andhra Pradesh.

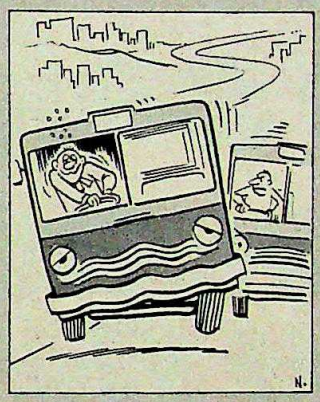
Chiranjeevi is the 14th son of a hotelier called Immadi Krishna Murthy and a year ago, when Chiranjeevi was just two months old, he (the son, not the father), was crying his tiny heart out because he was hungry. Everybody was probably attending to the idli mix in the kitchen and Chiranjeevi would have gone hungry but for a monkey who appeared from nowhere, picked up the feeding bottle lying nearby and put it to the baby's lips.

From then on, the monkey became Chiranjeevi's best friend. He would make regular visits, see that the baby was being fed properly and play with it. It was quite a jealous buddy too, and was visibly put out whenever anybody else approached the kid when it was around. Murthy once got fed up with such loving friendship and tried to drive it away, but the monkey wrapped itself around his legs and looked pleadingly into his eyes. Since then, Hanuman has become a part of the family. Darwin must be pleased.

JAUNTY JUDGE

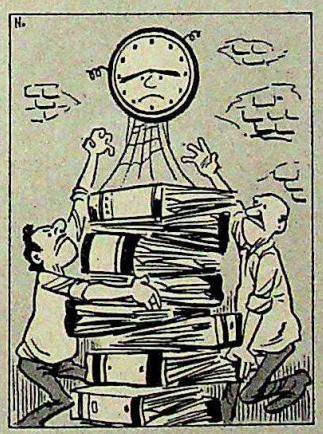
■ The judiciary is not given to pranks, jokes and such opiates of the masses—its denizens are expected to set high standards of behaviour. This common belief, however, went for a six last month in a town near Nagpur, Maharashtra.

There, a magistrate who shall go unnamed was waiting to board a state transport bus. Fellow passengers noticed that he was a little tipsy but did not think all that much of it until, that is, he vanished inside a parked bus, started up the engine and lurched away. It was a few minutes before the driver of the bus, drinking chai at a nearby stall, realised what was going on and by that time the magistrate was already in high gear and revving away to glory.



Of course, the judge's merry jaunt didn't last long. The legitimate bus-driver commandeered another vehicle and set off in pursuit. He screeched to a halt in front of the hijacked transport a few kilometres away. And a hiccuping though cheery magistrate was hauled out of his seat and to the court—not his own—on charges of, among other things, drunken driving.

TICK TOCK TICK



■ Oh, to be a babu and while away the hours in blissful languor as time ticks slowly by! But in the sub-registrar's office of Periyakulam, Tamil Nadu, time does not tick.

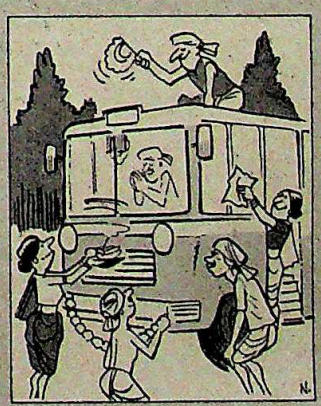
It's wall-clock stopped in 1982 and the main office was sent a message asking for immediate repairs. Somebody else, in traditional style, opened a file in the registrar's office. The file, as files tend to do, travelled, stopping at various desks on the way and ended up on the joint registrar's desk. The joint registrar, obviously a stickler for rules, asked the original sub-registrar's office for 'classified data' such as the date of purchase and the price of the clock. Nothing happened for some time, and a stern reminder elicited only the reply that the bill had been lost. Now the registrar's office got ambitious. It asked all 13 sub-offices for details on how to deal with this. This got startling responses—two offices didn't have a clock and the clocks in the other offices had not broken down.

That is where the matter stands at the moment. The sub-registrar's office wall-clock is silent since 1982 and few people, and certainly not the sub-registrar, know how to get out of the tangle and get it working again.

BUS CARE

■ Most railway compartments carry wishful requests asking travellers to treat them as the "nation's property" and guard them as if they were their own. But of course, no one bothers to do so. They would do well to take up the example of the villagers of Veladi Kottapalem in Andhra Pradesh.

They had been requesting the state road transport corporation for a special bus to link them to nearby towns, and after much toing and froing and representations and meetings with the authorities, they got one. Villagers, unlike their sophisticated urban counterparts, know the value of a gift, and immediately set out doing up 'our' bus. They pooled in money to buy a tape-recorder and a radio, which was installed in the bus with the help of a local electrician. They then collected a few pictures and statuettes of gods and goddesses and installed these too, after due ceremony.



The bus is spotlessly clean on each one of the six trips it makes to the village daily. For, the villagers take turns to keep it that way. Just shows that civic sense is not an urban sensibility only.

—Compiled by JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Who said the peacock can't fly high...?

The peacock may be a fast runner but it is not known as a high flier.

Our exemplary performance in 1984 has given the peacock of our symbol a stronger pair of wings. It has been a take-off year for all of us, in all respects and we have developed a new fixed asset: Service.

This has generated a bottom line that has meant new business, new customers and newer responsibilities.

The result: Overall profit before tax at Rs. 36.82 crores. Income from interests and dividends grown by 18.5% at Rs. 27.05 crores. Value of claims paid out, grown to 62.4% compared with 58.4% in 1983.

In terms of customer reach, we have opened so far 11 Regional, 144 Divisional and 339 Branch Offices, penetrated deep into both industrial and rural India to provide advice and protection.

As a part of our service, we laid stress on developmental programmes, conducted seminars and workshops for our field workers and put our service on-the-spot.

Our bottom line has just one word—SERVICE. Written in blue. Yes, our peacock has taken to the skies—for you.

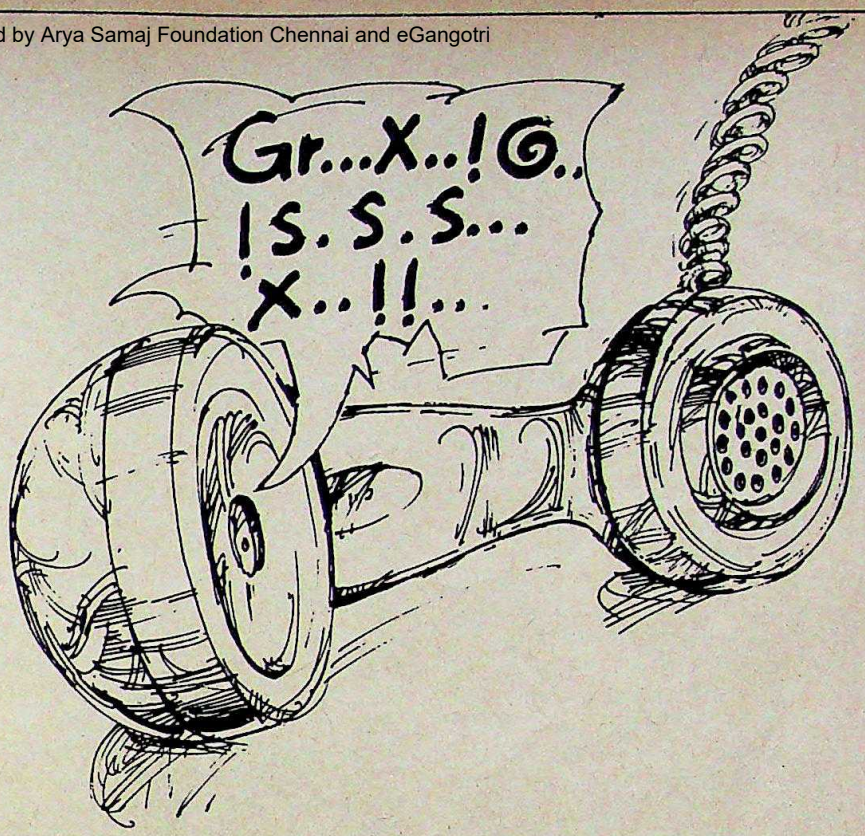
National Insurance Company Limited
(A Subsidiary of General Insurance Corporation of India)

Putting service first

CLARION C-NIC 8

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



What's communication coming to?

Have you wondered why an international call sounds like it's from nextdoor... and the line between you and the next city connects you with four different voices?

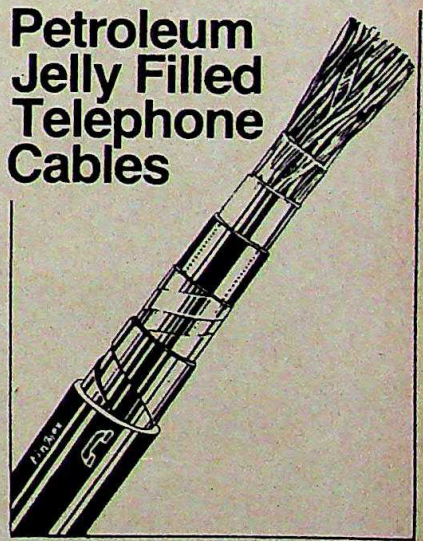
The world around us has changed. Just as Satellite Communication has revolutionized international telecommunication, petroleum jelly filled telephone cables have cleared the way for inland communication the world over.

It's time telecommunication in India changed too.

Finolex makes petroleum jelly filled telephone cables like no one else in India can. The most advanced manufacturing, testing and quality control facilities will soon make cross talk and loss of voice a thing of the past by controlling capacitance unbalance and achieving higher attenuation levels far superior than prescribed.

Now P&T's computerized exchanges, sleeker telephone instruments and a wider communication network, have Finolex cable efficiency to match.

Petroleum Jelly Filled Telephone Cables



From Finolex, the leaders in cables.
In technical collaboration with United Technologies/ Essex Group Inc. USA.

Finolex gets people together

Finolex®

Finolex Cables Limited
26/27, Bombay-Pune Road, Pimpri, PUNE-411018.

Pratibha 85-458

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

R.K. HEGDE

The Resignation D

AT ONE level, it was the momentary eclipse of the Opposition's only authentic political star. At another, it was an astute move to turn adversity into strength, defeat into victory, stigma into a dazzling badge of honour. But, looked at it from any angle, the resignation last week by Karnataka Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde was electrifying showbiz.

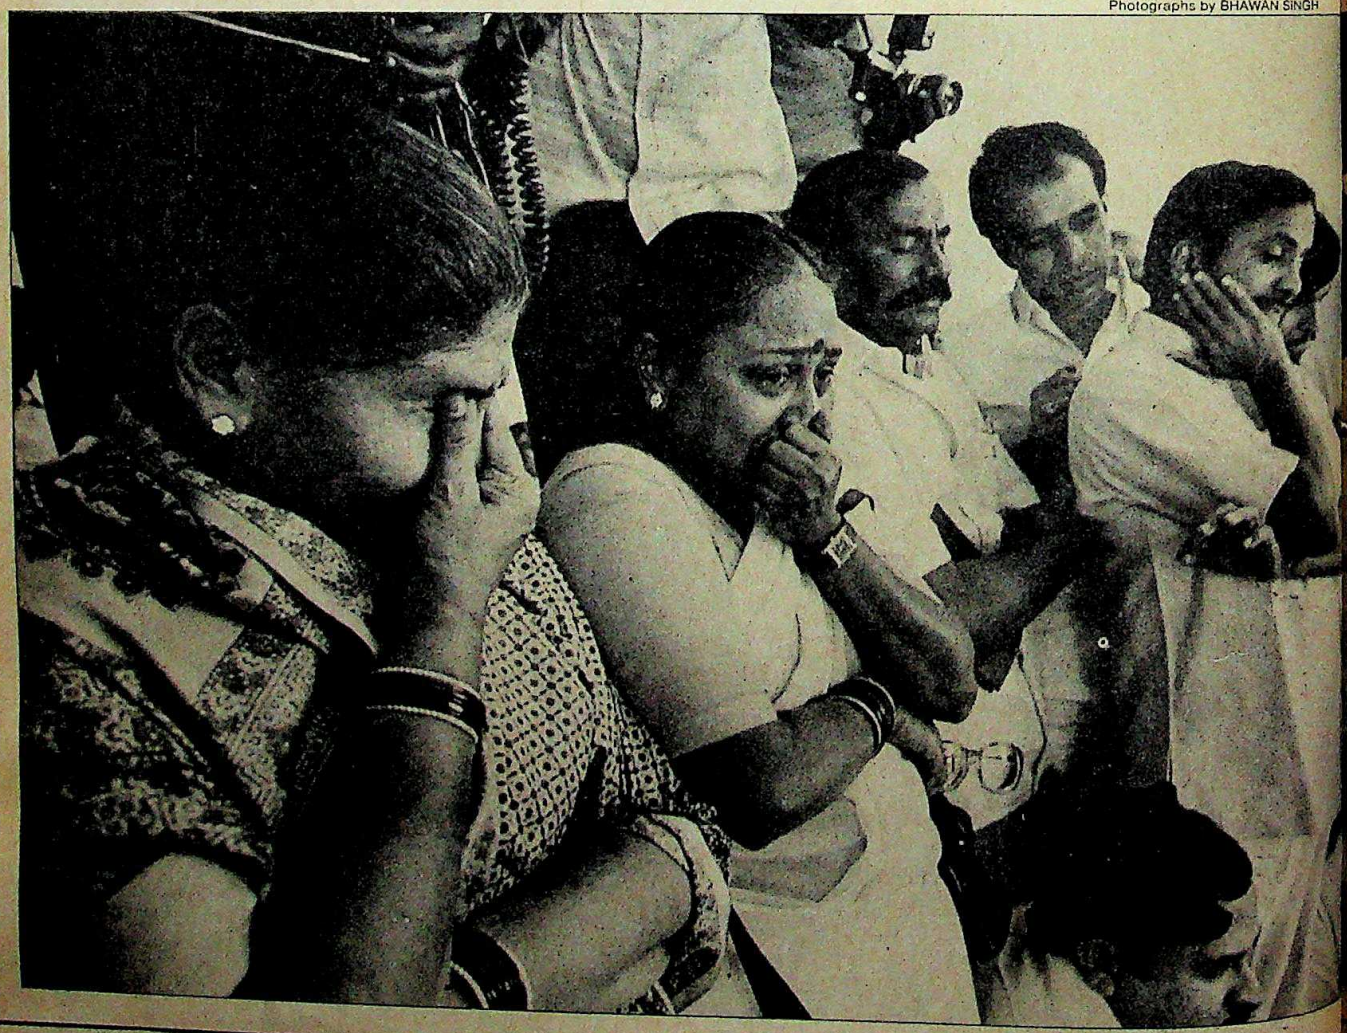
For 11 days after the Karnataka High Court passed severe strictures against Hegde's Janata Government, the embattled chief minister had been backed into a tight corner: unable to fight back convincingly against a Congress(I) onslaught in the state, his promise of 'value-based politics' seemingly reduced to hollow posture, and his resignation forced on him by the leak by his own partymen of a confidential letter addressed to the party president, Chandra Shekhar.

But from the time that the first news of the Janata stalwart's resignation from office filtered out on February 11, till a groundswell of public appeals to stay in office reduced the political impact of the court strictures, Hegde's image was set on a soaring curve. His star shone brightly again, seemingly unclouded by the governor accepting the resignation and by the uncertainty of whether he would come roaring back to power on the strength of continued support from Janata legislators in the Assembly.

The state had been in political turmoil ever since the high court ruled on January 31 that the awarding of 19 arrack bottling contracts by the Hegde Ministry to eight companies in the state was unlawful, capricious, arbitrary and shocking to the "judicial conscience". While the bottlers went promptly in appeal to the Supreme Court, which admitted the petition, there were uproarious scenes in the Assembly and the Janata Party was reduced to arguing weakly that the court had not found mala fide motives in the awarding of the contracts.

But just when the state seemed set for a prolonged battle that seemed certain to damage Hegde's standing in the eyes of a watching public, news-agency teleprinters began clacking across the country and instantly changed the whole scenario. Hegde was in the middle of a meeting of the Assembly's Business Advisory Com-

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

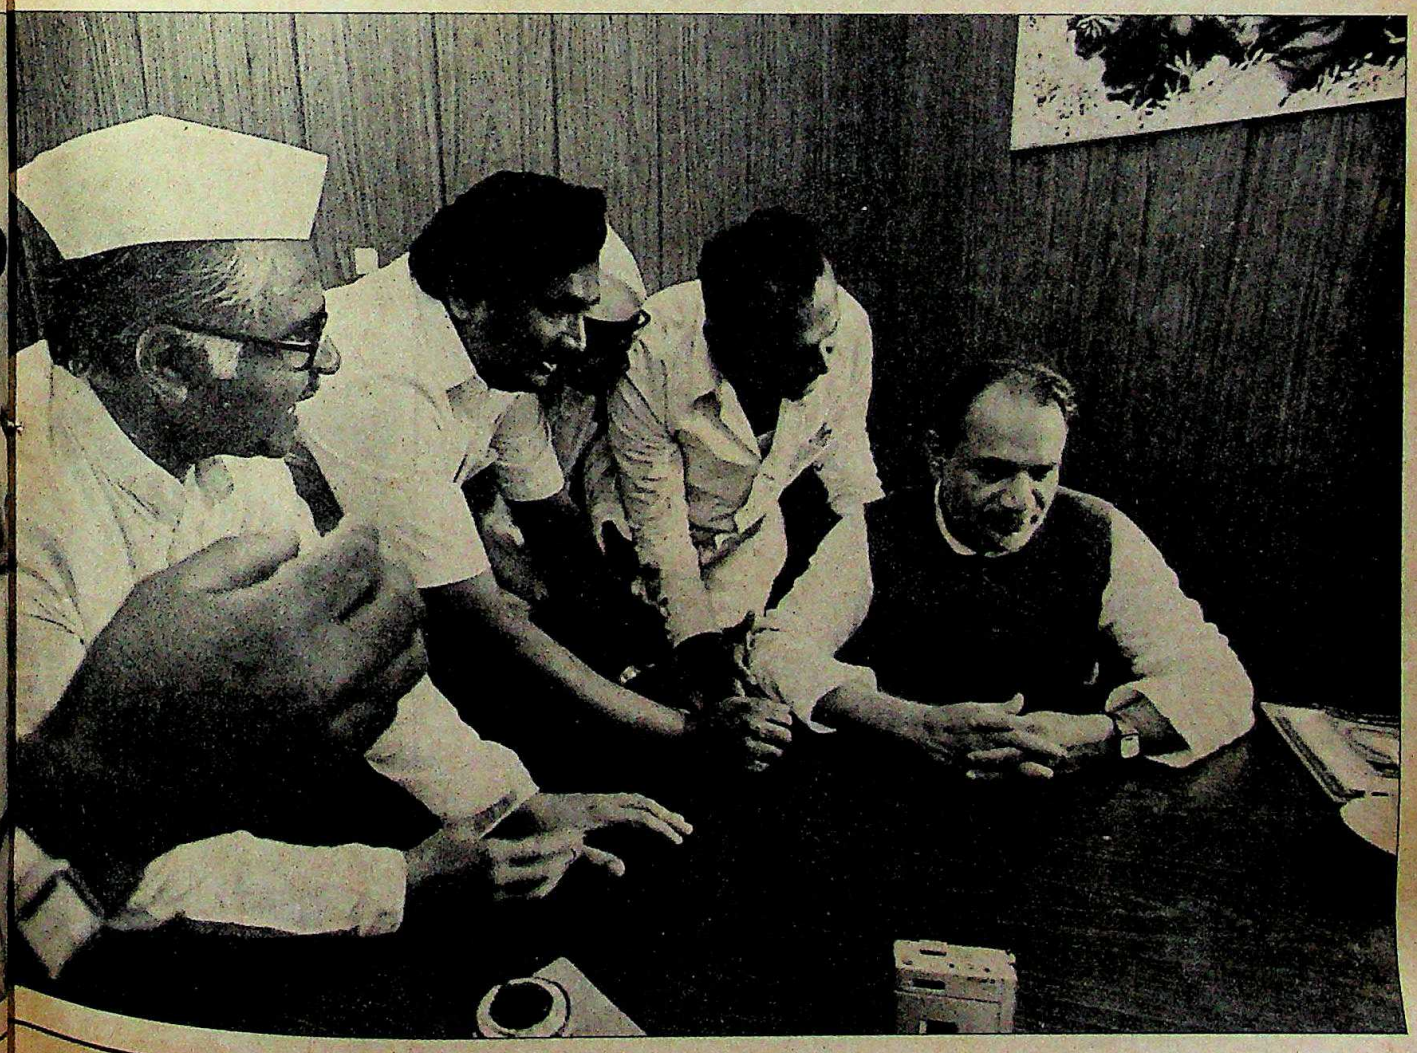
Drama

mittee (BAC) when party legislators heard the news of his letter to Chandra Shekhar, written two days earlier but kept secret from his cabinet colleagues. "I do not want people to entertain even the slightest doubt about the integrity of our government," Hegde had written while expressing his wish to resign. The letter was pigeoned by a common friend via Delhi to Chandra Shekhar, then camping in eastern Uttar Pradesh on yet another padyatra. Contacted at his walkathon headquarters as soon as the letter became public, Chandra Shekhar told INDIA TODAY: "I was surprised. I immediately scribbled back to him on a piece of paper saying that he shouldn't decide in a hurry." Nevertheless, the letter was leaked to the press, and whoever leaked it must have known that this would force Hegde's hand.

And so it did. Hegde sent his resignation at 6 p.m. on February 11 to the office of Governor A.N. Banerjee, then touring in Dharwar. Almost immediately after that, he drove off with two of his senior cabinet colleagues to the Air Force Training Command guest-house, a familiar retreat, leaving dismayed partymen behind. Many ministers first heard the news from enquiring journalists, and their response was uniformly distressed, indicating what was to come.

The chorus of the anguished exhortation began the same evening when unbelieving partymen thronged their leader's vacant office at the Secretariat, some with tears in their eyes, saying: "We'll not let him go." By 5.30 the next morning, all roads led to Krishna, the shiny fortress-like "home office" of the chief minister in downtown Bangalore. A resplendent memorial to the forgettable days when R. Gundu Rao held office in the state, Krishna normally has its doors barred to favour-seekers and assorted callers. But there was no holding back the crowds that day. They surged across the well-kept grounds into the waiting hall, the office rooms and even Hegde's bedroom, chanting in unison, Neevu rajiname koda baradu ("You should not resign"), while party MLA's shouted Neevu rajiname kottare navelle rajiname ("If you quit we shall all quit too"). Hegde looked drained and his baritone had turned husky. It was all he could do to shout at the top of his pitch, "I have already resigned," before pausing to wipe wet eyes with a handkerchief.

MANY ministers were upset at having been kept in the dark: "You didn't even inform your cabinet colleagues. You can't do this; take your letter back," screamed Home Minister B. Rachaiah, standing in the midst of the crowd. M. Raghupaty, the education minister, was seen weeping, his head buried in his hands. Hegde tried to reason with them, saying that he was leaving for Delhi



MLA's crying (left); and supporters pleading with Hegde not to resign: shock waves

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INTERVIEW

"My conscience is clear"

RAMAKRISHNA Hegde has acquired the reputation of a master survivor, and not without reason. In 1983 he successfully withstood a Congress(I) attempt at toppling him in the unsavoury Moily tapes episode. Twice he was called back to office by his party after he resigned, first in 1983 when his government was in a minority and again after his party's poor showing in the 1984 Lok Sabha poll. But last fortnight, as the arrack scandal once again put his principles to the test, Hegde resigned once again, this time with an air of quiet finality. When his letter of resignation sent to party chief Chandra Shekhar was leaked to the press Hegde's resolve to finally put an end to the suspense drama took final shape. Since then, he has quietly withdrawn from the public eye, apparently unwilling to discuss the crisis that his resignation has triggered off in the state and the party. He did, however, agree to meet Assistant Editor PRABHU CHAWLA with whom he had only a week earlier discussed the high court judgement. Excerpts from the two interviews:

Q. Why this belated announcement about your resignation to the Janata Party president?

A. I have been thinking over it again and again since the day the judgement was delivered by the high court. I consulted the party president and other colleagues of the Janata national executive on this matter. All of them were of the opinion that the judgement had not indicted me personally and no malafide was proved on our part. But later on I realised that it was very serious. The honourable judges while setting aside an executive order have used certain expressions which I thought were harsh—though they have not expressed an opinion I am convinced they must have had some reason for passing such a critical judgement.

Q. But your initial reaction was that the judgement was not serious and it did not warrant the resignation of the Government.

A. That is not true. I have expressed my views in private. I would be the last person to ignore a judicial verdict. My conscience is very clear in this respect.

Q. Don't you think that by resigning you have boosted the morale of the Opposition?

A. I have not yielded to the Opposition's pressure. Who are these Bangarappas and Subbaiahs to demand my resignation? What is their credibility in public? When they raised the question in the Assembly I made it very clear that I was under no obligation to resign. My decision to quit now is based on moral commitment.

Q. How come your public stance on this question was different from what you personally believed?

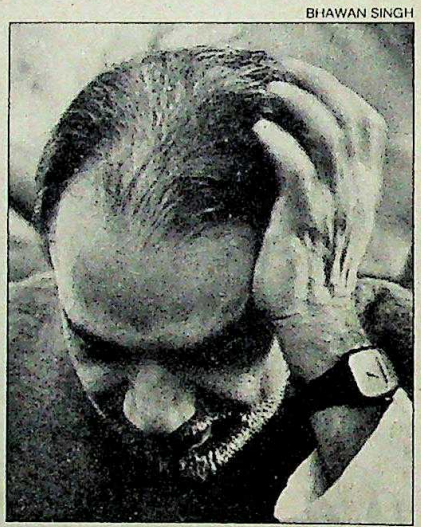
A. I wanted to discuss this matter with my colleagues in the state and outside. I was certain that the party would not accept my request due to its affection for me. I had no intention of bypassing the party. But keeping in view their emotional commitment towards me I decided to act independently and resign. Technically, I have committed a mistake by sending my resignation to the party high command.

BHAWAN SINGH



Hegde after resigning

Q. Will it not create a crisis in your party?

A. In fact, it will strengthen the party in the state. At this time the party is fully united and it will be possible to throw up a new leadership. After all I am not going to stay in Karnataka for life. Morever, I feel no one should become indispensible in politics.

Q. What was the immediate provocation for resigning?

A. I took every thing into consideration before quitting. To begin with, a daily published from New Delhi carried a story on February 7 saying that the Janata's central leadership was in favour of a change. This came after all my colleagues gave me an assurance and a directive not to quit. I began to think that maybe a section feels that it is in the party's interest to step down. Later on various well meaning newspapers came out with editorials which were not favourable. I am not one who would ignore these comments especially when they come from the friendly press.

Q. Don't you think that your resignation will be a major setback to the national opposition?

A. On the contrary, it will help the Opposition. We promised the people value-based politics. By accepting the moral responsibility for an act which has been declared illegal we have shown we believe in what we say. I think people will now realise the difference between the Congress(I) and the Janata.

Q. What is the background to this whole controversy about the arrack bottling contract?

A. One of the recommendations of the Desai Commission was that arrack should not be sold unbottled. Gundu Rao when he was chief minister appointed an expert committee which took the first step that the bottling (system) should be on the Tamil Nadu model. When our government came, I decided that not only should bottling be introduced, it should also be done by an independent agency so that there was no scope or very little scope for hanky-panky.

Q. Do you think that people who were adversely affected by this decision were determined to sabotage it?

A. Last year I again increased arrack excise duty by Rs 2 per litre. This was after the arrack shops were auctioned. This decision made big arrack contractors more unhappy and they went to court and the matter is pending in court. Now the Government has to recover Rs 8 crore as arrears from them. This was the new policy. The excise minister sent his people to Tamil Nadu to study the system there. He fixed the price on the basis of expert committee recommendations and invited applications.

Q. But no tenders were invited so that the Government must have lost very little revenue in terms of bottling fee to be paid to the contractors.

A. Bottling plants have not been given on the basis of tenders anywhere

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya

in the country. Only applications were called. In the meanwhile I received certain complaints saying many people from Tamil Nadu and Kerala who were involved in liquor scandals had come to our state and therefore I was requested to verify their antecedents. I asked the home secretary to conduct confidential inquiries. It was done and I sent this report to the excise commissioner.

Q. Was the report on each individual?

A. Not on each individual but on those who were from outside. Regarding people from Karnataka there were no specific complaints and the inquiry was not held.

Q. When was the policy change decided?

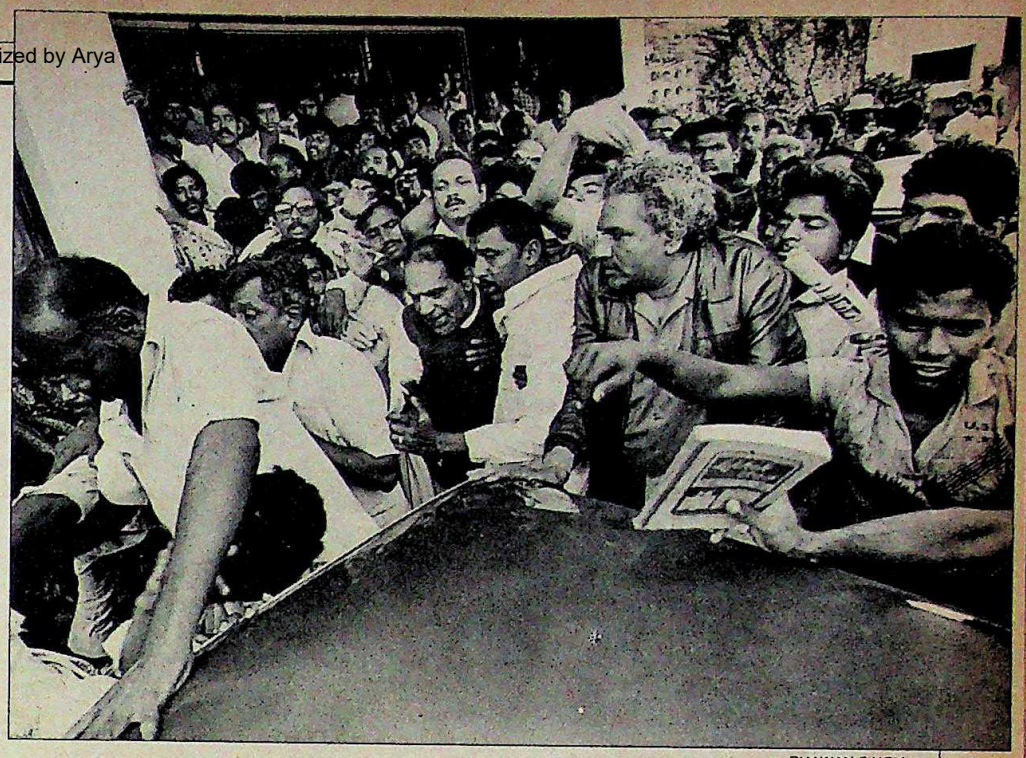
A. You see in a meeting it was decided that manufacturers, distillers and contractors should be kept out of the bottling business. But it was finally the excise commissioner who was convinced that only these people would be able to deliver the goods. While sending his proposals to the Government he also expressed the view that if the new policy was to be implemented it required amendments to the existing rules. While the proposed amendments were sent to the law department, contracts were sent to the excise department. Here their proposals got approval without delay because the new excise year was to begin soon. But the other matter of amending rules got stuck because there was no such urgency so the notification was issued after the selection of these candidates by the Government.

Q. But why couldn't the selection process be stayed till the amendments were finalised and notified? Even in the court, government advocates could not justify this subsequent amendment?

A. But the court has not held the Government guilty of malafide. In fact, some contractors by their performance have proved that their selection was not bad.

Q. But one thing is not clear, why have both the excise commissioner and excise minister mentioned your name in their notings. Does it not create the impression that you were taking an interest in this matter?

A. As a matter of fact, files were never sent to me and I had nothing really to do with them. Moreover, the day the minister approved the contracts, I was not even present in the city...I was out of Bangalore.



BHAWAN SINGH

Partymen at Hegde's home: dismay

the same evening to meet Chandra Shekhar and that he would soon come back to address the party legislators. "Ask Shekhar to come to Bangalore. You don't go," the crowd demanded in reply. Earlier, an informal meeting of the cabinet was disrupted because legislators stormed into the room.

When Hegde stepped out, the crowd followed him in such strength that he had to step down from the car and walk a furlong with them. So overwhelming was the fervour that, despite the tension, Hegde seemed buoyed by the growing support. One legislator was seen at Krishna distributing photocopies of blank resignation letters to the party MLA's and MLC's, imploring them to step down en masse if the chief minister did not backtrack on his decision. The Government staff willingly made photocopying facilities available to the eager flock. The Cabinet and the Janata Legislature Party (JLP) also held an informal meeting at Krishna where, in an impromptu resolution, Hegde was asked to "continue as our leader and there should be no second thought about this."

While Bangalore was swaddled in sentimental fog, the resignation sent shock-waves across the nation, rejuvenating an opposition that had been rocked on its heels by the court indictment. Even the AIADMK Chief Minister of Tamil Nadu, M.G. Ramachandran, friendly to the Congress(I) at the Centre, was quick to cable Hegde, saying: "The country should not lose the services of a leader of your stature." MGR's fellow-thespian N.T. Rama Rao of Andhra Pradesh called from Hyderabad with the same entreaty. Equally fervid were the old patriarchs of politics, such as former president N. Sanjeeva Reddy, former prime minister Morarji Desai and former Congress president S. Nijalingappa, in their appeal to Hegde. The Janata Parliamentary Board (JPB) went into session shortly afterwards, and the party's internal tensions were drowned in a strident, unanimous appeal to Hegde to stay in office and not leave. Even the two communist parties, whose leaders in Karnataka had been demurely campaigning for the "right-wing" chief minister's resignation, joined the "don't leave" chorus. The state CPI(M) leader, S. Suryanarayana Rao, made a sudden appearance at Krishna and braved the ridicule of the Janata legislators to walk up to Hegde and request him to reconsider his decision.

IT TOOK quite a while for Banerjee to return to Bangalore. But by then Hegde, accompanied by wife Shakuntala and Revenue Minister S.R. Bommai, had already left for the airport, without waiting for the nicety of handing over the letter to the governor personally. The Hegdes were headed for Delhi en route to Kanpur where they had a wedding to attend. However, a delay in the flight's departure enabled a puzzled Banerjee to speak over the telephone to Hegde at the airport. Apologetic about not having waited to meet the governor, Hegde nevertheless said he was firm in his resolve, and that he would meet the governor as soon as he returned in two days. But even on the aircraft to Delhi, Hegde was not to be left alone. Basavarajemani, a senior Congress(I) MP, walked up to Hegde and enquired gently: "Why are you resigning? Please don't resign." "But that's what your party wanted," Hegde shot back, albeit with a disarming smile.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The state Congress(I), which had stalked its prey like a hunter sensing the kill, now felt its quarry was giving it the slip. Earlier, the party's 80 MLA's had almost brought the roof down on the Assembly, which had been in session, staging interminable walk-outs and sitting in the well of the House. The Congress(I) MLC's, who are in a majority in the council, had forced it to adjourn the session. "He (Hegde) will have to go back from Bangalore with his face blackened,"

ARRACK CONTRACTS

Favoured Few

THE CASE that brought down the Hegde ministry began in September 1984, shortly before the Lok Sabha elections, when contracts were awarded to eight out of 131 applicants for bottling arrack. The contracts could have been worth over Rs 55 crore: three million litres of arrack annually for four years, at a bottling charge of Rs 4 per litre.

But as soon as "the chosen eight" were awarded the contracts, the Government was hauled to court by 45-year-old K. Rudraiah Raju, a civil contractor, and 35-year-old G.S. Shivanna, a general merchant. Last fortnight, the Government finally got a sharp rap on the knuckles when Justice Rama Jois and Justice N.D.Venkatesh declared that the awarding of the contracts "smacks of arbitrariness and is a flagrant violation of the rule of law" and that it "shocks the judicial conscience".

The case established that:

► Of the 131 applicants for the contracts, 124 were eligible. Yet all but one of these were rejected on the ground that the Government did not want to give the contract to those who had liquor manufacturing or vending licences.

► Of the eight who were selected, seven were not eligible under the Karnataka Excise (Bottling of Liquor) Rules. Yet they got the contracts;

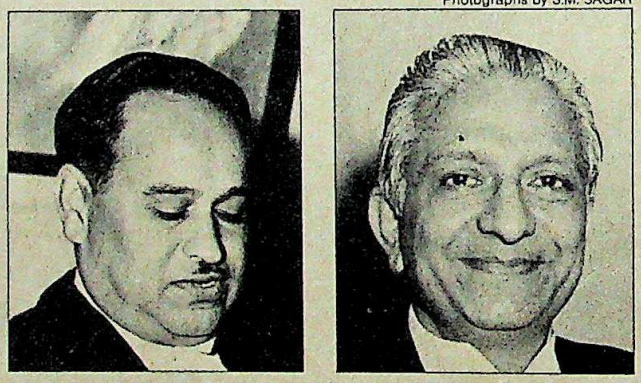
► T.V. Sarangadharan was given a contract though, like the 123 others rejected, he was an excise contractor.

► The bottling rules themselves were "hurriedly" changed in November 1984, after the writ petitions were submitted to the high court so as to make it possible for the Government to award bottling licences to the "chosen eight"; and these changes were notified in the official gazette only after the last date for filing objections to the changes in the rules had passed. In other words, the changes were made in such a manner that no objections could be filed.

► The rules were changed yet again, five months later, when it was realised that those who had already been awarded the contracts were not even eligible to apply.

► All this happened after the Government had claimed that these rules were not applicable to the bottling contract, so that the Government had negated its own stand; and the changes were made without the cabinet's consent.

Photographs by S.M. SAGAR



Justice Rama Jois and Justice N.D. Venkatesh: strong verdict

► Excise contracts were normally awarded for one year; in this case, however, the contract was for four years, so that their value quadrupled to a staggering Rs 55 crore and more.

Investigations by INDIA TODAY show that four of the eight successful applicants were not traceable at the addresses they had given. Yet the Government had said in court that intelligence agencies had vetted the successful applicants.

Further, four of the applicants had not even deposited the required Rs 10,000 per district before the stipulated date. Two of them—K.M. Srinivasmurthy and H.S. Somasekhar—submitted bank drafts for this sum after the last date for applications was over. And Chaitanya Kumar, a close relation of information minister Jivaraja Alva, submitted a draft for only Rs 10,000, although he was awarded contracts for three districts.

The Government rejected the application of a state Government-owned company, the Mysore Sugar Company, which supplies 66 per cent of the state's arrack, on the ground that this unit might adulterate arrack given to it for bottling. As the court pointed out, no one acting reasonably "would have excluded the application of an eligible state-owned undertaking which had all the facilities and prefer a private ineligible applicant." The judgement went on to say that the exclusion of this company on the ground of possible adulteration "is not only a glaring and flagrant violation of ...the bottling rules but also an outrageous defiance of logic."

The excise commissioner wrote shortly before the contracts were awarded that the "chief minister conducted confidential enquiry through the Police Department about the applicants in question"; but the court was told that the enquiry had been conducted by the excise commissioner.

Although the excise commissioner called all 131 applicants on the same day to satisfy himself about their ability to carry out the contract, no proper scrutiny had been done, as the home secretary pointed out later. The excise commissioner's notings show that one of the applicants was chosen partly because he appeared to be "young and energetic", and another was picked although he said that all he had was a plot of land in Bangalore and that he would have to set up a bottling unit before he could start bottling work.

The home secretary was one of two officials who objected but they were stopped short by an order from Excise Minister Ramesh Jigaginigi that the 'chosen eight' be given the contracts. Thus, prophesied Veerappa Moily, whose famous tapes had once rolled in scandal. "Hegde has already got one foot in his political grave, and the Janata will keep him company there," jested the unflappable Gundu Rao.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

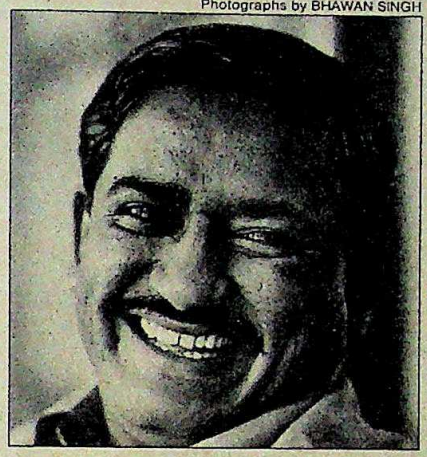
The Congress(I) plan of action had been to orchestrate a state-wide campaign against the Janata Government that would culminate in late February with a memorandum to the governor (the Centre, in other words), urging him to dismiss the ministry. But Hegde's lightning move had changed the rules of the game. Oscar Fernandes, the newly-appointed Karnataka Pradesh Congress(I) Committee (KPCC-I) president, who had been on a tour of the state with the home secretary pointed out that "there are no details forthcoming regarding the creditworthiness of these individuals who are to be entrusted with the bottling work. No information is forthcoming regarding the infrastructure facilities available with them and the time frame within which they can set up the bottling plants."

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH



(Clockwise) Jigaginigi, Ravi Hegde, bottled arrack and Kumar

Despite the sanction from on high, the deputy secretary in the Finance Ministry said: "It is not clear from the file as to how the excise commissioner has selected 19 bottling contractors out of 131 firms." Then, in a noting of unusual prescience, he added: "This has to be brought on record clearly. Otherwise, the selection is subject to challenge in the court of law."

Inevitably, when faced with all this, the court came down hard on the Government, and the judgement is replete with all manner of indictments. Hegde kept harping through the 11 days that he took to decide on resigning that the court did not charge either him or his government with mala fide intentions. But this is not the whole truth: the court did not say there was no mala fide; all it said was that it considered it unnecessary to go into the issue as the Government's decision on the bottling contracts was being struck down as unlawful. In short, there may well have been mala fide motives involved, but the court chose not to go into the question.

Interestingly enough, the case went through several twists and turns. In the period immediately after the contracts were awarded, a host of applicants whose papers had been rejected rushed to the courts with writ petitions. But strangely, no fewer than 18 writ petitions were withdrawn at various stages, leaving just two litigants who fought the case not as aggrieved applicants but as ordinary citizens fighting a case in the public interest.

However, the proceedings were hardly one-sided. The case initially involved charges to the effect that Hegde's son-in-law was involved in the deal through a business associate of his; but the petitioners had to withdraw this charge and express their "sincere regrets" as it was unfounded. Another minister, however, was not to get off without special mention, for it turned out that one of the successful applicants was none other than the brother-in-law of Alva. But it was not proved in court that this relationship had anything to do with the awarding of the contract. The court also rejected the contention that the bottling contract had been handed out on unnecessarily generous terms, and said the payment offered for bottling was reasonable.

Hegde's signature does not appear anywhere in the papers relevant to the case; but he does figure because some of the applicants are supposed to have been weeded out following a confidential enquiry that he conducted (implying that he had vetted and cleared the people who finally got the contracts). Also, the excise minister cites him in ordering that the eight be given the contracts.

Hegde contended that his role was limited to conducting an inquiry into various complaints. Hegde told INDIA TODAY: "The Tamil Nadu liquor scandal was fresh in our memories and we did not want to take any risk, so we conducted ourselves with extreme care. Beyond that I was not concerned with the whole exercise which was terminated at the level of commissioner and the minister. How do I come into the picture? My role is confined to policy making only."

Meanwhile the eight affected contractors whose bottling contracts have been cancelled by the high court have decided to go in appeal to the Supreme Court against the judgement. Said Chaitanya Kumar: "None of us were given this contract on the basis of any recommendations." Added Ravi Hegde Of Sea Shell: "By investing huge amounts of money and constructing bottling plants in record time, we have proved that we had the necessary financial background and the expertise to do the job."

Even as the debate continued, two more judges of the Karnataka High Court began inquiring into charges of favouritism in the export of rectified spirit from the state and bribery charges against Hegde's son.

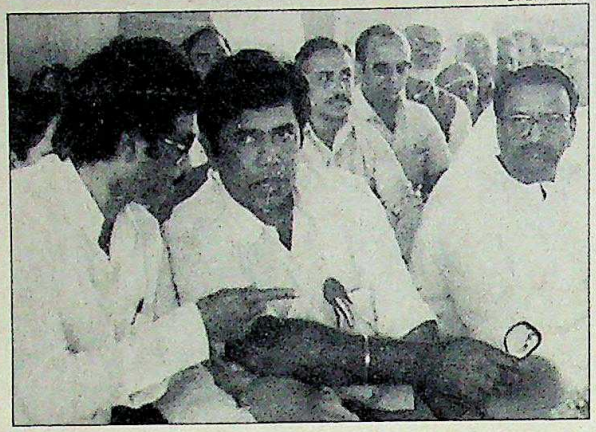
—PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bangarappa rustling up support against Hegde, now tried to change course in midspring. Addressing a "Hegde hatao" rally of the Youth Congress(I) at Shivajinagar that had obviously been planned prior to the resignation, he said: "Hegde must continue in power till the Janata regime grows so corrupt that the people will throw it out of office themselves."

D. BABURAJ



Bangarappa and Fernandes at Congress(I) meeting

Oscar Fernandes, the newly appointed Karnataka Pradesh Congress(I) Committee president, who had been on a tour of the state with Bangarappa rustling up support against Hegde, now tried to change course in midspring.

IN THE event, it was Hegde's own cabinet colleague who forced the governor to accept the chief minister's resignation without waiting for him to return from Kanpur. Law Minister Lakshmisagar announced in the Assembly that the chief minister had resigned, the speaker promptly adjourned the House, and the governor was left with a fait accompli. It now remained to be seen whether Hegde would come storming back into office on the strength of sustained support among the legislators, or the party would change its mind and allow Hegde to seek fresh pastures: a desire that he himself has often expressed. Either way, the Janata's most charismatic figure has used a cleansing resignation to convert political disaster and public ignominy into a moment of triumph.

Nevertheless, the Congress(I) had not been inactive. Its leaders met secretly with AICC(I) General Secretary Nawal Kishore Sharma, who had been deputed by the party high command to guide the KPCC(I) on its future course of action. The party prepared a long memorandum to the governor, saying that by not accepting Hegde's resignation he was creating a constitutional problem in the state. Bangarappa demanded that both the Houses should be called to discuss the chief minister's resignation. And he accused Hegde of violating democratic norms by not informing the House about his action. Soon after his meeting with the Congress delegation, Banerjee spoke to the chief minister in Kanpur. A few minutes later, he accepted the resignation on the ground that he had no option.

But the intriguing question remained: why did the law minister preempt the issue with his announcement in the Assembly? And was this of a piece with the earlier leaking of Hegde's letter to Chandra Shekhar? Political observers in the state were quick to point out that both Lakshmisagar and Chandra Shekhar are former socialists, while Hegde is of Congress(O) lineage.

Whether helped by forces within the Janata Party or not, the Congress(I) had finally managed to dislodge Hegde for the moment, at the third attempt. Earlier, within nine months of Hegde's Janata Ministry coming to power in January 1983, the Congress(I), determined to avenge its electoral defeat, had resorted to a favourite sport of the time: buying MLA's. But Hegde had guarded his flanks with remarkable alacrity and exposed the taped document of Moily's bargains with MLA's and built up a nation-wide campaign that helped him survive. Again, in December 1984, when 24 of the 28 Lok Sabha seats from Karnataka were swept up by the Congress(I) in the sympathy wave that followed Mrs Gandhi's assassination, there were orchestrated demands for his resignation. Hegde obliged, only to storm back into office by wresting 139 of the 225 assembly seats last March.

This time, the Congress(I) leader in the Assembly, S. Bangarappa, had raised the issue of arrack bottling contracts, and the noose was tightened round Hegde's neck by the high court. The judgement had all the ammunition that the Congress(I) could have prayed for (see box).

While the court indictment and two commissions of inquiry looking into other charges against Hegde's government and relatives could conceivably do a great deal of damage to Hegde's political career, last fortnight's political drama gave Hegde a badly-needed shot in the arm, for both he and his government had been losing both appeal and conviction in less than a year of being swept back into office. Hegde had essentially managed to grab the imagination of the people by promising a cleaner political culture and by initiating a

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH

Bommai and Deve Gowda

Hegde was rattled by political dinners hosted by MLA's belonging to two dominant castes and threatened to resign if they continued.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Make room for Special Effects.

Special Effects. The Premium Acrylic Emulsion Paint.
Transforms the walls of your home dramatically.
Making them stand out. So you discover an extra dimension to your room.

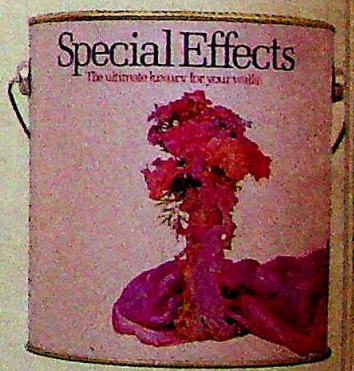
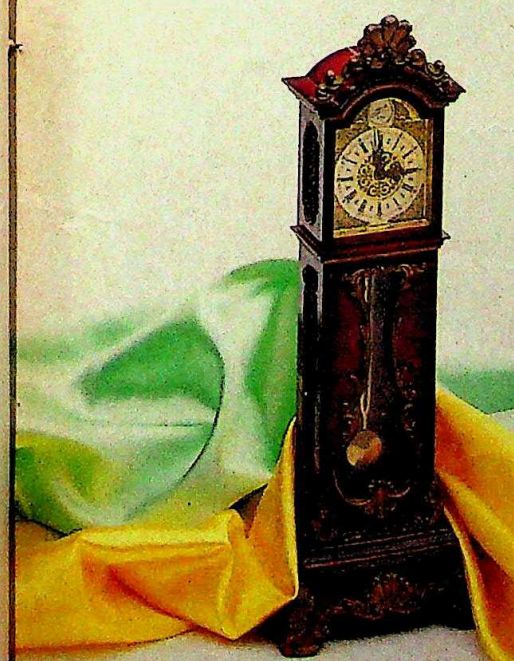
You'll just love coming home to the excitement of Special Effects, day after day. Its soft splendour will touch your eyes. And you'll see the glimmer of its rich sheen in someone's eyes.

Your walls never had luxury in such a range of new shades. Shades that will make even the rainbow blush. And the magic of Special Effects is so easy to keep.





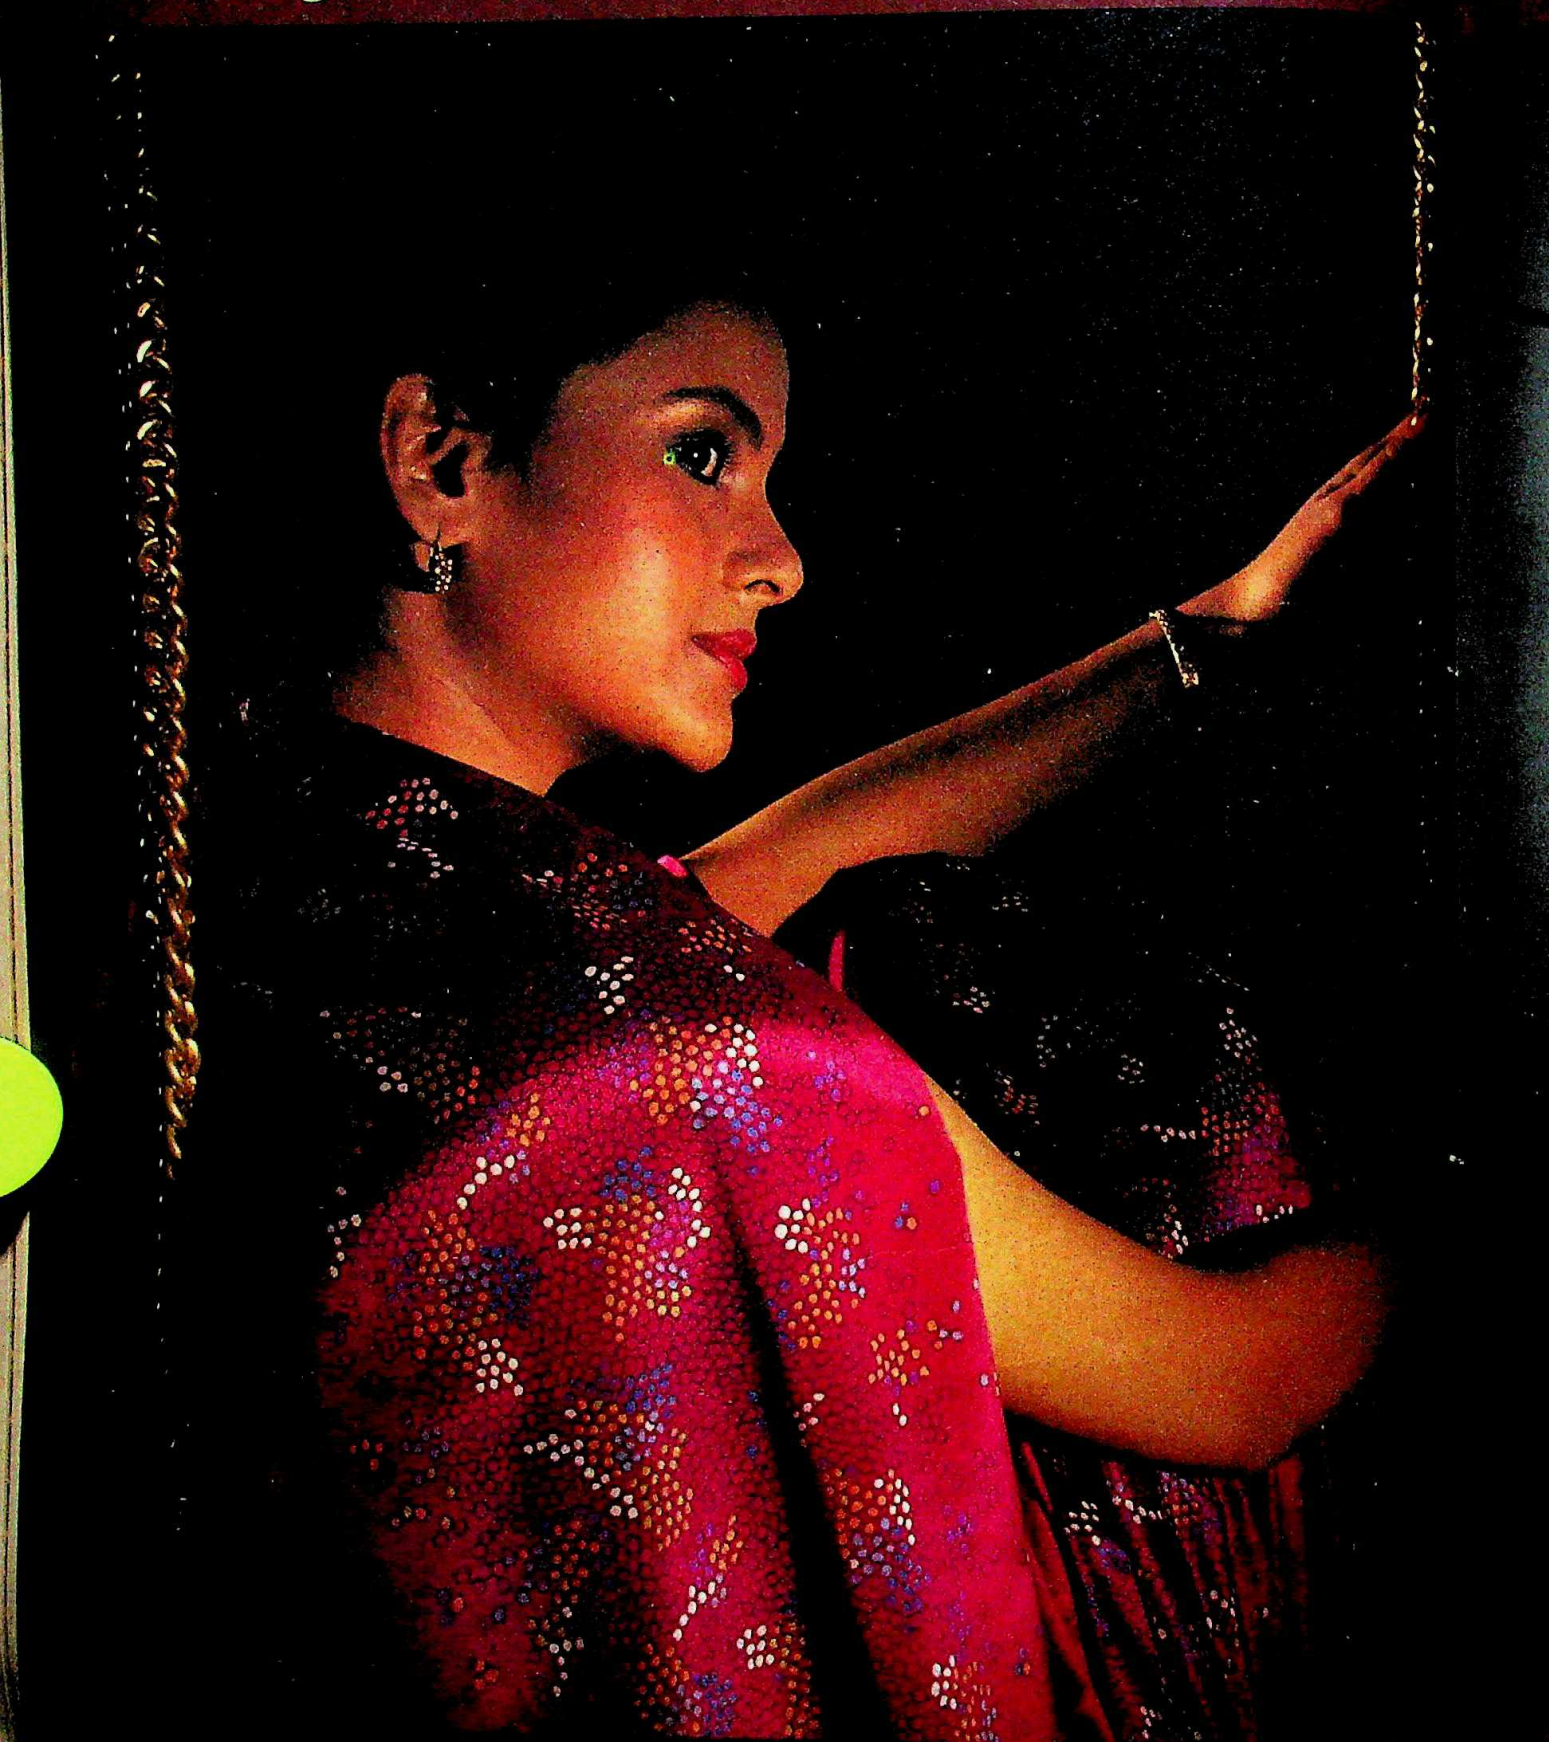
Special Effects
The ultimate luxury for your walls.

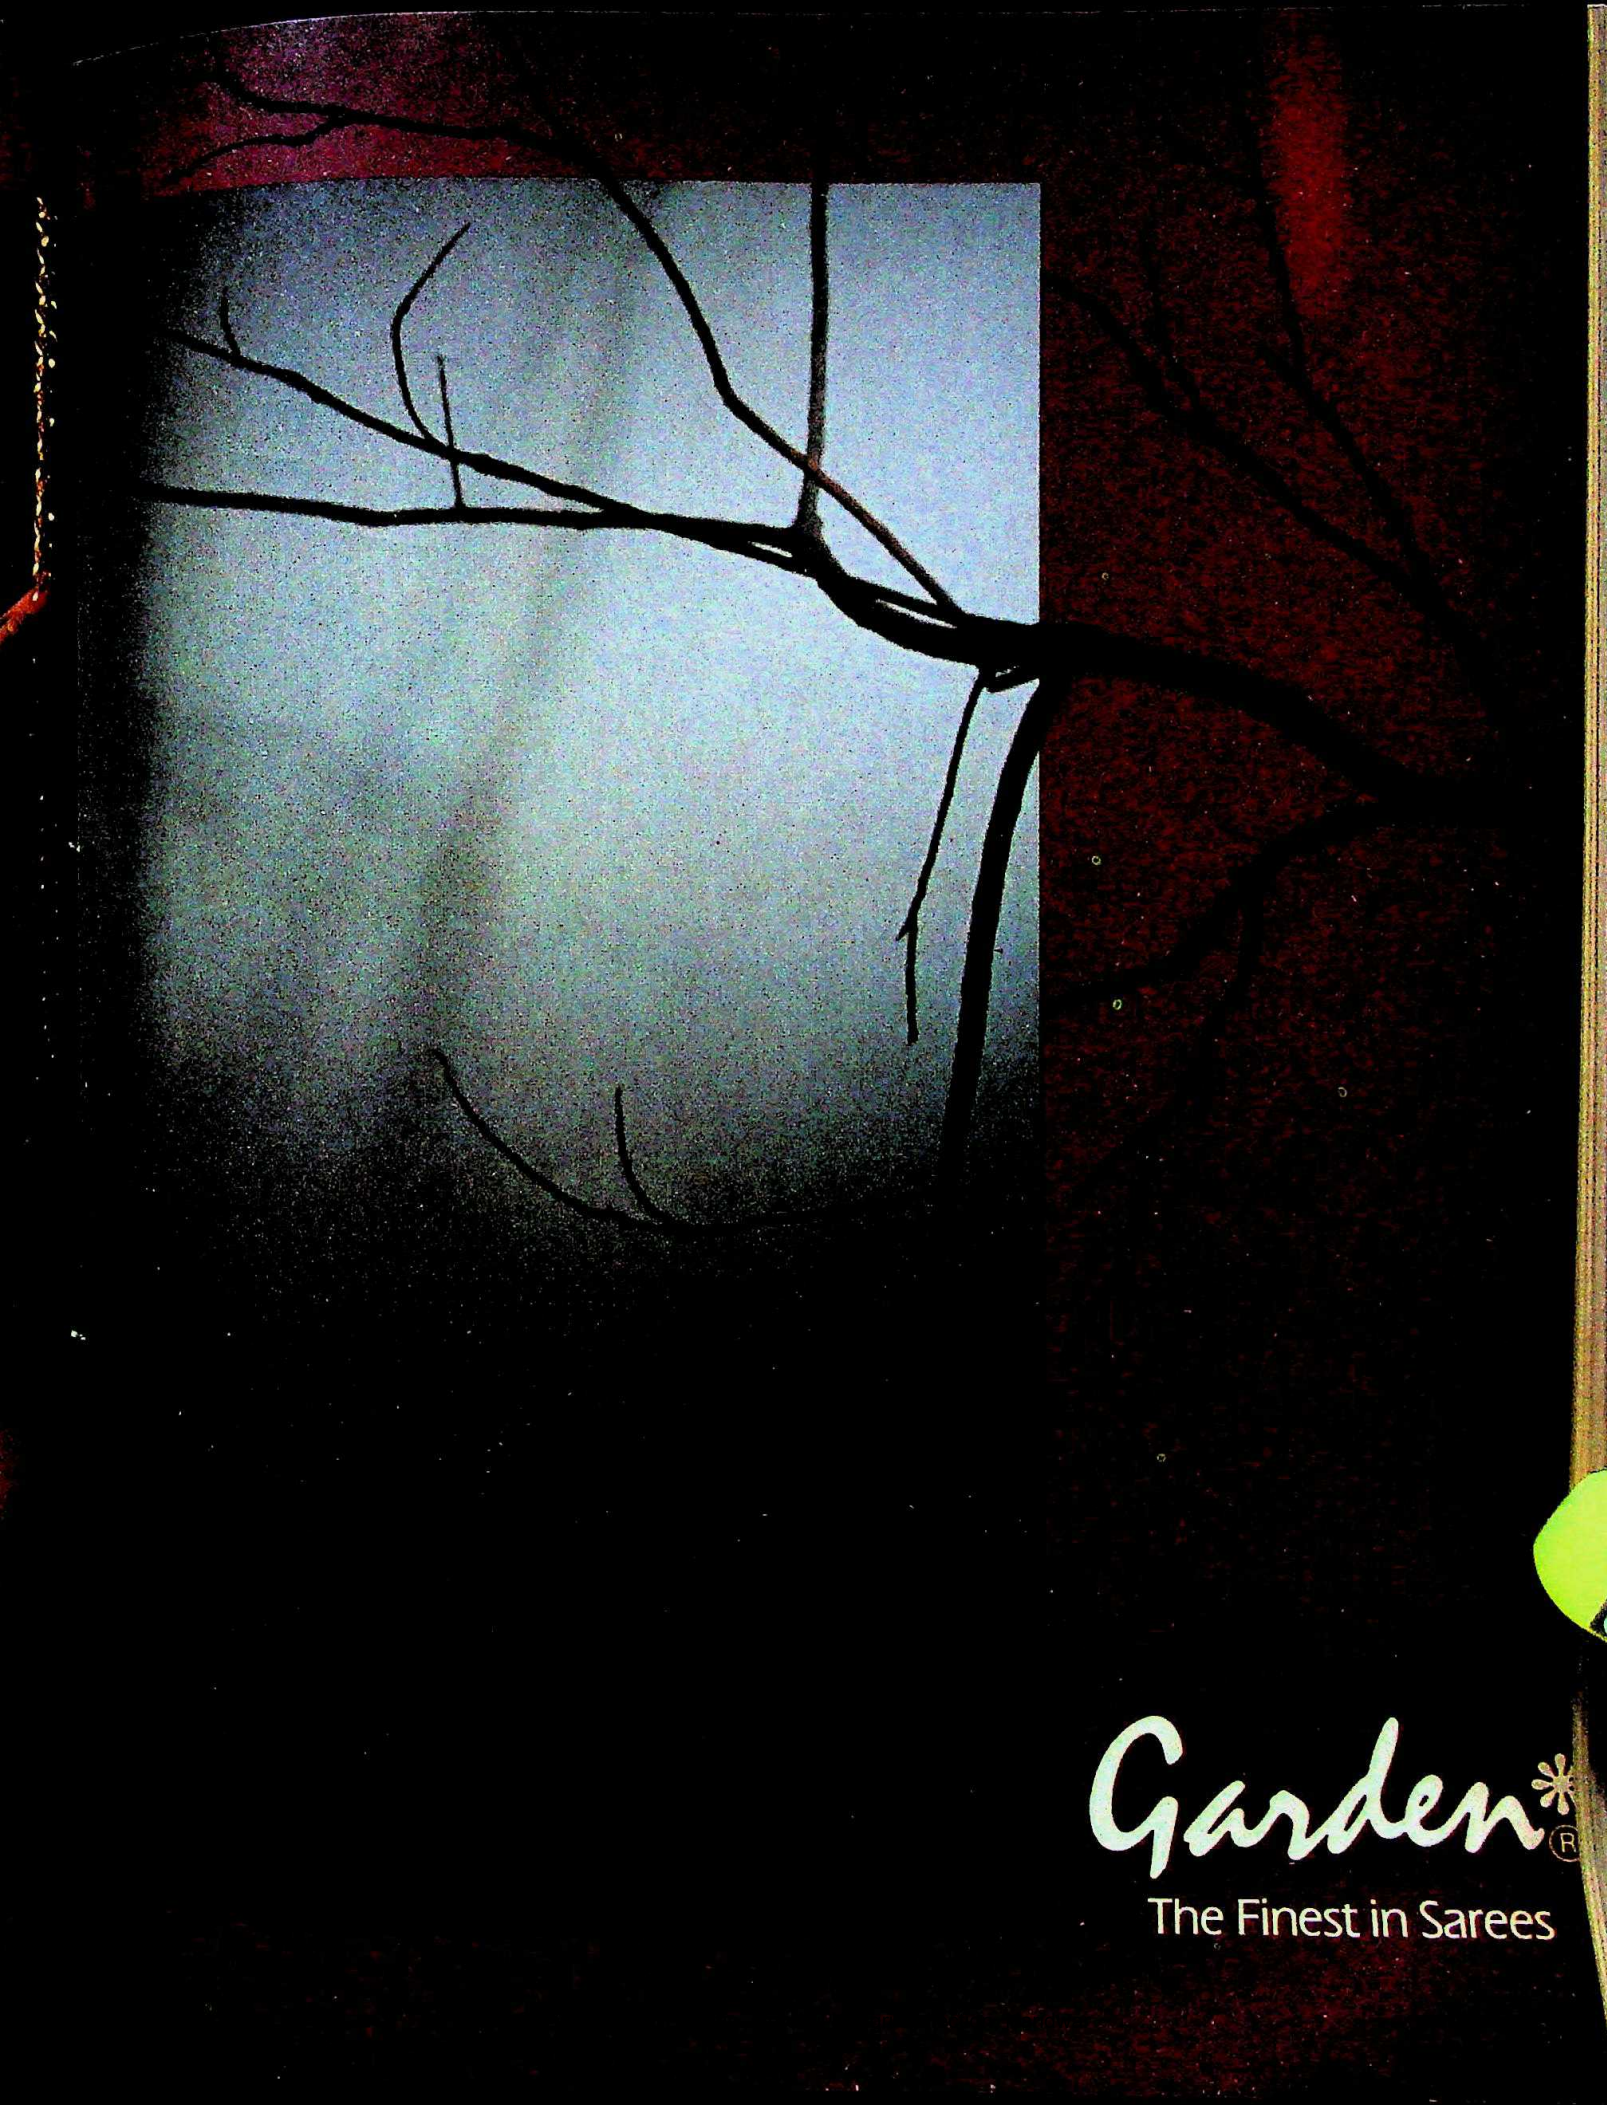
Jenson & Nicholson

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

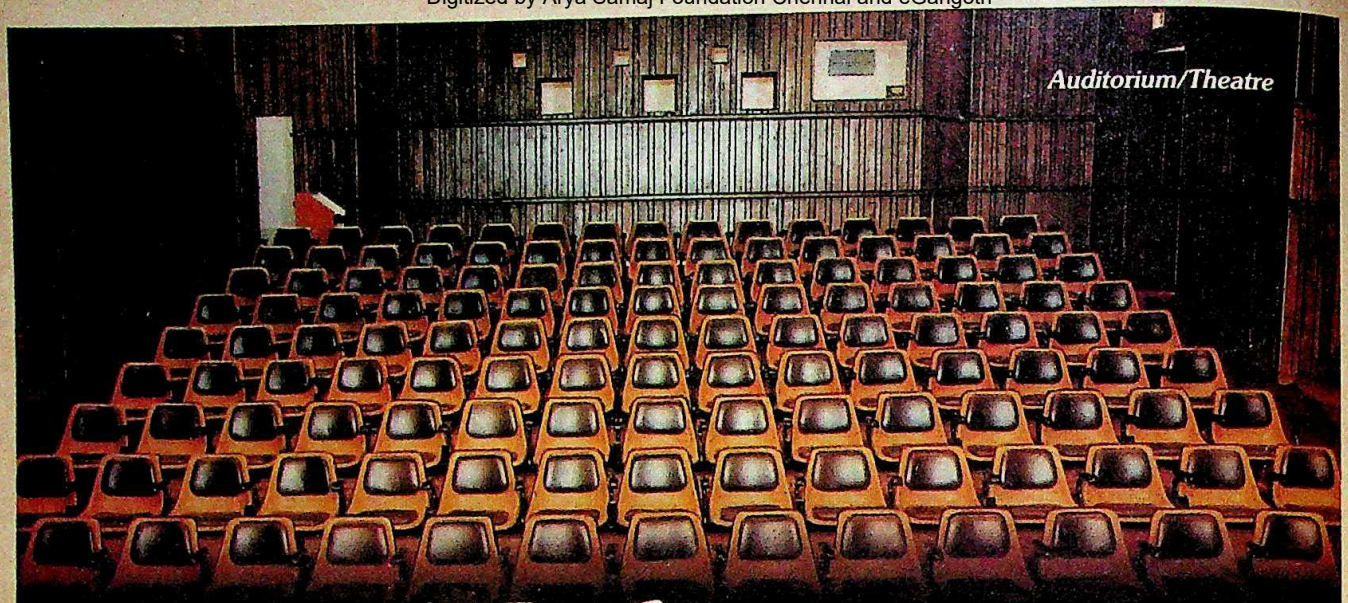
Winter Designs in Fuji De Chine





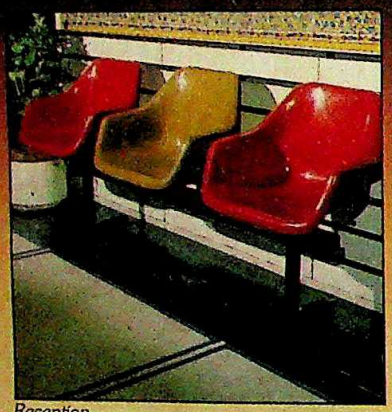
Garden®
The Finest in Sarees

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Moderna

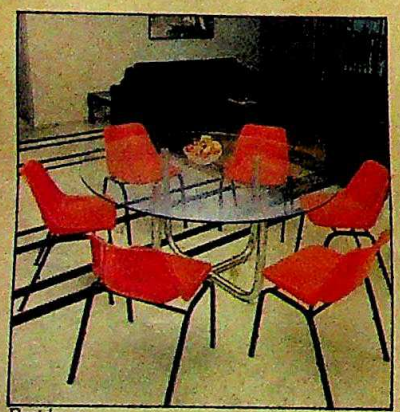
The international concept of sitting pretty. Just anywhere.



Reception

Training Centre

Restaurant



Residence

Elegance and functionality perfectly blended. That's Moderna.

Totally flexible. Eminently adaptable. Moderna Seating System is tailor-made to meet the needs of any seating situation. Indoors and outdoors.

Made from the wonder material, polypropylene, Moderna is lightweight. Portable. Tough. And it's ergonomically designed to provide maximum seating comfort for years and years. But that's not all. Moderna needs the minimum of looking after. No painting. No polishing. Just an occasional wash keeps it clean and bright.

Moderna. Offers you exciting ways to sit. In comfort and elegance. In a blaze of beautiful, non-fading colours.

Moderna. Naturally at home... in stadia, auditoria and theatres. In canteens, lounges, conference rooms and at poolsides. In a balcony or in a dining room.

Moderna. The functional seating system that offers you the best value for your money. Come, discover its many benefits.

Blow Plast Ltd.
V.I.P. House
Prabhadevi
Bombay 400 025.
Tel: 430 1011
Telex: 011-71595 BPL-IN
Grams: BLOWPLAST, Dadar.
Bombay 400 014.

MODERNA
the versatile seating system

FIRA MEMBER

Contour Ads-BP-669A/85 R

Regional Offices: Bombay: V.I.P. House, 88C Old Prabhadevi Road, Bombay 400 025. Tel: 4301011. Delhi: Ratan Jyoti, 6th Floor, 18 Rajendra Place, New Delhi 110 008. Tel: 5719820. Calcutta: 19, R.N. Mukherjee Road, Calcutta 700 002. Tel: 234025/230768. Bangalore: No. 5, Siddaiah Road, Bangalore 560 002. Tel: 226706.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

degree of openness in the state's body politic, both lacking in the Congress(I)'s corruption-riddled and crony-oriented politics.

But even many of the Hegde Government's well-wishers admit that its image had begun to get tarnished by his partymen's scramble for the loaves and fishes of office. Last year, Hegde was forced to follow in the footsteps of Congress(I) regimes by giving in to the spoils system: over 20 corporations were created, with a party MLA or MLC or a party worker heading each one.

Electoral promises were violated too. The Janata Party had said that it would abolish the capitation fee system for medical and engineering colleges and clean up the vestiges of the pay-your-way-into-professional-institutions syndrome. But Hegde sanctioned not one but four such capitation fee-based institutions and allowed the existing ones to continue in business.

MEANWHILE, the state's economy floundered. In two years between 1983-84 and 1985-86, the plan outlay crept up at a snail's pace from Rs 630.53 crore to Rs 651 crore. The net domestic product rose by a moderate 3.4 per cent during 1984-85, only to fall by 0.4 per cent in the next year. An unprecedented drought ate into agricultural production, ruining cotton and oilseeds crops, and taking a heavy toll of coffee. Distress in the state has been widespread.

While the state's coffers were empty, Hegde introduced populist schemes, a la the Telugu Desam Government in neighbouring Andhra Pradesh: Rs 45 crore were spent in 1985-86 to buy dhotis and saris for subsidised sale, Rs 50 crore were spent on providing subsidised rice, and Rs 4.11 crore were spent on textbooks for schoolchildren. "Hegde wants the Centre to subsidise his subsidies," charged Moily, who had served as finance minister in the Gundu Rao regime.

Finally, Hegde began crumbling under the pressure of the same caste politics that he had vowed to eradicate. Even though two-thirds of his MLA's belong to the Lingayat and Vokkaliga groups, he had reduced their representation in the Cabinet to just 14 out of 30 ministerial berths. The backward castes and Harijans got as many berths, despite having far fewer MLA's. And in Hegde's absence, cabinet meetings were chaired by Home Minister Rachaiah, who belongs to a Scheduled Caste, ignoring the presence of the Vokkaliga and Lingayat stars Deve Gowda and Bommai. Another rising star was Nazir Sab, who made a reputation as rural development minister by digging 16,000 borewells in record time.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Chandra Shekhar and Hegde

Hegde has an image that now clearly overshadows Chandra Shekhar's whose anaemic leadership has taken the party along a nowhere road of padayatras.

Inevitably, caste tensions came to the fore in very quick time. But compromises were inevitable. Last September, Hegde was rattled by political dinners hosted by MLA's belonging to the two dominant castes let by Bommai and Devegowda and threatened to resign if they continued. Then, to buy peace, Hegde allowed the opening of capitation fee colleges for the Vokkaligas and the backward castes: in gross violation of the electoral promises that he had made in his first term.

There were other tensions within the Janata Party. Hegde's unquestionable personal charisma was often cited as an attempt to smuggle in a personality cult. The differences surfaced last year when Deve Gowda addressed a widely-publicised party meeting in Bangalore where he deplored the feeling that the Janata Party had owed its victory in the March assembly elections to Hegde's personality. The subsequent budget session witnessed the chief minister blocking the funds of Deve Gowda's ministry in deference to the Congress(I) charges of financial irregularities.

That wasn't all. Hegde was due to hold the panchayat elections in December, but was sufficiently unsure of the result to postpone them indefinitely. Jostling within the party increased with Hegde saying that he didn't want to stay the full five-year term, an admission which indicated that he may well have been bored with state-level problems. Yet without him, the state unit of the Janata could turn out to be orphaned and a less effective force at the hustings.

But Deve Gowda was small fry in comparison with the heavyweights of the Janata Party who never liked Hegde, and saw him as a threat on the national political scene. To many of the fire-eating socialists in the Janata pantheon, led by George Fernandes and Chandra Shekhar himself, Hegde represents a rival force. So while Chandra Shekhar stated that he was opposed to Hegde's resignation, there remained the unresolved mystery of the leaked letter.

But the fact is that Hegde is at his best in the face of adversity, thinking on his feet, working out adroit moves, outmanoeuvring those in his way and taking the battle into the enemy court. In addition, Hegde has an image that now clearly overshadows Chandra Shekhar's, whose anaemic leadership has taken the party along a nowhere road of padayatras. Chandra Shekhar's hold on the party machinery is getting shakier with the passage of time. This is perhaps the time for Hegde to look out.

Hegde is a warrior soldier and hardly a peacetime general. His genius is rebuked in the drudgery of day-to-day state-level politics, its tedium, its routine, its anxious wait for Central funds and its vexing interface with narrow parochial interests. Perhaps the resignation drama will yank the sturdy crusader out of his home base and throw him back into the vortex of national politics.

—PRABHU CHAWLA with SRINIVASA PRASAD
In Bangalore and bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAJIV GANDHI

The Fading Glitter

THE CLICHES and mixed metaphors come tumbling fast and furious. The high flier who has gone into a tailspin. The Midas who has lost his golden touch. The promises that have been scattered on the winds of non-performance. Suddenly, in the space of a mere two months, the seemingly invincible Rajiv Gandhi, messiah of a year ago who would deliver this land from its ills and evils, is being portrayed in less than ethereal robes. Mutedly, no doubt, in whispers and—so far, at least—mainly in the symbiotic, urban trinity of 'intellectuals', politicians and bureaucrats, Rajiv is no longer invulnerable.

The teflon, it seems, is beginning to come unstuck. Where once he could do no wrong, last fortnight's petroleum prices bungle, the stalled Punjab accord, even the cancellation of a Doordarshan showing of the telefilm, Rajiv's India, are being blamed squarely on the prime minister. Losses in by-elections are seen as evidence that his tremendous vote-catching ability—which surpassed in December 1984 the best of Indira Gandhi or Jawaharlal Nehru—may have lost its magic. The Government's continuing grassroot slovenliness clashes starkly with his assertion that his would be "the Government that works faster". Power brokers were abolished with a verbal flourish in the tumultous closing weeks of 1984, but power-broking continues.

The result: the charismatic, almost mesmerising hold of Rajiv on his party and the Government machine appears to have been prised loose—a little. As one young and influential MP put it: "There was a sense of movement during those early days, a feeling that we would surge. That feeling of Camelot has dissipated." This sentiment reflects an apparently growing sense of frustration, even among diehard Rajivists, that the administration is failing to implement promises, that there is a growing credibility gap between performance and promise punctuated with instances of apparently confused thinking. Rajiv himself, who soon after his December 1984 victory had said that people's expectations were scary, last fortnight told INDIA TODAY: "The euphoria has to stop."

Independent opinion is quick to seize on the new mood. Govind Talwalkar, editor of the Maharashtra Times believes that Rajiv's "glitter has definitely faded". The slide, he believes, began with the Congress centenary celebrations, and was accelerated "by the recent bungled handling of the petroleum products price hike. Now the middle class is suspicious of Rajiv because of the massive increases, and the industrialists are wary because of the raids. There is also a feeling that he gives in to pressure very easily. Thus his two biggest urban support segments are not as enthusiastic as before."

The almost mesmerising hold of Rajiv on his party and the Government machine appears to have been prised loose—a little. As one young and influential MP put it: "There was a sense of movement during those early days. That feeling of Camelot has dissipated."

Political seer Romesh Thapar comments: "No prime minister can afford to dither. For instance, when the Mathew Commission failed to arrive at a clear decision, it was for the prime minister to summon the two chief ministers, give his award, and make it mandatory. But that did not happen."

There is guarded criticism of Rajiv from his own supporters too. They talk of him more in sorrow than in anger. They admire him for his guts and his idealism which they say still burns within him with a consuming ferocity. They point out that he hasn't really changed much in his desire to shake things up and to move the nation. They point out that his speech at the Bombay centenary celebrations was an act of sheer courage—even if politically naive. But what they criticise is the lack of follow-up action, and it seems as if a landmark speech was to no particular point at all.

This was not the case earlier on. During those halcyon days, just weeks ago, Rajiv bounded on to the stage as the slayer of seemingly invincible giants. Like all politicians before him, Rajiv promised changes. The difference this time was that people took him seriously. Promises were backed by speedy action and rapid fire decisions. Quickly, he purged his secretariat of his mother's hangers on. He rammed through the anti-defection bill, and embarked on political reform, consulting the opposition parties and seeking to carry them with him. He began to reshape his party in his own popular image—clean, fresh-faced, and possessed of the political and moral will to undertake precipitous reforms at the grassroots level. He started sweeping changes in taxes and economic policy. And notwithstanding jokes about his Computerji image, even the wags had begun to take him seriously.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

As one Congress(I) cabinet minister put it: 'We were convinced, along with the rest of the nation, that things would begin to happen in a time bound fashion. We were convinced that he did not give a damn about his own personal political fortunes. The accomplishment of a mission was the most important thing." But perceptions have changed.

When Punjab was "lost" to the Akalis, Rajiv and much of his Congress(I) sighed with relief: it was, in the event, an appropriate result, to let a party that said it was of the Sikhs handle a problem caused by the Sikhs. But there was criticism that he and his party hadn't campaigned hard enough during the Punjab elections.

And, in Assam they pulled out all the stops, trying to work the Rajiv magic in what, ultimately, became a no-win situation. It didn't work. Far from it. Related by-elections saw the Congress(I) humbled; even stalwart Arjun Singh, the catalyst for the Punjab accord and recently appointed vice-president of the ruling party, won by a greatly reduced majority.

Last fortnight, Sangli was another bitter pill of defeat to swallow; a constituency that had been a safe Congress(I) stomping ground, the preserve of former chief minister Vasantrao Patil whose nephew gained the ignominious distinction of being the one to lose to a Janata candidate.

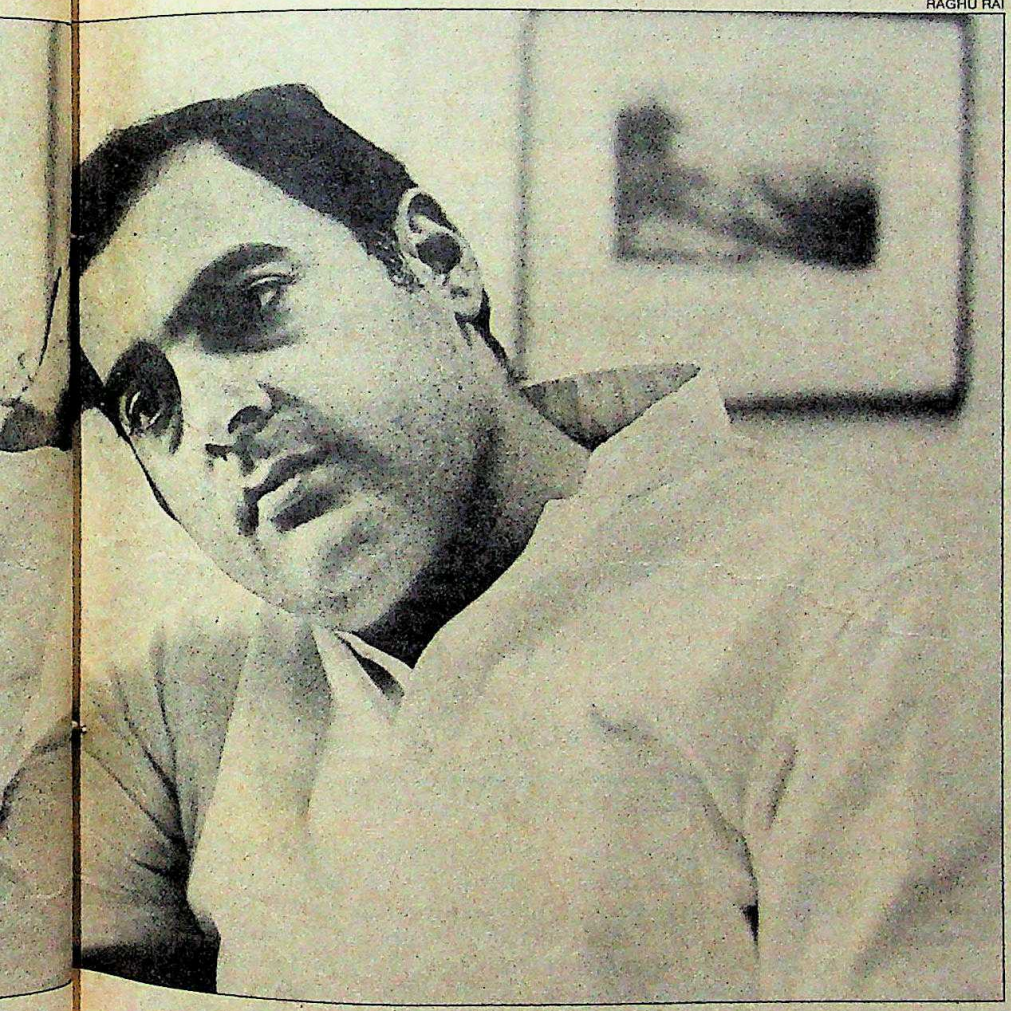
One of the causes of such a disastrous showing was the beginnings of a desertion by the Congress(I)'s two vote-banks: the Harijans and the Muslims. The formation of the Bahujan Samaj (INDIA TODAY, January 31) which in its infancy pulled votes from the Congress(I) in Punjab and then made an impact on the December by-election indicates a new desire by the Harijans to seek an independent political future.

The Muslims, on the other hand, remain dissatisfied with the Assam accord and the Supreme Court verdict in the Shah Bano—clearly indicated by the success of the United Minorities front in the Assam election and Janata leader Syed Shahabuddin's victory in the Lok Sabha by-election from Kishanganj.

If the prime minister was coming in for muted criticism on account of political maladroitness he was also being subjected to intense flak over his failure to deliver on his campaign promises. There was the oft-repeated charge that for all the earlier talk and banter he was failing to implement the "image changes" that he had so openly desired and promised an expectant nation.

Notwithstanding his pejorative party peroration at the Bombay centennial, the Congress affair turned into a grandiose tamasha, clearly out pointing anything that had gone before. Party and people began to ask: is Rajiv's party really any different?

RAGHU RAI



THEN the slow undoing of the Punjab accord, the delayed appointment of the Mathew Commission, its eleventh hour verdict on Abohar and Fazilka, Bhajan Lal's shenanigans which gave birth to the idea that the Government spoke in two voices, Rajiv Gandhi's and someone else's, the crushing disappointment when Chandigarh didn't go to Punjab on Republic Day and, most ominously of all, the renewed takeover of the Golden Temple in Amritsar by a fresh lot of terrorists. And, all too quickly it began to seem that it was business as usual, that intractable problems were threatening to remain intractable, that there were no easy solutions. Worse, there were strong indications that the prime minister's writ simply didn't seem to run. Once, twice, thrice Rajiv publicly asked that Doordarshan stop focussing its cameras and valuable broadcast time on him and his activities. Yet, Doordarshan persisted giving rise to public speculation that Rajiv's public stand was either just so much eyewash or that his command couldn't rein in his own minister.

Critics within his party say that the most recent reorganisation involving the shifting of commerce minister Arjun Singh and induction of Shiv Shankar to the post looked suspiciously like a game of musical chairs. It wasn't the first time that Arjun Singh had been shunted around at short notice: last year in March, he was sent to Punjab within hours of being sworn in as Madhya Pradesh chief minister. Now, the grand negotiator of the now-imperiled Punjab accord had only recently shifted to the key Commerce Ministry and won a prestige Congress(I) Lok Sabha seat of South Delhi. The same reorganisation also saw the eviction of

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Nawal Kishore Sharma and T. Anjiah from the council of ministers and their appointments to party posts to 'rejuvenate' the Congress(I). With party elections slated for the summer and dissidence raising its head once again, the high command was obviously clearing the deck for new action—but, for want of appropriate projection, the public appearance was confusing—and smacked of ad hoc decisions.

IN OTHER areas, where Rajiv's Government, which is supposed to 'work faster', has tried to take concrete steps to reform and streamline itself, the response has been imperceptible. Rajiv has launched drives against corrupt officials in various departments including Income Tax, the International Airport Authority, the Mazagon Docks, and Customs. He has announced massive drives to weed out files that occupy some 600 sq km of space in Central ministries and recommended the appointments of coordinators in each ministry to scrutinise work and introduce modern management techniques. And he has issued a directive to all Central ministers to eliminate waste, mismanagement and corruption. But the bureaucratic behemoth has not budged, and is unlikely to in a hurry. Obviously, these promised reforms have hardly touched the life of the common man whose humiliation, financial fleecing and degradation continues at the hands of petty bureaucrats in banks, post offices, the railways, and district and tehsil-level offices.

As a result Rajiv's pro-rich image is reinforced. Rajiv himself is concerned that this shouldn't be. He argues: "We've done more for the poor than ever before. We've given a little to the middle class and taken away some. The rich have paid more in taxes and dues than they have ever done before—and all this has been ploughed back into programmes for the poor." The Government, in fact, says that the outlay on poverty alleviation programmes has been raised this year by 35 per cent to Rs 1,165 crore.

But these programmes haven't been explained well. His government is seen by the poor as one "which has more time for long-term fiscal policies and lessening of controls and concessions for industry... but cosmetic band-aid solutions for the poor," writes Bunker Roy, a leading social activist. In a recent article, Roy said: "My one-time acquaintance who has now become the prime minister of India will always receive my support. But at the same time he must know I consider his track record for the first year for tackling the problems of the rural poor dismal and disturbing."

Rajiv himself seems to be feeling the pinch. Highly placed sources, including a former cabinet minister and a minister of state—said that of late he had become irascible and impatient at the pace of change, and with his own inability to get things moving. He is also reportedly becoming increasingly inaccessible to his own senior partymen and senior bureaucrats whose telephone calls to the Prime Minister's Secretariat go unreturned for days. There is resentment in political circles and in ministries scattered about the capital's Rajpath that minor functionaries in the Prime Minister's Secretariat carry more clout than decision-makers elsewhere, and that the subterranean forces that operated in Mrs Gandhi's time have merely been replaced by a new concentration of power in that secluded corner of South Block, cut off by its own very special security arrangement, pulling the strings from its isolated yet exalted precincts.

Resentment against Rajiv's closed-door approach came to a head in the way the recent price hikes were announced and then rescinded, There is no doubt, as government economists will never tire of preaching, that petroleum prices need to be increased to keep consumption on a leash, even more importantly to raise resources for the seventh plan which is being reoriented towards bigger spending in anti-poverty programmes and to reduce the crippling subsidies on items such as kerosene (70 paise litre) and LPG (Rs 10 per cylinder). The burden of subsidies costs the Government almost Rs 4,000 crore and with food and fertiliser subsidies cut recently there was a good case for a hike in petroleum prices (see page 126). The Government argued that import of petroleum products was becoming a burden. Said V.P. Singh: "If we do not cut our consumption we will remain in debt," in a reference to the Rs 7,000-crore trade gap anticipated this year. There is also the perennial problem of the adulteration of diesel with kerosene. According to one ball park figure, no less than 20 per cent of the country's kerosene output of 8 million kilolitres goes in adulterating some of the 18 million kilolitres of diesel produced. With diesel at Rs 3.20 per litre and kerosene at Rs 2.11 a litre, that meant more than Rs 150 crore into the pocket of adulterators. And the decision had been endorsed by the cabinet committees on political and economic affairs, both presided over by the prime minister.

But it was bad timing. The increase ran counter to the news that international oil prices are crashing. The day India raised its prices, the world crude price fell to $18 a barrel, its lowest this decade, leading people to wonder why India needed to raise petroleum prices when its import costs were slated to drop. The offcial press release, explaining the increase, argued that oil consumption had exceeded 7 per cent in 1985-86 against 5.5 per cent in the preceding five years. Further, the increase in transport fuel had been of the order of between 8.5 and 10 per cent. But the Government's oil companies quietly leaked out their own figures a week later showing that the

PRICING PECADILLOS

Prices of petroleum products and percentage change
(In Rupees)

	Old price	Revised price	% change	New price	net % change
Petrol per litre	7.00	7.54	7.7	7.43	6.14
Diesel per litre	3.39	3.58	5.60	3.50	3.24
Kerosene per litre	2.11	2.34	10.90	2.25	6.60
LPG cylinder	51.35	61.79	20.30	57.62	12.21

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Sa... Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

The opposition parties meeting on February 14 in Delhi: rallying together

What really turned the hike into a political disaster was the fact that the effect of the increase cut across all social boundaries. The middle class, which the Congress(I) had been wooing assiduously, was hit hardest by the increase in the LPG price. The poor were hit the worst by the rise in kerosene.

consumption of petroleum products had, in fact, gone up by only 4.5 per cent.

What really turned the hike into a political disaster was the fact that the effect of the increase cut across all social boundaries. The middle class, which the Congress(I) had been wooing assiduously, was hit hardest by the increase in the LPG price. The poor were hit by the rise in kerosene. Admitted the Madhya Pradesh Congress(I) chief, Digvijaysingh: "The kerosene price increase was the unkindest. A kerosene lamp is the only source of light in tribal homes."

Sensing the popular reaction, the party embarked on its clumsy retraction. The first cry of alarm was reportedly raised by a senior office-bearer of the party on Friday, January 31, the day the hike was announced. By Monday, it seems, the decision had been taken to soften the blow. West Bengal PCC(I) chief Priya Ranjan Das Munshi, met Rajiv that day and told him that the party was having a tough enough time in the state opposing the CPI(M); the latest imposts would make their task much more difficult. Rajiv then told Das Munshi not to worry, that they would be reducing the hike.

It was then that the salvage operation was mounted. The motive was down-to-earth politics, to gain some prestige for the party even if the Government were to lose face, but the approach was amateurish. Union Minister for Parliamentary Affairs and Tourism, H.K.L. Bhagat, met Rajiv the same evening and urged him to reconsider the step, in what was later described as an exercise in "inner party democracy"

THEN, Ahmed Patel, Gujarat PCC(I) chief, reported to be among the three state party chiefs—the others being Mufti Mohammed Syed of Jammu & Kashmir and Dumar Lal Baitha of Bihar—saw Rajiv the day after with the same plea. The news that Patel was reported to be in town came as a big surprise to Patel's wife who rang up journalist friends the next day to confirm if her husband was in town without her knowledge! Kamlapati Tripathi, working president, also issued a strong statement calling the step "unpolitical" and warning that it could "destroy the Congress(I)". But clearly Tripathi did not consider it his duty to do anything more: the very next day he went off to Varanasi for a week-long sojourn.

But there was more to follow. On Wednesday, February 5, the cabinet met in the morning and decided that the prices would be pegged down but the party working committee would be asked to pass a resolution asking the Government to bring them down. Mid-morning, the nine members of the CWC in town were asked to rush to the South Block office of the prime minister and the desired resolution was passed. Absent were Tripathi and Arjun Singh. The Government announcement reducing the prices came a few hours later, with V.P. Singh calling it a case of the Government showing sensitivity to a public demand. The finance minister told INDIA TODAY that the prices were rolled back after ministers promised to neutralise the loss of revenue by cutting unnecessary administrative expenditure.

History of sorts was made that day. It was the first time that the party's highest policy making body had met in the South Block—yet another point of criticism. It was also the first time in Independent India that the CWC prevailed upon the Government to undo even partly a policy decision of this kind. The all-round embarrassment could barely be hidden. Asked if Rajiv as the party president had asked Rajiv the prime minister to take this step, AICC(I) General Secretary G.K. Moopanar said sheepishly: "You can say so if you like." Another General Secretary, Bhagwat Jha Azad, argued that this was a "welcome development in establishing the superiority of the party over the Government" but it wasn't just this known dissident past that made him sound less than convincing.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WHATEVER it may have done to the Government's image, the prices issue has breathed a lease of life in the Opposition which has been long dormant in the absence of a clear cut issue to focus their charge campaign. Even Rajiv had to admit that the Opposition had breathed new life. Said he: "It is good to have the Opposition come to life." Meetings addressed from the same platform, city and state-wide bandhs, even an all-India—the time-honoured manifestations of an opposition taking the issue to the streets, a spectacle so conspicuous by its absence ever since the Rajiv blitzkrieg in the last elections, were back as if summoned by a genie. H.N. Bahuguna put it aptly: "This price increase is like an atom bomb."

Seizing the hour, all opposition parties huddled under the same umbrella, with results that brought cheer. The BJP, the Lok Dal and the Janata Party called a successful Delhi bandh on February 11. The Left parties, supported by other opposition parties, staged a bandh in West Bengal and Tripura the next day. Andhra Chief Minister, N.T.Rama Rao called it "unfortunate and unprincipled" and urged Rajiv to withdraw it, and later called for an opposition conclave. On February 14, all the opposition parties, including the two main Left parties, met under the aegis of the Janata Party to chalk their future course of action. Vajpayee pointed out that this was "the first meeting after the last elections that will be attended by all the opposition parties."

The CPI and the CPI(M), too, were quick to bury their antipathy to the bourgeois parties and to each other, agreeing to join the Janata-sponsored movement and to stage joint demonstrations all over the country on February 20. The National Campaign Committee of Trade Unions, an umbrella body comprising unions across the ideological board, gave a call to the workers and trade unions to "make preparations for a sustained movement" against the Government's economic policies. Said West Bengal Chief Minister Jyoti Basu: "The petrol price hike is the logical outcome of the economic policy being pursued by the Centre. It is their policy to cause distress to as many people as possible." Echoed the BJP's L.K. Advani: "The Government seems determined to hit the common man where it hurts most, the belly."

The Opposition attack on Rajiv had hitherto lacked the sharp edge of personal animosity that they reserved for Mrs Gandhi but there were indications that they could be getting down to bare knuckles. Said Bahuguna: "The elite was taken in by the beautiful faces they saw on TV, not realising that beauty and strength come from within." Said Vajpayee: "Rajiv Gandhi is trying to be a little too smart but nothing can hide the fact that this government has no backbone." Referring to the hamhanded way the Congress(I) leadership orchestrated the intra-party protest against the price, Vajpayee quipped: "The matter is even more serious if the protest, in fact, was not orchestrated."

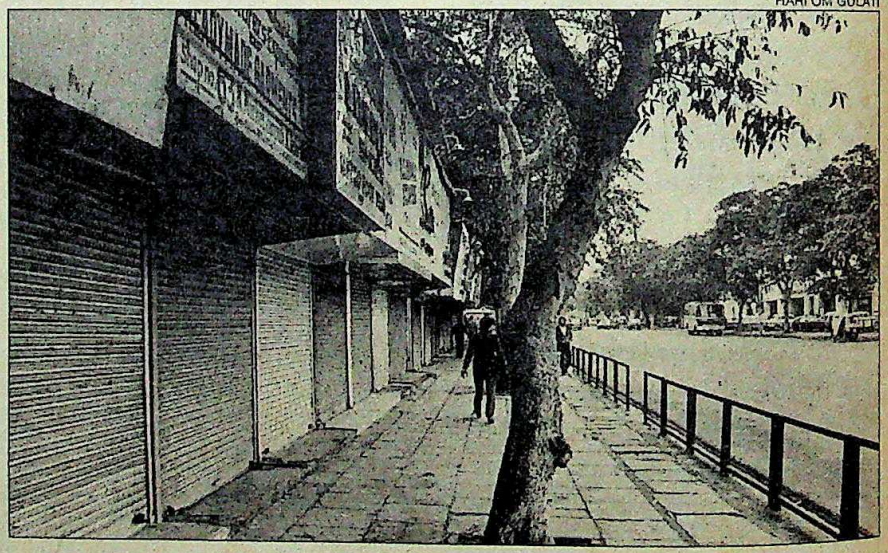
While Rajiv bore the brunt of the criticism over the price policy at the national level he is also taking heat at the state levels because his programmes—particularly critical elements of the 20-point programme—are barely inching forward. This is largely, local party men say, because of a non-responsive local level bureaucracy that pays them no heed. Grassroots politicians—many of them the 'new faces' of Congress(I), are under tremendous pressure from their constituents to perform because they were seen as the harbingers of a new regime. But they complain that many of the "bad image" politicians—some of them were the most accomplished fund raisers for Congress—who were denied tickets still remain influential within the party and are able to "commit" the bureaucracy to themselves to the detriment of the new faces who were to have become Rajiv's new grassroots cadres.

The new politicos have been unable to perform either because of inexperience or because, by the very nature of their being representatives of a new style of politics, they are unable, or unable to use the traditional patronage machines to accomplish administrative chores. They expect, therefore, that their problems will be handled directly by the Prime Minister's Secretariat or by politicians within the PCC's who will be able to wield the Rajiv "stick". But this 'stick', many of them have discovered to their chagrin, does not exist because the prime minister's office is often non-responsive, and the PCC's are too busily engaged in their own power struggles to be of any use.

And herein lies the crux of Rajiv's dilemma. He remains essentially unchanged, dedicated to change and of accomplishing his mission without politicising the process. But the country remains in the grip of old-style politics functioning to the age-old drumbeat of party bosses and political payoffs. Much of the resentment he has aroused, much of the opposition, even cynical glee that has ridden in tandem with news of the Government's fumbles, is because the system is under pressure to change—and it is resisting. Idealism, for the lack of which, nobody, not even his foes fault Rajiv, then becomes a lonely, Quixotic adventure.

"But Rajiv has got to recognise," a friendly MP says in despair, "that all democratic parties are, in essence, vehicles of patronage. Even hallowed stalwarts of the party, Gobind Ballabh Pant, Rafi Ahmed Kidwai, were well-versed in this game. Not everybody is a nationalist and motivated by idealism. You have to know how to commit people to yourself so that they do the right thing."

HARI OM GULATI

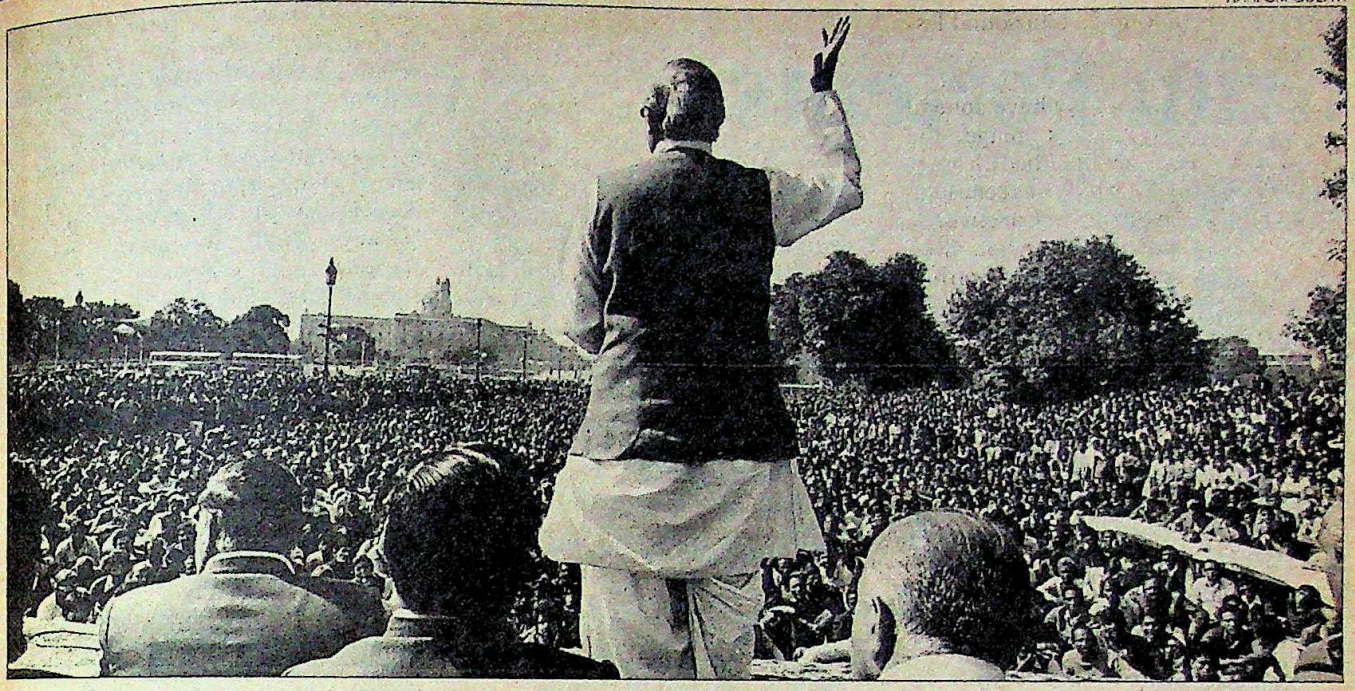


Shuttered shops on the day of the bandh in Delhi: resounding success

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HARI OM GULATI



Vajpayee addressing the public meeting convened by the Opposition: wide support

> The prices issue has breathed a lease of life in the Opposition which has been long dormant in the absence of a clear cut issue to focus their campaign. Seizing the hour, all opposition parties are huddled under the same umbrella.

Rajiv's hatred for, and the demise of, the old-fashioned party boss—with no structure to replace him—has led to a situation, one senior Congress(I) minister believes, "where everybody is the boss and nobody is the boss. In the old days, a state level party boss was totally in command. He made decisions. He took both the praise and the flak. But today nobody is totally responsible for any one area. So every pradesh committee chief runs to the Centre for the slightest thing and the Central apparatus seems to have no machinery to deal with this situation."

Ultimately, it is the demand and tempo of the world of realpolitik that are Rajiv's biggest enemies. Because he refuses to let them cramp his style in which politics is still a dirty word, the world of politics comes back with a vengeance to cramp his initiatives. He has made some compromises: some of his cabinet colleagues do not enjoy the highest of public reputations yet they find a berth in his ministry because he needs hands who are used to piloting the ship. In a sense he has declared war simultaneously on all fronts: against inefficient and corrupt bureaucrats, law-breaking businessmen as well as self-serving politicians. Unfortunately, the battle takes innocent victims with it and the resentment is multiplied.

Rajiv faces a political quandary. Much as he would like to, he cannot do without the very people he wants changed. The Congress(I), for instance, which has long been dominated by self-seeking politicians, and the bureaucracy which either resists change or is determined to continue in its unresponsive, slothful way. His Cabinet is not exactly sparkling with talent. The tragedy of his speech at the centenary celebrations is not that he made it and alienated a substantial part of party and government at one stroke but that it should have had to be made at all.

Signs of party revolt are yet mere straws in the wind. But as one state Congress(I) chief warned: "There is going to be a split before the organisational elections if a couple of more disasters like the petroleum products hike are repeated. The disgruntled elements would definitely have left the party were they not unsure that their future outside the party is any better than inside; and were it not for the anti-defection bill, they will ask for their pound of flesh if they see that the overall situation is getting bad. Such people are only waiting for an opportunity to strike."

But there is support for the prime minister's new direction as well. Says political commentator Cho Ramaswamy: "Rajiv's glitter was because of the rays of his fresh approach. But now his posture is one of oscillation between these rays and the darkness of the beaten track. It will be a pity if he abandons the new path that he has been following. Rajiv Gandhi must also show that he is firm, because our people want to be ruled and not just governed."

That new approach isn't likely to be given up in a hurry. The honeymoon lasted longer than most people in government expected it to, and it was clear that if the minute hard decisions were taken there would be a reaction. Major policies have only been unveiled and it will be some time before their impact is felt and dividends collected. The engineering on the party has only just begun and it will take time for the bureaucracy to respond to the impulses being directed at it. But ultimately it is not one or two bungled decisions or a delayed accord or even a state lost in the Assembly elections that will determine whether the faded glitter has vanished for good. It will be an electorate's assessment of five years of governance that will eventually deliver the verdict on that.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR and AJAY KUMAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB

Grim Portents

IN PUNJAB history seems set to repeat itself; this time as an even greater tragedy. There is no Bhindranwale but the similarities with the pre-Operation Bluestar are frightening. Terrorists strike with impunity: over the last fortnight itself they killed 10 people, including three Akali moderates, in over a dozen incidents across the state. Extremists are back in command at the Golden Temple: the demolition of the Akal Takht under the supervision of the leaders of the Damdami Taksal and the All-India Sikh Students' Federation (AISSF) is complete and its rebuilding is imminent. The Akali Government tried and failed to reason with the extremists and seemed set on a collision course. Suddenly, there was talk of another Bluestar but nobody was sure it would help. There were just no ready answers: seven months after the historic Rajiv-Longowal accord Punjab was back to square one. (Also see special feature on page 90).

The Akalis and SGPC bent over backwards to reason with the hotheads in the Golden Temple and when they got nowhere, capitulated—changing the venue of their February 16 sarbat khalsa from the temple to the Gurudwara Keshgarh Sahib at Anandpur Sahib. A stream of mediators ferried to and from Amritsar: including Akali leaders like Sukhjinder Singh, Raja Narinder Singh MLA, Deputy Speaker Narinder Singh Kahlon and Akali Patrika editor Ratnesh Singh Sodhi.

Chief Minister S.S. Barnala rushed to Amritsar, ostensibly to bolster the morale of his partymen but clearly hoping for a fruitful meeting with Mohkam Singh, the acting chief of the Taksal. The meeting came to nought. "We know Sikhs are with us and we shall show it on sarbat khalsa day but we want to avoid strike and blood shed," said Finance Minister Balwant Singh who accompanied him.

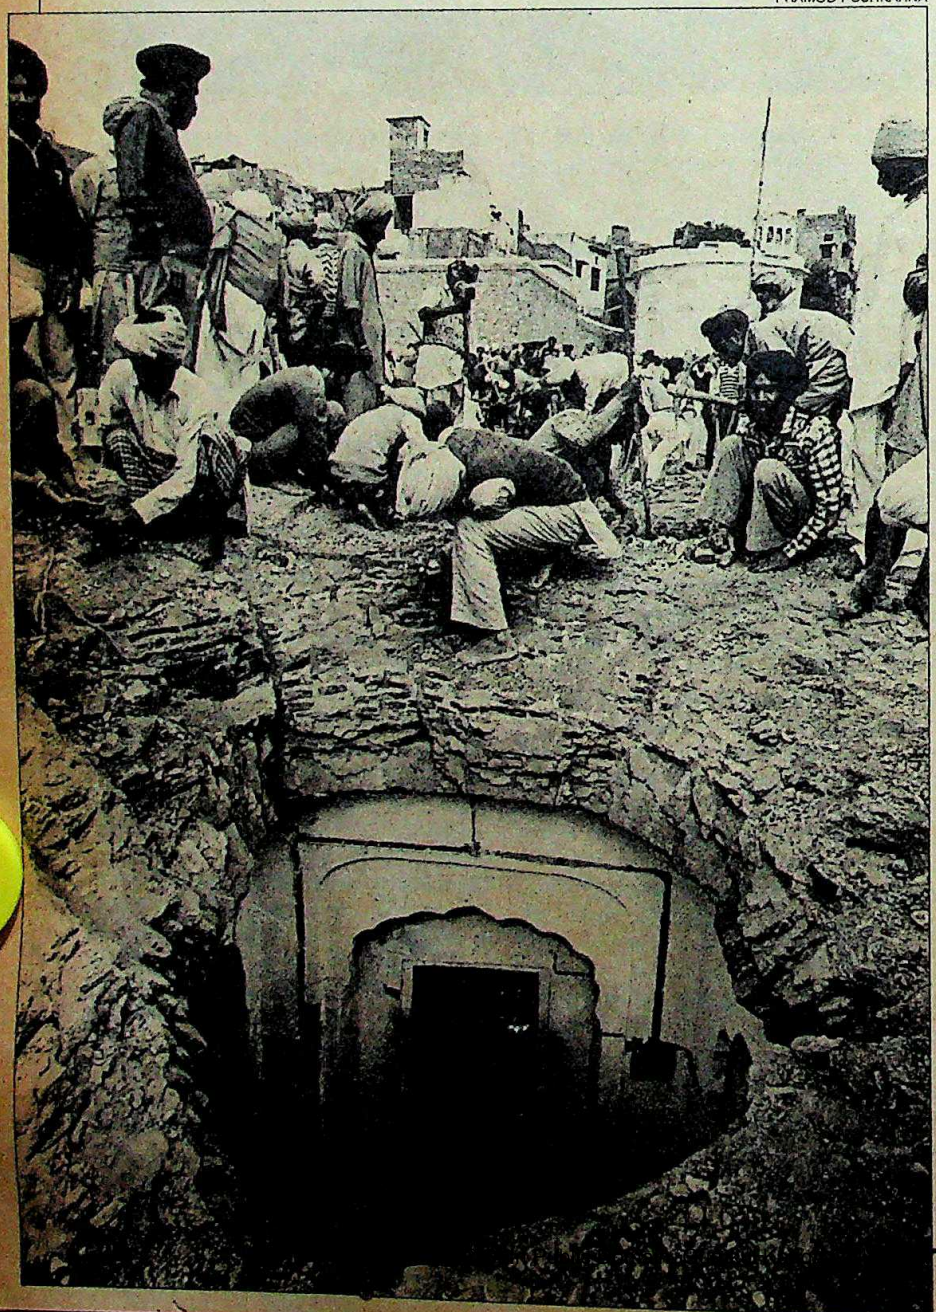
Supporters of Gurcharan Singh Tohra, president of the SGPC, including Health Minister Basant Singh Khalsa and Revenue Minister Major Singh Uboke who were opposed to the sarbat khalsa, also tried to bring the Taksal around. Tohra even offered to resign and hold fresh elections to the SGPC. Ironically enough, the post that he has clung on to for the last 13 years has now become the proverbial millstone around his neck.

On their part, the Akali leaders suggested that Jathedar Kirpal Singh, head priest of the Akal Takht, and the four other high priests should be reinstated but that all five head priests would quit after three months and the new SGPC would decide about the new priests. Alternatively, a committee of both sides would take charge of the temple till the elections.

But the Taksal leaders were unmoved. Argued Mohkam Singh: "All these days groups of people have been coming here to sort out the differences but we ask them, what (is there) to sort out ? We are only doing kar seva here and no power on earth can take that right away from us. Barnala should mind his government and fulfil the promises he made to the people instead of dabbling in the religious affairs of Sikhs."

The Taksal's followers think that the Dal's leaders have corrupted the SGPC by infesting it with their own factional infighting. The Akal Takht chief, they say, should be appointed by a sarbat khalsa and should present his accounts twice a year, on Baisakhi and Diwali. Said one Taksal follower: "We have made the sacrifices. Our people faced bullets. Tohra,

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



Demolition of the Akal Takht (left); and removal of the foundation stone: fait accompli

Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Longowal and company ran away. What business do they have in this complex ?"

It was in this backdrop that a harmless accident was fanned into a communal confrontation in Nakodar, a peaceful agricultural market town, 25 km west of Jalandhar. Five copies of the Guru Granth Sahib were partially damaged in an accidental fire on the morning of February 3 in the Guru Arjun Dev Gurudwara. When the gurudwara priest Sukhchain Singh shouted for help, Hindus joined Sikhs in dousing the fire in a brief 20 minutes.

Singh and the sub-divisional magistrate S.S. Rajput then arranged a vehicle to take the holy books to Goindwal. The plan was to consign them into the Beas river and replace them with other copies. Before the plan could be made operational, a procession was taken out by a faction of the Akalis, tension mounted and by evening came curfew.

NEXT DAY all hell broke loose. United Akali Dal leader Baba Joginder Singh and AISSF activists appeared on the scene. While the Baba was kept away, about 800 federation's activists armed with lethal weapons and firearms started moving into the curfew bound town. Over 150 police and CRPF men under the command of a superintendent of police first teargassed the militants and later opened fire, killing four, including Jalandhar district convener of the AISSF Harminder Singh.

While the police maintain that they had no option but to open fire, the federation alleges that the police had acted brutally. Said Jalandhar SP Mohammad Izhar Alam, who was later transferred: "The students were armed and had opened fire, injuring three policemen. If we had allowed them to enter the town that would have lead to communal clashes." But federation leader Kulwant Singh countered: "We only wanted to visit the gurudwara and were totally peaceful. Police began first teargassing and then indiscriminate firing."

The situation turned even messier with the Government showing amazing insensitivity in doing post-mortems and stealthily cremating the bodies instead of handing them to the families. Akali MLA's Kuldip Singh Wadala, Surinder Pal Singh and the high priest of Anandpur Sahib, Harcharan Singh Mahlon, went on a dharna seeking suspension of police officials and a judicial probe.

A rattled Barnala rushed Balwant Singh to Nakodar. A judicial probe was ordered and seven senior police officers were shifted including Jalandhar Range DIG, M.S.Bhullar, Alam and Surjit Singh. One inspector was suspended. " It was distressing and unfortunate to cremate the four youths in the absence of their kith and kin," Barnala admitted, though district police officials insisted they had acted on instructions from Chandigarh.

While the decision satisfied his irate partymen, the AISSF convenor Harinder Singh Kahlon rejected the judicial probe even as Joginder Singh began his dharna at the site of the firing. Demanded Kahlon: "The police officials responsible for the killings of these youths are criminals and should be arrested on murder charges."

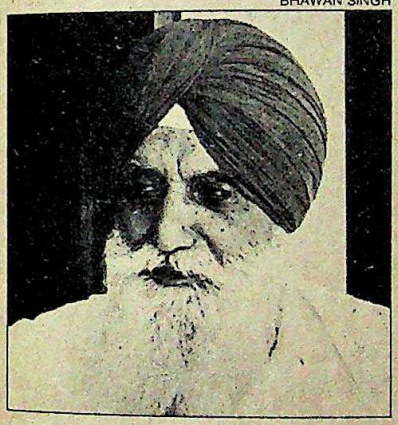
But it was soon evident that Nakodar was only the beginning. Worse followed.

► Pro-Akali student leader Jatinder Singh Ghuman was killed by two scooter-borne terrorists in his village of Ghumankalan near Dhariwal in terrorist-infested Gurdaspur. Ghuman was a moderate, aligned with the pro-Akali Dal faction of the AISSF and was active in preparations for the February 16 sarbat khalsa. The Dashmesh Regiment took the credit.

► A day later, Satinderpal Singh, 17, son of SGPC general secretary Onkar Singh Matenangal, was gunned down by four terrorists at his house. Matenangal was then mediating between the Akalis and the Damdami Taksal in the Golden Temple complex. "I was pleading with the Damdami Taksal leaders to avoid confrontation and bloodshed in the complex while my son was being killed by the terrorists," wailed Matenangal.

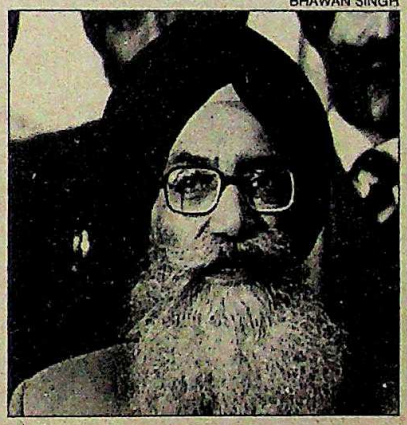
► Prominent Akali leader and SGPC member, Dalip Singh, 55, of Ferozepore was gunned down in his village Malowal

BHAWAN SINGH



G.S. Tohra

BHAWAN SINGH



S.S. Barnala

Today the wily Tohra is even more isolated than Barnala. The Taksal and AISSF have placed him in a tight spot; but he cannot risk asking Barnala to use force against the hotheads.

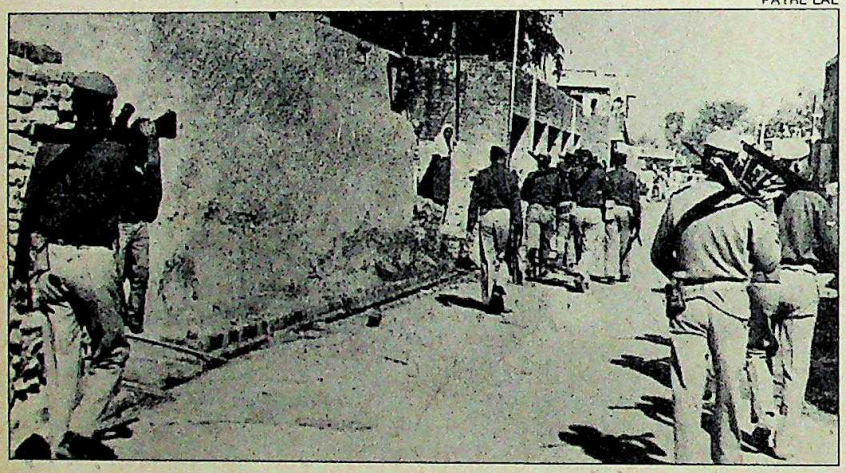
PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PAYRE LAL

PAYRE LAL



AISSF demonstrators in Jalandhar (above); and para-military forces in Nakodar: tense situation

Jadid when he opened the door to two terrorists who pretended they had come to seek his help in a court case.

► At least seven others were killed in acts of random, senseless violence. Two suspected terrorists on a scooter with mufflers covering their faces attacked a tea-shop near the canal bridge across Tarsikka village in Amritsar and killed a local Congress(I) leader, Hari Shah.

► The day the AISSF called for a state-level bandh, sudden violence claimed two persons, Nazar Singh and Sher Singh, at Khai Premaki village, 5 km from Ferozepore. The two were waiting for the bus when a bomb exploded. The same day a room at Gill railway station on the Ludhiana-Dhuri section was set on fire by four young men carrying swords with their faces hidden behind mufflers. In Pathankot a portion of the Kiran theatre was blown up. Luckily, no one was injured as the blast took place some time after the last show.

Clearly, Barnala must be the loneliest chief minister in the country today. On the one hand, extremists were limiting his options and on the other there was evidence that the Centre was getting somewhat restless. When Mohkam Singh wanted an assurance from Barnala that he should get all the 379 Sikhs detained in Jodhpur released, Barnala answered that this would not be possible unless the violence stopped.

However, the decision to shift the sight of the sarbat khalsa—taken after a four-hour meeting attended by Jathedar Kirpal Singh and the other four high priests—has been welcomed. Although the decision gave the militants a tactical victory of sorts, the more sober Sikh masses, who so far have backed the Akali Dal and the SGPC, were relieved.

But the militants were typically arrogant in their hour of victory. Said Kahlon dismissively: "In any case we do not recognise Kirpal Singh." Calling the move to shift the sarbat khalsa "childish", Mohkam Singh said: "We do not compromise with these traitors of the panth."

Undeniably, the fundamentalists now have a clearly discernible base. The back-bone of the Taksal and the AISSF are the sons and daughters of Punjab's middle and low-level peasantry and agriculture workers. The four students killed at Nakodar came from the lower rungs of the peasantry. The challenge to the Akali and SGPC leadership, which is dominated by leaders from the Malwa region, comes from what was once its base—the small and middle peasants. The socio-economic roots of the Taksal and AISSF leaders are totally different from that of Barnala, Badal, Balwant, Ravi Inder and Amrinder Singh, all of whom come from the landed gentry classes of the state.

Till the 1960s, the communists were the major influence on the small and middle peasants. Then came Tohra, a small peasant himself who started off as a left wing leader and then became a pro-establishment leader. And after Tohra became the SGPC chief in 1973, he has been the manipulator par excellence.

Today, the wily Tohra is even more isolated than Barnala. The Taksal and AISSF leaders have placed him in a tight spot: as the head of the SGPC, the takeover of the Golden Temple is a slap on his face but Tohra cannot even take the risk of asking Barnala to use force on the hotheads. For once, the fox of Punjab's politics seems to have been outfoxed. "The tragedy with the Akalis is that they do not have even a single acceptable senior leader who could have sobering affect," says Congress leader Darshan Singh Chaudhry.

Just as in the pre-Operation Bluestar days, there seemed to be no easy solution in sight. Warned Jaswant Singh Kanwal, a noted Punjabi writer in the leading Punjabi daily, The Ajit: "The rulers in Delhi must honestly assess the situation, talk to the real leaders of the Sikhs and stop interfering in our religious affairs. No monkey business with Sikhs in Punjab if the Centre wants to retain Punjab in India." There was no evidence to support the charge of Central interference in the religious affairs of Sikhs or of the Centre being up to any "monkey business"; as for the rest of the contentions, it was difficult to argue with them. But for the moment, Delhi seemed content to leave the solution to the new and dangerous developments in Punjab to its elected representatives.

—GOBIND THUKRAL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Give her the gift of time

Remember when you had just married. She always seemed to be waiting for you to come home. Peeping out shyly. Surrounded by her new family.

Remember that first movie you took her to. The long walks ... Spending hours together. Getting to know each other. Those were the good times.

Then came parenthood. Astonishing the amount of work and time small infants demand.

Suddenly, she had no time left. Between the nappies and the midnight feeds she fit in the cooking for 3-meals-a-day. Shopped daily, to not waste a thing. Washed. Cleaned. Ironed. Stitched. Looked after your parents. Even you!

Now that you can afford it ... give her the one gift she hasn't had for years. Give her the gift of time. Bring home a Kelvinator. And bring back the good times.

Bring home happiness
Bring home a

Kelvinator®
Refrigerator

Sold & serviced by :

Expo Machinery Limited

Pragati Tower, 26, Rajindra Place,
New Delhi-110 008.

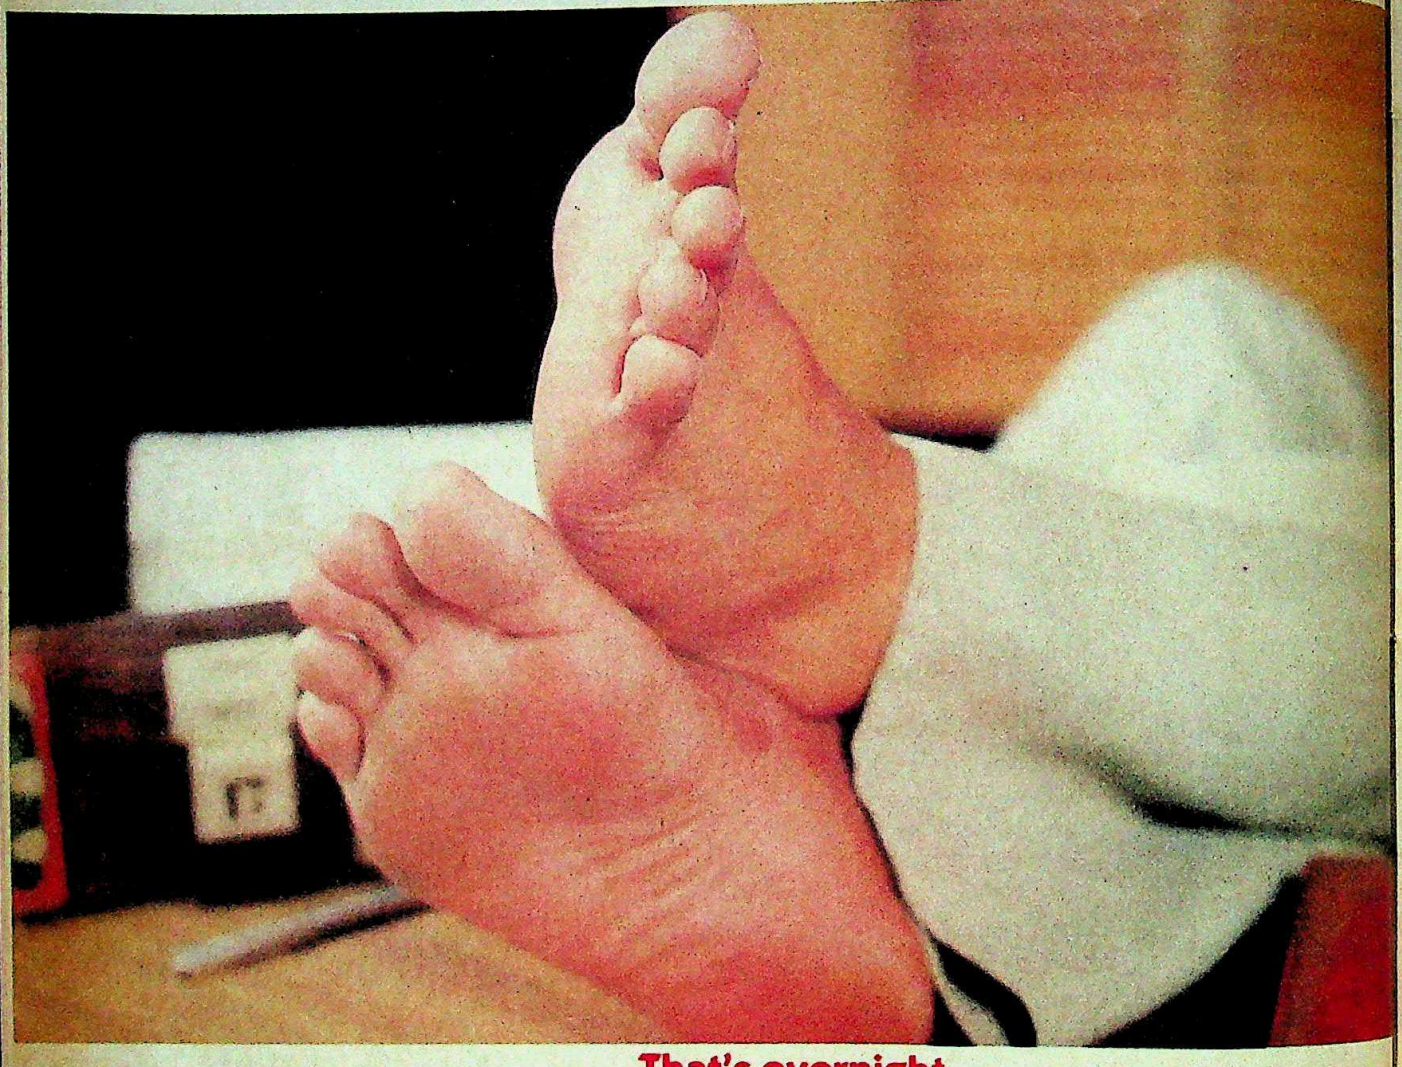
BRANCHES :
New Delhi, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, Ahmedabad, Alwar, Bangalore, Bhopal, Bhubaneshwar, Chandigarh, Cochin, Dhanbad, Ghaziabad, Hyderabad, Jaipur, Kanpur, Kundli (Haryana), Patna, Vijayawada, Visakhapatnam.

Munzal-4177

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

One worldwide family is on its toes. So that you can sweep your worries off your desk!



That's overnight Skypak service for you!

What does it take to put up your feet and relax? Well, when you have a load on your chest it's not easy. That load could be a small parcel, or a document. Which has to physically reach a certain destination, across a distance, within a next-to-impossible time!

Then it takes TNT Skypak. The most reputed courier service in the world. With 200 offices around the globe. And the nearest one to you just a phone call away!

The moment you dial the local Skypak number and hear a friendly 'hello' a chain is set in motion. A chain that unites as many as 26000 men and women in 48 countries! All of them on their toes!

So, by the time you replace your receiver you can put your feet up. Right on your table.

SKYPAK

when it's wanted yesterday!

203 Jolly Bhavan No 2, 7 New Marine Lines, Bombay 400 020 Phone: 253703, 294454
Telex: 011 3339 SAI IN

• Ahmedabad: 443053 • Bangalore: 568862 • Baroda: 552285 • Bhubaneshwar 53456/55164 • Bombay: 294454/6320881 • Calcutta: 443532 • Cochin: 69012 • Delhi: 6414830 • Gandhidham: 3414 • Hosur 2373 • Hyderabad: 38237 • Kandla: 7437 • Madras: 474569/475091 • Mangalore: 24444 • Mapusa: 2440 • Margao: 2477 • Mysore 24444 • Pune: 54595 • Panjim: 5763 • Ranchi: 20055 • Trivandrum: 65261 • Vasco: 2403 • Visakhapatnam: 62223.

TNT SKYPAK
THE WORLDWIDE COURIERS

Please note: We don't carry non-commercial and personal material.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ask your tongue what it wanted all along

Tasty food cooked in good vanaspati

Your tongue knows the sheer joy of biting into a crunchy soft Samosa or a luscious Gulab Jamun that only a pure vanaspati can create. You now have that exclusive ingredient to bring out the sweet creaminess in a Gulab Jamun or add that special spicy flavour to a Samosa.

Himalaya Vanaspati is made the way you have always wanted it. That Gentle Purity makes your food come through with all its natural taste—without compromising on its nutritious quality. The pure vegetable oils used, provide a healthy balance to your food.

HIMALAYA
Vanaspati

Available in 1, 2 & 5 Kg. polyjar and 15 Kg. in tin under brand name of SOYA-SONA.

Mfd. by:
Soyabean & Vanaspati Industries Complex
HALDUCHAUR (NAINITAL)
A unit of
U.P. Cooperative Federation Ltd.,
32, Station Road, Lucknow (U.P.)

Gentle purity your food deserves.

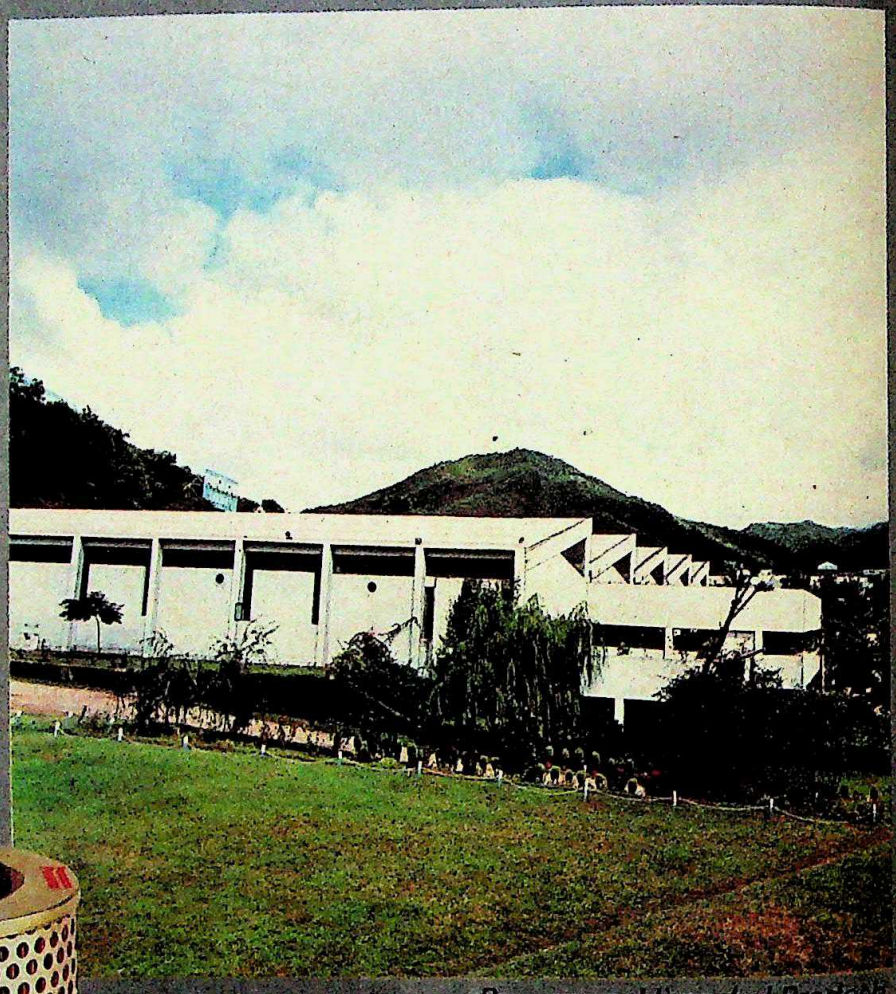
a pcf product

PAC/PCF

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Purolator—India's largest manufacturer of automotive filters.



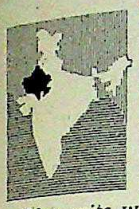
Parwanoo. Himachal Pradesh

CC-0 [illegible]. Digitized by eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAJASTHAN

Sudden Exits

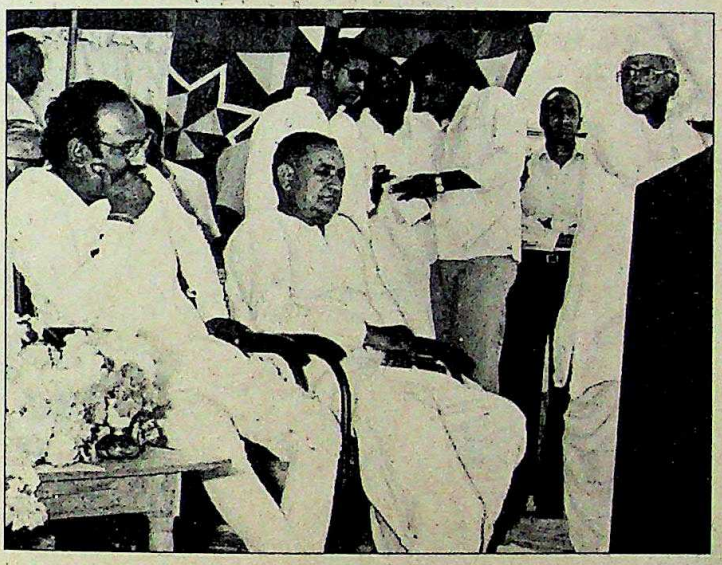


LESS THAN a year after the formation of the Harideo Joshi Ministry, Rajasthan saw its first major political upset on February 7 when two ministers made their sudden exits within hours of one another. Minister of state for Animal Husbandry Ram Singh Vishnoi, 50, after 13 years as a legislator, lost his job four months after he got it for the first time. And cabinet minister for the Indira Gandhi Canal and Tourism, Narendra Singh Bhati, 41, established the odd distinction of finding himself without his ministry twice within three years. Bhati refused to comment on the developments, laconically dismissing it as "a purely party affair," but a clearly crestfallen Vishnoi said despairingly: "How can I fight fate?"

Bhati's exit—whether resignation or dismissal—was the more sudden of the two. It was also more important since he is widely believed to be close to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and Union Minister of State for Defence, Arun Singh. Proof of his right contacts comes from his rapid rise in just six years to cabinet minister, in spite of having been unseated once by former chief minister Shiv Charan Mathur in July 1983. Interestingly, Bhati and Vishnoi both hail from Jodhpur district, and are known to be in the camp that opposes Ashok Gehlot, the RPCC(I) president, who is also from Jodhpur. The chief minister and Gehlot may well have combined together to unseat Bhati.

The high-flying Bhati has long been controversial. To start with, he is radically different from the run of the mill Congressmen. His wealthy family background—he is related to Jodhpur royalty; his public school education; his connections; he spent a week with the Gandhis when they holidayed at the Ranthambhor National Park—and his effortless rise have all contributed to his opponents describing him as arrogant and overambitious. Said a senior legislator: "The Congress(I) has always been a bundle of contradictions but Bhati still has to fully accept this fact; he still has to adjust to the party culture."

It is no secret that Bhati has long had problems with Joshi himself. The first notes of discord between them were struck in July last year on the floor of the Assembly. The signing of the Punjab accord in New Delhi and Rajasthan's mention in the settlement stirred fears that the state's share in the Ravi-Beas waters would be adversely affected. The chief minister dashed off a strongly-worded telex to Rajiv expressing his fears. In an unprecedented situation, the ruling party and the Opposition came close to signing a joint memorandum of protest to the prime minister.



Bhati, Vishnoi and Joshi (standing): tense atmosphere

But Bhati stood up in the house and opposed the move, maintaining that the state's interests would not be hurt. Queried a Joshi supporter: "Where was the need for Bhati to contradict the chief minister? Did he think that a seasoned politician like Joshi did not know what he was doing? Bhati was just trying to show that he was more loyal than Joshi." It didn't help matters when Joshi did an about turn soon after and acknowledged that Rajiv would take care of Rajasthan's interests.

The tension became more apparent at an emergency cabinet meeting called on January 26 to discuss the implications of the appointment of a tribunal to decide on the sharing of the Ravi-Beas waters. When a senior engineer briefing the minister took a pessimistic view—which Bhati apparently thought amounted to dismissing Rajiv's assurances—Bhati sought Joshi's permission and stalked out of the meeting. It is also known that Bhati was unhappy over the fact that he did not have any executive control over the engineers on the Indira Gandhi Canal since they continued to be on deputation from the Irrigation Ministry. Moreover, the irrigation minister is Gulab Singh Shaktawat, known to be Joshi's right-hand man.

Bhati's choice of Bagor Haveli, in the lake city of Udaipur, as the venue for the Western Regional Cultural Centre to be inaugurated by Rajiv on February 21, also created friction between the two. Joshi's supporters charge that Bhati took this decision without consulting the chief minister on an issue that involved not just Rajasthan, but three other states as well. While a situation in which Joshi nor Bhati wanted to work with the other was clearly emerging, his exit was nonetheless sudden.

Vishnoi, on the other hand, had been embroiled in a controversy raised by the media which charged him with torturing his daughter Indra, to force her into accepting her husband from a marriage when she was seven years old (INDIA TODAY February 15). Though he appeared to be surviving the fortnight-long attack, Joshi summoned Vishnoi on February 7 on his return from Delhi and told him that the high command was not satisfied by his explanations and his resignation would be in order.

But as Joshi's critics point out, while Vishnoi was asked to go, Rampal Upadhyay, cabinet minister for rural development and panchayati raj, who had taken his second 'wife' to the US on state expense was spared. While it is too early to predict the political fallout of the exits, observers feel that the still waters of Rajasthan Congress(I) politics are bound to get stormy. Joshi may find that his partymen may not be as pliable as they have been. —SREEKANT KHANDEKAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MAHARASHTRA

Election Upset

IT HAS long been believed that any candidate put up by Vasantrao Patil would win at a canter in Sangli. So when the Congress(I) chose his nephew, Vishwanath Shamrao Patil, for the Feburary 2 by-election, all bets laid locally were only on the margin of his victory. In the event, the defeat of Patil's nephew by the common opposition candidate, Sambhaji Pawar of the Janata Party, not only came as a shock to the people of Sangli but sent ripples of disbelief all the way to Bombay and Delhi.

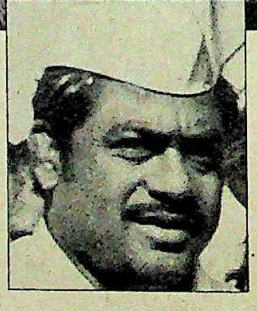
Though the humiliation for the ruling party was somewhat offset by the victory of its candidate in the other by-election held the same day at Javli in the state's Satara district, the Sangli result was enough cause for concern. This was the first election the Congress has lost in Sangli. Last year Vasantrao Patil had won by 30,000 votes; his nephew lost by 2,631 votes. Expectedly, party bigwigs lost no time in passing the buck. In a statement from Jaipur, Patil claimed that the election-eve hike in the prices of petroleum products was responsible for the shock defeat in the 'urban' constituency of Sangli.

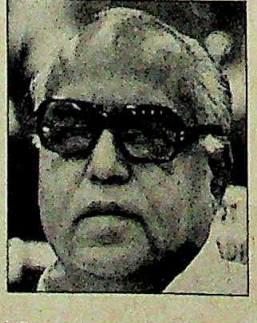
Vishwanath Patil, closetted in the sugar factory's guest-house with cousin Prakash and son Madan seemed to agree. "The reasons for the defeat have yet to be investigated, but the oil price hike a day before the poll certainly affected the result," he said.

But state party chief, Prabha Rau, a known opponent of Vasantdada Patil, reportedly told the high command that wrong choice of the candidate was responsible. Patil is the chairman of a family-controlled thriving cooperative factory, but a novice to electoral politics.

Local partymen agreed with Rau's assessment. "The people were upset at the manner a member of the family was nominated, that is why the Congress lost the elections," said Maruti Mane, 48, and former Olympic wrestler and Rajya Sabha MP.

However, Charubhai Shah, Congress(I) campaign manager for all elections in Sangli since 1952, maintained that "internal dissension" was the only reason for the party's defeat. "Two or three MP's worked against the party candidate," he said. But Mane, who admitted that he was an aspirant for the party ticket, denied the charge. Insisting that he had worked hard for the party, he complained: "People were not prepared to listen this time."





Janata victory procession and (inset right) Pawar; and Patil: shock-waves

The public support for Pawar—over 30,000 people joined his victory procession—has the Patil camp naturally worried. For Pawar has been in the forefront of the campaign started in 1983 against alleged land-grabbing by Vasantdada Patil's henchmen. Pawar claims that he had exposed 29 landgrab cases involving land worth Rs 50 crore.

Last month the Lok Ayukta ruled in favour of the first of Pawar's complaints. After Patil became chief minister in 1983, a local Congressman, Sham Gavli, was given, partly on the chief minister's recommendation, a 99-year-lease on nearly 9,000 sq ft of prime municipal land for constructing a tamasha dance theatre. The land was part of an 18,000-sq ft vacant plot next to the municipal council office in the heart of the city, and was reserved for expansion of the municipal offices. The Lok Ayukta absolved Patil of any responsibility in the deal but asked for action against the then collector and Sangli's municipal administrator.

Pawar, a former state wrestling champion and owner of one of the city's thriving gymnasiums, made the land scandals a major issue in his election campaign. None of the 10 cases before the Lok Ayukta and the courts directly implicate Patil's immediate family members but the campaign has gone on long enough to tarnish his image as a benefactor of the poor. Now a commission headed by a retired high court judge is to inquire into the land deals.

In the past also, opposition parties had come together to try and humble the unquestioned strongman of Sangli. Finally they have succeeded but as with all such victories in traditional Congress(I) strongholds not without a little bit of help from allies in the Congress(I) camp. There were even reports that the high command may not have been unhappy that Patil had been humbled. Undeniably, Sangli will mark a milestone in the history of Maharashtra politics. What it does to the future of the Patil family remains to be seen.

—M. RAHMAN in Sangli

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's a small world.

And Air-India makes sure it stays that way!

Air-India has an extensive network that spans over 40 cities across five continents. Every important city of business or pleasure is within a flight or two of each other on a modern fleet of wide-bodied 747 and A300 aircraft.

Aboard, the fabled Indian hospitality makes the going great. Exotic interiors, gracious sari-clad hostesses who welcome you with the 'namaskaar'—a traditional Indian greeting. A choice of exclusive Continental and Indian cuisine, inflight movies and music.

The Air-India network...unrivalled!

AIR-INDIA

The airline that treats you like a Maharajah

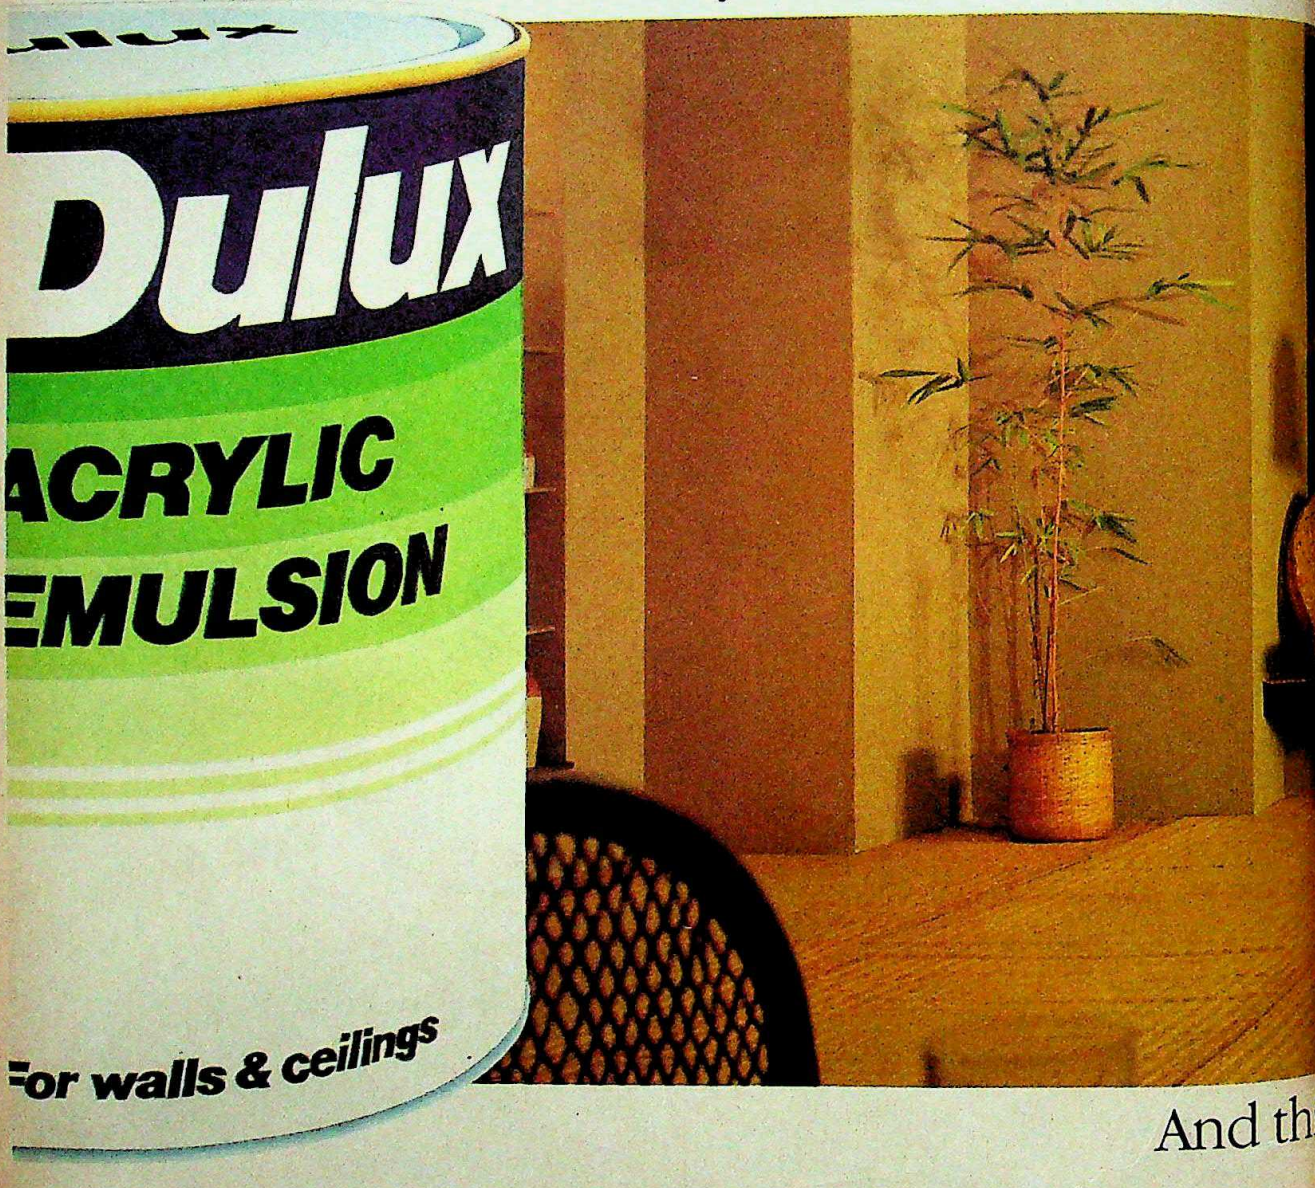
AIR-1972

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DURABILITY
COVERAGE
WASHABILITY
COLOUR RANGE

Only one Acrylic Emulsion puts



And this on yo

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

sion puts all these in the can.

d thon your walls...that unique Dulux finish.

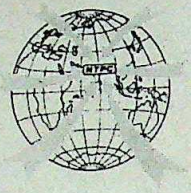
Only Dulux 'years ahead' world-wide paint technology can give you a complete wall finish—Dulux Acrylic Emulsion. More value for your money. More coverage per litre. An exciting range of colours. And, looks that can be easily washed to stay new. Talking of looks, that's a beautiful surprise for you. You'd never expect an acrylic emulsion to give you such a rich finish. But then, that's the magic of Dulux Acrylic Emulsion. Unmatchable.

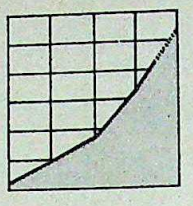
The magic of Dulux. No one else has it!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Rs. 3000 crore in assistance from The World Bank, the largest ever to any single organisation in the world...





A mammoth profit of Rs. 87.54 crore in just the fourth year of operation...

That speaks volumes for our creditworthiness and performance.

Now, build a powerful bond with a prosperous future...

Announcing

NTPC generates more than power. It generates high productivity–and high profits too ! In 1984-85, NTPC climaxed a decade of distinction with a profit almost 95% higher than that of the previous year. From Rs. 4.51 crore in 1982-83 to Rs. 44.90 crore in 1983-84 to Rs. 87.54 crore in 1984-85. That sums up NTPC's progress in prifitability.

Financial Achievements
Impressive too is its growth in other areas. From 1983-84 to 1984-85: sales shot up 132% from Rs. 139 crore to Rs. 323 crore; gross block increased 45% from Rs. 920 crore to Rs. 1336 crore; reserves and surplus expanded from Rs. 50 crore to Rs. 140 crore.

Excellence In Management
One of the finest tributes to NTPC performance came from Mr. A.W. Clausen, President of The World Bank: "You are on time, you are within budget and you are generating profits . . . all characteristics that The World Bank likes to be associated with . . . NTPC, in its record, has demonstrated very clearly what a standard of excellence in management should be." Significantly, The World Bank has so far committed over Rs. 3000 crore to NTPC projects–the largest assistance ever given by the Bank to any single organisation in the world. Notably too, the aggregate international financing for NTPC stands at around Rs. 4,800 crore, which is nearly 50% of the total approved investment of the Company.

Human Resources Development
Behind NTPC's phenomenal success is a team of highly qualified, trained and experienced professionals, specialised in every branch of power management. NTPC has its Centre for Education in Power Management–now being expanded in the areas of Consultancy, Training and Research.

Now . . . NTPC Power Bonds
With 7 thermal power projects on-going and 5 more on the anvil, NTPC would need, additional funds to help finance its ambitious growth plans. The Company is therefore all set to enter the capital market with a public issue of 14% Secured Bonds of Rs. 1000 each–aggregating Rs. 100 crore. It is indeed a mark of confidence in the Company's performance and potential that the Government should select NTPC as the first public sector unit to go truly "Public".

An outstanding investment opportunity, NTPC Power Bonds offer many unique benefits: a choice of cumulative or non-cumulative interest schemes; interest from Day One; total exemption from Wealth Tax; no tax deduction at source whatever the interest amount be; tax exemption on interest income under Section 80L; advance warrants for interest on due dates; buy back arrangement; redemption at par after 7 years . . .

Public Issue of 14% Secured Redeemable 10,00,000 Power Bonds of Rs. 1000/- each

NTPC National Thermal Power Corporation Ltd.
नेशनल थर्मल पावर कारपोरेशन
NTPC Square, 62-63 Nehru Place, New Delhi-110019

Managers to the Issue

STATE BANK OF INDIA Merchant Banking Division

The Merchant Banking Division of The Industrial Credit and Investment Corporation of India Limited.

Issue Opens on FEBRUARY 12, 1986

Sobhagya/74/86

Invest in Power–invest in NTPC Power Bonds

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BOMBAY

Tall Order

BOMBAY's most famous skyscraper scrap appeared to be coming to an end last month when the Anti-Corruption Bureau (ACB) filed a First Information Report (FIR) against the promoters of the Pratibha Cooperative Housing Society Ltd., as well as the officials who are alleged to have helped them fiddle survey records so as to allow the society to build eight floors, or nearly 30,000 sq ft more than it was legally entitled to.

Side by side, the Supreme Court rejected two petitions from the society and flat owners, finally clearing the way for the first stroke of the demolition hammer on the city's tallest and most luxurious apartment building, where each 3,000 sq ft flat goes for about Rs 1.5 crore, and where, among other well-heeled people, Lata Mangeshkar and Asha Bhosale are reported to own flats.

It's been a long hard haul for both sides, the promoters and flat-owners as well as the corporation and the Bombay Environmental Action Group (BEAG). Says Shyam Chainani of the BEAG: "We spent a lot of time and money on the case because we knew that winning it was crucial for our cause—saving Bombay from the builders." A municipal official, asked when the corporation would start demolition, says he wouldn't know, but added that "this will probably give us one more headache, but it's worth it".

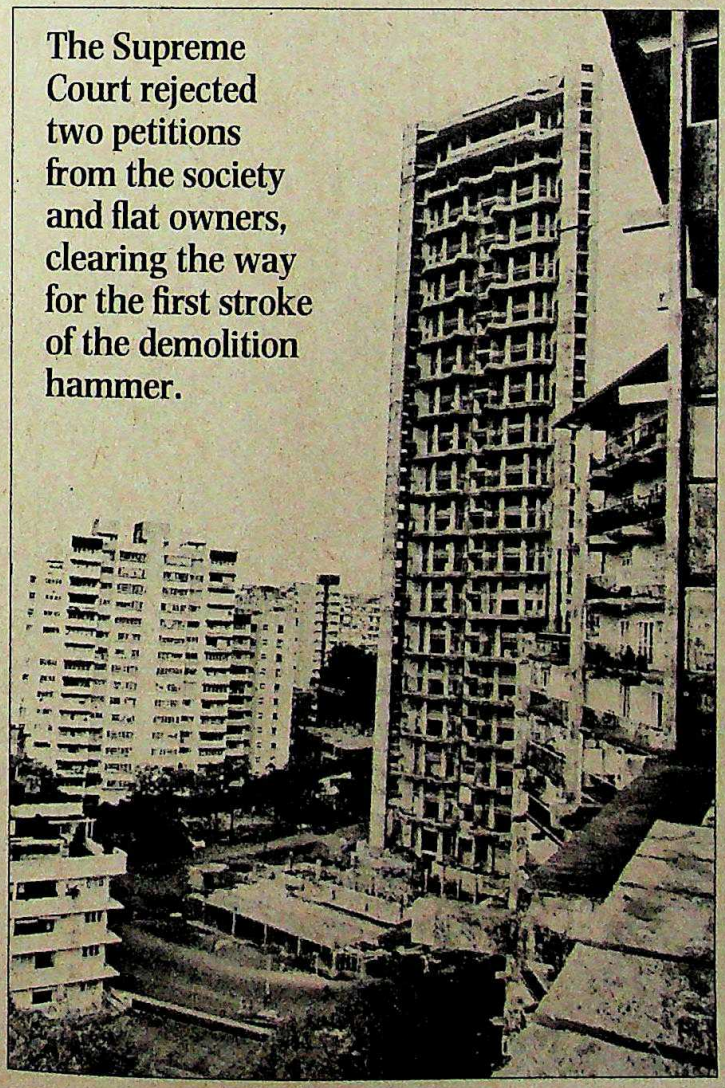
The promoters, Shrichand J.Bajaj and Amar K.Makhija insist that they did not collude with the superintendent of the city survey and land records department, P.D. Haval, record keeper R.S. Sharma and architect R.K. Gupta; the others named in the FIR, to get more Floor Space Index (FSI). But Bajaj told INDIA TODAY last fortnight: "The society acted in good faith. It was the corporation's responsibility to check that the area mentioned in the plans was the correct one. For five years they let the work continue; and why did they issue the commencement certificate if, after scrutiny they found nothing wrong?"

Makhija explains that they went by the area mentioned in the deed of sale which measured 11,102 sq yards—the plot was bought for Rs 72 lakh—and assumed that they would also receive the FSI for half the road in front which came to about 2,006 sq yards. "We were all the time moving on well-established precedents," says Makhija. "Hasn't the corporation issued the FSI for taken-over roads to adjoining buildings and isn't this being done even now?"

This defence appears to be more of an afterthought as the high court judgement on the case in October of last year clearly elucidated—the society applied on the basis of a Cadastral Survey (CS) extract which is an official map showing the number and legal area of the plot. The extract pertained to the situation prior to two sub-divisions in 1948 and 1949—and as they had also applied for extracts which showed the situation after the sub-divisions. In effect, there is no way that Bajaj and Makhija could have been ignorant of the shortened area of 8,608 sq yards instead of the 11,000-odd sq yards which was shown in the plans, checked, incidentally, by architect Gupta. To this Bajaj replies: "It was the corporation's duty to check the area. In fact, halfway through construction, they had checked the plinth area, but had said nothing then."

As for the society's increasingly desperate attempts to salvage their baby, the court ruled that they could not claim the FSI of the setback (the area between the society wall and the road which can only be used for providing public facilities) as that was already included in the FSI calculation, and secondly, they couldn't claim the FSI for the road as a notification designating it a public thoroughfare had been issued over 20 years before the society even thought of buying the land. And even if the FSI of taken-over roads is a common practice, as Makhija claims—and he is right—the road was never part of that particular plot, CS 701, but of CS 699 and CS 700. So the promoters could not in any case lay claim to it. Makhija explains that away by saying that they were given to understand the road was included in the sale of the land. However, the judgement retorts curtly: "Such public road cannot be converted into private property by a consent decree between private parties."

It is interesting to note that the promoters now seem to admit that there was fraud. In an explanatory note, they say that they resurveyed the area after the scandal broke in 1984 and found that 7,927 sq yards was in their possession, 1,063 sq yards



The Pratibha building: on the block

The Supreme Court rejected two petitions from the society and flat owners, clearing the way for the first stroke of the demolition hammer.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

made up the road set-back and 2,006 sq yards was half the area of the adjoining road. If the first two figures are added up, it comes to 8,990 sq yards or 7,554 sq metres, which is only about 357 sq metres more than what the judgement said could have been legally sold in the first place. So Bajaj and Makhija are admitting that the area of 9,232 sq metres mentioned in the consent decree was wrong.

The stage now seems to be set for the final act in the Pratibha drama—the demolition. The Government seems to be determined to make an example of the building—according to Chainani, the law says that a fraudulently erected structure should in fact be demolished in full, and not in part—despite last-minute interventions by influential politicians like Slum Improvement Minister Satish Pednekar.

But Bajaj has not given up hope and points out that demolishing eight floors would damage the entire structure which he describes as "integrated", and he has appended the reports of four civil engineers in his appeal to the Government. "It is sad that the Government is thinking of pulling down our structure when there is such a housing shortage here." The irony of that statement, made as it is about some of the most expensive square footage in the city, seems to have escaped him entirely.

—JAGANNATH DUBASHI

ANDHRA PRADESH

Fare Charge

POLITICIANS charged with taking bribes have rarely had to appear before an ombudsman. It is even rarer that a politician should be found guilty and pronounced "unworthy of holding any responsible position". But last month Andhra Pradesh's Lok Ayukta ruled that it had been "proved beyond a shadow of doubt" that a former Telugu Desam transport minister, Sangamraddi Satyanarayana, had pocketed Rs 1.30 lakh from private bus operators in Cuddapah District in 1983 on promise to put off the plan to nationalise 70 bus routes.

At least four of the bus owners including Khasim Saheb, then secretary of the Cuddapah District Operators' Association, and Neelkanta Reddy, a well-known operator from Proddatur, confessed that they handed over the money collected from the bus operators to Satyanarayana. Eight others said they had given sums—ranging from Rs 3,000 to Rs 5,000 depending on the length of the route—to the association.

While some of them told Lok Ayukta Avula Sambasiva Rao that the plan was to scuttle the nationalisation move, others claimed it was to collect enough money to challenge the case in court. But Rao did not go by the versions given by the bribe-givers alone. Two legislators, P.Siva Reddy of the Telugu Desam and Y.S. Rajasekhara Reddy of the Congress(I), independently corroborated complaints that Satyanarayana had been collecting cash.

There was circumstantial evidence as well. Pratap Reddy, Satyanarayana's confidante, cabled Khasim Saheb twice—on March 28 and April 28, 1983—asking him to "start immediately for Hyderabad". A third telegram on May 8 had an extra word—"start immediately readily for Hyderabad"—which the operators took to mean that their plan had succeeded. But as Rao noted, the Government approved the nationalisation exactly 11 days later—a bizarre and perhaps unique case where money changed hands and yet the job was not done.

In his 74-page verdict, Rao said "it would be detrimental to administration if such persons hold responsible offices," and recommended that Satyanarayana be debarred from holding any elective post till such time as the law permits. Although the Lok Ayukta Act debars those found guilty from elective office, state law officials are examining whether it can be extended to Central laws like the Representation of People's Act which would automatically prevent Satyanarayana from standing for election to the legislative Assembly or Parliament. If that happens, Satyanarayana at 61 and discredited in his native Warangal after he defected to Nadendla Bhaskara Rao's break-away Democratic Telugu Desam (DTD) in 1983, may well never contest an election again.

Predictably, Satyanarayana and Bhaskara Rao—both lawyers by training—lost no time in accusing Chief Minister N.T.Rama Rao of having fabricated the case against him and others who deserted the Telugu Desam Party (TDP). Bhaskar Rao charged the Lok Ayukta with "relying heavily on oral evidence in a case against a public man".

NAGENDER RAO

S. Satyanarayana

Sambasiva Rao ruled that it had been "proved beyond a shadow of doubt" that Satyanarayana had pocketed Rs 1.30 lakh from bus operators in 1983.

Janata Studio

A. Sambasiva Rao

However, Ramamuni Reddy, another former TDP minister now with Bhaskara Rao had also been charged with collecting Rs 90,000 in the same deal but since there was only one witness Rao dismissed the case against him. As Rao wrote: "In view of this uncorroborated evidence of the single witness, who was himself a bribe-giver, I cannot hold the allegation proved."

Yet the complaint of political motivation is not without substance. The charges against Satyanarayana and Ramamuni Reddy were referred to Governor Shankar Dayal Sharma by NTR shortly after his reinstatement as chief minister. And the governor in turn referred them to the Lok Ayukta. Both Satyanarayana and Reddy challenged the case in the high court but their petition was dismissed and Rao returned his verdict in January.

The indictment has come at a time when the select committee of Parliament on the Lok Pal bill is doing the rounds of various states for comments. But the crowning irony of the entire case is that the bus routes in Cuddapah are yet to be taken over. Satyanarayana's approval of the scheme in May 1983 was quashed by the high court and a second attempt in September 1984—during the short-lived tenure of Bhaskara Rao—was similarly quashed. So the plans to nationalise the routes—conceived in 1977—remain where it all began, on paper.

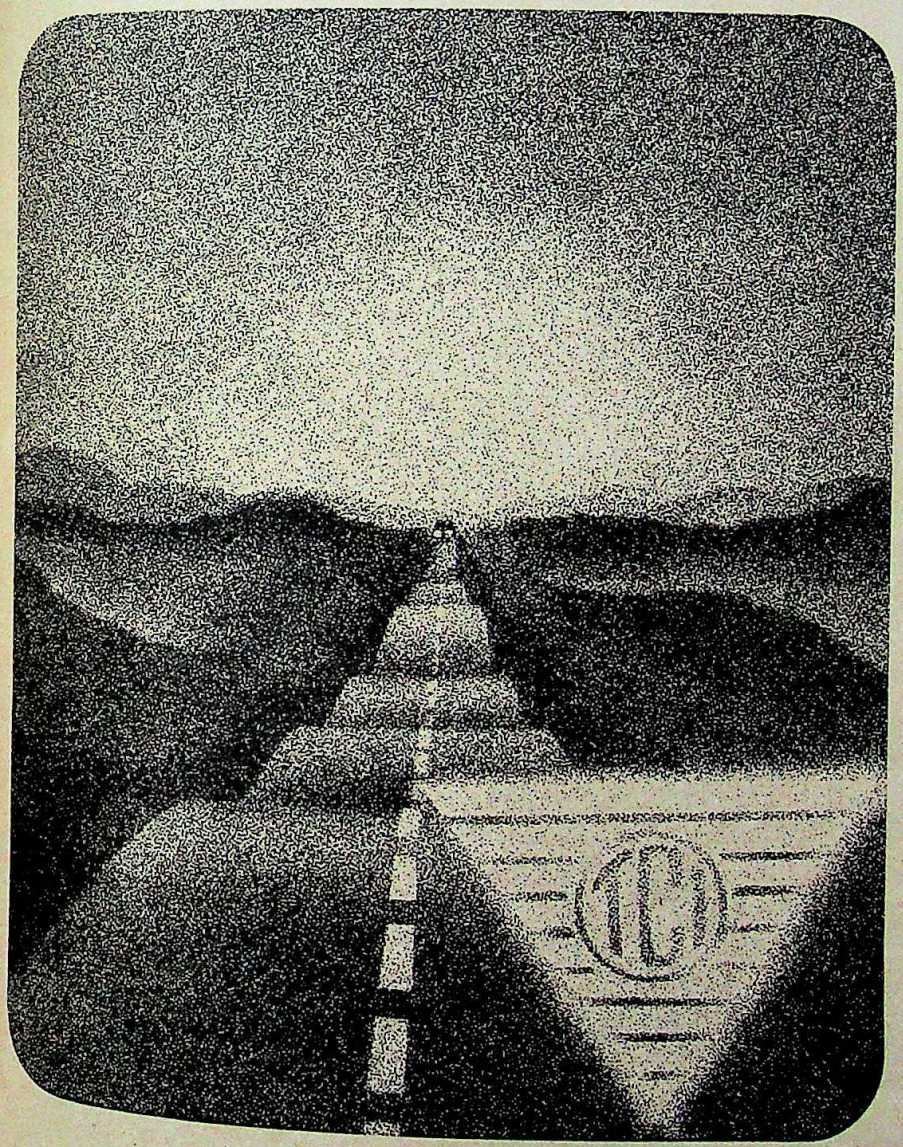
—AMARNATH K.MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

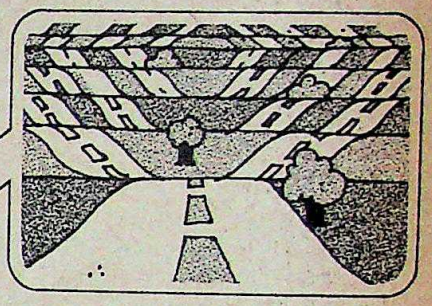
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Consider the country's size, far-flung markets, new industrial policies, accelerated development on all fronts... you'll get an idea of the magnitude of the task.

And realise why road transportation will remain a growth industry for decades to come.



Consider TCI's role in the country's economic development
It reaches out to the remotest corners of the land. Transporting raw materials & finished products. Serving the corporate and agricultural sector, small businesses and the common man.



A reputation second to none
From small beginnings in 1958, it has come a long way. Today it has one of the world's largest transport network. And is listed amongst the top 125 companies of India.

TCI: Enviable infrastructure
Alongwith its associates, ABC India Ltd, TCI operates 1360 trucks, has a network of 760 exclusive branches & a turnover of Rs. 84 crores.

It employs 7500 people; has 3,32,000 sq. mts of offices and covered storage facilities; modern material handling systems and a communication network of hotlines, telexes and computers.

TCI: Growth all the way

* Sales have grown more than 400% during the last 10 years (Current turnover Rs. 84 crores)
* Net worth today Rs.32 crores.
* Gross block today Rs.58 crores
* Profit before tax has nearly doubled in the last 3 years (Current profit before tax Rs. 3.07 crores)

The promise of things to come
The future is going to be even more rewarding. There's a quantum leap expected in every sphere of economic activity. And, as the past shows, every 1% increase in economic activity leads to an almost 2% increase in transport activity.

And that means TCI is well on the way to setting new milestones of achievement.

Await Public Issue

TCI: Your safe & sure road to prosperity.

TRANSPORT CORPORATION of INDIA Ltd.

P.O. Box 20, Secunderabad 500 003.

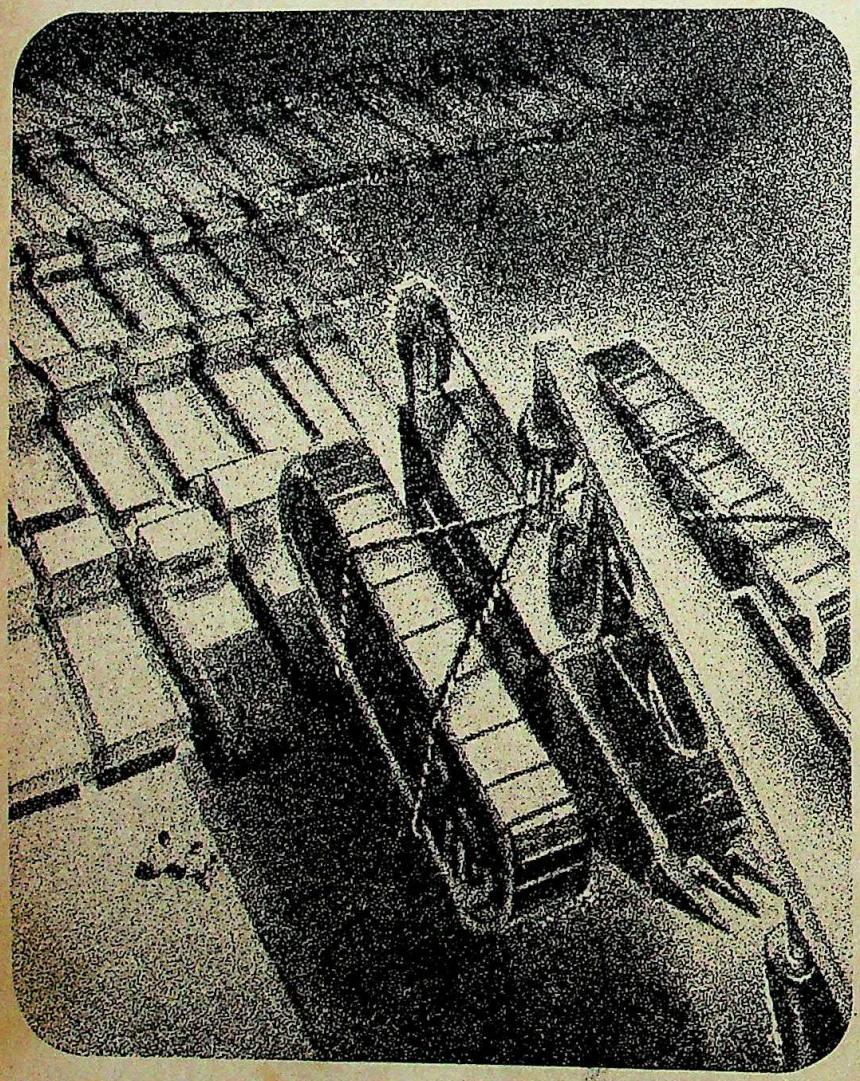
CONTRA B TCI 150

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Consider the complexities of road transportation. Goods of every size and description have to be carried to places often off the beaten track. Be stored safely; handled properly; monitored constantly...

You'll realise why it's an industry as modern as any other.



Consider TCI's pioneering efforts
TCI's activities cover every aspect of road transportation, to every nook and corner of the country. Where roads do not exist, TCI finds a way. Where 'Odd Dimension Consignments' have to be transported, TCI employs the latest methods. In fact, TCI alongwith its associate company ABC India Ltd., is soon importing a mammoth 24 axle tractor-trailer combination costing approximately Rs. 2.5 crores which can carry single-piece cargo of any dimension, up to 500 tonnes.

Modern material handling systems, computers to keep track of consignments, modern management techniques... TCI is the pioneer, all the way.

A reputation second to none
Today, TCI has the largest road transportation network in the world. And ranks amongst the top 125 companies in the Indian corporate sector.

TCI Profits all the way

* Since 1975, when TCI went public, dividends have been declared every single year, except one.
* 3 bonus issues have been offered in the last eight years (1977-78, 1:1 • 1980-81, 1:1 • 1985-86, 1:2).
* Investment in one share in 1975, is today worth Rs.376/-

The promise of things to come
The country's accelerated industrial programme is spreading economic activity to hitherto inaccessible areas. And the past shows that every 1% increase in economic activity leads to an almost 2% increase in transport activity. That means, by the end of this century, the total freight on the road, in India, is expected to cross 400 billion tonne kms.

And that means TCI is well on the way to setting new milestones of achievement.

Await Public Issue

TCI: Your safe & sure road to prosperity.

TRANSPORT CORPORATION of India Ltd

P.O. Box 20, Secunderabad 500 003.

CHAITRA-B-TCI 156

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GUJARAT

Caste Carnage

NINE YEARS ago, a group of television producers and cameramen from the Indian Space Research Organisation in Ahmedabad pitched camp in Golana village of Kheda district to shoot a film series on the exploitation of Harijans. For the Harijans of Golana had shown they were different; they had asserted their economic independence and were united in fighting exploitation. They wrote the script for the film and acted out the roles, drawing on the grim real life experience of feudal oppression by land-owning Rajputs and of the kind of killings and burnings that held an entire community in terror.

That was the script. But life overtook art last fortnight when gun-toting Rajputs descended on a Harijan basti in broad daylight, killing four and gravely wounding 16. To resist meant certain death, yet many of the Harijans did and paid the price. But the brutal action did not cow the spirit which had united the Harijans at the height of the anti-reservation agitation; and as the news of the killings spread, over 4,000 Harijans converged on the little basti to show their solidarity.

The police soon swung into action and arrested 30 Rajputs. Many Rajputs fled Golana, fearing a Harijan backlash. And Amarsinh Chaudhary, the first backward-class chief minister of the state, was confronted by an angry and militant community when he visited the basti on Republic Day. His assertion that "justice will be done" hardly soothed their feelings. The memorandum they presented spoke louder than words: "Are we citizens of this country? If we are, we want to be allowed to live with dignity. We want nobody's pity, we just want our rights." And that was no plea but simply a proud statement.

Till a decade ago, no Harijan in the village could cycle across any area where people from the higher castes lived; he had to carry the cycle on his shoulders. The wages for work were pitiful—barely Rs 2 for a day's toil in the Rajputs' fields. So these poverty-stricken labourers got together and set up their own cooperative and gave themselves at least Rs 10 a day. As a natural consequence, the Rajput landlords had to hike their rates, for all the village Harijans made a bee-line for the cooperative. To add insult to Rajput injury, the state Government took over their surplus land under the Gujarat Agricultural Land Ceiling Act and handed over 60 acres to the cooperative. When the Rajputs refused point blank to surrender the land, the undeterred Harijans sent them a legal notice.

The murdered Harijans (above); and destroyed home: leaders attacked

For the feudally-inclined Rajputs, that was the straw that broke the camel's back. So when the violence erupted last month, it was perhaps inevitable that those marked for death were the pillars of the cooperative. Pocha Punja Parmar, 39, the first to die, had built up a personal rapport with each and every member of the cooperative, explaining to them the intricacies of profits and expenses and the new areas of work taken up. His wife Daniben and five children are still in a state of shock, mute witnesses to the murder. Khoda Mitha, 45, a technical supervisor with the cooperative, had made the mistake of filing cases against two Rajputs under the Untouchability Act—they had beaten him up for having "defiled them" when his hand accidentally came into contact with their smoking pipes. He and his brother, Mohan Mitha, were clubbed to death. The rampaging Rajputs failed to get their hands on Pocha Kala, another of the Harijan leaders, so they simply shot dead his son Prabhudas, 22.

The choice of targets was proof, if that were needed, that the upper castes wanted to crush the Harijans' spirit and render them leaderless. Marginal farmer Vala Fula's home was set on fire and all that his wife could salvage from the blaze was her silver jewellery gifted to her at her marriage; but it is twisted and melted beyond recognition.

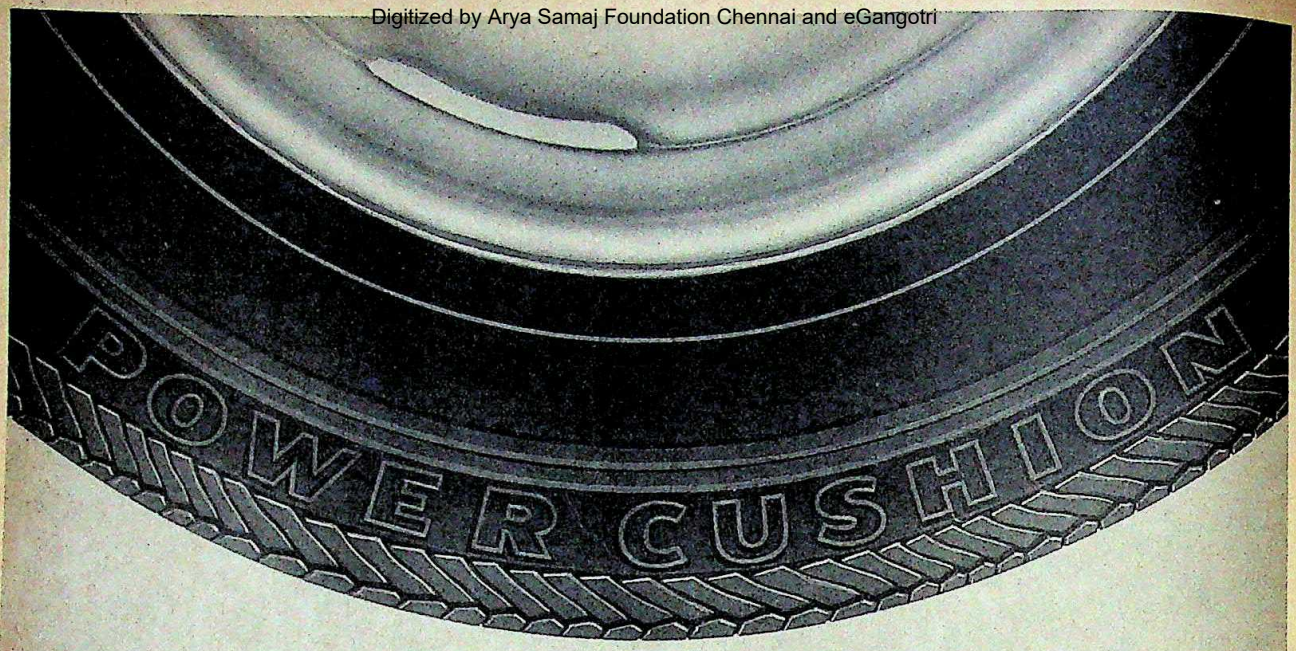
Pocha Kala put his finger on the nub of the problem: "All this happened because we had started living with dignity and had stopped bowing our heads. We broke tradition and we paid a price. This is only the beginning." While their morale has taken a beating, the Harijans are determined not to give up. "In fact," says Jivan Punja, a school teacher, "we have more strength than ever before."

Predictably, politicians and bureaucrats have descended on the hamlet in droves, promises have been made, relief sanctioned and development projects launched. But the question is: does such a heavy price have to be paid by the catalysts of change?

—RAMESH MENON in Golana

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



The strong grip of leadership

Goodyear demonstrate leadership worldwide. In technology and research, innovation and quality, in popularity amongst users and performance on world race-tracks.

The largest earthmover tyre, the tyre that landed on the moon, the largest-selling car tyre in the world — each one is a Goodyear!

Right here in India Goodyear lead with Power Cushion. The tyre you have made an unquestioned leader. Well, that's Goodyear. The finest, the world over. As Power Cushion is in India.

And with all reason.

Deeper and Wider Tread :
More rubber on the tread than any other car tyre. (Consumers testify to over 50,000 Kms. of non-skid safety).

Computer chips in for more mileage, more safety :
Power Cushion's computer-perfected tread design ensures greater grip, more comfort, more safety as tread adjusts automatically to road profile.

Unique Arrow-Head Design :
For a quicker start-stop, lower rolling resistance, more fuel saving.

'3-T' Nylon Casing :
Resilient and abrasion-resistant casing that ensures more retreads.

That's Goodyear Power Cushion

GOODYEAR

LEADING THE WORLD IN TYRE TECHNOLOGY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection.

Contract/GY-20/85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

Image Making

OVER the past 11 months the Bindeshwari Dubey Ministry in Bihar has earned a reputation for non-performance. Last fortnight, the 68-year-old chief minister moved on a number of fronts to shore up his administration's sagging image. He pushed through the long-delayed reshuffle and expansion of his cabinet, sacking three and taking 11 on board. And he released a mass of statistics to show that plan allocations were not lying unspent, as former chief minister Jagannath Mishra had charged. Instead, he told Rajiv Gandhi in Delhi, 60 per cent of the state's annual plan outlay of Rs 965 crore had been spent by December.

The result, however, seems to have been quite the opposite of what Dubey intended. The ministerial changes only served to bring intra-party animosity out in the open. Soon after the reshuffle, some 50 dissidents met at the house of Amarendra Mishra, one of the ministers who had been dropped, to register their protest at the reshuffle. Mishra challenged his removal as constitutionally illegal and politically unhealthy. Said he: "I am demoralised as injustice has been done to me."

That was not all. In making his pitch to the prime minister, Dubey unfortunately overlooked an inconvenient assertion that he had himself made. Shortly before his Delhi trip, Jagannath Mishra's paper, Patliputra Times, had come out with a report that Bihar had barely utilised one-third of its plan allocation by December-end. To counter the report, Dubey's office released a host of figures, among which was the boast that for the first time Bihar had a substantial balance with the Reserve Bank: all of Rs 520 crore. When Dubey later made his claim of having spent 60 per cent of the plan outlay by December, he forgot that the two sets of figures—the state's Reserve Bank balance and the 60 per cent expenditure of the plan allocation—were contradictory.

The embarrassment was there for all to see, and Dubey quickly turned on his ministers and officials. In meetings that stretched for over a week, he pointed out to them that they had no excuse for non-performance because projects had been sanctioned and funds released in the beginning of the year itself. Accusing Mishra's newspaper of "playing up the odd figures to create confusion", Dubey asserted that the state's economic condition had in fact changed for the better since he took over. "This is solely because of the various realistic steps taken during the past 10 months and the strict financial discipline enforced," he said.

To substantiate this, he pointed out that for the first time the administration had been able to mobilise Rs 109 crore as additional resources on its own and as a result, its total plan outlay for 1985-86 had increased to Rs 965 crore from the original outlay of Rs 851 crore. "I have personally reviewed the situation and have been monitoring all developmental activities myself," he claimed.

However, the expenditure so far has its own story to tell:

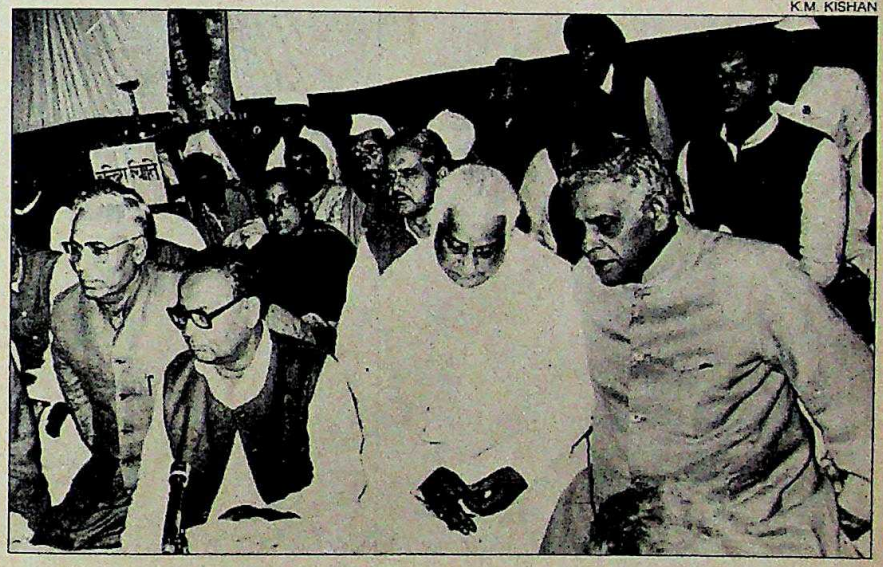
- Under the Rural Landless Employment Guarantee Programme, a sum of only Rs 20 crore had been spent from the Rs 100 crore sanctioned;
- In the Harijan Component Programme, only Rs 6 crore had been spent from the Rs 68 crore sanctioned;
- For tribal development, a paltry Rs 30 crore had been used, compared to the Rs 194 crore allotted; and
- Under the Integrated Rural Development Plan, only two lakh families had been covered as against the target of 5.17 lakh families.

The lack of planning is all too evident. A Central team which recently visited the state to assess the implementation of Harijan and tribal welfare schemes was disappointed with what it saw. A Planning Commission team found that the average expenditure on development schemes was just 33 per cent of the allocation.

According to Dubey's critics within the party, it is the frequent changes in the administration that are responsible for the stalemate. The average work-span of a field official is no more than eight months. In the last 11 months, three education commissioners, three irrigation commissioners and three public health engineering commissioners have come and gone.

The much-delayed ministry expansion seemed similarly arbitrary: loyalty, or the lack of it, had mattered more than reputation at work or public image. The three ministers sacked had all run into problems with the chief minister.

K.M. KISHAN



Dubey with Anjiah and Azad: clean chit

Indernath Bhagat was known to have opposed some appointments in the Excise Ministry that he used to head. Mahabir Choudhury (urban development) is close to Union External Affairs Minister Bali Ram Bhagat, supposedly an aspirant for the chief ministership of the state. Amarendra Mishra, a relative of Jagannath Mishra, had openly opposed the appointment of three chief engineers and had in fact submitted his resignation twice. Dubey himself explained the changes with the cryptic comment: "I inducted only those whom I considered fit." A government spokesman, however, clarified: "The main criterion for sacking was the loss of integrity and disobedience."

However, double standards had clearly been used. Many ministers charged with corruption were not merely retained but rewarded with an enlarged portfolio. Lahtan Choudhury, agriculture minister, accused of protecting an official involved in a Rs 1.50-crore fertiliser scandal, has been given additional charge of overseeing the implementation of the 20-Point Programme. Similarly, Saryu Upadhyaya, who has allegedly been interfering in transfers and postings of government officials, has been given the Cooperative Department, and Saryu Mishra, who isn't known to be a model of efficiency, has been given the portfolios of minor irrigation, special agricultural programmes and religious trusts. Remarked Jagannath Mishra: "It seems the team chosen by Dubey will not be effective, nor will it improve the image of the Government in any way." His followers, snickering at Dubey's attempt to reduce Mishra's influence, gleefully pointed out that the 34-strong ministry still had half a dozen followers of the ex-chief minister.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

However, what Dubey does not lack is support from the top. Two AICC(I) general secretaries, T. Anjiah and Bhagwat Jha Azad, who visited the state recently, gave the ministry a clean chit. But with Dubey floundering despite major initiatives, his hold on the state's administration seemed decidedly shaky.

—FARZAND AHMED

JHARKHAND

Renewed Call

THE WAR cry was impassioned and strident: Jharkhand rajya alag karenge, ham Bihar mein nahin rahenge—we will have a separate Jharkhand state, we will not remain in Bihar any more. The slogan was raised at rallies last fortnight in Dumka and Dhanbad, in the heartland of the Adivasi belt in south Bihar, as over 70,000 tribal men, women and children, armed with bows and arrows, gathered to observe the 'Jharkhand Mukti Divas'. It wasn't the first such event—the Divas has been observed since 1980—but the zeal and the fervour was unprecedented. Exulted Jharkhand Mukti Morcha (JMM) MLA Suraj Mandal: "Every young man here is now ready to become Sidho and Kano (legendary Santhal brothers who raised the banner of revolt against the British and the mahajans 133 years ago)."

The rallies were organised by Mandal and the charismatic Shibu Soren under the JMM banner and, till recently, the movement rarely drew support from non-tribals or from the major political parties. Now, this seems to be changing. Claims a confident Mandal: "Everybody, irrespective of party colour, has begun to understand the meaning of the demand." Echoing this feeling, Jai Prakash Narayan Vichar Manch Convenor Saryu Roy, who was a special invitee at the Dumka rally, said: "The tribals who attended the rally seemed determined to fight for survival."

This determination had first come in evidence six months ago when tribal legislators, including those of the Congress(I), bitterly complained of neglect at a meeting in which the Union Home Minister S.B. Chavan and Bihar Chief Minister Bindeshwari

K.M. KISHAN

Soren leading tribals: wide support

Dubey were present. Led by Devender Champia, for the first time Congress(I) legislators joined the others in demanding that the Jharkhand area comprising the Chhotanagpur plateau and the Santhal Parganas district be made into a Union territory. A shaken Dubey then went on a 'Jharkhand darshan' during which he discovered, not surprisingly, that the complaints of neglect had susbstance. In Santhal Pargana, he touched many areas where no chief minister had ever set foot before and found that 75 per cent of the Paharias were suffering from tuberculosis, that there were no drinking water facilities, no schools and no medical centres.

Admitted Minister of State for Welfare and Jails Thomas Hansda: "Whatever funds were allotted used to go into the pockets of officials and engineers." Concern for tribals was further accentuated last fortnight with the publication of a study by Biseshwar Prasad Kesari, reader in the department of tribal and regional languages of Ranchi University, which argued that the very survival of the distinct subculture of the region was in danger. Argued Kesari: "Without caring for its (the Adivasi culture's) identity, the rulers are forcing it into the domain of the exploitative mainstream."

Sensing the mood, Dubey announced last fortnight that 40 per cent of the state's annual plan next year was going to be spent on the region. "I belong to the region and can realise its pain," he asserted. Simultaneously, 42 Congress(I) MLA's, mostly non-tribals, submitted a memorandum to the Bihar governor opposing the demand for a separate Union territory but demanding that the whole region be declared a hill area.

If Congressmen speak with several voices, so do the other political groups. Buoyed by the success of the rallies, JMM leaders started unity moves with other Jharkhand leaders like N.E. Horo, but the efforts were in vain. Horo has now called a public meeting in Purulia. Infighting has long been the bane of the Jharkhand leaders and it seemed the malaise would again eat into the vitals of an undoubtedly popular movement.

—FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Like the necklace?"
"Yes. I am sure you like your new suit."

DCM

We have a great deal in store for you.

Over 590 retail stores all over the country. Offering a wide range of suitings, shirtings, sarees, dress materials, furnishings, towels and linen. The entire range from 4 modern DCM Textile Mills:
Hindon River Mills, DCM Silk Mills, Swatantra Bharat Mills, Delhi Cloth Mills.

DCM
RETAIL STORE
90 years of consumer confidence

AKSHARA/DCM-40

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

We've implanted a little bit of Japan in India.

Orson. Where hi-tech has taken root.

In the field of entertainment electronics, the world bows to Japanese technology.

Orson bring it all to you.

Our TV plant is run entirely on Japanese lines. It's set up with Japanese technology. With experts trained in Japan. With the latest Japanese quality control methods and machines.

All this shows in the quality of the TV set we bring you. In reliable performance. In superior quality. In perfect clarity.

Everything has a Japanese accent. Even the after-sales service.

Orson. It's the kind of TV set you'd buy in India. Or in Tokyo.

Even a Japanese wouldn't know the difference.

ORSON SHOW HOW TO MAKE THE BEST OF JAPANESE KNOW HOW!

ORSON

COLOUR TELEVISION

Orson Electronics Limited
Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, New Delhi.

Ads-OEL-480/85 A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

There's no stopping us.

The best way to travel to London is with British Airways. Because we operate a total of fourteen flights a week to London, eight of these being non-stop. Which is more than any other airline.

Add to this our matchless international network from Heathrow, and our Indian stewardesses and vegetarian meals.

For our business passengers connecting from other airports, the new India Gateway Service meet and greet at Bombay and Delhi, plus our Indian Visitors Service at London and you'll find an airline that's renowned for its care and professionalism world-wide. You could say that there's no stopping us.

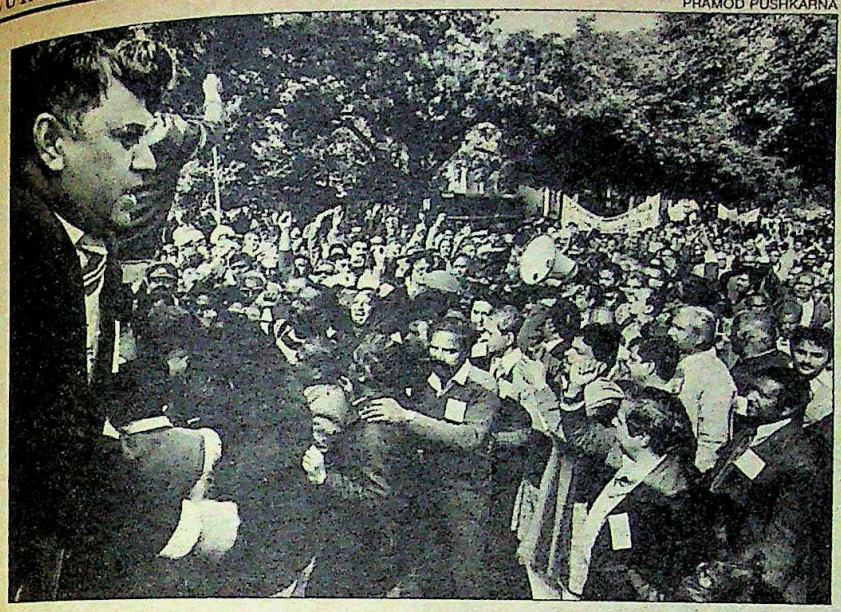
BRITISH AIRWAYS

The world's favourite airline.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



The agitating teachers: isolated

DELHI UNIVERSITY

Striking Lesson

CONTROVERSY and bitterness have dogged the two-month-long strike by 6,000 members of the Delhi University Teachers Association (DUTA) for better pay and service conditions. The strike in one of the country's largest and most prestigious universities started on December 10 with a fair measure of popular support. But with some of the demands being conceded, the authorities mounting an unprecedented media campaign and 150,000 students beginning to fear that they might lose a whole academic year, the DUTA was by late last fortnight beginning to find itself increasingly isolated. But when it seemed that the strike might be called off, another controversy erupted and attitudes hardened.

Involved in the latest snafu were DUTA and the Lt-Governor of Delhi, H.L.Kapur: the DUTA charging him with backing off on a mediation attempt that he himself had initiated and Kapur retorting that the DUTA had misinterpreted him. DUTA president Murli Manohar Prasad Singh maintained that DUTA and Kapur had worked out a formula which Kapur was to take up with the ministry. According to the formula, DUTA would have called off the strike if the University Grants Commission (UGC) conceded the demand in principle. But Kapur maintained that in his discussions he had merely reiterated the UGC's agreement to the principle of "vertical mobility". Said Singh: "We think that there is a very strong anti-settlement lobby working which wants to teach DUTA a lesson. Kapur has fallen a victim to the machinations of this lobby."

Shah, Singh and Raza: controversy and bitter debate

The strike had its roots in a similar agitation which lasted 109 days starting January 1983. It ended after the UGC and DUTA signed an accord whereby teachers who had put in over 10 years of service would be considered for promotion to a higher grade. It also provided for the introduction of the professor's grade at the college level and a housing scheme for university and college employees. The teachers claim that the UGC went back on the agreement.

In a letter to Human Resources Development Minister P.V.Narasimha Rao, Singh pointed out that only the promotion scheme in the agreement had been implemented but was discontinued by the UGC. Nothing had been done to introduce the professor's grade in colleges and of the three housing schemes envisaged in the agreement, only a beggarly sum of Rs 3 crore had been sanctioned for implementation. But UGC Chairperson Madhuri Shah (whose contract with the UGC ran out last fortnight and was not immediately renewed) was categorical that the commission had abided by the 1983 agreement.

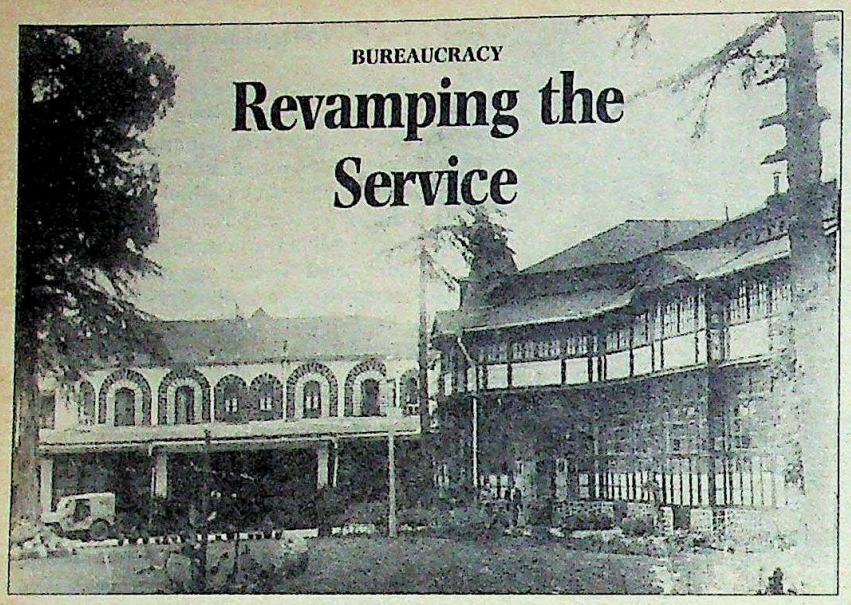
Except, of course, for the professor's grade demand which the UGC had committed itself to this three years ago. Shah was unyielding on the point: "This simply cannot be done. Becoming a professor is a high academic distinction and not something you can be promoted to. Also, it has implications for the rest of the country." To this Inder Kapahy, member of the University Executive Council, pointed out: "We do not envisage that everybody will become a professor. We just feel that an opportunity should exist in order to allow people to strive for some kind of academic excellence. This is being opposed because it might alter the fact that political considerations and not academic excellence apply in the selection."

The Vice-Chancellor of Delhi University, Professor Moonis Raza, went on the national TV hookup to appeal for an end to the strike and argued that DUTA should have called off the stir on January 22, when most of their demands were conceded. "What they are doing is wrong. You cannot hold the students to ransom. It is like hijacking a plane with 30 innocent passengers on it because you want to get back at Gaddafi."

Indeed, the worst sufferers were the university's 150,000 students. Ironically, the Delhi University Students' Union (DUSU) had initially backed the teachers' agitation. But now, argued Ajay Maken, the DUSU president: "Since most of the demands have been conceded, they are just being bloody-minded." However, Singh maintained: "We want a settlement that will crush the seeds of this recurring turmoil." Unfortunately, there was no breakthrough in sight. —TAVLEEN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



BUREAUCRACY

Revamping the Service

IT IS a churning the like of which the 4,119-strong, 38-year-old Indian Administrative Service (IAS) has not seen before. Where mid-career training was virtually unknown, all the 3,800-odd confirmed IAS officers will have attended one-week refresher courses in 41 institutes across the country between last October and next May. And in three years' time, all IAS officers will have attended an intensive four-week training course. That's only for starters. Nearly a dozen changes in the structure and format of the IAS are being proposed. Some decisions have already been implemented.

When these are through, the service will change from the flabby, often insensitive, frequently self-centred and monopolistic hegemony which the late professor Raj Krishna once described as "knowledge-proof". Or so hopes Palaniappan Chidambaram, the 40-year-old minister of state for personnel, public grievances and pensions, who is piloting the changes. Says he: "We are not doing cosmetic surgery. We are attempting a total revamping of the service." But many senior ex-bureaucrats have their doubts. Warned P.K. Dave, former ambassador to the European Economic Community: "Considering the amount of information available on the ills of the service there is no scope for tinkering with the service."

Some 20 committees have gone into ways and means to reform the administrative system in the past. What had been lacking, till Rajiv Gandhi took over, was the desire and the design to do something about it. As early as January last year, Rajiv took away the Department of Personnel and Training from the Home Ministry and upgraded it into a new ministry with a minister of state reporting directly to him. In his very first policy statement he promised that civil servants would be given training. By August the schedule for the one-week refresher courses had been drawn up. But the revamping really got into stride after Chidambaram, an MBA from Harvard, took over from K.P. Singh Deo in October. And the prime minister's intentions became clearer at a meeting of the consultative committee where several on-the-spot decisions were taken.

Proposals, the first few of which have already been implemented while the others are in an advanced stage of decision-making, have since emanated from the ministry like so many rabbits out of a magician's hat. To wit:

► The composition of the one-week course was changed to have 'vertical integration'—that is, from secretary-level officers to subdivisional officers—and 'horizontal' spread. Typically, a batch of 30 now has officers ranging from the 1960 batch to the 1982 batch with at least one representative from all 22 states;

► Automatic promotions to the director level will be discontinued. Currently, the IAS is the only service with automatic promotions up to such a senior level;

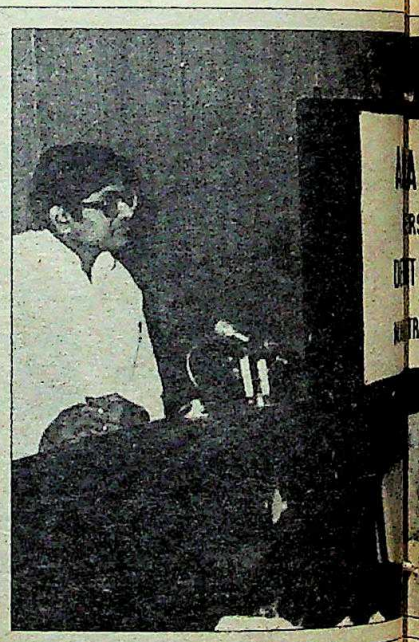
► After the joint secretary level, only 60 per cent of the officers will be empanelled. Further, only this 60 per cent will assume positions of responsibility at the Centre and in the states, unlike now when those who do not get empanelled at the Centre still go on to rise to the top in the states;

► The rule requiring non-confirmation of those who fail in the end-probation examination, now observed more in the breach, will be strictly enforced;

► The service is being made leaner, and intake into the service will be lower in the coming years. Specialist jobs will be left to specialists; IAS officers will only fill up the essential cadre posts;

► The promotee IAS officers, who currently constitute one-third of the service and who do not need to work outside their state, may be posted to states in their zone. (There is no proposal to replace the existing system of state cadres with five zonal cadres, as has been wrongly reported.);

► Postings in the first 11 years will be regularised. State governments will be told that district magistrates should have tenures of three years and in the remaining six years (two are spent on probation) they should have a maximum of three postings by rotation in regulatory departments and development departments;



The Mussoorie Academy of Administration; and (right) Chidambaram addressing a refresher course: basic changes

► Officers are to go in for specialisation between their 11th and 16th years;

► With the service records of all IAS officers having been put on a computer, arbitrariness in prestige postings to the Centre has been reduced to a minimum. "Nobody's case goes by default," explained Chidambaram;

► Deputations to training institutions, hitherto considered punishment postings, have been made more attractive with a special allowance of 30 per cent of salary so that the best officers go;

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

▶ The format of confidential reports will change. From April they will also have an objective section where officers will be quantitatively assessed; and

▶ An integrated management pool is to be drawn up comprising officers from other Class I services.

SAYS Chidambaram: "What we are doing is nothing new; many of these things have been thought of in the past. But we intend to show that we mean business and it is my job to see this thing through." The minister's we-mean-business style has been infectious. Cabinet Secretary P.K. Kaul, who himself attended a course at the Tata Management Training Centre, Pune, between February 3 and 8, personally drew up the training schedule of the 94 officers in the top-level secretary to the government grade. The 40-strong training wing of the ministry, whose work has doubled, has been working 12 hours a day for several months slotting officers in over 400 courses.

However, not all the 1,500-odd officers who had gone through the course in 41 institutes across the country till the middle of this month were quite as excited. "This one-week refresher course is all rubbish," snorted a joint secretary who had attended a course at the Administrative Staff College, Hyderabad. "It is a brainless exercise which will have a disastrous effect. The worst fears of the 75 per cent IAS officers who have never believed in training will be confirmed, the 20 per cent who were equivocal about it will join the 75 per cent and the confidence of the 5 per cent who believe in training, like I do, will be shaken."

Criticism of the courses has centred on two points: that they have been too hurried and haphazard. The programme format has been left to the institutes, so the bad and the irrelevant courses have jostled with the good. Officers have been packed off at short notice to courses in which they had little interest or experience. "What is their point?" asked the joint secretary. "If the point was to recharge your batteries then that purpose will be served if people are just given the leave they are due." Chidambaram concedes the criticism but argues: "We were trying to run before we could walk. But the crucial thing was to get started. And, more importantly, we have learnt as we have progressed, and from the next year there will be nothing hurried about it." Argued Mukesh Nandan Prasad, deputy secretary in the Ministry of Power, who came back thoroughly refreshed from the Tata Institute in Pune: "Even if this year's refresher programmes are seen as a pilot project, the Rs 40-45 lakh spent on them will have been worthwhile."

Not everybody, however, is so unequivocal in welcoming the changes. Many wonder if the reforms are well thought out. Others feel the Government is skirting basic problems. Asked T.C.A. Srinivas Vardhan, of the 1948 batch who retired as home secretary: "Why can't we have a public debate on the proposed changes like the one on the education policy?" Dave pointed out that the reforms do not address the major problem that the service suffers from—undue interference by the state governments.

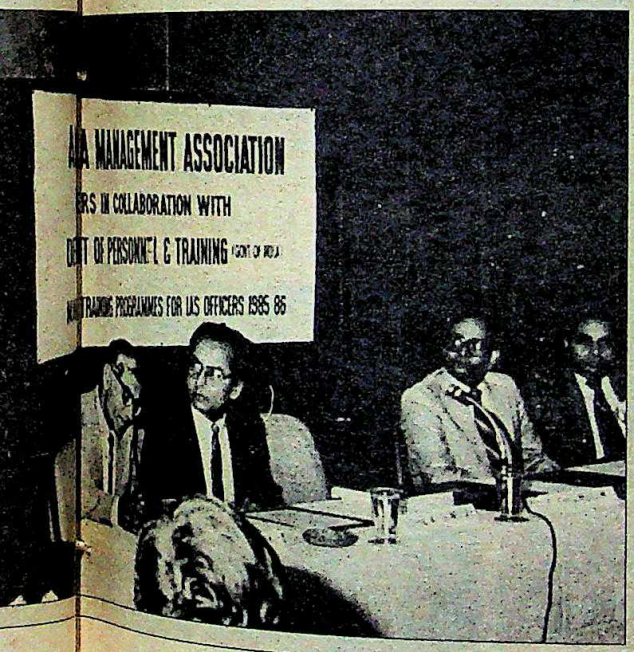
V.A. Pai Panandiker, director of the Centre for Policy Research and a long-time bureaucracy watcher, concedes that the proposed changes might go some way in improving the service but feels that nothing much will change till the basic dilemma facing the service is addressed: "How does a mai-baap service like the IAS, modelled on the colonial Indian Civil Service and only cosmetically changed since, function in a political environment where we swear by participatory democracy? In operational terms—who decides how the district's outlay is going to be spent, the IAS officer or the zila parishad chief? How is the IAS officer going to accept a position inferior to that of the elected representative right down the line?" Panandiker argues that things will not improve unless fundamental changes are introduced into the whole administrative set-up: "The machinery of the Government is an outdated institution. If it is to help the country move into the 21st century, it will be necessary to re-invent it."

Chidambaram has his counter to these questions. He says he will have a short, time-bound debate on the changes proposed, that he is in fact trying to make development work the primary task of the service and insulate it from political pressures, and that all the required changes will be introduced in stages.

In fact, the process of change has only just been initiated. Chidambaram is expected to formulate the proposals in a policy paper that he will be putting up to the prime minister. Nor has he closed his mind to fresh initiatives. "I am looking for ideas," he reiterates. But the overall design and purpose is clear. "Our army is as good as any in the world because it keeps training its officers. We need to do the same. And once we've trained them, what we will be looking for are the leaders among the IAS officers. If you ask me what I am looking for, the answer is that I am looking for generals in the bureaucracy."

It is obvious that Rajiv thinks well of the work Chidambaram has put in: of the three deputy ministers he appointed in September, only Chidambaram was singled out for promotion to minister of state in last month's ministerial shake-up. But now that he is firmly in the driving seat, the 4,119 officers of the IAS will not be the only ones who will be watching his progress with great care.

—AJAY KUMAR



"We are not doing cosmetic surgery. We are attempting a total revamping of the Indian Administrative Service."

P. CHIDAMBARAM
minister of state for personnel, public grievances and pensions

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

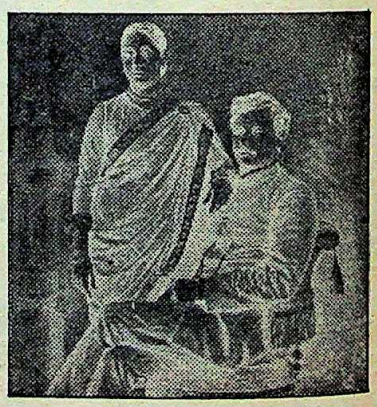
The day your great grandparents got married and posed for this prim and proper picture eightysix years ago.

Dr and Mrs P K Ray photographed in 1900 at Bourne & Shepherd, Calcutta.

The memory still lives on vividly. Thanks to B&W photography.

Thumb through your family photo album.
There are those glorious old photographs that bring fond memories.
In black and white. Sharp and clear even after sixty, seventy or eighty years and more.
The choice is quite clear.
When you shoot pictures for keeps, shoot them on Black and White film.
You'd be glad you did.

Memories may fade with time. Not Black & White pictures.



INDU

INDU B & W roll films and bromides.

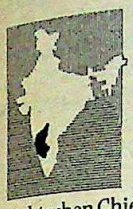
Sista's-HPF.440.85.H

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KARNATAKA

Vote Banks



IN OUR first-past-the-post electoral system, politics can never be anything but a game of numbers. This truism was proved once again in Karnataka last fortnight when Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde ordered the suspension of a probe into the explosion in the population of Scheduled Tribes in Karnataka—from 2.31 lakh in 1971 to 18.25 lakh in 1981, an incredible eightfold jump. Hegde is yet to give his reasons for suspending the probe just when a clear picture was going to emerge, but his decision has already created a controversy which irate Congress(I) men are taking to court.

The initial findings had been eye-opening: lured obviously by benefits constitutionally guaranteed to the Scheduled Tribes, many people of other tribes had got fake certificates to prove that they belonged to some Scheduled Tribe or the other. The bizarre phenomenon had occurred because of confusing similarities between Scheduled Tribes' surnames and non-scheduled ones. The Naiks (who are classified as a backward tribe), with a little jugglery of spelling and some money under the table, became Nayaks, who are a Scheduled Tribe. Similarly Kurubas became Kadu Kurubas or Jenu Kurubas, Medars became Medas, Kolis became Tokre Kolis or Koli Dhars and so on.

The Centre, suspecting precisely this, had told the state Government to separate the wheat from the chaff and the probe had duly been entrusted to the Civil Rights Enforcement Wing (CREW) of the Karnataka police. But Hegde, with his edict last fortnight, brought it all to an abrupt stop. The chief minister suspended all proceedings against the three categories of non-Scheduled Tribes—the Naiks, the Malerus and the Kurubas—which had accounted for more than half of the false certificates detected in 1985. Not only this, he extended all benefits to them meant for the Scheduled Tribes.

The chief minister, in his order, explained that the state Government had referred the case of the Naiks to the Centre in 1984, asking it to include them in the schedule and pending the Centre's decision, it was only right that proceedings against the Naiks should be suspended. As for the other two tribes, the Malerus and the Kurubas, he said that a committee would be set up headed by Social Welfare Minister V.L. Patil to "go into the issue".

Soon after Hegde issued his fiat, Social Welfare Secretary P.S.S. Thomas, anticipating the opposition, wrote to the chief minister advising him to withdraw it. And sure enough, many people were up in arms over the decision. Said an enraged B. Basavalingappa, a Scheduled Caste Congress(I) MLA: "The state Government is trying to snatch the privileges of the Scheduled Tribes." Basavalingappa, who is planning to take the issue to court, pointed out that according to the constitutional order of 1950 on Scheduled Castes and Tribes, a state government is not empowered to include other communities in the schedule.

Hegde, however, refused to comment on this, saying that he would speak in the Assembly where the matter would shortly come up for discussion. Social Welfare Minister Patil, himself a Kuruba tribal, merely said the Government had taken note of the increase in the Scheduled Tribes' population. But he added that there were only 834 complaints in 1985, while the Government had actually issued 13,000 certificates that year.

The confusion actually began in 1977 when the Centre changed the criterion by which a certain tribe was treated as a Scheduled Tribe only in some particular areas while at other places it was not. In the districts of Belgaum, Dharwar, Bijapur and Uttara Kannada, Naiks were a Scheduled Tribe, but in other districts they were not. But due to the nomadic life-style of some of the tribes, the Centre stopped this areawise break-up and declared that a Scheduled Tribe was a Scheduled Tribe everywhere.

It was largely this change, apart from the similar surnames, that the unscrupulous took advantage of to secure fake certificates. The decentralisation of the authority for issuing certificates also left the field open to corruption and irregularities. Says K. Srinivasa Alva, deputy inspector general of CREW: "After 1977, everybody started claiming to be everybody else."

CREW officials, who admit that they had managed to detect only a few cases, are understandably furious over the government order, since their months of toil has come to naught. They are now banking on Basavalingappa's threat to move the court. Officials of both CREW and the Social Welfare Department privately say that the government order has no legal validity and has been issued only to appease the concerned tribes and secure loyal vote banks for the ruling party.

What remains now is the proposed discussion in the Assembly over the issue. Considering the opinion building up in all quarters against the decision, the debate promises to be lively. But whether it will succeed in getting a shrewd politician like Hegde to reconsider his decision is another matter.

—SRINIVASA PRASAD

G. DEEPAK PAWAR

"The state Government is trying to snatch the privileges of the Scheduled Tribes."

B. BASAVALINGAPPA
Congress(I) MLA

G. DEEPAK PAWAR

"After 1977 (when the Centre stopped the areawise break-up), everybody started claiming to be everybody else."

K. SRINIVASA ALVA
DIG Civil Rights Enforcement Wing

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MARUTI DEALERS

Rewarding Links

DEALERSHIPS for a product like the Maruti, which virtually sells itself, have been among the most surefire business propositions of recent years. Inevitably, there was a huge rush for the dealerships when Maruti Udyog invited applications in two lots in 1983 and 1984. Eventually, the company violated its own guidelines on selecting dealers, took contradictory decisions, and in the process helped members of the Congress(I), or people close to the party, to walk away with quite a few of the dealerships. Assistant Editor PRABHU CHAWLA*'s report:*

IF EVERYONE with a will and a wallet has jumped on to the Maruti bandwagon, so has the Congress(I), some of whose leading lights have bagged the prized dealerships for the country's hottest property on wheels. Indeed, being a member of the country's biggest political party seems almost to have become something of an asset in being appointed Maruti Udyog's dealer—almost one-third of the company's 38 dealers appointed in two rounds, in 1983 and 1984, across the country belong to the ruling party, or are linked to it through relatives or friends. Another half a dozen are friends of people in high places in either the Government or Maruti Udyog itself.

Consider some examples.

► Ansari Brothers are well-known in Srinagar as civil contractors and politicians. One of the brothers is none other than Maulvi Iftiquar Ansari, leader of the 26-member Congress(I) Jammu and Kashmir legislature party. His brother's newly floated company, Ansari Motors, was allotted a Maruti dealership last year.

► Then there is Pasco Motors Automobile in Chandigarh, owned by B.L. Passi, 47, a prominent TELCO dealer and Congressman in the city who was once appointed on to the board of a nationalised bank at a time when numerous prominent Congressmen were thus honoured. He denies any links with a political party and claims that he got the agency on merit.

► A third case is that of Amla, a Congress(I) member of Parliament from Jammu, whose Kashmir Motor Corporation has got the nod from the Maruti Udyog Board.

Even close friends and associates of the Congress(I) have benefited. One of Maruti's Delhi dealerships has gone to Ganga Automobiles, owned by Ashwani Suri, the 25-year-old son of businessman Sagar Suri, who had very close relations with both Indira Gandhi and Sanjay Gandhi. Another dealership in the capital has gone to Competent Motors, floated by Raj Chopra, who deals in furniture and civil construction and who is known to be close to the Congress(I)'s new elite. Aganall Motors of Delhi is also close to the Maruti's big wigs.

In Calcutta, the car company's dealership has gone to Machino-Techno (Sales) Pvt Ltd, owned by M.D.Jindal, brother-in-law of Swraj Paul, the London-based businessman who is a well-known friend and admirer of the late prime minister. Last year, Maruti favoured Jindal with a second dealership in Asansol.

To add to this long list, there is the case of Suresh Kalmadi, the Congress(S) MP who last year made a concerted pitch to get his party to merge with the Congress(I). Kalmadi's Sai Services has been given the Maruti dealership for Pune.

Sometimes, the dealerships have been contested even among those in the charmed circle of the politically well connected. In J & K, Maruti initially decided to grant a dealership in Srinagar to Rafiq Sadiq, son of Mohammed Sadiq, the former chief minister of Jammu & Kashmir. Rafiq represents a major liquor manufacturer in the Kashmir valley, and was selected as a Maruti dealer after the company rejected seven other contenders. He was issued a letter of intent and he sought a piece of land in the state's summer capital. But once he started construction, Maruti suddenly changed its mind, and objections were raised about Rafiq's financial capability and about the design of his show-room. Before he could complete work on the workshop and the show-room, Ansari Brothers appeared on Examples abound of dealerships having been given to people close to the Congress(I). Some of them have been doubly lucky in that they have been given dealerships in more than one town.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the scene. Rafiq soon went to court when Maruti Udyog started releasing cars booked in Srinagar through Kashmir Motor Corporation, and later appointed Ansari as the dealer.

Others who fell out of favour were the original dealers of the Maruti company that Sanjay Gandhi originally floated as a private enterprise. But there have been two exceptions—Mandovi Motors of Bangalore and Mahalaxmi Motors of Hyderabad.

OTHER examples abound of dealerships having been given to people close to the Congress(I) in Lucknow, Guwahati, Patna, Bombay, Jaipur and Ahmedabad. And some of the dealers have been doubly lucky in that they have been given dealerships in more than one town. This has happened in West Bengal, Gujarat, Karnataka and Kerala. But R.C.Bhargava, managing director of Maruti Udyog, justifies this by arguing that it was done in those cases where a single dealership in one town did not generate enough revenue for the business to be worthwhile for the dealer. "Our original estimate was that each unit should be able to sell 350 to 400 cars every month to stay in business. Wherever we find that in one city the sale is less than the bare minimum, we try to allot another city so that it becomes a viable proposition."

It is, of course, no disqualification to belong to the Congress(I) if someone wants a Maruti dealership. And, in any case, the company had left matters vague when it advertised for dealers, merely saying: "The main criteria for appointing dealers shall be the ability of the dealer to provide a standard of customer service which is comparable to that available in developed countries, to maximise the market for Maruti and to project and develop the highest possible image of the company." While no precise yardsticks for making judgements on these points may have been possible, the company's board of directors decided that anyone dealing in a competing product would not be eligible for a Maruti dealership. The guidelines also stipulated that prospective dealers should possess some automobile expertise and financial strength.

But these guidelines have been observed more in the breach while handing out dealerships to members of the Congress(I) and others. Thus, Ansari Brothers in Srinagar were essentially civil contractors with no previous experience in the automobile business. Raj Chopra in Delhi was equally innocent of any automobile background, having been a businessman dealing in furniture and civil construction. Rafiq Sadiq had been a liquor distributor in Kashmir, while M.D. Jindal in Calcutta was known as a shrewd commodity trader.

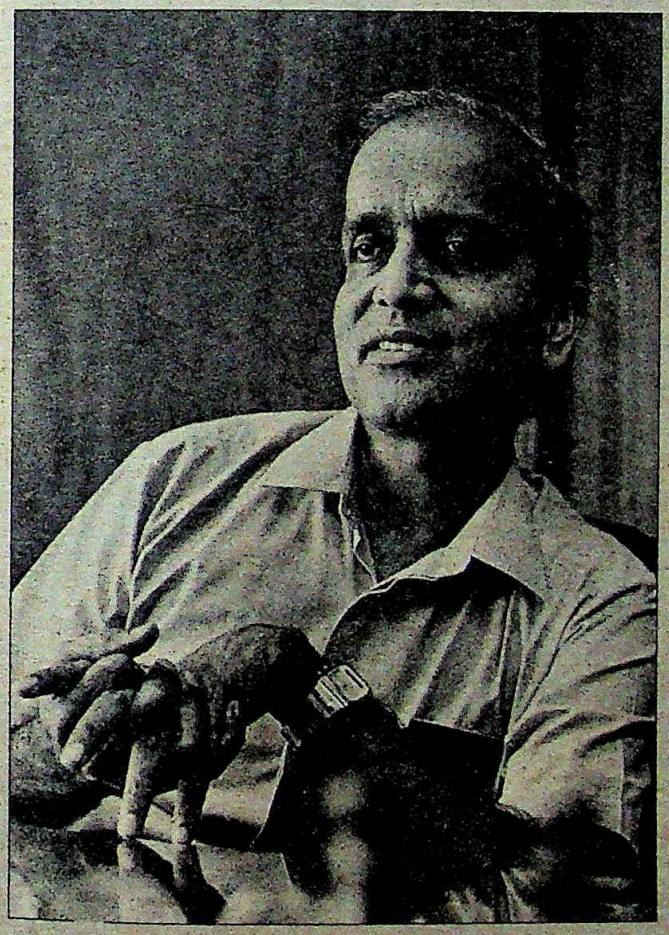
Suresh Kalmadi of the Congress(S) fell into a different category here, because he had been running a motor garage earlier. Nevertheless, Maruti Udyog is clearly not fully happy so far with his record as a dealer, and a defensive Bhargava said: "It is a new dealership and he will be able to come up to our expectations soon."

Some of the other favoured dealers were appointed in violation of the second major guideline decided on by Maruti Udyog—that the dealer should not be dealing in products of rival companies. Thus, Amla was a prominent dealer for cars manufactured by the rival Premier Automobiles of Bombay. Indeed, the Maruti Board had rejected his 1983 application for a Srinagar dealership on this ground. Now, the company's officials justify their appointing him as a dealer on the ground that the Maruti dealership is for Jammu, while his Premier dealership is in Srinagar. But the fact is that Amla and his relatives managing his business are selling both Premier and Maruti cars in the same city, and have not even been able to build a show-room so far.

The case of Ashwani Suri in Delhi is not so clear-cut. The Suri family's Delhi Automobiles is a prominent Premier dealership in the city. But a spokesman of Ashwani Suri's Ganga Automobiles argued last fortnight that "we have absolutely no connection with other companies, and none of the directors of Delhi Automobiles is a member of our board of directors. If any one of the family's relatives is a dealer for another car company, that doesn't disqualify us from doing an independent business if we deserve it." Added Bhargava: "They were perhaps the best firm among the applicants available at that time from Delhi."

The "exclusively for Maruti" condition seems to have been relaxed in other cases also. Established automobile agencies in Delhi, like Sikand Motors and Pearey Lal and Sons, were initially rejected by Maruti Udyog since they dealt in rival products. But this factor was ignored last year when the company appointed them dealers in

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



"We have selected dealers purely on their merit. It so happened that some of them had political connections."

R.C. BHARGAVA
managing director, Maruti Udyog

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Delhi and Meerut.

On some occasions, new considerations have dictated the appointment of dealers. For instance, nowhere in the advertisements or application forms for the second round of dealerships in 1984 was it stated that sportsmen or sportswomen would get preferential treatment. Nevertheless, Deepak Bhargawa, national junior tennis champion and son of a millionaire in Allahabad, was appointed a dealer because of his record in sport, though the company took the precaution of getting a letter from the State Bank of India in Allahabad that Bhargawa was capable of investing Rs 25 lakh in the dealership.

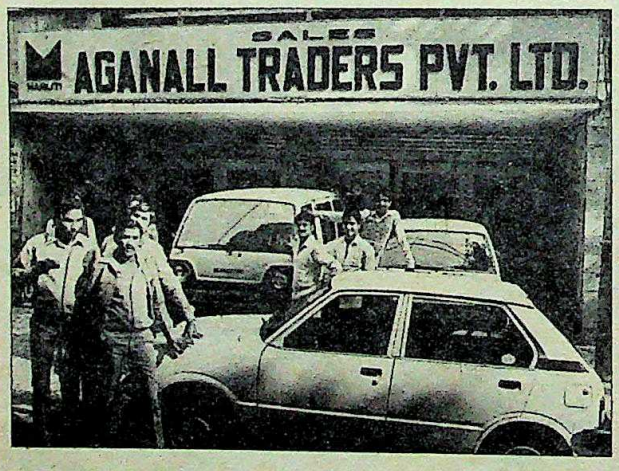
The second person appointed in the sportsmen category was Rajiv Bhale of Aurangabad, who has considerable expertise in horse-racing. Asked how dealerships had been awarded on the basis of a previously unspecified criterion, Maruti's Bhargava explained: "There are only two dealerships given on the basis of performance in sport. But at the same time, there were no better applicants either."

SUCH vagaries in choosing 38 dealers out of over 400 applicants have meant that while many were rejected on grounds of having no previous experience in the automobile business, others were appointed after ignoring this point. And while some dealers of rival cars were rejected on this ground, others haven't. But Bhargava justified the selections on the ground that "we might have been subjective in our selection to the extent that we had to make a choice from among many claimants. But we put up all the applications to the Board, which took decisions on merit."

Ordinarily, all this might not have mattered very much one way or the other, but in Maruti's case, with over two lakh customers having put money down for the company's vehicles, and with the dealers getting Rs 2,000 per vehicle sold, a dealership can be a passport to small fortunes. In Calcutta, for instance, the dealer is estimated to have invested Rs 20 lakh, and earned a commission of Rs 70 lakh in the first two years. Total dealership commissions across the country already total Rs 12 crore on 60,000 vehicles sold.

Yet the quality of service offered to vehicle-owners has fallen far short of the international standards that the initial advertisement for dealers had talked about. There have been cases, like that of a Delhi-based journalist, who was given a new Maruti by a dealer, without the original keys. These were claimed to have been lost, and crude, locally-made duplicates were offered instead. Those who had accidents in their cars were grossly overcharged, no price lists were on display so that the customers could check that they were not being taken for a ride, and there were some indications of an insurance racket in operation. Maruti users have in the past had to wait as long as 20 to 30 days after making a booking to get their vehicles serviced: as many as 25 cars were offered for servicing every day, while some dealers could handle no more than 10. Spare parts have on occasion not been available for 40 days. Some users had to drive to the Maruti factory in Gurgaon, accompanied by a dealer's representative, to get the required spare part.

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



Maruti show-rooms in Delhi: passports to small fortunes

Yet another problem has been caused by delays in the refund of money and repayment of interest to those wanting to cancel their bookings, though these have been few and far between. Dealers do not forward the refund claims to Maruti Udyog because this involves labour without payment. And those who want to cancel their bookings are not allowed to approach the company directly.

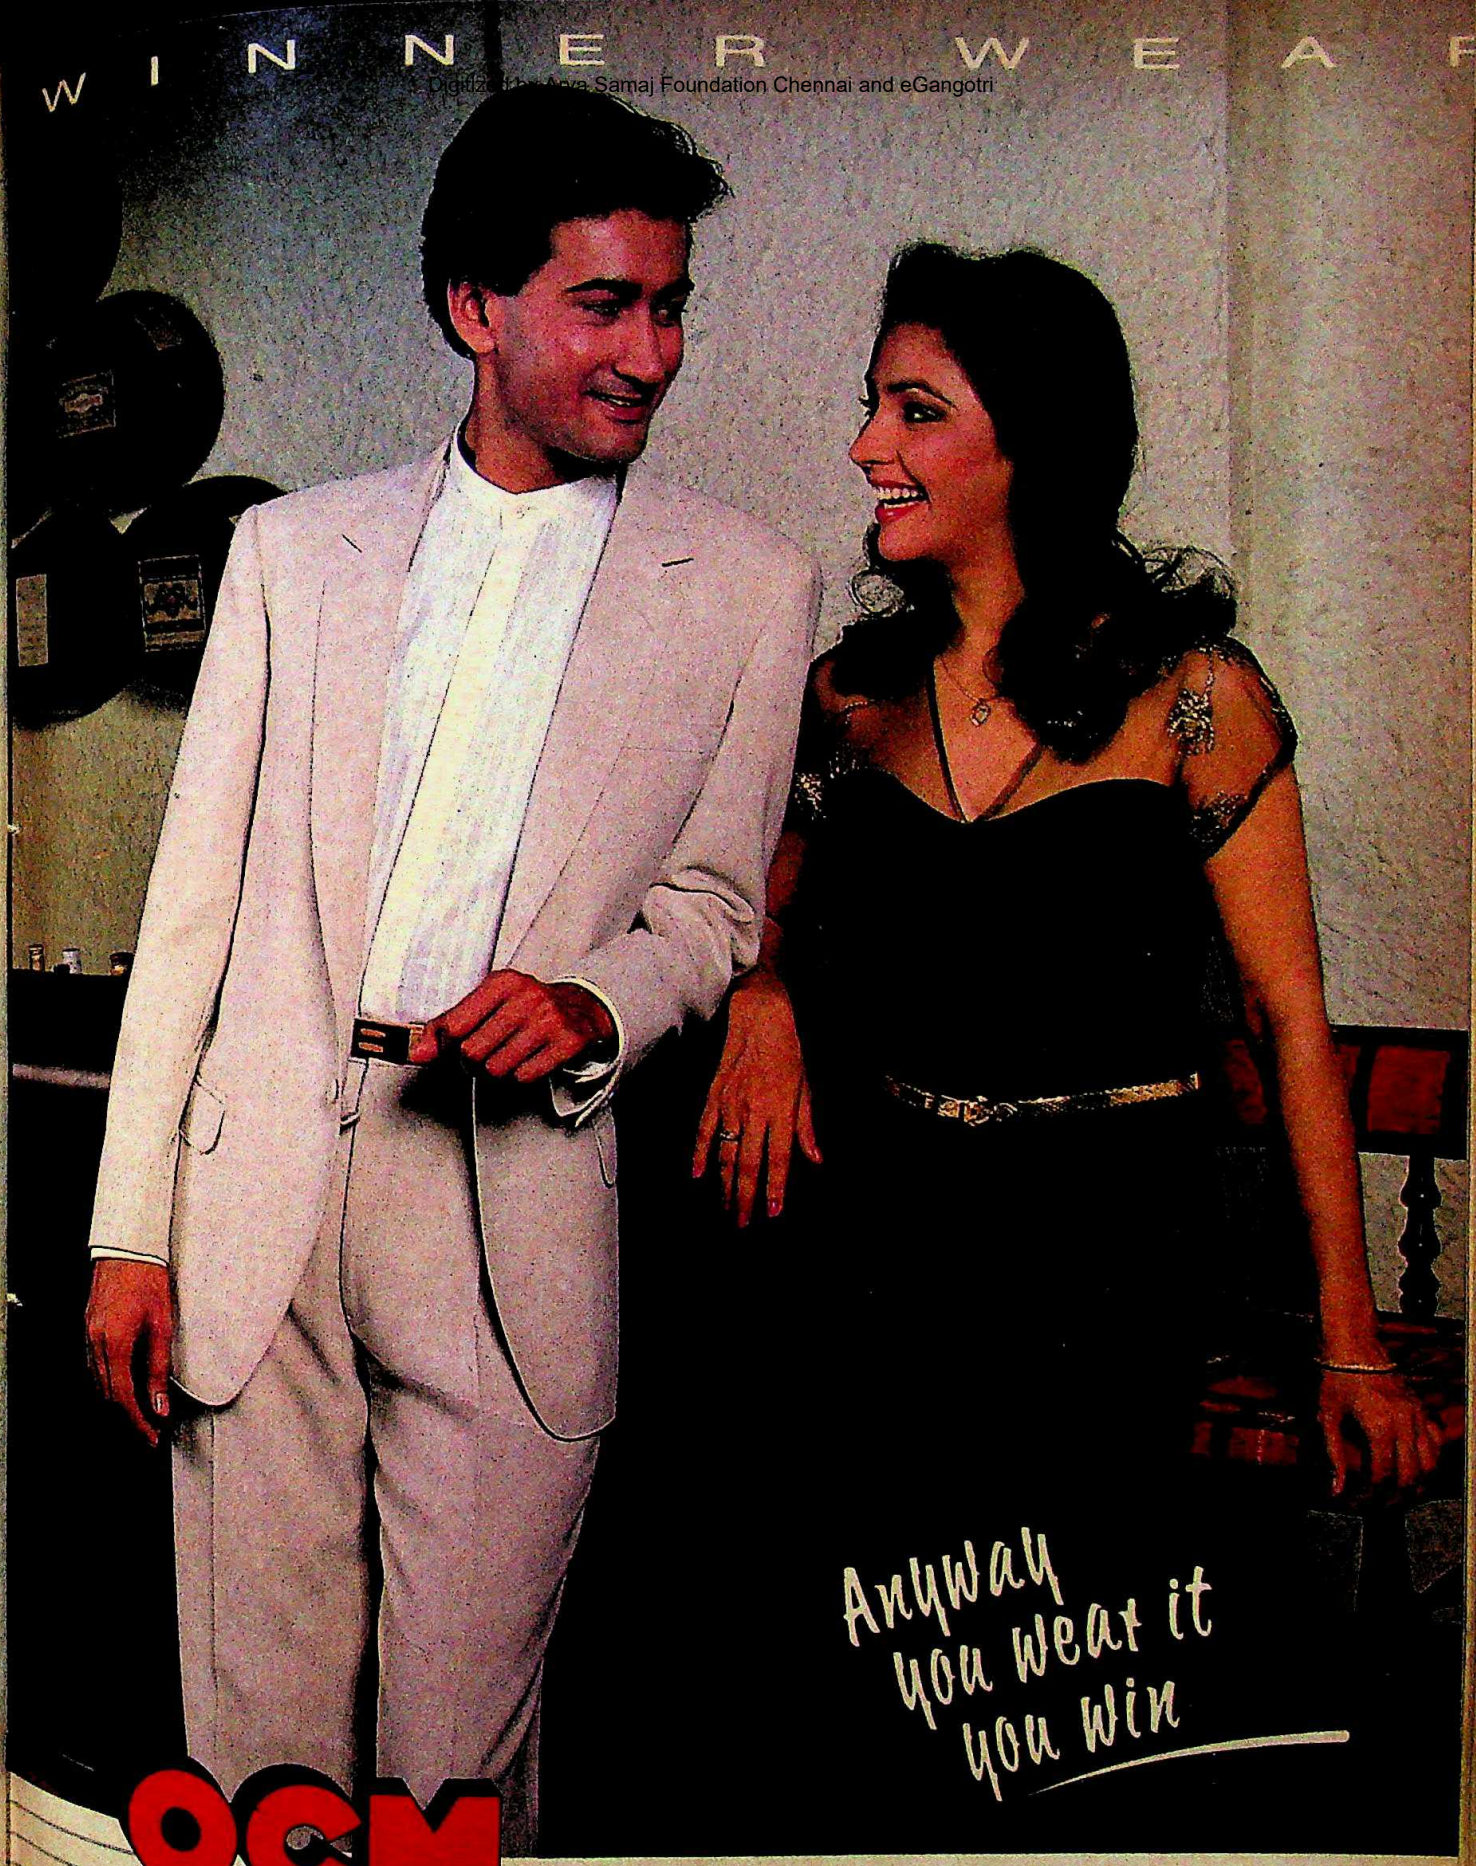
Maruti officials admit readily that their customer service has fallen short of expectations, but argue that this has nothing to do with the selection of dealers or their political connections. Said Bhargava: "We are aware of the problems. The dealers are not able to cope because of the overbooking in some places like Delhi. But none of the established people applied for dealerships earlier. We had to pick the best. We have selected dealers purely on their merits. It so happened that some of them had political connections."

He however, said that since the dealers were not delivering as expected, the company was thinking of appointing more than 50 authorised service stations in the capital in order to create some competition in the market and thereby give some relief to hard-pressed owners of Marutis. But he insisted that the problems being faced were as a rule because of the "massive response that Maruti vehicles have got from the people. Which other public sector organisation in this country has been able to build such a professional commercial network?"

But that, of course, is the wrong question to ask. The right question would be whether the dealers were appointed on an impartial basis, or whether political connections played an all-important role in their appointment and whether these and other dealers have delivered in the manner that had been promised.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A Pope's Pilgrimage

BENEDICTION at the Sacred Heart Cathedral in Delhi. A visit to Mother Teresa's Nirmal Hriday in Calcutta. Sacrament amidst the coconut groves in Kerala. Communion in the portals of the grand 390-year-old Basilica of Bom Jesus in north Goa.

From a crisp morning in February, when Pope John Paul II, dressed in a resplendent white cassock and sash, stepped down from an Alitalia aircraft at Delhi airport, kneeling to kiss the earth, till his sombre departure from Bombay after a 10-day tour that is the longest ever undertaken by a Pope, it was an event as much for the faithful, the 13-million-strong community of Indian Catholics, as the curious. The multitudes thronged the roads, airports and public grounds as the Polish-born Pontiff zipped around 13 Indian cities, borne by Indian Air Force planes and the ubiquitous bullet-proof Popemobile.

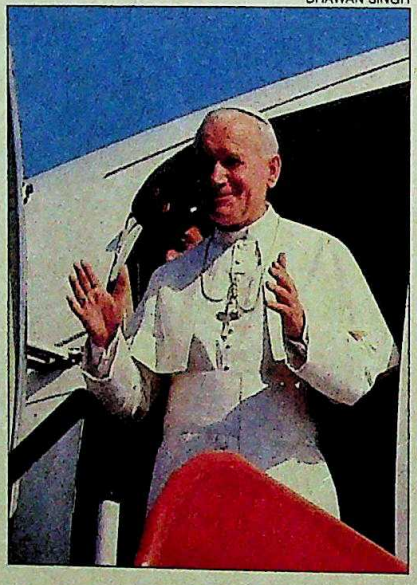
The Vicar of Christ and the 264th successor to St Peter came to India at the joint invitation of the President, Giani Zail Singh, and the Catholic Bishops' Conference of India (CBCI). But the fact that no other Pope had visited India on an official invitation (Paul VI had come in 1964 to attend the World Eucharist meet), imbued the Indian Catholic church with a new sense of fulfilment and pride.

Though the crowds were not as overwhelming as the Pope is used to around the world, and despite the attempts at protest by some Hindu organisations, the papal visit was more than just ceremonial, thanks to the electrifying personality of 65-year-old Karol Josef Wojtyla (pronounced voytila), artist, musician, theatre actor, mystic and the most politically aware Pope of recent times. And the faithful did come from great distances—the Delhi mass was attended by people who had come from as far as Rajasthan, Bihar, and Nepal.

During his stay, he greeted his Indian audiences in Hindi, Bengali, Assamese, Khasi, Tamil, Konkani and Malayalam. "I come in friendship with deep desire to pay honour to all your people and to your different cultures," he said at the mass to a gathering of 25,000 people at New Delhi's Indira Gandhi Stadium. At the Rajghat samadhi of Mahatma Gandhi, he broke protocol to flop down on his knees and remained in trance-like meditation for over five minutes until his fellow-bishops had to nudge him into wakefulness.

At least three million people turned out in the scorching sun in Trichur, Cochin, Kottayam and Trivandrum to see and listen to the Pope. He conducted holy mass at all the stops, and was entertained to dances, hymns and little welcoming playlets in typical Kerala art forms like Kathakali, Mohiniyattam and Oppana. The highlight of his visit was, of course, the beatification of Father Kuriakose Elias Chavara (1805-1871), a Carmelite monk, and Sister Alphonsa (1910-1946), a Clarist nun. The function at Kottayam's Nehru Stadium was witnessed by about 8 lakh people. Said Annamma Joseph, an 80-year-old woman from Palai, who knew Sister Alphonsa: "This is one of the greatest moments for Christianity in India." The unique aspect of the beatification ceremony was that, for the first time in the history of the Roman Catholic church, it took place according to the Syro-Malabar rites.

BHAWAN SINGH



Pope John Paul II arriving in Delhi

In Goa, with a Catholic population of 350,000, the corner-stone of the Pope's visit was his address to the clergy in the Basilica of Bom Jesus. He arrived at the Basilica directly from Mangalore, was given a tumultuous welcome by the 200,000 Brothers and Sisters—men in the Basilica, the nuns outside—venerated the relics of St Francis Xavier, and left with the parting words to the nuns: "Today I have a message for you...(long pause)...the message is that next time you will sit inside the church and your brother priests outside." People travelled to Panaji, the capital, in the early hours of the morning in buses, trucks and ferries, dressed in their Sunday best. Roberto Mascarenhas of Bambolin watched the Popemobile vanish in a dusty haze and said: "This mass is the most memorable I have ever taken part in." The signs at the grounds in Panaji expressed the collective feelings brilliantly. Totus tuus, they proclaimed, meaning: entirely yours.

In Bombay, the Pontiff attended a youth rally at Shivaji Park where an audience of 1 lakh, carrying festoons and papal flags, had turned up. Even the Shiv Sena dropped its guard and Bal Thackeray himself attended the youth rally. In Calcutta, about 500 securitymen formed an impregnable arc outside as the smiling Pope went round Nirmal Hriday, the home of the destitutes and the dying, run by Mother Teresa's Missionaries of Charity. Its 86 inmates touched his robe, kissed his ring, and many broke down, calling him Baba. On his drive to the Delhi airport, he could not even look up and wave back at the crowd—his eyes were rivetted to the Romanised Bengali text of his next address, in Calcutta.

Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and Sonia spent some time with him at the Rashtrapati Bhavan. The Reverend Angelo Fernandez, Archbishop of Delhi, spoke of the "electric waves" of his hands as they touched the head of every ordinary man at his temporary residence. Lawrence, a 45-year-old electrician, convulsed with uncontrollable sobs when the papal hands were planted on his head.

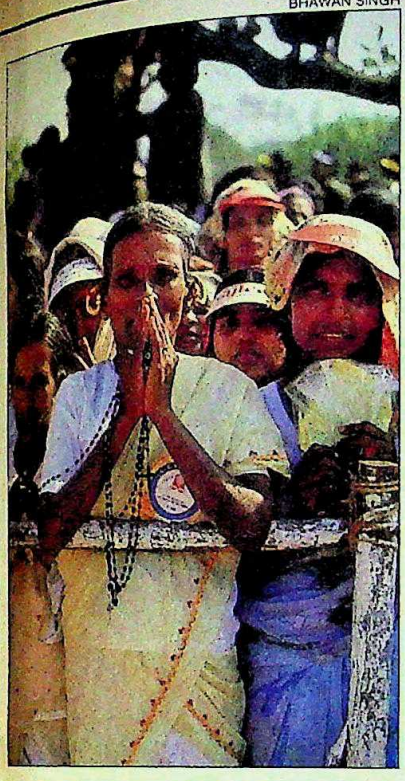
John Paul II's visit is a sure entry in India's episcopal history and a benchmark in Catholic annals. For the country as a whole, and its tapestry of composite culture, the ten days in February provided a rare glimpse of the man at the helm of the Holy See.

—SUMIT MITRA with bureau reports

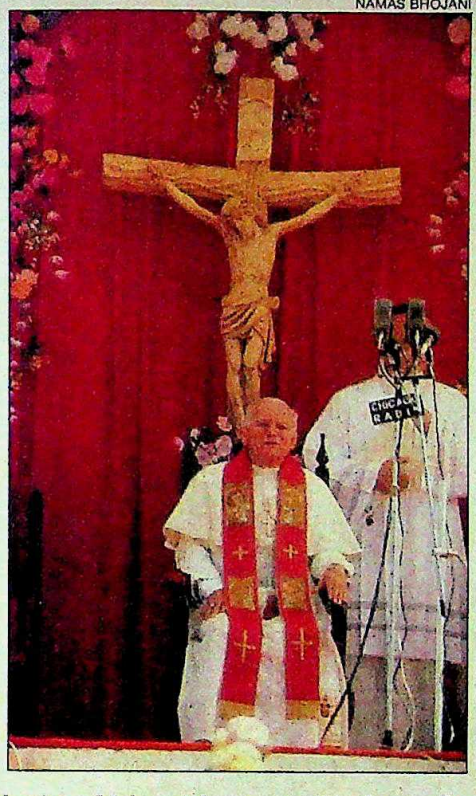
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

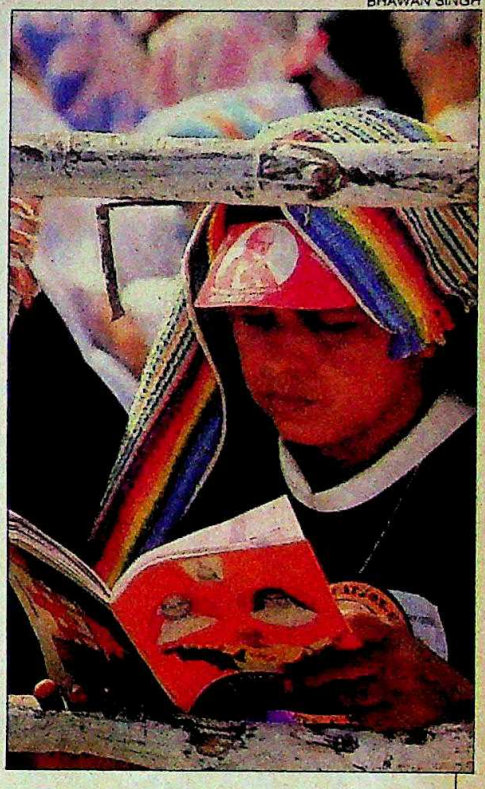
BHAWAN SINGH



NAMAS BHOJANI



BHAWAN SINGH

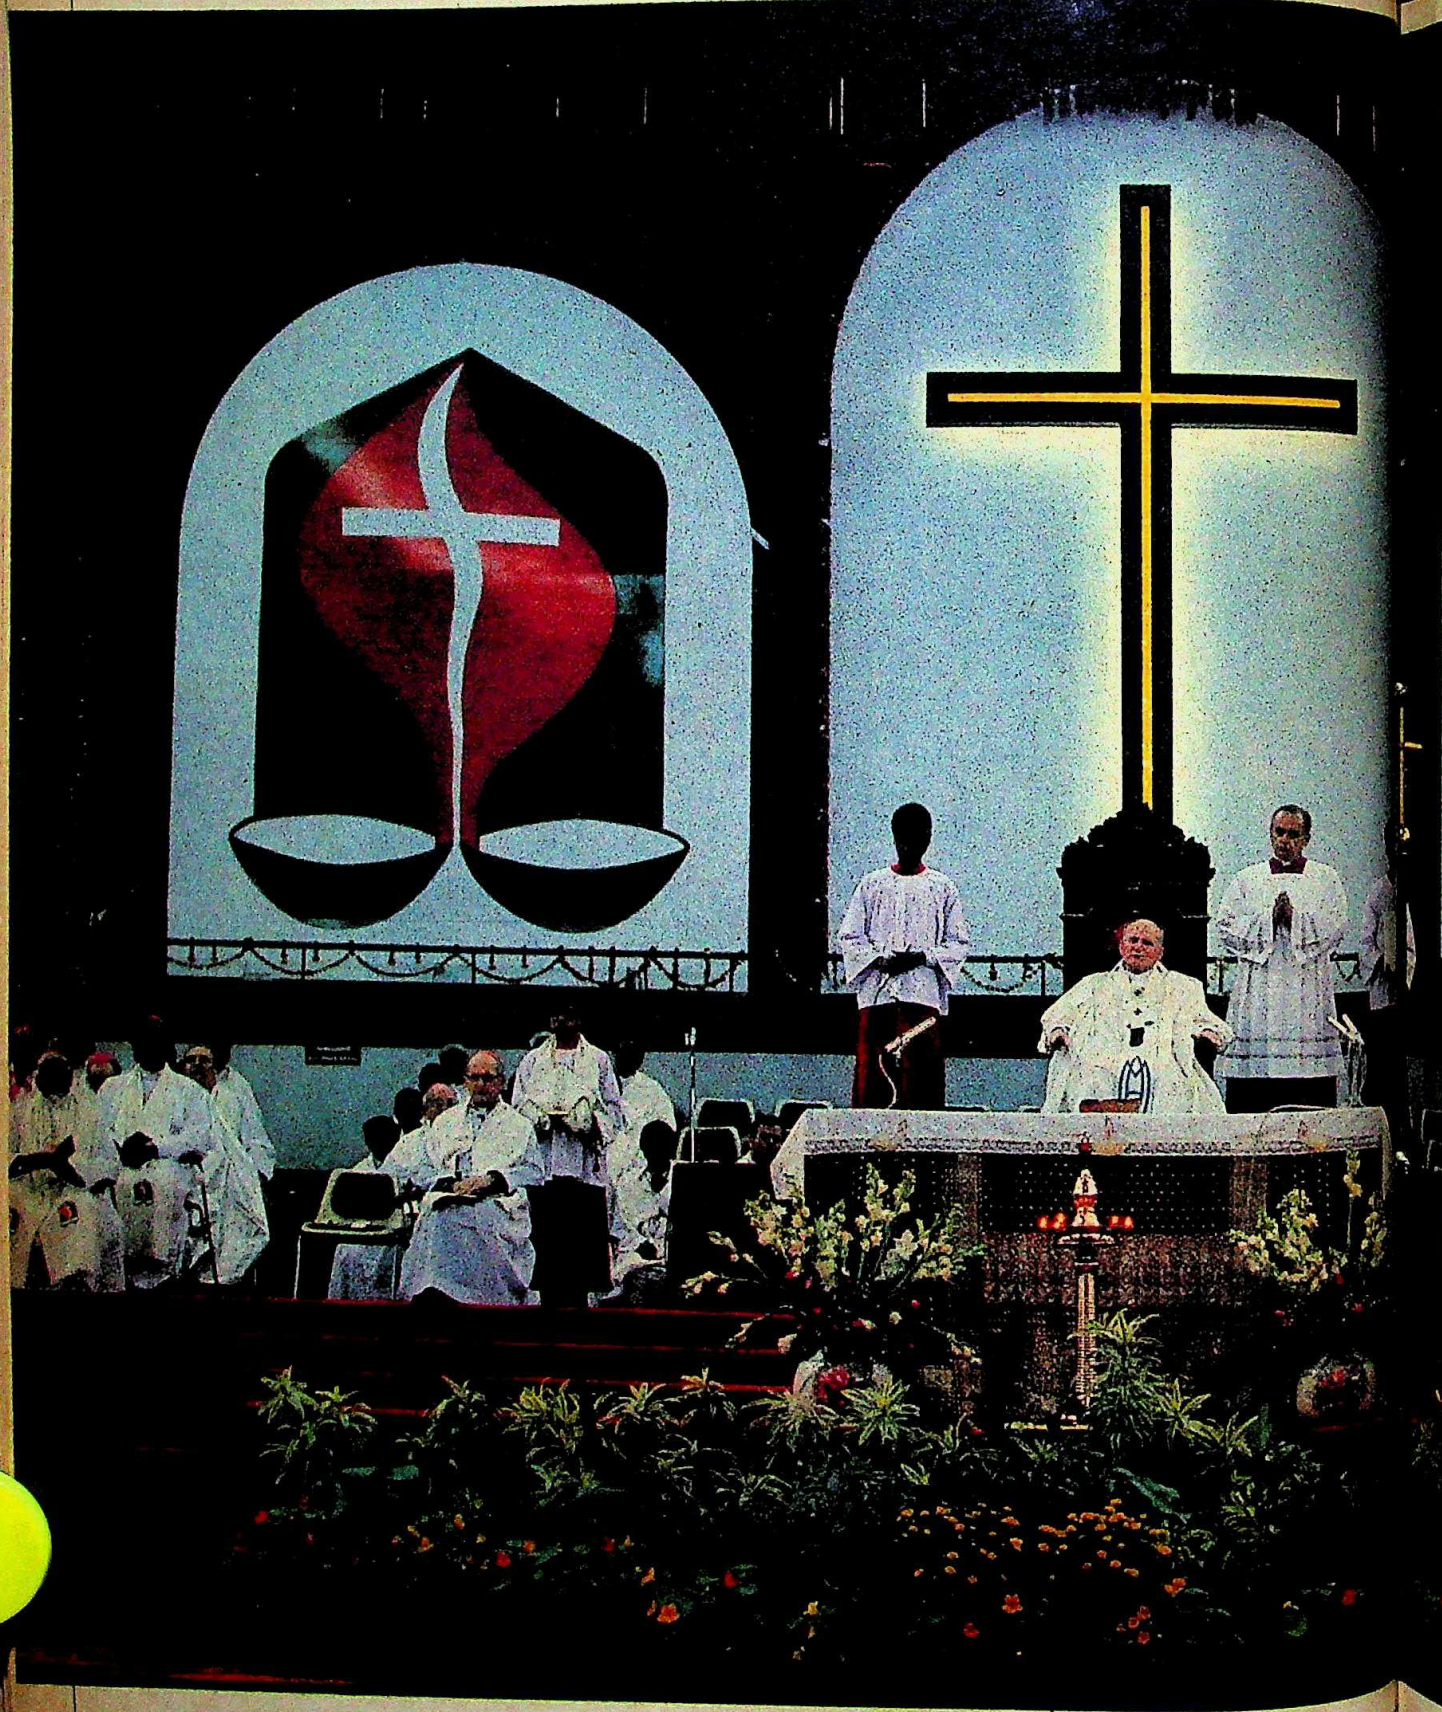


Being greeted at Delhi airport (below); and (above) devotees in Kerala; at a function in Goa; and a nun in Kerala

RAGHU RAI

main. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

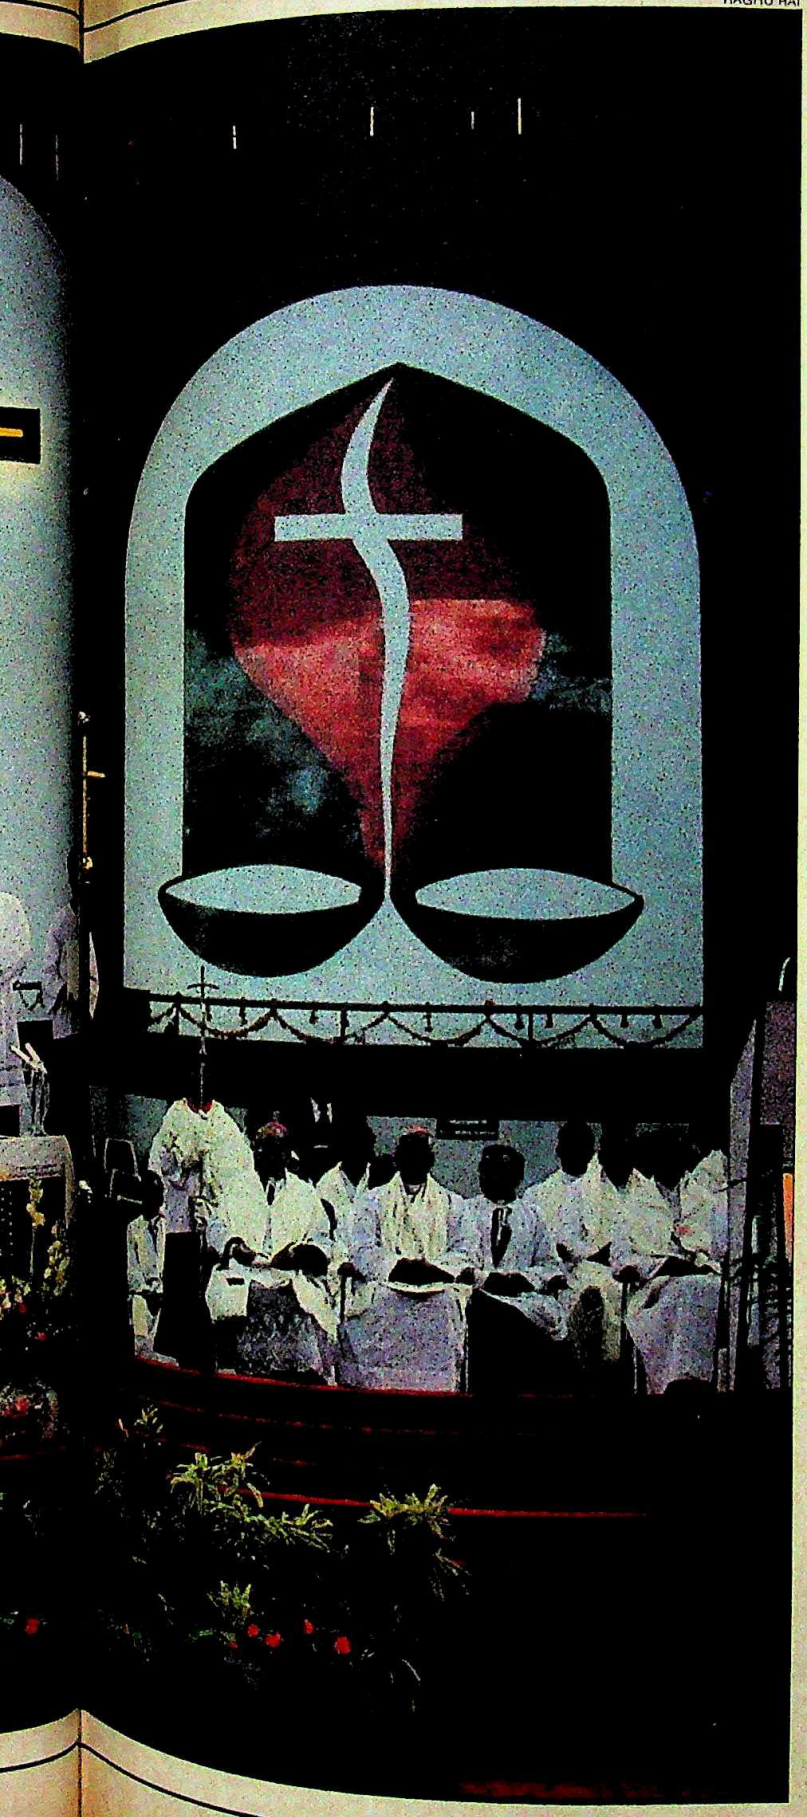
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



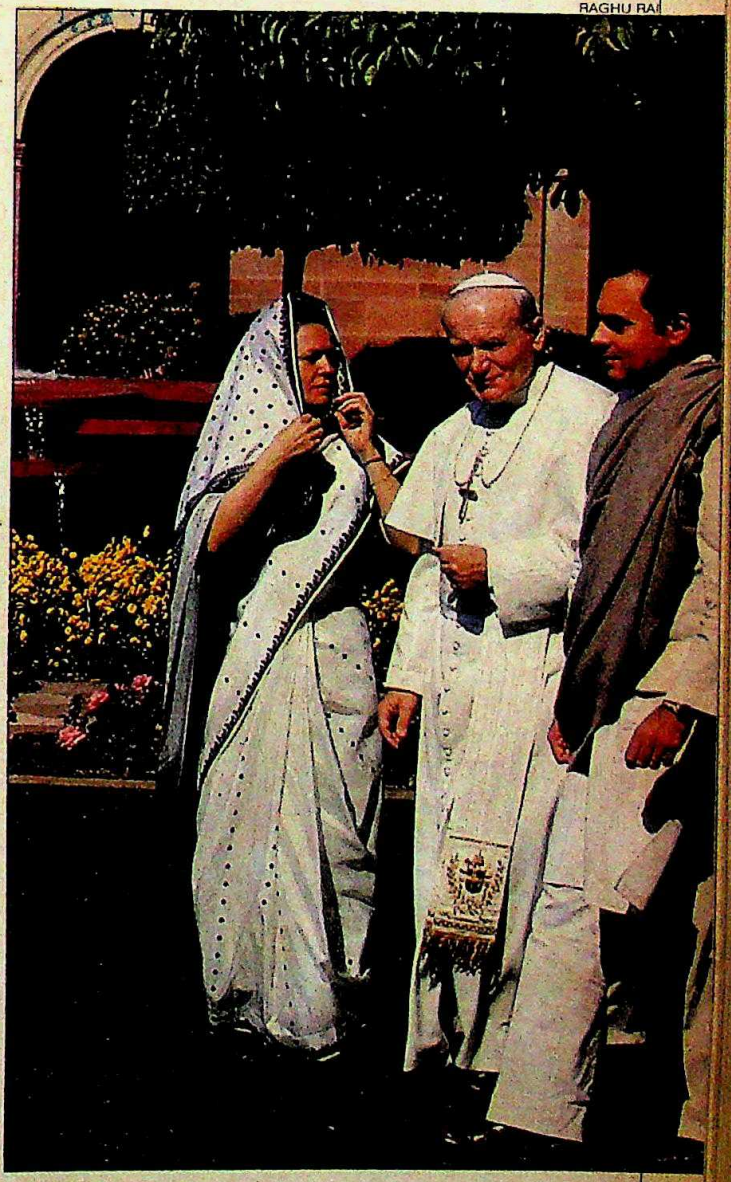
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI



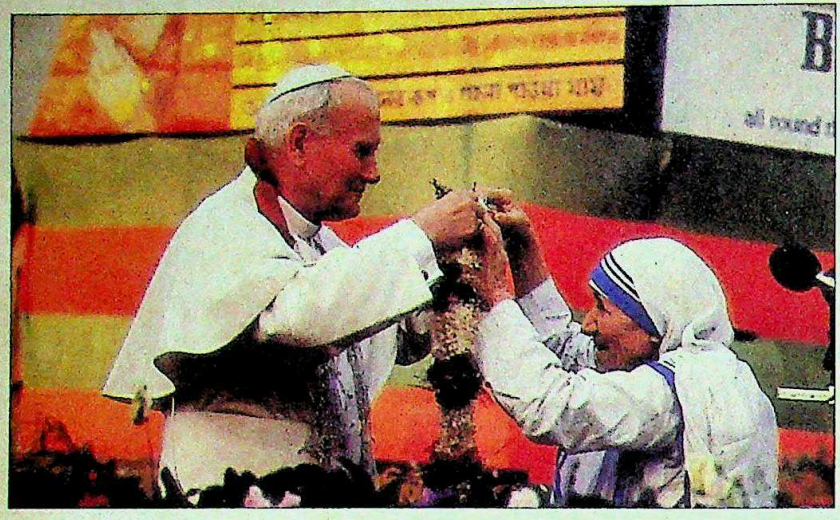
RAGHU RAI



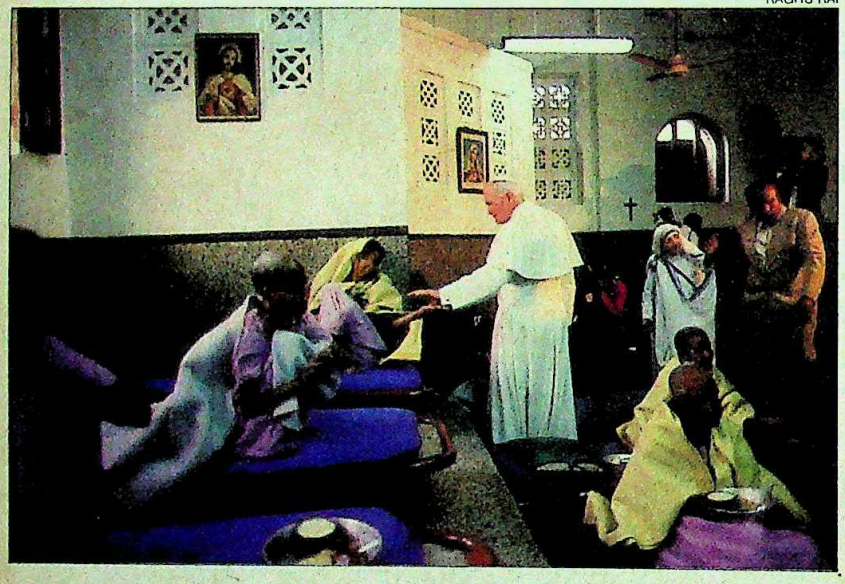
Celebrating mass at Indira Gandhi Stadium, Delhi, (left); waiting crowds (top); and with the Gandhis

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

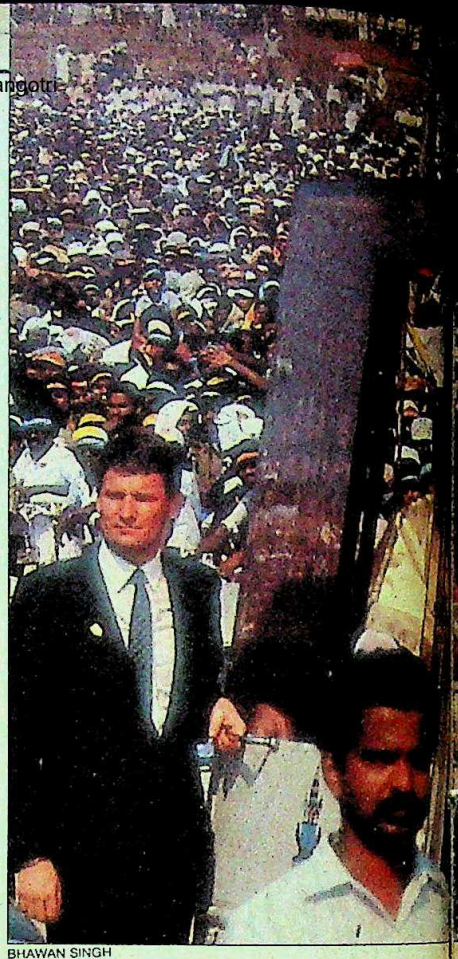


RAGHU RAI

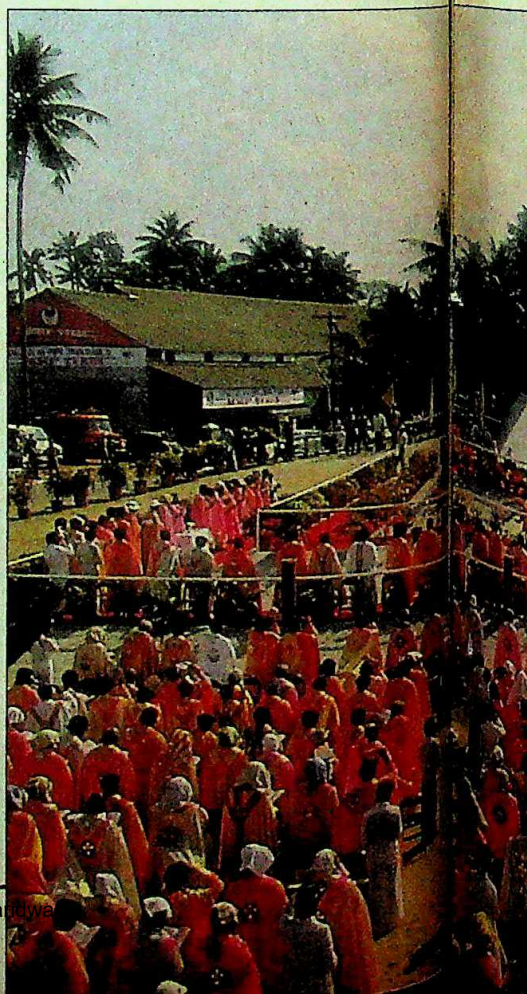


RAGHU RAI

RAGHU RAI



BHAWAN SINGH



With Mother Teresa (top); in Nirmal Hriday (centre); and Missionaries of Charity (above); in the Popemobile (top right); and beatification in Kottayam

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Ha

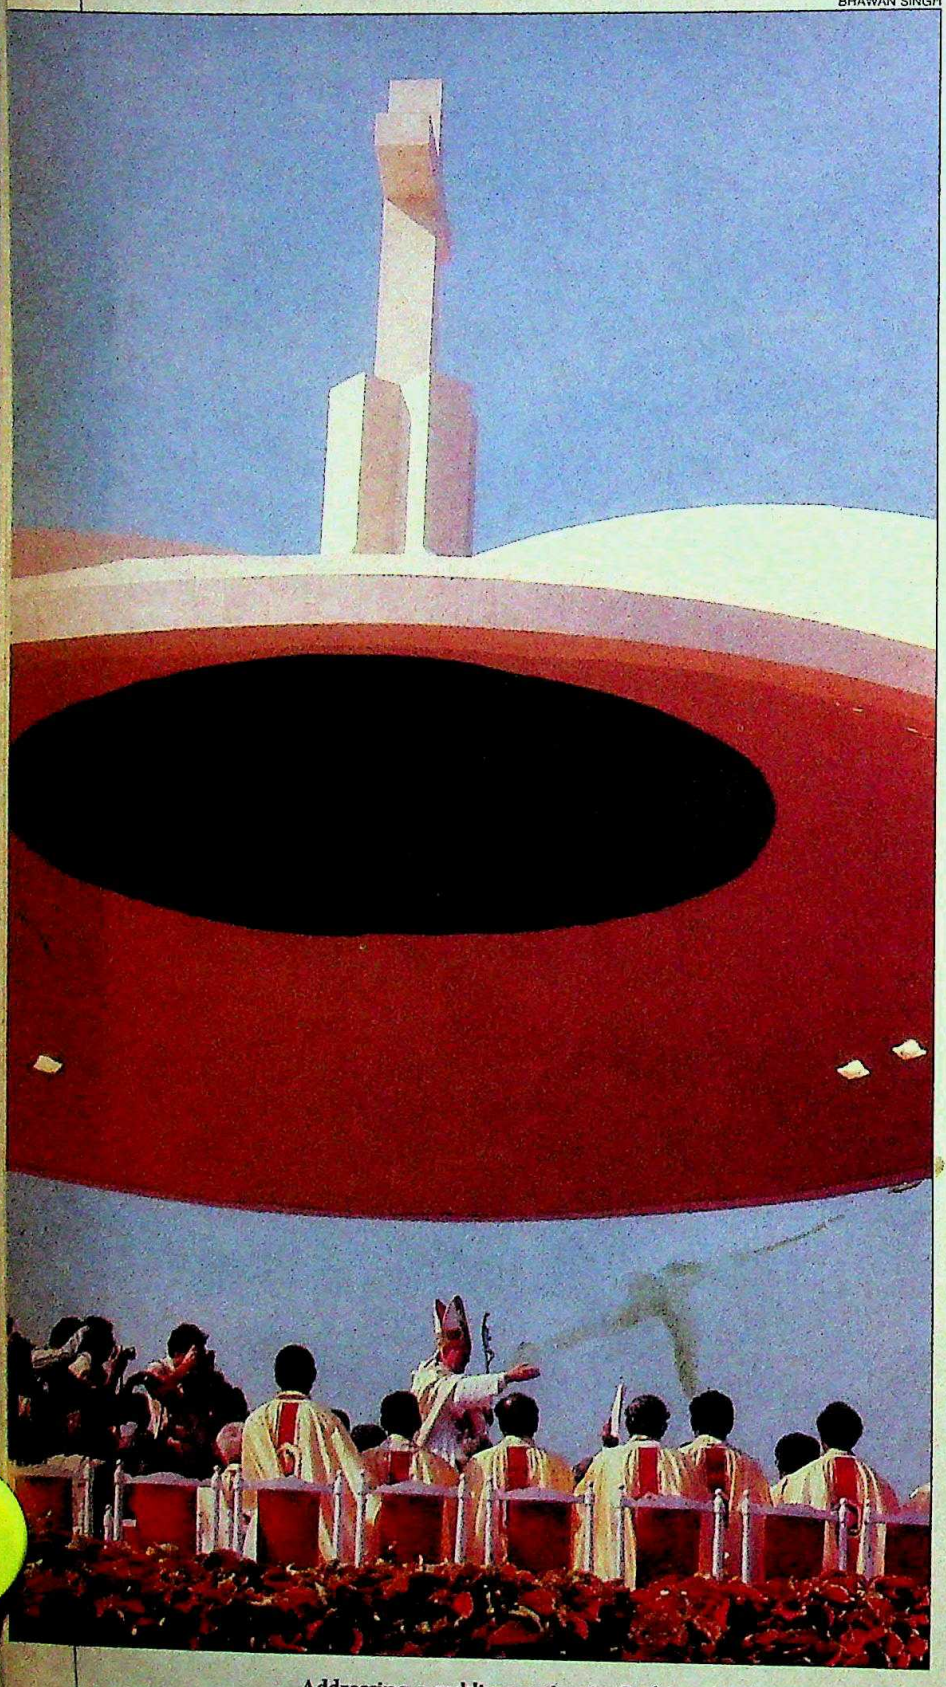
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHAWAN SINGH

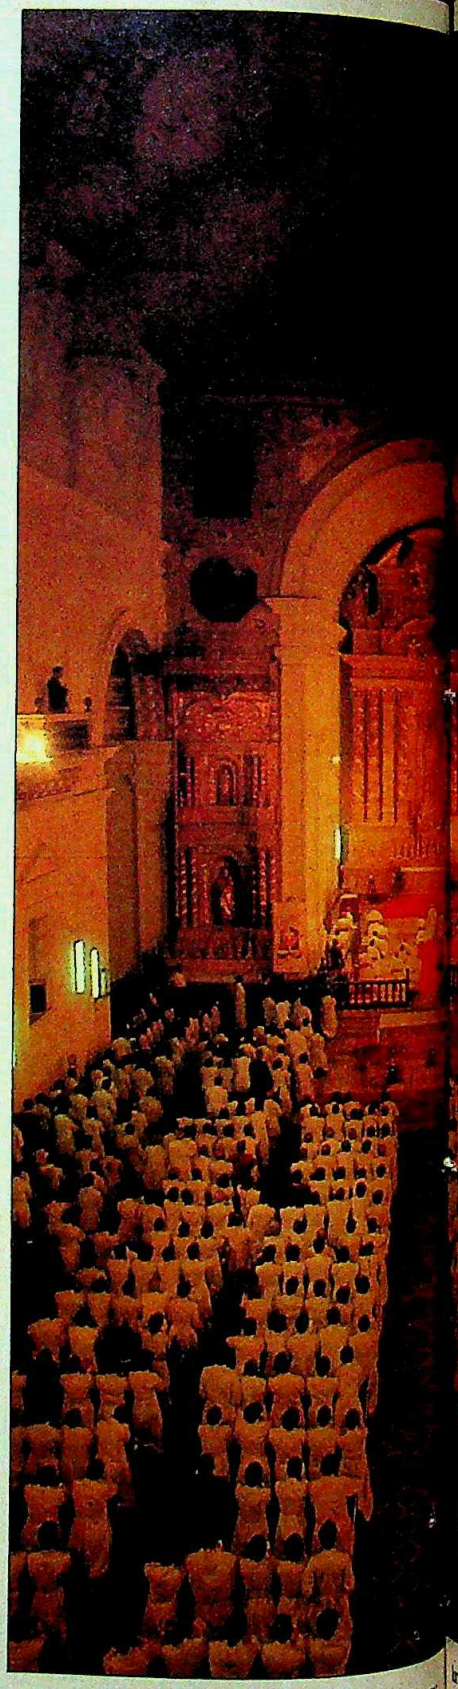
CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection. Harid

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHAWAN SINGH



Addressing a public meeting in Cochin

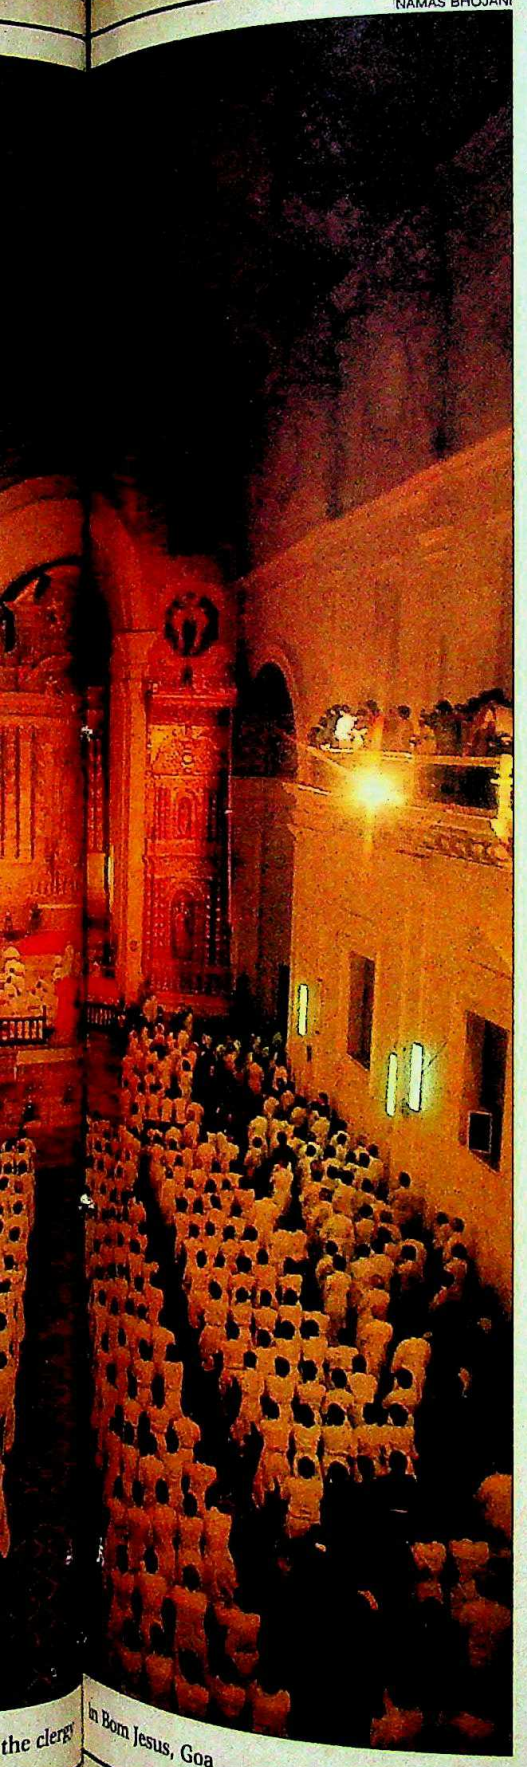


Meeting the clergy

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

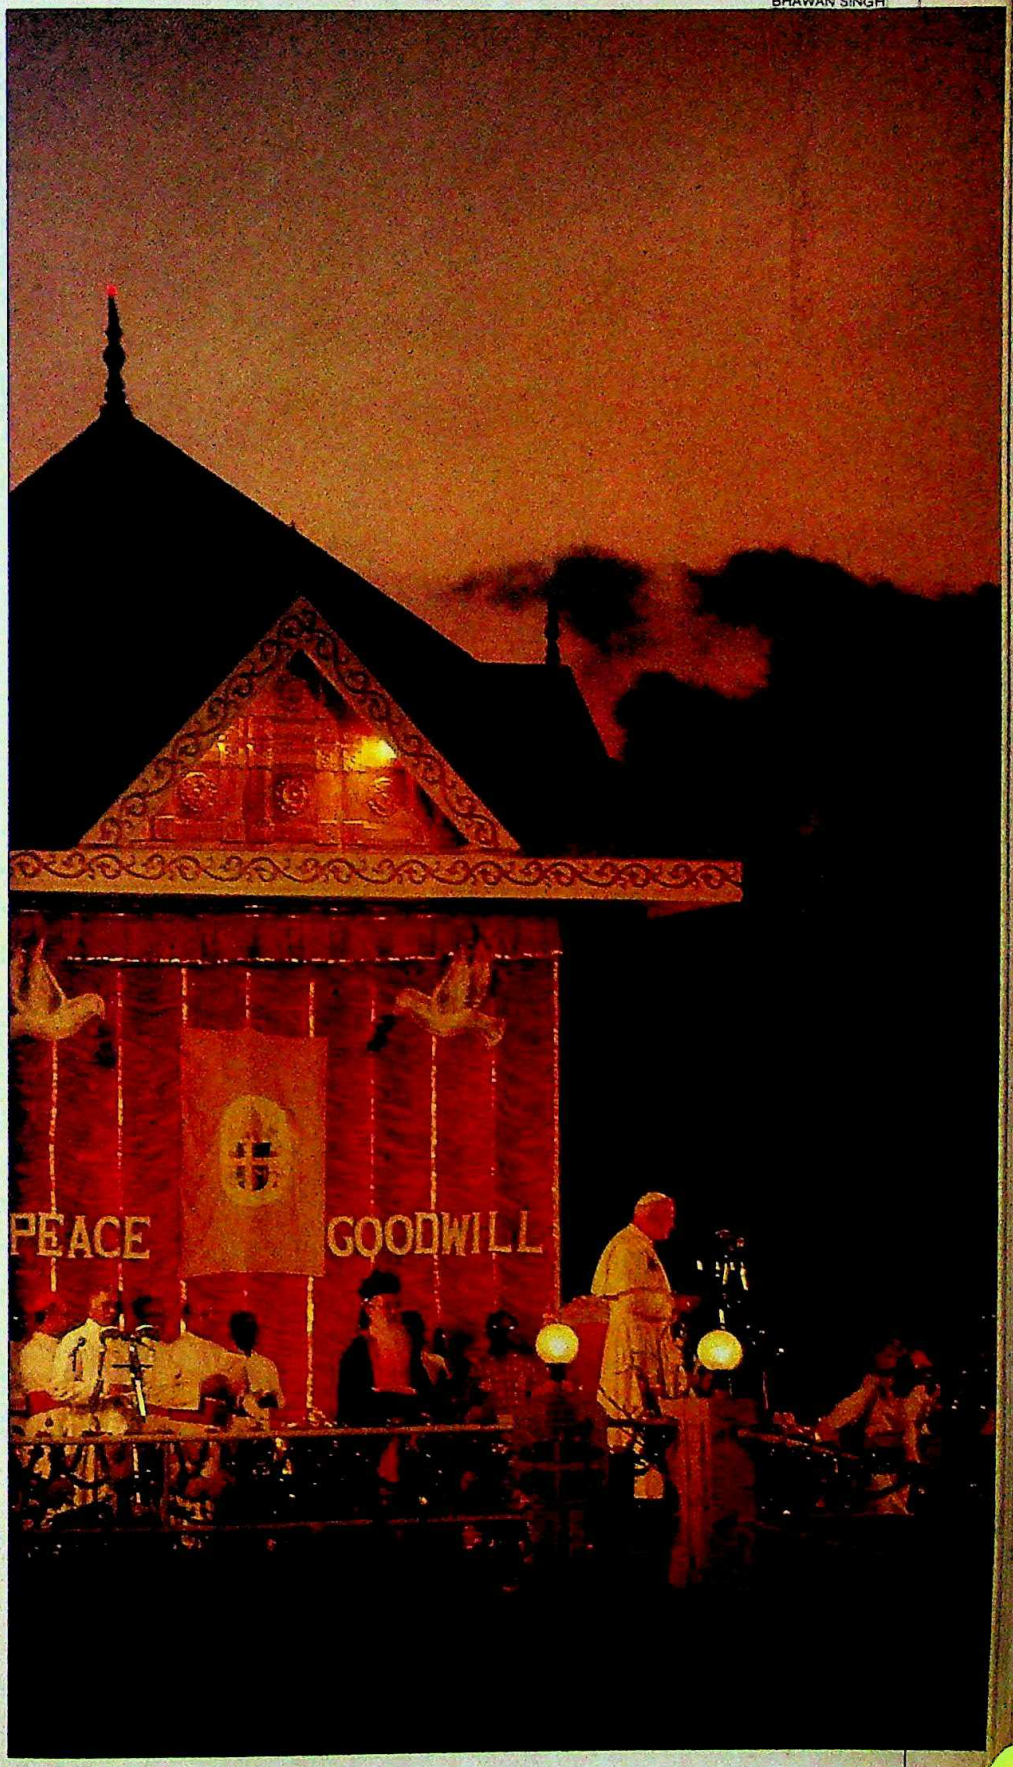
NAMAS BHOJANI



the clergy

in Born Jesus, Goa

BHAWAN SINGH



Celebrating mass in Trivandrum

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Hero Honda CD 100
It keeps the promise.

PERFOR-MANCE

High performance
On the road all over India, the Hero Honda CD 100 is fulfilling the promise it made. A motorcycle that combines power with elegance, total comfort and safety, trouble-free performance and unbelievable economy.

4

4 Stroke engine
The Hero Honda CD 100's 4 stroke engine gives maximum fuel efficiency. No carbon on plugs and no decarbonising required. Virtually no engine oil consumption. No need to mix oil with petrol. And no smoke.

Phenomenal fuel efficiency
We promised you higher fuel efficiency. The Hero Honda CD 100 gives 80 km/litre (at 40 km/hr with a load of 130 kgs.), which is even less than 9 paise per km.

Technolo world's Honda's sophistic have ma
name in the worl
2-wheele
Hero Ho product
Honda i

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Fo eGangotri

HONDA R&D

Technology from the world's No. 1
Honda's highly sophisticated R&D efforts have made it a household name in 150 countries and the world leader in 2-wheeler technology. The Hero Honda CD 100 is a product of the latest in Honda technology.

Honda service standards
At Hero Honda authorised service centres in India, you get what Honda motorcycle drivers all over the world experience. Prompt, efficient and courteous service, from technicians specially trained by Hero Honda.

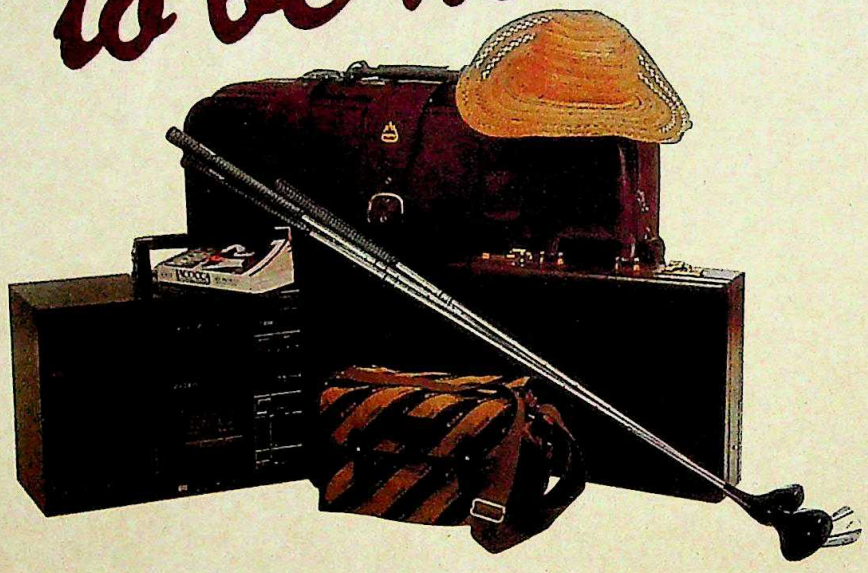
HERO HONDA

Committed to total customer satisfactio

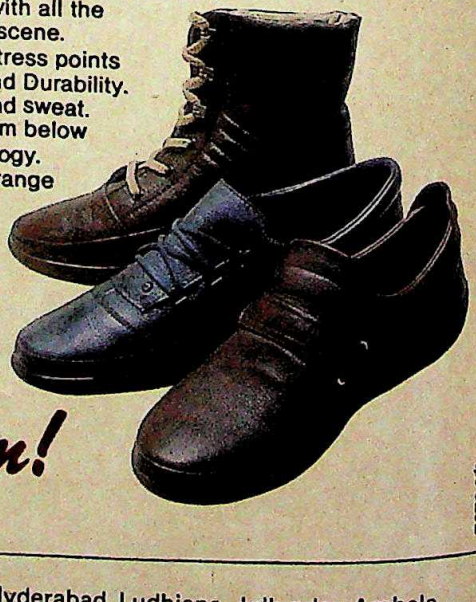
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's good to be home!



Tej is back. Fifteen years ago Tej had left for Europe. Shoe makers in Germany, France, Italy and Denmark were swept off their feet as Tej walked away with all the laurels there could be. NOW, Tej is all set to revolutionise the Indian scene.
TSF shoes, from Tej, have been designed after a careful analysis of stress points of natural walking motions. A blend of Elegance, Comfort, Flexibility and Durability.
Complete leather uppers add elegance to good looks. Also breathe and sweat. Unlike Synthetic uppers that make your feet sweat. The P.U. soles form below the uppers with the latest German Direct Injection Moulding Technology.
Resulting in the most supple and soft shoes ever. Available in a vast range of semi casuals. To caress your feet at all times.
TSF shoes—Formal or just for fun.
Things like these have never happened to you before.



TSF your feet deserve'em!

NOW AVAILABLE IN INDIA

For dealership enquires in Delhi, Bombay, Madras, Calcutta, Banglore, Hyderabad, Ludhiana, Jullunder, Ambala, Chandigarh, Jammu & Srinagar, Kanpur, Lucknow and Gauhati please write to M/s Tej International Pvt Ltd, M-295, Greater Kailash Part-II, New Delhi-110048.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Aids to Scandal

DESPITE the media blitz long before his visit, the hottest news in Kerala last fortnight was not the Pope. Not the Rama Swarup spy scandal, either. And certainly not the sudden petroleum price hike and price cut. Guess what made the front page? AIDS—that's right, that ungodly scourge called Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome. Splashed across some feet of newsprint in the leading Malayalam daily Mathrubhumi was the woeful tale of what was touted as the first AIDS case in India—a Malayalee called George Varghese, 23, fresh from the Gulf and lying ill in Trivandrum Medical College. Varghese, the newspaper said, had lost all hope and was now contemplating suicide. Naturally, what followed was a babble of voices—shocked, scared and sniggering. But before the din could grow any louder, a rival newspaper came out with a contradiction, from the state's Medical Education Director C.V. Kora, no less, supported by expert diagnosis that it was not AIDS at all. Varghese is now planning to sue Mathrubhumi.

Grand Rehearsal

FOR FOUR days, the dazed citizens of Lucknow watched in awe and wonderment and the Uttar Pradesh police went through the most puzzling paces. For four days, 18 companies of the Provincial Armed Constabulary—each consisting of 135 men—flanked by all the station house officers of Lucknow city leading their own motley band of cops,

S. PREMI

Road from Raj Bhavan: security drill paraded the length of the road from Raj Bhavan to Vidhan Bhavan last fortnight. A fleet of fire-engines stood at the ready near the Assembly as snaking ranks of silent home guards lined both sides of the barricaded road. And lurking stealthily around were the sinister figures of 500 CID sleuths who lent the scene an eerie overtone. The exercise, as disillusioned Lucknowites discovered, was a security rehearsal for Governor Mohammed Usman Arif. The opposition MLA's had threatened to gherao the governor on the opening day of the budget session on his way to the Assembly, in protest against his refusal to meet them in December last year. But alas, right on the eve of the planned gherao, the opposition leaders dropped in at Raj Bhavan and, over casual cups of chai, decided to drop the gherao plan. And the disappointed cops filed back to their barracks—with nary a lathi to wield nor a head to break.

Past and Present

THE KARNATAKA Assembly must be the only place where one hears the home minister waxing eloquent on horticulture and the law minister shouting himself hoarse on family welfare. The reason is not an all-sweeping interest in the general state of affairs. It is simply because the ministers are nowhere near the Vidhan Soudha when their own subjects are being discussed. So to make themselves heard in the Assembly, they have to make do with other subjects. This legislative absenteeism had grown so bad of late that Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde had to take note of it last fortnight, even as clouds hung over his own political future. Opening the budget session, a stern chief minister gave the truant MLA's the length of his tongue and told his ministers that they'd be better off spending more time in their offices than outside them. But Hegde could have bitten off his tongue as soon as he said that. For, soon after this, two BJP members rose in the legislative council to ask exactly how many trips Hegde himself had made to Delhi since he assumed office. "Forty-eight," replied a sheepish Hegde. Though he hastily tried to justify his jaunts, the point, alas, had been made.

Hegde: muster roll

Road to Posterity

THERE was a time, not too long ago, when neon signs flashed his name—all bathed in blue and tinsel and larger than life—on cinema halls all over Andhra Pradesh. Then he gave it all up and moved on to bigger, better things. Now, his name is splashed across regional and national dailies, government handouts and press releases and advertisements proclaiming the state's march to progress and development. But for Nandamuri Taraka Rama Rao, all this is not enough. The chief minister, like Oliver Twist, wants more. So when Hyderabad was busy electioneering for the 100-seat municipal corporation last fortnight, the chief minister issued an edict for renaming 20 roads in the city. And one of them—Road Number 1 in the swank Banjara Hills—was to be named after himself. The signs are to be repainted after the elections, for obvious reasons. But even then, people, being people, might still keep using the old name for Tarakarama Marg for quite some time. Old habits, after all, die hard. And who would know this better than the star-turned-chief minister himself?

Rama Rao: path-finder

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Baba Gurdev Singh with AISSF activists: the inheritors

PUNJAB EXTREMISTS

Calling the Shots

LESS than two years after the troops and tanks trudged out wearily after clearing the Golden Temple complex of its contentious armed occupants, the threat they had momentarily eliminated at such a terrible human and political cost is back in the hallowed precincts of the Sikhs' Vatican. The spectre of extremism stalks Punjab yet again, threatening to bring to nought the normalisation process the Rajiv-Longowal accord had initiated in July last year. Once again the Government watches the scene through the binoculars of the policemen perched atop the tall buildings around the Golden Temple complex as political and extreme moves are planned and executed without fear or interference.

The sudden rise of yet another extremist leadership within months of an accord and an election that was hailed as a massive rejection of violence has surprised most people. The new conglomerate of dogmatic followers of the Damdami Taksal, the seminary Bhindranwale headed, survivors of Operation Bluestar and the young storm-troopers of the All India Sikh Students Federation (AISSF) may not have inherited his popular appeal but the motivation is not lacking. To take stock of the situation Principal Correspondent SHEKHAR GUPTA, who frequently visited the Golden Temple during the Bhindranwale era and interviewed him and his lieutenants, toured the state again last fortnight. His report:

THE CONTRASTS are obvious and so are the similarities. Even for someone inured to walking past scores of gun-toting shadows in the 1983-84 Bhindranwale phase, it is hard to miss the total absence of firearms. Absent also is the striking visage—aquiline nose, and persistent, nonchalant smile that literally launched a thousand guns—of Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale, the 36-year-old jathedar of Damdami Taksal who converted the Golden Temple complex into a kind of fortress that the army could overrun only with the help of tanks and howitzers. There are other tell-tale contrasts. There are no blue turbans, the ones that the Akalis traditionally wear in the temple complex any more. The old custodians of the Golden Temple complex are no longer around and the evidence of their ignominious retreat from their most significant bastion flutters humiliatingly atop the party's headquarters, in one corner of the row of buildings along the temple: a black banner put up right alongside the party's saffron flag by the young inheritors of the Bhindranwale mantle who occupy the complex now.

In more ways than one it is these young inheritors who provide a striking parallel with the past. There is Jathedar Gurdev Singh, the new, acting head priest of the Akal Takht, the highest seat of the Sikh religious and temporal power, considered a Bhindranwale look-alike. The resemblance does not stop at the facial features or height. He even has a similar gait and strides up and down the parikrama with a dozen followers straining to keep pace much in the way Bhindranwale did. He uses the same jargon and the litany of Sikh grievances that Bhindranwale did but speaks, more often than not, through an interpreter.

But at least in one sense Bhindranwale's current crop of followers does even better than his old storm-troopers. And that is in the art of propaganda which they have perfected into a science. The evidence of this strikes a visitor as soon as he reaches the front courtyard of where the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Akal Takht building once stood. Right in front of the hollow that remains in place of that magnificent building are displayed large banners inviting pilgrims to see marks of "bullets fired by narakdhari (hell's angel) Barnala's drunken goondas". The pellet marks have been circled in deep blue and barely do the pilgrims finish seeing these when their attention is caught by the large, framed colour picture of the Akal Takht as it looked immediately after Operation Bluestar. "Is Kotha Sahib all right?" reads the large inscription over the picture, obviously referring with some sarcasm to the statement made on Doordarshan by Giani Kirpal Singh, the Akal Takht head priest. But in terms of propaganda value, the piece de resistance is yet to come.

On the edge of the compound sit a small group of Taksal followers surrounded by hundreds of curious onlookers. The objects of curiosity all lie there on a white sheet and horrified exclamations abound as the Taksal men recite a quick commentary. "This is the skull of a Sikh child killed by the army. These are the meat bones thrown by the troops into the Akal Takht," they say, holding up the bones to people, claiming that these were found in the Akal Takht debris. The commentary continues and includes more hair-raising items: pieces of earthen chillums, razor-blades which a Taksal man holds up on a string and soldiers' rusted medals, all ostensibly thrown by the troops sacrilegiously into the building. There is also a pair of baby's mittens.

The reaction to all this is instantaneous and intense. Women, in particular go away distraught and the youngsters clench their teeth in vengeful anger, their minds already conditioned by the wide array of picture-postcards depicting gory scenes of the battle during Operation Bluestar and the portraits of Bhindranwale, Amrik Singh and the new heroes, Beant Singh and Satwant Singh. These youngsters form the fodder that keeps extremism going. And the Akal Takht compound has now become the new nursery for their initiation into the murky world. These new recruits then join hands with the basic core of the new extremist groups, the youths who have been arrested earlier but released for want of evidence.

THERE is no going back for them because extremism in Punjab is a life-long trap. Once a young man comes on the list of men wanted by the police he has no choice but to continue on the same violent path, a predicament exemplified by many currently seen in the Golden Temple. Some of them, who talk candidly about themselves, include:

► Mahesh Inder Singh, a 26-year-old from Gulabgarh village in district Bhatinda. He was arrested in the case of Kot Shamir killings and then let off on bail. But soon enough, the police were looking for him in connection with a bank dacoity in Bhuchho Mandi. "My parents have had to disown me under police pressure but then we people always make sacrifices," he says adding, righteously, "If I go out the police will arrest and torture me and put false cases against me. So why not put on the kesari (saffron) headgear and prepare for sacrifice anyway."

► Amarjeet Singh, who was arrested along with Mahesh Inder Singh and now stays in the Golden Temple complex. "Who ever gets rehabilitated?" he asks, alleging that on his release he was put under intense pressure to give it in writing that not only would he support the Barnala Government, he would also not be particularly fanatical in his loyalty to the Sikh faith. "We'd much rather be here than sign all that," he says angrily.

► Kuldip Singh Kahlon, the finance secretary of the AISSF. The former student of Lyallpur Khalsa College, Jalandhar has, under his belt a master's degree in mathematics with a university gold medal to boot. He says he was just another M. Phil. student in the mathematics department of Panjab University at Chandigarh when the police "tried to implicate me" in the Chhina bus murder case. "They let me off after beating me up and I came here instead of being just an ordinary member of the AISSF," he says.

Taksal follower describing objects recovered from Takht rubble: intense reaction

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Besides them, there are others who do not tally with the stereotype though they happen to occupy key positions in the current hierarchy. Harinder Singh Kahlon, the convenor of the AISSF and widely regarded as the most powerful man inside the temple is one such. His name was never significant in the Bhindranwale phase but today he calls the shots as if his position was pre-ordained. A student of Lyallpur Khalsa College, he has had a long academic career and a string of degrees including a bachelor's each in science and law and teaching, and a master's each in arts and education. He was a schoolteacher when his name suddenly appeared as an AISSF leader, much to the surprise of the intelligence agencies.

Much more than him, however, the name that surprises observers the most is that of Mohkam Singh, the articulate official spokesman of Damdami Taksal who dominates the entire group and is perhaps the busiest man in the complex today, leading the kar seva effort.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

organising logistics and dealing with Indian and foreign journalists who stream into the temple. Most newsmen who saw Bhindranwale frequently do not remember having ever noticed him on Bhindranwale's last abode.

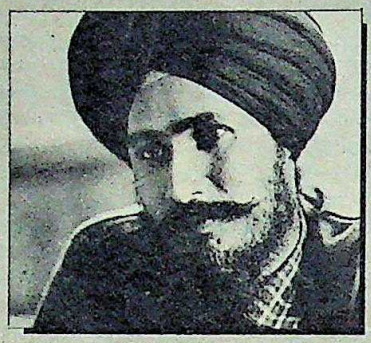
Even intelligence sources say they had never taken notice of him during that tumultuous phase. But today he hardly sounds like someone suddenly thrown into the thick of it all. Says he, orchestrating the Taksal's claim over the seva: "Traditionally, since shaheed Baba Deep Singh freed the Golden Temple from the blasphemous Turks, the Taksal has acted to maintain the sanctity of Sikh shrines according to the needs of the hour." He firmly denies any involvement in extremist activity and even shuns the Khalistan talk that many of the youngsters are less bashful about. "We want the fulfilment of the promise made to us at the time of Independence that the Sikhs will be given a region within India where they will enjoy the glow of freedom. If the Kashmiris can be given Article 370 we can also be given something to our satisfaction," he argues.

Irrespective of the absence of a Bhindranwale the group that controls the Golden Temple complex now presents a formidable challenge for the Government. Barnala has no choice but to lock horns with them and he also realises that they will out-talk him religiously. No matter how disparate it is, the group has been able to make the complex completely out of bounds for the Akali Dal which is utterly confused and demoralised.

As a matter of fact whether it is the unrelenting wave of murders or bank dacoities, the scenario is frighteningly similar to the frenetic first half of 1984. The insecurity and fear of the Bhindranwale era is back at the level of both the Government and the people. This is the examination time for the students and in any other normal year they would have been busy poring over books and notes. But it is not a normal year any more and is reminiscent of the winter of 1983-84 when the extremists brought the whole education system to a standstill. The examinations have not been put off this year but, for several weeks now, educational institutions have functioned fitfully. "At a time when our boys should have been worrying about examinations they are busy shouting slogans and, in many cases, dodging the police," says Tarsem Singh, a landlord from Dharowali, a prosperous and politically conscious village near Amritsar. "Our youth is totally confused," he says. "They think people like us are weak and ineffective and their pride is hurt easily particularly when the police or paramilitary forces question them or search them repeatedly on their way to the Golden Temple. They hate us because we seem to have become immune to these little bits of humiliation."

A painful blast of that ire was felt last fortnight by Nirmal Singh Kahlon, the deputy speaker and a legislator from Fatehgarh Churian constituency, just 20 km from Amritsar. On the evening of February 4, a bunch of youngsters surrounded his house and began to fire at it from three directions with no apparent intention to cause any harm to his aging mother who was then the only one present in the house. But the chilly, mafia-like message was not lost on Kahlon, who wistfully surveys the damage now: over a dozen bullet holes in the strong steel gate, shattered window-panes and the eerie sight of a bullet-hole in the wall right on top of his bed-stead. "They shouted filthy abuses and Khalistan slogans. But basically, all they wanted to tell me was: do not do anything against us; do not do anything for peace," he says and rues the increasing alienation of the Sikh youth from the mainstream of national life as well as the Akali politics. "The youth says what has the Akali Government given them when the Centre did not even keep to the promise on Chandigarh," he says and adds: "We have a long battle ahead of us." But last fortnight, as they went through the familiar motions of thrust and parry, the Akali politicians hardly appeared to be winning that battle.

KULDEEP SINGH KAHLON
25 years
Gurdaspur district
finance secretary of the AISSF



"They let me off after beating me up and I came here instead of being just an ordinary member of the AISSF."

AMARJEET SINGH
25 years
Bhatinda district

"The Barnala Government rehabilitates only those who promise to support it. We would much rather be here than sign all that."

MAHESH INDER SINGH
26 years
Bhatinda district

"If I go out the police will arrest and torture me. So why not put on the kesari (saffron) headgear and prepare for sacrifice."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Nor were the extremists, fortunately. While politically they have succeeded in pushing the Akalis to relative irrelevance the extremists were also causing some long-term damage to their own cause by losing out on a bit of the popular sympathy by taking the killings too far, scaring and upsetting even the Sikh population making many Sikhs realise increasingly that the threat had to be fought from within. "It is like this," explains Onkar Singh with a fierce vengeance. "A mad dog comes to your street and bites one person and everyone runs away. Then he bites another and yet another. At one point everyone realises that the threat is there to stay and people collect with lathis and beat it to death. That is what will happen to these damn extremists now."

HE HAS an extremely genuine justification for his bitterness. The general secretary of the SGPC and one of the main pillars of the Akali Dal in the border belt along Dera Baba Nanak, Mattenangal is still mourning the death of his third son, Satinderpal Singh, who fell to an extremist's Sten gun burst on February 7. "They knocked at my door and asked for my elder son who wasn't there. So the younger one, this 16-year-old gursikh went forward to open the door and they fired straight into his face," Mattenangal describes the incident, pointing at the big blotches of blood high up on the wall where the Sten gun burst flung fragments of his son's head. "They are doing it to us because they are afraid we will be able to bring lasting peace to the state," he says and displays determination which many other recent victims of extremism show in some measure. He says: "The time has now come for us all to ready the ranks and fight these people who are masquerading as Sikhs and destroying the community. Let me tell you, if they think they can get people to follow them out of fear they are heading for disappointment."

Members of his family also point out the other serious mistake the extremists made. "They are now doing things that never happened in Bhindranwale's times," said a family member. "In those days, extremists never fired at women, barring Indira Gandhi's case. But now they fired at Satinderpal's nine-year-old sister Sarbjit, ransacked the house and shouted the filthiest Punjabi abuses while hundreds of villagers watched. Is that how gursikhs behave?" The new breed of extremists do not have the religious aura that Bhindranwale's bands had somehow acquired.

The same desperate haste in rushing off to kill somebody, without weighing the long-term political consequences has been evident elsewhere as well. For example, two extremists riding a scooter waylaid Jatindar Pal Singh Ghuman, a leader of the AISSF faction loyal to the Akali Dal, in his village near the textile township of Dhariwal, and shot him in daylight in the presence of scores of people. Ghuman, intelligence men point out, was no ordinary quarry. The crime that brought him the summary death sentence was breaking away from extremists with whom he had operated for over two years. Says an intelligence official: "He was himself such a bad victim of police torture he could barely walk straight. Two of his brothers are among the 370-odd men arrested from the complex during Operation Bluestar who are still in Jodhpur jail and his assassination really smacks of internecine bloodshed in the extremist ranks. It will make many Sikhs change their opinion of the current crop of extremists."

"If they think they can make people follow them out of fear they are mistaken."

ONKAR SINGH MATTENANGAL
SGPC general secretary, whose son was killed by extremists

Not surprisingly, the prospect worries even the new custodians of the Golden Temple who squarely blame the "Government" for both these murders. "We have no enmity with Mattenangal or Ghuman. Two of Ghuman's brothers are in Jodhpur jail and they are good Sikhs. The Government has got him assassinated to give us a bad name," says Jathedar Gurdev Singh, the officiating head priest of the Akal Takht and a member of the Damdami Taksal. But why would the Akalis go to the extent of killing the young son of one of their own key leaders as part of the alleged charade? He has a ready answer to even that: "What do they think of sacrificing just one life to achieve their political objectives?"

The latest spate of killings has mostly consumed the leaders of the Akali Dal and its supporters and has, to that extent, served to drive home the lesson that it does not pay to oppose the extremist leadership politically or administratively. But from a long-term point of view it can also be counter-productive as already shown by the changing popular perceptions towards extremists. It has also harmed the extremists' own cause in the sense that it has backed the argument in the Union Home Ministry in favour of going slow over the question of the release of alleged Sikh extremists detained in the Jodhpur jail and elsewhere.

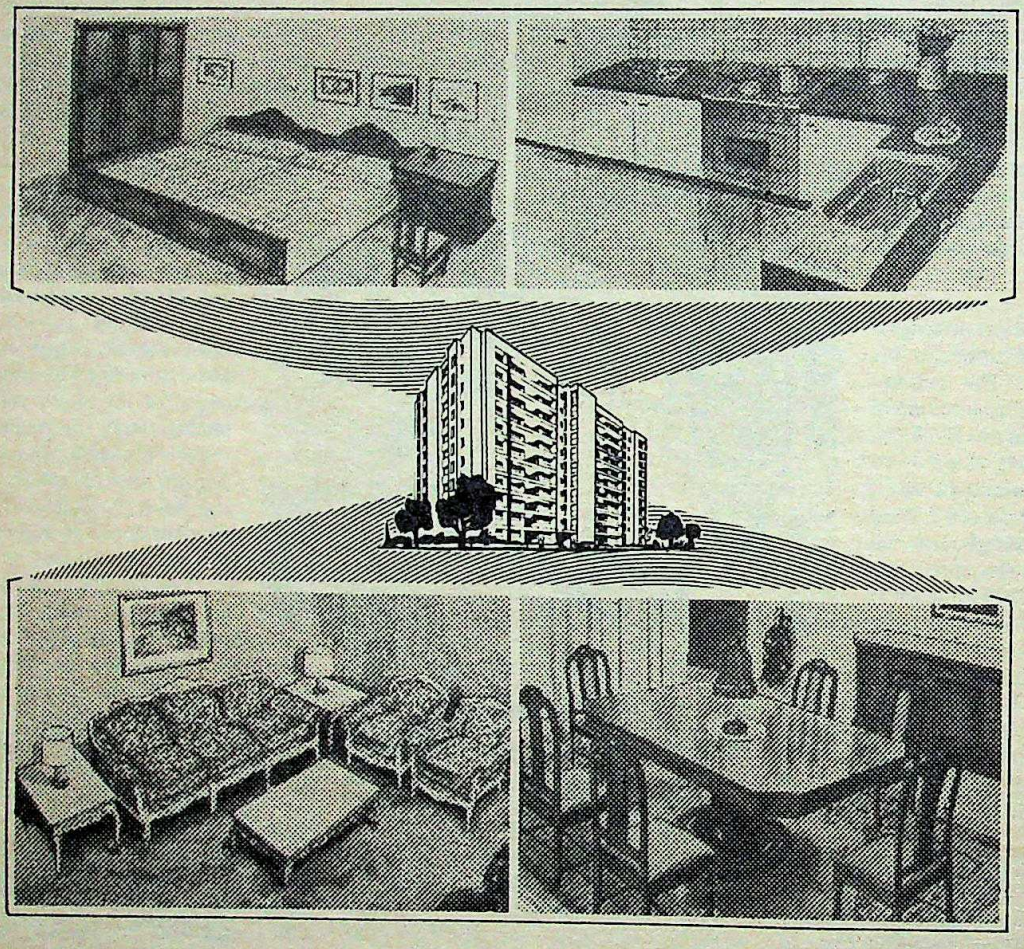
Yet the killings go on relentlessly making many intelligence officials feel that the leadership within the Golden Temple complex does not any longer have a firm control over the killer squads. "Most of them operate on their own now, in small bands, making our jobs even more difficult," says an official. In the Bhindranwale phase at least the securitymen were aware of the central authority from where it all originated and thus, ultimately, Operation Bluestar was able to neutralise much of that threat. But this has changed now. Said an official: "It is virtually impossible to keep tabs on all the small groups. You think you've begun to get information on one and suddenly a new one comes up."

This is a potentially more dangerous situation than even 1984. There was at least a face then in the nucleus of it all. More important, Bhindranwale had consciously built up an image and thus, in those days, it was possible to trace a firm trend in extremist activity. It is no longer so and thus makes for a greater element of surprise in extremist activity, a prospect that will, in the months to come increasingly bother the Centre and the Akali state Government which, after virtually losing the battle to the extremist lung-power and muscle-power would now be fighting the final battle against the muzzle-power.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BUILT THE WAY YOU WANT IT



Kadavill Court

When you can go to incredible lengths in directing the design of your furniture, shouldn't you pay atleast as much attention to the design of your home?

After all, your home must reflect your own style, not ours, because it's you who will spend all your time there.

You can be sure it'll meet all your needs, match your tastes and preferences if you get actively involved in its construcion now. Not after its too late, once the project has progressed much further. We'll listen to you, because we hate the idea of selling flats off-the-shelf.

Come along with your husband or on your own to look after the details which make all the difference to living in a custom-built home of your choice.

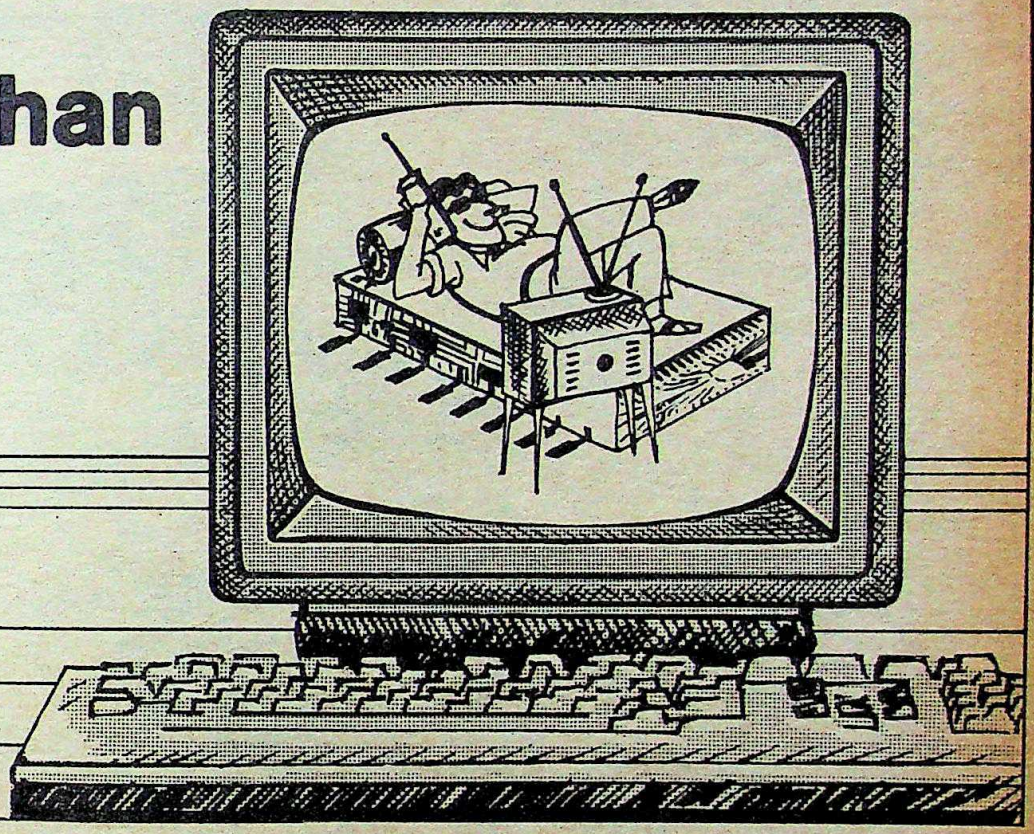
Si SOUTHERN INVESTMENTS

MAS Building, Town Station Road, Ernakulam 18. Phone 367365

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Electronics TAX-HOLIDAY in Rajasthan



In Rajasthan—known for its traditional hospitality—now enjoy a non-traditional holiday that is refreshingly different: A NEW PACKAGE OF FINANCIAL INCENTIVES TO ALL ELECTRONICS INDUSTRIES.

- Tax-Holiday for entire duration of the 7th Five Year Plan for new electronics industries: neither RST nor CST is to be paid.
- Rate of RST and CST is reduced to only 4% from 16 January, 1986, upto 31 March 1991, for existing electronics industries.
- For electronics industries which expand their capacity to an extent of 50% or more, the Tax-Holiday is for expanded capacity only, throughout the 7th Plan.

IN ADDITION

- Priority in allotment of land
- 20% rebate on cost of land
- Subsidy on feasibility study
- Reduction in cost of land if production starts early
- Liberal Equity participation
- Subsidy on know-how from national laboratories
- Escort Services.

PLUS . . .

Term Loan, Seed Capital, Interest-Free Sales Tax Loan, Equity/Underwriting, Foreign Currency Loan, Technical Consultancy, among others by RIICO. RIICO ties up the financial package with RFC for your benefit.

RIICO
the Industrial Catalyst

Write, telephone or visit:
RAJASTHAN STATE INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT & INVESTMENT CORPORATION LTD.
Udyog Bhawan, Tilak Marg, JAIPUR 302 005
Tel: 78751 Gram: RIICO Telex: 036 335

Sobhagya/26/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UNITED KINGDOM

Growing Anger

LIKE AN overheated market-place, weekdays in Southall hum with frenetic activity. Throngs of people swarm in and out of shops selling condiments and spices, poultry and meat, sarees and Hindi film videos. But last Wednesday, an eerie shroud of silence prevailed over Southall. Except in front of the off-licence liquor shop, where a vast sea of mourners—almost 2,000—waited silently to pay their last respects to assassinated Sikh moderate leader Tarsem Singh Toor. The periphery of Southall and its environs—all the way to Hanworth crematorium in Hounslow 3 km away—were ringed by hundreds of policemen.

Besides the Indian High Commissioner Dr P.C. Alexander and the Deputy High Commissioner R.C. Arora, the callers at the Hanworth crematorium included the controversial Home Office Minister David Waddington, the Labour MP for Ealing-Southall, Sydney Bidwell, Max Madden from Bradford and Toor's friends and colleagues.

The media attention and the flood of criticism against the British Government and Scotland Yard for not being able to either protect the Indian community or apprehend the assassins of Toor forced the British Government to issue its toughest warning yet. Speaking on TV, David Waddington—whose occasional uncordial pronouncements have rankled race relations lobbies—emphatically stated: "We want to reassure people no effort is being spared to catch the perpetrators of this outrage. We cannot allow a spilling over into our streets of violence between Sikh factions." Twenty-four hours later Scotland Yard made a terse announcement stating that "two Asians" were being questioned in South London in connection with Toor's murder and police were seeking a third suspected of being the "hitman". After having made an initial statement that a white gunman had shot Toor, Scotland Yard later amended it saying it could have been a "very fair Indian". However, Toor's shop assistant, Ranjit Singh, could play a key role should there be an identification line-up of suspects.

In the meanwhile, a large section of the Indian community seem to be besieged by both mounting anger and a gnawing fear at the spate of shootings. Scotland Yard spokesmen have blandly complained of "lack of cooperation from the Sikhs" in their investigations. J.S. Randhawa, an elderly sweet-shop owner said: "After all we are not the white constituency. We are neither the vote bank nor do we have the political clout." Randhawa was referring to the speed with which other crimes appear to get solved by Scotland Yard but in cases of attacks on Sikh moderates, even though there is a well-known extremist faction operating in the UK who publicly swear to be the moderates implacable foes, breakthroughs are rarely made.

Photographs by MADAN ARORA

Crowds at Hanworth crematorium (above); and Toor's wife: grim portents

Adding to the general dread, there have been other more ominous developments. Following Toor's killing, The Daily Mail published a letter from a hitherto unheard of organisation, The Sikh Liberation Front, which threatened to assassinate a senior Indian diplomat in the UK. The front had apparently other intentions too of assassinating members of the Indian Cabinet, the President and prime minister. The letter drafted in a bizarre style, displayed a macabre sense of humour. It stated that having assassinated Mrs Gandhi, "daughter of the infamous Brahmin, Pandit Nehru, we now have grandiose plans". Then it added with a touch of spooky reassurance: "The destruction of an Air-India plane is nothing compared to what we have in mind." Besides marking out the nation's leaders as targets, the letter threatened to kill "35 spindly-legged Hindu politicians" and added, almost deferentially, "after that a nice, sophisticated bomb will finish Mr Rajiv Gandhi, the prime minister".

Under pressure from the high commissioner, many moderate Sikh leaders have been offered police protection. If past experiences are anything to go by, this will not exactly make their opponents quake in their boots. Moderates provide several examples of extremists feeling "safe" in Britain. The most glaring one is of Jaswant Singh Bharj (alias Thekedar), erstwhile leader of the outlawed Dal Khalsa and wanted in India for a variety of charges. Bharj who fled India in 1982 after the Government offered a huge reward for his capture, sought political asylum in Britain and soon gave himself the colourful title of "defence minister of Khalistan". Adding salt to the wounds, Bharj was given a council house in Fleming Road. The decision led to a fierce row. With typical British understatement, Dormers Wells Labour Councillor Fred Hopkins, termed the decision: "A bit frightening."

—RAMESH CHANDRAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When the immaculate taste of aristocracy spills beyond classic cars and stately mansions...

...it finds colour in Aristocrat

Jagatjit Industries Limited

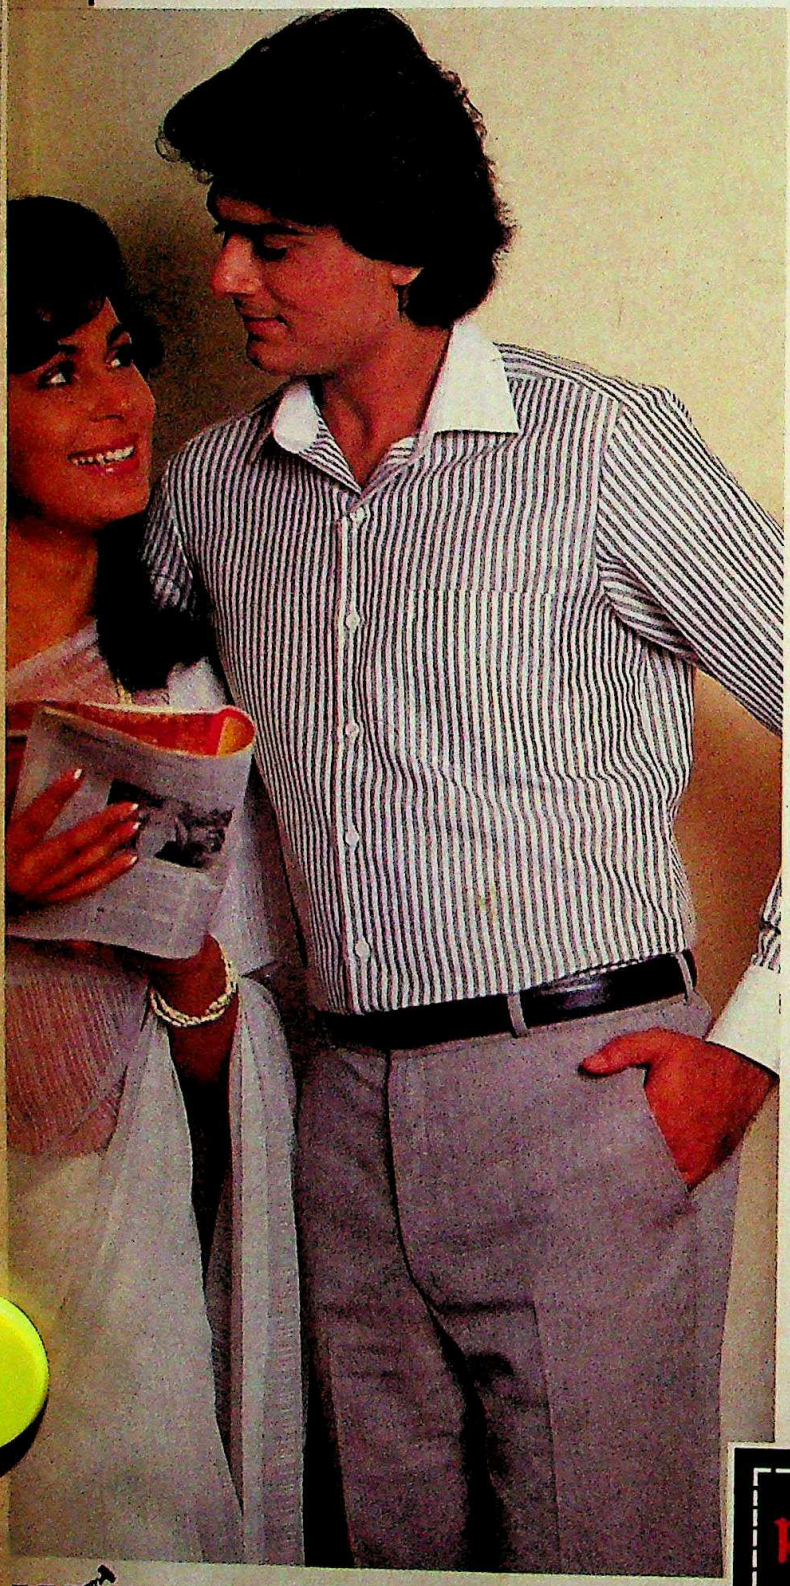
The Spirit of Excellence

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

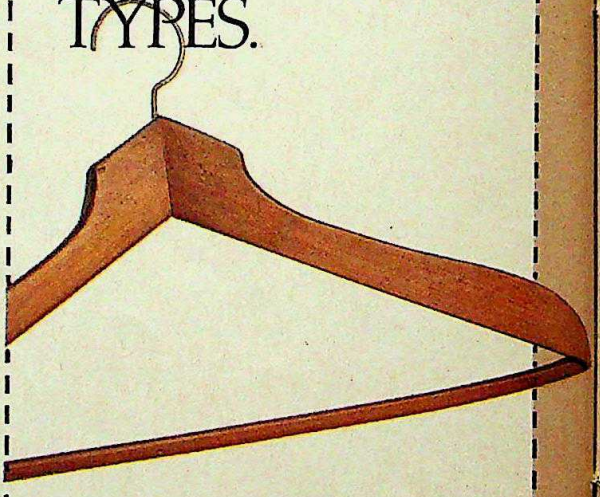
For your requirement of coloured and flint glass, write to Jagatjit Industries Limited.

ASP/JIL

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



EVER SINCE I DISCOVERED RAYMOND'S READYMADES, IT'S GOODBYE TO STEREO-TYPES.



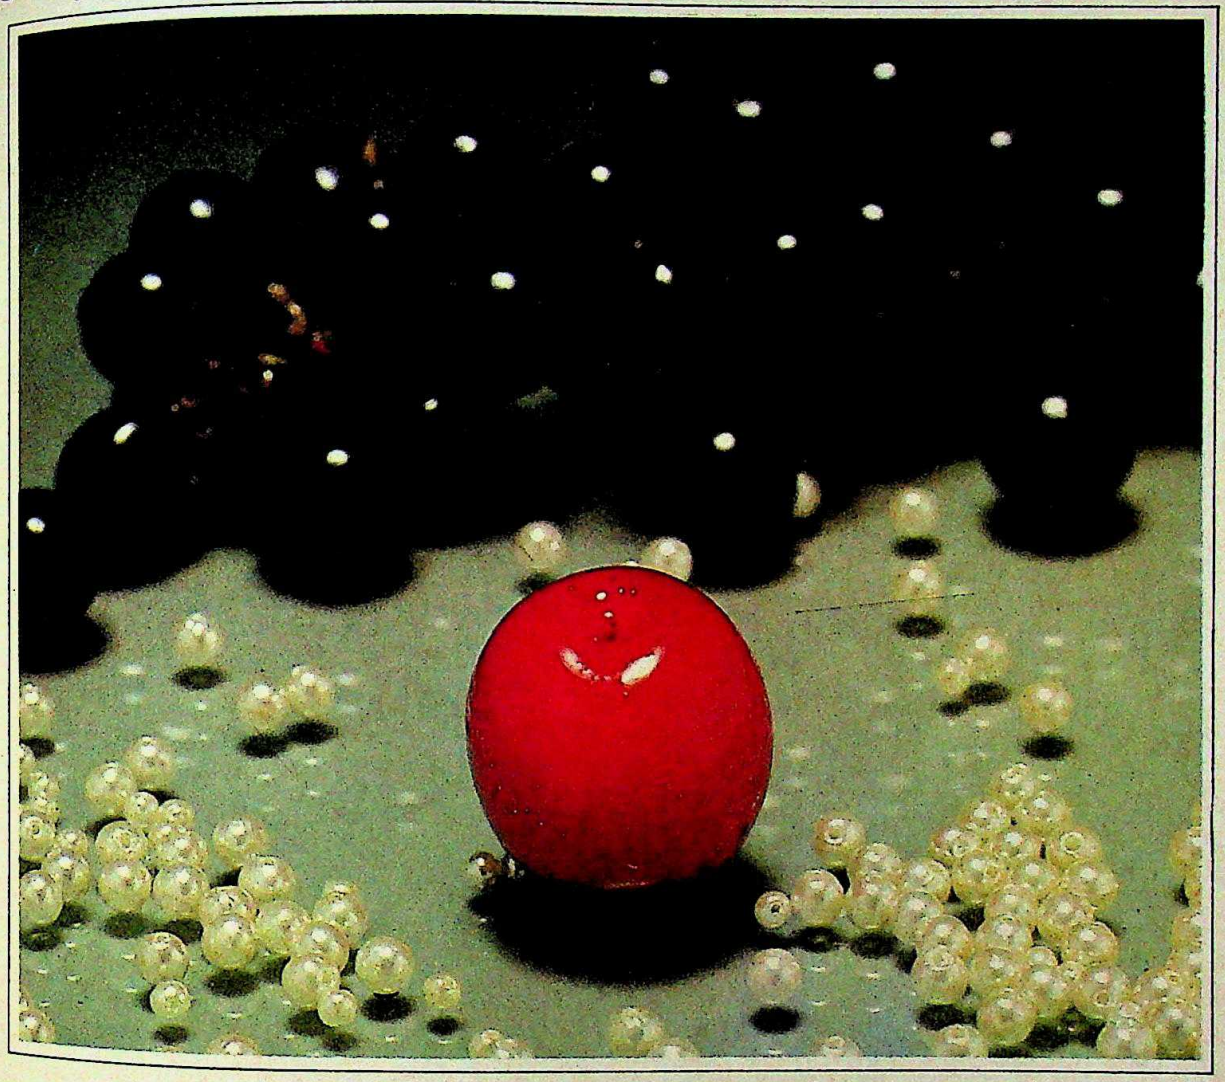
Trousers
•
Safaris
•
Shirts
•
Suits
•
Blazers

Raymond's Mens Wear

Location courtesy: TGCTO, Taj Mahal Hotel, Bombay.
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Only the heartwarming testimony of millions...



can inspire colour so dramatic

ECTV
SPECTRA SUPER
SPECTRA SUPREME
with Remote Control

ECIL
Electronics Corporation of India Limited
Hyderabad-500762

ECTV - truly SPECTRAcular !

A & M 85 ECIL 43 3

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Which is the best place to start my European Tour?"

"Why?! Choose Schiphol at Amsterdam. It's the best airport going!"

Its no mean achievement. Readers of the British Magazine, 'Business Traveller', chose Schipol as the best airport in the world.

How we landed the award!

Thousands of passengers pass through the massive terminal building and nobody feels crowded in.

The baggage handling is smooth.

Checking in is swift and transfers to connecting flights are easy. Add to that, the ever-available transport from the airport to the city centre.

Finally, Schiphol's duty-free shops stock over 40,000 articles at prices that are the lowest in Europe! These are some of the reasons.

They also-ran

Singapore, Zurich, Frankfurt and Heathrow Airports were in the running too. And that's the order in which they finished.

Behind Schiphol.

Schiphol does it again!

Earlier this year, Schiphol was selected by the International Airline Passengers Association (IAPA) as the finest airport in the world. Again!

So the next time you are flying to Europe give yourself a little reward.

Stop over at our award winning airport and see what it's all about.

Contact your travel agent, or call us at:

Ahmedabad 77677, Bangalore 28703, Bombay 221013, Calcutta 441221, Cochin 39165, Delhi 343998, Goa 2298, Hyderabad 36042, Jalandhar 76088, Madras 86356, Patna 25437, Pune 61358, Kathmandu 214895 and Dhaka 250357.

The Reliable Airline KLM Royal Dutch Airlines

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HONG KONG INDIANS

In the Cold

MONEY doesn't buy security after all, as 6,000 Indians in Hong Kong are discovering belatedly. Come 1997, all of them face the prospect of becoming stateless citizens; and the fact that most of them are barons and tycoons of real estate, financing, manufacturing, hoteliering and trading doesn't seem to help any. Eleven years from now, they may have nowhere to go, no place to call home.

Officially, they have the status today of British Nationals Overseas (BNO). But that means less than it sounds, for it gives them no right to settle in Britain. They have been politely but firmly told by the representatives of China that "you must forge your links with Britain since you have always held British passports". And for its part, the Thatcher Government in London has said: "We cannot help. Any decision to grant you the right of abode would lead to a flood of claims by the Chinese in Hong Kong."

While roughly 4,000 of these BNO's are Sindhis, they also include 500 Parsis and an equal number of Sikhs, besides Gujaratis, south Indians and Dawoodi Bohras. The community is dominated by such internationally credit-worthy names of the business fraternity as Harilela, Murjani, Ratanji and Kishanchand Chellaram among others. If further proof of their wealth was needed, a tally of Hong Kong's 668 Rolls Royces would show a majority of the owners from amongst the 6,000.

It was to persuade a seemingly unflinching British Government that two of the most influential Indians from Hong Kong, representing the Council of Hong Kong Indian Associations—property magnate Lachman Narain and association vice-president K.Sital— arrived in London last month to lobby for support amongst sympathetic members of Parliament and influential public figures before the House of Commons debate on the subject. Said Narain: "We are the orphans of the Sino-British agreement," Narain told INDIA TODAY. "Any form of nationality which has such serious shortcomings would leave its holder in a position of great disadvantage. The BNO status carries no notion of citizenship and is a little better than a travel document facility."

Asked whether any representations were made to the Indian Government, the suave Narain emphasised that most of these 6,000 Indians were highly "anglicised" and were used to a way of life which was alien to India. Both made it clear that the ethnic Indians came to Hong Kong "because" it was a part of the British Empire. Even those who migrated from India after Independence in 1947 renounced Indian citizenship in the expectation that they would spend the rest of their lives under British rule. Said Narain: "We severed our ties with India when we swore allegiance to the Crown." Added Sital, who came after 1947: "India has no special obligation toward us."

Narain pointed out that "we are a victim of circumstances and like everybody else, we need to have a sense of belonging. Many of us may never come to Britain since our home and our work is in Hong Kong. What we need is an insurance and the right of abode in this country."

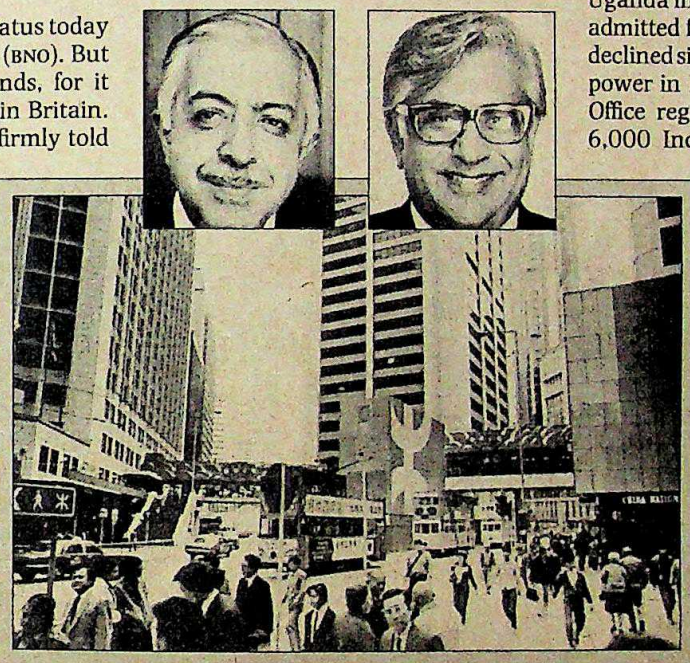
Narain and Sital lobbied across a wide range of the British political spectrum including Labour, SDP and Conservative MP's and some influential UK Indians. Perceptive observers of immigration issues feel that the main reason for the British Government's refusal to grant full citizenship appears to be the memory of the influx of Asians from Uganda in 1972—the number of Asians admitted for settlement into Britain has declined since the Conservatives came to power in 1979, a fact which the Home Office regards with gleeful pride. The 6,000 Indians, despite their financial clout, custom-built Rolls Royces and Eton- and Balliol-educated sons, might simply be considered the wrong colour.

The Commons debate got unexpected support from Hong Kong's powerful Legislative Council. Unofficial member Lydia Dunn said she and her colleagues were "profoundly disappointed at the British Government's attitude because it had failed to discharge its moral responsibility." And the pro-Beijing daily Wen Wei Pao commented that in dealing with the Indians "one cannot cut adrift history, one should not depart from reality. These people have always held British passports."

The delegates have returned without any firm commitment from the British Government. As 1997 looms large, they have more than their future with Britain to consider. For they must also contemplate their co-existence with China and ponder whether China would meddle with Hong Kong's thriving but complex capitalist chemistry. As a group which accounts for 10 to 15 per cent of the world's third largest financial centre's external trade, the financial health of the island colony is of paramount importance to them. But for the moment the odds seem to be stacked against the 6,000.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN

Narain (right) and Sital; and a view of downtown Hong Kong



Come 1997, 6,000 Indians face the prospect of becoming stateless citizens; and the fact that most of them are business tycoons doesn't seem to help.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PROVEN QUALITY & PRECISION BUILT

pla RELAYS, REED RELAYS & ELECTRONIC TIMERS

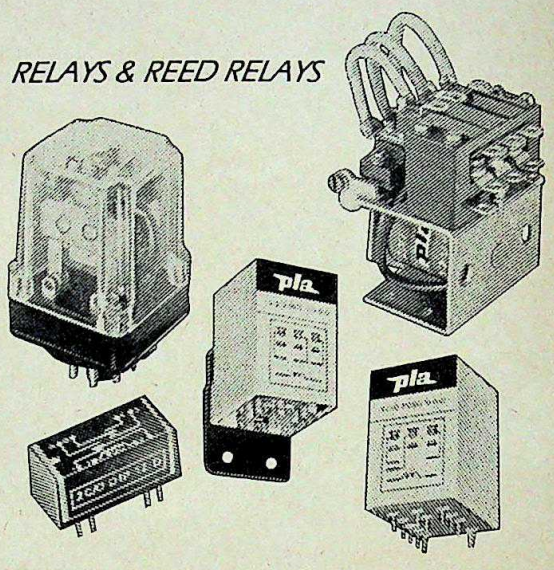
COMMITMENT TO QUALITY
Continuous product improvement and development by the committed R & D team, and strict quality control by PLA quality control cell ensure that only the best comes to you.

HERE ARE THE PROOFS
* PLA Relays & Reed relays are approved by LCSO/Defence and P & T.
* PLA Electronic Timers are approved by CIL/Defence/NTPC for specific applications.

Some of the satisfied users of PLA products:
BEL, ITI, Keltron, Nelco, Uptron, CEL, Electricity Boards, NTPC, Siemens, L&T, KEC, HBB, BHEL, ECIL, BARC, MRPU, ISRO, LMW, MMC, Jyoti, IL Kota, GCEL, HIL, Bells Controls, Best & Crompton, Bharat Bijlee and BPL.

NATION-WIDE NETWORK
SAI is proud of its nation-wide network of committed and dedicated dealers and representatives with long years of association with the company. Their dynamism and expertise bring the best to you in terms of products and services.

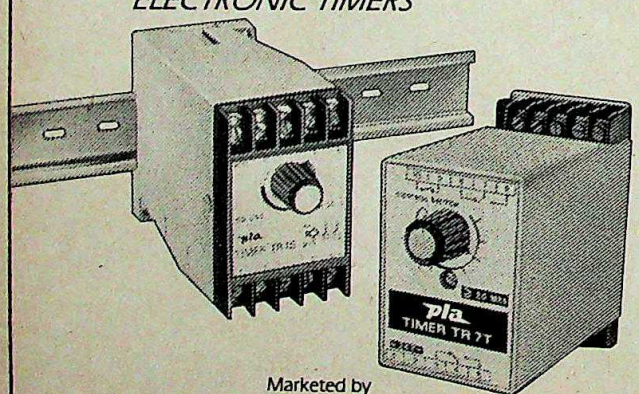
RELAYS & REED RELAYS



THE WIDE RANGE

Series M	: General purpose Miniature relays in open/enclosed and plug-in-version — rated for 6 Amps. at 240V AC/24V DC. PCB mounting relays also available.
Series P	: 20 Amps Power relays upto 3C/O contacts.
Series DIP	: Dual-in-line Package reed relay with 1N/O, 2N/O, 1C/O and 2C/O contacts suitable for PCB/DIL Socket mounting.
Special Relays (not shown)	: R.F. Relays, High voltage relays, Textile relays, Proximity switches, Series DLM Dual latching relays, Series FFR Field failure relays, Series SIP, DRM, PRM, DRC and DRA Reed relays.
Series TR/TD	: Electronic Timers available upto 60 Minutes timing range with different timing actions e.g. ON Delay, OFF Delay and ON-OFF Re-cycling. DIN Rail mounting is also available.

ELECTRONIC TIMERS



Marketed by

SAI ELECTRONICS

A Div. of Starch & Allied Industries

ELECTRONIC DIVISION

Thakor Estate, Kurla Kirol Road, Vidyavihar (W), Bombay 400 086.
Cable: SAIELECT, Bombay 86, Phone: 5136601, 5131219. TLX: 011-72132 PLA IN

RADEUS/SE/2/85 MAG

AVAILABLE EX-STOCK

Ahmedabad: Radio Electronics Ph. 336535 o Uresh Electric Co. Ph. 380990
Bangalore: Manitronix Components Agencies Ph. 222160 o Deepam Electronics Ph. 221246
Baroda: Reliable Sales Corporation Ph. 553936 • Bombay: Ramesh Trading Corpn. Ph. 351624
Ramesh Electronics Ph. C/o. 351624 o Mahavir Electronics Ph. 254538 o Expert Enterprises Ph. 5128766
Calcutta: Printed Electronics Ph. 452091 o Krugg International Ph. 273025 o Naresh Electro (India) Ph. 265101
Venus Electronics (Cal) Ph. 275491 o Dinesh Electronics (Cal) Ph. 269029 • Cochin: Expo Electronics Components Ph. 31455
Coimbatore: Ingata Laboratories Ph. 25705 o Sunrise Electronics Ph. 35713 o Spinloom Associates Ph. 24586
Digitech Agencies Ph. 24148 • Delhi: Chawla Trading Co. Ph. 236031 o Kanbro Sales Corpn. Ph. 625206
Hyderabad: Aradhna Electronics P. Ltd. Ph. 822201 • Indore: Atlas Sales Agencies Ph. 33112 o Natwerlal & Co. Ph. 35328
Jaipur: El-tronics Ph. 65730 • Madras: Kins Electronics Ph. 411601
Poona: Fortibus Engg Pvt. Ltd. Ph. 34706 o Trio Radio Ph. 447129 • Trivandrum: Electrocraft Ph. 71443
Udaipur: International Electronics Ph. 27250.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MUGHAL MINIATURES

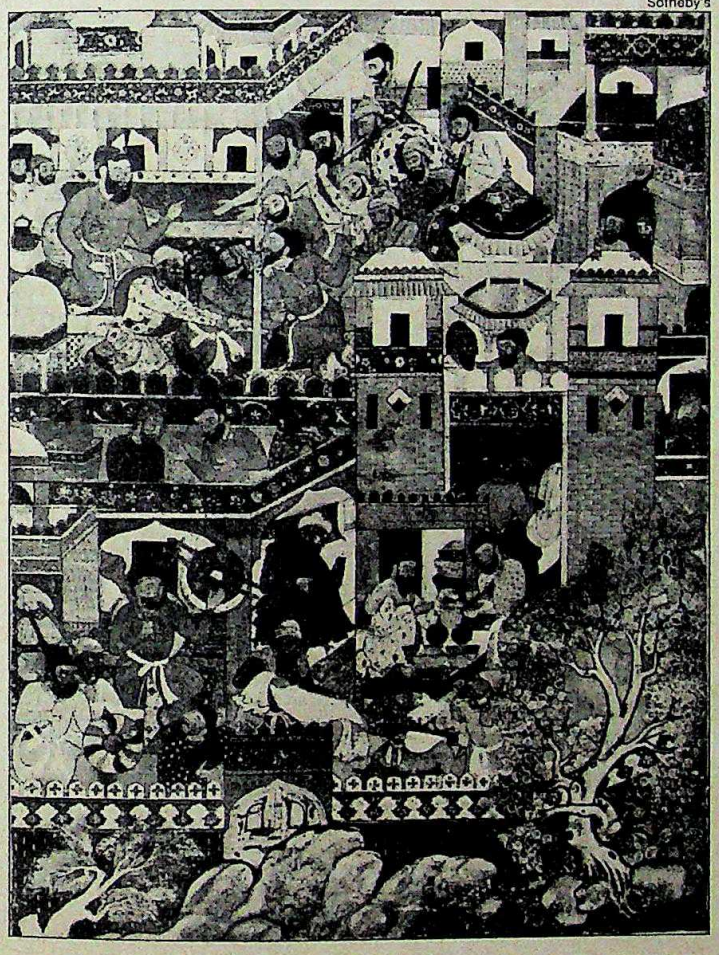
Priceless Sale

THEY are miniatures, but their prices aren't. Shock waves rippled through the international art markets recently when the bidding for just one page of the 1,400-page, 16th century Hamzanama, or Daastan-i-Amir Hamza (the saga of Hamza, uncle of Prophet Mohammed and a figure of popular legend), soared at Sotheby's in London to £148,000 (Rs 25 lakh) before the fall of the hammer. The high-priced page, captioned "Amir Hamza burning the armament chest of Zardust (Zoroaster) and the breaking of the urn", was acquired by a private collector in a closed auction, discreetly leaving no record of the collector's identity. But speculation has centred on the American oil billionaire, Paul Getty.

All Mughal miniatures are collectors' dreams, specially because of their rarity and the extreme reluctance of their owners to part with them. But Hamzanama is the foundation stone of Mughal painting and the most important of all Akbar-period manuscripts. The work, completed between 1562 and 1577, reportedly ran to 14 volumes, each having a hundred large illustrations on cloth of 67 cm × 51 cm. Periodically decimated by invasion and plunder, and ravaged above everything else by time, only about 150 pages of the illustrated chronicle can now be traced to the various museums and private collections, their prices rising over the years.

In Britain there have been just four known instances of Hamzanama folio auctions—all four at Sotheby's during the last decade, and providing a striking illustration of their soaring value. The first was more than a decade ago in April 1975, with the successful bidder being dealer H.P. Kraus for £ 12,000 (Rs 2 lakh). This page later resurfaced at a Christie's auction. In July 1978, two more Hamzanama pages were auctioned by Sotheby's. Amazingly, the two pages were spotted by a dealer at a house in the seaside resort of Torquay in south-west England, and were being used as fire-screens. One of the pages, the gorier one showing Hamza cutting off the arms of a Byzantine princess, fetched £32,000 (Rs 5.4 lakh) whilst the other one, showing Hamza with a Kalud king, got 26,000 pounds (Rs 4.4 lakh). Both were bought by the Felton Bequest Trust of Melbourne, Australia. But it was last year that collectors who had gathered at Sotheby's were astonished when one

Sotheby's



Miniature of Hamza with Kalud king

Hamza piece set a world record for an Indian miniature. As Margaret Erskine of Sotheby's told INDIA TODAY: "The price more or less reflected the true value of the Hamza pages. Collectors seem more aware when they evaluate a Hamza page that they are museum masterpieces."

Akbar's painting ateliers were directed by two of his father Humayun's Safavid artists, Mir Sayyid Ali and Abd as-Samad to complete the Hamzanama pages. The boy-emperor, who was only 20 when the work was commissioned, had from his childhood been fascinated by the tales of Hamza and their undercurrent of absurdity despite obvious parental discouragement. Babur, his grandfather, had observed in his memoirs about the Hamza tales that they are "one long far-fetched lie, opposed to sense and nature". But Akbar's bemused biographers like Abu'l Fazl and Bada'oni testify to the lad's obsession with the most Peter Pan-like character of the Islamic pantheon, resulting in 15 years of effort at the kutubkhana-i-aali (royal bureau of books) involving hundreds of artists, mostly Hindus.

Nobody can tell what happened to the bulk of the Hamzanama pages, or exactly how many of them were taken away as booty by subsequent invaders like Nadir Shah of Persia. The fate surrounding the more than 1,200 lost pages of Hamzanama is still a subject of irresistible and fascinating appeal for mystery solvers. Even in the category of the existing 150 pages, there is surprisingly no comprehensive official catalogue to be found anywhere. But museologists estimate that the Hamzanama pages are distributed to all corners of the world whereas the collection in India may be not more than half a dozen.

In India the Baroda State Museum, the Calico Museum in Ahmedabad, the Bharat Kala Bhavan in Benares and the National Museum have retained between themselves only about six pages. But as the legend of Hamza continues to cast its spell on 20th century art collectors, the value of its pages in modern currency terms escalate by leaps and bounds, steadily becoming beyond the means of helpless Indian museum curators with lean budgets. Little wonder then, that the rare Hamza auctions are destined to become an all-West affair with the exclusion of the land where the fantastic exploits of the warrior-hero were painted four centuries ago.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NOIDA

From Land-trap to Gold-mine

SUCCESS stories—in a land wracked by bureaucratic lethargy and corruption—are hard to find. But in the capital's backyard, a mere 10 miles away in what used to be the flood plain of the Jamuna, local residents and bureaucrats—in a unique display of common purpose—have succeeded in lifting their community out of social and economic chaos and dramatically improving their surroundings. The region—an area of 10,000 acres—is called the New Okhla Industrial Development Authority (NOIDA) where co-exist some 80,000 people—a hybrid mix of villagers, Delhi commuters and small-scale businessmen. The area was acquired by the Uttar Pradesh Government in 1976 as an industrial estate for small businessmen, with a total investment of Rs 80 crore but businesses failed to take off, residents lived a hellish existence without roads or electricity, and thousands of farmers whose land had been acquired for the project were in revolt. But with a sudden swiftness two years ago, there began a remarkable revival which is still gaining momentum. Today NOIDA has become a national showcase for what is called 'integrated area development'. Government delegations from states across the country have visited the location to learn from its experience. Big names in television and electronics manufacture want to move in to do business. And Rajiv Gandhi has said that NOIDA should set an example for the rest of the country. Can the rest of the country learn something from NOIDA's experience? Features Editor INDERJIT BADHWAR reports on NOIDA's journey to hell and back:

IT IS a town without a name but with a reputation that is rapidly transcending its modest boundaries. It is a community without a rooted past but with a future that holds promise of stability. It is a place where village folk have made fortunes almost overnight and where sophisticated townsmen have come to financial ruin. NOIDA is a definition of administrative territory.

Here most of the villages are lit and brick-paved lanes bordered by efficient drainage systems wind their way through rows of huts and pucca tenements. In the town—where beats the modern heart of NOIDA—small industrial units hum efficiently with the juice of abundant electric power. Some 80 km of main roads paved with a smooth macadam 9 cm thick and mostly unencumbered by cluttered encroachments, provide speedy transport. Every morning an automated garbage collection vehicle sweeps the main streets. Trees, parks and rose gardens dot the still growing industrial area.

Industrial land, priced at the official rate of Rs 180 per sq metre sells in market for Rs 400. Residential plots whose controlled rate is Rs 540 per sq metre go for double that amount. A recent sales notice

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH

"When I took over in 1984, my main task was to restore NOIDA to its original status of an industrial area—a haven for new industry."

YOGESH CHANDRA
chairman, NOIDA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

for 57 remaining plots in the first developed section of the area attracted more than 900 applications. The big names in television manufacturing—Dyanora, Weston, Nova, Niky-Tasha—are moving units here to join the 1,800-odd manufacturing units functioning here. The Nirulas restaurant chain wants to move in within the next few months.

Two years ago NOIDA was flat broke. The Government authority running the show was more than Rs 4 crore in the red. Today, the same authority has more than Rs 5 crore in its kitty. Two years ago NOIDA was the seat of dharnas and morchas and andolans by farmers and entrepreneurs who believed they were hopelessly caught in a land trap by the Uttar Pradesh Government. Factories were closing down in droves. Several businessmen who had lost their life savings after being lured into the new industrial area jumped to their deaths from nearby bridges. Effigies of a past NOIDA chairman were burned with regularity. Villagers whose lands had been acquired for the project were up in arms because they were now landless and jobless with destitution staring them in the face.

IT WAS a mess," admits Yogesh Chandra, a former joint secretary in the Finance Ministry, who took over as NOIDA's chairman in 1984.

Says Rakesh Agnihotri, a manufacturer of printing machine components: "The factory buildings looked more like tombstones in a graveyard." Adds J.B.S. Bakshi, who manufactures plastic pipes: "I had sold all my possessions to set up a unit here because it seemed like a good idea. But I seriously began to suspect my own judgement which had rarely ever failed me before."

Raghuraj Singh, pradhan of Bhangel village whose land was acquired for NOIDA, recalls: "Our land was gone. We got compensation but people here lived like animals. You could not even walk through this village most of the time because of knee-deep slush. There were no jobs." T.H. Rao, president of the Block Residents' Welfare Association, says that two years ago the residential colony—built to house 1,400 families—was an undeveloped wasteland. "The colony was half empty when I moved in," he remembers. "It was like a desert with buffaloes roaming around."

Delhi was supposed to provide the market for goods manufactured by the small-scale units to be located in NOIDA. The sales pitch—designed to attract small-scale industrialists to what was best known as the area frequented by the gangs of Sundar and Gujjar moonshiners of illicit spirits—was that "all modern amenities will be provided".

But NOIDA was a land-trap. In those early days of 1976, land was certainly cheap. It could be acquired for Rs 40 per sq metres. But once the entrepreneur invested his savings, along with an Uttar Pradesh Finance Corporation loan, the trap was set. Interest on loans was charged from the date of allotment of sheds. But as Agnihotri explains: "Our machinery would just lie outside our sheds because there was no labour to move it in. And once you moved it in, there was no electricity to work the machines. It took about three hours to travel the 15 km to Delhi. And yet we kept paying interest on our loans."

And because there was no integrated

Factories in NOIDA: bustling complex

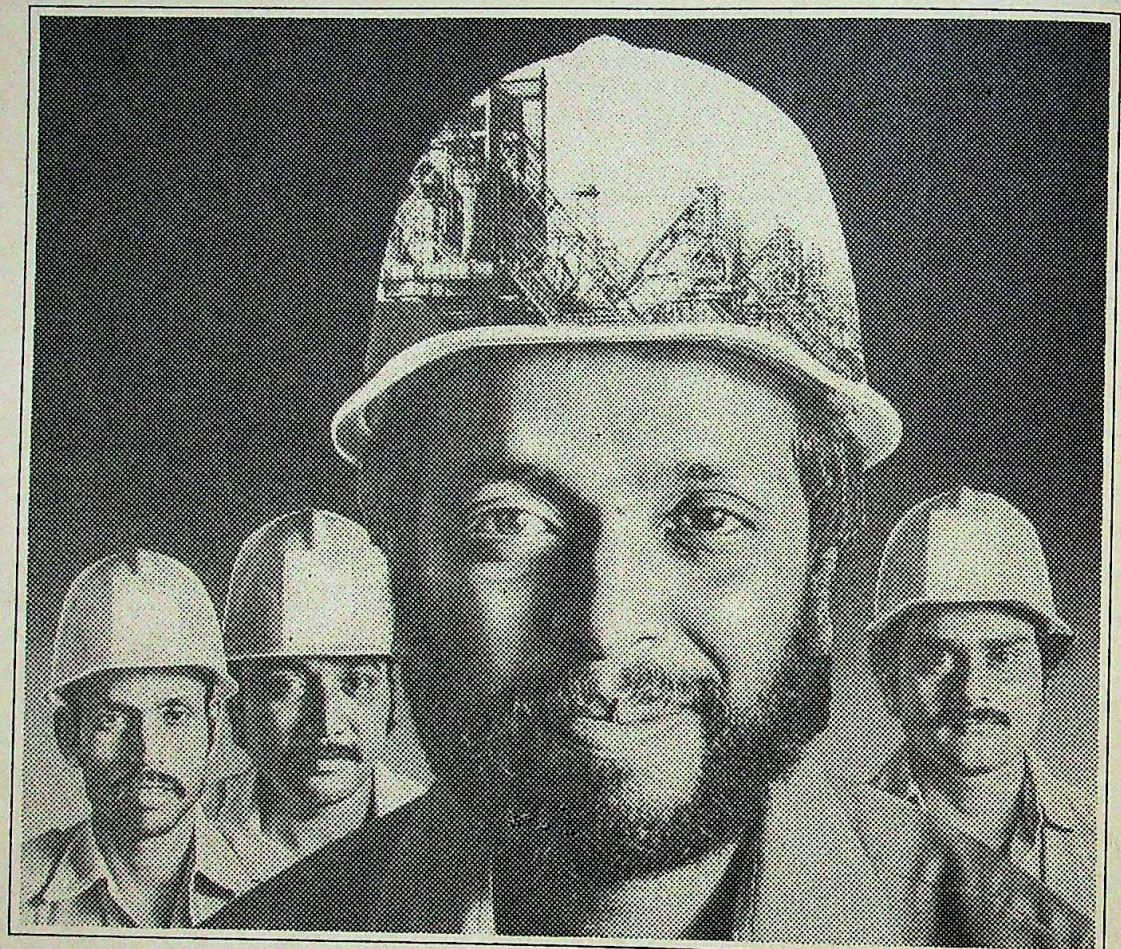
'The colony was half empty when I moved in. It was like a desert with buffaloes roaming around."

T.H. RAO
president, Block Residents' Welfare Association, NOIDA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Some of our finest products are not steel



Since the inception of its production on February 4, 1959, Bhilai Steel Plant—a unit of the Steel Authority of India Limited—has established itself as the premier steel producer of the country, the range and the quality of its products earning an enviable reputation in the domestic and the international markets.

Bhilai also holds the proud record of being the crucible of national steel technology—and a well-earned reputation of being the training ground for the nation's growing cadres of metallurgists, technicians and managers, with over 114,000 steelmen trained at the Bhilai Technical Institute and Bhilai Management Training Centre.

Bhilai's successes on the production front have been ensured by the consistent concern the management has had in the development of human resources, working hand in hand with an enlightened Union to develop the knowledge and skills of the 'Bhilai Collective' for the smooth implementation of expansion and modernisation projects in a magnificent manifestation of participative management.

With its emphasis on the human side of steel, Bhilai has an uninterrupted history of industrial peace and harmony.

Little wonder then that steel is not the only product of which Bhilai can be proud: it is not merely producing steel to strengthen the brawn of India's economy, but also the brains to get the most out of the national assets and investments represented by the steel industry.

STEEL AUTHORITY OF INDIA LIMITED

(A Government of India Enterprise)

Bhilai Steel Plant

Bhilai 490 001, Madhya Pradesh

Bhilai Steel – the Pulsating Giant in your service

SAA/BSP/12A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

administration, entrepreneurs had to run from pillar to post covering hundreds of miles within Uttar Pradesh for clearances, sales tax disputes, payment of electric bills, and industrial licensing. "This really kills you," says Anoop Bhandari, who now manufactures milk-separating machines in NOIDA. "The small entrepreneur is essentially a one-man show. If he spends an average of three days running around every week to different government offices there's no way he can run his shop."

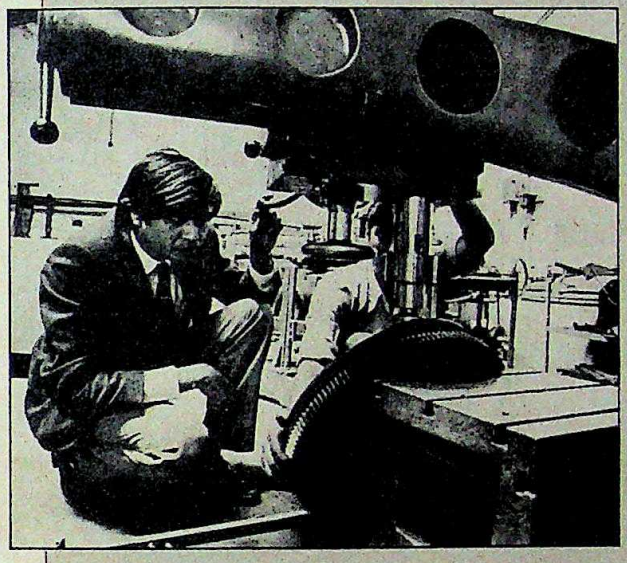
"By March 1982", Agnihotri adds, "this place had become a cremation ground for industry. The development authority had accepted 1,000 industrial applications and more than 800 had already been given cancellation notices because they could not begin production within the specified 18-month time period."

The Janata Government had declared NOIDA an "eyesore", transferred its district administration and rescinded all backward area benefits. In order to fight back, the pioneering entrepreneurs like Agnihotri and Bhandari formed the NOIDA Entrepreneurs' Association (NEA) as a group to lobby the state and Central governments through a series of well-publicised peace marches and hunger strikes.

"Those of us who stuck on", says Agnihotri, "did so for a number of reasons. My main reason was the fear of failure. I am a nuclear engineer by profession. I worked at the Tarapur plant. I had given up everything and borrowed about Rs 2 lakh. I had nowhere else to go. My family had never been in business. I am the first. No matter what, I was determined not to fail."

Like Agnihotri, most of the pioneers who had pitched their entrepreneurial tents in the black hole across the Jamuna were in their early 30s and technically qualified. They were army brats, the sons and daughters of government officials or petty traders and vendors in the Delhi area.

Almost to a man, Noidians agree that the watershed mark—when NOIDA started turning the corner—was 1984, when Yogesh Chandra was appointed chairman and inducted into his team, Uma Pillai and Indrani Sen, two young IAS officers. Says Vir Singh, a Lok Dal leader who lives in Chaura Raghunathpur, a nearby village: "I am an unabashed critic of the Government. But I have to admit that Chandra accomplished here in eight months what could not have happened in eight years. The main thing was that he flung open his doors. He listened to us. And he believed that the villagers whose land was acquired to form NOIDA had valid grievances. Before we came we weren't even allowed into the administration office."



"I had given up everything and had nowhere else to go. No matter what, I was determined not to fail."

RAKESH AGNIHOTRI

R.R. Engineers, manufacturers of printing machinery parts

Chandra is an unusual bureaucrat with an unusual style. He is known to be tough and to the point. He stresses that the 'family' concept is essential to the functioning of a hybrid social agglomeration such as NOIDA. It is one of the cardinal reasons for its success. NOIDA is perhaps the only place in India where village folk, townsmen, industrialists and bureaucrats sit together periodically and conduct freewheeling, often acrimonious discussions about how their different interests can be reconciled.

NOIDA has a unique town directory that also lists within its pages the names of pradhans and sarpanches from surrounding villages. Its industrialists run an employment exchange designed to find jobs for villagers displaced after their land was acquired.

As his Chief Executive Officer, Uma Pillai, explains: "There's a combined function here. This is unlike any other industrial estate in India. This is a new town, this an area where villagers deprived of land have to find work and become entrepreneurs themselves."

Says Chandra: "When I took over in 1984, in the midst of severe agitations and effigy-burnings, my main task was to restore NOIDA to its original status of being an industrial area—a haven for new industry that could benefit from the Delhi market." The first problem he faced was that of electricity. At least that was one place to start. To make matters worse, the Uttar Pradesh Government had decided to impose a four-day block closure on electric supply.

According to sources familiar with those developments, Chandra immediately travelled to Lucknow to meet the power minister and offered his resignation if an exception was not made for NOIDA. Within a few days NOIDA was promised—and it received and still does—electric power except for a three-hour peak period shutdown during evening hours.

"The point," Chandra says, "is that the Uttar Pradesh Government responded to us wherever it could."

A series of rapid-fire decisions designed to make things easier for industry were into effect:

► A sales tax holiday was declared for industry that came to NOIDA after 1982, along with a capital subsidy rebate. Chandra and his team began examining in detail the cancellation notices which had gone out to hundreds of industrialists. "Cancellations," Chandra says, "were punitive. What was needed was a change in attitude—major incentives to goad industrialists on."

► Cancellation was exercised as a last resort. Industrialists unable to begin production within prescribed time periods were given indefinite grace time. A myriad of taxes on transfer or surrender of plots or units were abolished or greatly reduced, making it easier for industrialists to pull out if they wanted, without carrying huge additional financial burdens to make room for new industry.

► The much talked about but rarely implemented 'one-window clearance

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

system' was implemented with despatch in NOIDA. By canvassing the state Government, the new administration was able to pull every department connected with industry such as the Uttar Pradesh State Electricity Board, Sales Tax, Posts and Telegraphs, Directorate of Industries and Uttar Pradesh Financial Corporation, into a NOIDA committee under the chairman to redress grievances and eliminate red tape on a regular basis.

► Along with these fiscal and industrial measures the development authority began a crash programme of building roads, planting trees and flower gardens, providing sewers, attracting schools, expanding bus services, telephone lines, providing new police stations, and implementing strict pollution controls.

"The response," Chandra says, "was electrifying. Land began selling rapidly. Industries started going into production. With current plans for 4,000 units, nearly 2,000 employing about 15,000 workers have now been established with about half functioning regularly. NOIDA's output from industries now total more than Rs 100 crore a year.

Agnihotri is already planning to expand his small operation. Bhandari, whose turnover from his milk separators was Rs 15 lakh last year expects to more than double that figure this year. He is planning to expand into medical electronics. Bakshi, notwithstanding severe destruction to his plant during the anti-Sikh riots in November 1984 in the trans-Jamuna area was healthy enough to recover and is planning an expansion of his turnover to Rs 10 crores within the next 30 months when his firm, Uniplas, expects to go public.

One industrialist who has done exceptionally well is Gulshan Arora. He is the owner of Supercassettes, a unit that records original sound cassettes. Arora, who buys film tracks outright and also does original recordings, has captured about 60 per cent of the export market for recorded sound cassettes and his unit now has an annual turnover of about Rs 20 crore. Five years ago, Arora and his family survived on about Rs 800 a month, selling fruit in the backlanes of Daryaganj. Today, Arora arrives at his modern NOIDA plant—which employs about 2,000 workers—in a stretched Mercedes limousine equipped with a VCR and TV. In the evenings he still goes back to his fruit stall in Daryaganj. He says incredulously: "I still can't believe it. What has happened is a miracle."

The famous Rajnigandha pan masala and Tulsi zarda also come out of NOIDA. S.N. Gupta, a managing partner in the firm, says Rajnigandha alone made about Rs 2.5 crore last year. The turnover is expected to double. One of the NOIDA pioneers, Gupta remembers: "There was a time, not too long ago, when the only thing NOIDA offered was chai (tea) and namaskaars."

"It is simply a story of a government responding well and doing what it is supposed to do for the people. For that reason, NOIDA works. And in India, that's saying a lot."

J.B.S. BAKSHI
proprietor Uniplast

The administration made extensive use of its funds to electrify the villages and improve conditions under which life was unbearable. "Those people had a legitimate gripe. Almost overnight they had lost the only occupation they knew—farming. They are entitled to get something back other than the compensation they received. We were determined not to leave roads, water supply and electric poles outside the villages and let development pass them by. Most of them have this infrastructure now," says Chandra.

Depending on the grade of the land and the time of purchase, villagers were given between Rs 15,000 and Rs 45,000 per acre of land acquired. Many of them became entrepreneurs. Raghuraj Singh of Bhangel who calls NOIDA a miracle has built himself a house worth several lakh rupees where a dilapidated hut once stood.

Dharamvir Singh, pradhan of Barola village, controls the Gujjar Transport Union which runs hundreds of tempos and trucks in and out of Delhi which were purchased by nearby farmers. The Gujjar transport system employs some 5,000 workers from surrounding villages.

Gulab Singh, born in Harola, a village adjacent to the industrial area, was the first graduate in his otherwise illiterate family. Before NOIDA, he tried his hand at several trades and failed after his 50 bighas were acquired by the Government. Today he runs a petrol pump whose turnover is about Rs 12 lakh a month. But not all farmers in the neighbourhood are as fortunate. Most of them paid off old debts with their earnings, paid exorbitant lawyers fees, constructed small brick houses, opened subsistence-existence tea stalls and are now unemployed.

But NOIDA has far from solved all its problems yet. Villagers complain that many of them were paid far less than the rates they deserved for their land. Residents complain of telephones that don't work, of bus services to Delhi that are still atrocious. Industrialists complain that the pioneers of NOIDA have not had the advantage of the sales tax exemption which went into effect for industries established after 1982. They also complain of an inequitable distribution of the industrial capital rebate, of unfair electricity charges, of inadequate planning to ensure that demands for electric power are met for the future. There is the usual litany of complaints of petty bribes having to be paid to inspectors, of inadequate provision of housing for labourers, of villagers not getting a square deal in being able to acquire subsidised plots in residential or industrial areas.

But, as Bakshi says: "The point about NOIDA is not difficult to grasp. It is simply a story of a government responding well and doing what it is supposed to do for the people. For that reason, NOIDA works. And in India, that's saying a lot."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by

When she's too young for perfumes and too old for dolls...

she's just right for Amul Chocolates.

Six delicious varieties...
Amul Coffee, Amul Crisp,
Amul Bitter, Amul Milk Chocolate,
Amul Fruit & Nut, Amul Orange.

Amul Chocolates
a gift for someone you love

Soft and creamy, like Swiss chocolates...

its creaminess sealed in silver foil...

and foil-board carton to keep it fresh.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Marketed by: Gujarat Co-operative Milk Marketing Federation Ltd., Anand

Perfect Settings

When you have time to yourself in a Parryware bathroom, you can reassure yourself of things close to your heart.

Like changing out of the role of efficient home-maker to slip into the grace of a dancer.

Like being able to call a beautiful poem to mind despite a decade of aprons and dusters.

Like discovering that a simple rearrangement of hairpins can turn a mother of two into a cover girl.

Parryware bathrooms let you paint your picture of happiness.

They have a modernity to make you feel young.

A heritage to be proud of.

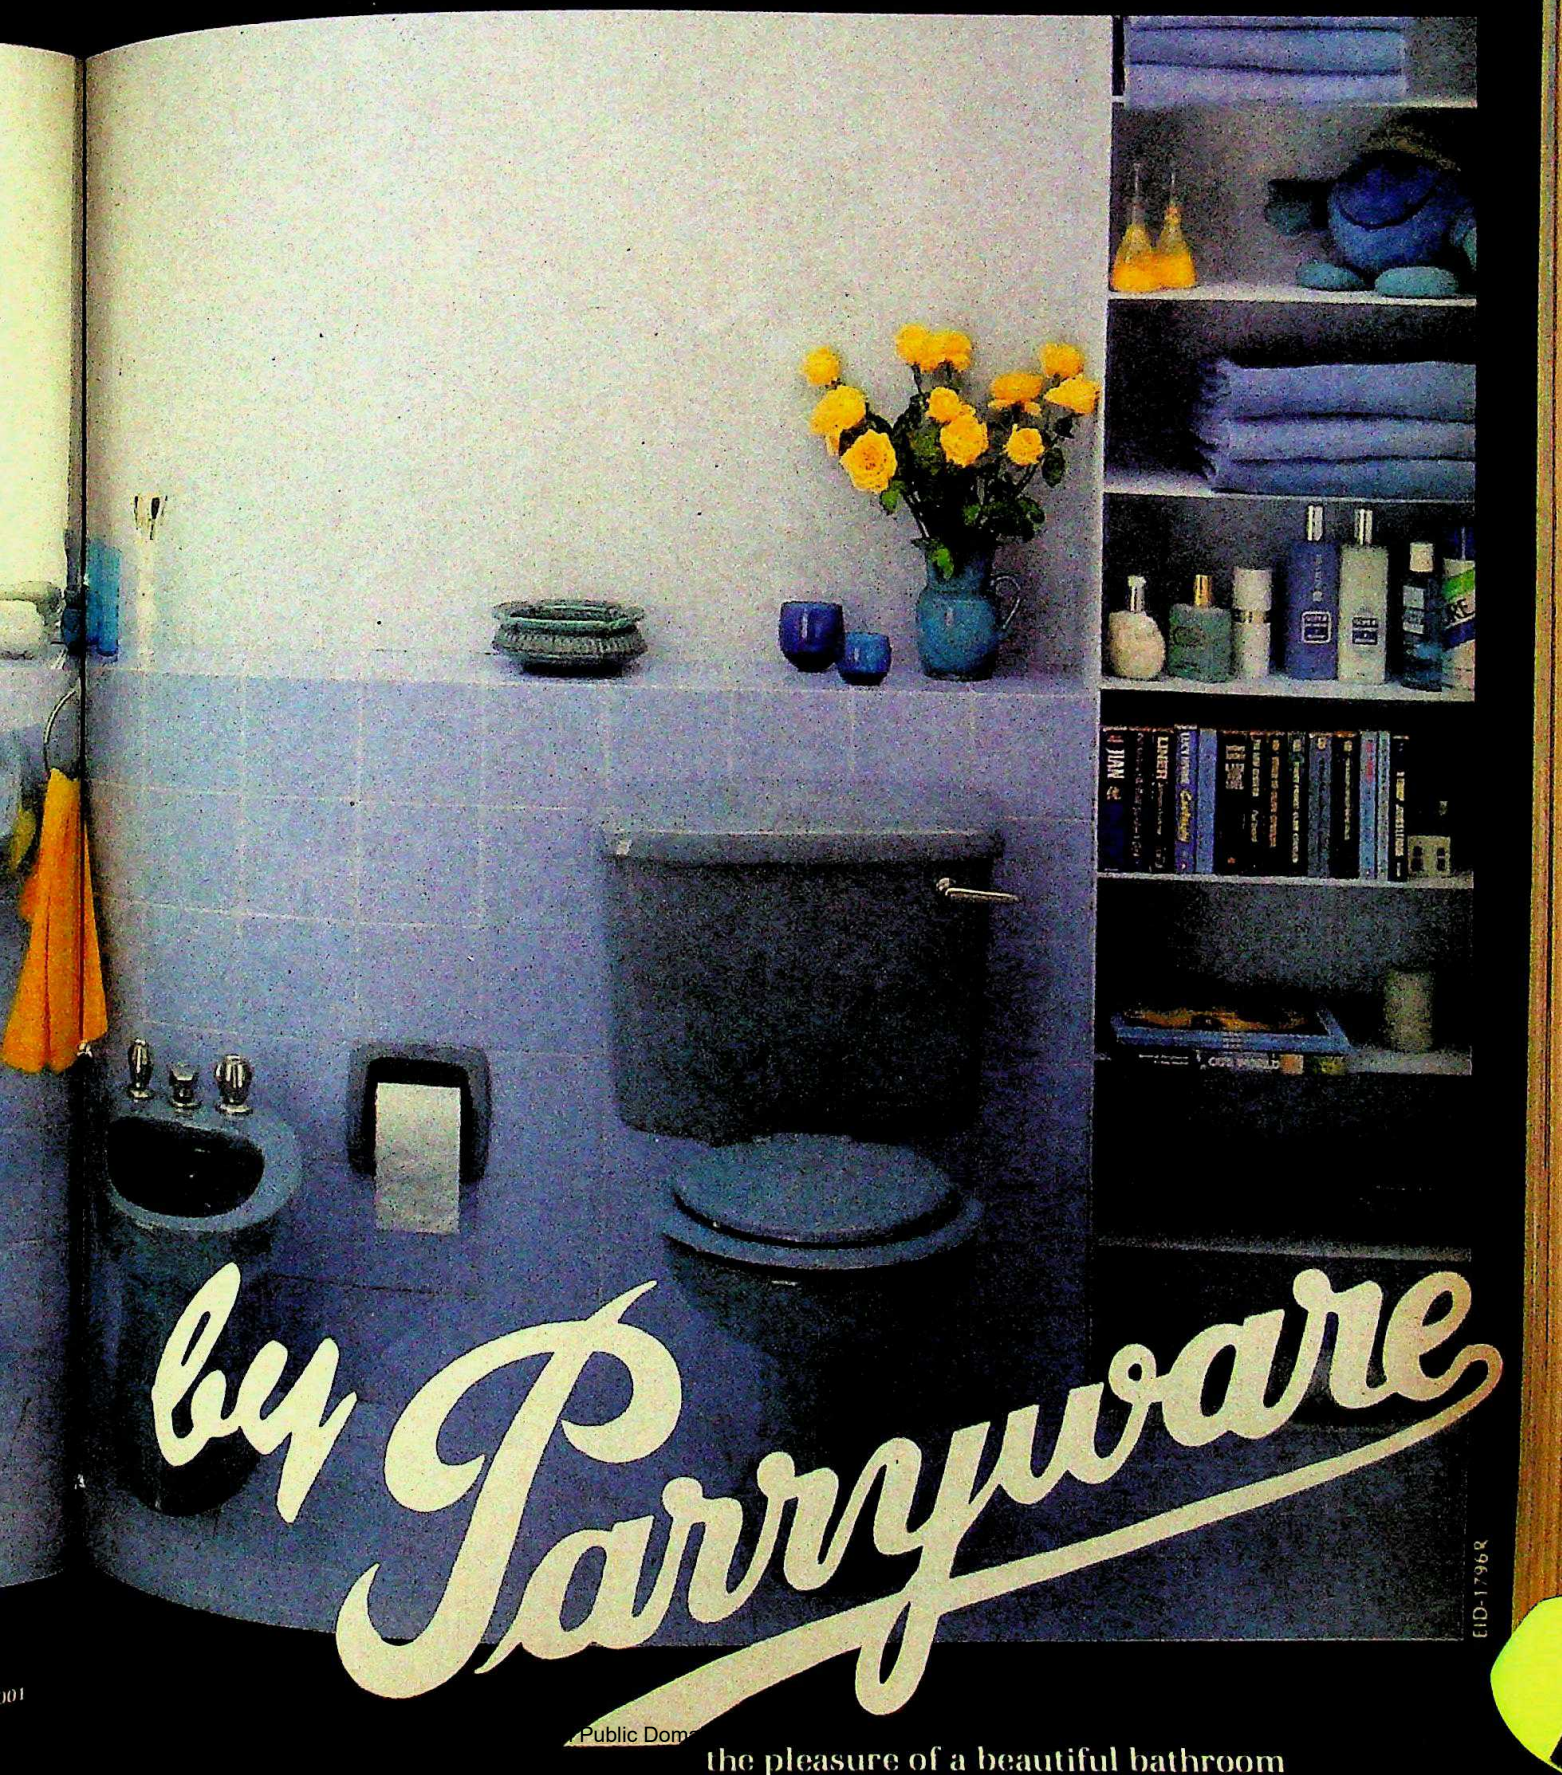
A finish that says you've got style.

Colours to complement your sophistication.

And a beauty that inspires you to get the very best out of your life.

Parryware
VITREOUS

Manufactured and marketed by E.I.D Parry (India) Limited - Ceramics Division, Dare House, P.B No 12, N.S.C. Bose Road, Madras 600 001



by Parryware
the pleasure of a beautiful bathroom
EID-1796R

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The most envied colour TV within a stone's throw!

Now who'd want to hurl a stone at such a beautiful TV! Mentally, though, many might.

Some of your neighbours for instance. Who may have seen your new ONIDA. And envied its classy, futuristic looks, the most astounding true-to-life colour, and the sharpest picture they've ever seen on a TV screen! And have been deeply regretting the fact that they're stuck with colour TVs that are obviously a generation behind!

You may of course argue, your neighbours are the nicest lot. Hardly the type to stoop to violence no matter how much they envy your ONIDA TV. Well... thank heavens!

ONIDA With cordless remote.

Neighbours' envy. Owners' pride.

In case you want more details rush to the nearest Dealer.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AYODHYA

Unholy Row

Photographs by S. PREMI

IT WAS likened to an act of God but the discord and bitterness it generated seemed to suggest otherwise. Last fortnight's order of the Faizabad sessions judge ordering the reopening of the controversial Ram Janmabhoomi temple complex in Ayodhya—venerated by Hindus as the birthplace of Lord Rama and by Muslims who know it as the Babari Mosque—saw tensions come to the boil. While the lanes and by-lanes of this holy city reverberated to the joyful strains of numerous bhajan groups, Muslims offered prayers, wore black bands and called for a state-wide bandh to protest against what they called a "judicial coup d'etat". The verdict has been challenged in the high court, but coming as it did 37 years after the complex was closed pending a legal decision on its ownership, it could hardly be a communal salve.

The story began when a young Faizabad lawyer, Umesh Chandra Pandey, moved an appeal before District and Sessions Judge Krishna Mohan Pandey —after his plea had been rejected by the town munsif—seeking the unlocking of the gates of the disputed shrine on the grounds that it was only an earlier district administration and not a court which had ordered its closure. Pandey heard the petition on February 1, and after examining Collector Indu Kumar Pandey and Senior Superintendent of Police (SSP) Karmveer Singh, directed that the gates be opened forthwith.

The Muslim community was taken by surprise. Charged lawyer Abdul Mannan: "Everything was pre-planned as the state police and the Provincial Armed Constabulary (PAC) had been deployed much before the district judge had even pronounced his judgement." Added Mohammed Hashim, who has been fighting a court case over precisely this issue since 1961 on behalf of the Sunni Central Waqf and the Anjuman Muhafiz-e-Maquabir Avadh-Ayodhya (Organisation for the Protection of Tombs of Avadh-Ayodhya): "The whole procedure was illegal as none of the petitioners of the main case (of 1961) was heard." His petition, filed before the Allahabad High Court, challenged the legality of the sessions judge's orders and prayed that the high court quash the judgement and issue a writ of mandamus and certiorari asking the opposite parties to maintain the sanctity of the premises.

"Everything was pre-planned as the state police and the PAC had been deployed much before the district judge had even pronounced his judgement."

ABDUL MANAN
lawyer

The shrine: controversial

Minority suspicions centred on the administration, and the massive deployment of the police only served to fuel these suspicions. SSP Karmveer Singh was quick to dispel these misgivings. "The administration," he pointed out, "had to take precautionary measures. We apprehended trouble and deployed forces in advance."

Yet minor Hindu-Muslim clashes were reported from Bahraich, Rudauli and Barabanki. More important, minority sentiments were hurt over official admissions that the Vishwa Hindu Parishad (VHP) had called on the chief minister when he visited Ayodhya on the occasion of the Ramayan Mela on December 19. Informed sources said that the chief minister had called for the entire file, and reportedly found no specific court order regarding its closure.

Roughly one month later Umesh Chandra Pandey moved the court on precisely this point and succeeded in getting the shrine opened. In this highly surcharged atmosphere, the Muslims could be, perhaps, pardoned for suspecting a political link between the chief minister's move to reduce the appeal of the VHP and Pandey moving the petition. Pandey, however, made it clear that his going to court had nothing to do with politics. His lawyer and cousin Vireshwar Dwivedi described the allegation as baseless. "I examined the legal aspects of the records and found no evidence of any court having ordered the locking and so I moved the petition."

But opinions had already polarised. Provocative moves by the Shriram Janmabhoomi Mukti Yajna Samiti—a VHP offshoot—which organised a rath yatra from Sitamarhi (where Sita is believed to have appeared) to Ayodhya on September 25, 1984, where the call to "liberate" Ram Janmabhoomi first made itself heard, hardly helped matters. An even more ominous development was in January 1985, when the Mukti Yajna Samiti general secretary, and VHP assistant secretary set the deadline of April 14 for the opening of the shrine. Simultaneously, members of the Bajran Dal, the youth wing of the VHP, began working on plans for a state-wide bandh on March 9.

The shrine itself is an object of some mystery. The VHP claims that a massive temple was built by Vikramaditya at the place where Lord Rama had "appeared" on the banks of the Saryu. What happened during the intervening period is not known but it is believed that in 1528, when the Mughal Emperor Zahiruddin Babar visited Ayodhya to pay his respects to Fakir Quazal Abbas Qualandar, the latter apparently asked Babar to demolish the temple and build a mosque where he could offer namaz. According to historical accounts, Babar was reluctant to do so, but the Fakir prevailed on him and his wish was carried out. If the VHP leaders are to be believed, a staggering 76 wars were fought throughout the Mughal period on this issue alone with no fewer than 3 lakh Hindus losing their lives.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Muslims continued to offer prayers at the shrine till heavy damage during riots in 1934 rendered that no longer possible. So it remained till December 22, 1949, when an idol of Lord Rama appeared in the shrine and a group of devotees led by Baba Abhayram Das of Nirmohi Akhada began offering prayers there. Protests from the Muslims of the locality—who filed an FIR—prompted the city magistrate to attach the property and nominate a receiver. A police guard was mounted and the administration locked the premises.

THEN began the first of a series of legal battles between Hindus and Muslims and among various groups of Hindus themselves, each staking their claims to the shrine. The first case was filed on January 16, 1950, by Gopal Singh Visharad of Gwalior—against the Muslims and the state of Uttar Pradesh—which requested the court to grant the petitioner the right to offer darshan at the temple. A perpetual injunction was sought whereby the defendants would be restrained from removing the idols and causing any hurdle in the puja. An ex-parte injunction was granted and confirmed on March 3, 1951.

Matters took a curious turn when the then deputy commissioner of Faizabad filed a petition in court on behalf of the state Government saying: "The property in suit (No.2/1950) is known as Babari Mosque and has for a long period been in use as a mosque...It has not been in use as a temple of Sri Ramachandra." The petition went on to add: "On the night of December 22, 1949, the idols of Sri Ramachandra were surreptitiously and wrongfully put inside."

Subsequently, two more suits were filed by other Hindu groups in 1950 and 1959. Then in 1961, the Sunni Central Waqf Board and others including Hashim filed a suit claiming the shrine was the historic Babari Masjid. All four suits were then consolidated, with the last case being treated as the representive case. Since then it has been pending in the high court. What the Muslims do not state but obviously fear is that with the sessions court order unlocking the shrine, the Hindus may have already won the legal battle. But Collector Pandey allayed such fears. He told INDIA TODAY: "Whether this is a mosque or a temple is still to be decided by the court. The present judgement would not have any bearing on the old case."

A Hindu meet: jubilation

"I examined the legal aspects of the records and found no evidence of any court having ordered the locking and so I moved the petition."

VIRESHWAR DWIVEDI
lawyer

But there is no denying the fact that the opening of the gates of the shrine has stirred the Muslim community. Last fortnight, the All-India Muslim Personal Law Board held a meeting in New Delhi in the wake of the sessions court's judgement, and called upon all political parties and secular forces to support the demand for restoration of the shrine to the Muslims. Syed Shahabuddin, Janata MP and head of the All India Muslim Majlis-e-Mashawarat "condemned" the sessions court's order and exhorted Muslims to observe February 14 as a "day of mourning". Said he: "The unilateral seizure of the Babari Mosque has shocked the Muslims beyond measure and eroded their faith in secularism."

While the future of the shrine undoubtedly rests with the court, quarrels have broken out between the different Hindu groups. These include, apart from the VHP and its affiliates, the Hanuman Garhi led by Ram Dayal Sharma and the Nirmohi Akhara. According to temple sources, all these groups want the ouster of pujari Lal Das and receiver K.K. Verma so that they can have full control over the shrine and its property. Confirming this, Lal Das said that though the gates had been opened, certain communal elements were trying to capture it and exploit the situation. This became clear last fortnight when the VHP President, Shivnath Katju, demanded that the shrine be handed over to the Ramanandacharya Trust—which the VHP had set up last year—along with the seven-acre plot of land adjacent to the shrine with a view to building a new temple complex.

With the dispute showing no signs of ending, local administration officials fear that musclemen from Bihar may want a piece of the action. If that happens, it can only complicate an already tense situation in the land of God.

—FARZAND AHMED in Ayodhya

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HIGH FLYING

Uniform Material

Reflects good taste. At affordable prices.

'Entyce' fabrics include a variety of uniform material. In cotton, blends and polyester.

'Entyce' uniform fabrics are produced on the most modern machinery with sophisticated technology, and rigorous quality tests at every stage.

'Entyce' is the most used uniform fabric by quality conscious users like Defence Services, Transport Corporations, Police, Posts & Telegraphs, Air India, Indian Airlines, BHEL, IOC, IPCL and several industries and almost all leading educational institutions, specially in Polyester blended fabrics.

However small the requirement may be, 'Entyce' offers a choice of fabrics and material.

For your complete requirements, write to
The Director (Commercial)

national textile corporation (TAMIL NADU & PONDICHERRY) LTD
A GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ENTERPRISE

10/64 SOMASUNDARAM MILLS RD, COIMBATORE 641 009
TELEPHONE-37665 (5 LINES) TELEX-ENTYCE-CB 345

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

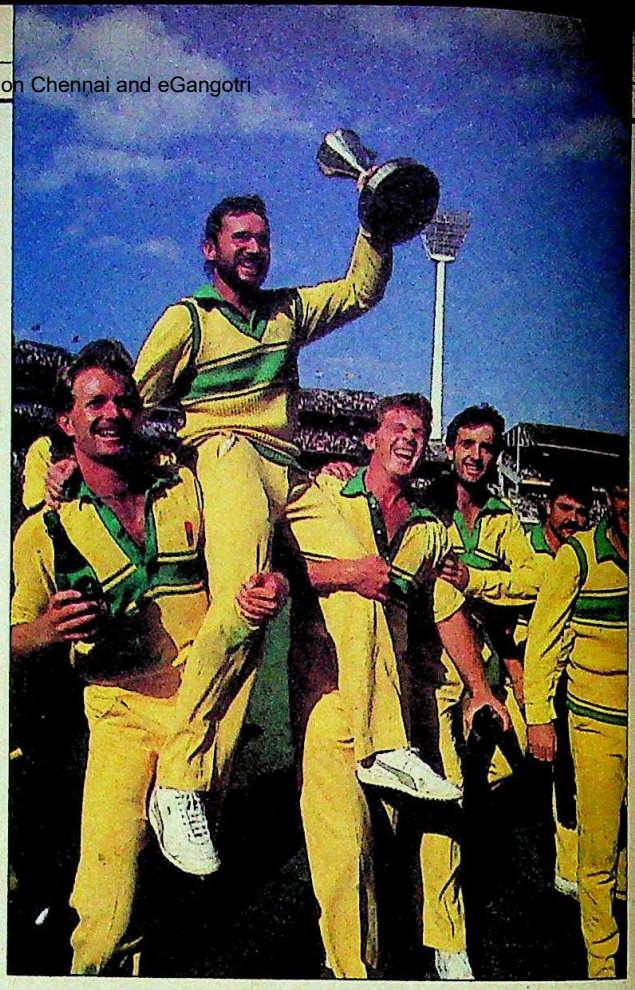
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CRICKET

Going Down Under

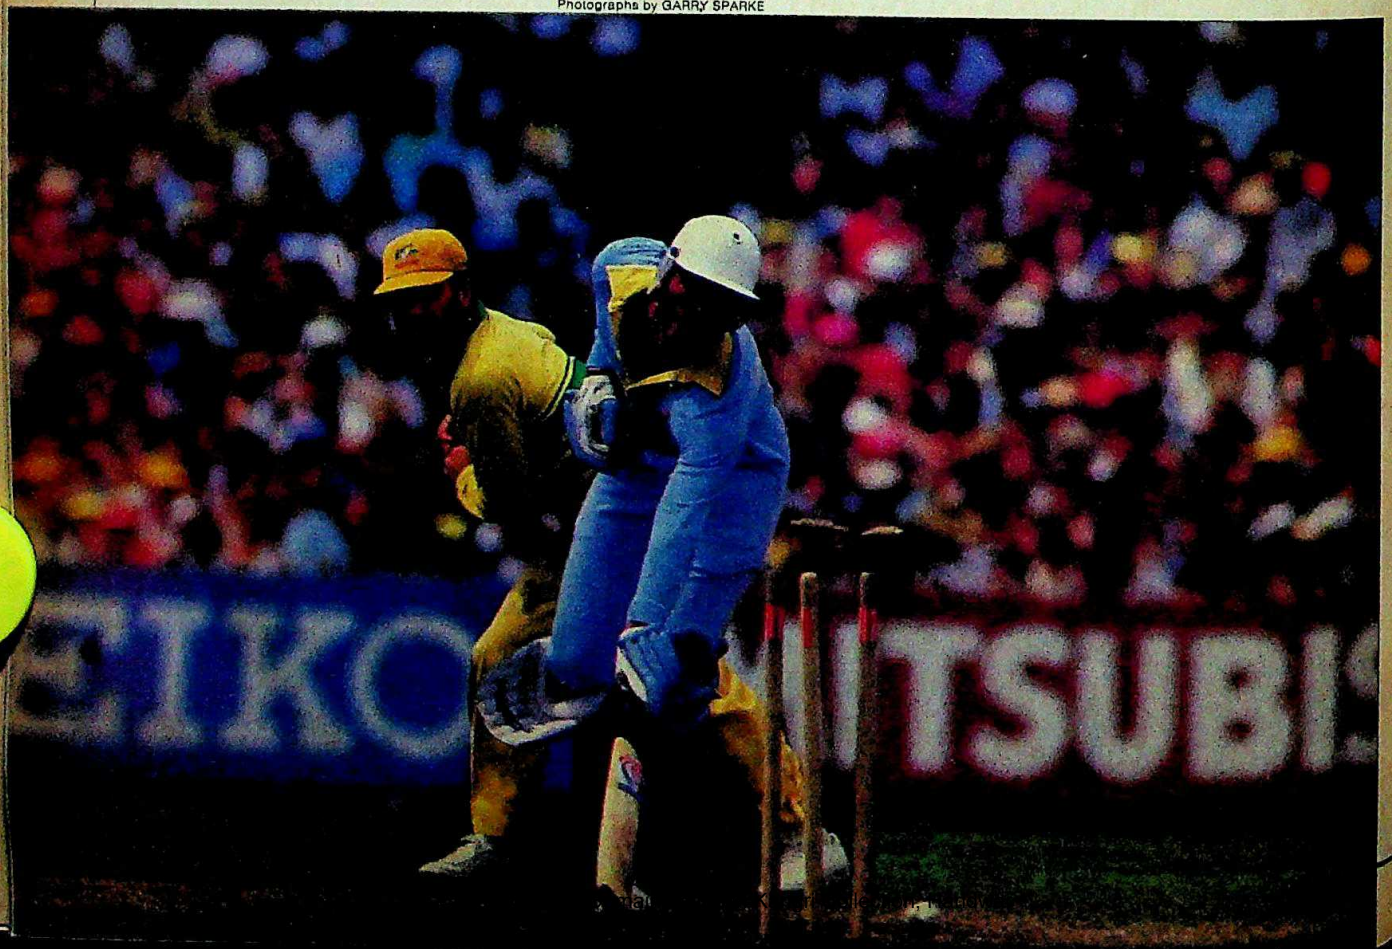
AS THE packed Melbourne Cricket Ground exploded with jubilation after Allan Border's Australians coasted to a comfortable win over India in the Benson and Hedges World Series Cup, the gloom in the Indian dressing-room seemed to symbolise the end of India's dominance in one-day cricket. But the series did expose some harsh truths regarding the failings in the Indian side and resurrected questions about Kapil Dev's captaincy. Associate Editor DILIP BOBB flew down to Australia to cover the finals in Sydney and Melbourne last fortnight and gain an on-the-spot insight into the atmosphere in the Indian camp. His report:

SYDNEY'S garrulous taxi-drivers, who traverse Australia's wide-ranging ethnic waveband, consider themselves experts on everything from the vagaries of the weather to the outcome of a cricket match. Driving in from Sydney's squeaky clean airport on the morning of the first final in the Benson and Hedges World Series Cup between

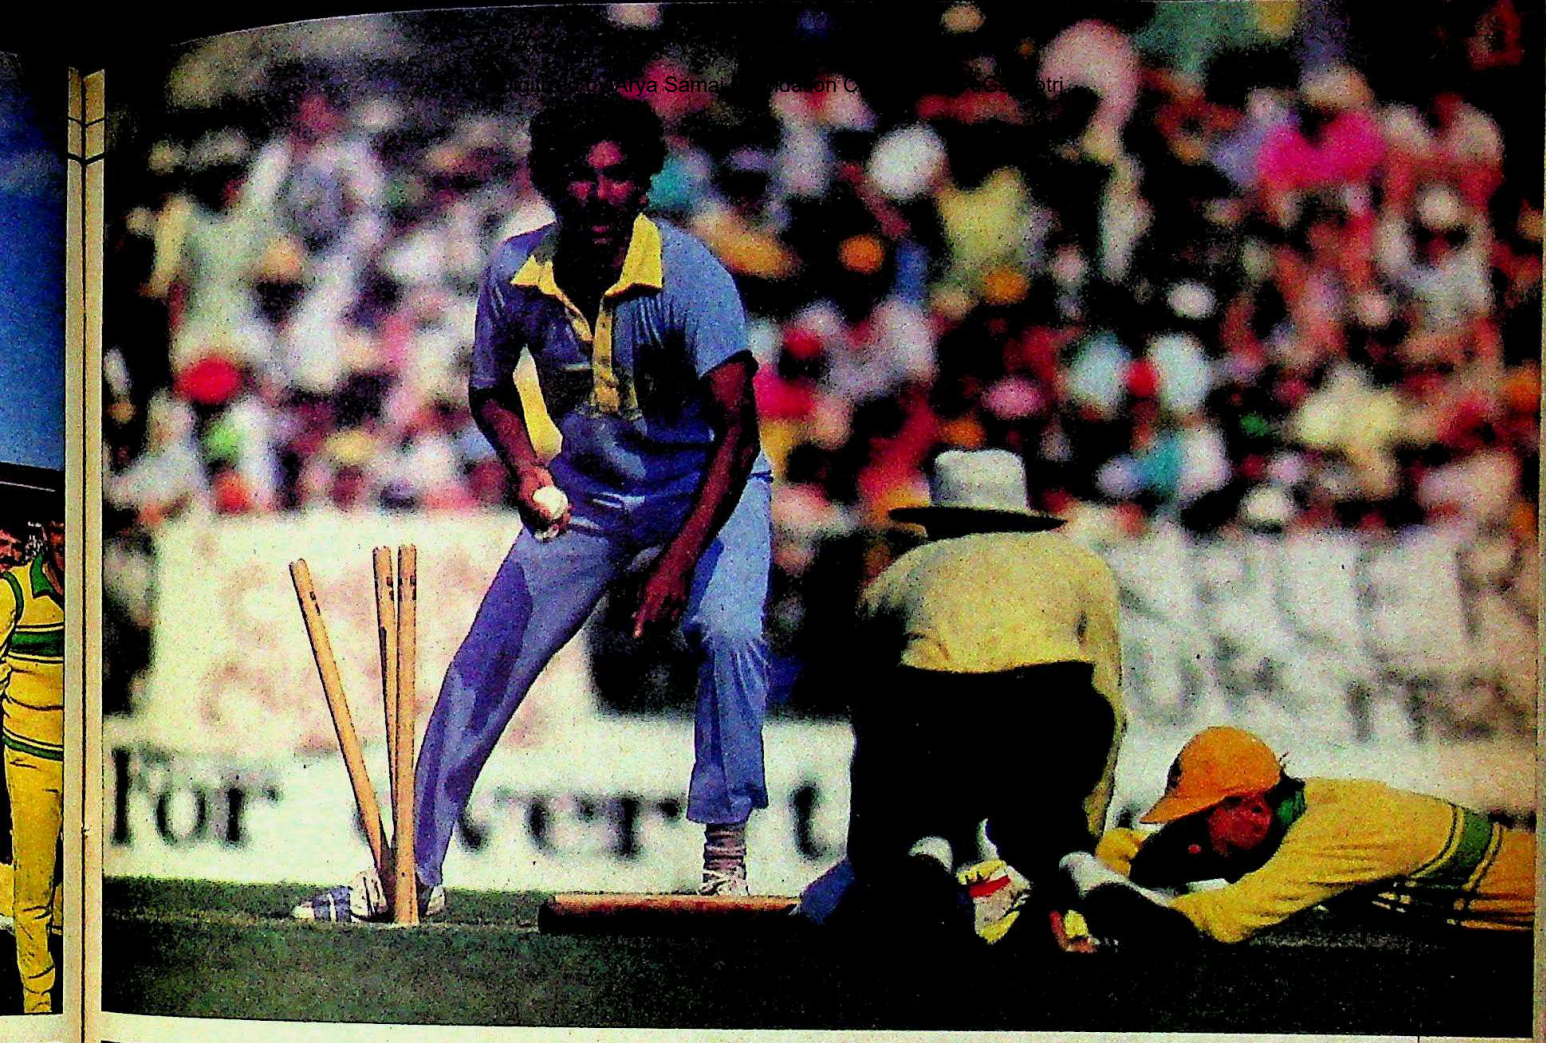


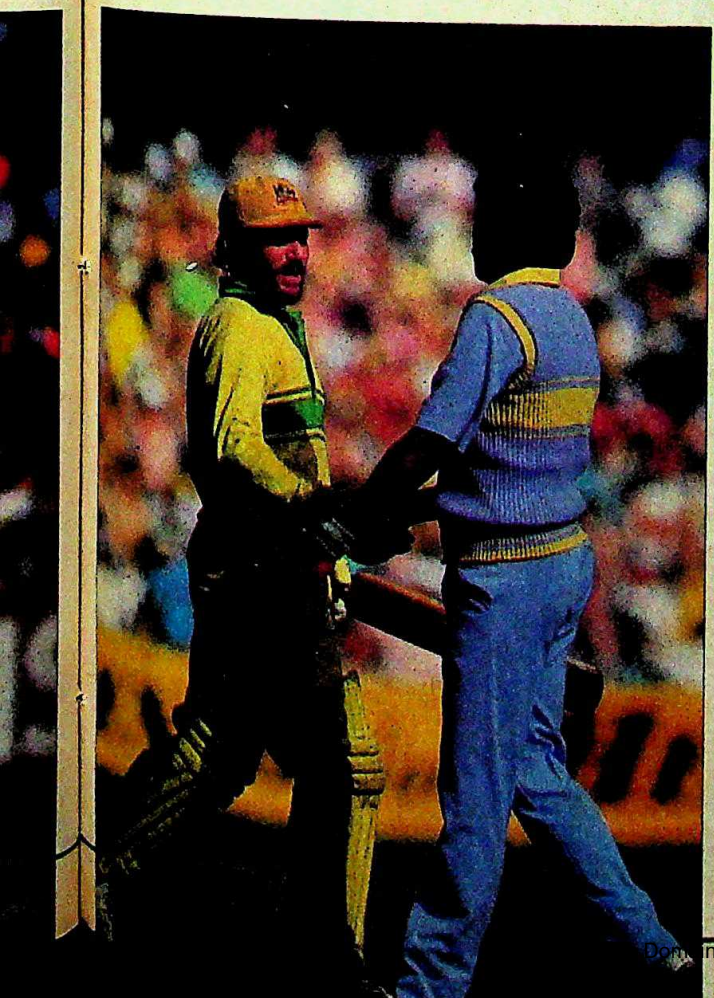
Border chaired by his team-mates after their victory in Melbourne (top); and Shastri's run-out terminates the Indian innings

Photographs by GARRY SPARKE



Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri





Shastri appeals for a run-out in the Melbourne final (top); and Kapil congratulates Border after the Australian captain hit the winning run

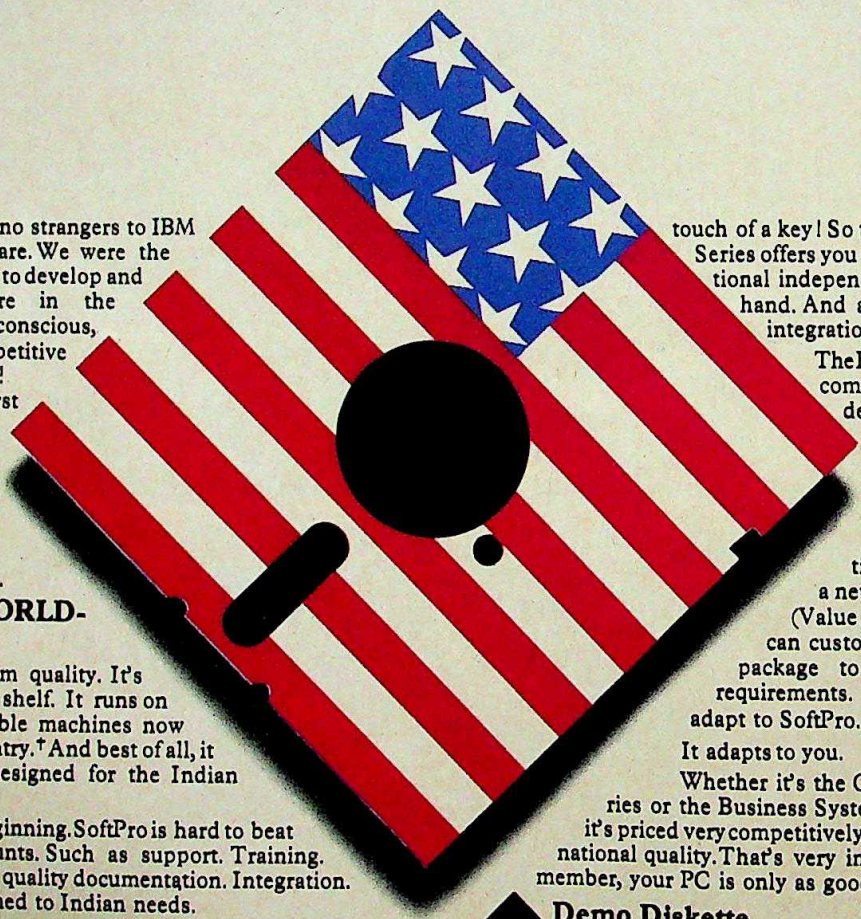
India and Australia, one grizzled member of the fraternity confidentially predicted that India would lose the encounter. "It's the money y'know mate," he drawled, hitching up his shorts. "The Aussies have been promised half a million smackers if they win." In the event, he was right about the outcome. But the large number of dejected Indian expatriates who turned out for the two finals at Sydney and Melbourne, Australia's two largest cities, could have been forgiven for thinking that it was the Indian team that had been paid the money—to lose.

Right through the emotion-charged tournament, the Indian squad displayed an inconsistency that was at amazing variance with their past reputation as 'one-day wonders'. Having launched their defence of the title on a high note, the Indian challenge diminished as alarmingly as the contents of the beer cans on the famous 'hill' at the Sydney Cricket Ground, with the world champions scrabbling frantically to find a toe-hold in the finals. Having achieved that, Kapil Dev's men seemed to be back in the form and spirit that has characterised their dominance of one-day cricket for the last three years. But it was the flattery of deceit. To the intense disappointment of millions of

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NOW YOU CAN BUY IBM PC COMPATIBLE SOFTWARE FROM THE FIRST INDIAN COMPANY TO SELL ITS PACKAGES...IN THE U.S.A!



At WIPRO, we're no strangers to IBM PC compatible software. We were the first Indian company to develop and market PC software in the world's most quality conscious, technologically competitive market... the U S A!

And now, for the first time, this country too can look forward to PC software that measures up to the same, exacting quality standards.

It's called SoftPro.

SOFTPRO IS WORLD-CLASS

SoftPro is premium quality. It's available right off the shelf. It runs on all IBM PC compatible machines now being sold in the country.† And best of all, it has been specially designed for the Indian market. By WIPRO.

That's just the beginning. SoftPro is hard to beat on a number of counts. Such as support. Training. Enhancements. High quality documentation. Integration. All of it, perfectly tuned to Indian needs.

SOFTPRO IS INTEGRATED

SoftPro offers you a wide range of software packages. There's a comprehensive Office Productivity Series. And a fully integrated Business Systems Series.

Take the Office Productivity Series. You'll find five separate packages that work together as a family. The integration of these packages is smooth and logical. You can have a powerful Data Base, a full featured Word Processor and a versatile Spreadsheet. And transfer data from one package to another at the touch of a key! So the Office Productivity Series offers you the power of fully functional independent packages on one hand. And all the advantages of integration on the other.

The Business Systems Series comprises eight packages designed to streamline your Financial Accounting.

What's special about this series is its ease of customisation. We're setting up a network of SoftPro VARs (Value Added Resellers) who can custom-tailor the complete package to suit your specific requirements. So you don't have to adapt to SoftPro.

It adapts to you.

Whether it's the Office Productivity Series or the Business Systems Series, you'll find it's priced very competitively. And all of it is of international quality. That's very important. Because, remember, your PC is only as good as your software is.

Demo Diskette

See SoftPro in action. Visit any of our dealers for a 'hands-on' demonstration. Or write in for our special Demo Diskettes* designed to operate on any IBM PC compatible.

* SoftPro invites you to send for its Demo Diskettes on both the Office Productivity Series and the Business Systems Series. For each diskette, send a cheque for Rs 100, in favour of WIPRO SYSTEMS LIMITED, to Wipro Systems Limited, 3rd Floor, HVS Building, 1 Edward Road, Bangalore 560 052.

† Such as the HCL Busybee, the DCM Tandy 1000, the Chi 2 from Chowgule, the SNPC from Hinditron and the Wipro PC.

SoftPro

PREMIUM QUALITY SOFTWARE FROM WIPRO

SoftPro is available at:
Computer City, New Delhi (Ph: 3317033) Computer Point, Bangalore (Ph: 569617), Bombay (Ph: 4930543), Madras (Ph: 441192) and New Delhi (Ph: 699421) Computer Shack, Bombay (Ph: 223404)

WSL-1859

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Indian fans glued to the pre-dawn telecasts, India caved in tamely in the first two finals to a team that they had comprehensively outplayed in the Test series prior to the Benson and Hedges Cup. Suddenly, the catch-phrase 'Down Under India is Thunder', coined at the same venue last year, bore a depressingly mocking ring.

INSTEAD, the new slogans being displayed against the bobbing sea of colour in the stands offset by the profusion of bare-chests and bikini-clad women reflected the typical Australian fanaticism towards the game. "Allan Border walks on water," read one. "Bordering on the unbelievable," said another, while "Mathews loves eating curry" joined in after Greg Mathews, a cross between a cricketer and a vaudeville actor, picked up the vital wickets of Srikkanth and Amarnath. The frenzy and parochialism even, surprisingly enough, extended to the Melbourne Cricket Ground (MCG) authorities. On the morning of the match, an MCG radio advertisement for tickets to the match announced against the clash of cymbals: "Come to the MCG and see the Australians crush India."

The hard sell and the aggressiveness is aided by the attitude of the sponsors, in this case the Benson and Hedges cigarette company. The Australian team was promised a bonus of A$ 12,000 (Rs 1,03,200) if they reached the finals and an additional A$ 12,000 if they won the cup. The company offered them a similar amount for each Test match won against New Zealand and India and an extra A$ 6,000 (Rs 51,600) if they won a Test series. With the Kit Kat Company pitching in with their own prize money awards and an A$ 30,000 (Rs 2,58,000) Alfa Romeo for the international cricketer of the year (won by New Zealand's Richard Hadlee), cricket in Australia has become something of a commercial circus and a further attraction for the sporting Australian crowds.

Not that the Australian crowds needed much enticement. The Aussies are as fanatical about the outdoors as they are about their beer, and cricket matches, especially when Australia is on a winning spree, are treated more like rowdy picnics. At Melbourne, families, including old white-haired ladies and children, started arriving at the ground two hours before the start of play loaded down with picnic hampers to grab the best seats or get into the one section of the stands where drinking is allowed.

Australian cricket crowds are generally a sporting lot and animated discussions about "Kris", "Dev" and "Sunny", the three best-known members of the Indian team, are often heard over the popping of beer can tops and the crunch of popcorn and chips. This time, however, it was the the collective chant of "Border, Border" while the Australian team did their football-style victory lap that turned the stadium into a gladiatorial arena. This time there were no crowds of starry-eyed youngsters and scantily-clad girls around the door of the Indian dressing-room.

Even an hour after the match was over, the Indians were still to emerge from behind their locked dressing-room door and it was only Kapil, his swarthy face grim and gloomy, who walked out for his post-match press conference. Despite his earlier outburst against the standard of umpiring and the state of Australian pitches, Kapil was the first to admit that the team had performed well below par. Sipping coffee in the plush delegates' lounge of the MCG after the match, Kapil looked beaten and demoralised. "I just can't explain it," he said. "In the earlier matches we were batting well and bowling badly. In the later stages, we bowled well but our batting let us down. We have to do some serious thinking."

Ironically enough, the serious thinking being done by most Indian cricket-lovers was about Kapil himself and his qualifications as skipper, now under grave question. "I think the Indians are much too orthodox in their approach to the game," says former England captain Tony Greig, now a member of the Channel Nine commentary team. "There appears to be a lack of improvisation and adaptability to changing fortunes."

For that failing, Kapil as a captain who has still to record a win after 20 Test matches, must perforce accept much of the responsibility. As the only match-winner in the side following 'Kris' Srikkanth's dismal performance in the one-day series, referred to as 'pyjama cricket' by the purists, Kapil seemed to cave in to the increasing pressure with some unforgivable errors in strategy. In the final match, he promoted himself in the batting order and was out on the fifth ball, edging a simple catch after having scored a duck in the first final. When asked after the match why he had changed the batting order, Kapil was on the defensive and made the surprising declaration that "I wanted to improve the running between the wickets".

Similarly, when India took the field to the Australian war chant of "c'mon Aussie, c'mon", Kapil appeared incapable of stemming the runs, and as the only strike bowler in the side, only brought himself on when Australia needed just 45 runs for victory and the 72,000-strong crowd was already on its feet waving the traditional hand-written banners in anticipation of an Indian defeat. With Australia's lengthy tail, a couple of quick wickets would have put the pressure on Border's men. Kapil's reply that Ravi Shastri and Shivlal Yadav were bowling economically at the time was unconvincing to say the least and reflective of his seeming lack of strategy and reluctance to go on the

GARRY SPARKE

Melbourne crowd in one of the stands after Australia's victory

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

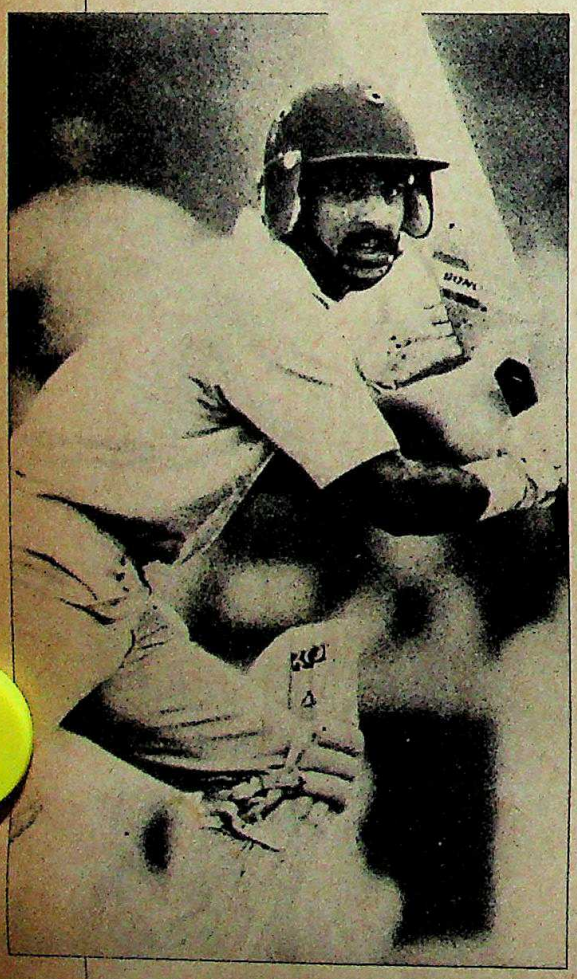
attack at crucial moments. Says former Australian Test star and Channel Nine commentator Keith Stackpole: "The Indians have made it harder on themselves by constantly shuffling their batting order and chopping and changing their attack. They also seem unable to decide whether to set a target or chase one. To me, they looked an inconsistent side, lacking in direction or purpose."

Kapil also tended to put too much of the blame for India's poor showing on the tousled head of young Sivaramakrishnan. Yet, at the nets both he and manager and former spinner Venkataraghavan made no great effort to guide or encourage the youngster. Says former Australian captain and leg spinner Richie Benaud: "Siva just needed the right guidance. He wasn't keeping his head still at his delivery and wasn't really looking where he intended to bowl. He has also changed his run-up by slowing down a lot before delivery." He also felt that there seemed to be no effort to counsel Srikkanth, the other key failure in the series, on how to counter the Australian strategy of bowling to him short and around the off-stump.

CERTAINLY, 'Kaps', as his teammates call him, can hardly be faulted for the poor form of key players like Srikkanth (labelled the 'Orient Express' by Australian cricket-writers), Azharuddin and Sivaramakrishnan, a factor that played a major role in their overall performance. But even so, it was the pressure that told in the end with Chetan Sharma and Roger Binny faltering in line and length when it was most required, 'Jimmy' Amarnath making dubious history with a crestfallen grin by becoming the first batsman in a one-day international to be declared out handling the ball and 'Colonel' Dilip Vengsarkar whittling down the crucial run tally by his ponderous running between the wickets. Kapil's own failure with the bat in the last two matches was also a contributory factor of no small measure.

Not that the tour was unprofitable in other ways. The Indian side picked up A$ 24,500 (Rs 2,10,700) for the five wins and five losses in the 10 qualifying matches they played and an additional A$ 16,000 (Rs 1,37,600) as the losing finalists (this was in addition to the A$ 20,000 (Rs 1,72,000) they earned for the three-match Test series). The team also shared four A$ 500 (Rs 4,300) player of the match awards (Kapil, Azharuddin, Vengsarkar and Chetan) and Kapil's A$ 2,000 (Rs 17,200) for winning the Kit Kat strike rate award. In fact, it was a poor reflection of India's batting performance that only one Indian, Kapil, featured among the seven players who qualified for the Kit Kat prize. Kapil, of course, earned an additional bonus in the form of the royalties from his book, In God's Decree, released in Australia during the tour. Despite its shortcomings, the book shot up the Australian publishing charts and was the third biggest seller after literary offerings by more established writers like Leon Uris and Len Deighton.

But despite the financial rewards, it was an abject lack of purpose and strategy



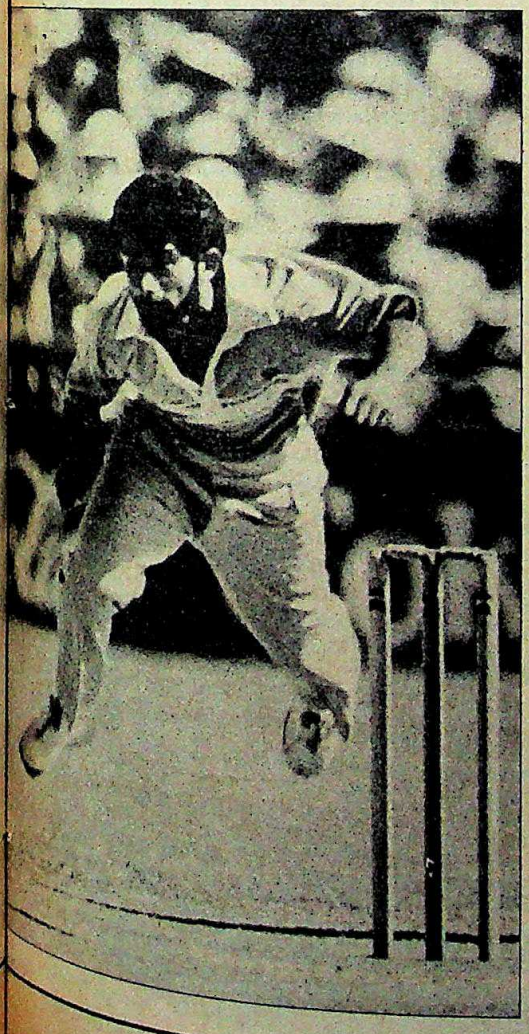
(From left) Srikkanth, Sivaramakrishnan and Chetan Sharma in action during the series

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

which mainly prevented India from winning the A$ 32,000 (Rs 2,75,200) winners' purse, a failing that was in fact clearly evident at the halfway stage of the tournament when Kapil suddenly decided to replace three members of the team—Sivaramakrishnan, Raju Kulkarni and Syed Kirmani. In a frantic message to the Cricket Control Board of India, Kapil requested that Sandeep Patil, Madan Lal and Sadanand Vishwanath be flown out to replace the three. It is debatable whether their inclusion would have made any difference to the eventual performance of the team, but the board flatly refused.

In fact, the performance of the Indians brought out the flaws in the board's refusal to make some changes in the team after the Test series was over. In the discussions before the tour, some members of the board were in favour of sending back some of the 16 and replacing them with players more suited to the one-day game, like Sandeep Patil, Kirti Azad and Madan Lal. The majority view which eventually prevailed was that the team could not be changed as the expense involved would be too high.



THE result was that the Indian team was subjected to constant reshuffles, with Kulkarni making sporadic appearances, Ashok Malhotra and Siva shuttling in and out of the side and, above all, Kirmani, despite being fit for the last five matches, being sidelined in favour of Kiran More when his superior batting and experience could have made a crucial difference. Kirmani's exclusion was inexplicable, specially considering that all the other team members who were injured came back into the side immediately they were declared fit. The Kojak-headed wicket-keeper made no bones about his disgust at the shabby treatment he was given.

There also seemed to be little truth in the revived rumours about the supposed friction between Kapil and Gavaskar. Both players denied the reports and Gavaskar even jokingly promised that "in the next series, Kapil and I will have to share a room to put an end to the issue." But though the duo made an effort to act friendly and co-operative whenever outsiders were around and even on the field during play, it was quite obvious that the two are totally incompatible and find it difficult to establish any kind of rapport. Kapil is an earthy, impulsive, somewhat immature personality who earns respect by his sheer cricketing talent. Gavaskar has a shrewd, calculating mind that thinks in terms of his personal achievements and his commercial value. He was the only one who stayed back in Australia, officially to receive treatment for his strained sciatic nerve but the local grape-vine in Sydney has it that he is there to negotiate a contract with Channel Nine.

The Indians didn't help matters by their extra-curricular activities on the tour. Ravi Shastri reportedly spent much of his spare time in Australia's wild west-type casinos while one Indian journalist covering the tour went so far as to blame Jimmy Amarnath's poor performance on the field on his alleged nocturnal activities. Amarnath, as a gesture of defiance, appeared the next day at the nets wearing a bright red T-shirt emblazoned with the slogan "Jimmy the Hooker".

During internal flights and on the practice field, the team hardly gave the impression of being a single tightly-knit unit. The junior members like Binny, Sharma, Kulkarni, Azharuddin, Srikkanth, Siva and Yadav hardly ever mingled with their more senior colleagues. Kapil, team manager Venkataraghavan and Shastri, occasionally joined by Gavaskar, formed a separate group but whether they were discussing strategy or the latest exchange rate between the rupee and the Australian dollar was open to question since the practice sessions seemed more a matter of going through the motions rather than plotting moves or plugging individual gaps and weaknesses.

But perhaps the most ineffective member of the side was team manager and former Test star S. Venkataraghavan. On a long and gruelling tour like the one Down Under, when tensions and individual differences and media criticism are bound to be in excess of normal, the manager is the key man in the side. Venkat is a likeable enough personality but clearly lacks both spirit and authority. His public relations and his dealings with the press left too much to be desired and right through he acted nervous and timid, shying away from making statements on record.

He contradicted himself on numerous occasions, only adding to the feeling that there was very little coordination in the team. The most notable instance was when he initially stated that he had officially reprimanded Sunny Gavaskar for his slow batting in a qualifying match against Australia, while Gavaskar himself later vehemently denied being spoken to by Venkat. Throughout the final vital matches, Venkat stuck to Kapil like a shadow having very little to do with the other team members, specially the more inexperienced ones who required his guidance the most. And, it was only on his return to India, that Venkat lashed out against the Australian umpiring, an issue that he had carefully avoided discussing while in Australia.

In actual fact, the umpiring had little to do with India's showing, which lacked the confidence and character of its earlier World Cup performances. Kapil did not make matters any easier when umpire Ray Isherwood was quoted in a local Australian paper as having stated that Kapil barged into his hotel room after the match in which the former gave some

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

EXIM BANK

FINANCIAL HIGHLIGHTS 1985

AT YEAR END 31ST DECEMBER 1985*	Rs. (mn)	Change over 1984 (%)
– TOTAL ASSETS	8163.0	22
of which LOANS, ADVANCES & BILLS	5544.0	34
– OWNED FUNDS	1800.0	21
of which RESERVES	325.0	54
– BORROWED FUNDS	5870.0	21
– GUARANTEES OUTSTANDING	4661.0	-9
FOR THE YEAR ENDING 31ST DECEMBER 1985
– TOTAL INCOME	637.0	24
– NET INCOME (after interest, depreciation, provisions)	154.0	28
– DIVIDEND (payable to Govt. of India)	40.0	33
FUNDED OPERATIONS
– Sanctions	4412.0	30
– Disbursements	3813.0	8
GUARANTEES
– Sanctioned	732.0	28
– Issued	683.0	19

*General Fund

Note: This does not purport to be a full statement of accounts. Summary of audited annual accounts available on request.

भारतीय निर्यात-आयात बैंक
EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF INDIA

The export finance source

Maker Chambers IV, 222 Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021.
Representative Offices at : Calcutta, Madras, New Delhi, Abidjan (Ivory coast), and Washington D.C. (U.S.A.)

Imageads/EB/86002

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

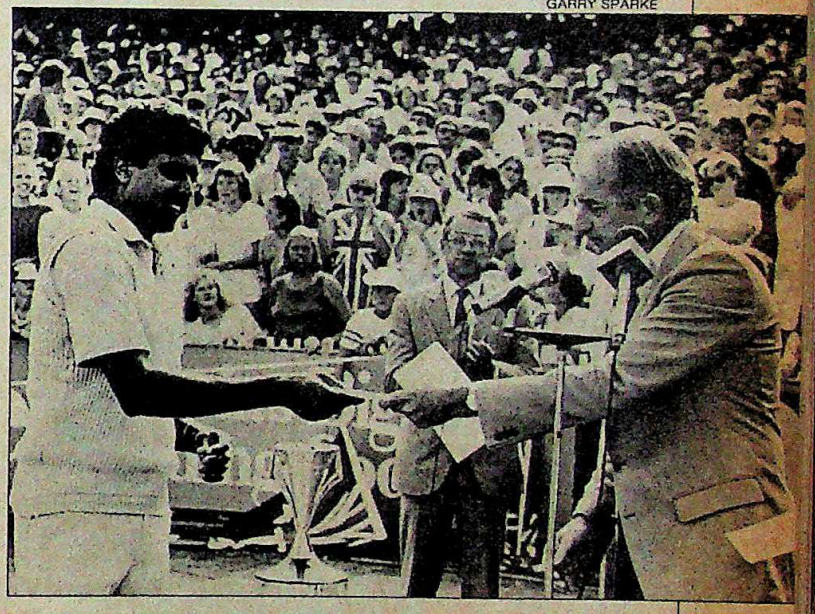
controversial decisions and said sarcastically: "I congratulate you Ray. Well done." Kapil later denied that he had done any such thing but Isherwood stuck to his story. Kapil's displays of petulance in his encounters with the press only revealed his impulsive nature and the lack of maturity so crucial for a captain. After India's loss at Melbourne, Kapil reacted sharply to a question of how he would be treated when he returned home. Said the captain: "It is up to the selectors to change me if they think I'm not doing a good job as captain."

There is, however, a division of opinion whether or not there should be a change at the helm. Viewed at close quarters, Kapil seems bereft of the imagination and flair required to inspire a team to greater heights and make on-the-spot improvisations or the mental adjustments required between Test cricket and one-day encounters. On at least two encounters, his field placings allowed the stronger batting partner to dominate the strike and thus wrest the initiative. Certainly, as a player, Kapil must rank among the best. But as a captain, he has been far from impressive. Says M.L. Jaishima, a former manager of the Indian team during Kapil's tenure as captain: "Cricket comes naturally to Kapil but not leadership. Kapil's cricketing intuition is undeniable but he is weak when it comes to tact and strategy as a captain. He has not been able to bring out the best in the team. The problem with him is his lack of a back-up plan or ability to switch tactics. Today's tight cricket demands commanding leadership like Tiger (Pataudi) and the only one with the potential is Ravi Shastri." Pataudi himself agrees: "I don't think Kapil is a great captain. He gets hassled when things get tense. We need someone who can get the boys together. I would change the captain."

FORMER Test star Erapalli Prasanna holds a slightly different view: "Kapil is okay as a captain. Under the present circumstances without a good strike-force, it is difficult for anyone to lead the team. Unless someone better is found, Kapil should stay on as captain". Abbas Ali Baig, who was manager of the Indian team for five Tests and the Asia Cup, is not so sure: " One gets the impression that there is either a dearth of strategy or there is a lack of coordination between the perception of strategy and its execution. I am not sure how much the captain is to be blamed and whether there should be a change."

Eventually, however, that decision will be left to the Indian selectors. But Kapil stated in Melbourne that he will not be available for the Asia Cup in Sri Lanka, due to start late next month, which means that current vice-captain Ravi Shastri may finally get the nod. Shastri, despite his comparative youth, obviously has a mature head on his wide shoulders and is extremely popular with his team-mates, but it is difficult to see the selectors keeping him on as captain with Kapil back in the team. Gavaskar and Amarnath are nearing the end of their careers and Vengsarkar, the only other senior member of the side, is too much of a loner to be an effective skipper.

GARRY SPARKE



Kapil receiving the loser's cheque after the Melbourne final

But, however the captaincy issue is resolved, the current Indian team desperately needs some major overhauling with the bowling department in particular need of an effective strike-force. Madan Lal, despite having Kapil's backing, is clearly a spent force. Chetan Sharma and Roger Binny lack the consistency and self-confidence required to partner Kapil as the spearhead of the attack. With the failure of Siva to deliver the goods when the chips were down and Yadav hardly of match-winning class, the spinning department is again solely dependant on Ravi Shastri. In fact, Shastri and Kapil were the only two bowlers to turn out consistently good bowling performances during the Benson and Hedges series.

Former Indian captain Bishen Singh Bedi feels that the team lacks enough specialists. "To expect Azharuddin to bowl 10 overs while a specialist bowler like Maninder was left at home shows that something is seriously wrong," he says. "The team is packed with utility men and most of the senior players are jaded and have lost their competitive edge and spirit." Abbas Ali Baig echoes that sentiment: "The senior players let the side down. Either they were not fully alive to the requirements of the one-day game or were unable or unprepared to execute the required strategy. The senior members seem to be playing for survival to hold out in the lucrative business that cricket has become." Pataudi feels that the bowling department needs immediate attention if India is to start winning Tests."People like Siva should be encouraged and not discouraged," he says. "It takes years for a spinner to mature. I would also bring in another opening bowler and Maninder."

Indian claims of having the greatest depth in batting of any international side sounded hollow in the face of their last two performances of the series. Dilip Vengsarkar still has the style and the talent but is a liability when quick runs and quick running is the order of the day. Azharuddin—whose bowling performance was the surprise bonus of the season—and Srikkanth have the latent ability to handle any attack but replacements will have to be found for Gavaskar, Amarnath and Vengsarkar in the near future. Clearly, Indian cricket administrators have their work cut out in trying to rebuild the side into the kind of combination that catapulted India to the top of international one-day cricket in the not so distant past.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's smooth and effortless ironing with Racold auto Irons

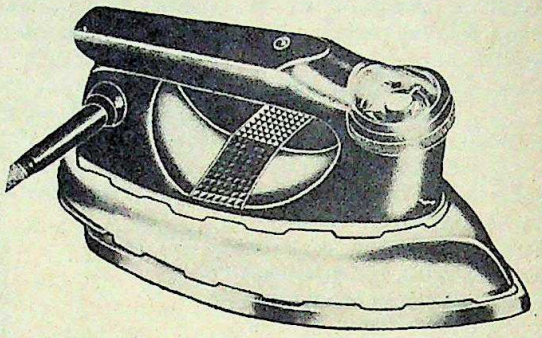
Available both automatic and non-automatic in beautiful colour combinations.

Racold, the brand leader in electrical appliances, offers a wide range of irons. Distinctive in look, they are designed for smooth ironing. The housewives like them for their efficiency and the gleaming contour.

High grade bakelite handles for comfortable grip, heavily chrome plated iron sole plate, chrome plated cover and high grade Ruby mica element make Racold irons superior in quality.

These irons are fitted with accurately calibrated thermostat for automatic control and neon indicator lamp to indicate automatic working.

Racold irons conform to ISI specifications.



Models:
Priya, Pride, Princess, Super de Luxe, Standard Auto, Utility, Laundry and Tailor irons.

Racold APPLIANCES PVT. LTD.
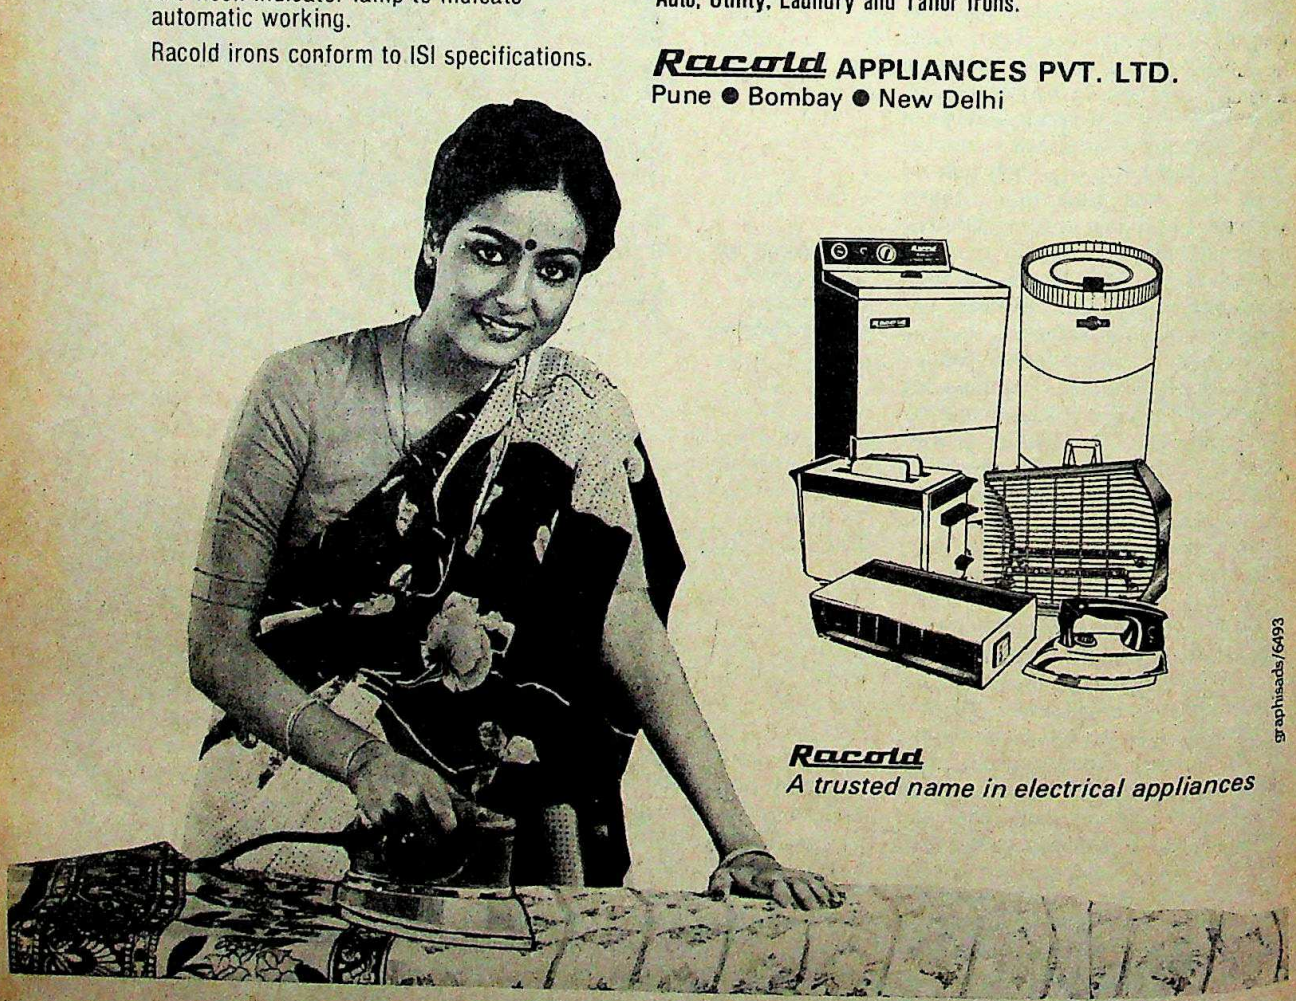
Pune ● Bombay ● New Delhi



graphisads/6493

Racold
A trusted name in electrical appliances

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DRUG EDICT

WITH the Government's new drug policy expected to be announced this month, numerous drug companies are revising their strategies for the pharmaceutical sector. Pfizer, owned 51 per cent by its parent company in the United States, has decided to reduce its overseas shareholding to 40 per cent so that it can escape the purview of the Foreign Exchange Regulations Act (FERA) and get more elbow-room to take advantage of the freer policy environment that the Government is expected to introduce. Other drug companies that had planned to reduce their presence in the pharmaceutical sector because of poor profitability, and focus instead on such allied sectors as pesticides, are taking a fresh look at the new opportunities expected to be available for manufacturing drugs. Sandoz is one example and, industry observers say, there are others waiting in the wings.

CHIPPING IN

THE KILACHAND-owned Dodsal group of companies is sinking some Rs 20 crore in manufacturing floppy diskettes, computers and in a company to maintain and service power plants. Dodsal is better known as a pipeline laying firm. But Indmag, a sister firm, has obtained government clearance to manufacture 1.5 million floppy diskettes a year in collaboration with the US company Xidex-Dysan. A far bigger computer project is also on the cards in collaboration with Gould, the US computer company which Indmag represents in India, but its outcome depends on whether the Government will continue to reserve super-mini computer manufacture for the public sector. The third venture involves a tie up with Combustion Engineering, also a US firm.

QUE FERA FERA

THE CAMPAIGN by Indian entrepreneurs to get the Government to amend the FERA so that companies with a 40 per cent overseas shareholding do not get the same treatment as wholly Indian-owned companies, has finally failed. Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi told a closed-door gathering of foreign and Indian businessmen in New Delhi last fortnight that the Government had no intention of rewriting FERA in any manner.

However, the parallel campaign to prevent the Government from revising its patent laws seems to have succeeded. Foreign businessmen had been pressing for a change of India's patent law on the ground that this did not provide sufficient protection from malpractices to patent-holders. But Indian businessmen argued that this would inhibit local enterprise, and have carried the day.

DIVISION OF LABOUR

PRIME Minister Rajiv Gandhi is thinking of reshuffling the ministerial division of labour, and combining commerce with external affairs to the extent possible so as to give a better push to the country's exports. Something like a department of economic relations or international trade may be set up as a separate wing in the External Affairs Ministry, and will be modelled on the Japanese Ministry of International Trade and Industry (MITI). The original author of the idea is believed to be a Delhi-based businessman close to the Rajiv Gandhi, and the prime minister made a mention of this at a recent meeting he had with businessmen.

COMMERCIALS BREAK

DOORDARSHAN seems to be making money hand over fist through advertisements and sponsored programmes. A recent study by the Operations Research Group (ORG) shows that money spent on TV advertising increased from Rs 3.78 crore in May 1985 to Rs 6.38 crore in November 1985—an increase of more than 68 per cent in six months. Colour advertisements through sponsored programmes account for the bulk of this sum, but the interesting finding is that the percentage of money coming in through the 'Super A' category has dropped from 86.4 per cent in May to 54.4 per cent in November.

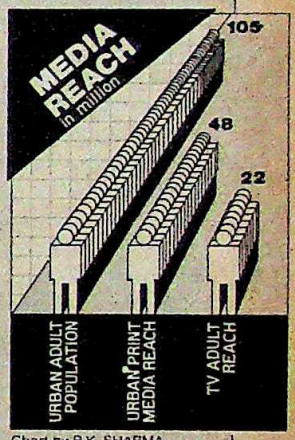


Chart by B.K. SHARMA

A second study conducted by Marketing Research and Advertising Services shows that TV advertising now reaches 22 million adults, whereas the total urban adult reach of the print media is no more than 48 million. Doordarshan has also begun eating into other forms of entertainment. The listnership for Vividh Bharati has dropped significantly in the evenings, while TV-owners went to the cinema only 67 per cent of the time that non-TV owners did.

YARN TANGLE

WITH large new capacities expected to be commissioned in both polyester staple fibre (PSF) and polyester filament yarn (PFY) in the coming months, a glut in the market seems imminent. Reliance Industries is commissioning its 45,000- tonne PSF unit in a month or two, so that the PSF capacity in the country will increase by more than 50 per cent at one go. Similarly, the Government's policy of encouraging all PFY manufacturers to increase their capacities to a minimum of 15,000 tonnes is expected to see PFY capacity more than double to the region of 1.5 lakh tonnes before the end of next year. Manufacturers, worried by the threatened glut, have resorted to a variety of stratagems to try and prevent a crisis. PSF manufacturers met recently in a move aimed at forming a price cartel, but most of those present refused to go along with this strategy. Hopes are now pinned on the Government announcing a duty reduction that will increase the demand for both commodities. The only hitch here is that a virtual halving of the duty on PSF last year did not result in any noticeable drop in the price of polyester cloth.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

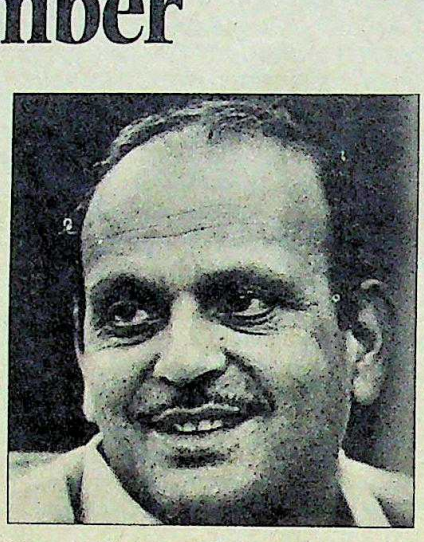
ECONOMY

Forever Amber

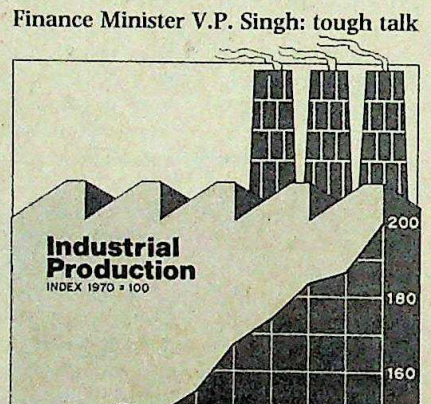
THE MACHINES are no more than a week old, and are the first thing to hit the visitor's eye: clean white computer facades, monitor screens, printers big and small, the latter capable of churning out slick charts in colour. The Finance Ministry's economic advisers now store their data on the economy's heart-beat and blood pressure on 20-megabyte hard disks. And in between reading the proofs of the annual economic survey, to be presented to Parliament later this month, or flipping through Faber's Book of Aphorisms (perhaps for an appropriate nugget of wisdom to be incorporated into the finance minister's budget speech), they listen to music on the IBM machines: Dvorak's lilting Humoresque, or such playful tunes as 'Yankee Doodle' and 'Pop Goes the Weasel'. As the sound fills the room, a musical note dances around on the piano keys displayed on the computer screen.

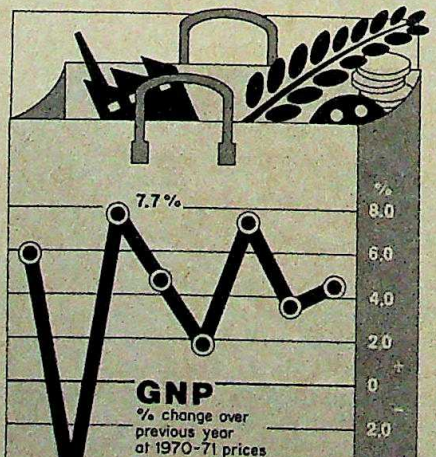
If all this looks like fun and games, the fact is that the economic advisers are up to serious business. Forced to retract somewhat on the price increase in petroleum goods last fortnight, and faced with pressure from members of Parliament to reduce plan investment if the alternative is to raise prices or taxes, the Finance Ministry is wrestling with an ambitious task: raising the level of plan investment more than the 7 per cent that has already been announced, with hefty increases in outlays for the Government's anti-poverty programmes. Indeed, far from shirking battle and shrinking the plan, the Government is getting ready for a level of spending that should take public sector investment in the seventh plan to more than the Planning Commission's five-year spending target of Rs 95,000 crore.

As Finance Minister V.P. Singh told a group of economic journalists last month, the development thrust has to be maintained while simultaneously reforming the tax system. The last budget did this successfully, for tax revenues are up sharply despite a slashing of income, corporate and wealth tax rates. But Singh said that a similar experiment with indirect taxes—like excise and customs duties—in the coming budget may be risky because the sums involved are much larger (revenue from indirect taxes is more than three times that from direct taxes).



Finance Minister V.P. Singh: tough talk





Charts by B.K. SHARMA

There were few other indications emerging from the Finance Ministry last fortnight on the budgetary effort round the corner. But the pre-budget mood in the Government last fortnight was cautiously optimistic. As one official confessed: "Certainly there are problems, and I can't say we are not worried. But we are on top of the problems."

He is right. Prices began to shoot skyward immediately after the last budget, but have been kept in check since then: the increase in wholesale prices till mid-January was just 3.3 per cent. There were also the doomsayers who forecast disaster because of the tax reliefs in the budget, but tax revenue is climbing by 23 per cent, which is almost double the budgeted increase.

But new problems have cropped up, most notably the trade deficit. The figures released by the Government for the first half of the financial year (April-September) show a fall in exports and a startling increase in the trade deficit by Rs 1,833 crore to Rs 4,124 crore—up by 80 per cent. But officials explain that these figures are misleading. Because of an inexplicable blunder, exports of gems and jewellery worth Rs 500 crore have not been included in the published figures of exports, so that the half-year trade deficit is much smaller. Nevertheless, the full year's trade deficit is expected to end up at a record Rs 7,000 crore, almost 40 per cent more than last year's Rs 5,100 crore.

There are other problems too: the industrial growth rate, measured by the Government's production index, shows a 7 per cent increase in the first seven months of the year, up to October. But confidential statistical exercises done in the Finance Ministry suggest that the picture is not quite so rosy, and this different method of charting production trends reveals a more modest growth curve.

Finally, there is the prospect of a very large budgetary deficit, certainly much larger than the estimate of Rs 3,349 crore presented in the budget last March. One ball park indication of the fiscal gap is the increase in the Government's treasury bills (instruments for getting 91-day credit from the Reserve Bank and others), and this figure has been running unusually high this year: by mid-January, the Government had issued additional bills worth Rs 6,516 crore. This figure varies widely from week to week, but the trend so far suggests that a large deficit is in the offing.

The finance minister is also worried by the negative fall-out of some of the Government's changes in economic policy. At his meeting with economic journalists, he pointed out that the liberalisation of industrial policy had resulted in large-scale imports because new production facilities had a high import content. V.P. Singh in fact sounded a sombre warning when he said that if matters did not improve on the trade front, the Government would be forced to "cut consumption of luxury goods" and reduce the imports of items like sugar and edible oils. This, he said, would have to be done despite the risk of higher prices resulting. And even the thrust of the Government's licensing policy might have to be changed.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

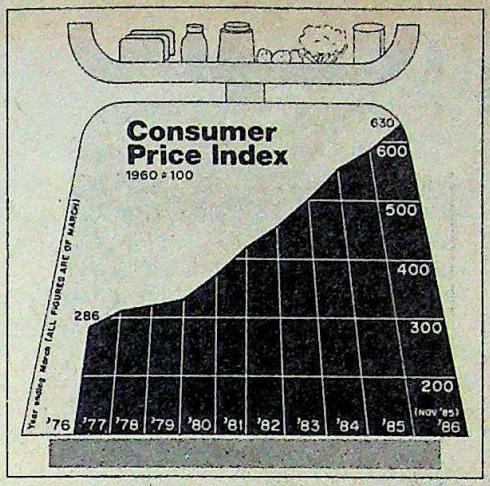
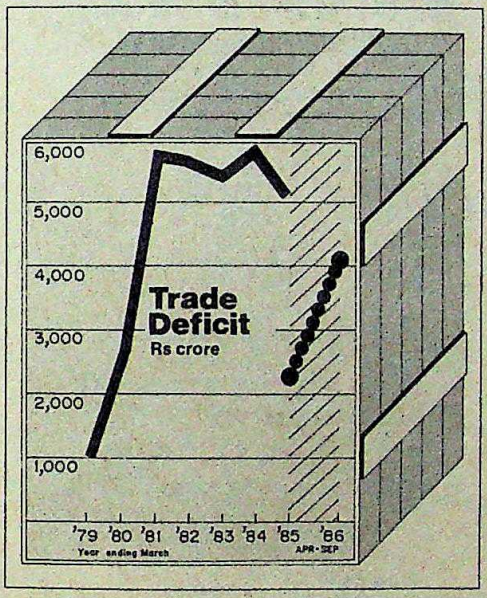
IF THAT sounded ominous, officials in the ministry paint a more positive picture. Thus, the Government has already cut back on sugar imports while keeping prices under check by increasing the percentage of sugar available in the open market (and reducing rationed sugar supplies). And with the announcement of a two-year sugarcane pricing policy for the first time, production is expected to get a major boost. The Finance Ministry economists' forecast: no sugar imports at all next year, and a saving of Rs 400 crore in foreign exchange.

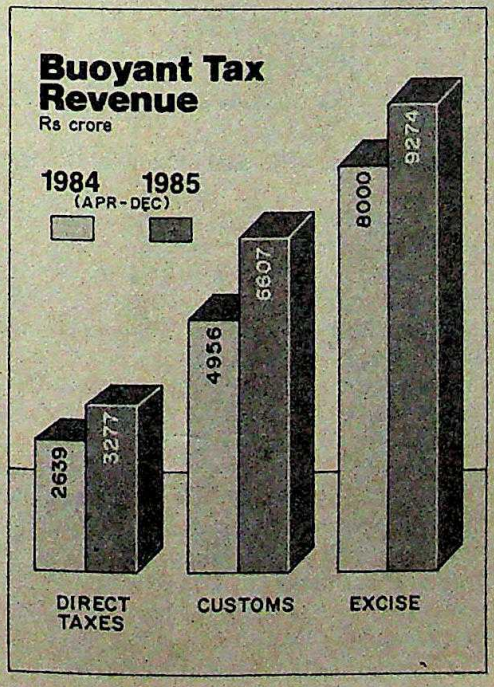
A different policy package has been worked out for oilseeds, which too is a heavy drain on foreign exchange. The Government has reduced the supply of imported oils to the vanaspati industry, forcing it to use otherwise shunned domestic substitutes like rice bran oil and cottonseed oil. The saving in imports this year alone, as a result, are estimated at Rs 160 crore; the savings next year will be more.

Finally, fertiliser imports are expected to drop in the future, with new plants being commissioned. And the petroleum import bill (up sharply this year from Rs 3,500 crore to Rs 4,700 crore) will drop because the Government is re-negotiating long-term oil import contracts in order to take advantage of the falling international oil prices. As a government official explained: "Eighty per cent of the increase in imports this year is because of bulk items like sugar, edible oils, fertiliser and petroleum. But all of them will present an improved picture next year."

Meanwhile, the somewhat alarmist talk of a devaluation of the rupee and a fresh recourse to borrowing from the International Monetary Fund is pooh-poohed by officials of both the Reserve







Bank of India (RBI) and the Finance Ministry. The RBI in fact points out that despite the large trade deficit, the country's foreign exchange reserves are in reasonably good shape. The RBI's figures show that the reserves have held steady till mid-January, at Rs 4,860 crore.

If the Government has drawn up its plan of action to tackle the trade problem, similar action had been planned to reduce the budgetary deficit, mainly by attacking the burgeoning subsidy bill. The subsidy on food has grown from Rs 710 crore to Rs 1,650 crore in the last three years, and that on fertiliser from Rs 600 crore to Rs 2,000 crore in the same period. Between them, the Government will thus be paying out Rs 3,650 crore this year.

The price increases in fertiliser and foodgrain prices last month will tackle this problem to some extent by reducing the subsidy element by Rs 550 crore, while the petroleum products' price hike was aimed essentially at reducing the subsidy on domestic cooking gas (Rs 10 per cylinder) and kerosene (70 paise per litre). Even after the Government climbed down partially on these price hikes, it stands to take in Rs 550 crore in a full year.

There is little doubt that the Government sees public sector pricing as a key method of bringing in the shekels for spending on the plan: the long-term fiscal policy which was released two months ago, said as much when it declared that "The bulk of the effort for augmenting...savings...will have to come from...public enterprises." Coal prices were raised last month, and steel prices might go up too, while telecommunications officials have warned that they too might have to raise tariffs in the near future.

Certainly, with the long-term fiscal policy talking of steady tax rates and reducing the Government's level of borrowings, the primary area of resource mobilisation from now on is expected to be the public sector. The only other option is to go in for large-scale deficit financing, but the finance minister has been advised by his economists that deficit financing is four times as inflationary as hiking product prices.

What they didn't warn him was that hiking prices might be four times more dangerous politically than a large budget deficit. But V.P. Singh will have learnt that by now. And the coming budget may well bear this out.

—T.N.NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUBLIC SECTOR

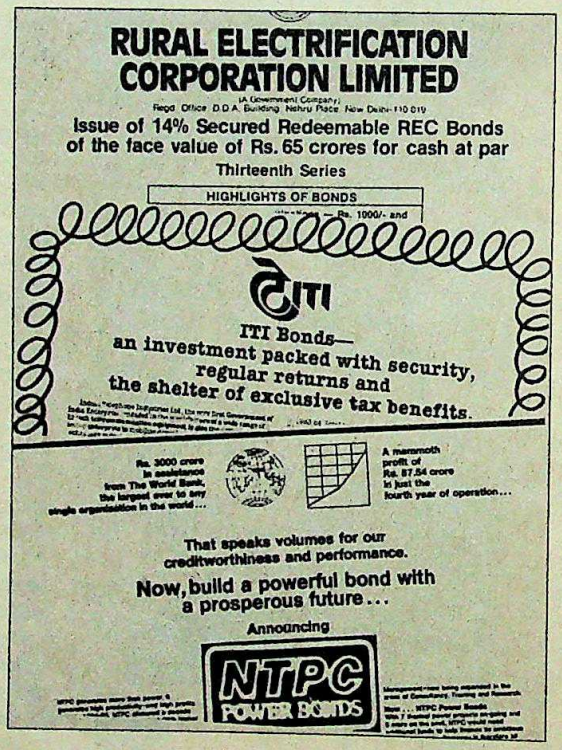
Tapping the Market

THEY STOMPED the country, addressing press conferences and stockbrokers' gatherings, hawking the uniqueness of their bonds. And newspaper advertisements and television spots drove the point home further. But what stood out at the end of it was not so much the hard sell as the companies behind it—all are profitable government-owned firms.

Last fortnight, after a media blitz that would have done private companies proud, the Indian Telephone Industries (ITI) and the National Thermal Power Corporation (NTPC), kicked off the state sector's latest bid to tap the investor's purse with a Rs 100-crore bond issue each. Poised to follow suit early next month is the Rural Electrification Corporation (REC) with a Rs 65-crore bond offering. And other government companies are waiting in the wings—the NHPC has a bond issue of up to Rs 150-crore in the works, the Indian Petrochemicals Corporation Ltd (IPCL) has an initial debenture issue of Rs 40-crore on its drawing-boards, and two oil firms may be planning to take the plunge. Some of these bonds and debentures will be peddled to the financial institutions. Nevertheless, what is clear is that these firms are readying to mop up over Rs 500 crore from investors this year, more than double the amount they tapped last year, and the figure could sharply shoot up if firms are allowed to retain excess subscriptions. The message is clear—the public sector wants a hefty slice of the booming capital market cake, estimated at over Rs 3,000 crore this year.

The headlong rush to the market to fund investment programmes is also not a flash in the pan. IPCL alone wants to rake in an additional Rs 260-crore through bonds in the next three years. NTPC Chairman and Managing Director M.L. Shishoo says that his company's bond issue is meant to "probe the market", implying more issues to come.

If the public sector is gearing to give private companies a run for their money, government initiative and the resources famine in the seventh plan are clearly responsible. Along with the last budget, Union Finance Minister V.P. Singh proposed a scheme of special bonds for state-owned power and telecommunications companies. Both are crucial infrastructural areas and faced resources cuts. (In telecommunications, for example, seventh plan outlays were pruned from over Rs 12,000 crore to Rs 4,010 crore.) Details of the scheme were unveiled some months later, but the Government had plainly launched a new, more flexible, security. With their buy-back facility after a year, coupons to collect interest from banks instead of the company as is the case with government bonds, and some income and wealth tax exemptions, the new bonds are seductive enough.



Prospectus' of public sector companies

Certainly, the bonds offer a ray of hope to companies strapped for cash. At the ground level, the expansion programmes of a number of firms will be in jeopardy if the money for them is not forthcoming. ITI Chairman and Managing Director K.P.P. Nambiar implies as much when he says: "One reason for going to the public is the inadequate resource allocation." The Government has earmarked Rs 335 crore for ITI's seventh plan projects but expects the telecommunications firm to raise well over a third of this from the market. The NTPC wanted Rs 12,700 crore for both ongoing and new projects, but was sanctioned only Rs 5,600 crore, barely enough to foot the bill for work under way. Since it takes five years to set up a major power unit, eighth plan projects have to begin now and the cash for this is therefore important. Similarly, the REC gets most of its money from the Government in the form of loans and equity. But the funding agency has now been told to seek 17 per cent of this year's outlay of Rs 379 crore from the public.

The bonds have another advantage for firms. With a 14 per cent rate of interest, they are a cheaper means of raising money than bank loans which carry an 18 per cent interest tag. The exception to this rule is the REC. It gets money from the Government by paying 8.75 per cent interest, and company officials are plainly unhappy about going the new bonds route. The firm's Finance Director M.Prasad, reckons that his company will drop Rs 1 crore in profits next year as a consequence of the higher interest.

What emerges from all this is that the money to be picked up from the investor will be small beer compared with total corporate requirements. But most are banking on foreign aid and internal profits to plug some of the gaps. Some are also counting on their issues being heavily oversubscribed. The ITI hopes to bag a neat Rs 150-crore from the public plus another Rs 50 crore from the financial institutions, while the NTPC expects to garner "a minimum of Rs 300-crore". Controller of Capital Issues P.G. Mankad says: "We are yet to decide on whether the companies should be allowed to keep the extra subscriptions."

Much rides on the Government's eventual decision, but what is really at stake is the credibility of public sector firms in the market-place. As one company chairman put it last fortnight: "This is a test case for our credibility." Few will quarrel with that assessment.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
with bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Charms is the spirit of freedom.
Charms is the way you are.

A great cigarette. Now even better.

Charms has always been a great cigarette.

And now it's even better.

There's the blend for a start. The same superior blend of fine Virginia tobaccos as the one that's exported.

A cellophane wrapper to keep it fresher, longer.

An acetate filter like all leading international brands.

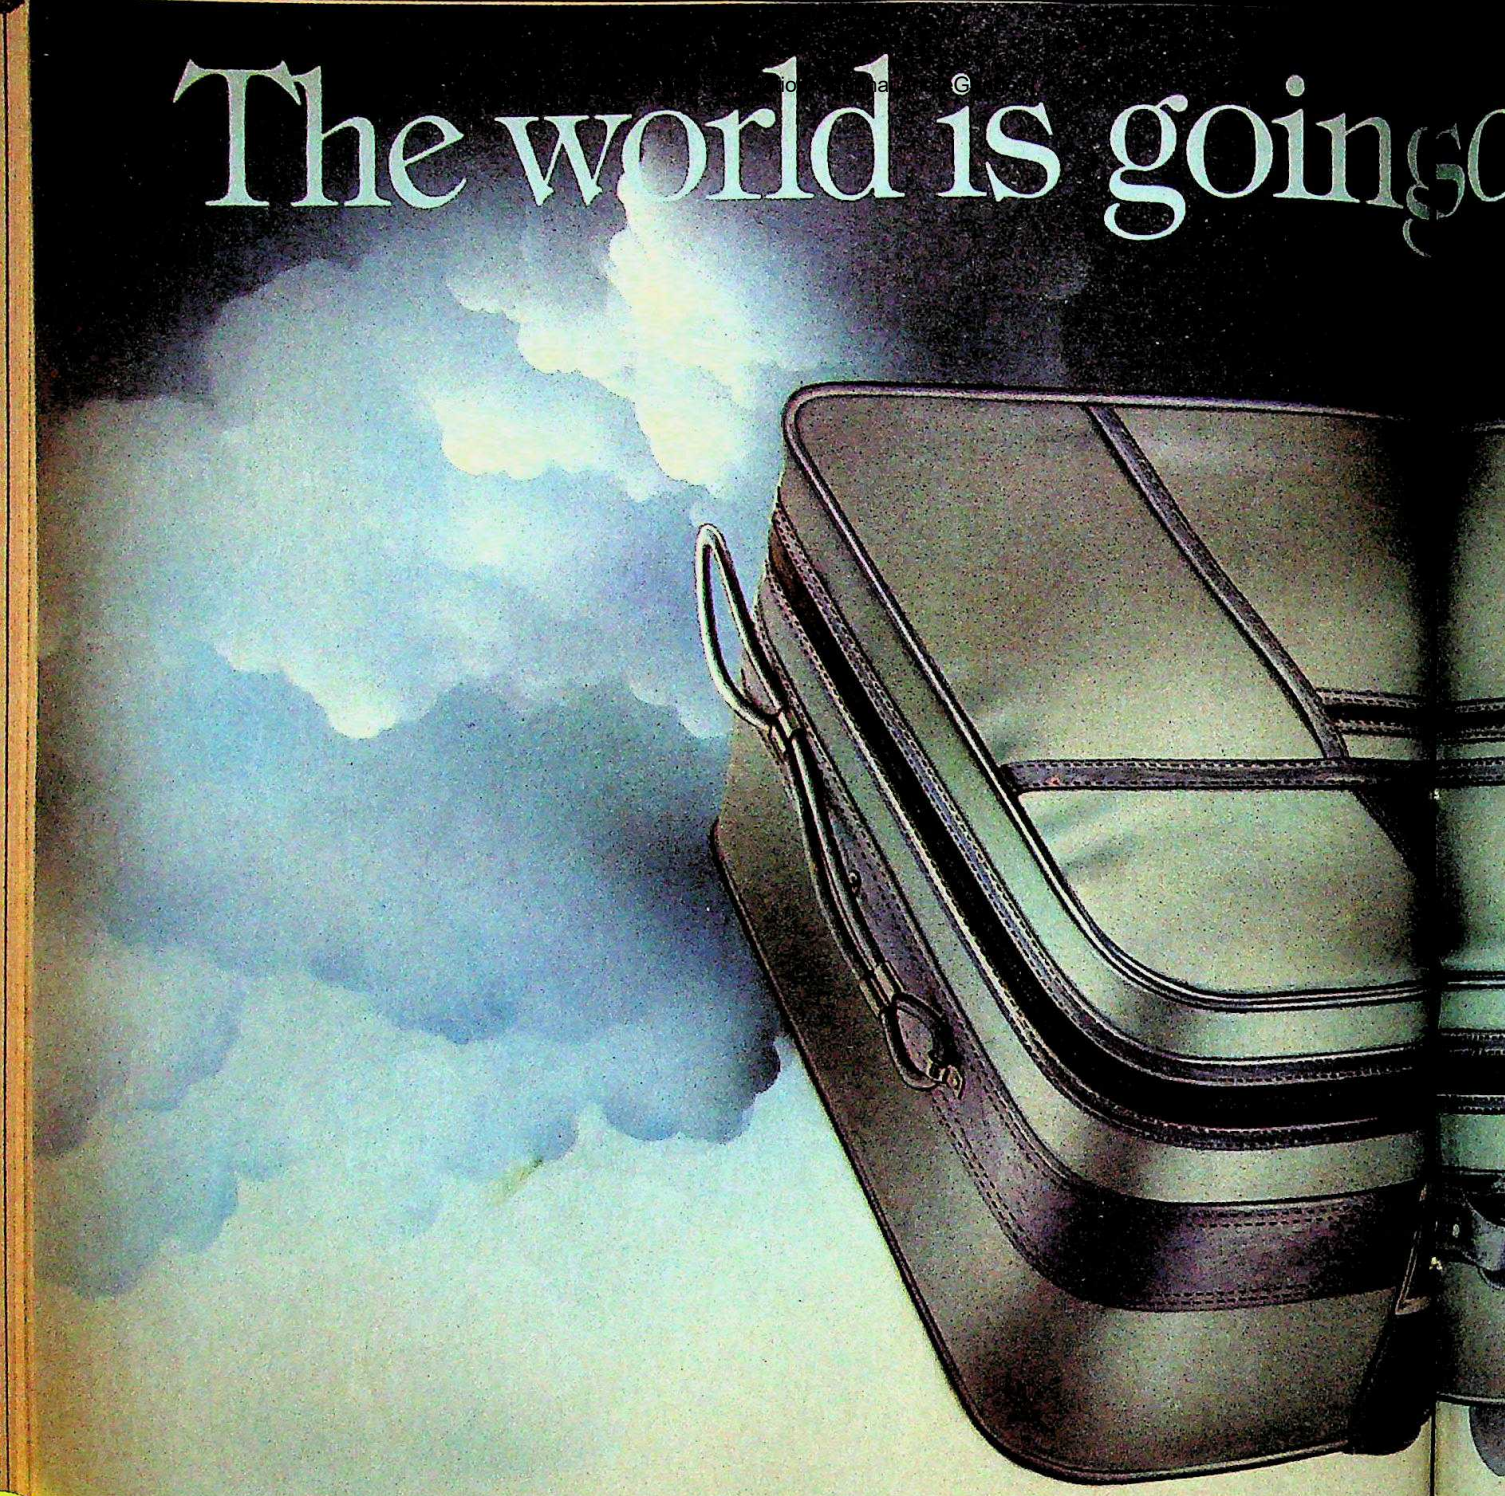
And now it's also available in the smart new cardboard carton.

Charms Virginia Kings.
It's got your kind of taste.
Your kind of flavour.
And your kind of style.

CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

...gri Collection, Haridwar

The world is goingGo



Now Skybags brings the Soft Revolution to India. This exciting new range of nylon luggage from VIP is the ultimate in travelling style and comfort. Light-weight, really roomy, beautifully functional. And sensationally tough.

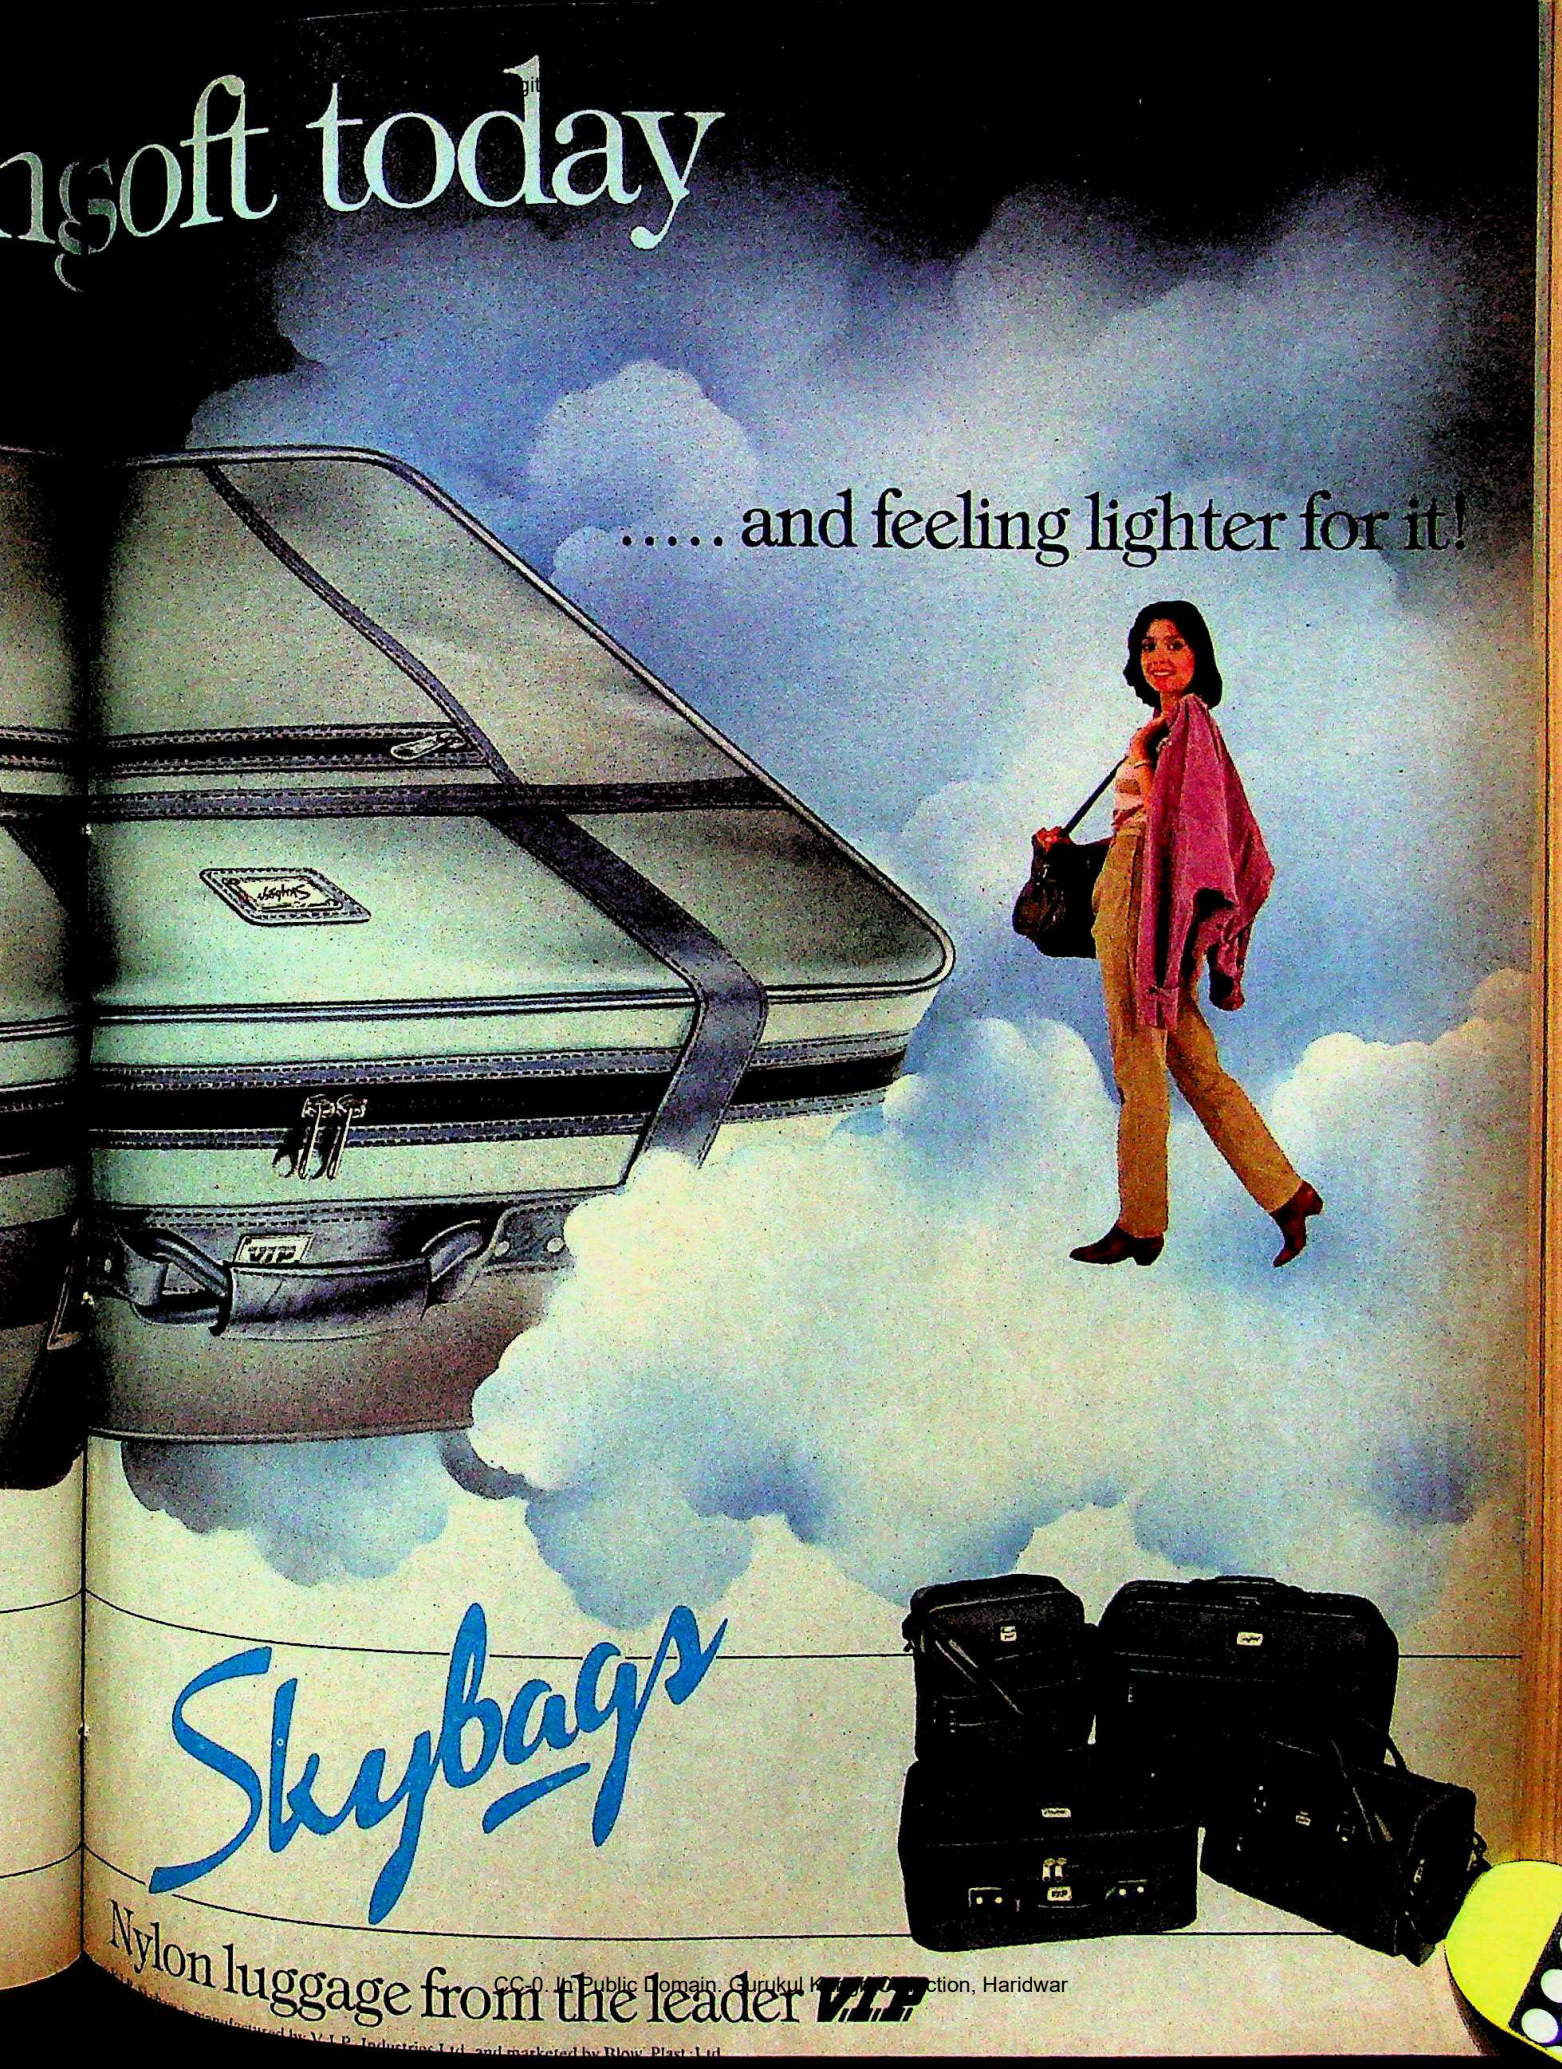
Fashioned from strong, tear resistant nylon, Skybags survive the torture of travel with remarkable ease. Only VIP's special care in manufacture and high quality standards could create such beauty with such toughness.

So before you pick your next destination, pick your Skybags from a dazzling selection of styles, colours and shapes. They're guaranteed to make you soft on them from the word Go!

UNTAS VIP S 1 2740

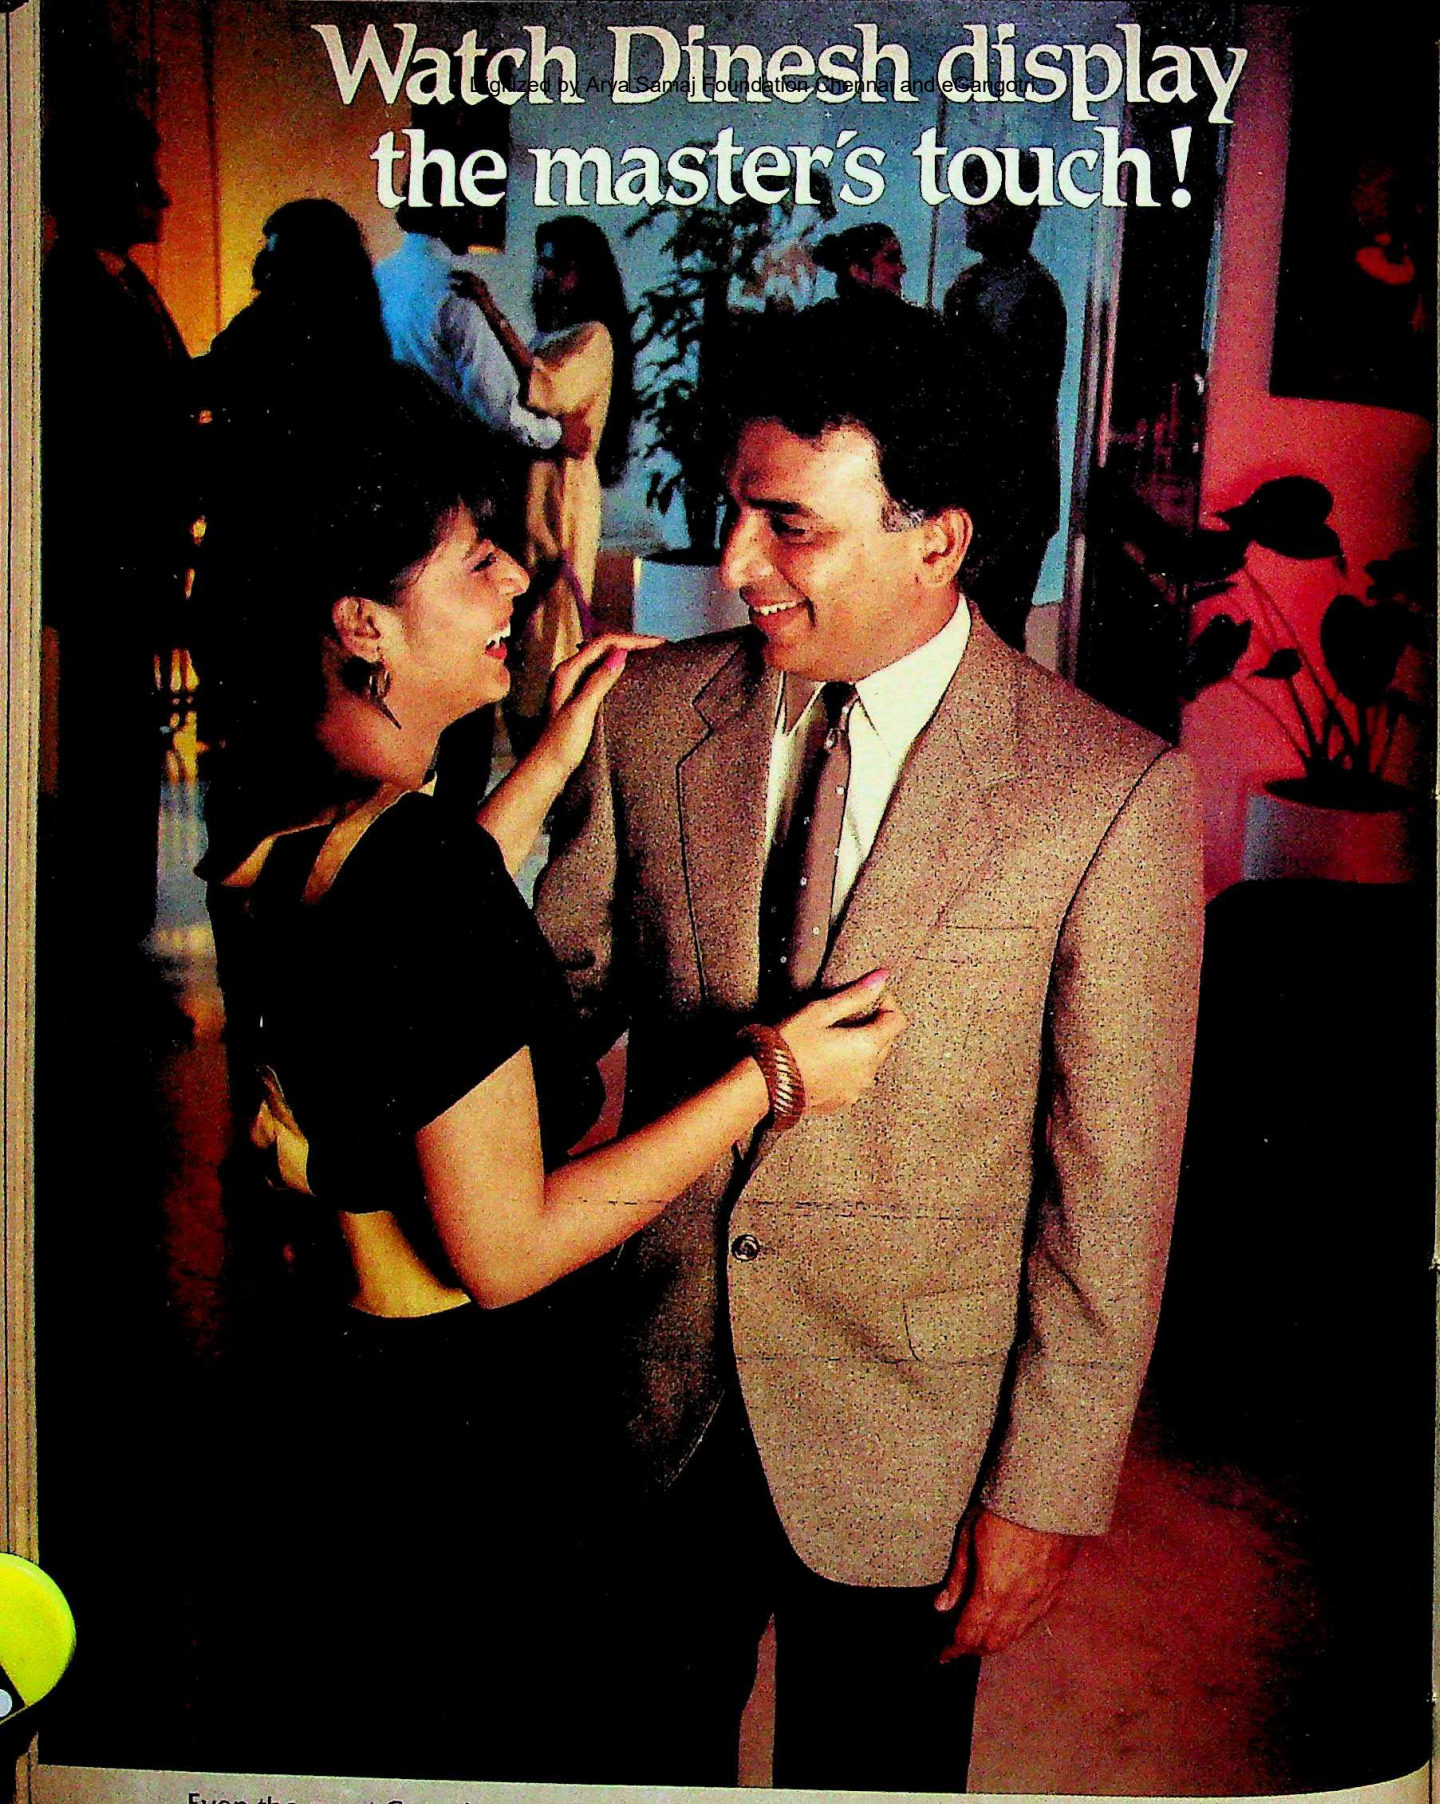
SOFT. STRONG. STYLISH.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul K[illegible]ction, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Even the great Gavaskar adores the sheer artistry of Dinesh Co-ordinates. A perfect combination of elegance and elan, charisma and class.

Dinesh Co-ordinates. Unmatched for a perfect dinesh Co-ordinates

Give you a distinct identity

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HOTEL BANJARA

Snapping Ties

OFF CAME the ITC Welcomgroup's stylised namaste logo from the external facade, crockery, furnishings and stationery of the Banjara Hotel, Hyderabad's only five-star hostelry; on went the Banjara wheel of the Lambada tribals.

Hotel Banjara Ltd (HBL), the company which owns the hotel property, and ITC's Welcomgroup, which has managed the nine-storey hotel for the last six years to earn 7 per cent of its Rs 46 crore turnover, did namaste to each other late last month and parted ways. The Welcomgroup's seven managers flew out of the city without ado, and ITC's directors who had booked rooms in the hotel for a board meeting in the city cancelled their bookings and decided to stay elsewhere. And in HBL Managing Director Radhey Shyam Agarwal's office, the porcelain ashtray had the Banjara wheel pasted over the namaste.

This is no ordinary parting of ways. The HBL chairman is A.N. Haksar, who was chairman of ITC till three years ago. And HBL's managing director, Agarwal, is one of ITC's biggest distributors of cigarettes: he does a mammoth Rs 25-crore worth of business with the company and its affiliates. As if that didn't make the affair enough of a family dispute, ITC's present Chairman, Jagdish Sapru, is Haksar's brother-in-law.

So within days of the parting of ways following failure to renew a technical services contract that expired 19 months ago, the air was thick with reports of other Welcomgroup hotel owners breaking ranks and joining hands with Agarwal to start a rival chain. Indeed, Agarwal himself said that he hoped to build a new hotel chain "with Haksar Saab as the guiding spirit".

Three hotels were initially expected to switch camps: the Searock in Bombay, the Adyar Gate in Madras and the Rama International at Aurangabad, all of them presently under management contracts with Welcomgroup. The Aurangabad hotel is in fact owned by Anil Agarwal, nephew of Banjara's Radhey Shyam Agarwal.

But a Welcomgroup spokesman said last fortnight that Anil Agarwal had rushed to New Delhi to reassure them that he had no intention of quitting, and Haksar said: "I wouldn't try to get other hotels from the Welcomgroup chain; even if I did, I don't think I would succeed. Each hotel owner has to look after his own interests."

Whatever the case, one fact was immediately clear: the split in Hyderabad was not an isolated event, and perhaps had a bearing on the relationship between Haksar and Sapru. Although Haksar insists that there is no friction between the two (Sapru was not available for comment), it is common knowledge within ITC that the two don't get along.

In his final months in office as chairman, Haksar had decided on a deal that involved the twin takeover of India Cements and Ashok Paper, which Sapru undid. Then Haksar, who had become chairman of the tea company Jokai India, was keen on getting ITC to use its distribution network to market packaged tea. Once again, Sapru would have nothing to do with it. And while Haksar had talked in the past of diversifying into such areas as electronics, Sapru has stayed clear of this as well.

These differences did not come in the way of Haksar staying on after retiring, to help the Welcomgroup chain. But that last link was snapped a year-and-a-half ago. And now, it seems, other links are to be snapped too.

The key question is whether Agarwal will be able to retain his multi-crore distributorship of ITC's cigarettes. The kind of friction suggested by ITC directors cancelling their bookings at the Banjara could mean a snapping of ties, though it is just as likely that ITC will be unwilling to severe links with a long-standing business associate because of differences concerning a relatively small hotel operation.

While there was no official comment on the subject from ITC last fortnight, Agarwal said: "More than half my annual business turnover is through sales of ITC and its companies' products, and I have no interest in ruining my business." Nevertheless, there is friction in the air. The new Banjara managers complain that Welcomgroup is diverting business to other hotels or simply declaring that "Banjara is under renovation", a charge that the Welcomgroup spokesman denied.

If Agarwal's relationship with ITC has soured somewhat, he has by all indications struck a good working relationship with Haksar, who is helping Agarwal plan a Rs 70-crore real estate project outside Delhi, involving the building of 750 luxury flats.

"I hope to build a new hotel chain with Haksar Saab as the guiding spirit."
R.S. AGARWAL
managing director, HBL

JANATA STUDIOS

Hotel Banjara: parting company

"I wouldn't try to get other hotels from Welcomgroup; I don't think I would succeed."
A.N. HAKSAR
chairman, HBL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INTERNATIONAL ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN COMPETITION

INDIRA GANDHI NATIONAL CENTRE FOR ARTS

Government of India has announced an International Architectural Design Competition for the proposed Indira Gandhi National Centre for Arts in New Delhi. The Centre is to be located at a site on the Central Vista from the cross-section of Janpath and Dr. Rajendra Prasad Road and Man Singh Road. The site is approximately 21.9 acres. The Indira Gandhi National Centre for Arts Complex will have five buildings comprising of (i) The Kala Nidhi Division for Information System and Data Bank for Arts and Humanities, (ii) The Kala Kosha Division for research studies and publication projects of Encyclopaedias of Art and reference works (iii) The Janapada Sampada for Folk and Tribal Arts, (iv) The Arts Projection Complex suitable for performing visual, literary arts with multi-media projection facilities called Kala Darshana; and (v) The Administrative Building. The envisaged built-up area is approximately 100,000 sq. metres. The design should reflect the integration of the Arts. It should also suitably reflect both Asian artistic traditions and modern manifestations.

Registration for the Competition is open from 26th January, 1986 and final day for submission of design is 30th September, 1986. All qualified architects may register for the competition on payment of a non-refundable registration fee of Rs.500 for architects, residents in India, or US Dollars 200 for foreign architects. Request for registration for the Competition together with photo copy of the Architect's registration entitling him to practising in his country should be sent to Shri Ranjit Sabikhi, Professional Adviser, IGNCA International Design Competition Secretariat, Department of Arts, Vigyan Bhavan Annexe, New Delhi-110011 by registered post. Enquiries regarding registration may also be made at the same address. Registration request should be accompanied by the fee payable by Bank Draft drawn in the name of Director, Indira Gandhi National Centre for Arts, New Delhi. Architects in India are advised to submit separate copy of their registration with the Council of Architects.

The International Jury for the Competition consists of Mr. Fumihiko Maki, Mr. James Stirling, Shri B.V. Doshi, Shri A.P. Kanvinde, Shrimati Pupul Jayakar, Dr. (Mrs.) Kapila Vatsyayan and a representative of the International Union of Architects. There will be three prizes; the first prize carrying an award of Rs.10.00 lakhs; the second prize Rs.5.00 lakhs and the third prize Rs.3.00 lakhs.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Meanwhile, the immediate question was how well Banjara would fare on its own. Agarwal said that the 13 per cent of the take being paid to ITC (Rs 30 lakh last year) would be used to improve the hotel's facilities. Haksar said Rs 4 crore would be spent on Banjara alone, including a project to add to the hotel's 130 rooms. He added that the best hotels in the world were not part of any chain.

But Welcomgroup spokesmen pointed out that the absence of the chain's association at a time when rival five-star hotels were about to be opened in Hyderabad by the Oberois as well as the public sector India Tourism Development Corporation would inevitably hamper Banjara's operations. Also, the Taj and Senator hotel chains have identified land for their own hotels in Hyderabad, while Welcomgroup quickly signed up with the Navabharat Group (tobacco and tea exporters) to put up a brand-new hotel in three years.

Agarwal, however, seemed unfazed by all the threatened competition, and said: "Let us wait and see whether the Banjara wheel of fortune will roll to different parts of the country."

—AMARNATH K. MENON

DINERS CLUB

Paying Strike

DR DATTA Samant (MBBS) MP is not a person whom businessmen and industrialists take lightly: the massive trade union leader speaks on behalf of over 15 lakh workers in Maharashtra and Gujarat. But, in recent times, no foray of his has caused more consternation than the strike by 125 Bombay employees of Diners Club India Pvt Ltd affiliated to Samant's Maharashtra Girni Kamgar Union (MGKU). The high-profile, upper-class credit organisation, with a membership of nearly 68,000 and total annual billings of over Rs 60 crore, was crippled for over a month at the beginning of 1986 by the strike which revealed among other things, that the majority of its employees were receiving salaries lower than those earned by peons in similarly profitable corporations else where.

The Aggarwals (left); and Diners employees: accord

It was a soul-stirring experience for Shamsunder and Parveez Aggarwal, the go-getting couple who took over the Diners franchise 10 years ago and have since quadrupled membership—they added 15,000 in the last year alone—even as billings multiplied nearly 20 times. Perhaps the fact that they were busy expanding all these years may have had something to do with the fact that as punch operator Suresh Rao puts it, "we got pittances while they raked in the cash", and even Parveez admits that "we know that there have been mistakes". The company, which earns a commission of roughly 4 per cent on billings—current earnings are therefore over Rs 3 crore a year—has given birth to two highly lucrative spin-offs: Diners Business Services, an office services set-up and Diners World Travel, a travel agency, but had no personnel department until two years ago.

The result was that people like R.S. Mundhye, a clerk with 16 years experience could earn Rs 670 a month and telephone operator Moni Menezes, with 15 years experience made slightly over Rs 1,000 a month. Says Brian Crasto, a union leader: "When we realised that the management wasn't going to do anything for us we asked Dr Samant to lead us." The employees who struck work said that although accounts showed an amount of Rs 30 lakh under salaries, the executives took a large chunk of it away, with the result that they were paid only Rs 1.20 lakh a year.

Their first charter of demands requested definite wage scales and a consolidated pay rise of about Rs 700 a month; the second, put together after a mutual lawyer friend of Samant's and the Aggarwals took a hand in the negotiations, asked for a Rs 500 increase all round. Indications were that the Aggarwals would accept this: their motivations in doing so were not exactly altruistic—every month of strike means Rs 6 crore in billings gone.

The new wage bill will, according to Shamsunder, be doubled to Rs 60 lakh. But the Aggarwals appear to have taken this in their stride. What Parveez calls "one big family" appeared to have resolved its differences for the time being and a slightly amused Samant—"Why do you want to talk about this small thing?"—is reported to have assured the owners that "discipline is my responsibility from now on". But the Aggarwals will wait and see for some time until they give him credit for that.

—JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

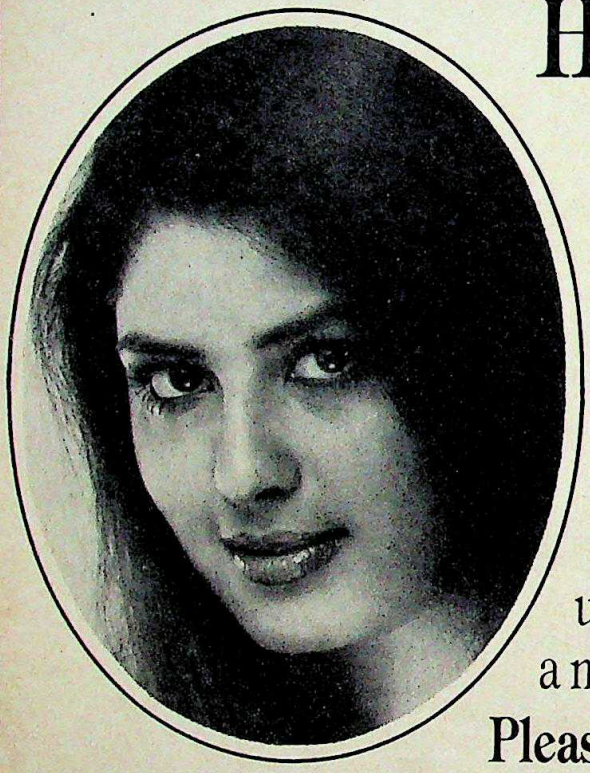
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tru-Tone

From HELENE CURTIS

The Hair Dye you can trust

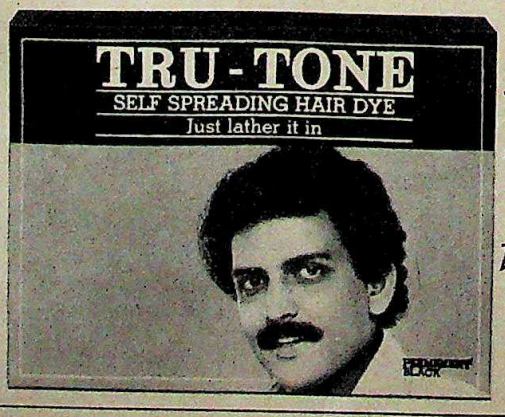
New Easy to apply! Tru-Tone Self-spreading Hair Dye.



Self-spreading action:
Just apply the dye and lather it in.
It spreads evenly by itself.

Longer lasting, deep-dye action:
New Tru-Tone comes with the unique deep-dye action to give you a natural colour that stays on longer.

Pleasantly perfumed, with conditioner:
Tru-Tone keeps your hair soft and manageable.
Looking younger was never so easy!



New

For a free folder on hair dyeing, please write to J.K. Helene Curtis Ltd., Pokhran Road, Jekegram, Thane 400 606.

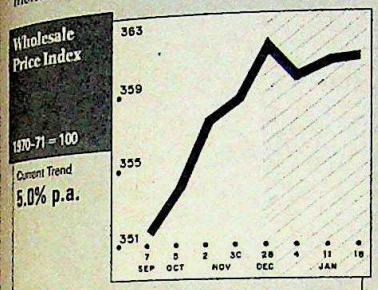
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

everest/85/JKHC/603

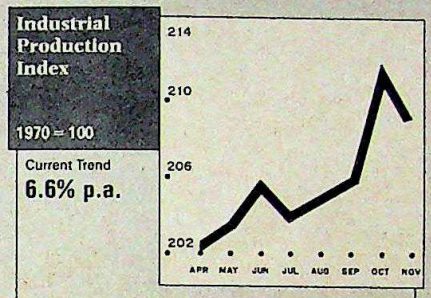
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THINGS are no longer looking good on the price front, with the wholesale price index steadily rising. Complementing this is the sluggishness of the industrial and manufacturing sectors, whose growth rates leave much to be desired. The rate of growth of power generation, too, has dropped. Money supply remains on trend, bank credit has contracted and gold prices keep falling.

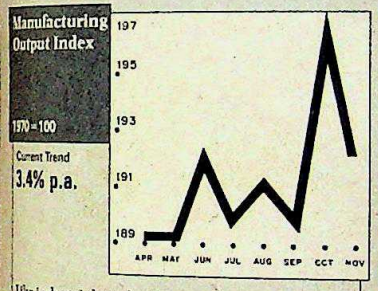
All data are seasonally adjusted. The current trend is computed on the basis of the past six months' data, to which regressions are fitted.



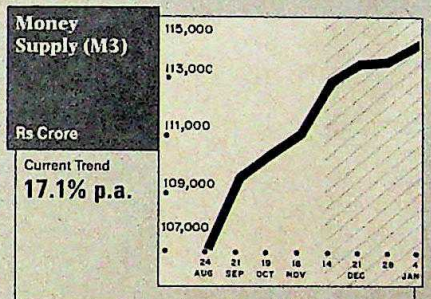
Wholesale prices are steadily but surely rising. Since the base year is 1970-71, the true price trend would be higher than shown.



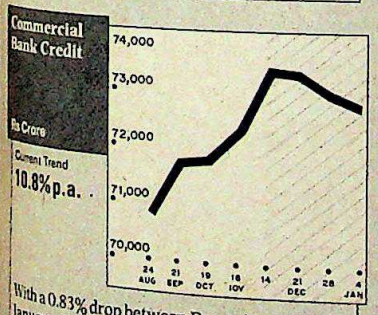
Industrial production nosedived by 1.4% in October-November 1985. Budget concessions do not seem to have helped.



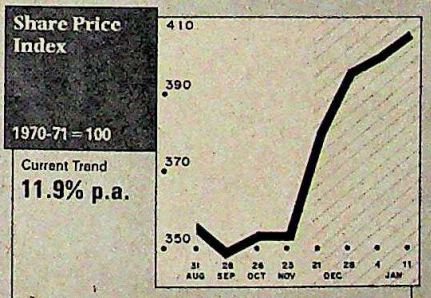
Like industrial production, manufacturing output fell by 2.5% in November 1985, reversing the sharp upswing of a month ago.



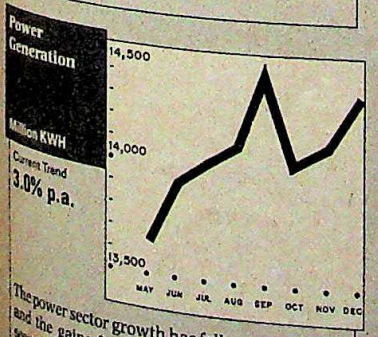
Money supply remains in line with the long-term trend, fluctuating around 17% per annum, with a tight control over M3.



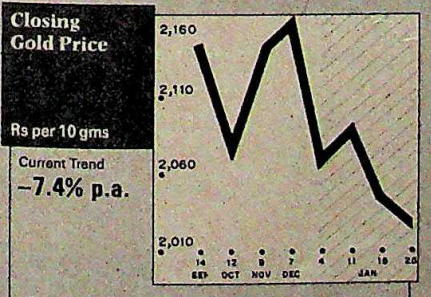
With a 0.83% drop between December 1985 and January 1986, commercial bank credit has tightened further.



Though share prices rose by 2.5% between end-December and mid-January, the market seems to have stabilised at a reasonable rate of growth.



The power sector growth has fallen to barely 3% and the gains from better capacity utilisation seem to have petered out.



Though general prices have risen, gold prices seem to be steadily falling—and the marriage season has made no difference at all.

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION

Growth of Items in September 1985

	%Growth
Cement Machinery	195.37
Metallurgical Machinery	50.69
Dairy Products	30.25
Artificial Leather & Oil Cloth	21.18
Watches & Clocks	19.44
Explosives	19.32
Handtools & Small Tools	16.03
Chemical & Pharmaceutical Machinery	14.87
Air-conditioners & Refrigerators	12.54
Tea Machinery	12.14
Salt	12.01
Sewing Machines	11.82
Pens & Pencils	8.80
Hydrogenated Oil	8.21
Man-Made Fibres	7.98
Dairy Machinery	7.53
Jute Textiles	6.97
Paints & Varnishes	6.31
Railway Locomotives	5.59
Electrical Machinery	5.46
Dye-Stuffs	5.30
Beverage Industry	5.26
Coffee Curing Works	5.15
Iron & Steel Structurals	4.23
Typewriters & Duplicators	4.20
Telecommunications	4.15
Pharmaceuticals	3.63
Iron & Steel	3.23
Motor Cars	3.20
Cotton & Blended Yarn	3.07
Electric Light & Power	3.06
Non-Ferrous Basic Metal Industries	2.98
Inorganic Chemicals	2.40
Mining & Quarrying	1.73
Electrical Lamps	1.23
Power-Driven Pumps	1.23
Bakery Products	0.98
Tyres & Tubes	0.32
Soaps & Glycerine	−0.11
Newsprint	−0.38
Cotton & Blended Fabrics	−0.69
Paper	−0.77
Conveying Equipment	−1.22
Matches	−1.38
Fertilisers	−1.54
Buses, Trucks & Jeeps	−1.97
Cement	−2.16

Of the 86 series considered, 39 of them with a total weight of 51.6699998 had a positive growth and 47 of them with a total weight of 36.306 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1985	1984
Electricity Generation
Million Kwh, December	14871	13995
Call Money Rate
Percent, December	10.0	10.0
Industrial Licences
Numbers, November	58	62
Letters of Indent
Numbers, November	85	90
Foreign Collaboration
Numbers, October-December	337	208

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"If you have leprosy, you have nothing to fear"

A young girl and her enlightened in-laws teach the world a lesson

Malti has just got married. There is nothing unusual about this fact since most girls of twenty do get married. But what makes Malti an unusual bride is that she once had leprosy.

Malti has nothing to hide

Raju had fallen in love with Malti when she was eighteen — a bright, vivacious, good looking college student. Four months later, he proposed to her and she, on the advice of her parents, accepted.

But there was a hitch : her history of leprosy. Should her parents conceal the fact ? "After a great deal of debate we decided not to," explained Malti's father, "after all, Malti was cured. But we didn't want her in-laws to learn of her past condition from some other source."

Malti's in-laws understand

Raju's parents listened to Malti's story. Malti was ten when a pale patch on her arm was shown to a doctor. The diagnosis was leprosy in its earliest stage. Her treatment lasted a few years. Yet, all along, Malti led a normal life. She went to school. She played with friends. She travelled. But never once did she miss her appointments at the clinic. In time, the patch on her arm disappeared and after a comprehensive check-up, she was pronounced completely cured. "There is absolutely no chance of either Raju or their children getting the disease because of her," concluded Malti's father.

It was then that Raju's mother did an astonishing thing. She took off her gold chain and put it around Malti's neck. "To us Malti won't ever be a daughter-in-law," she said, "but a daughter."

Leprosy is curable

All the patient needs is :

- Early detection
- Early intervention
- Sustained treatment
- Community support throughout

Your support counts

Leprosy is the least infectious of all infectious diseases. Only neglected cases run the risk of deformities at a later, more advanced stage. Yet, this condition need never occur. That is why leprosy patients can be — and should be — retained in the mainstream of life.

Encourage them. Support them. Remind them — and yourself — that they pose no threat to their family and friends.

Malti's story proves that it can be done. All you need is an open mind.

TATA STEEL

Issued in the interest of better understanding and support for the leprosy patient — by TATA STEEL and UNICEF.

The real healing touch must come from you

The true identity of the leprosy patient has been concealed for want of community support.

For further information, write to : Leprosy Awareness Campaign, C/o UNICEF Information Service, 73 Lodi Estate, New Delhi 110 003.

React-0411/85C

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

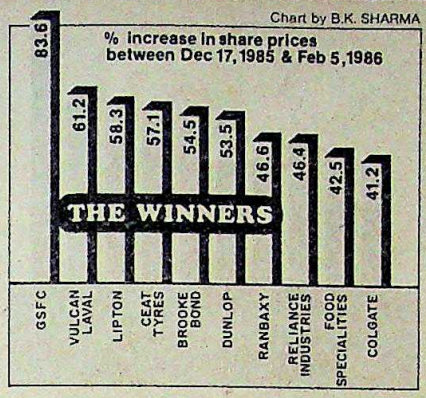
Bonus Fever

THE STOCK-market hasn't seen a boom year like 1985. But 1986 has had an even more astonishing start, with an amazing rise in the equity prices of a whole range of companies. In the last six weeks, the prices of Gujarat State Fertiliser Corporation (GSFC) shares have shot up by an astounding 83.6 per cent, while Dunlop, Brooke Bond, Ceat, Lipton and Vulcan Laval have all gone up by more than 50 per cent.

This reflects extraordinary confidence in the future of these companies, for the Government's reputation has taken a beating and the Union Budget is round the corner. Last year's equity boom had come only after the path-breaking budget, and the big question is whether this year's budget will produce the opposite effect.

Nevertheless, there are reasons for the boom. GSFC's sudden acceleration was caused by an inspired leak that the company board might be considering the issue of convertible bonds, and that a decision would be known later this month. Similarly, Reliance scaled new heights because of the expectation of bumper profits in 1985, an expanded dividend and of a bonus issue. And Tata Steel sky-rocketed after Steel Minister K.C.Pant declared that a price increase in steel was inevitable.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA



For all that, there were the slumps too, and something seemed amiss. Many of the shares that had led an earlier spirited climb tended to fall back down the slopes. There was a clear downtrend in automobile and related shares, including Premier Automobiles, the once consistently supported Motor Industries, Hindustan Motors, Ashok Leyland, Chloride India, Kinetic Engineering, Kirloskar Cummins, and Lohia Machines. This unusually consistent trend across the stock-market for automobile shares suggests that investors have reassessed the future of the automobile industry.

Some companies that had announced bonuses also declined, including Hindustan Development. Clearly, the bears have not left the field to the bulls rampaging the market. This was most evident in Century Spinning, where the bulls speculated on the possibility of a bonus issue and drove the price up from Rs 1,460 to Rs 1,600. But this fell back the next day to Rs 1,520, and after climbing again to Rs 1,700 finally settled at Rs 1,640. This suggested that the bulls had really been concentrating their attack on just these shares.

If indeed the recent buoyancy has been fuelled mainly by windfall bonus issues, then the market may in fact quieten down in the last couple of weeks before the budget. Certainly, the pre-budget revenue-raising exercise does not promise good news on budget day.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1986 HIGH	LOW	CLOSE 5.2.86	Change on Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	45.00	40.00	40.00	5.00 –
Associated Bearings	895.00	775.00	880.00	45.00 +
Associated Cement	386.00	346.00	374.00	12.00 +
Atlas Copco	91.50	77.00	91.50	13.50 +
Bajaj Auto	2030.00	1950.00	2015.00	5.00 +
Ballarpur	65.50	55.00	62.50	3.50 +
Baroda Rayon	470.00	410.00	470.00	60.00 +
Bata India	82.50	72.00	72.00	5.50 –
Bayer	575.00	445.00	570.00	110.00 +
Best & Crompton	102.00	84.00	102.00	6.00 +
Bharat Forge	86.00	73.00	74.00	3.00 –
Blow Plast	160.00	122.00	140.00	10.00 –
Blue Star	110.00	92.50	105.00	nil
Bombay Dyeing	120.00	86.00	93.50	7.50 –
Brooke Bond	95.00	74.00	95.00	13.00 +
Ceat Tyres	385.00	240.00	385.00	80.00 +
Century Spinning	1655.00	1430.00	1640.00	150.00 +
Chloride India	122.00	99.00	105.00	2.00 –
Citurgia	65.00	53.00	59.00	4.00 –
Colgate	262.50	220.00	240.00	10.00 +
Cyanamid	100.00	70.00	93.00	7.00 –
DCM	58.50	46.00	46.50	3.50 –
Dunlop	67.50	49.75	66.00	14.00 +
Elecon Engg.	97.50	82.50	95.00	12.50 +
Escorts	94.00	78.00	81.00	0.50 –
Food Specialities	260.00	235.00	260.00	20.00 +
Garware Nylon	61.50	46.00	49.00	6.00 –
Glaxo	87.00	66.00	75.00	5.00 –
G.E. Shipping	36.00	27.75	32.00	0.50 –
Gujarat St Fertilisers	1580.00	925.00	1570.00	450.00 +
Gwalior Rayon	88.00	80.00	85.00	2.50 +
Hindustan Lever	139.00	127.50	137.00	3.00 +
Hindustan Motors	128.50	120.00	124.50	1.00 +
Indian Explosives	84.50	69.00	81.50	12.50 –
Indian Hotels	130.00	115.00	130.00	2.50 +
Indian Organic	90.00	78.50	85.00	1.00 +
Indian Rayon	137.00	119.00	124.00	6.00 –
Indrol	360.00	285.00	342.50	32.50 +
Ind. Suzuki	81.00	58.00	71.00	4.00 –
Ingersoll-Rand	480.00	360.00	445.00	5.00 +
ITC	63.50	53.00	63.50	8.00 +
J K Synthetics	122.00	106.00	118.00	8.00 +
Kinetic Engineering	325.00	280.00	280.00	15.00 –
Kirloskar Cummins	700.00	655.00	660.00	32.50 –
Lakme	195.00	172.50	185.00	5.00 –
Larsen & Toubro	198.00	180.00	192.50	5.50 +
Lipton	68.25	46.50	66.50	9.75 +
Lohia Machines	70.00	65.00	66.00	2.00 –
Mahindra & Mahindra	86.00	72.00	79.00	2.00 +
Motor Industries	910.00	760.00	790.00	50.00 –
National Organic	777.50	585.00	772.50	120.00 +
Nirlon	77.00	61.00	71.00	2.00 –
Orkay Silk Mills	167.00	125.50	151.00	7.00 –
Peico Electronics	104.50	80.00	84.00	nil
Premier Auto	745.00	632.50	667.50	25.00 –
Ranbaxy	152.50	116.00	152.50	32.50 +
Raymond	97.00	84.00	86.50	6.50 –
Reliance Industries	327.00	226.00	325.00	47.00 +
Sandoz	87.00	62.00	87.00	1.00 +
Shriram Fibres	80.00	71.00	78.50	2.00 +
SPIC	146.00	129.50	143.00	5.00 +
Tata Steel	1325.00	1142.50	1325.00	130.00 +
Telco	900.00	780.00	890.00	24.00 +
Vulcan Laval	140.00	85.00	138.00	nil
Zenith Steel	97.00	73.00	83.00	6.00 –
20th Century Leasing	77.50	62.00	62.00	5.00 –

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

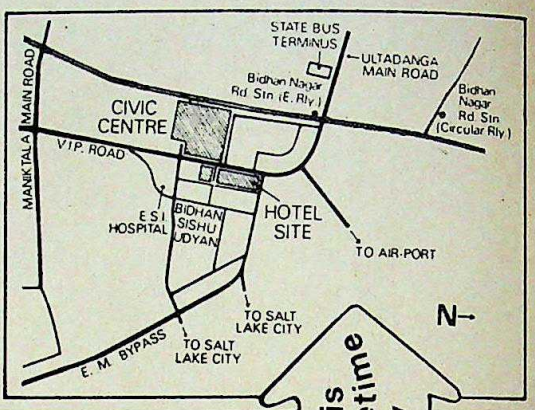
COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	8.7745	8.6882
Austria	Schilling	100	74.8957	74.0965
Bahrain	Dinar	1	32.2922	32.1730
Bangladesh	Taka	100	41.5430	41.2211
Canada	Dollar	1	8.8010	8.7187
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.4275	1.4146
Egypt	Pound	1	14.9332	14.9091
France	Franc	1	1.7176	1.7017
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.6177	1.6044
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	1.1132	1.1003
Iran	Rial	100	14.5770	14.4032
Italy	Lira	100	0.7600	0.7501
Japan	Yen	100	6.5871	6.5296
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7720	0.7699
Kuwait	Dinar	1	43.3532	43.2029
Malaysia	Dollar	1	5.1174	5.0726
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.8532	0.8301
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.6080	0.5900
Netherlands	Guilder	1	4.6531	4.6120
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7873	0.7530
Singapore	Dollar	1	5.9125	5.8601
Spain	Peseta	100	8.2030	8.1139
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4580	0.4471
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.6696	1.6547
Switzerland	Franc	1	6.2133	6.1554
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.7689	0.7440
Thailand	Baht	100	47.7132	46.5230
UK	Pound	1	17.4657	17.3460
USA	Dollar	1	12.6025	12.4850
UAE	Dirham	1	3.3932	3.3033
USSR	Rouble	1	16.1032	16.0500
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	5.3533	5.2219

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 6.2.86.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

3 STAR HOTEL SITE



at CIVIC CENTRE MANIKTALA

Grab this once in a lifetime opportunity

With an area of approximately 10 acres Civic Centre at Maniktala is growing into one of the most ideally located shopping Centre in the prestigious residential area of East Calcutta. Situated on the approach road to Salt Lake City and Calcutta Air Port it is well connected by Tram, Circular Rail numerous Bus and Mini Bus Route and very near to Bidhan Nagar Road Railway Station. The Civic Centre is proposed as a well designed Commercial Complex on modern planning concept. It has apart from the Hotel Site ;—

- 2-storied shopping complex contained in 5 different blocks inclusive of a National Textile Complex.
- About 17000 sq.mtrs. of office space in 14 storied Tower Block in the centre with basement car parking facility.
- 5-storied low rise office building already occupied by State Bank.
- A lodging house to be developed by private enterpreneur.
- A Cinema Hall and a Theatre Hall to be constructed by State Govt.
- A Youth Centre with Library and Art Gallery.
- A park and Garden integrated with the Complex.
- Sufficient parking space in the Shopping-cum-Office Complex—both open and underground.

Applications are invited from the entrepreneurs who are already in the Govt. of India (Tourism Deptt.) or the Govt. of West Bengal (Tourism Deptt.) panel and/or any Indian Citizen or group of Indian Citizens, a Firm, Company or registered Co-operative Society who are running at least 3-star Hotel and have experience in the line for taking on lease the Hotel Plot for a period of 99 years with option for renewal for a further term of 99 years.

The Hotel plot is being leased out exclusively for construction of modern hotel with minimum 3-star facilities along with other ancillary facilities. The Hotel is to be constructed and used in accordance with the terms and conditions of lease.

Some details of the plot are as under :—

- Area of the plot—Approximately 6689 sq.mtrs. [100 kottahs (1 kottah=720 sq.ft.)]
- Ground Floor coverage a maximum of 35 percentage of the plot area.
- Commercial area in the form of shopping arcade etc. at Ground Floor and 1st Floor only 10 percentage of the total floor area.
- Reserve premia—Rs. 1,495-04 per sq.mtr. [Rs. 1,00,000/- per kottah (1 kottah=720 sft.)]
- Application Money—Rs. 1,00,000/-

Application Forms are obtainable from the following branches of BANK OF INDIA-Jawaharlal Nehru Road branch at Calcutta, Parliament Street Branch—New Delhi, Nariman Point Branch—Bombay and main branches at Madras, Bangalore and Ahmedabad on payment of Rs. 50/-.

Forms can also be obtained by post on payment of Rs. 60/- by Crossed Postal Order in favour of Bank of India A/c. Calcutta Improvement Trust from Bank of India, Jawaharlal Nehru Road Branch, 44 Jawaharlal Nehru Road, Calcutta-700016.

Offers in the prescribed from in sealed cover along with requisite Application Money by Bank Draft/Pay Order drawn on any Bank at Calcutta will be received at the branches of Bank of India mentioned above within 31st March, 1986.

A. K. Chatterjee I.A.S.,
Chairman

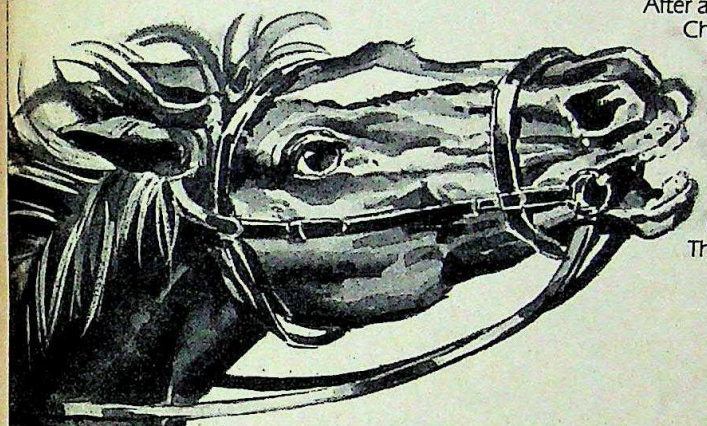
Calcutta Improvement Trust
P-16, India Exchange Place Extn.
Calcutta-700 073

BEEVAS/CIT/85-11

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gwalior Rayon selects HGE for effluent treatment.



This horse really appreciates that.

After a strenuous gallop in the ravines of the Chambal, he is always given a cool drink in the Chambal. The river into which many companies send their effluents, including Gwalior Rayon. But Gwalior Rayon's wastewaters are made totally safe by HGE before they reach the river. Safe enough to satisfy the most fastidious pollution control experts — and this horse as well. He only wishes more companies would follow Gwalior Rayon's example. Then the Chambal would be clean and pollution-free again.

HGE — Turnkey Capabilities

HGE (Hydraulic and General Engineers Ltd), a subsidiary of Batliboi, is the only company with turnkey capabilities in industrial effluent treatment. From concept to commissioning. With dependable after-sales service. Since HGE houses all the skills — manufacturing, engineering, contracting — it can keep costs low and guarantee timely execution without cost overruns. HGE is also a leader in Sewage Treatment Plants, trusted by Municipalities and Water Supply and Sewerage Boards the country over.

HGE — Clients

Besides Gwalior Rayon, HGE's other clients for industrial effluent treatment include —

* Maruti Udyog
* Century Pulp & Paper Mills
* Century Spinning * Harihar Polyfibres
* Corn Products * Rashtriya Chemicals & Fertilizers * National Newsprint & Paper Mills * Parle Products
* Bharat Petroleum * Dairies, Sugar Mills and Pharmaceutical Plants

So if you have an effluent treatment problem — just hand it over to HGE. And it becomes HGE's responsibility — totally.

HGE

BATLIBOI

Hydraulic & General Engineers Ltd.
203 Arun Chambers, J. Dadaji Road, Tardeo, Bombay 400 034.
Subsidiary of Batliboi & Co. Ltd.

HGE. We'll help you keep your reputation clean.

CHAITRA-B BB 231

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KASHMIR JEWELS

Tax Ploy

WHEN the hoard was first discovered in a time-forgotten vault in Kashmir valley two and a half years ago, Karan Singh had come forward to stake his claim as the scion of the former ruling family of Kashmir and thus the natural heir and claimant to this priceless legacy. The jewels and robes, he claimed, were family heirlooms and not part of the state wealth turned over to the Union at the time of accession. Ever since, he has been trying to establish solid proof for his claim.

Now after a year of trenchant arguments in the Jammu and Kashmir High Court and the Supreme Court, the prince has hit upon a bright idea, and as a result, secured a court order for the inspection of the jewels by officers of the Central Board of Direct Taxes (CBDT) and antiquarian and archaeological experts. Which step, once it comes through, will virtually amount to a tacit acceptance of his claim that the jewels by right belong to him.

The modus operandi was simple. When filling in his wealth tax form for the year 1979-80, Singh listed the hoard as part of his wealth, which he himself assessed at Rs 6,93,928. Later, the assessment was revised upward to Rs 10 lakh—a paltry figure, given the crores at stake—and Singh claimed exemption under the Wealth Tax Act of 1961. Now his lawyers knew full well that to make even a preliminary assessment of this wealth, the tax authorities would have to see it for themselves. And sure enough came a request to this effect from the Revenue Department of the Finance Ministry.

In the assessment, the wealth tax officers put the value of the jewels at Rs 22 lakh, obviously a wild guess since they could not conceivably have had an inkling about their real worth. Penalty proceedings were initiated forthwith and Singh's total wealth tax liability was assessed at Rs 98,380, of which Rs 55,114 remained to be paid. However, the tax boys needed to look at the jewels first and this was the trump card that Singh took to court.

But it was not as if the court wasn't wise to Singh's ploy. The first time round, the Jammu and Kashmir High Court ruled against him, heeding the argument of the state Government that allowing an inspection would amount to "grant of practically the main relief"—in essence, conceding that the jewels were his.

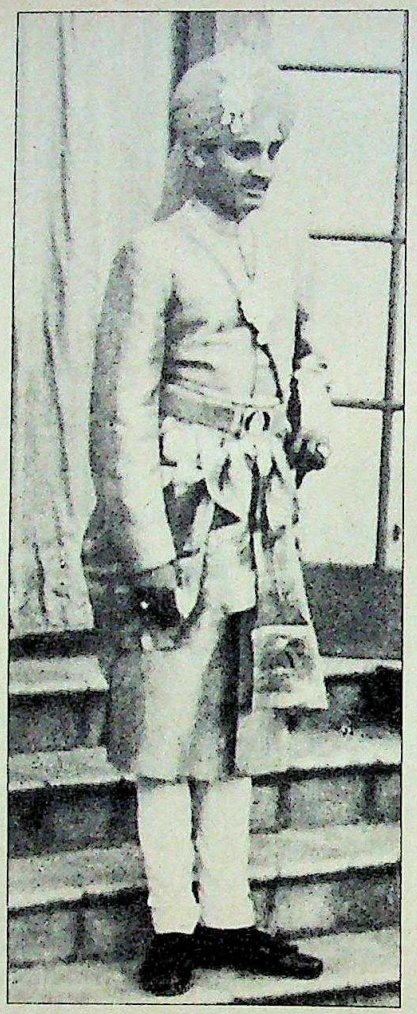
However, the Supreme Court, where Singh appealed immediately afterwards, declared the high court order "completely erroneous". It directed that representatives of both sides be joined by a member of the CBDT, the director-general of the Archaeological Survey of India, the director, antiques, and the director of the National Museum, besides assorted valuers, to inspect the jewels.

The purpose was to "determine the true nature and character of the same and whether any and if so what items constitute heirlooms or articles of personal use of the appellant and his family". What had won the day was the fact that the tax authorities had assessed the treasure lying in the Srinagar Toshakhana as belonging to the former yuvaraja. Says Singh's lawyer S.K. Kandhari: "This was a significant step in the case."

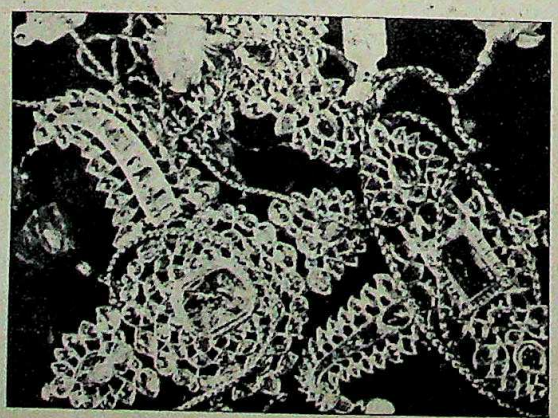
This is something of a coup for the former education minister and leader of the Virat Hindu Sammelan. Quite apart from the immense value of the 563-piece collection—which according to a conservative estimate is worth at least Rs 1,000 crore—there is considerable sentimental substance to his claim. In interviews, Singh emphasised that his father and grandfather wore many of the ceremonial dresses that form part of the collection and, in his appeal to the Home Ministry and the courts, he attached photographs showing his forefathers in them. But the state Government had constantly blocked his requests for inspecting the jewels and it was to this end only that most of his efforts were directed last year.

But even though he is making so much of it, all that he has won is merely the right to inspect the jewels. The knotty question of whom the jewels really belong to will probably take many more months to be resolved. But still, the former prince can rest easy for a while with the knowledge that in this fierce battle for what is being called one of the most sumptuous kingly legacies of recent time, he has at least won the first round.

—JAGANNATH DUBASHI



Singh has got a court order to have the jewels inspected by taxmen—the first step to getting his claim accepted.

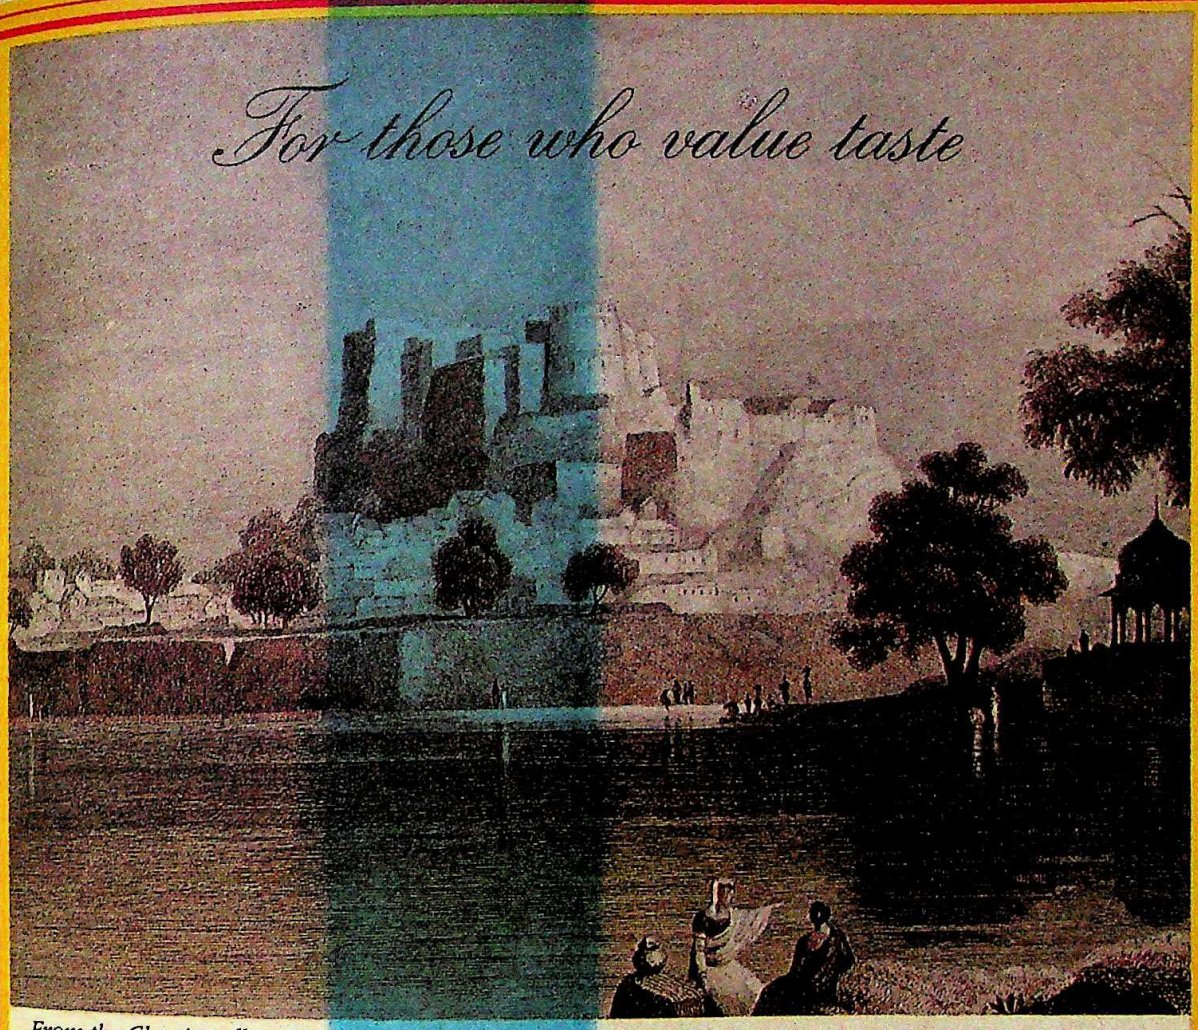


A young Singh in royal garb (top); and the jewels: clever move

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

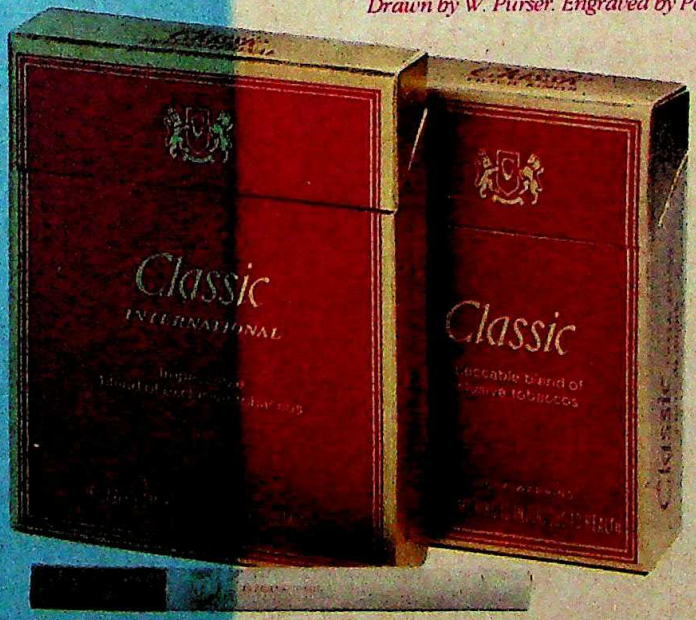
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For those who value taste



From the Classic collection at ITC Ltd., 37 Chowringhee, Calcutta

FORTRESS AT SHUHUR JEYPORE, RAJPOOTANA
Drawn by W. Purser. Engraved by Percy Heath.



Contemporary Classics from ITC

CALRION C-CL-1

STATUTORY WARNING: CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Featuring Ms. Persis Khambatta in Vareli RoyalCrepe

The new passion...

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gurukul Collection,

Courtesy Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UTTAR PRADESH

Quick Quacks

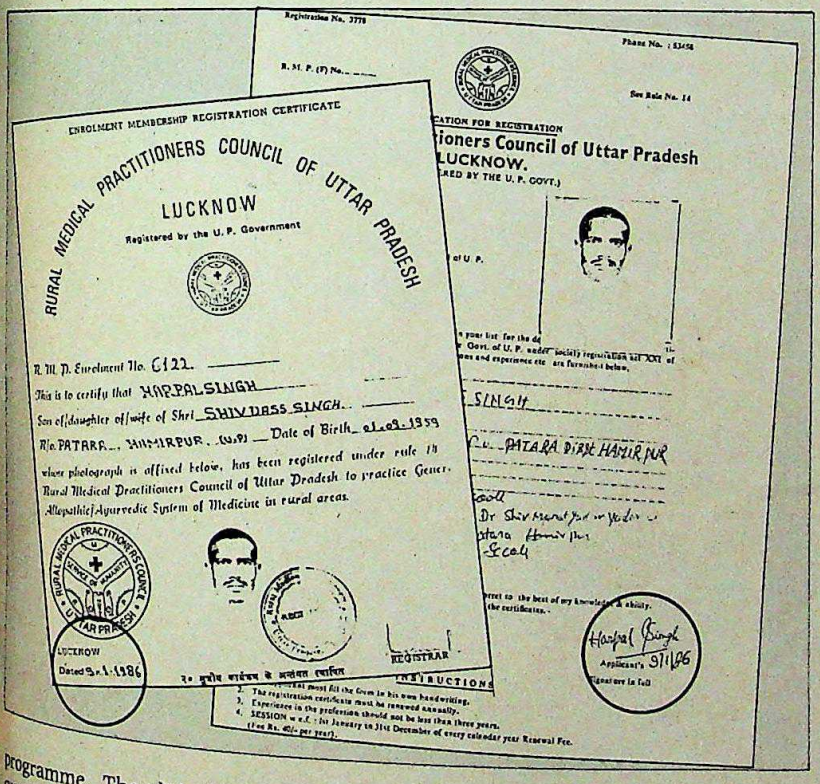
HEAD Constable Harpal Singh became a doctor on the evening of January 9 by the simple expedient of depositing Rs 500 with the managing director of the Rural Medical Practitioners Council of Uttar Pradesh. By doing so, he blew the lid off a successful racket involving the issue of fake medical certificates for money.

The scandal came to light by sheer accident. Harpal, on a visit to his village in Hamirpur district, found one of his brothers working as a medical practitioner when he had been jobless a year ago. A board at his clinic announced that he was a doctor authorised to work in the rural areas under the 20-point programme. The disbelieving Harpal questioned his brother and then returned to the office of Brij Lal, the city superintendent of police in Lucknow and told him what he had found. On the latter's instructions, Harpal deposited Rs 500 with the council and got himself registered as a doctor the same evening.

With the damaging certificate in hand, Harpal filed a first information report and the police promptly raided the offices of the so-called council at Chander Nagar and that of the International Acupuncture Research and Training Institute at Vigyanpuri Road, Mahanagar, both posh localities in the Lucknow suburbs. Hundreds of blank certificates signed and sealed by some 'registrar' were recovered alongwith thousands of money order receipts, application forms and accounting registers, and expensive equipment.

Detectives arrested Dr Ashok Chaudhary, the founder of the council and its managing director, and questioning revealed that he had registered over 10 societies through the state Registrar of Firms, Societies and Chits. In fact, Chaudhary's earlier Rural Medical Practitioners Association of India had been cancelled by the deputy registrar in August 1983 on the grounds that it had been selling medical certificates by levying a fee of Rs 275 in blatant violation of the rules set out in the Societies Registration Act.

Chaudhary (right); and Harpal Singh's certificates



Service (IAS) were brought in as 'advisers' and signboards even mentioned the names of leading city doctors as consultants in Chaudhary's ventures.

Chaudhary's past would have done credit to any con artist. He had previously posed as an IAS officer, a regional transport officer, an income tax officer and then as a doctor holding an MBBS degree. Even more interesting, he had been detained under the Maintenance of Internal Security Act (MISA) in Kanpur in 1975 but when contacted by INDIA TODAY he smugly stated: "It is true I was arrested under MISA but that is nothing but a misunderstanding." And about his qualifications: "I have passed class VII from Farrukhabad but to promote rural health under the 20-point programme, I have involved in this venture miyan biwi bacchon sahit (husband, wife and children). That is what MBBS stands for. And MD stands for managing director, not doctor of medicine."

The police action came close on the heels of a letter written by the Registrar of the Uttar Pradesh Medical Council, Dr J.P.Saxena, to SP Brij Lal. The letter stated that "Chaudhary was not registered with either the Board of Indian Medicine or the Board of Homoeopathic Medicine and was not authorised to issue medical treatment certificates. All his activities are fraudulent and action must be taken against him". But with Chaudhary now in the bag, the police have to come to terms with the unpalatable fact that his activities go well beyond the state's borders. Said city Senior Superintendent Tilak Kak: "The number of so-called 'rural doctors' must have gone beyond 20,000 in the northern states besides Uttar Pradesh."

Meanwhile, details of Chaudhary's operations continue to unravel. The money deposited in banks all went into his personal account and officials have confirmed that three more of his associations, Rural Society for Health, International Acupuncture Research Centre and Charitable Hospital and Indian Medical Society, have been granted registration till the year 1990.

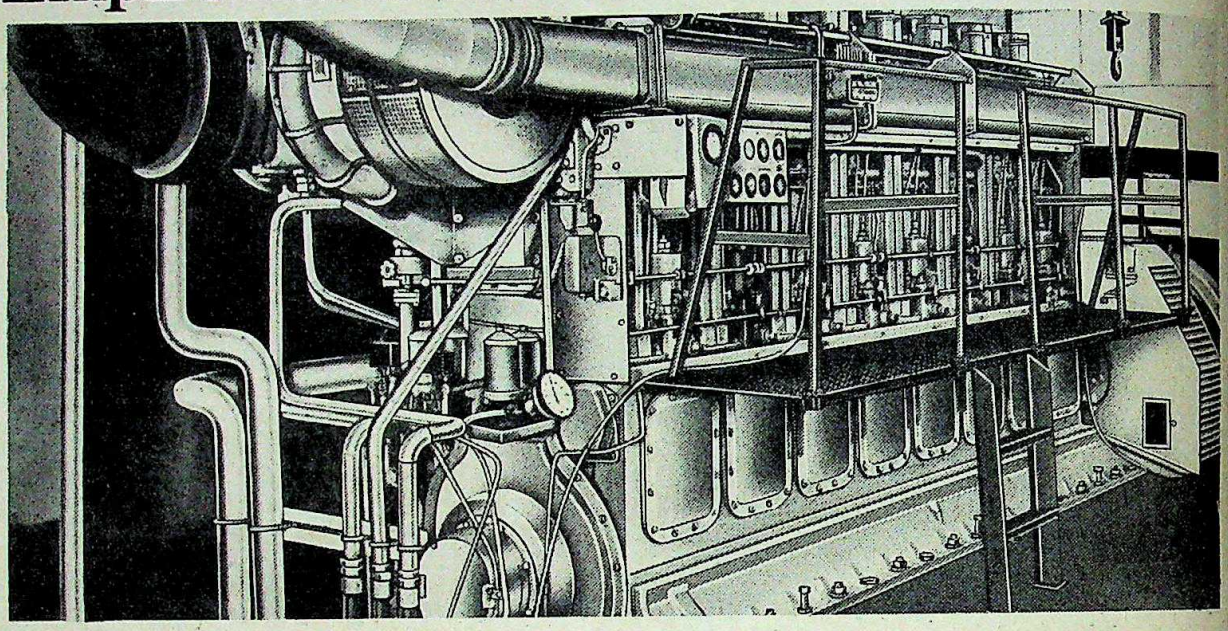
But all the attendant publicity and the arrest of Chaudhary and his wife Pushpa notwithstanding, people continue to queue up at his plush offices in the hope of becoming instant rural medical practitioners.

—S. PREMI in Lucknow

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Another enterprise of
Empire Industries



Empire Finance Co. Ltd.

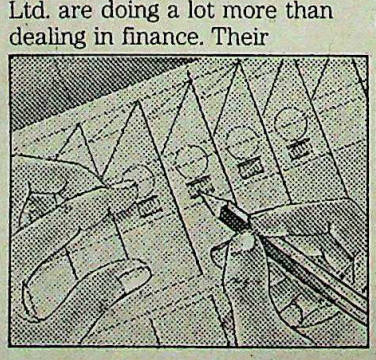
We offer wide-ranging financial services to help you get your business off the ground.

Empire Finance Co. Ltd. provides financial services in the fields of Leasing, Hire Purchase, Warehousing, Commodity Finance and Bill Discounting. Tailor-made to suit you. Ensuring maximum tax and financial advantage to clients. Catering to your needs of financing plant and machinery, electronic equipment, computers and more.

Of course Empire Industries Ltd. are doing a lot more than dealing in finance. Their manufacturing and marketing operations cover the additional areas of Medium and Heavy Crane manufacturing, Machine Tools, Instruments and Instrumentation Systems, Glassware and Textiles.

The other enterprises of Empire Industries Ltd.

Garlick Engineering, Empire Machine Tools, Empire Instrumentation, Vitrum Glass and Empire Dyeing.



The Empire Finance Co. Ltd.

AN ENTERPRISE OF

EMPIRE INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Empire Industries Ltd.
414, Senapati Bapat Marg,
Lower Parel,
Bombay-400 013
Phone: 4920304/4920003
Telex: 011-73888 (EMPR IN)

Where Excellence Leads

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ed by Arya Samaj Foundation Chenn

When the carpet is Persian, he walls are Luxol Silk.

Luxol Silk. It is the only emulsion paint you n tell with your eyes closed. Just run your fingers over e silken, super-smooth finish.
uxol Silk. Its perfect silk finish makes it so easy to wash, easy to keep bright and clean looking for years and years.
Luxol Silk. Choose from over forty shades of silk.
ct from a whole new range of whites that whisper.

rape your walls with Luxol Silk the richest emulsion in the world.

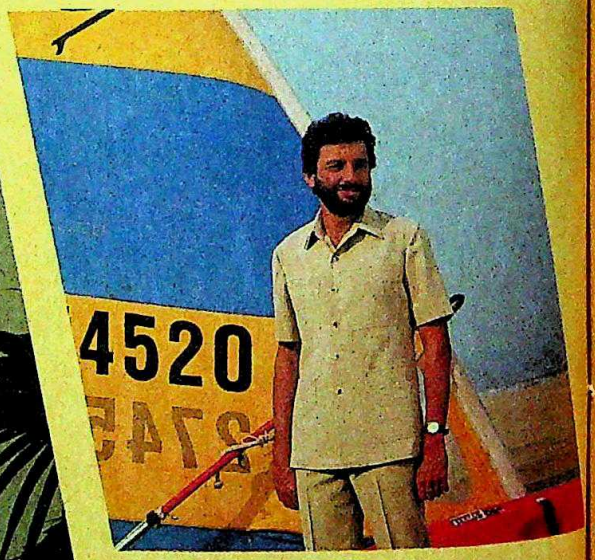
Luxol Silk

British Paints
BERGER
WORLDWIDE

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



COOL, COMFORTABLE, ELEGANT... THE SUMMERWEAR FOR TH CONNOISSEUR

AJAX DWM 86 S

CC-0. Public Domain. ... war

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Coir decor — as beautiful as it is practical and inexpensive.
Keeps you cool in summer. Warm in winter.
Keeps noise away. No expensive maintenance, no vacuum or dry cleaning.
Dust proof, moth proof and rot proof.
Just lasts and lasts. It is also the least expensive of decor materials. Take a beautifully practical decision.
Take coir.

Coir Board
Cochin 682 016
Showrooms : Ahmedabad: 448226 . Bangalore: 51216 . Bhubaneswar: 50944 . Bombay: 221575 . Calcutta: 445287 . Chandigarh: 25753 . Cochin: 34277 . Hyderabad: 36276 . Indore: 7106 . Jammu Tawi: 3222 . Jaipur: 65427 . Kanpur: 47326 . Madras: 85787 . Madurai: 25505 . New Delhi: 681544, 271388 . Patna: 25550

SANCB/32/LT

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DOORDARSHAN

The Missing Telecast

IT STARTED out as a harmless enough idea—a TV film on India on the threshold of major changes. But last fortnight Jack Anderson's film entitled Rajiv's India had become an acute embarrassment—for producer Barbara Newman who came to Delhi for its release, for Doordarshan which cancelled the telecasting of the film literally at the eleventh hour and for the sponsor, Press Trust of India (PTI) whose Chairman, Ram Nath Goenka, had hosted a preview party only two days earlier. Most embarrassed of all was I&B Minister V.N. Gadgil who had gushed initially that the film would "not only entertain but educate the audience".

The prime minister's office, which had helped obtain the necessary clearances for the film did not escape embarrassment either. And, by the end of the fortnight the film had become a whodunit, with nobody prepared to say who had ordered the film's postponement.

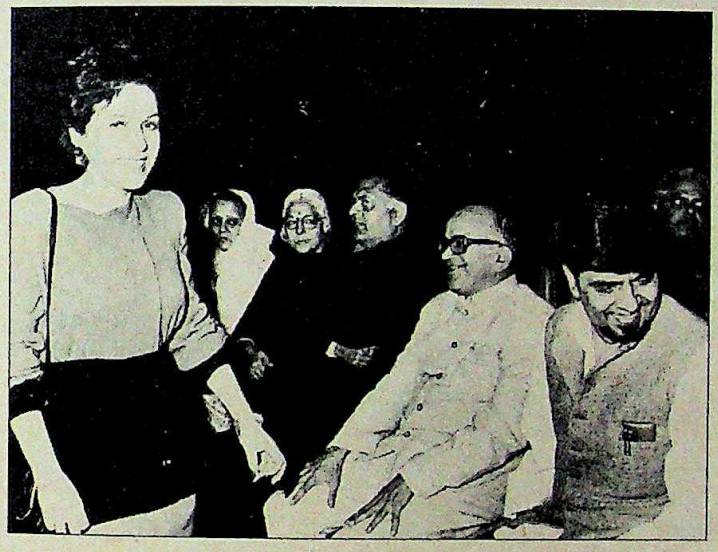
Girish Mehra, secretary in the I&B Ministry said he was not involved in the decision. The prime minister's information aide Mani Shankar Aiyer who had coordinated the film project with Anderson's team refused to say at what point the postponement decision was taken. And Additional Director General of Doordarshan Shiv Sharma deepened the mystery by saying that the postponement order had come neither from the prime minister's office nor from the minister. "Doordarshan decided to postpone the showing and will fix the next date for telecast," he said. Sources in the prime minister's office said Rajiv himself had not seen the film and that the screening as well as postponement must have been decided in the I&B Ministry.

All of a sudden the film had become too hot for anyone to touch, even for the sponsor, PTI, which had announced at the preview that it would inaugurate PTI's entry into the audio-visual field. The agency now disclaimed involvement. Having handed it over to Doordarshan the film was now the "government's problem. It has nothing to do with PTI," said General Manager P. Unnikrishnan.

But one man, Yashpal Kapoor—former confidant of Mrs Gandhi—was all too keen to take the credit for stopping the telecast. Kapoor, who attended the preview, bragged that he had protested to Goenka and Gadgil that the film denigrated Indira Gandhi and gave free publicity to Goenka's Indian Express chain of newspapers. "Is this Rajiv's India or Goenka's Indian Express?" asked Kapoor. He said other characters in the film also made outrageous statements: Khushwant Singh saying Rajiv was better than his mother and grandfather, industrialist Nusli Wadia being introduced as the grandson of Jinnah and the other big shareholder of Bombay Dyeing, Madhavrao Scindia, reading a "ten-minute lecture" about the Gwalior royal family's service to the people.

Kapoor said that he phoned Gadgil only to be told that a decision had already been taken to screen the film. He then called Rajiv's Private Secretary V. George in the Maldives where Rajiv was on a state visit and complained about the film. Kapoor says the next day M.L. Fotedar, the prime minister's aide on party affairs, phoned him and said he had received a message from Male about the film. Kapoor says he was told that G. Parthasarathy, Gadgil and Arun Nehru had later probably reviewed the film and decided to postpone the telecast.

The first newspaper accounts about the film's postponement said Kapoor and Minister of State for Civil Aviation Jagdish Tytler had protested. Delhi's Sunday Mail wrote that after the preview "Tytler was heard loudly exclaiming: 'This is India through the eyes of a press tycoon, industrialist and maharaja". Tytler initially did not deny this but when asked about his role in the affair, said he had nothing to do with the postponement. Other Congress(I) men objected to the choice of protagonists—Goenka, Wadia, Scindia all of whom the partymen said belonged to the big business lobby. But the ministers who saw and applauded the film at last fortnight's preview were Minister for Steel and Mines K.C. Pant, the Chairman of the Policy Planning Committee in the Ministry of External Affairs G. Parthasarathy, Minister of State for External Affairs K.R. Narayanan, Minister of State for Welfare Rajendra Kumari Bajpai, and Mohammed Yunus of the Trade Fair Authority.



Newman (left) with Vijaya Raje Scindia, Pant, Gadgil and Tytler at the preview

What made things worse was that Doordarshan decided to sanitise the film by excising some shots of poverty ridden children, a survivor of a bride burning incident and a Khushwant Singh remark that Rajiv was just a "namby pamby Avro pilot who would make an ass of himself and take the country to ruin". His later remarks praising the prime minister for being better than his mother and grandfather were retained. "This would leave the picture incomplete" said Khushwant. Angrier still was the film's chief correspondent Inderjit Badhwar: "The jump cuts in the (edited) film looked awful. This film was very delicately faceted; to interfere or tarnish any one facet destroys the flow and continuity." Continuity apart, the film remains very much in limbo. That is all the more surprising because it's quite an innocuous, ineffective film made for a specific western audience. But having become a political issue it is unlikely that Indian television audiences will get a glimpse of Rajiv's India.

—RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RESEARCH ESTABLISHMENTS

Formula for Efficiency

"The electrician in our house does not think twice, he opens out the plug, he leaves all the wires open and off he goes. Somebody has just not taught him the basics".

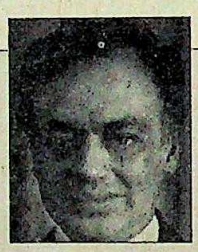
—Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi at a conference on science and technology in New Delhi in November 1985

LAST fortnight Rajiv Gandhi, who is in a way the chief engineer of the science ministry, was busy rewiring the frayed circuits and replacing luminaries in the house of science and technology in a bid to get scientific research to really light up the common man's life and, of course, teach electricians not to leave any live wires lying around.

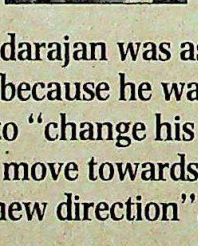
Naturally a few scientists were in for nasty shocks. The first bulb to be replaced was Dr S. Varadarajan, director-general of the mammoth Council for Scientific and Industrial Research (CSIR), probably most easily remembered as the helmet-wearing scientist who announced on national television that the remaining deadly toxins in the leaking Union Carbide tanks had been neutralised after the Bhopal gas tragedy. Varadarajan, who had a year-and-a-half to go in CSIR, was told on a bleak Thursday morning last month that he was being made chief consultant of the Planning Commission.

While sounding impressive enough, it really meant that Varadarajan was off the "operational side", as a prime ministerial aide put it, and had been given an advisory post. While the normally vocal Varadarajan refused to comment on his summary transfer, it is learnt that Rajiv was "unhappy" with his inability to come up with steps to revitalise CSIR.

A week later, when the Scientific Advisory Committee of the Cabinet (SACC) was replaced with a new body that would directly advise the prime minister, not only were many of the shining lights of science blacked out but the number of heads was reduced from a crowded 25 in the previous committee to a trimmer—and younger—eight. Those axed were such grey eminences as Raja Ramanna, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, U.R. Rao, chairman of the Space Commission, V. Ramalingaswami, director-general of the Indian Council for Medical Research (ICMR), and a host of secretaries to government departments: Yash Pal of the Science and Technology Department, S.Z. Qasim of Ocean Development, Maheshwar Dayal of Non-Conventional Energy, D.V. Kapur of Industry, and so on. These stars of the scientific firmament were politely told that as heads of government departments, they had to report to the prime minister, who could seek their advice whenever he needed it. As an aide put it: "What the prime minister wanted was views from people who were in the field and involved in research who would be able to present a different viewpoint from the official one." Unlike the previous panel, only one member now is a government servant, while the others are men directly from laboratories and from private industry.



Varadarajan was asked to go because he was not able to "change his style and move towards the new direction".



The only grey eminence to survive the purge was M.G.K. Menon, who will now also be the scientific adviser to the prime minister.

The only grey eminence to survive the drastic purge was the experienced and durable M.G.K. Menon, member of the Planning Commission, who will now also be Scientific Adviser to the prime minister. Menon was cautious about his new assignment and said: "Let's see how it works out, but my endeavour would be to continue to contribute to science and its applications in a meaningful way."

The new council is headed by eminent chemist Professor C.N.R. Rao, current director of the prestigious Indian Institute of Science at Bangalore. Among the council members are environmentalist Madhav Gadgil, aeronautics expert Roddam Narasimha, Hindustan Lever Chairman A.S. Ganguly, neurosurgeon P.N. Tandon, astrophysicist Jayant Narlikar, physicist Sekhar Raha and defence advisor V. Siddharta. Each of them have built up considerable reputations in their fields of research.

The new council, with an initial term of two years, is to advise Rajiv on major issues facing science and technology and chalk out a perspective plan for the much-talked-about "twenty-first century". Soon after his appointment, Rao said: "It is a difficult and challenging task we have been given and I hope we would live up to the prime minister's expectations."

In recent months, Rajiv had given plenty of warning about his dissatisfaction with the record of India's scientific establishments. In a hard-hitting address at the conference on science and tech-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

ctly from ate industry to survive perienced a ember of o will now
rime minist
t his new e how it wo uld be to ience and ful way."
led by emin
Rao, curren ndian Insti
ong the co
vironmenta autics exp dustan L neurosurge sicist Jay
Raha and
. Each of th reputation

an initial te Rajiv on ma echnology
n for the m
st centur
, Rao said:
task we h
would live u tations."
jiv had gi
his dissati dia's scien hitting ad
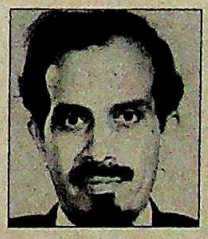
e and tech

gyin the capital three months ago—now being waved around as his policy statement—Rajiv had been particularly severe indeed scathing on the scientists' obsession with import substitution to the exclusion of much else. As he had bluntly put it: "What we have really done? We have given very poor targets to our scientists and technologists. This has to change. We have got to tell them: no, you do not have to replace a component, you have to replace the whole thing, with something new, and as advanced as is available at the time that you come out with it."

THE PRIME minister was keen on bringing the managerial concept of accountability into scientific research in a big way. Enthused by the success of the Space and Atomic Energy departments that have set ten-year targets for themselves and have made rapid strides in achieving them, Rajiv wanted most departments to follow suit. The buzzword among scientific circles is the "mission" approach coined by the Space Department to chart out its many launches. All the departments have been asked to come up with missions that would tangibly help the country within a specific time frame.

Varadarajan was asked to go because he was not able to "change his style and move towards the new direction" as an aide of the prime minister put it. True, the CSIR does list an impressive amount of products and processes that it has developed in the 35 institutions under its control in such varied fields as chemicals, engineering, oceanography and biological sciences. But what Rajiv reportedly wanted Varadarajan to come up with was not only a set of missions that would enable industry to directly benefit from laboratory research, but also to ensure that these would link up with the basic development plans of the country. In the past, much of the industrial research carried out in CSIR's laboratory had gone unutilised. As Professor P.K. Jena, a metallurgist and acting director-general of CSIR, explains: "Not only was there a large communication gap between industries and research laboratories but the industries also wanted a no-risk, already tried and tested product or process. That's not possible in research. These things have to be set right." And much of the research has gone largely unaccountable. Professor Yash Pal, secretary to the Science and Technology Department, says: "Nobody can be hauled up if no targets are set. We must set up tasks and our policy should be: do it and do it on time; or else, move out."



(Clockwise from top) Rao; Narasimha; Tandon; Raha; Narlikar; Ganguly; and Gadgil: new line-up

But submitting a list of missions is not enough. Rajiv was also irritated with the long list of technology missions put down by the high-power steering committee on science and technology for the seventh plan. As he sarcastically remarked: "We have come out with missions, but somehow the mission of getting the mission ready is not ready itself." Right now an inter-ministerial group being coordinated by the Prime Minister's Office is working out a handful of missions that would concentrate on making an impact on key areas like agriculture, energy, family planning, food, water and health.

The aim, as Yash Pal puts it, is to "break the tyranny of bureaucracy and cut across the boundaries of departments." "What we are working towards is multi-organisation missions," he says, citing the example of the agriculture mission which will not only come up with complete soil surveys and weather forecasts but provide the farmers with new farm techniques, improved variety of seeds and better fertilisers. For doing this expertise would be drawn from various research institutions specialising in geophysics, meteorology, agricultural research and chemicals.

With last fortnight's dramatic changes, the prime minister hopes to get scientists and technologists cracking in the direction he wants. But he is going to have plenty of loose wires to take care of before he can be certain that the new system would not be short-circuited.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

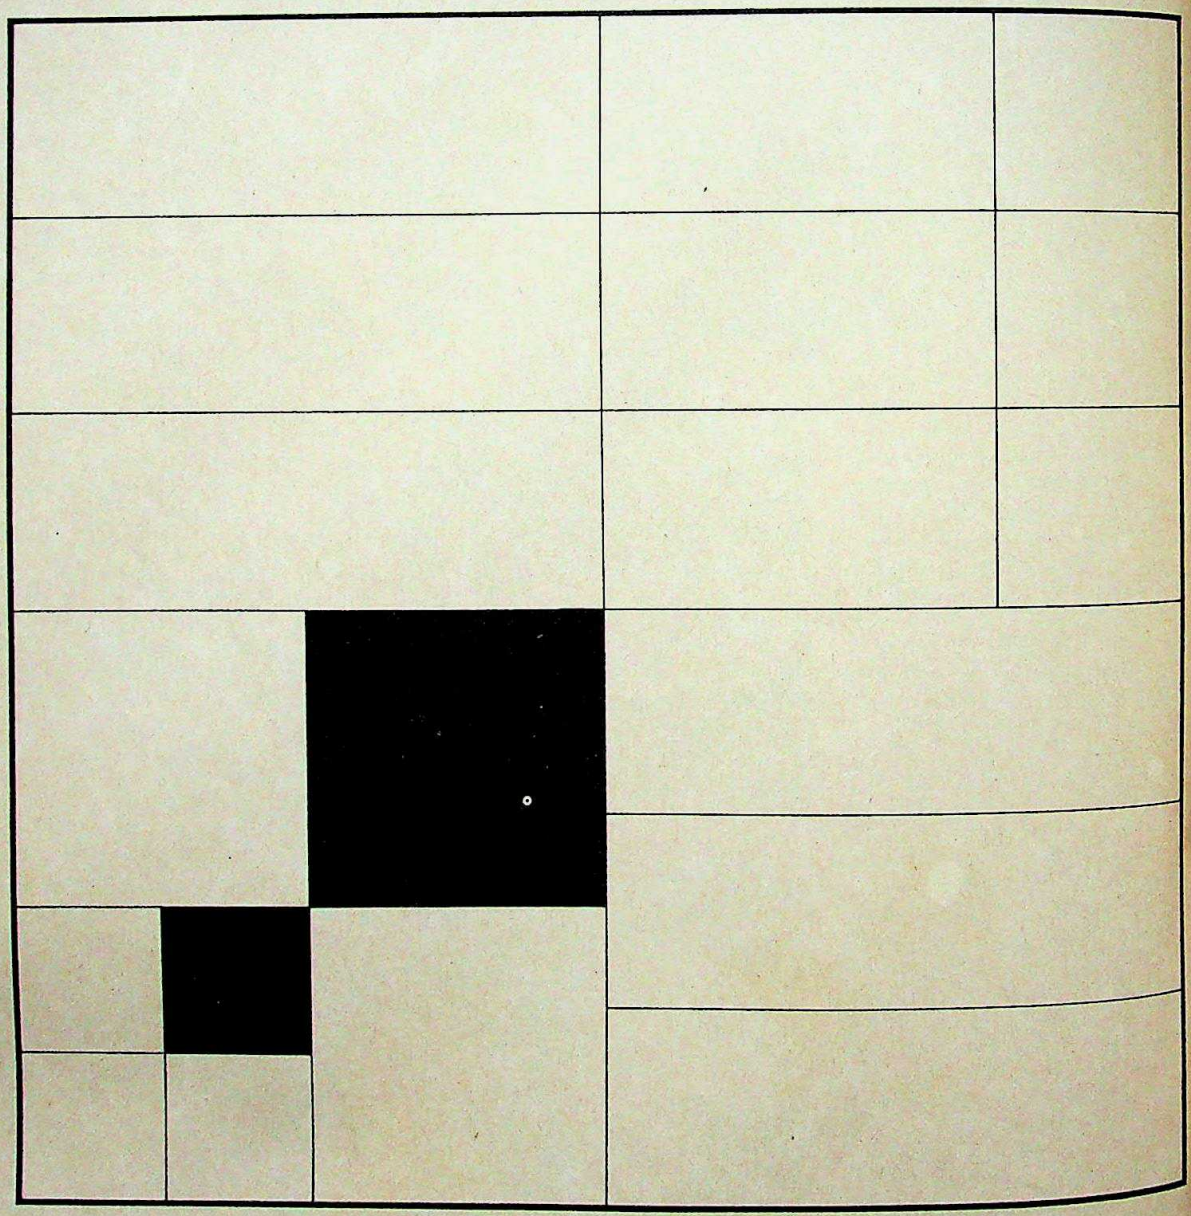
IPCL introduces LLDPE. A cost-effective plastic material that abides by a modern maxim :



Less is more .

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Linear Low Density Polyethylene.

You'll soon be seeing more and more of it.

Because compared to LDPE, it has an improved puncture resistance, improved tensile and impact properties, and higher stiffness.

So you can use less of LLDPE to get a product of a strength comparable to LDPE.

And thereby cut down material costs. You can blend LLDPE with LDPE to reduce the thickness of packaging film, by 20 to 30%. Without sacrificing strength.

What's more, LLDPE enhances environmental stress crack resistance (ESCR) so a detergent powder can stay longer in the shelf without weakening the pack.

LLDPE also improves the sealability of the film. That means faster packaging per minute and reduced leakages of milk in cold storage.

LLDPE can be injection or blow moulded to make a host of products that offer improved rigidity and gloss. Not to mention reduced warpage.

Further, LLDPE can be rotomoulded to make superior products because of its better mechanical strength and stress-free mouldability.

IPCL's commitment

IPCL is the largest producer of thermoplastics in the country. With a distribution network to match: 63 outlets across the length and breadth of India.

In addition to LDPE, PP (homopolymers) and PVC from its own production, IPCL now offers new thermoplastics – PP Block Copolymers and PP Random Copolymers through imports. It's part of their commitment to the plastic industry.

So if you're a manufacturer, processor, end-user of plastics, or an entrepreneur setting out on a new venture, call IPCL for a cost-effective solution.

There's a modern maxim that demands it:

Less of LLDPE. More of savings.

IPCL

INDIAN PETROCHEMICALS CORPORATION LIMITED.

(A Govt. of India Undertaking)
P.O. Petrochemicals, Dist. Vadodara, Gujarat-391 346.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CENSOR BOARD

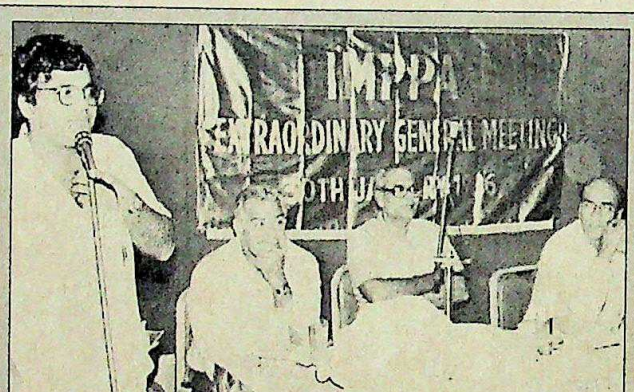
Cutting Charges

LIKE brown sugar vendors dispensing larger and larger doses of the drug, Bombay's film producers have specialised in recent years in including more and more scenes of sex and violence in their films. What stands between them and the audience's seemingly insatiable appetite for blood and gore is the Central Board of Film Certification, known more commonly as the Censor Board. Last fortnight, the film producers finally decided that they had had enough. From February 3, the All India Film Producers' Council (AIFPC), the apex body of Bombay's three film producers' associations, boycotted the Censor Board and stopped sending films for certification.

A delegation of the AIFPC, led by President Ramraj Nahta, rushed to New Delhi for a meeting with Union Human Resource Development Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao where they wanted the censors censured. The producers, accompanied by Congress(I) MP Amitabh Bachchan (two of whose films, Mard and Inquilab, have recently faced censor trouble), submitted a memorandum to the minister and demanded the immediate replacement of Censor Board Chairman Bikram Singh, a respected film critic and former editor of Filmfare, "preferably by someone from the film industry itself". The producers complained of delays by the Censor Board in clearing films, discrimination between one commercial film and another, excessive cuts and too many "A" certificates.

"Every second feature film is a victim of censor trouble today," Nahta said after his meeting with Rao. "The guidelines given by the Government are vague and are interpreted any way the Censor Board likes. Some films have been issued "U" certificates (for universal viewing) and some others with similar contents have been given "UA" or "A" certificates."

Ideally, the film producers would like the Government to scrap censorship altogether. Till such time, they want the board to be made autonomous with a majority of the members and the chairman from the film industry itself. But most of all, they want the dismissal of Singh. "He is biased against commercial cinema," Nahta said. "But for art films he has different standards. See how Party was even shown on TV, all the girls drinking, smoking."



Nahta (centre) at IMPPA meeting

Ideally, the film producers are against censorship itself. But most of all, they are against Singh, whom they accuse of bias.

Bikram Singh

"I am anti-bad cinema, pro-good cinema," Bikram Singh maintained, when contacted by INDIA TODAY. "The producers themselves have quarrelled with the distinction between commercial and art cinema. Now that it suits them they are making the distinction." Singh pointed out that over 25 per cent of the 912 films cleared by the censors last year included scenes of rape or gang rape. When such films are given "A" certificates the producers protest because they complain that those days are gone when "A" films fetched a good price".

Any protest by a producer invariably leads to repeated viewings of films at various levels of the censorship process. This can cause delays, but Singh emphasised that roughly 75 per cent of the films are cleared within 15 days at the Censor Board offices in the country. However, about 90 per cent of the films cleared by the initial examining committee, selected from a panel of critics, eminent citizens, without the chairman or other members of the board seeing the films. "In this way lots of films have been cleared, to the embarrassment of the board," Singh added.

The crunch came because of Singh's decision to tamper with three films, Chameli ki Shaadi from Prakash Mehra's unit; Aurat produced by Dhirendra Bohra and Main Chup Nahin Rahungi by I.M. Kunnu. Their main crime: to excise the scenes of sex or violence in films like Awaaz, Ram Teri Ganga Maili, Saagar or Arjun as precedents set by Singh himself to allow the new crop to go scathed. As one film producer argued, what has been allowed in films earlier should be acceptable to the censors, otherwise producers will always be in the dock. Prakash Mehra, whose film directed by Basu Chatterji was cleared recently after a few minor cuts, was vehement in his criticism of the board: "The kind of cuts demanded by the censors are very silly and stupid."

Bohra's Aurat is one film devoted to the theme of a woman's revenge against rapists and killers. Zeenat Aman plays the victim-turned-avenging angel who, subjected to a 10-minute rape on the screen by real-life husband Mazhar Khan), shoots the gang leader Sadashiv Amrapurkar dead and figures in an inconclusive court trial at the end of the film.

The Censor Board examining committee recommended that the film should be given any certificate. Bikram Singh referred it to the revising committee which came to the same conclusion. The producer submitted a revised version after deleting 407 feet from the film. A second examining committee upheld the original decision. At this stage, instead of submitting the film for a second revising committee, the producer decided to appeal to the appellate tribunal, a newly-formed body headed by retired Judge Vyas Dev Mishra. After three viewings and 11 cuts, the tribunal gave an "A" certificate to

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...But before a certificate could be ...ued, the ministry called for the film ...der Section 6 C of the Cinematograph ...t. The agitated producer is now await... the ministry's decision.

...Maficha Sakshidar, a Marathi film ...ed on the gruesome Abhyankar-Joshi ...rders by Rajendra Jakal's gang in ...ne, has been through the grind. The ...e is now being heard in the high court. This is not the first time that producers ...e been up in arms against Singh. ...chchan had earlier crossed swords ...h him for his refusal to clear Inquilab, a ...ghtakingly gory film, without cuts ...t would have crippled it at the box-...es. At that time, Bachchan had con...ded that both Inquilab and Ardh Satya, ...film acclaimed by critics, had the same ...ry line and violence on "comparable ...les", but Singh had been "partial" ...ards Ardh Satya. It was Bachchan's ...werful lobbying at the Centre which ...s believed to have cleared Inquilab.

However, Singh is fiery in his con...mnation of the "makers of B-movies" ...o want to make a fast buck by showing ...pes and gang-rapes" in the guise of ...emingly feminist films. But the industry ...arges that his concern is largely mis...ced, particularly because he had ...ooked the other way" when both Raj ...poor and Manmohan Desai got away ...h equally prurient scenes in their ...ent block-busters, Ram Teri Ganga ...ili and Mard. Surprisingly, both the ...ms were awarded "U" certificates.

While the board is under attack by Bombay's film producers for excessive censorship, film critics have been pulling up the censors for displaying too liberal an attitude toward sex and violence. "Already what the censors are allowing is too much," said Iqbal Masud, film critic of the Indian Express. "The board should apply stricter standards."

Masud, who had just been to a press preview of Dev Anand's Hum Naujawan, granted a "U" certificate, spoke of a scene from the film that would have been "disallowed even in a country like Britain": an attempted rape of a 13-year-old girl is shown, and though the rape fails the camera dwells on the girl's underwear being pulled down slowly. "How can such scenes involving young girls be shown?" Masud asked. "The film producers are only trying to blackmail the Government with this boycott. Let censorship be withdrawn. I am sure a hundred petitions will be filed by people in court against the vulgarity and violence in these films."

Uncensored scenes from Saagar and Ram Teri; (below, from left) scenes from Main Chhup, Aurat and Chameli

Bombay's film producers, though, are in no mood to listen to the critics. Posters were put up in Bombay recently, attacking the Censor Board: "Censors and cancer both are deadly. Kill delays before you kill films." Nahta said after the meeting with Narasimha Rao that the producers' delegation was assured by the minister that the complaints would be examined and the Government's decision conveyed to them in a week's time. Until then the producers plan to stay away from the Censor Board offices on Bombay's Malabar Hill, and will presumably use the time for actually thinking up many more gory scenes for the continuing saga of sex and violence.

—M. RAHMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Subtle Magic

PLANS FOR DEPARTURE
by NAYANTARA SAHGAL Sahgal: W.W. Norton & Co.
Price: $14.95; Pages: 216

IF YOU take the milieu of The Jewel in the Crown back by about three decades, put in a couple of clergymen instead of the surfeit of barrack-room types, and substitute the action in the popular television serial with the right dose of politico-theological debate that one would associate with a Graham Greene in his 70s, you have come pretty close to the mythical Himapur of Nayantara Sahgal's seventh novel. But coming close is not getting right there. For Plans for Departure, though purported to blend easily with the burgeoning Raj mania of today, has the reflective hallmark of a novel of ideas so prominently upfront that it will perhaps never make it to the fast-selling shelves of book stores.

Yet this is the most authoritative novel to have come out of Sahgal, certainly more so than her 1985 Sinclair Prize-winning Rich Like Us, which bases itself on something as recent as the 1975-77 hiccup in Indian democracy and yet seems little more than dated journalism. On the contrary, Plans, which goes back to a British-India on which the First World War had just begun to cast its shadow, somehow retains the unfailing magic by which superior literature always pickles history, never allowing it to go stale. District magistrate Henry Brewster; his estranged wife Stella; American missionary Marlowe Croft and his loudmouthed British wife; Sir Nitin Basu, the botanist; Anna Hansen, the visitor from Denmark—Sahgal's novel is populated, it seems, not just by characters who had once ruled India, or were ruled, but by ideas in constant conversation among themselves or within themselves. If she has sacrificed on drama in the process, she has made up for it with some of the most absorbing depiction of characters in conflict with themselves who disintegrate under their own weights.

Though the backdrop of Plans is Indian, its inner moral churnings are all rooted in pre-1914 Europe. The characters are mere fugitives from there, acting out their obsessions in the nowhere district of Himapur, the sylvan tranquillity of which is only occasionally shattered by the distant thunder of terrorist bombings and the news of Khudiram's hanging. But it is no longer the contented world of the early colonisers, heady with the belief that the sun would not set on the empire. Instead, Sahgal draws into her novel two sets of characters—the likes of Brewster, a bureaucrat torn by self-doubt, and Croft, whose Christian faith in a just society gets rudely jolted when it comes into conflict with the policy of "non-interference" on which the noble queen proclaimed to found the empire. At the centre of the mosaic is Anna Hansen, Sahgal's unconventional heroine, a feminist born "ahead of her times".

Sahgal: ringside viewer

The year is 1914, and there are storm signals in the distant Balkans which will before long change the destiny of British India. In dealing with such tempestuous times as in Plans, any minor novelist would have unrolled a bonanza of historical allusions. But Sahgal's brush-strokes are gentle, subtle, inward-turned. A report here of Tilak being released from Mandalay jail, a hint there of the Labour Party being born. Sahgal spells out the period in discreet understatements.

She burrows into the soul instead and peels off the genteel facade to capture the irrational instincts buried underneath. And the results of the excavation are revealed largely through the eyes of Anna Hansen, the contemplative Nordic, who chances upon some startling finds in a forest glade that throw a sudden and uncomfortable—almost blinding—light on the mysterious disappearance of Brewster's wife nine months earlier and the accidental death of Croft's termagant wife, Lulu.

The strongly possible murders, and the cover-up, shatter Anna's implicit trust in the other, the more agreeable face of colonialism, and bring to a halt a developing relationship with Brewster, the prime suspect. On that very evening, the wires bring the news of Austria declaring war on Serbia, and a tormented Anna, unable to find the answer to any of her questions, makes plans for departure, to a continent already engulfed in war.

The 58-year-old Sahgal, who as Vijayalakshmi Pandit's daughter and Jawaharlal Nehru's niece often had a ringside view of history, is naturally better equipped than many of her peers in India and elsewhere, to delve into the psyche of the men who ran the empire. But what boggles the mind is her cold, almost surgical wit, and her sleuth-like eye for realistic detail. When her characters bare their souls, they shoot off in wild tangents into the world of Fabian socialists and suffragettes. But, when she has to describe the probable scene of a murder, the details of the faint footprints that lead through berrybushes to the edge of a precipice in a glade come to life as in a police report. No wonder that she studied literature in the United States with Vladimir Nabokov, the supreme craftsman of the novel who once drew pages of diagrams and lectured his students to forcefully prove that the insect in Kafka's story, Metamorphosis, was a beetle and not a cockroach.

—SUMIT MITRA

EXCERPT

"So you believe Brewster murdered his wife," he established.

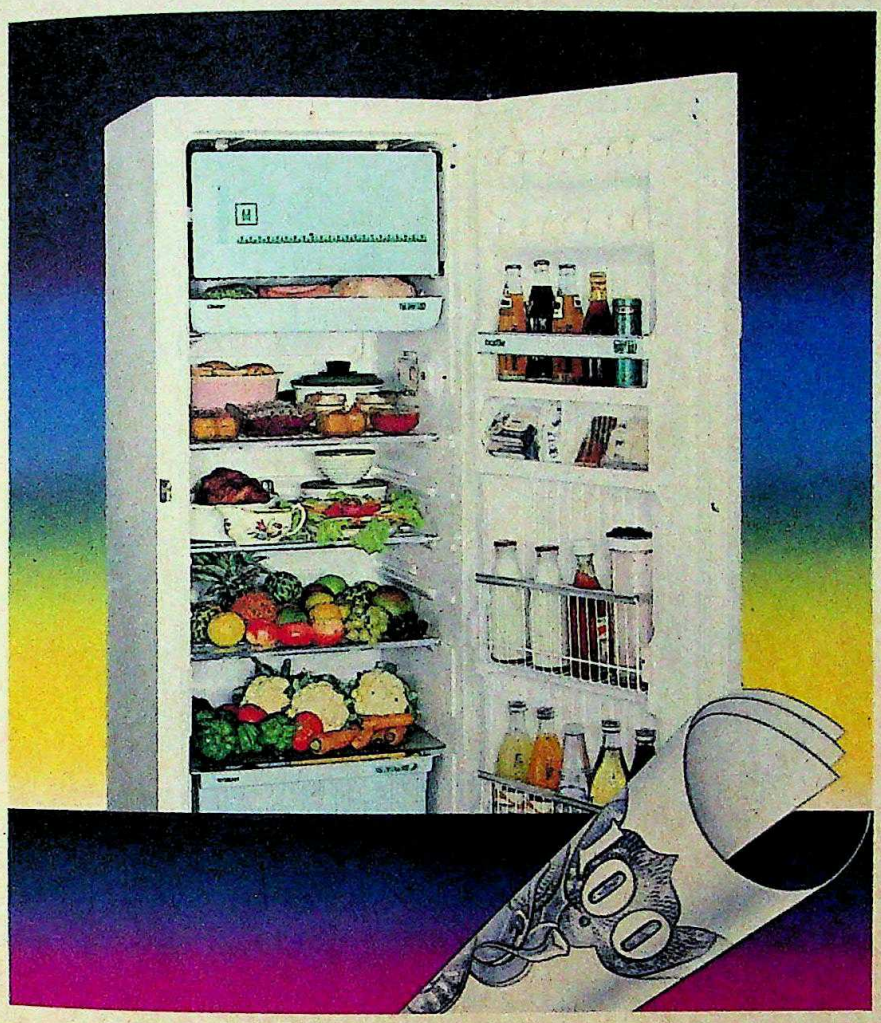
Anna was taken completely unawares by the depth of her distress, and the resilient, haunting power of what Henry had done. Even Sir Nitin had actually not spelt it out in those relentless words. Anna had skirted the horror herself...

Nicholas said with regret, "It's unlikely the law can catch up with him now, more's the pity. Still, bodies don't disappear. Murders have come to light many years after the event. But what happened to your infallible instinct, Anna? Didn't that tell you something about the man?"

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The best things in life are worth a little more



Japanese technology builds a lifetime's efficiency into Allwyn refrigerators.

Unmatched trouble-free service. Unbeatable performance. Smooth, silent efficiency.

That's the new Allwyn 2000 SL series of refrigerators for you, backed by the confident guarantee of Japanese technology.

A compressor made under licence from Hitachi sets the pace ... for smooth, silent operation.

The unique Roll Bond freezer offers "super-cooling" in double-quick time.

Allwyn consumes 10% less power. It is designed to operate on 170 to 250 volts. No need for a voltage stabiliser.

A self-draining system makes for easy defrosting.

Allwyn comes in 85, 165 and 300 litres single door models; and 165, 300 and 380 litres double door models, giving you the freedom of choice — by design.

Finally, a life-time of instant service. Available from the largest network of dealers throughout the country.

And that is yet another reason why ...

IS:1476

7 YEAR GUARANTEE

ALLWYN

2000 S L REFRIGERATORS

UNDER LICENCE FROM HITACHI

An Allwyn is for always

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

MAA(S) ALN 8A 85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The equestrian masterpiece by Verrocchio at Venice has been found quietly gazing at the sea 30 kilometres north-east of Puri

Superbly massive stre surpassing e grandeur of t
grace of mov
just one exa passion that brought to th
Sun Temple a Verrocchio's pose.

Konarak,
perhaps one achievement architecture.
engineers th
few Indian m handled their iron and ston
as much eas counterparts
They wonder built with ston ge of mortar
by a system
They wonder

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Superbly monumental in its massive strength, vigour and surpassing even the Homeric grandeur of the Elgin marbles in its grace of movement, this horse is just one example of the fire and passion that Indian sculptors brought to the black granite of the Sun Temple at Konarak. Only Verrocchio's masterpiece comes close.

Konarak, even in its ruins, is perhaps one of the grandest achievements of India's temple architecture. Today, architects and engineers the world over wonder how Indian master-masons handled their colossal beams of iron and stone in A.D.1238-64 with as much ease as their modern counterparts put up pine rafters. They wonder how the temple was built with stone blocks without the use of mortar, held together simply by a system of poise and balance. They wonder and so will you.

Come to Konarak where Kalinga sculptors' chisels have written the most lavish invitation for you in the shifting sands of time. An invitation immortalised in granite. A granite that will melt your heart.

Konarak can be reached by road from both Bhubaneswar and Puri. Three-seater planes can also be chartered from the Orissa Flying Club.

You can stay in Bhubaneswar at ITDC's Travellers' Lodge or OTDC's Panthnivas and other hotels.

Discover India
Discover yourself

Department of Tourism
Government of India

For more information about travelling in India, write to any one of our Regional Offices at:

BOMBAY
123 M.K. Road, Churchgate,
Bombay-400 020.

CALCUTTA
'Embassy', 4 Shakespeare Sarani,
Calcutta-700 071.

DELHI
88 Janpath, New Delhi- 110 001.

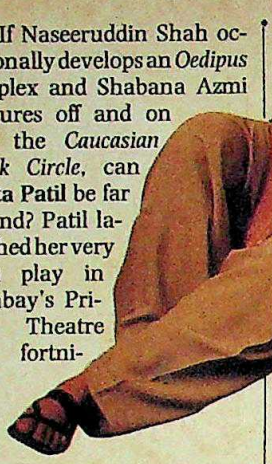
MADRAS
154 Anna Salai, Madras-600 002.

In India you'll see the world.

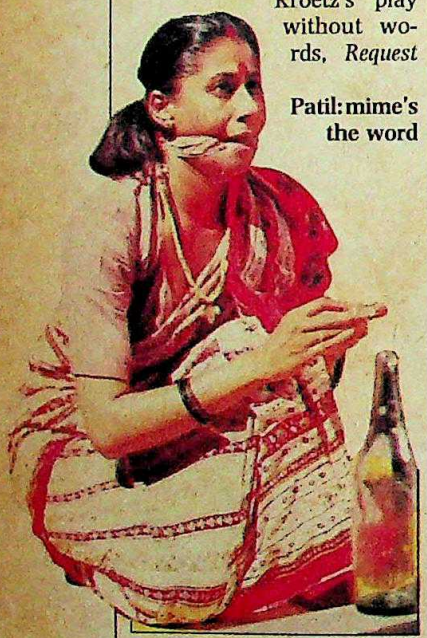
CC-0. In Public Domain. Sarabhai Kasturbhai Collection, Ahmedabad

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

◆ If Naseeruddin Shah occasionally develops an Oedipus complex and Shabana Azmi ventures off and on into the Caucasian Chalk Circle, can Smita Patil be far behind? Patil launched her very own play in Bombay's Prithvi Theatre last fortnight, titled Aap ki Farmaish. The play, of course, has nothing to do with Jhumritallaiya—or even Vividh Bharati for that matter. It is director Alyque Padamsee's adaptation of German playwright Franz Xaver Kroetz's play without words, Request Concert, and is all about the humdrum existence of an average middle class housewife. "I honestly had the guts to take up this play because it is totally experimental theatre," says Patil, who did on stage what she has already done on screen anyway—playing an ornery, next-door Plain Jane. But the actress claims: "To me it didn't feel like theatre; it was the problem I was attracted to. In the play, I'm just communicating." Patil, however, feels



Patil: mime's the word



HARI OM GULATI

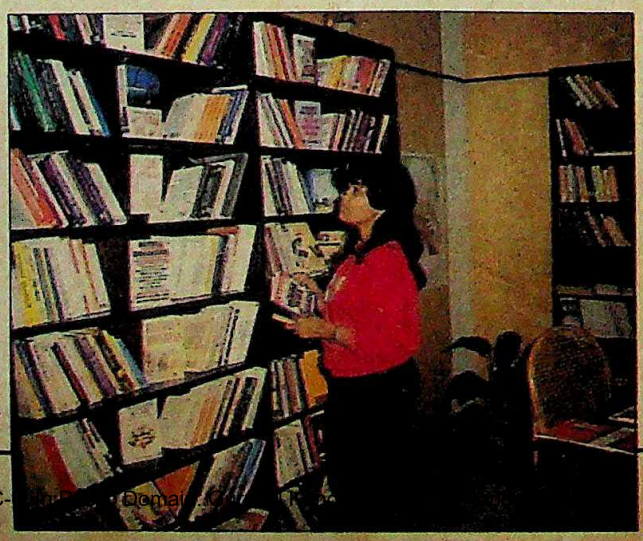
Khan and Kulpowicz: meeting point the play belongs to the pavements. "It's not meant for a normal audience. It should be performed as a street play."

◆ Shujaat Khan, 25, dark and chubby, lives in Delhi and Slawomir Kulpowicz, 32, lean and light-eyed, lives in Warsaw. And there's perfect tuning between the two. Their meeting point is "the similarity between Indian classical music and jazz", proof of which is the joint disc they released last fortnight and the concerts they'll be giving soon in Delhi. Khan is an established classical sitarist and Kulpowicz is a jazz pianist. They met at the 1978 Jazz Yatra in Bombay, and ever since they have been trying to create "something new, something different—a music that appeals to the masses". It's not fusion and it's not a blend, Khan claims. "We are not trying to bring the two kinds of music together," he says. "We simply play. He does his own thing and I do my own. We work on the theme of the composition and try to make it sound beautiful and harmonious." Kulpowicz prefers to call it "synthesis". "It's both experiment and improvisation," he says, "and all we want is a sound result."

◆ It's a sight to gladden the heart of a Germaine Greer: roof-to-floor shelves lined with fire-breathing titles (The Hidden Face of Eve, The Sceptical Feminist, etcetera) and a staff and clientele made up of feminists only. Tucked away in Bangalore, Streelekha—the nation's first feminist bookshop—is the baby of the Society for Informal Education and Development Studies and it is being midwifed by Donna Fernandes, Judith Morey and six other sisters in the cause. "We thought it wasn't enough to just shout about dowry deaths and all that; so we decided to support the movement with books," says Fernandes, while Morey adds: "And we made it commercially viable." Which indeed is a lot to write home about.



Streelekha: woman's own

◆ He wrote one book and put all midnight's children to shame. And like other Indo-Anglicans, he did not have to walk Hampstead Heath for inspiration either. Amitav Ghosh, 30, earthy and boyishly good-looking, simply sat in his bachelor-digs barsaati and invented some prose that had all the makings of a contemporary classic. So when The Circle of Reason, his first novel, was released last fortnight in London, it made lolling litterateurs sit up and wipe their bi-focals. The technique

Ghosh: pen magic is new, the metaphors unbelievable, and the pace builds up like a bara khayal. The story is about some people who set out to find their earthly Utopia and fail. A lecturer in the Delhi School of Economics, Ghosh is himself surprised at his sudden upward climb on the literary ladder. But as he says in his Circle: "No one can reckon for chance."

—Compiled by MOHAMMED ASLAM

CC-[illegible] Domain. [illegible]

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

12972

12971

12970

12969

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Paying the Price

Recent increases in the price of essential commodities have highlighted the oppressive squeeze of inflation on the common man. People have devised unusual ways of coping, but inflation has taken a heavy toll of the Government and the economy.

COVER STORY 74

Avoiding A Showdown

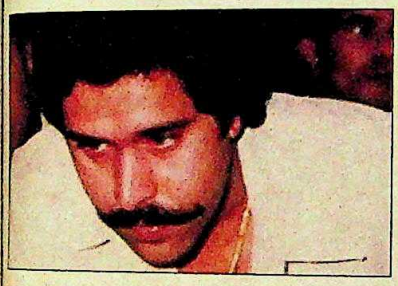
The pendulum in Punjab continued to swing between the extremists and the state Government as the success of the sarbat khalsa in Anandpur Sahib was neutralised by the defiant occupation of the Golden Temple by militants.

CURRENT EVENTS 26

The Endangered Accord

The two-month-old AGP Government in Assam finds itself in a mellowed mood, chastened by the difficulties in implementing the accord and extremist challenge that, unless handled properly, could take Assam the way of Punjab.

SPECIAL REPORT 64



The Mystery Unfolds

Coordinated goverment action has interestingly uncovered vital evidence that could finally start the process of unravelling the mystery surrounding the controversial Shaw Wallace share deal with Vijay Mallya's United Breweries.

BUSINESS 86

Hitting New Highs

Heroin addiction in India is fast acquiring the dimensions of an epidemic. The dramatic rise in addicts in the last few years is worrying doctors and psychiatrists, faced with an abject lack of facilities for rehabilitation and treatment.

SPECIAL REPORT 118

The New Awakening

Hindustani classical music, after decades of dormancy, is finally breaking through the commercial barrier and gaining popular acceptance. A number of factors have contributed to the new awakening of interest amongst all sections.

THE ARTS 152

CONTENTS

COMMENT 11
CAPITALOOK 12
VOICES 18
INDIANOTES 23
CURRENT EVENTS
Punjab: Avoiding A Showdown 26
Tamil Nadu: Reversal of Roles 32
Kerala: In Limbo 37
Congress(I): Salvage Operation 38
The Muslims: Anger and Hurt 40
ft. Parthasarathi: The Resignation Story 44
Hyderabad: Divisive Poll 49
Karnataka: Back to Business 50
Bihar: Dissident Drama 55
Bihar: Plateau of Terror 56
Rajasthan: Dream Canal 61
SPECIAL REPORT
Assam: The Endangered Accord 64
STATENOTES 73
COVER STORY
Inflation: Paying the Price 74
TRADE WINDS 85
BUSINESS
Mallya: The Mystery Unfolds 86
Backward Areas: Reverse Gear 93
Tax Raids: Tightening the Bonds 96
Businesspeak: Crossed Wires 97
Inland Container Service: The Derailed Depot 98
Sportswear: Getting into Stride 105
The Economy Monitor 111
The Markets: Blue Mood 112
AVIATION
Vayudoot: Taking Off 117
SPECIAL REPORT
Heroin Addiction: Hitting New Highs 118
GLOBE TROTTING
United Kingdom: Making News 124
NEIGHBOURS
Sri Lanka: The Secret War 129
SPORTS
Hockey: New Goals 135
SPECIAL FEATURE
Pesticides Industry: Poisonous Growth 136 LIVING
Ahmedabad: Dangerous Moves 143
BOOKS
Inner Sphere 149
THE ARTS
Classical Music: The New Awakening 152
Sixth Triennale-India: A Confused Picture 158
EYE CATCHERS 160

Cover Illustration by AJIT NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When the Indian Navy wanted high-tech electronics for their training aids, they chose Keltron. That's right, Keltron! The people who make your television set.

That's not high fashion. Not high flying claims. That's just hard facts.

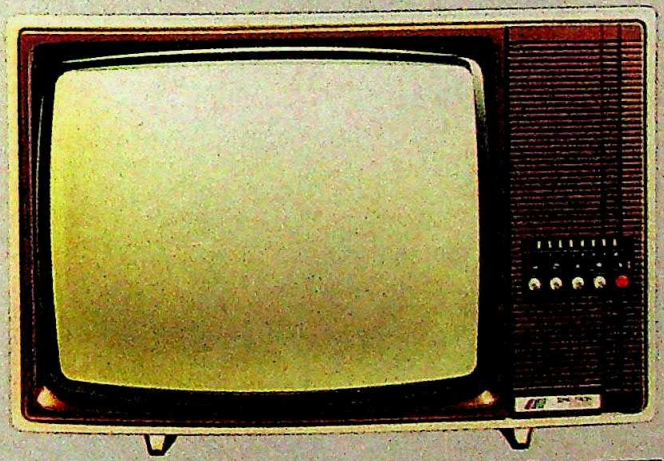
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Most people get taken in when buying a television set. Taken in by high-flying technical jargon. Or they get their heads turned by a good looking cabinet and dazzling full-colour life style. But a TV set has nothing to do with frills. Or with claims. It's only as good as its heart. And the heart of a television set is high technology.

Keltron makes no claims. It quotes its history. A history of high-tech electronics in national areas. Space Research, Atomic Energy, Doordarshan, the Asian Games, the Defence Services. That same high-tech goes into our television sets. Proof? The Electronic Components Association names Keltron the best television set made in India. And Keltron TV's failure rate is 0.05%... the lowest in the country.

So when you're out looking for a colour TV set, don't get taken in by jargon. And don't let good looks turn your head. Don't settle for a manufacturer's claims. Ask for the record.



KELTRON TV

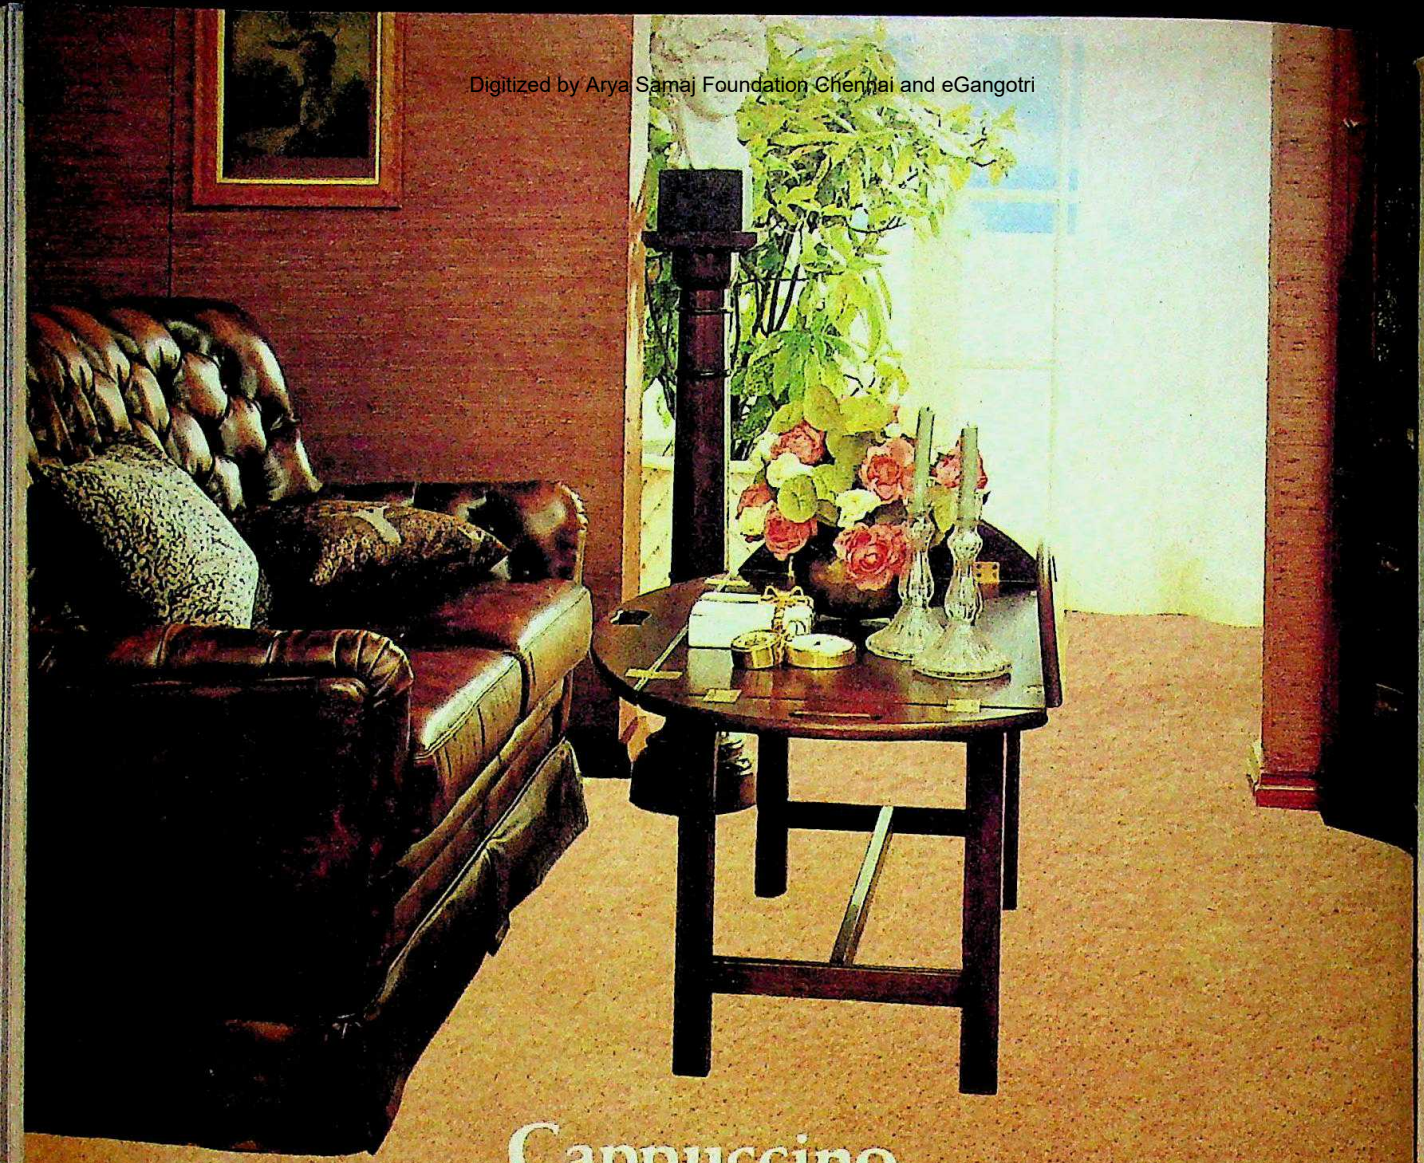
Hard core, high-tech. No frills, no fuss.

Kerala State Electronics Development Corporation Limited, Consumer Electronics Division, Sasthamangalam, Trivandrum-695 010 Phone: 63106

BRANCHES: • Bombay Phone: 4927448 • Bhopal Phone: 66354 • Madras Phone: 452310 • Madurai Phone: 43746 • Calcutta Phone: 245654 • Gauhati Phone: 31541 • Delhi Phone: 562602 • Hyderabad Phone: 63786 • Vizag • Bangalore Phone: 564492 • Ahmedabad Phone: 463664 • Trivandrum Phone: 60241 • Cochin Phone: 354560 • Also sales-service facilities available in all major towns.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Cappuccino...
a creation from Transasia—
the fashion house of carpets

Woolmark
(वूलमार्क)

PURE NEW WOOL PILE

Woolmark. The internationally recognised symbol guaranteeing the matchless qualities of pure new wool—exceptional durability and easy maintenance, looks that last for years and rich colours that never fade.

TRANSASIA

TransAsia Carpets

In collaboration with Bosner of West Germany.

CC-0. Mumukshu Bhawan Varanasi Collection. Digitized by eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

VOLUME XI NUMBER 5
FOR THE FORTNIGHT MARCH 1-15, 1986

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

MANAGING EDITOR — SUMAN DUBEY
SENIOR EDITOR — T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR — RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR — INDERJIT BADHWAR
ASSOCIATE EDITOR — DILIP BOBB
ASSISTANT EDITORS — PRABHU CHAWLA, AJAY KUMAR

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS — RAMINDAR SINGH, SUMIT MITRA
NEW DELHI — SHEKHAR GUPTA, PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI, RAJ CHENGAPPA
AHMEDABAD — RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE — SRINIVASA PRASAD
BOMBAY — M. RAHMAN, JAGANNATH DUBASHI
CALCUTTA — INDRANIL BANERJIE
CHANDIGARH — GOBIND THUKRAL
HYDERABAD — AMARNATH K. MENON
JAIPUR — SREEKANT KHANDEKAR
MADRAS — S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA — FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM — SREEDHAR PILLAI

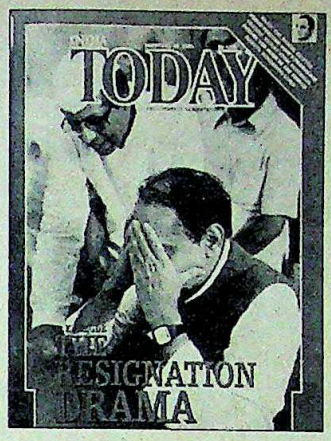
NEW YORK — MADHU TREHAN
LONDON — RAMESH CHANDRAN

NEWS COORDINATOR — RADHIKA ROY
DESIGN CONSULTANT — AUROBIND PATEL
CHIEF OF PRODUCTION — SHIRLEY JOSHUA, ANURADHA KAPOOR
COPY DESK — ANUPAMA GOPAL, SIMRAN BHARGAVA, ANN NINAN
CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER — BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHER — PRAMOD PUSHKARNA
CARTOONIST — AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER — B.K. SHARMA
LAYOUT ARTISTS — LOKESH BHARGAVA, ANUP GUPTA, PEALI DUTTA GUPTA
MARKETING DIRECTOR — MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY — GEORGE SEBASTIAN
DELHI — NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA — MEERA PAUL
MADRAS — R. ANAND
BANGALORE — ANITA BAVEJA
GENERAL MANAGER — CHANDER RAI

• EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-40 CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI • SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT, POST BOX 69, FARIDABAD HARYANA • TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER, F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIRCLE NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-4724 INTO IN • ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2026535. TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BOMBAY • 13-K CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 312841, 323970, 321776. TELEX: 31-5308 THOM IN. CABLES: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI • PAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188,477770 CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS • 74/1ST. MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 568448, 579037, 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BANGALORE • 12C EVEREST 46C CHOWRINGHEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445398, 447726. CABLE: LIVMEDIA, CALCUTTA • COPYRIGHT 1984 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA • INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKES RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL •



A PRINCIPLED POLITICIAN

The dramatic resignation of Ramakrishna Hegde had indeed jolted the nation ("The Resignation Drama", February 28). It was a magnanimous and statesmanlike gesture on his part to have relinquished office following the Karnataka High Court's judgement regarding the arrack bottling contract case. Would any of our power-hungry politicians do what Hegde has done? This sets him apart from other politicians.

Many may gibe at Hegde's resignation as a pre-planned gimmick, but he only heeded to the appeals of the people and his partymen and decided to continue as the chief minister.

Bangalore — K. CHIDANAND KUMAR

■ The high-level soap opera in Karnataka highlights the shallowness of our political stalwarts. Is the Janata Party like the old Mughal empire where the sudden exit of the emperor was irreplaceable and led to chaos? The sycophants backed by weak leaders of the party have led a docile chief minister back to the chair and they will, in course of time, demand their pound of flesh.

Lucknow — S.K. MUSHRAN

■ Unlike the previous two occasions, Hegde's decision to quit office was, in fact, ill-conceived as no government can actually function if it has to resign every time an executive order is challenged by a court of law. Knowing fully well that the Janata Party has no real alternative, he was re-voted as the leader. The whole episode in Karnataka may prove suicidal if repeated in future.

Noida — J.R. LAROIYA

MATTER OF LUCK?

"Going Down Under" (February 28) provided a good insight into the Benson & Hedges series. It cannot be said that we lost the series due to lack of astute captaincy and high-level coordination. We have depended far too much on luck and the toss, rather than on talent. We have good potential, but what we lack is the calculated and confident approach to the matches.

Bangalore — T.S. SHANKARAN

IN THE DARK

I fully endorse your views made in the Comment ("Projection Perils", February 28) on the Doordarshan's reportage of public response to the recent price hike. The state-controlled medium reproduced the Government's own attitude of wanting to insulate itself from the opinion of the masses. The state believes that the general public save some dissenting groups would given time reconcile themselves to what are momentary hardships. Doordarshan wants to keep the people in the dark and does not want to use the medium to enlighten and discuss.

New Delhi — SUBHAASHINI SHVETAAMBARAN

CAREFUL CHOICE

Rajiv Gandhi's "Formula for Efficiency" (February 28) is welcome. But choosing a new council from those "who have built up considerable reputation in their fields" seems fallacious. Our country has had an abundance of scientific talent which has either been smothered or has taken refuge in the West. Heads of establishments who have achieved pre-eminence have generally done so by repelling all talent and by collecting dwarfs around them. The Government should choose those who attracted good talent below them, and shun those who as scientific heads developed considerable reputations for themselves. Or else we may find delivered into the 21st century, not the country's research, but the council itself!

New Delhi — RAJIV BAJAJ

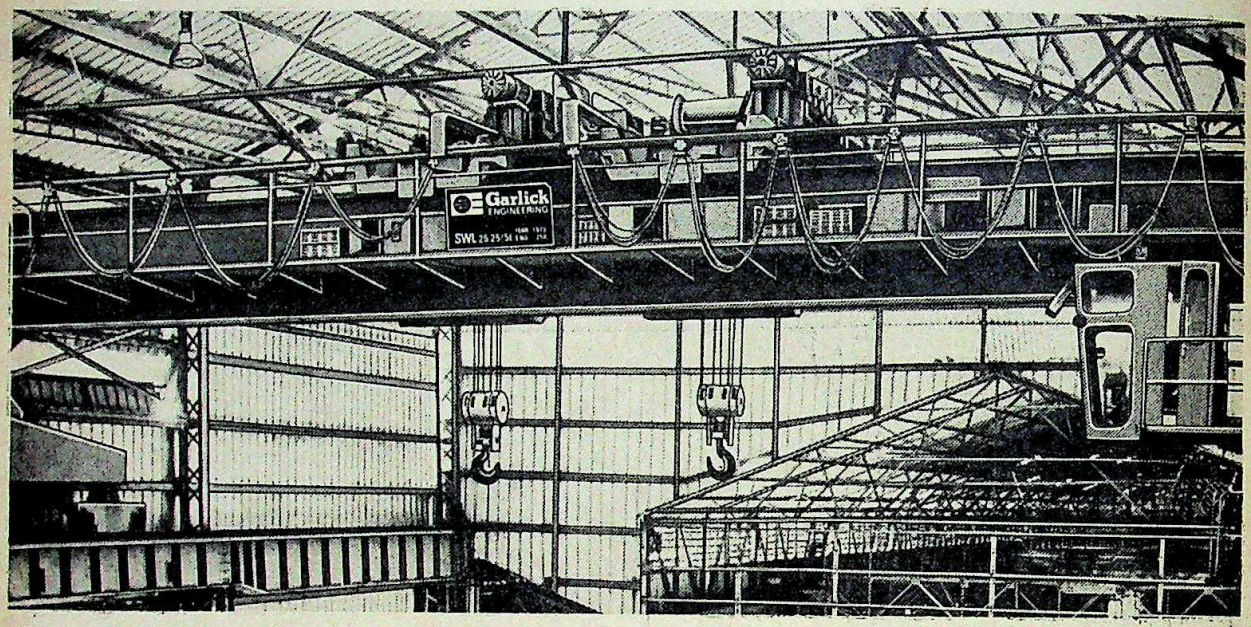
LENIENT APPROACH

There is no denying the fact that the state Government as well as the Central Government have become too complacent with regard to the extremist presence in the state ("Capture of the Temple", February 15). The SGPC has been truly ousted by the Damdami Taksal and its leader Mohkam Singh seems even more terrifying than the redoubtable Bhindranwale. At this stage

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Another enterprise of
Empire Industries



Garlick Engineering

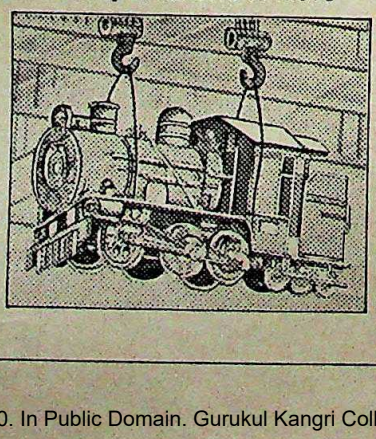
From 5 to 300 tonnes capacity, our cranes are lifting the economy as they move vast quantities of material.

In the private sector today, Garlick Engineering is the acknowledged leader in the crane manufacturing field. The biggest and the best. As the pioneers of the concept of mono-box and duo-box E.O.T. cranes in India, Garlick's manufacturing capacities run high—into steel mill duty cranes, thyristor control cranes and more. Cranes that are helping steel mills, power houses, railway yards and other medium and heavy industries to move materials more efficiently.

Of course Empire Industries Ltd. are doing a lot more than dealing in cranes. Their manufacturing and marketing operations cover additional areas of Machine Tools, Instruments and Instrumentation Systems, Finance, Glass and Textiles.

The other enterprises of Empire Industries Ltd:

Empire Machine Tools, Empire Instrumentation, Empire Finance Co. Ltd., Vitrum Glass and Empire Dyeing.



Garlick
ENGINEERING

AN ENTERPRISE OF

EMPIRE INDUSTRIES LIMITED

Empire Industries Ltd.
414, Senapati Bapat Marg,
Lower Parel, Bombay-400 013.
Phone: 4922701-03; 4922804
Cable: GARLICK
Telex: 011-73888 (EMPR IN)

Where Excellence Leads

6370

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the Government cannot afford to repose, it must act intelligently and quickly before the situation is blown out of proportion.

SAMEER N. SHAH
Cochin

■ Chief Minister Barnala must be the most worried man today. The people of Punjab gave him a massive mandate against the terrorists and a golden opportunity to isolate and eliminate the extremists, which has been lost due to the Akali Dal's inner contradictions. The ill-advised policy of being soft towards the terrorists has finally boomeranged.

H.K. LOHUMI
Shimla

■ Once again the Golden Temple is under the control of militant elements, triggering off a fresh phase of uncertainty in the already explosive situation of Punjab. The state Government has virtually surrendered the holy precincts to the militants by adopting a weak stance. Had the Centre transferred Chandigarh to Punjab on Republic Day, Barnala's credibility would have soared and it would have been easier for him to contain militant challenge.

RAJVIR GREWAL
Calcutta

CLEAN-UP OPERATION

"Political Immunity" (February 15) has rightly analysed Mr Clean's Government from various angles. But one wishes that the article said more than just the fact that the ministers are not clean enough.

P. LALA
Akra, West Bengal

■ Rajiv Gandhi has done a commendable job in attacking corruption in all its forms in society. But his failure to touch the politicians is a very valid excuse for questioning his Mr Clean image. At a time when the word politician is beginning to have a negative connotation, the prime minister's attack on corrupt lot could go a long way in restoring public confidence in the politician.

SANJAY UPADHYA
Kathmandu

■ In your Comment you say "there is one category of citizens which has been left conspicuously untouched throughout the period—the politicians". But, don't you think to fight a battle, you have to be able to live. Rajiv Gandhi needs to stay in power to be able to perform any reforms. If he starts on the politicians he may have problems staying in power himself. He has, in fact, dealt with some corrupt politicians, they have been moved to insignificant places.

ALOK KAPOOR
Hubli

■ When the Government is bold enough and actually takes the right steps to remove corruption will it pass through the litmus test of a clean government. Only then will the common masses realise that the Mr Clean image that Rajiv Gandhi propagates is true.

VINOD JAKATEY
Gwalior

RIDICULOUS CLAIMS

The very name "Ramkrishna" evidently identifies that Parahamansaji himself was a Hindu and of no other ism ("Odd Claims", February 15). The founder of the mission, Swami Vivekananda, had proudly declared at the historic gathering in Chicago that he was proud to be a Hindu and we now hear the officials making claims of denouncing Hinduism and forming a new religion called Ramkrishnaism.

D.M. VYAS
Rajkot

■ Ramkrishna Mission's submission to the high court that the religion of Sri Ramkrishna is separate from that of Hindus has caused considerable dismay among the aspirants who subscribe to the philosophy and ideologies of Swami Vivekananda. He travelled through the length and breadth of the world as a messenger of Hinduism and never propagated anything like the so-called new religion—Ramkrishnaism.

M.A. SREERAMAN
Trivandrum

■ The claim made by the Ramkrishna Mission shows the ridiculous extent to which a constitutional provision can be stretched. In a secular country like India no educational institution should be allowed to be run by any religious organisation. The Government should have complete control and no institution should be allowed to work with any privilege at all.

D. SRINIVASA RAO
Vijayawada

CHRONIC AFFAIR

The child labour problem ("Wages of Innocence", February 15) has been a chronic one. You have tried hard to bring the malaise into focus, but whether it will cut any ice or not is yet to be seen. Understandably, the poverty-stricken, illiterate parents who force their children to work and are often oblivious of their future.

ASHOK KUMAR PANDEY
Faizabad

■ K.C. Khanna, who makes his profits from carpets, says child labour in carpet making is not his concern because he does not "directly" employ them. He further says that the children should be grateful that they are being trained in such "an intricate art". I applaud his stand, and invite the children from his family to come to Madras for free training in "other crafts".

SUJATHA RANGASWAMI
Madras

GENERAL INTEREST

I read the interview of General Sundarji (February 15) with interest. But a large part of the interview pertains to the tasks ahead of him and his success will be for everyone to see when he relinquishes command.

I do not know how far General Sundarji is right in equating pay with the length of service. For better motivation and morale, pay must be related to performance and the responsibility that the individual carries.

A notable omission on your part in the interview is a question on his role as a member of the Expert Committee which was headed by General Krishna Rao in 1975-76. The committee did look 25 years ahead into the future of the army and its restructuring.

SUNIJ
New Delhi

■ The Government should, by all means, review the compensation package for those brave soldiers who leave their families behind and defend our borders by risking their own lives. A career with the army should be made far more attractive. But there would always be only one general at the top and he can't be paid only on the basis of his length of service and without consideration of the fact that he is the one who has proved himself more competent.

KRISHAN KALRA
New Delhi

OVERALL PERFORMANCE

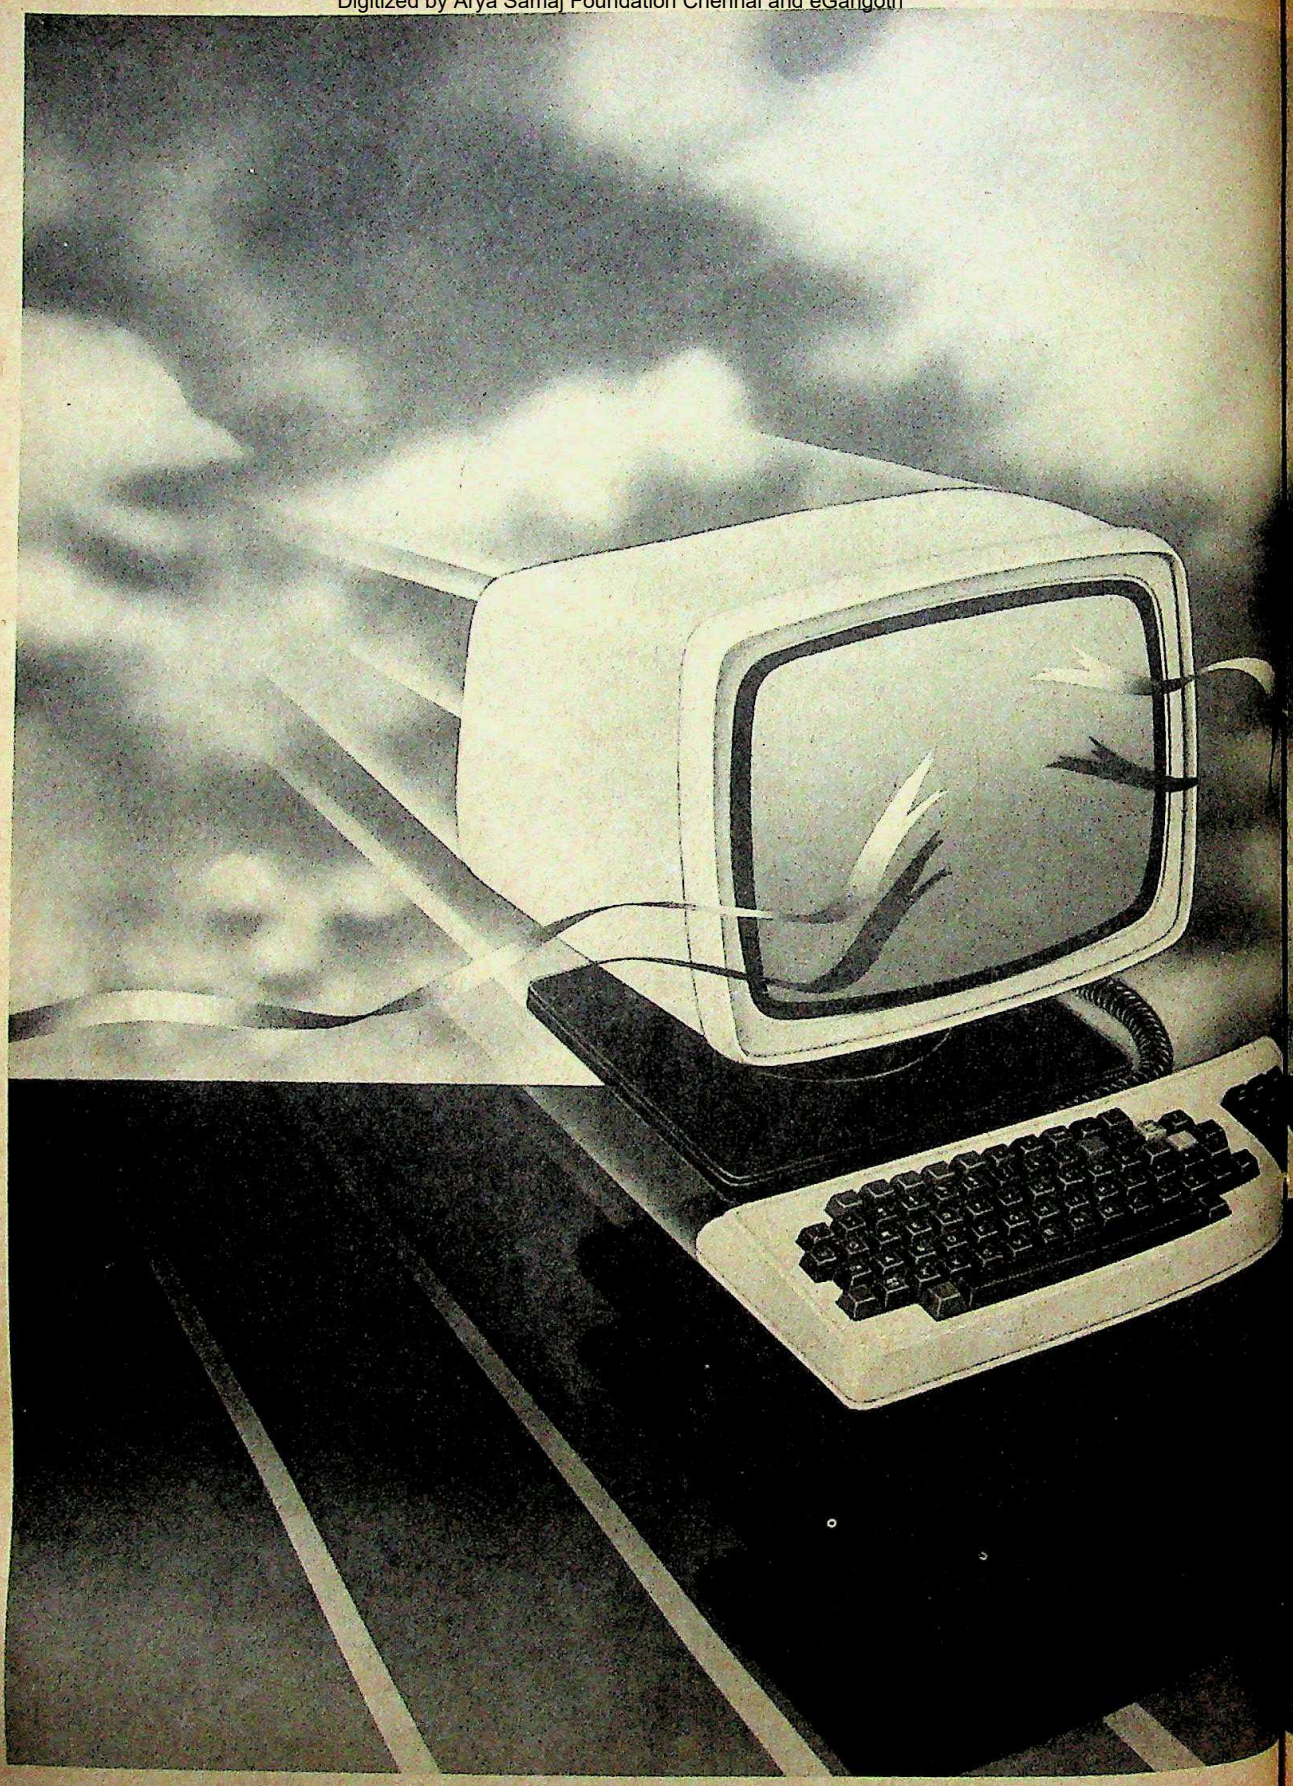
In your ultimate analysis of Kapil Dev as captain, the conclusion seems to have stemmed more from the belief — "generals are known by the wars they win than by the battles they fought"— than giving due regard to the circumstances in which Kapil had to perform.

No match has ever been won or lost by sheer captaincy (the teams overall performance has always been a crucial and deciding factor in the determination of the ultimate result).

SUMAN PARKER
New Delhi

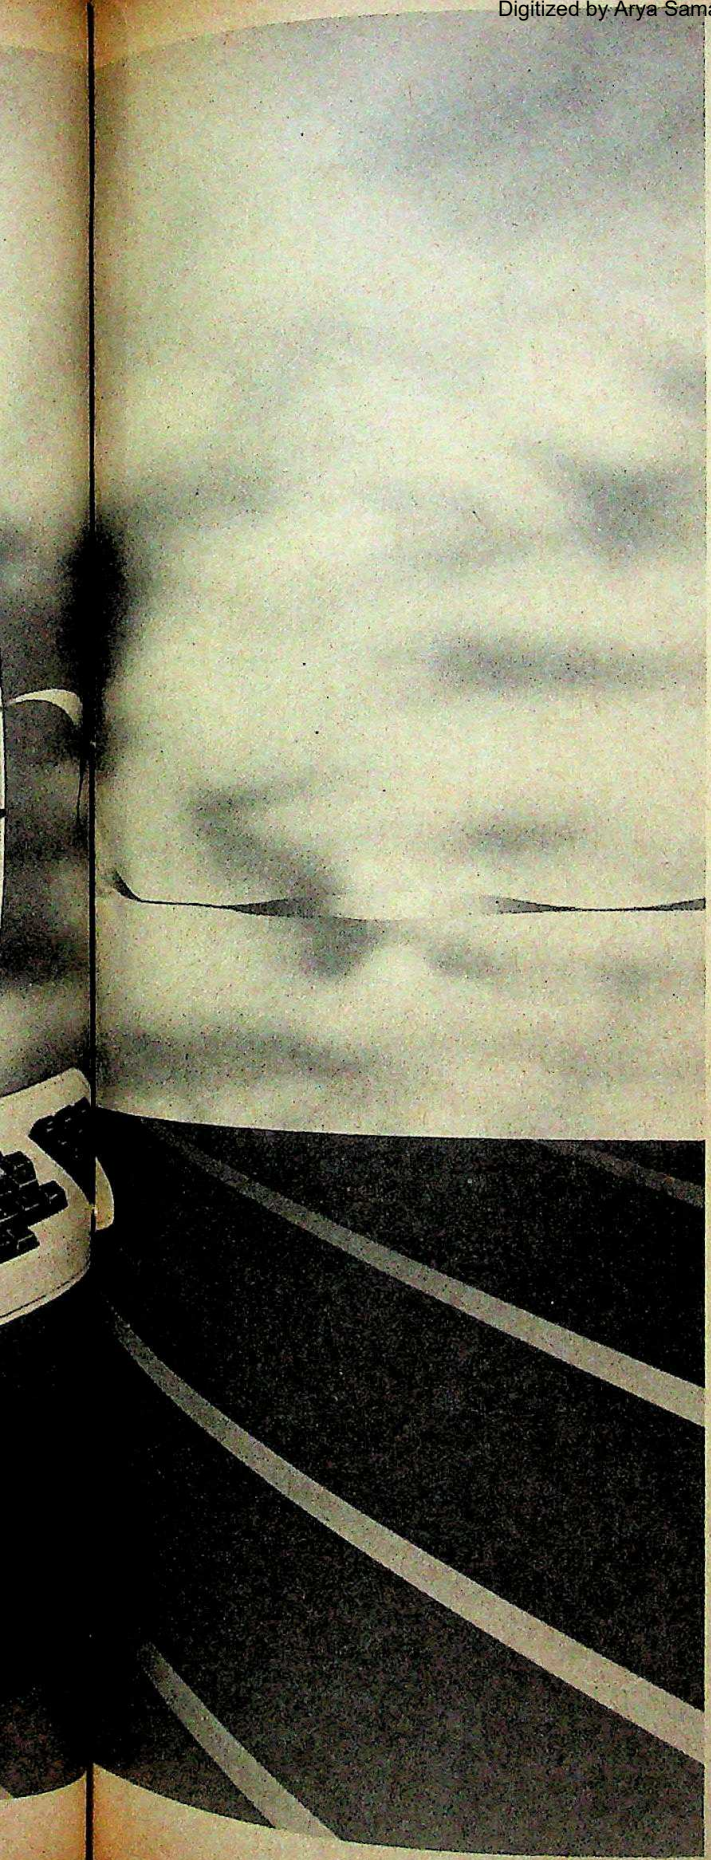
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



The latest in a long line of firsts.

- 1979-80: Uptron enters the computer market with the D-10, a data entry system. With over 3500 installations, D-10 is now an acclaimed industry standard.
- 1981-82: Uptron announces the S-800, India's first computer to shatter the Rs. 1 lakh price barrier.
- 1982-83: The Uptron S-850 becomes India's first computer to integrate DP, WP and Graphics.
- 1983-84: The Uptron S-1650 emerges as India's fastest 16-bit multi-user EDP machine.

Now The Uptron S-1600. A 16-bit multi-terminal, desk-top computer that's redefining price-performance ratios.

UPTRON

Uptron India Limited
10, Ashok Marg, Lucknow-226 001.

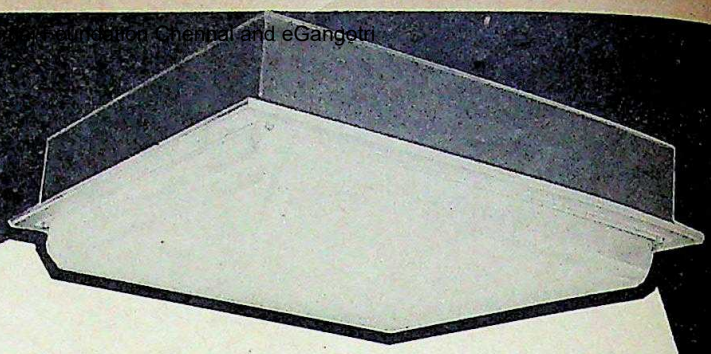
Computer Sales Offices at: Bangalore 71, Millers Road, Bangalore-560 052. Tel. 71919, 28927. Bombay 203, Dalamal Towers, Nariman Point, Bombay-400 021. Tel. 223645, 222561, 231393. Calcutta 52D, Ballygunge Circular Road, Calcutta-700 019. Tel. 476859, 483249. Delhi D6, South Ext. II, New Delhi-110 049. Tel. 665412, 667084, 665662. Hyderabad 5-9-12, Samrat Complex, Opp. A.G.'s Office, Saifabad, Hyderabad-500 004. Tel. 226085. Madras Mowbrays Flats, 282, Mowbrays Road, Alwarpet, Madras-600 018. Tel. 454022, 454625. Lucknow 19, Vidhan Sabha Marg, Lucknow-226 001. Tel. 47131, 34684.

ULKA-D-UIL-1007

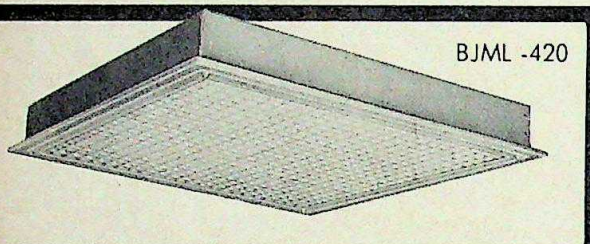
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

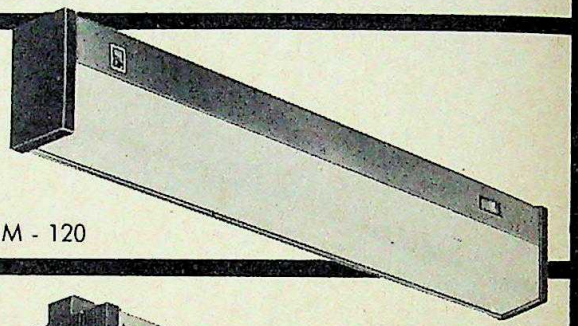
bajaj



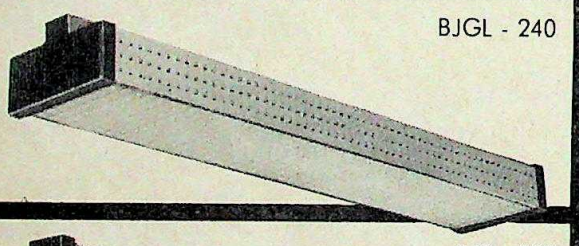
brings you an elegant range of low-cost Decorative Luminaires.



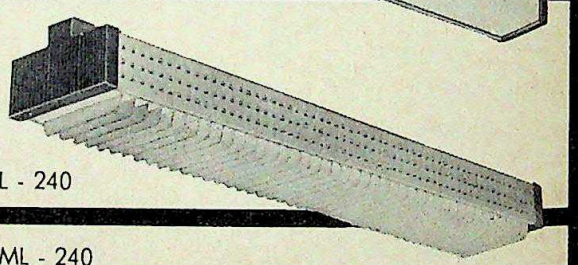
BJML -420



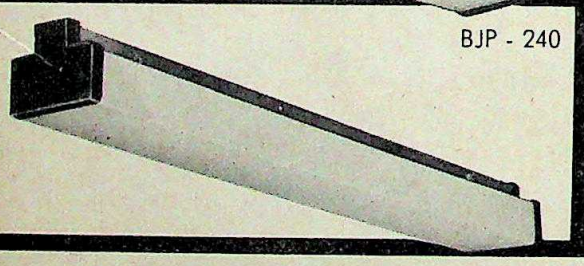
BJM - 120



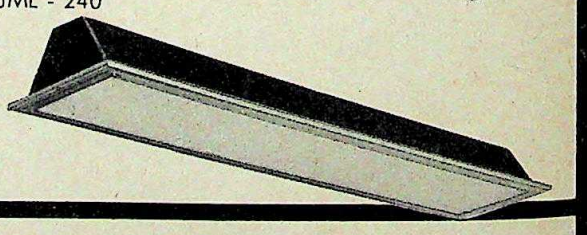
BJGL - 240



BJL - 240



BJP - 240



BJML - 240

Versatile lighting systems designed for universal indoor applications, created to harmonise with any architectural feature and interior decor in offices, banks, show rooms, etc.

Bajaj offers a total integrated lighting service from the designing to the electrification and installation of lighting fittings on a turnkey basis for any indoor/outdoor location.

For details write to:
Lighting Project Services
Bajaj Electricals Limited
45-47 Veer Nariman Road
Bombay 400 023.

Heros' BE-778 B

bajaj

The lighting people since 1938.

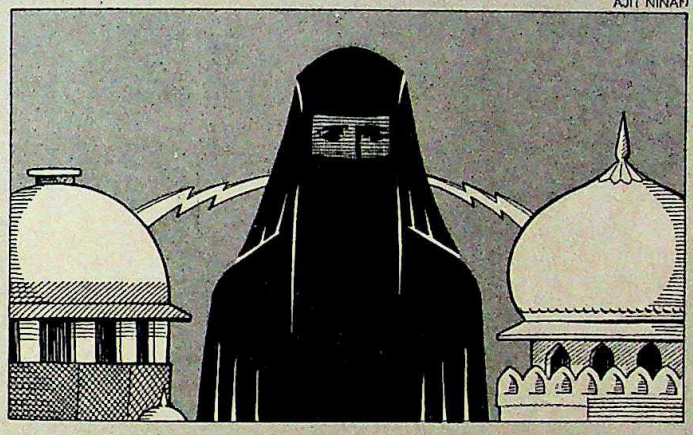
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Stepping Backwards

THE INTRODUCTION of the new Muslim personal law legislation in Parliament is an event that cannot be regretted enough. Not only because the Government has been obliged to fall in line, but because it is a sad comment on the mood of a very large part of the Muslim community that it should in this day and age have come out so strongly against progressive change. At a time when Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi talks of taking this country into the 21st century, it is a giant step backwards. In an era in which the touchstone is modernism, when the scientific temper and equality for women are the buzzwords, it is a retrograde move. True the Government was caught in a cleft stick, with the Supreme Court verdict on the Shah Bano case forming one limb and the increasingly ugly mood in some sections of the Muslim community the other. But it has yielded to conservatism and done long-term damage to the cause and principle of reform.

AJIT NINAN



Those in the Muslim community who view the bill, which is essentially a compromise to escape from a tight corner, as redemption of their position should pause and think over the implications of what has been achieved in the affirmation that in the event of a divorce. Muslim husbands owe their wives nothing that isn't already in the marriage contract. If the new legislation serves the letter of Islamic Personal Law—and even that isn't clear from the contending views that have been vociferously put forward in the wake of the Shah Bano case—it ignores the spirit of justice—and justice as defined by any but the most obscurantist standpoint.

Consider the direct consequences of the new bill. It undoes at one stroke the interpretation effected in 1973 which said that Section 125 of the Criminal Procedure Code (together with the proviso contained in Section 127) applied to Muslim women. It puts in jeopardy the hundreds of cases for maintenance that are pending in the courts and turns its back on judgements like the one that awarded Shah Bano her maintenance. It is a decisive step away from the eventual evolution of a common civil code, and in affirming that the constitutional right of one group of Muslim women is different from the right of non-Muslim women it only confirms an inequality before the law.

But this is the least of it. In spite of the loud protest that has been organised against the Shah Bano verdict, there is a substantial and growing body of Muslim opinion which does not go along with the conservatives. Delegations have called on the prime minister and there have been enough public statements to indicate that the Muslim community is not united on this issue. If, as has been argued, reform of Muslim Personal Law is a matter that is best left to the Muslims, then those in that community who decry the concept of maintenance owe it to the growing liberal sentiment among the Muslims, to Muslim women whose futures are directly affected, and the rest of the nation to explain how they propose to go about initiating reform.

Indeed, if the practice of Islamic nations around the world is any standard, then Indian Muslims who argue against a change in personal law are either better Muslims for obeying the Shariat so loyally or are simply refusing to accept a basic fact of life that reform is very much part of the evolution of any religion. The experience of Iran between the Shah and the Ayatollah indicates that the pace of change must be controlled, but the experience of so many other Islamic nations shows that modern states and forward-looking societies can exist only with gradual but definite change. After all, if the source of personal law legislation in countries as far apart as Pakistan, Turkey and Tunisia are the same scriptures, then it is natural to ask that if those countries can reform Muslim Personal Law substantially to meet the needs of modern society, then why should Indian Muslims hold back?

It is true, of course, that India is a secular nation and that the Muslims, being in a minority, are sensitive to anything that suggests an intrusion on their religious identity. But if Muslim leaders were upset with the Supreme Court verdict, they should have gone back to the court, to a full bench if necessary, with all the arguments they could muster and sought a reversal or at least a moderation of the original judgement. More important, they should themselves initiate steps that interpret religious tenets in the light of modern thinking the way that Islamic countries and societies have done and continue to do elsewhere so that problems of this kind do not arise. For instance, Section 125 has been in the books long enough for enlightened leadership to have anticipated precisely the kind of problem that Shah Bano seems to have posed for the community. Or is it anybody's case that Muslim Personal Law as it currently stands is in need of no change?

Quite clearly, the ultimate motivation for the compromise is political. The Congress(I) has lost ground among the Muslims, particularly after the Assam accord and the affair in Ayodhya hasn't helped matters either. But if the new legislation encourages the Sikhs to make similar demands—as they have done in the past—or worse, a stiffening of postures among Hindus, it will have served to divide when the need is to emphasise what unites the different communities of this country. And that will ill serve the interests of both the Muslims and the Government.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Inside Story

● R.K. Dhawan, special assistant to Mrs Gandhi when she was prime minister, continues to be a sensitive subject for the new Government. Last fortnight, when word leaked out to people in the Government that The Statesman was coming out with an exclusive 'Insight' report on how Dhawan had been asked to take a lie detector test by the Thakkar Commission, which is going into the circumstances of Mrs Gandhi's assassination, the telephone wires began buzzing.

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

First a cabinet minister telephoned the newspaper office and wanted information on the story in question. Then a senior officer in the prime minister's office got into the act and made a call himself. Later, the Calcutta office of the newspaper got a call from the minister, who issued a summary order that the story should be killed. When nothing seemed to work, yet another call to the newspaper came through demanding the names and telephone numbers of the directors of the company.

Despite these late evening shenanigans, the newspaper carried its report prominently the next morning. But there was no word printed about the Government's attempt at pressurisation and censorship, and the Delhi editor of the paper would not make himself available for comment on the inside story of the 'Insight' story.

Reserved Subject

● The case of the Hazira-Bijaypur-Jagdishpur (HBJ) gas pipeline gets curiouser and curiouser as a final decision is delayed on who should get the Rs 700-crore contract. Meanwhile, observers of the Delhi scene have one pertinent question for which there seems no answer: When the ambassadors of Italy and Canada wrote to the Government expressing their reservations about the manner in which Indian experts were deciding on the awarding of the contract, the immediate response was to set up a committee headed by Cabinet Secretary P.K.Kaul to review the experts' recommendation.

But in a similar deal involving a Rs 1,500-crore contract for a new field gun for the army, the ambassadors of some of the four countries in the race have similarly written letters. Yet no review committee has been set up to go into the controversial recommendations, and Minister of State for Defence Arun Singh has refused to meet the ambassadors concerned.

Special Effect

● Last fortnight's avidly-watched Janvani programme on prices had a surprise for TV viewers. A member of the studio audience grilling V.P. Singh and his ministerial colleagues was none other than Singh's wife, Sita. While she asked her husband about little more than paan masala and cooking gas, others were naturally asking how she got on to the screen and whether this was no more than a gimmick.

In actual fact, it was not. The original programme was meant to feature Minister of State for Defence Arun Singh. At the last minute, the Finance Ministry decided that because of the storm created by the recent price hikes, V.P.Singh and the other concerned ministers would appear instead. According to Mrs Singh, her decision was an impulsive one in reaction to the announcement of the change in programme a day before. She told Doordarshan boss Harish Khanna that she wanted to take part, and he said she would be welcome. It was only when her husband came home just before leaving for the studios that she informed him of her participation in the programme. Mrs Singh says, however, that she now regrets her decision since she has received numerous calls asking why she let her husband off the hook so easily.

In a Flap

● Getting accommodation in the Rajya Sabha is one thing. But getting accommodation in New Delhi so that one can attend the upper house is quite another, as Dr Salim Ali, 90, the grand old man of Indian ornithology, discovered last fortnight. When Ali was offered the coveted Rajya Sabha nomination last year by Rajiv Gandhi, he declined on grounds of his advancing age, but was persuaded by the prime minister who promised him every facility in Delhi, including accommodation.

But when the birdman flew in from Bombay to attend the budget session and approached the Works and Housing Ministry for an MP's flat, he was bluntly informed that there were no vacancies. An irate Ali has been forced to stay with his niece till he can get the prime minister's ear.

But that is another chapter in the story. In his attempts to contact the prime minister, Ali has been through a flock of aides and PA's who all give him one stock answer: his request for an appointment has been logged in the computer. Ali is still waiting for the computer to call him back.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

*"People who feel good about themselves produce results."

*(Blanchard and Johnson. Time and Efficiency Experts).

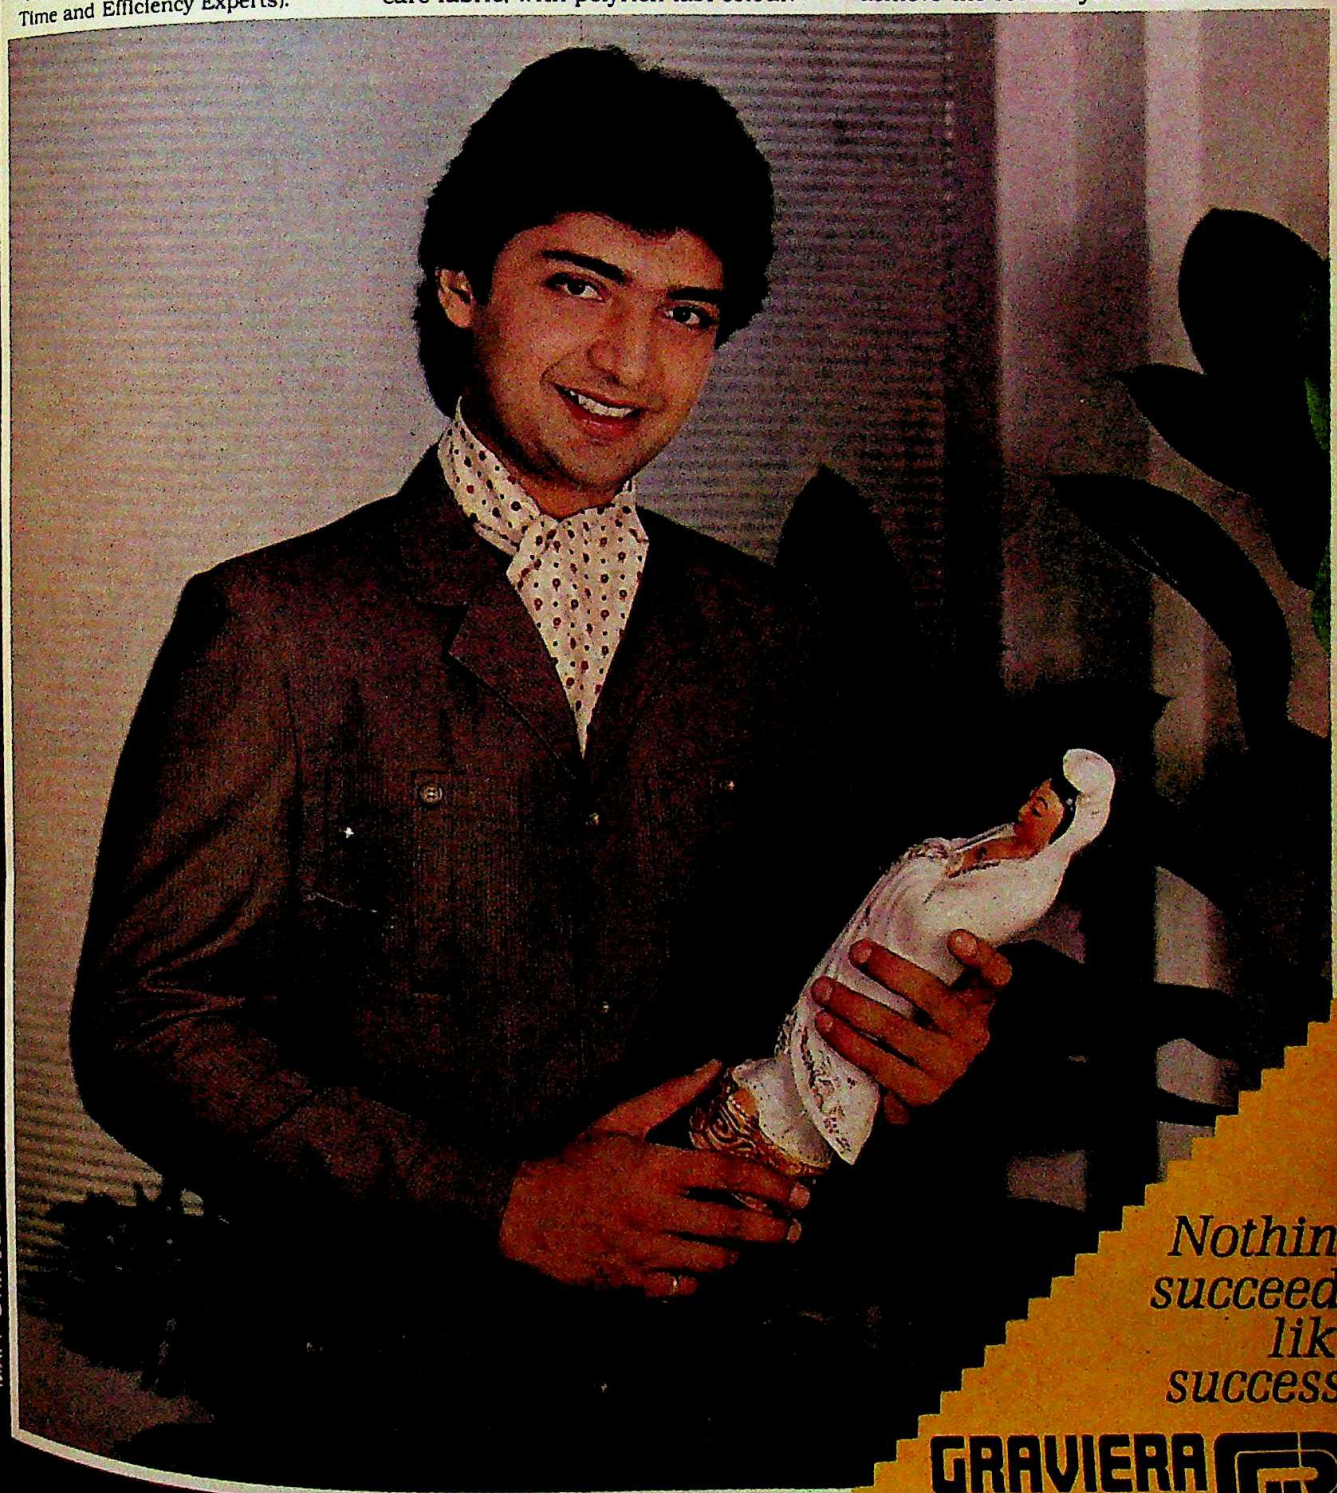
Your own experience proves it. When you're confident, you're on top of the world. You know, too, that a large measure of your poise depends on what you wear.

For special occasions and for casual wear, you'd like a premier quality suiting. That's when you consider Graviera.

Graviera is a fabric of exceptional quality. It fashions suits and shirts, safaris and trousers which are elegant and comfortable. It's wash 'n wear, easy-care fabric, with polyrich fast colour.

There's a wide range of suiting and shirting to choose from. Deep sober colours and soft pastel shades, in a variety of superb weaves and soft textures. Lightweight summer businesswear or darker shades and warmer weaves for winter. You'll be able to select the exact suiting and shirting that match your requirements. All Graviera fabrics are that rare blend of graciousness and good sense.

Graviera! It makes you feel really good about yourself. And you're all set to achieve the results you want.



Nothing succeeds like success!

GRAVIERA SUITING GR®

MAPP-BTM-86-48

..., Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Breakthrough beyond expectations

Modi Continental R80 Nylon Car Tyre

OBM/10006

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Quite immodestly it's a breakthrough!

An Investment of Research

Crores of rupees of Modi Continental research has created R 80 — the state-of-the-art nylon car tyre.

To give you more

The R 80 premium is extra wide, giving you a surer grip.

The scientifically designed tread surface with 15% more non-skid depth, the seven zig zag shaped ribs and the width give you a road grip you've never known.

Beyond Expectation

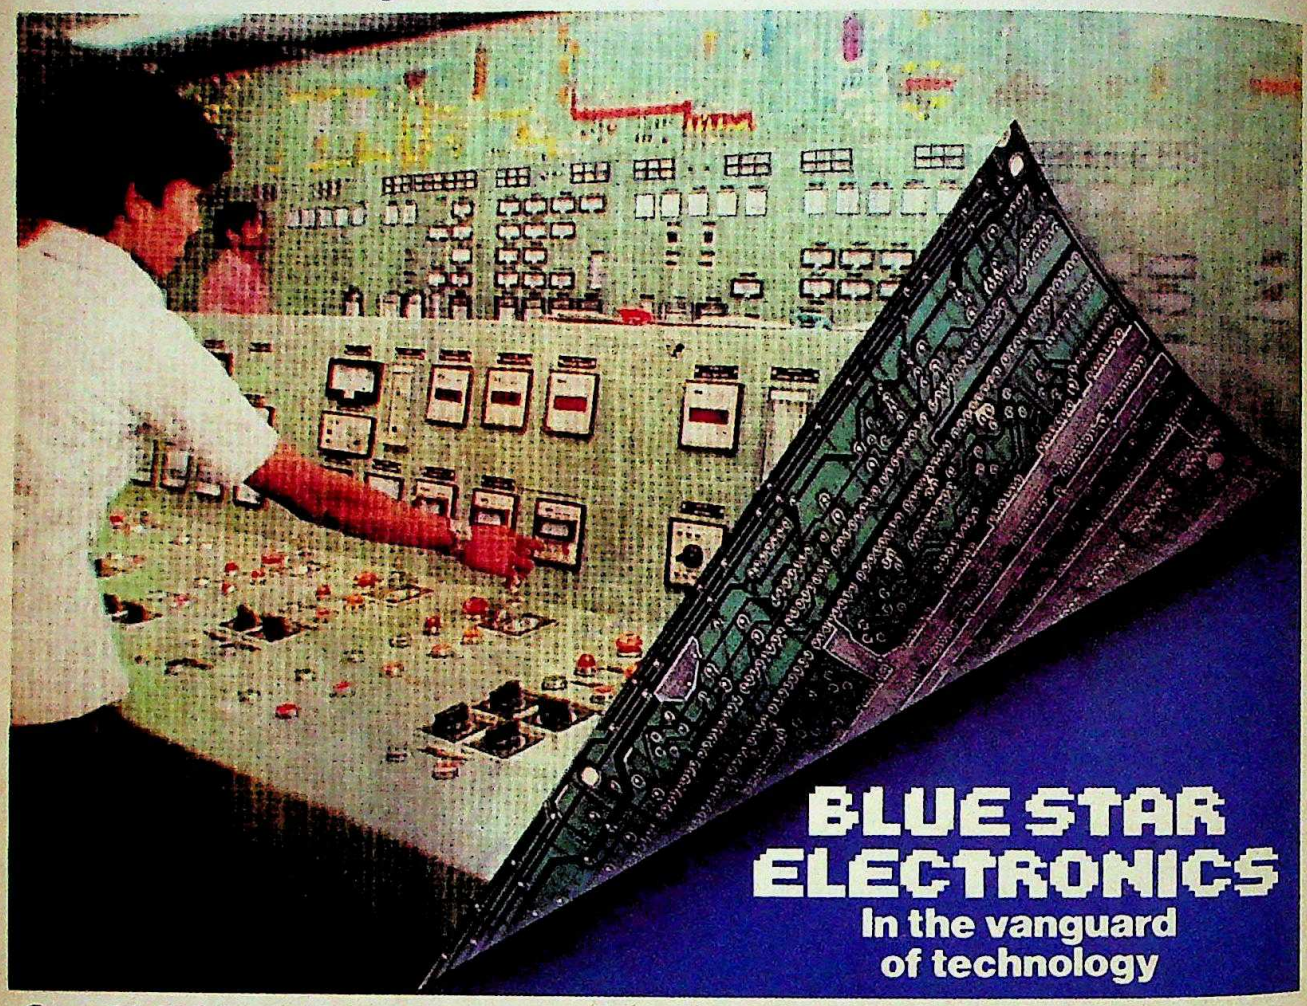
Yes! It's a breakthrough beyond expectations. With better mileage than you ever thought was possible. Don't let technology pass you by. Change to R 80 — a footprint ahead of the rest.

Modi Continental

Tyre that never tires

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In continuous process industries what you don't see matters most!



Over 20,000 high-technology process control instruments and systems, in more than 1000 industrial plants nationwide.

There is probably no major process industry in India today, which does not depend on these systems for enhanced efficiency in process control.

For maintaining process variables—flow, pressure, temperature—within critical-control limits. In refineries, fertilizer plants and petro-chemical complexes.

Behind the scene, Blue Star Electronics is at work where it matters most.

Total Electronics Capability

Blue Star in association with Hewlett-Packard, Hitachi, Scientific Atlanta, Technicon, Yokogawa Hokushin, Johnson Controls and Jeumont-Schneider—each a leader in its own field—has been in the forefront of Electronics for over 30 years.

Among the products it markets and increasingly manufactures in India are : State-of-the-art Computer Systems and Business Machines, Analytical Instruments, Medical Instruments, Test and Measuring Instruments, Process Control Instrumentation, EPABX Systems and Professional Electronic Components.

These are backed by over 1000 man years of specialised experience of over 200 professionals.

Blue Star also exports Computer Software to technologically advanced countries.

State-of-the-art Solutions

Business, Industry and Government. Defence, Space and Telecommunications. Medicine, Research and Education. Increasingly, they will need Electronics.

And that's where they will find Blue Star.

In the vanguard of technology. With a total package of state-of-the-art solutions to their complex problems.

THE BLUE STAR PACKAGE

- State-of-the-art, high technology products from world leaders.
- Prestigious manufacturing collaborations : Hewlett-Packard, Jeumont-Schneider, Yokogawa Hokushin.
- Systems-engineering capability of foreign-trained Blue Star scientists and engineers, for solutions to customer needs.
- Customer support services : technology update seminars; demonstrations and training programmes; ever-expanding technology applications library; electronics R & D centre; countrywide network of service centres; calibration and workshop facilities; ample stocks of spare parts.

★ BLUE STAR

the hi-technology Company

JAISONS BS 13185

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

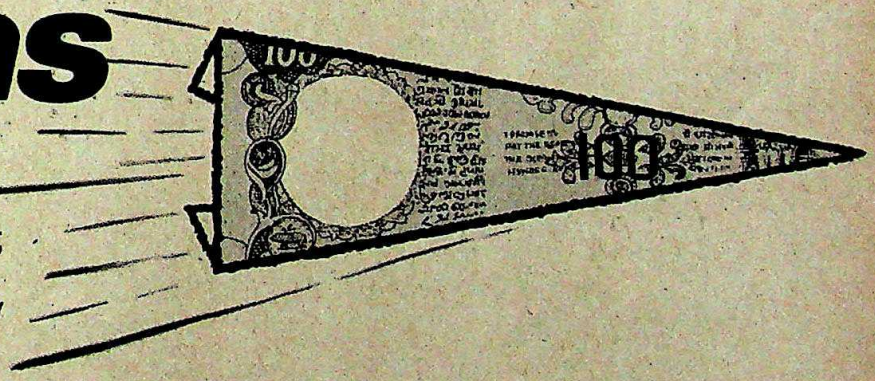
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Provided the claims are in order.

1,96,434 of our customers pressed claims of various categories during 1984. And met expeditious settlement for breakdown of vital machinery due to natural calamities or loss of personal property, arising out of riots.

Of course in settling claims we depend on your best co-operation. Not with patience. But in timely notification and fulfilment of proper formalities. Our speed will depend on your timely reaction.

We work fastest when settling claims



For instance, you should intimate the incident immediately to the office where the policy was issued; Claim Forms should be completed correctly and fully and forwarded with haste to the policy-issuing office and finally full, detailed information of the loss should be provided to the surveyor appointed by National to assess the loss quickly.

We put service first. And act fast. Provided we get a little momentum from you.

National Insurance Company Limited
(A Subsidiary of General Insurance Corporation of India)

Putting service first

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

INDIA TODAY
INTERNATIONAL EDITION

GIFT INDIA TO SOMEONE YOU CARE FOR...

GIFT FOR _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ CODE _____

COUNTRY _____

Please send one year's subscription of INDIA TODAY, International Edition and my gift card to the person named above. Enclosed is my cheque/DD/M.O. for Rs _____ payable to Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.

MY NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ CODE _____

COUNTRY _____

Send this advertisement and payment to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007, Haryana, India

Annual Airmail Subscription Rates

Rs 185
BANGLADESH
BHUTAN
NEPAL

Rs 345
AFGHANISTAN
BURMA
MALDIVES
PAKISTAN
SRI LANKA

Rs 385
BAHRAIN
CHINA
HONG KONG
INDONESIA
IRAN
IRAQ
KUWAIT
MALAYSIA
OMAN
PHILIPPINES
QATAR
SAUDI ARABIA
SINGAPORE
TAIWAN
THAILAND
U.A.E.
YEMEN

Rs 485
AUSTRALIA
EGYPT
ETHIOPIA
FRANCE
W. GERMANY
GHANA
GIBRALTAR
IRELAND
JAPAN
KENYA
SOUTH KOREA
LEBANON
LIBYA
MALAWI
MALTA
MAURITIUS
SEYCHELLES
SIERRA LEONE
SOUTH AFRICA
SUDAN
SWITZERLAND
SYRIA
TANZANIA
U.K.
ZAMBIA
ZIMBABWE

Rs 585
BAHAMAS
BARBADOS
BRAZIL
CANADA
FIJI
GUYANA
HAWAII
JAMAICA
NEW ZEALAND
PANAMA
U.S.A.

NH 943

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Times of India

● Some very tough decisions have to be taken. Unless hard political decisions are taken the future of the country will not be safe.

■ RAJIV GANDHI on the petroleum price hike, in his address to the national council of the Indian Youth Congress

● This is my last visit and my only request is please do not deify me. I have no disciples. Do not construct a memorial or build a temple for me. That would nullify all my teachings.

■ J. KRISHNAMURTI at the last meeting of the Krishnamurti Foundation before his death

● I think Edwina (Lady Mountbatten) was a great friend of my brother's. A man and a woman can be great friends. I have had many good men friends but I have not been to bed with them.

■ VIJAY LAKSHMI PANDIT in The Washington Post

● This is not my last supper. I am coming back.

■ POPE JOHN PAUL II shortly before his departure from India

● If Gavaskar or some other cricketer scores a century then it's front page news—they're given television sets, houses, what have you. What of the artistes?... What about them? No, there's nothing for them.

■ BIRJU MAHARAJ, Padma Vibhushan recipient, in The Hindustan Times Sunday Magazine

● It is you people from the press who tell us what could have been done and what should not have been done; and when something goes wrong with the plan, you are the first to start blasting the captain.

■ KAPIL DEV in The Sunday Observer

● What sort of secrets can an Indian journalist possibly pass on? Every bit of military purchase we make is known to outsiders anyway. Every square inch of our land—including our seas and ports—has been mapped by spy satellites. Russian and American.... Does one have to go to Taiwan to spill the beans?

■ M.V. KAMATH in Express Magazine

● If children grow up watching Chhayageet, we'll have a nation of nitwits.

■ HRISHIKESH MUKHERJEE in Filmfare

● We want India to attack us. We would love that. Because that would seal and decide matters for ever.

■ SARDAR QAYYUM KHAN, president, Pakistan-occupied Kashmir, in Sunday

● Pakistan is training our people. I must do something. I can't sit on my bed and say 'come, take over the country'.

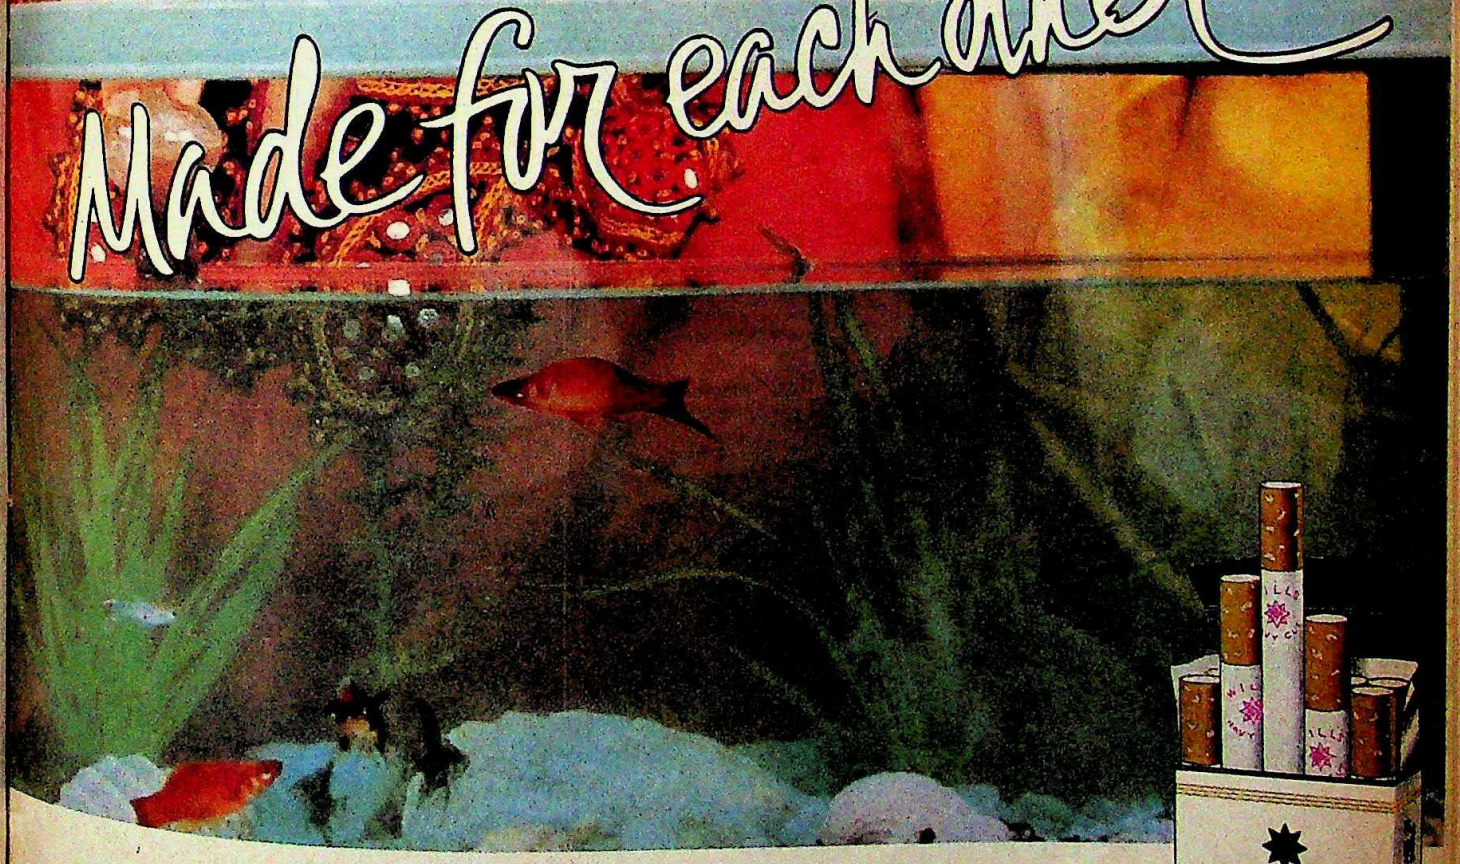
■ J.R. JAYEWARDENE, Sri Lanka president, quoted in The Illustrated Weekly of India

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Made for each other



Wills Filter set the filter trend in cigarettes long years ago. Today it's still the finest. In taste, in satisfaction. Hand-picked virginia tobaccos married to an efficient filter make it so. Millions of smokers have discovered it, then stayed with it.

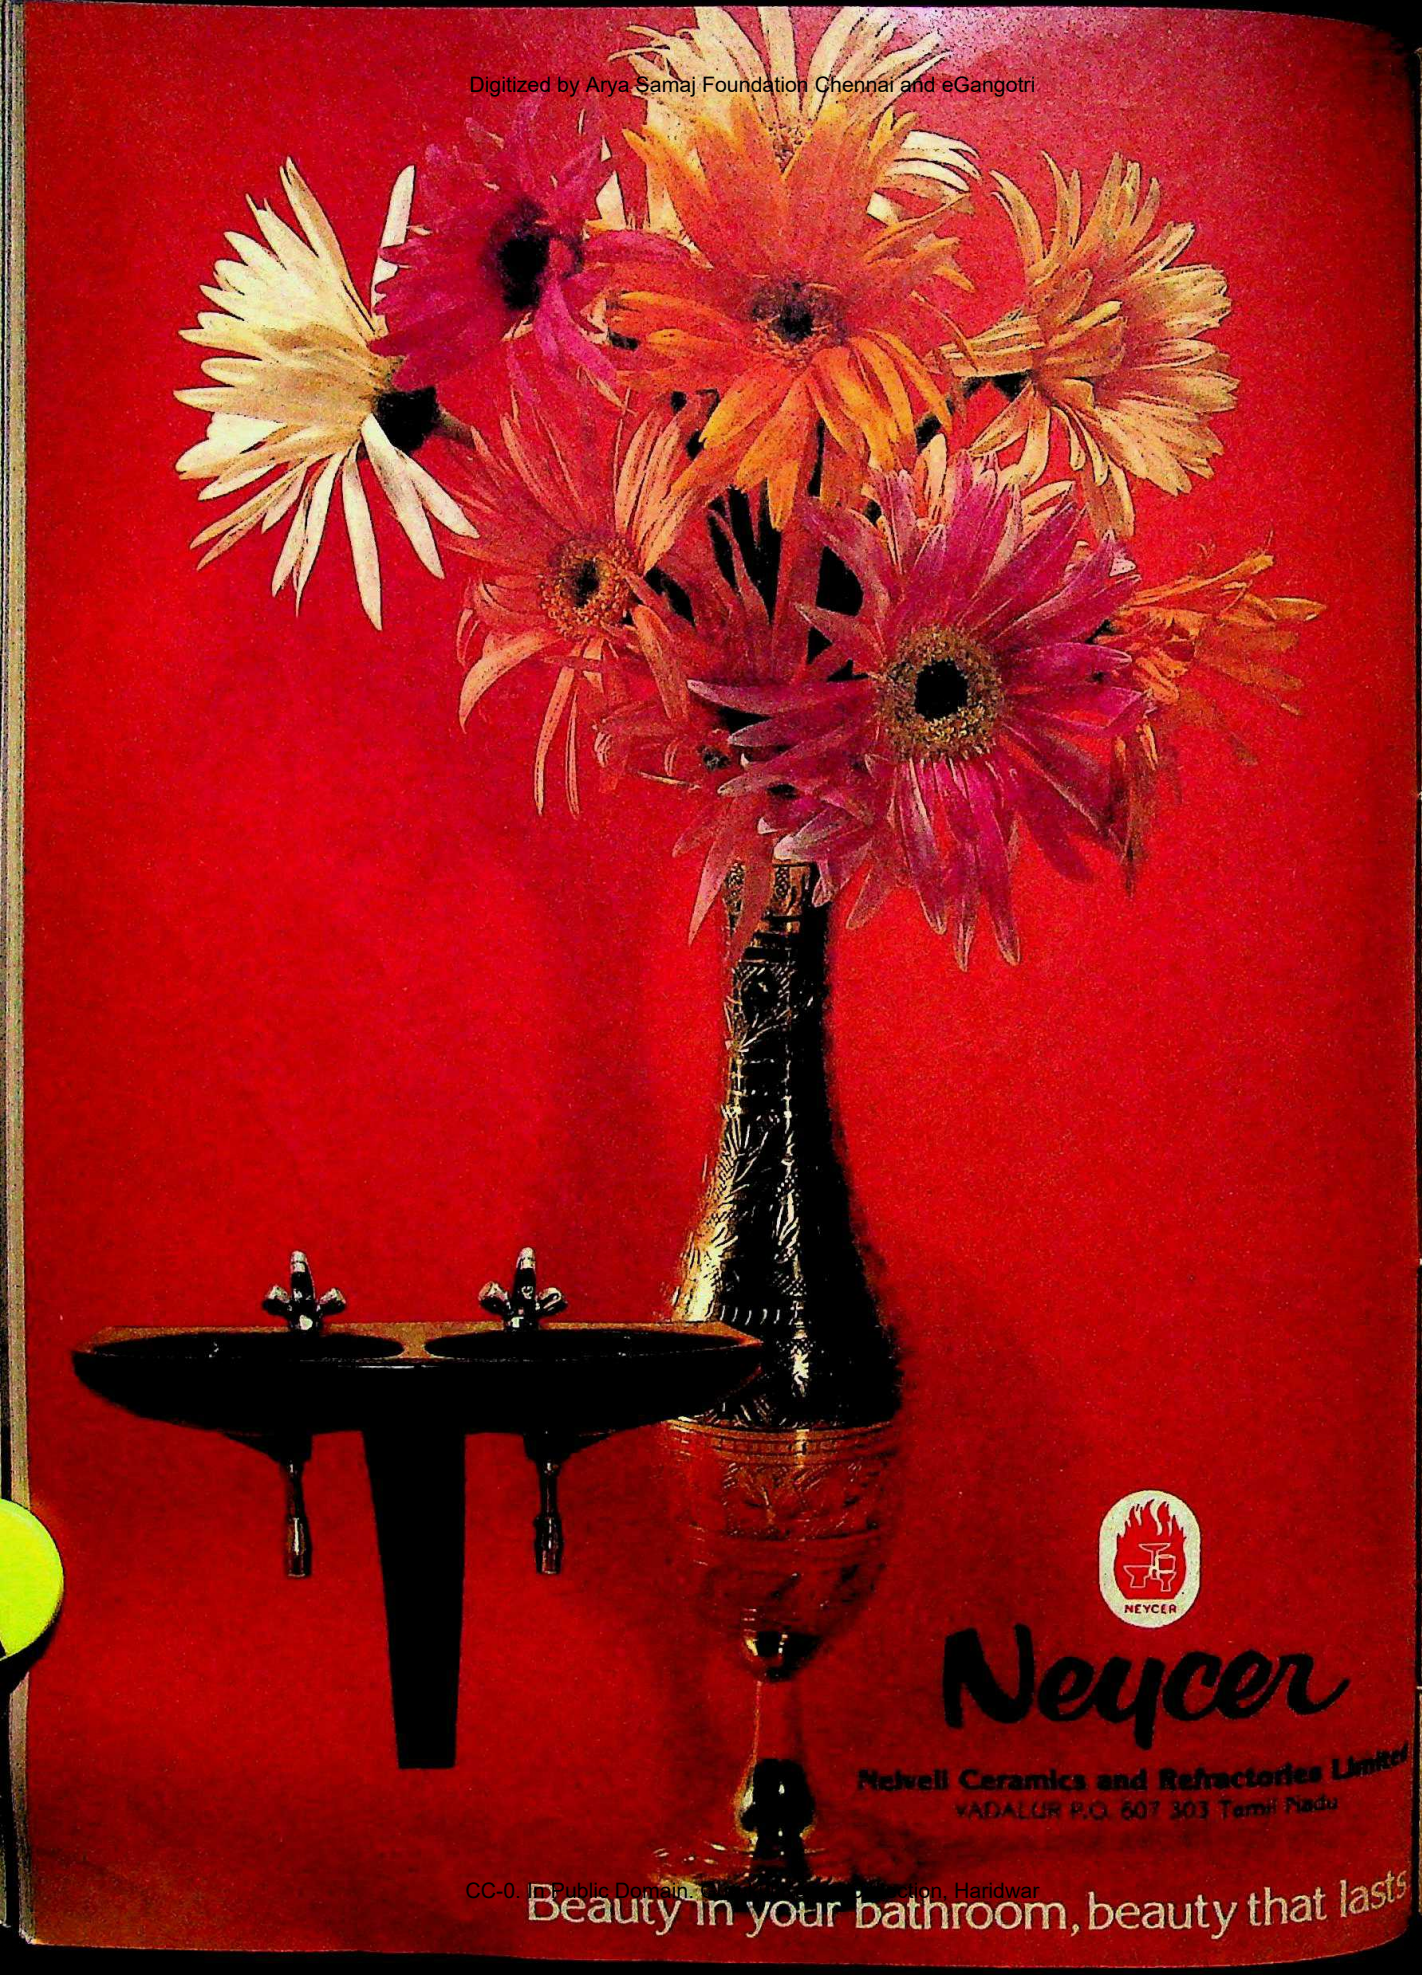
STATUTORY WARNING
CIGARETTE SMOKING IS INJURIOUS TO HEALTH

WILLS FILTER

Filter and tobacco perfectly matched

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Six good reasons to fly British Airways to Hong Kong.

We now fly non-stop to Hong Kong six times a week, with four flights from Bombay and two from Delhi. And not only do we offer the most convenient flights but we offer them at the lowest excursion fares.

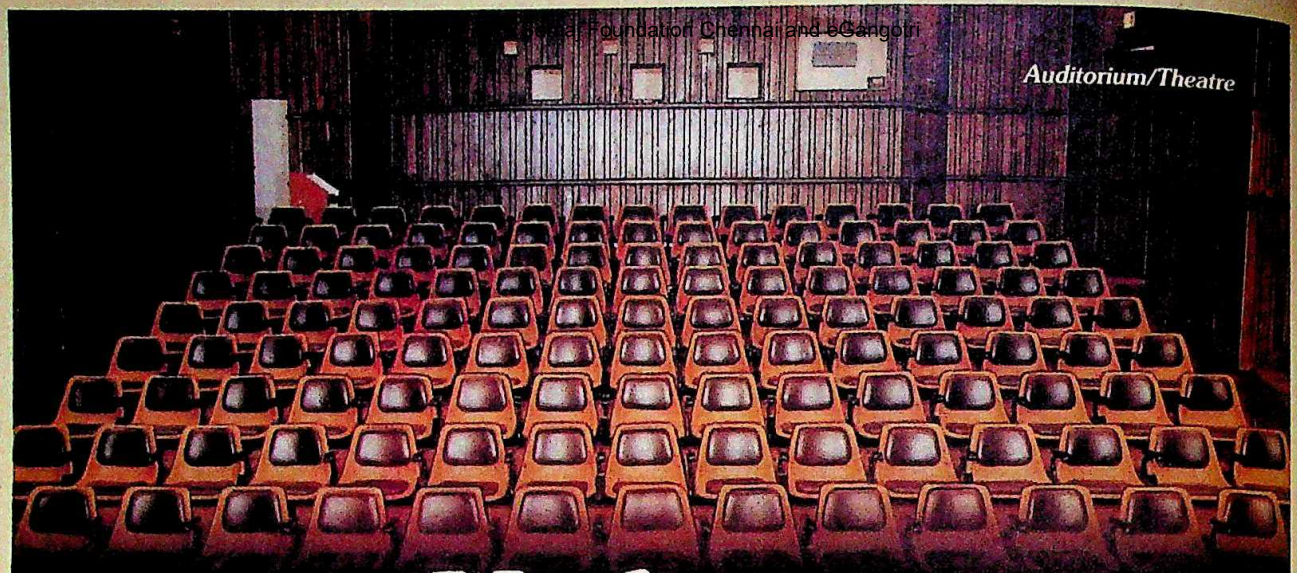
Our service is second to none as well. Both in the air, with Indian stewardesses and vegetarian meals, and on the ground, with the new India Gateway Service meet and greet — for our business passengers at Bombay and Delhi connecting from other flights.

With reasons like these, there's only one airline to choose.

BRITISH AIRWAYS
The world's favourite airline.

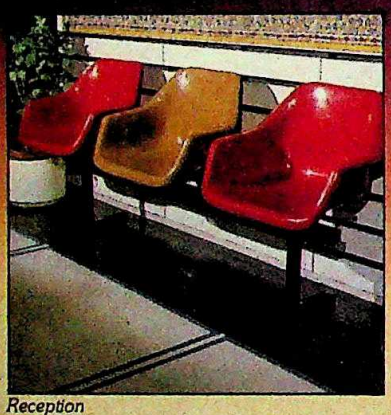
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

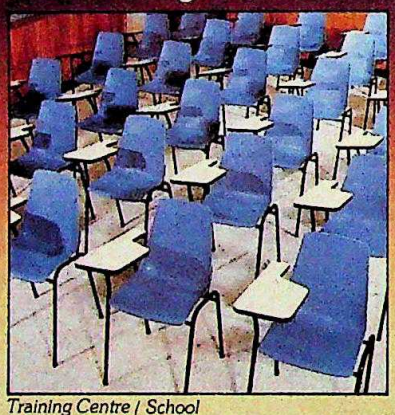


Moderna

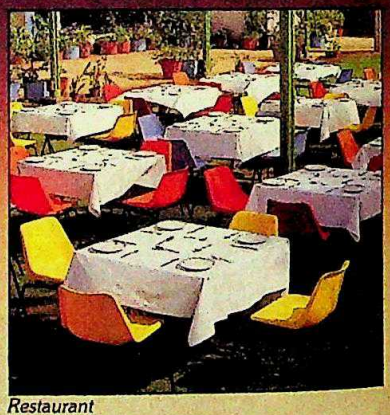
The international concept of sitting pretty. Just anywhere.



Reception



Training Centre / School



Restaurant

Residence

Elegance and functionality perfectly blended. That's Moderna.

Totally flexible. Eminently adaptable. Moderna Seating System is tailor-made to meet the needs of any seating situation. Indoors and outdoors.

Made from the wonder material, polypropylene, Moderna is lightweight. Portable. Tough. And it's ergonomically designed to provide maximum seating comfort for years and years. But that's not all. Moderna needs the minimum of looking after. No painting. No polishing. Just an occasional wash keeps it clean and bright.

Moderna. Offers you exciting ways to sit. In comfort and elegance. In a blaze of beautiful, non-fading colours.

Moderna. Naturally at home... in stadia, auditoria and theatres. In canteens, lounges, conference rooms and at poolsides. In a balcony or in a dining room.

Moderna. The functional seating system that offers you the best value for your money. Come, discover its many benefits.

Blow Plast Ltd.
V.I.P. House
Prabhadevi
Bombay 400 025.
Tel: 430 1011
Telex: 011-71595 BPL-IN
Grams: BLOWPLAST, Dadar.
Bombay 400 014.

Contour Ads-BP-669A/85R1

MODERNA
the versatile seating system

FIRA

Regional Offices: Bombay: V.I.P. House, 88C Old Prabhadevi Road, Bombay 400 025. Tel: 4301011. Delhi: Rattan Jyoti, 6th Floor, 18 Rajendra Place, New Delhi 110 008. Tel: 5719820. Calcutta: 19, R.N. Mukherjee Road, Calcutta 700 002. Tel: 234025/230768. Bangalore: No. 5, Siddaiah Road, Bangalore 560 002. Tel: 226706.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NUPTIAL KNOT

■ When it comes to indomitable women, there's no place like Kumbakonam, Tamil Nadu. There's one who goes by the docile-sounding name of Premlata, and she is a Christian. A few months ago, Premlata fell in love with a young Hindu bank clerk called Gunasekharan and, to cut a long story short, they decided to marry.

Unfortunately, even as the ceremonies continued their musical way, Guna noticed that Prema was a bit out of sorts. Hoping he hadn't set a world record in family quarrels so quickly after the nuptials, he turned to her and asked her falteringly what the matter was. She turned her beautiful eyes to him, fingered the mangalsutra that dangled round her neck and said: "Why don't you wear a mangalsutra given by me?" If a wife could wear a mangalsutra, she reasoned, why couldn't a husband?

Why not, indeed, responded Guna hastily. So she produced a pretty little chain and locket and opened the locket coyly and showed it to him. And inside was a picture of herself, lovely as a rose. And she tied it around his neck and both of them drove away into the sunset, each realising that they were now in it for good, up to their necks.

LOVE'S LABOUR LOST

■ The Royal Canadian Mounted Police always get their man. And, it appears now that a lady in Bangalore has taken their motto to heart. She is called Jayamma and her story is instructive.

Jayamma gave her heart to police constable Rangaiah and he gave her his, and the Jaya-Ranga duo were all set for a wedding and happily ever after. But alas, Rangaiah had second thoughts and one evening when the moon was taking a break, he told her he couldn't marry her. Violins. Tears.

However, and more power to her, Jayamma was not about to take this jilting-wilting lying down. She raved and ranted and finally the two of them were brought before a deputy commissioner of police for a compromise.

But accords are not all that easy to make these days and a few minutes later policemen strolling in the vicinity were brushed rudely aside by a flustered Rangaiah racing down the corridor followed by a tearful Jayamma. Apparently, according to the DCP, Rangaiah was very reluctant to plight his troth with his former beloved, hence her current plight of love's labour being lost.

CAUGHT IN THE ACT

■ When one is in the mood for a little fun and laughter, there's nothing more refreshing than the Indore Municipal Corporation. One of the elders of this august body was hanging around on the streets and, in the midst of meditating on the amount of votes he would get in the municipal elections, suddenly noticed a dreadful sight. Dozens of children—they seemed like thousands to his fevered mind—were sitting on the pavements performing what the Victorian writers used to call ablutions and what the Indian writers call morning chores. The elder was aghast—peculiar, but he'd never seen such a sight before—and went off post-haste to the corporation where he stood up and demanded that something be done about this awful thing.

The corporation did, and its action will go down in history when someone writes a book on the Futility of Public Assemblies. It made out panchnamas against five selected offenders, gravely listing the charges against them, and asking each of them to sign. The five, with innocent looks on their faces, signed the panchnamas. The corporation also ticked off 25 other children and sternly told them "not to indulge in such acts in future".

HIGH STAKES

■ India is a country where, if Hindi films are anything to go by, husband proposes and wife meekly carries it out. Sometimes, however, the traditional roles are reversed and then things can get very hot. Take the couple in Porbandar, Gujarat, the hometown of the father of India. The lady of the house was smitten, not so much with her husband but with gambling. It appeared to the husband, as he morosely chewed on the dry bread and raw onions, that his wife was never at home, never tending the home fires as she should have learnt by now from watching Nirupa Roy groaning on the screen.

He spat the dry bread out and went to the police, lodging a complaint on the lines set out above. The police set out on the trail of the errant wife. They came to one small house near the station and there she was, of course, along with four others, a pack of dog-eared playing cards and Rs 225 in cash. The records are silent on whether she fell at her hubby's feet and begged for forgiveness, but Manmohan Desai and his ilk have enough scope in the story for another tear-jerker.

—Compiled by JAGANNATH DUBASHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Get your international conference to take off with the right man behind you.

Air-India's Congresses & Conventions team. They work as one man to see your conference successfully through. By offering all their advice—absolutely free!

They work with you right from inception by helping you promote your conference. Advising you how to bid for India as your conference venue. Liaising with your delegates. And transporting them to India on a wide range of low, low group and individual fares.

Of course, they're backed by Air-India's worldwide network of 145 offices. So that your conference gets all the publicity and promotion it needs. And by Delhi's superb conference venues. Like the Talkatora Stadium or the Indira Gandhi Stadium. Or, the many new hotels in Delhi, most of which offer excellent conference facilities. Or even the ultra-modern Sher-i-Kashmir International Conference Centre at Srinagar. Attached to the superb 5-star Centaur Lake View Hotel next to Dal Lake.

Naturally, with such services, it's no surprise that Air-India has been closely involved with the 12th International Leprosy Congress, the World Energy Conference, the World Mining Congress and many more.

The next time you want to host an international conference, make sure you have the right sort of backing. Get in touch with:

Air-India
Congresses & Conventions
6th Floor, 'Vandhana'
11, Tolstoy Marg
NEW DELHI-110 001
Tel: 3311225
Cable: AIRINDIA

You host it. We'll help promote it.

Member International Congress & Convention Association

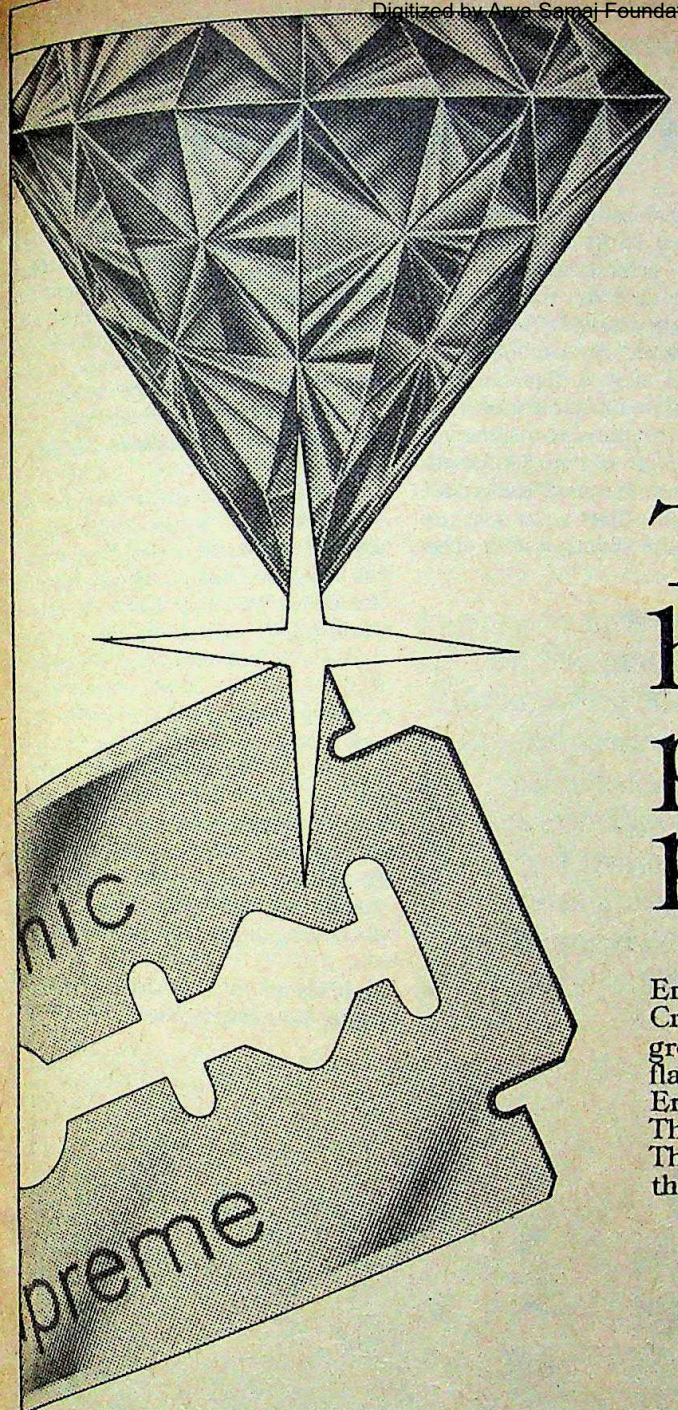
AIR-2310

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Tempered, honed and polished to perfection

Erasmic Supreme.
Crafted to the minutest detail, tempered, ground, honed, polished and Teflon coated for a flawless finish.
Erasmic Supreme.
The blade with the diamond edge.
The blade with the edge that cares for your face.

Erasmic Supreme

The blade with the diamond edge

A QUALITY PRODUCT FROM SHARPEDGE LIMITED

LINTAS (D) SHP ESP 172 417

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB

Avoiding a Showdown

IN PUNJAB's pendulous politics, highs and lows come with monotonous regularity. One day it is the relief of an accord, another day the triumph of an election and a third day the gloom of an insurrection. Last fortnight's tale of two cities, the sarbat khalsa in Anandpur Sahib organised by the Akalis and the kar seva of the militants in Amritsar, saw the pendulum swing again as violence reached new heights.

On the face of it, the fortnight opened with the Akalis regaining some of the ground. The sarbat khalsa (gathering of the whole community) at Takht Sri Keshgarh Sahib in Anandpur drew followers from all over the state, helped no doubt by the deployment of 6,000-odd police and paramilitary forces. And as thousands of hands went up the call was loud and clear: "This congregation directs the SGPC and the Akali Dal to end the illegal interference in Darbar Sahib and restore the Sikh traditions which have been usurped. Whatever steps are taken in this direction will have the support and acceptance of all the Sikhs."

Applying balm to Barnala's morale was a three-page resolution read out by no less than Akal Takht jathedar, Giani Kirpal Singh, which accused the Damdami Taksal and the All India Sikh Students Federation (AISSF) "of turning the gurus' places of worship into battlefields" and alleged that "non-believers and naxalites had infiltrated these bodies to implement the old conspiracy of finishing off the Sikh religion. Sikh youth are being killed and the Akali leaders are their special target. They want to usurp the SGPC which the Sikhs got after great sacrifices."

While there was no denying the propaganda mileage gained through the sarbat khalsa, the Akalis were dragging their feet in translating this into action which would see the militants out.

Adding more than a touch of drama, the SGPC's controversial chief, Gurcharan Singh Tohra, dramatically announced his resignation. The SGPC is scheduled to meet on March 1 to consider the resignation, and discussions have been under way in the Akali Dal as well as with some Taksal leaders to see if a candidate for the SGPC presidency acceptable to all can be found.

But discordant voices were also heard with Prakash Singh Badal warning against any move to send the police into the temple complex. "The day you send the police into the Golden Temple the Akali party will be finished for ever." Barnala disagreed and made no secret of it. "The rod is the only answer now for these spoiled boys. If we don't send the police in now, tomorrow the army will have to go." The familiar diatribes against the Centre for failing to implement the Punjab accord, however, drew better response but the fact that listed speakers like Finance Minister Balwant Singh, Sukhjinder Singh and Amrinder Singh did not speak was indication enough that

BHAWAN SINGH

Sikh leaders at the sarbat khalsa; and (right) the congregation: strong support

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the Akalis had to stand united if they were to survive. CPI(M) politburo member Harkishan Singh Surjeet put their dilemma succintly: "The Akalis will have to take control of the Golden Temple and the Akal Takht. For a theocratic party, the loss of its religious citadel means loss of the leadership of the Sikhs."

While there was no denying the propaganda mileage gained through the sarbat khalsa, it was obvious to discerning political observers that the Akalis were dragging their feet in translating this into urgent positive action which would see the militants out of the Golden Temple. But to be fair, their options here are limited. Police action in the Golden Temple or even sending in troops will completely inflame Sikh opinion in the state and probably result in the fall of the Barnala Government. In fact the Taksal and the AISSF had planned massive morchas to take control over various gurudwaras in case of precisely such an eventuality. As Tohra remarked: "Taking up arms is easy—but against your own people it is counterproductive."

Another option put forward by Sikhs like Lieutenant-General Jagjit Singh Aurora (retd), was to send peaceful jathas chanting satnam wahe guru to take control of the complex. Says Aurora: "These jathas should go every day and stay there till the complex swells with men and women and thereby end the Taksal's supremacy." But the Taksal was playing its cards shrewdly. Said Mohkam Singh, acting chief of the Taksal: "We are only doing kar seva here and except for some rooms where the kar seva offices are located, we interfere in no other matter."

However, AISSF convenor Harinder Singh Kahlon expressed the attitude of the Taksal when he said: "We shall never let the dirty hands of Tohra, Kirpal Singh and Sahib Singh touch the kar seva. There shall be no compromise on the positions of the Akal Takht chief and the head priest of the Golden Temple."

Till late last fortnight there were no indications whether a new proposal—that the two priests appointed by the Taksal and five by the SGPC would quit and a common committee take over the seat of Sikh power—had got anywhere but it is clear that the militants have mellowed towards the Barnala Government. It is also disturbing.

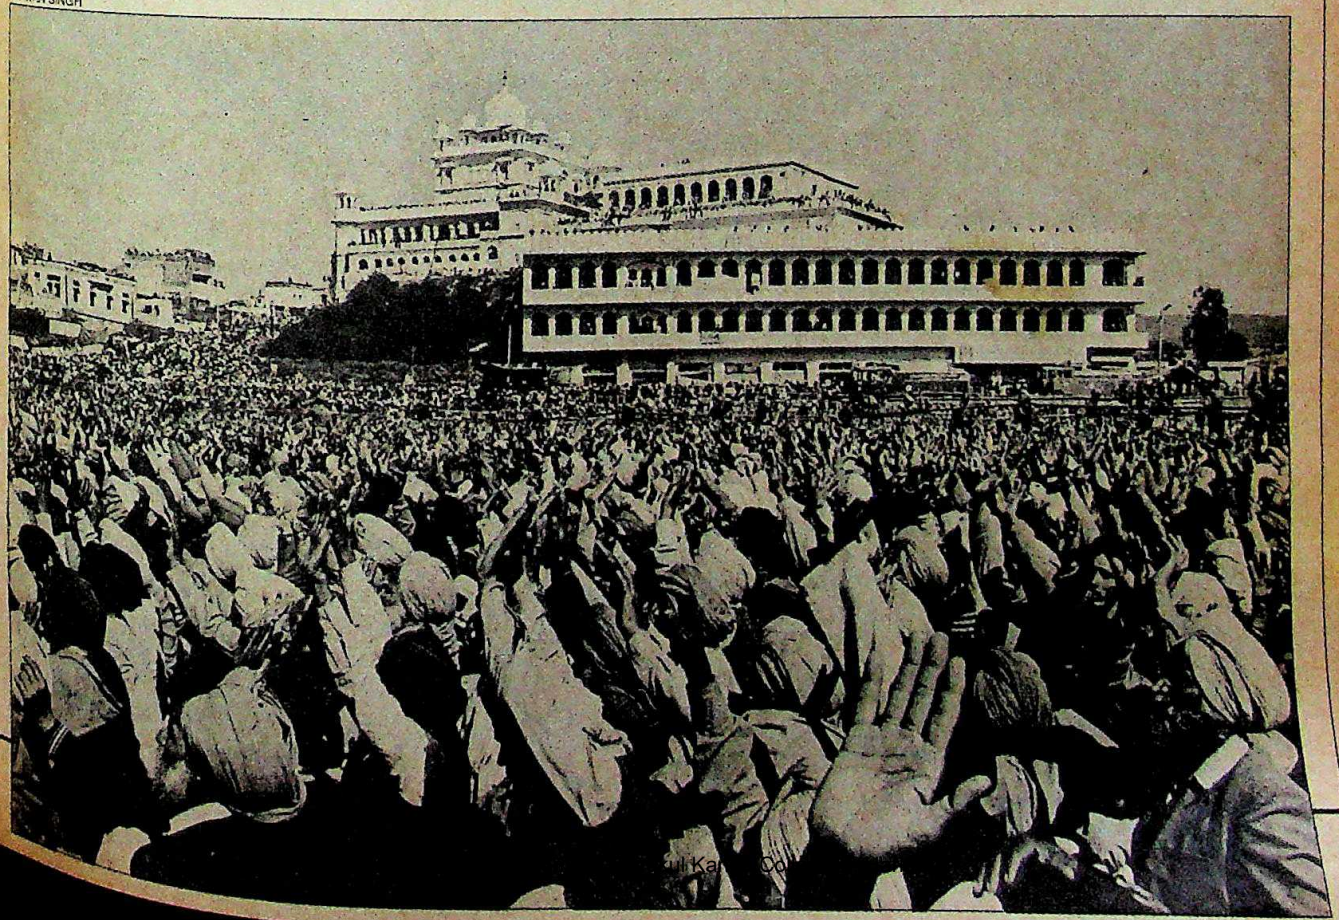
There were no indications whether a new proposal—that the two priests appointed by the Taksal and five by the SGPC would quit and a common committee take over—had got anywhere.

The spiral of violence has lent a hard edge to the situation. Gun-toting terrorists clad in police uniforms looted an armoury of the Government Railway Police in Tarn Taran taking away 16 rifles and 440 rounds of ammunition. Said an angry Jalandhar Range DIG P.C.Dogra: "It is an apology for an armoury. How can disabled and weak home guards take care of an armoury. The terrorists coolly woke up the sleeping guards, got the keys of the wooden box and escaped in a stolen jeep." In Ghuman village near Batala, terrorists gunned down Makhan Singh, a known police informer, and Des Raj, the third police officer to die in Gurdaspur district. Barnala reacted quickly. "We have launched a man-hunt and are hopeful of good results. We must restore peace at all costs," he declared.

Adding to Barnala's woes, the Centre is considering a second commission on the transfer of Hindi-speaking areas to Haryana in lieu of Chandigarh. State Finance Minister Balwant Singh, who met Congress(I) Vice-President Arjun Singh, has conveyed the Akali readiness to accept a second commission which, the Akalis feel, should identify areas on the basis of contiguity, language affinity and the basic unit of a village as contained in the accord. They also want the task to be completed by March 31 at the latest.

Worst of all, rising communal ten-

BHAWAN SINGH



Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

sions in Batala saw angry Shiv Sena activists clash with AISSF youths. Timely police intervention prevented matters from getting out of hand and district police chief J.P. Birdi told INDIA TODAY: "Both sides were fully prepared and the city would have been in flames but for imposition of curfew." Sensing the mood among the Hindus—who had threatened to go on a trishul march from Amritsar to Chandigarh—Akali minister Surjit Singh Virk was despatched to soothe tempers and he conceded some of the demands put forward by the Shiv Sena leader Rama Kant Jalota. These included treating Hindu victims of terrorism on par with Sikhs by giving them government jobs, compensation and interest-free loans. The trishul march to Chandigarh was cancelled but the acceptance of the demands was a shot in the arm for the Shiv Sena which is now

RAVI-BEAS WATERS

Rivers of Ire

IT IS now dawning on all the midwives who produced the Punjab accord that it was a hasty document with more pitfalls than they could possibly have perceived. The snags that cropped up with the first part of the accord, the failure to transfer Chandigarh by the stipulated date of January 26, could well pale into comparison with the problems that the pact's more substantive part, the distribution of the Ravi-Beas waters, could run into. Already any number of doubts have surfaced about the task of the one-man tribunal set up by a presidential ordinance on January 24.

On the face of it, the terms of the tribunal under the sitting Supreme Court Judge V. Balakrishna Eradi look straightforward. "The tribunal will verify the quantum of usage of water claimed by the farmers of Punjab, Haryana and Rajasthan from the Ravi-Beas system as on July 1, 1985, and the waters used for consumptive purposes and for the adjudication of the claims of Punjab and Haryana regarding the shares in their remaining waters. Paragraph 9.1 of the Punjab Settlement provides that the farmers of the states of Punjab, Haryana and Rajasthan will continue to get water not less than what they were using from the Ravi-Beas system on July 1, 1985, and that waters used for consumptive purposes will also remain unaffected and the quantum of usage so claimed shall be verified by a tribunal, referred to in paragraph 9.2 of the settlement." Not a word away from the terms of the accord.

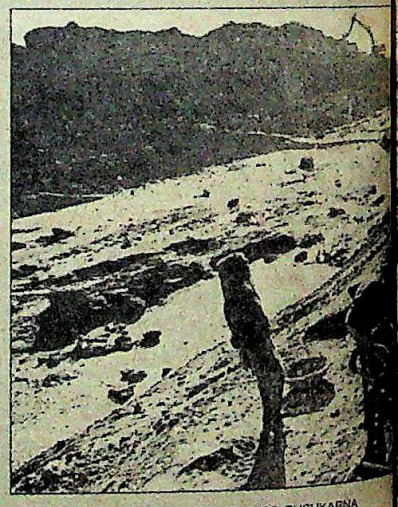
In fact, the tribunal's job is forbidding. The first problem which will crop up is: is Rajasthan's share also to be adjudicated? Or, is Eradi to distribute between Punjab and Haryana what is left after Rajasthan is given its share? Rajasthan has got 8.6 million acre feet (MAF) out of 17.17 MAF in all the four accords between 1954 and 1981. But, asks Punjab, if Rajasthan's share is not to be affected then why determine how much it was using on July 1, 1985? However, Rajasthan Chief Minister Harideo Joshi asserts: "Though our use as on July 1 is to be determined the tribunal will adjudicate the claim of Punjab and Haryana in their remaining waters. The crucial word in the accord is 'their'."

Punjab's Attorney-General Gurdarshan Singh Grewal says the confusion arises out of the use of the words "the" and "their". Finance Minister Balwant Singh, one of the architects of the accord, says that the word "their" was added later. "Originally, in the memorandum of settlement the words were 'the remaining water' and not 'their remaining', which means Rajasthan gets only what it was using on July 1 and the remaining water is to be divided between Punjab and Haryana." Even now Punjab's Law Department maintains that the words "their waters", refers to the waters left after the flow to the three states on July 1, is measured. If, however, the Eradi panel accepts Rajasthan's point, then there will be very little water left to adjudicate. Bhakra and Beas board management sources say that there will be hardly 1.5 MAF left, after the Rs 1,200 crore Thein Dam is completed, to be shared between Punjab and Haryana.

How the tribunal, whose decision will be binding on all parties and beyond the purview of the courts, will actually apportion the remaining waters is also not clearly spelt out. Is it to go by the existing laws or can it apply its own yardstick to sort out this two decades old problem? Laments Prakash Singh Badal: "We have all along maintained that the river waters dispute should be settled as per the riparian or river valley law as applied earlier in the cases of Narbada and Kaveri river waters dispute either by a tribunal set up under the River Waters Dispute Act, or by the Supreme Court. Here a one-judge tribunal with arbitrary powers is provided."

What piques Punjab is that nobody seems to be worried about the state of its land water resources. Says Punjab Irrigation and Power Commissioner S.S. Boparai: "Out of the 33 MAF waters available in the three Punjab rivers,

The link canal: political wedge



PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

"Punjab will become a place where the dead tree gives no shelter, the cricket no relief, and the dry stone no sound of water."

S.S. BARNALA
chief minister, Punjab

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

sprouting all over Punjab.

But the chief minister will be hard put to explain away the rise in terrorism. Even more, his own partymen will not spare him since he has yet to make good on his promise of filling important vacancies in boards and corporations. But most of all remains the disturbing fact that with force ruled out, the Akali Government hadn't come up with a workable solution to the take-over of the Golden Temple by the militants. Prior to the sarbat khalsa, Amarinder Singh had several rounds of talks with the Taksal and AISSF people in a bid to defuse the mounting crisis. Nothing came of it, and if nothing now comes of the behind-the-scenes negotiations believed to be under way between the militants and the state authorities, the outlook for Barnala and Punjab is grim.

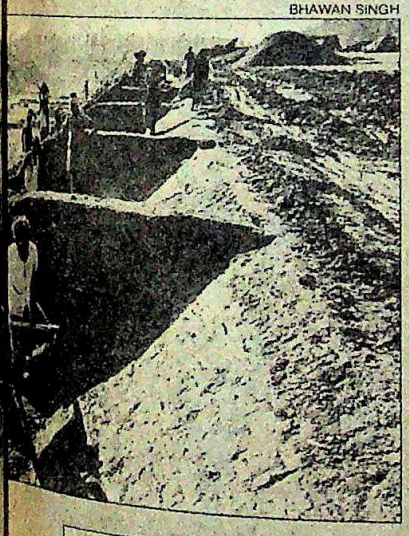
—GOBIND THUKRAL

about 20 MAF already flows to other states. All the main rivers have been dammed up and their waters distributed. There is a critical situation in the state. The water table has fallen in half of the state: in some areas it has gone down by 10 metres in the years 1975 to 1984. As many as 60 out of the state's 118 blocks are black areas where no tube-wells can be allowed. Twenty-two blocks falling in grey areas are turning fast black. Another 14 have saline water. There are only 22 white blocks—one fifth of the total."

In a related study, the water resources cell of the Punjab Agricultural University, Ludhiana, pointed out that while south-west Punjab, where sub-soil water is turning saline and the water table rising, is becoming uncultivable (five lakh acres have already become waterlogged), in the central districts, where the table has been falling, the state is turning into a desert.

"We should be declared a no-further-exploitation-by-transfer area," pleads Boparai. Says Chief Minister S.S. Barnala: "We have been generous all along and now fear, in the words of T.S. Eliot, that Punjab will become 'a place where the dead tree gives no shelter, the cricket no relief, and the dry stone no sound of water.' Let any other state show even half the generosity." He quotes the Narbada waters award, that deprived Rajasthan of any water since it is not a riparian state, as a precedent that should be applied here also.

BHAWAN SINGH



Five weeks have passed since the ordinance was issued but the Akalis have yet to make their stand on it public. "We are studying it," says Barnala evasively. Privately, the Akalis fear that the vast powers available to Justice Eradi could threaten the accord as it happened in the case of the K.M. Matthew Commission. Privately the ministers fear that the findings of this tribunal could be more shocking than Matthew's. The judge should have been provided with a clear guideline, they feel. "We have never got any justice from these commissions and tribunals so far," warns Badal, now threatening to stop the digging of the Sutlej-Yamuna Link(SYL) canal.

This is one issue on which Badal and the All India Sikh Students' Federation (AISSF) are in agreement. Says the AISSF leader Harinder Singh Kahlon: "There should be only bilateral agreements between Punjab and Rajasthan, Punjab and Haryana for the supply of waters for a limited period and that too for a consideration." And asks: "Why is the Centre running away from the law of the land in case of Punjab"; threatening to fill the dug out portions of the SYL. "If there is no justice on waters, we shall even stop the existing flows and we know how to do it."

Haryana has been equally vexed on the issue. "Our basic share of 3.5 MAF allotted in 1981 should not be disturbed at any cost," warns Haryana Pradesh Congress Committee(I) President Birender Singh. Says State Power and Irrigation Minister Shamsher Singh Surjewala: "The water issue is a matter of life and death for us." In fact, most Haryana Congress(I) politicians say privately that Chandigarh and Abohar and Fazilka are no issues. "Let Punjab have all the territory and give us the water," they say. This explains their repeated demand for the timely completion of the SYL canal. Only if the Centre takes over its construction will it be ready by August 15, they chorus. The AISSF and the Badal faction in the Akali Dal are equally determined to do everything to stop its construction.

As to the determination of the water inflow from Ravi and Beas on July 1, the figures being put across by Punjab and Haryana are at great variance, threatening to make Justice Eradi's job that much more daunting. Punjab Irrigation Department maintains that it was using 4.867 MAF, Haryana 1.135 MAF and Rajasthan 4.630 MAF out of a total availability of 10.05 MAF. But Haryana maintains that Punjab and Haryana were using the same amount of water on July 1. Says Surjewala: "Punjab's claims is false. Our records show that we were using 1.7 MAF and Punjab 1.9 MAF."

There is an urgent need to depoliticise the whole issue, independently assess the need of the three states, and settle the water dispute once and for all before more blood spills into Punjab's rivers and canals.

—GOBIND THUKRAL

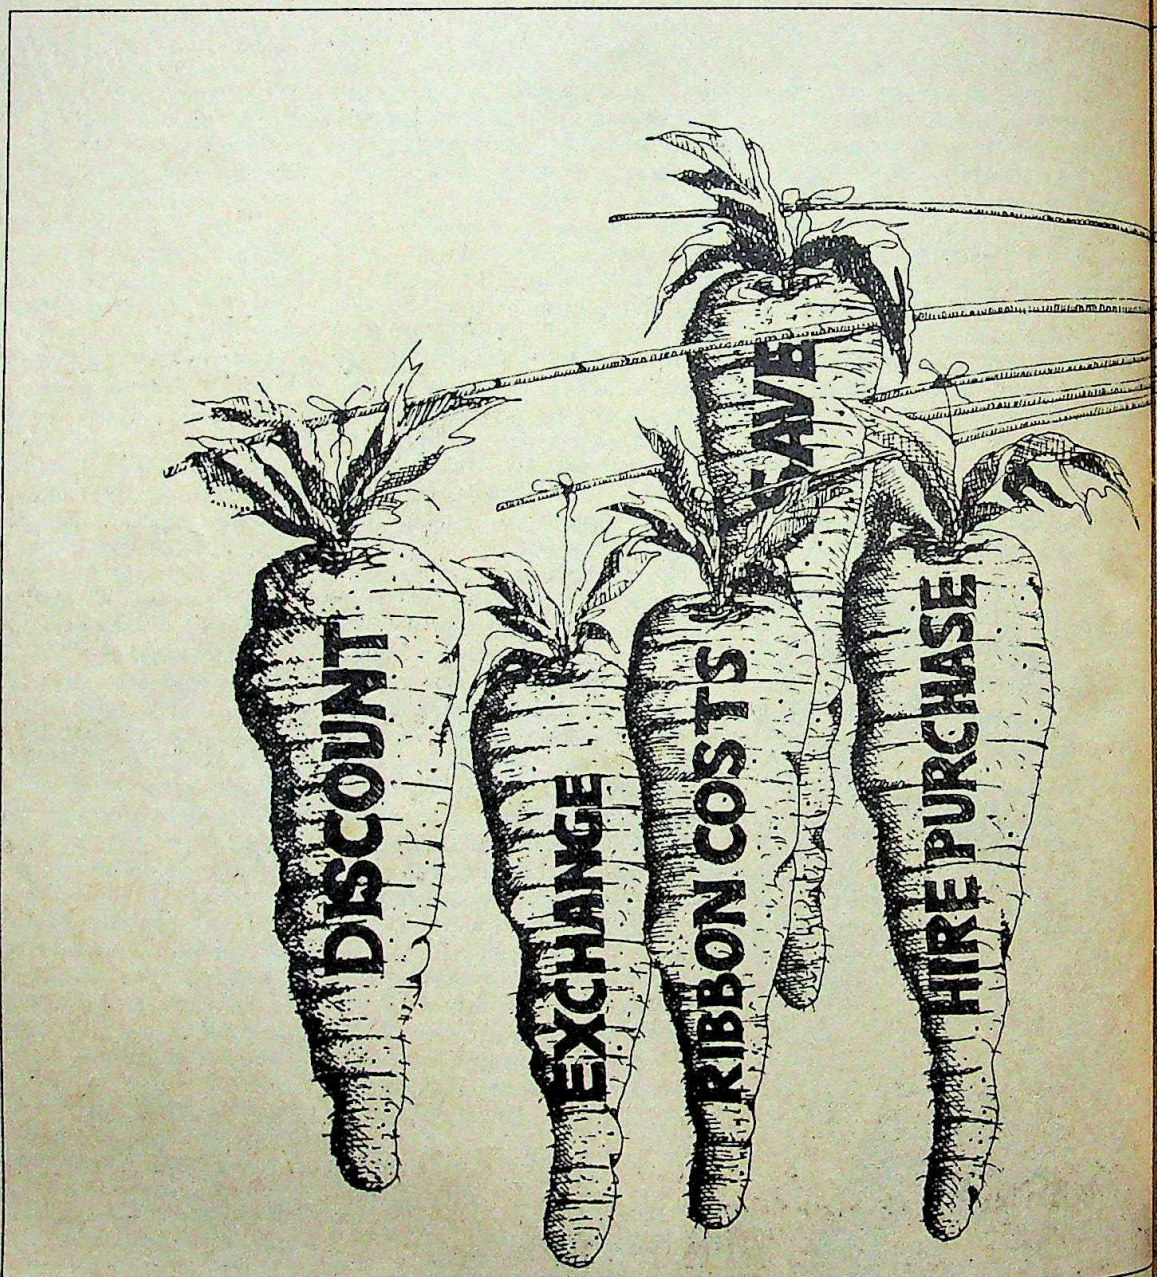
"Our basic share (in the waters) of 3.5 million acre feet allotted in 1981 should not be disturbed at any cost."

BIRENDER SINGH
president, Haryana, PCCI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The big names in the Electronic Typewriter business are using every marketing gimmick in the book, to sell their machines.



TACKER
ELECTRONIC | CALLIGRAPHERS

Bringing style and elegance to corporate documentation

For more details or a demonstration, contact us at :

BANGALORE, Tel: 568324; BOMBAY, Tel: 215585; CALCUTTA, Tel: 237564; CHANDIGARH Tel: 40308; COCHIN, Tel: 352946, 353729; DEHRADUN, Tel: 28759; HYDERABAD, Tel: 236008; INDORE, Tel: 7354, 34347; JALANDHAR, Tel: 77621; JAIPUR, Tel: 77737; KOTTAYAM, Tel: 4785; MADRAS, Tel: 87733, 82822; PUNE, Tel: 54732; QUILON, Tel: 4648; SHIMLA, Tel: 2874, 6457; TRIVANDRUM, Tel: 448.

INTERFACE-1423

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Why isn't Tacker doing the same?

The truth behind some of those 'discount' and 'save money' offers, could really make your hair stand on end.

Consider one offer : your old cartridges will be refilled, so you can 'save' on ribbon costs. The catch? You have to send in 20 cartridges at one time!

Consider Tacker : we'll replace ribbons too—just one, if you like. And at a lower cost than anyone else—Rs. 28 each.

Consider another offer : pay about Rs. 16,000 in supposedly easy 'interest free instalments', and give up your manual typewriter in exchange.

Then, consider Tacker : pay Rs. 13,800. Keep your faithful old manual and take delivery of a brand new machine within 24 hours.

Besides, advertised prices are nothing to go by. Consider one company : advertised prices are around Rs. 11,000. However, after excise and taxes, etc. you end up paying about Rs. 15,000.

Consider Tacker : We don't advertise price, but if you contact us, the price we quote (Rs. 13,800 for the basic model) is the price you'll pay. No 'excise' extra, no strings attached.

So you see, Tacker doesn't need sales stunts. Simply because we're the most cost-effective to start with.

Find out just how cost-effective Tacker can be. Fill in this coupon, and send it to us at the address below.

I'd like ☐ product literature.
☐ a call from your executive.
☐ a demonstration.

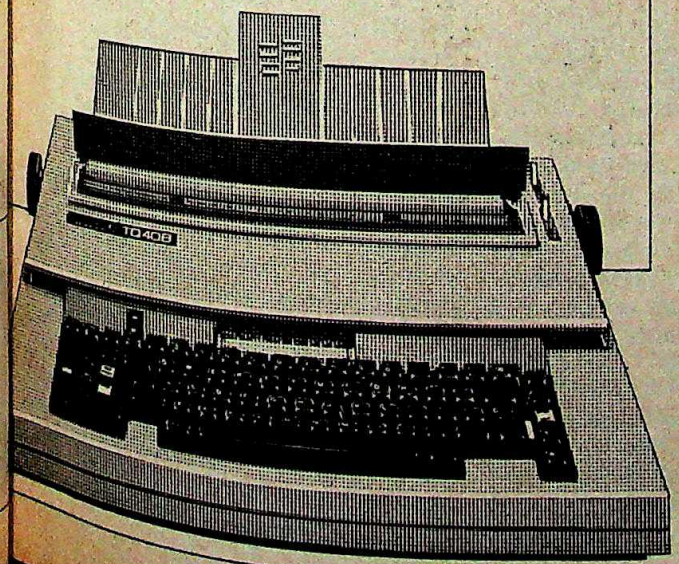
Name _____

Designation _____

Company _____

Address _____

_____ Tel. No. _____



COMMUNICATION SERVICES (INDIA) PVT. LTD.
Sagar Apartments, 6 Tilak Marg, New Delhi-110 001.
Phones : 383322, 381772. Grams : ELETYPE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAMIL NADU

Reversal of Roles

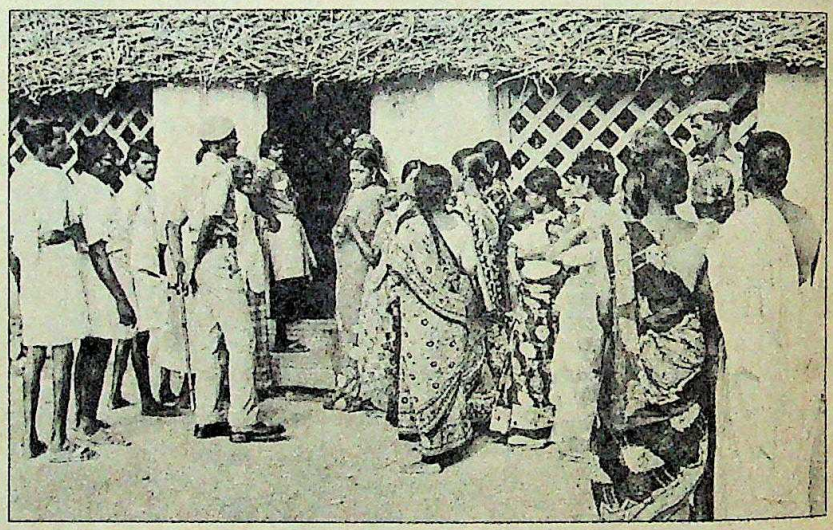
FOR THE first time since the charismatic M.G. Ramachandran blazoned his way into the chief minister's chair nine years ago, his larger than life image has been deflated to more life-like proportions. As his All India Anna Dravida Munnetra Kazhagam (AIADMK) stared wide-eyed at an unprecedented electoral defeat last week, the stunning realisation was slowly dawning on the party that the magical hold their demi-god patriarch had on Tamil Nadu's three crore voters was now beginning to fade.

The rout could not have been more devastating. In elections to 97 municipalities, AIADMK candidates won in only 11 even though it contested in 58. In contrast, its arch-rivals, the Dravida Munnetra Kazhagam (DMK) romped home in 64, emerging a clear winner in what was widely labelled as a mini general election in the state. Said Karunanidhi, DMK leader, with a confidence that had been lacking hitherto: "The people are fed up with this immobilised government."

The only consolation the ruling party could draw from the elections to the local bodies, held after a long lapse of 16 years, was its good showing in the election of president of panchayat unions, where the AIADMK-Congress(I) combine finished with over 50 per cent of the total seats. Said an AIADMK minister who did not want to be quoted: "The election results prove that our party and chief minister continue to retain their hold over the rural people who constitute the majority.

But the brave words could not hide the fact that after three successive triumphs in the Assembly elections, the gloss was finally gone. With MGR still clearly unable to end the bitter war of succession between the state Information Minister R.M. Veerappan and the party's Propaganda Secretary Jayalalitha Jayaram, it was clearly a time for introspection. Said an AIADMK minister known to be close to Jayalalitha: "The poor performance of the AIADMK shows the need for MGR to evolve a second line of ownership."

The AIADMK-Congress(I) citadels crumbled one by one. In the four southern districts of Madurai, Ramanathapuram, Tirunelveli and Kanyakumari, which are largely rural and have long been the AIADMK's strongholds, the DMK-led opposition combine made a virtual sweep. In seven municipalities in Madurai district, the AIADMK and the Congress(I) could only take one each while the DMK won convincingly in the other five. In four municipalities in Kanyakumari, the DMK took two and the CPI(M) the other two. But the most startling result came from North Arcot district, in the normally non-aligned north of the state. Here the DMK made a clean sweep, taking all 12 municipalities.



Voters outside a booth in Alandur

Such is the undoubted popularity of the Puratchi Thalaivar (Revolutionary Hero)—the honorific that MGR is better known by—that the AIADMK's wipeout came as a total surprise. Cho Ramaswamy, senior Janata Party leader was so overwhelmed by the victory of two partymen (who contested as independents) in the municipal elections that the normally quick-on-repartee editor of Tughlak could only say: "I cannot rightaway tell you what were the factors responsible for the Opposition's victory."

But perhaps the most mystified were the AIADMK workers. After the party's triumph in the Cheyyar by-elections in January, where too neither MGR nor Jayalalitha went to campaign, the AIADMK leaders were so sure they would win in the local bodies' elections that they continued to be complacent in the face of gathering stormclouds. P. Kannan, Jayalalitha's lieutenant and MP from Salem, was expelled from the party a week before the elections for his open defiance of MGR's directive to disband the Jayalalitha Fans Association. This was followed by the suspension of a few other followers.

The result was that many of Jayalalitha's followers turned rebels and contested the polls as independents when they were denied the party ticket. According to one reliable estimate, there were 20 AIADMK rebel candidates in the fray. The case of Varadarajan, known to be close to Kannan, who successfully contested the elections to the Salem constituency was typical. Kannan and others openly campaigned for the rebels. The results, not surprisingly, favoured the Opposition. Of eight municipalities, the DMK took seven while the Congress won in Edapaddi; the AIADMK drew a blank.

The Congress(I) too paid for infighting between the groups led by Congress(I) General Secretary G.K.Moopanar and matinee idol and Rajya Sabha MP Sivaji Ganesan. As has been the trend, the Ganesan faction was given the short shrift in the distribution of tickets. Ganesan's fans in North Arcot decided enough was enough and in Arkonam, for instance, some of Ganesan's followers openly campaigned for an independent candidate against the party's official candidate. In the last assembly elections the DMK had been routed in North Arcot; this time it swept

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

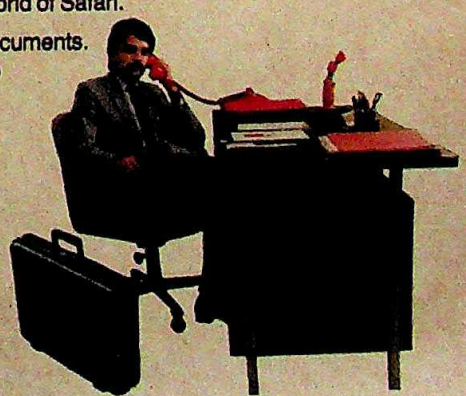
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Even a Safari briefcase can't add to your status. It all depends on what you carry inside.

If by any chance you are carrying long term strategic plans for your company, you are unmistakably a top honcho. A tome on tax planning in your briefcase will definitely place you in senior management. If it is merely a bunch of call reports, you must still be a breathless beginner on the corporate scene. This is the high tension world of Safari.

Now look at the conveniences. Plenty of room for papers. Portfolio for documents. Pockets for pens, calculator, cheque book. At full load, a Safari briefcase is still light to carry around. Anywhere.

Safari. It survives.



safari

The luggage that knows its business.

ULKA-SL-700-86

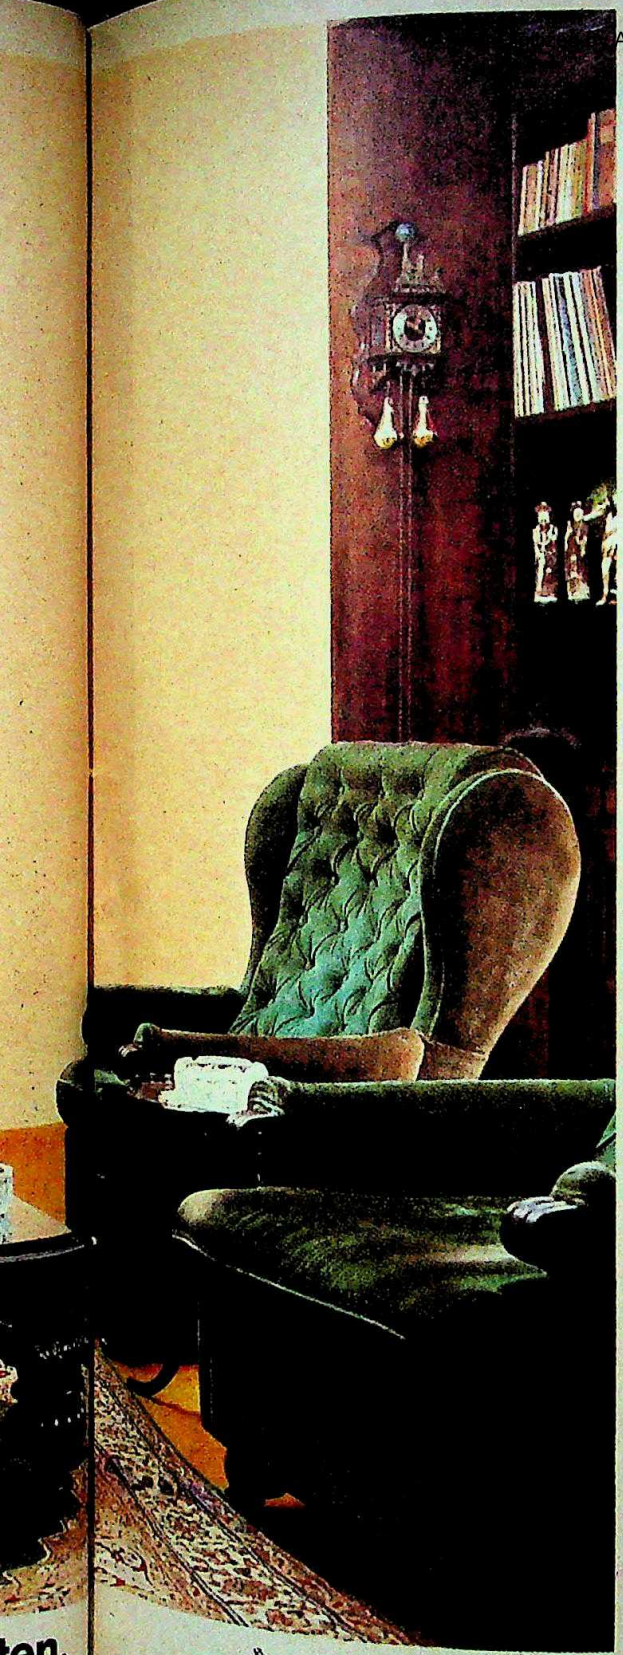
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When elegance whispers, the world stops to listen.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Into this world of classics, literature and poetry, comes an exquisite new wall finish. Garcoat Petals.

Experience nature's most elegant expression. Captured in a paint so distinctive. So luxurious.

Surround yourself with the quiet feel of flowers softly blooming on your walls.

Let your home whisper your exquisite taste. With Petals. Garcoat Petals.

We've tied up for high performance paints, with Sherwin Williams, USA, the world's largest paint company.

GARCOAT PETALS

You have good taste. Let it show.

Garware Paints Ltd. GARWARE गरवारे

SPEER 111 86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UP TO NOW, PCs WERE STRICTLY SINGLE USER. NO MORE.

THE WIPRO PC IS HERE.

The biggest name in minicomputers now offers you a small business computer that works like three ordinary PCs put together.

The WIPRO PC.

It lets up to three people use the same resources. And run different programs. At the same time. With its multiuser DBOS. And its multi-terminal support.*

So while you review your outstandings, your accountant prints out your general ledger. And your secretary does the word processing. Simultaneously.

And, of course, you get the single user MS-DOS. So you can run the entire library of IBM PC software. From Lotus 1-2-3 to Wordstar... dBase III to Flight Simulator.

You also get the multi-tasking Concurrent CP/M Operating System, which lets up to 4 different programs run on the same terminal. Simultaneously.

But that's not all. With the WIPRO PC, you get a whole lot extra.

It doesn't stop at running IBM PC software. So you get a large number of other ready-to-use software packages designed specifically for the Indian user.

What's more, it also offers extra on-line storage up to 40 MB. An extra large 14" colour or monochrome display. A versatile 97-key keyboard. Four extra IBM PC compatible slots. Just about everything you could ask for!

And the fact that it's from WIPRO means you get nothing less than the very best as far as service support goes. Whether it's hardware maintenance or software implementation. Support that makes WIPRO the most trusted name in the computer business.

And even when it comes to price, this package is unbeatable. For Rs 48,000, you get a completely operational, ready-to-use WIPRO PC. Including 256 K Bytes of memory and a printer.

So look out for the WIPRO PC. The only limit to how much it can do is your imagination.

The WIPRO PC/XT, which includes a 10 MB Winchester disk drive, 256 K Bytes of memory and a printer, is priced at Rs 70,000.

 Supported only on the WIPRO PC/XT.*

To see, hear or know more about the WIPRO PC, call or write to:

WIPRO Information Technology Ltd.
S B Towers
88 Mahatma Gandhi Road
Bangalore 560 001
Phone: 569622 Telex: 845-8356

WIPRO PC

IBM® PC, IBM are registered trademarks of International Business Machines Corporation.

MS-DOS is a registered trademark of Microsoft Corporation.

CP/M is a registered trademark of Digital Research Inc.

A great deal more. For a good deal less.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the board.

The infighting in both the parties also told on the quality of the candidates they put up. Since both parties had to perform delicate balancing acts between the feuding factions, the reputation of the candidate was not given the importance it deserves in local body elections. Admitted a Congress(I) leader close to Ganesan: "The DMK did a very clever thing by invariably picking people with a good reputation. The policy paid rich dividends."

But perhaps the biggest handicap that the AIADMK-Congress(I) combine faced was the absence of MGR and Jayalalitha from the campaigning. It has always been the rousing oratory of MGR and his undoubted charisma, or in his absence the glamorous appeal of Jayalalitha that has swayed the Tamil masses. This time around, both were absent; MGR is still not able to speak fluently enough to address public meetings and Jayalalitha, sulking from the snub in January, was at home in her Madras residence. Said E.R. Kumaraswamy, a marginal farmer of Periyar district: "We poor farmers have a lot of affection for MGR but we are not able to see or hear him. So we can only vote for people who come to us and promise to look into our problems." It is now expected that Jayalalitha may stage her second comeback. Said an AIADMK minister: "These elections have proved that Jayalalitha is indispensable for elections."

The AIADMK's only hope now is the Supreme Court, where a petition filed by a former Madras mayor has challenged the elections itself. But whatever the fate of the petition, the outcome of the local bodies elections has confirmed the AIADMK leaders' apprehensions about the quality of its grassroot support. Nominally, it has a 30 lakh cadre, but since they are all primarily members of MGR fan clubs their political commitment cannot match that of the 15-lakh DMK cadre.

As AIADMK leaders licked their electoral wounds, DMK leaders could barely rein in their soaring hopes. Said K. Manoharan, assistant general secretary of the party: "The election results show a qualitative change in the thinking of the people. Our victory will give us a base on which we can come back to power in the Assembly." It did seem that Tweedledee's time was finally coming to an end and Tweedledum's hour was very near.

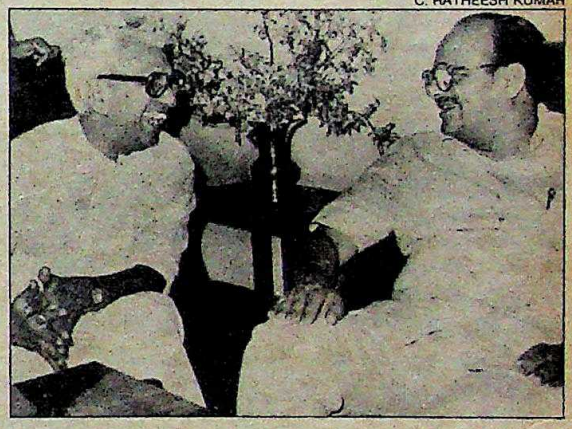
—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

KERALA

In Limbo

KERALA Chief Minister K. Karunakaran's toils last month were reminiscent of the ordeal of Sisyphus, the Greek mythology hero who was forced to roll a boulder uphill. Karunakaran has not hidden his resolve to have a mid-term poll, or at the very least a ministerial reshuffle. But with the biggest coalition partner Kerala Congress steadfastly opposed to either move and the high command unwilling to let Karunakaran ride roughshod over them, even though ostensibly the Congress(I) Parliamentary Board left the decision to him, the stalemate continued. As Kerala Congress leaders K.M. Mani and P.J. Joseph parked themselves in Delhi for consultations with Congress(I) Vice-President Arjun Singh, the final decision on the ticklish issue was postponed till Singh came back from Moscow on March 3.

C. RATHEESH KUMAR



Karunakaran with Arjun Singh: inconclusive discussions

As the political uncertainty dragged on, the administration came to a virtual standstill. Admitted a top bureaucrat: "It is a rudderless government because the important ministers and the chief minister are away most of the time in Delhi or conducting talks in hide-outs." Confessed Pandalam Sudhakaran, a Congress(I) MLA close to the chief minister: "Never before in the history of the state has there been such political uncertainty."

Karunakaran, between half a dozen trips to Delhi and back, asserted: "Either I will have my way or I will resign this time." But the Kerala Congress, which has long been a thorn in the chief minister's flesh, was unwilling to agree to even a reshuffle, let alone a mid-term poll. Mani the finance minister and Kerala Congress strongman, was as determined to present his eighth budget as Karunakaran was to prevent him. Said he: "In coalition politics there is a lot of give and take but we will not allow our party to be bulldozed by others even if we have to quit the Government."

Added Dr K.C. Joseph, MLA and party strategist: "If we are stripped off our present portfolios and still continue in the Government it would be political harakiri." The party's leaders argue that related issues—like seat allocation and, if UDF wins the election, of the portfolios it would get—must be sorted out before they give their consent to any change.

Even though the Muslim League was dragging its feet, it may finally go along. Some of its top leaders are known to be close to Karunakaran. Last week state Muslim League President S. Thangal met Karunakaran in Calicut and reportedly assured him that the League would support him at the right time.

Karunakaran was also kept busy trying to outmanoeuvre his detractors inside the party. He is known to be keen to take the home portfolio away from Vayalar Ravi, who leads the dissidents in the state. Last fortnight when the CPI(M) state General Secretary Achuthanandan demanded an inquiry into Ravi's alleged links with CIA agent Rama Swarup, Karunakaran sprang a surprise by expressing his readiness to inquire into the allegation if definite evidence was provided. Said Ravi: "I was a little surprised by the chief minister's statement as I had made it clear that I was consulting my lawyers for a defamation suit against Achuthanandan."

Time is fast running out. The budget has not merely to be introduced, it has also to be debated and passed before the month-end. With Karunakaran and the Kerala Congress leaders not even exchanging a word even though they were together in Delhi's Kerala House for three days, the portents for a rapprochement were not good. Even for Kerala's mercurial politics, last month's tension and uncertainty was extraordinary.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONGRESS (I)

Salvage Operation

NOW IS the time for all good men to come to the aid of the party. That was the inherent message that Congress(I) President and Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi sent out last fortnight as he participated in an unusual flurry of party activity. With the Opposition's attack becoming increasingly vehement, the fervent appeal to his men both in the party and the Government to join hands against the enemy went out none too soon. And though the party rallied around him, there was some doubt if the urgency of the appeal had gone home.

Rajiv sat through an eight-hour-long Congress Working Committee (CWC) meeting, participated in businesslike deliberations of the nine-member Congress Parliamentary Board (CPB), attended a meeting of the 570-member Congress Parliamentary Party and held a series of discussions with his senior political aides.For the better part of the deliberations, Rajiv heard his partymen devise ways and means to counter the political snarl-ups ranging from the hike in prices to the growing alienation of the Muslims.

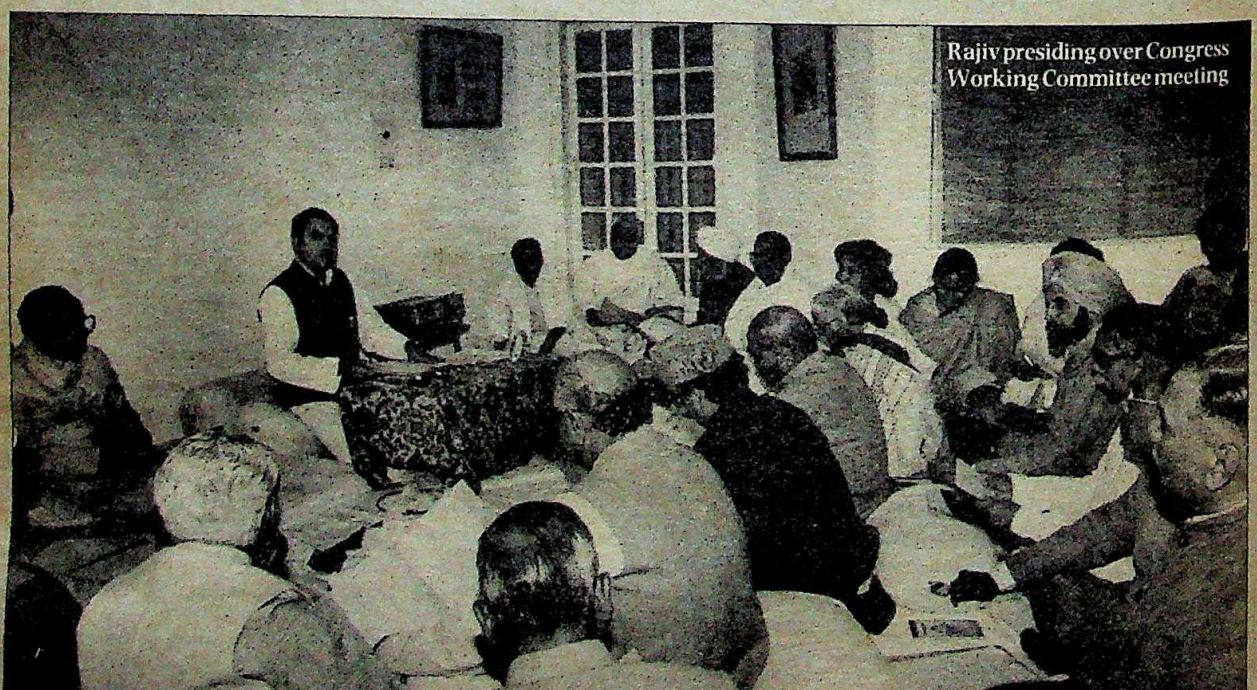
Various party forums worked out their strategy for stemming the growing unpopularity of the party and its president. In the end, the party president's word prevailed. Barely a fortnight ago the CWC had censured the Government by asking it to reduce the price increases: this time it expressed satisfaction that its word had been honoured and decided to support the decisions. Said All-India Congress(I) Committee (AICC-I) General Secretary Najma Heptullah: "The CWC has asked the Government to deal with anti-national and communal forces firmly and we have decided to support the Government on its administrative decisions."

Though the exercise was ostensibly aimed at demarcating the party and the Government, never was it more evident that the party was only a reflection of the Government. Anxious to involve each important functionary in both the Government and the party in the decision-making process, Rajiv invited many leaders to the CWC meeting who are not its members. These included all Congress(I) chief ministers, all PCC(I) chiefs and important cabinet ministers.

Predictably, the major preoccupation at all the meetings was the fast eroding credibility of the party and its government at the Centre. One of the major worries was the poor showing of public sector units, with many members demanding strict monitoring of the corporations. Said Anand Sharma, a CWC member and president of the Indian Youth Congress(I): "The country can't be forced to pay for the extravagant expenditure and the rampant corruption in the public sector. Why should the efficient sector of the economy pay for the inefficiency?"

Finance Minister Singh went a step further when he told the CWC that he was willing to allow the various ministries to reduce the prices to their original level, but only on the condition that they cut down unnecessary expenses and complete their development projects without any cost and time overruns. Averred Ahmad Patel, the Gujarat PCC(I) president: "We must explain to the people the context in which various fiscal measures are finally taken in the overall interest of

The major preoccupation at all the meetings was the fast eroding credibility of the party and Rajiv's Government at the Centre.



Rajiv presiding over Congress Working Committee meeting

Photographs by CHHAYA KENDRA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

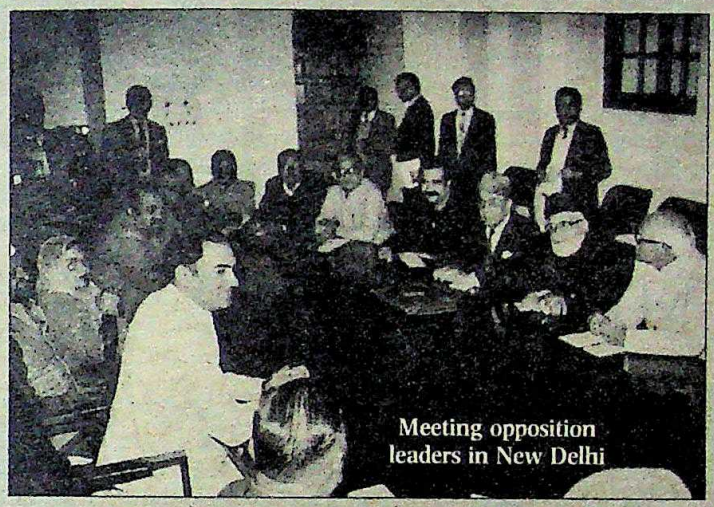
the nation. But the Congressmen have to go out and establish their rapport with the people. There is no other short cut to recover the lost ground."

Not everybody was in agreement at the meeting and Rajiv had to intervene on more than one occasion. A senior cabinet minister made a determined appeal to all Congressmen to file annual details of their assets, as well as of their family members', to the party office, to pay their taxes regularly and honestly to the Government, to observe the prohibition rules and not to violate laws like the Urban Land Ceiling Act. Referring to the last request, a senior MP asked: "Shouldn't a Congressman challenge a law which is discriminatory in nature?" Others said they could not compel their relations to disclose their assets to a party with which they have no direct dealings. But Rajiv said this was necessary for the party to re-establish its credibility.

And, inevitably, there was an attempt, though disguised in nobler motives, to have the party elections postponed. A section of the party felt that the existing state and district units should be activised to fight the Opposition, but others doubted if the current party bosses, all nominated, could effectively mobilise the party cadres. Finally it was decided to hold the party elections as scheduled in July.

BUT RAJIV also made some concessions to the party. He conceded the demand to drastically alter the proposed code of conduct which had asked the near-impossible of Congressmen: not to use imported electronic gadgets, or sell liquor, or attend dinners thrown by affluent businessmen and foreigners. He appointed a committee to come out with a feasible code of conduct. Chuckled a senior member of the CWC later: "This minor concession made all the difference to the debate on other issues."

The party's about-turn on the issue of prices came close on the heels of the Opposition-sponsored bandh in Delhi, West Bengal and Tripura, opposition boycott of the presidential address to the joint session of Parliament, followed by its call for a nation-wide stir on the issue. The party's earlier attempts at taking the wind out of the Opposition's sails by partially withdrawing the price rise boomeranged when the bandh in two states and Delhi received a massive response. Said BJP General Secretary L.K. Advani: "Even we never expected such a response to a call which had been given at such a short notice. It was a reflection of the accumulated anger against the Congress(I) Government." Added the Janata Party's leader in the Lok Sabha, Madhu Dandavate, who moved an adjournment motion on the price rise: "This elitist government can't identify with the aspirations of the poor. The Government can't decide whether to import computers or cut down imports to protect the indigenous industry. The Congress(I) is trapped in its own web of indecision and confusion and the country is being forced to pay the price for its mismanagement."



Meeting opposition leaders in New Delhi

The Opposition refused to give in to the Government's request to allow it to introduce a bill on the rights of Muslim women.

The Opposition's new-found confidence gave it the courage to even reject an invitation from the prime minister for a meeting on the eve of the Parliament session. They stuck to their guns two days later when they refused to give in to the Government's request to allow it to introduce a bill on the rights of Muslim women on the first day itself. Said K.P. Unnikrishnan, the aggressive Congress(S) member of the Lok Sabha: "We can't be treated like his majesty's opposition. The Government wanted our consent for a subject which had very serious ramifications for the country. What baffles us is the Government's attitude towards national problems. It is casual and betrays any sense of commitment to the basic economic issues."

All the opposition leaders were particularly annoyed with the manner in which the prime minister tried to hustle through the bill: they were given copies of the bill only a few minutes before the meeting. Asked an angry Dandavate: "What was the hurry to push through such a sensitive legislation?"

The answer was not far to seek. Initially Rajiv, during his meetings with Congressmen and Muslim leaders, had promised that his government would bring about a comprehensive bill to assuage the hurt feelings of the community. However, he did not fix any deadline because the whole question was to be thrown open to a nation-wide debate. But eventually, he succumbed to the Muslim lobby within his party, which made it clear that it would not support the party unless the fears about Muslim women's rights were removed by amending Section 125 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The party itself was divided on the issue and at least two chief ministers spoke about the dangers of yielding to the pressure of hard core communalists. But Rajiv was advised that any prolonged confrontation with a minority community would cut into the party's vote bank.

Even at the CWC meeting, Rajiv gave instructions to all the chief ministers to deal firmly with communal problems. Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister Vir Bahadur Singh, who is facing violent communal clashes in the state, said that no concessions should be granted under duress to any community but his point of view was ignored as more reports of communal clashes filtered in from all over the country (see page 40). And by the time the party leaders returned to their respective states, they seemed to have made up their minds on one thing: that it is the prime minister who needs to come to the aid of the party.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MUSLIMS

Anger and Hurt

FOR THE country's 77 million Muslims, the trials and tribulations continue. For the Central Government, anxious to assuage the hurt of the Muslims and win back its one-time vote bank, nothing seems to be going right. At the end of a momentous month for the country's largest minority, the community was back where it began: its leadership split between the conservatives and the liberal and its members hurt, angry, divided and confused.

The climax of a traumatic series of events came with the resignation of the Union Minister of State for Energy, Arif Mohammed Khan, in protest against the Government's decision to introduce a bill taking Muslim divorcees out of the provisions of Section 125 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The bill came at the end of a protracted agitation launched by one section of the community's leadership against the Supreme Court's Shah Bano judgement. Khan, 35, had strongly opposed moves to scuttle the court's directive to give maintenance in excess of the provisions in the Shariat. He submitted his resignation the night the Government introduced the Muslim Women (Protection of Rights on Divorce) Bill, calling the controversial bill a "surrender before the conservative leaders of the community".

Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi sought to justify the bill by saying they had consulted a wide spectrum of Muslim opinion "not all obscurantists". But it was clear that the community's leadership was split. The All India Muslim Personal Law Board (AIMPLB), which had spearheaded the agitation against the court judgement, welcomed it. Najma Heptullah, Congress(I) general secretary, had at one stage met its president, Maulana Ali Hussain Naqvi, to sort out last minute problems.

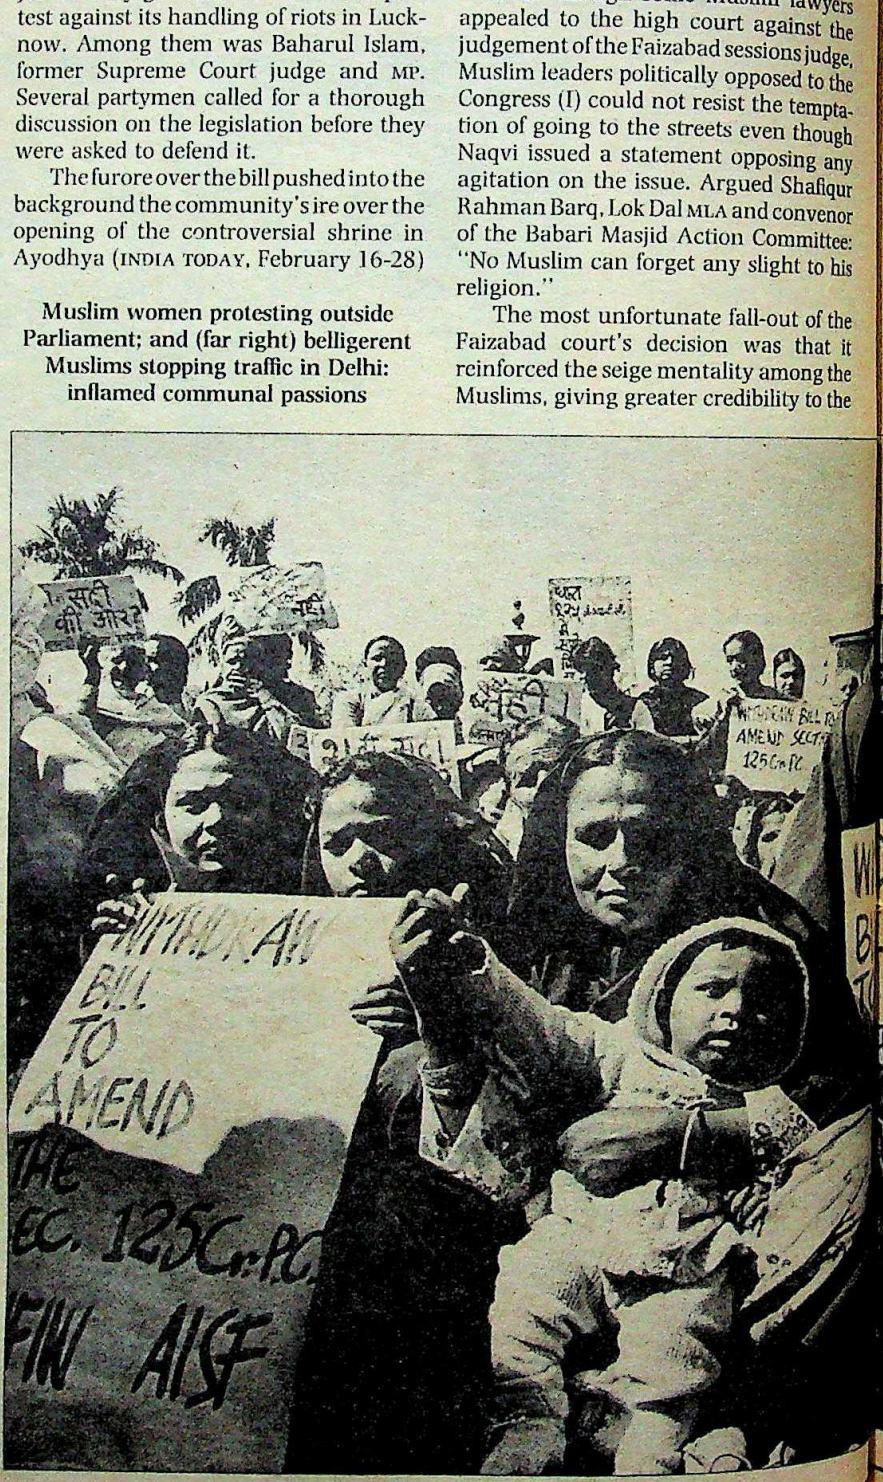
But opposition to the bill was widespread and snowballing. Some 125 prominent Muslims sent a memorandum to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi in support of the court's judgement. Four opposition parties—the CPI(M), CPI, Janata Party and the Bharatiya Janata Party—criticised it in Parliament calling it a retrograde step. Dubbing it a "black bill", CPI(M) MP Saifuddin Chowdhury said: "This bill will throw Muslim women to the wolves."

It was also evident that opinion in the Congress(I) was divided. Many partymen openly congratulated Khan, who had also quit office as a deputy minister in the Janata Paty government in 1978 in protest against its handling of riots in Lucknow. Among them was Baharul Islam, former Supreme Court judge and MP. Several partymen called for a thorough discussion on the legislation before they were asked to defend it.

The furore over the bill pushed into the background the community's ire over the opening of the controversial shrine in Ayodhya (INDIA TODAY, February 16-28) which they claim is the Babari Masjid and the Hindus say is the Ram Janmabhoomi temple. The Muslim anger and the Hindu jubilation led to fatal communal conflicts in six towns across four northern states and the Union territory of Delhi in which 20 people died. Related trouble erupted in five towns in Jammu and Kashmir.

Even though some Muslim lawyers appealed to the high court against the judgement of the Faizabad sessions judge, Muslim leaders politically opposed to the Congress (I) could not resist the temptation of going to the streets even though Naqvi issued a statement opposing any agitation on the issue. Argued Shafiqur Rahman Barq, Lok Dal MLA and convenor of the Babari Masjid Action Committee: "No Muslim can forget any slight to his religion."

The most unfortunate fall-out of the Faizabad court's decision was that it reinforced the seige mentality among the Muslims, giving greater credibility to the



WITHDRAW ALL BILL TO AMEND THE Cr. P.C.
AIMPLB
AIMPLB
AIMPLB

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

section of the community's leadership that has been arguing that the Congress(I) Government is only paying lip service to its commitment to secularism. In Delhi, Syed Shahabuddin, Janata MP and acting president of the overtly non-political apex body of Muslims, the Majlis-e-Mushawrat, gave a call for observing February 14 as a "mourning day". After prayers the same day the Shahi Imam of Delhi's Jama Masjid, Syed Abdullah Bukhari, addressing an unusually large congregation, called for a "jihad" against a "government conspiracy". The crowd leaving the masjid turned violent, pointedly reserving their ire mostly for government buses and policemen. In the police firing that followed, two Muslim youths lost their lives.

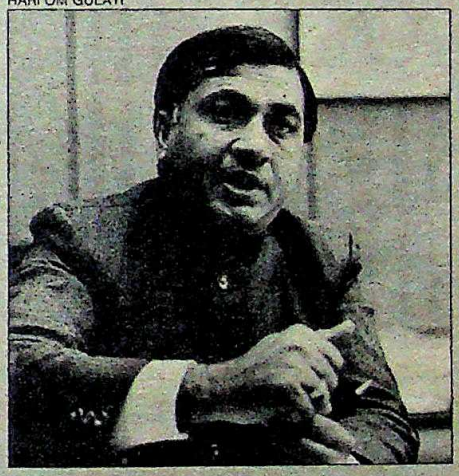
IN LUCKNOW, Maulana Muzaffar Hussain Kichachvi, former Congress(I) MP and president of the Babari Masjid Action Committee, was even more categorical: "I am convinced that this (Central) government does not care for Muslims. Such a thing never happened in the time of Nehru, Shastri or Indira. Why should it happen now?" The action committee called for a state bandh on the same day as the Mushawrat's "mourning day". Not only was the bandh observed in toto by the Muslims, the Muslim hurt was all too apparent. At Lucknow's Teeley Wali Masjid, where normally 150-odd collect for the Friday namaz, 25,000 turned up. At the Asafi Imambara, Shias and Sunnis prayed together. Said Javed Hussain, a Kichachvi disciple: "On the question of the mazhab we are all united."

Amazingly, the Uttar Pradesh Government underestimated the intensity of the feelings aroused. Six Ram Janaki rathyatras sponsored by the Vishwa Hindu Parishad (VHP) were allowed to continue on their way to Ayodhya for 17 days after the lock was opened, passing through flashpoints like Meerut and Aligarh. Luckily nothing happened in those two cities but Musafirkhana, a small town (pop: 15,000) in the Amethi constituency was not so lucky.

The Ram Janaki rathyatra had halted for the night at Musafirkhana, which straddles the two sides of the Lucknow-Varanasi road and has a mixed population. Barely had it set out for Ayodhya in the morning when violence erupted. A vanload of Muslims headed for Rae Bareli for a meeting to be addressed by Maulana Naqvi was asked by the police to take a route away from that of the rath. Soon a row of 30 shops, mostly of Hindus, was aflame. In the communal mayhem that followed, one Hindu was stabbed and a Muslim died of bomb injuries. Two days after the violence, feelings were still raw and resentment and bitterness was pervasive. The families of Sampurnanand Srivastava and Mohammed Hussain Khan have lived for generations in Bhanauli, a medium-sized village (pop:

HARI OM GULATI

HARI OM GULATI



Arif Mohammed Khan submitted his resignation calling the controversial bill a surrender before the conservative leaders of the community.

MANOJ MISHRA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

2,500) separated from Musafirkhana by a railway line. Bhanauli was untouched by the nearby imbroglio but the Ayodhya controversy has had its echo. Khan kept quiet as Srivastava traced the origin of the shrine case and maintained that the Babari Masjid had been constructed over a temple. Asked later if he agreed with Srivastava's version of history, Khan said with a barely concealed sadness: "What is there to say? We built the masjid when we were in power. Now that they are in power they have made it into a mandir."

In Kashmir, the decision inflamed communal passions. Jammu was already tense over the construction of a mosque in the secretariat premises which, the Shiv Sena, a fundamentalist outfit, protested against. The tension spilled over when Shiv Sena workers brandishing swords and firing gunshots in the air took out a procession to celebrate the "liberation" of the Ayodhya shrine. Shiv Sena workers were joined by die-hards from the Jammu-based Vishwa Hindu Raksha Samiti, shouting provocative slogans. The Muslims took out a counter procession lamenting the "handing over of the Babari Masjid to the Hindus" in both Srinagar and Jammu a few days later.

FROM the next day, Jammu was in turmoil with mobs on the rampage. When exaggerated reports of the violence reached the valley the next day, Srinagar too erupted with rampaging mobs raising anti-Hindu and pro-Pakistan slogans. Anantnag, 50 km away, was next, where along with the local Congress(I) office, two temples were also set on fire. However, the Kashmir violence was not entirely spontaneous. Said the Kashmir Times: "The communal tension ...is the accumulated effect of the policies pursued by the present state Government to encourage communal polarisation to meet its own political exigencies."

The maximum number of deaths—eight—came about in Sehore, a district town (pop: 100,000) 35 km from Bhopal, where a Hindu "victory" procession sparked off rioting which raged for two days. Stray violence continued for two days more in spite of a total curfew. It turned out the district administration had ignored two "alerts" from the state capital. But the state Government was not entirely blameless: its notification banning religious processions came only after the riot had erupted.

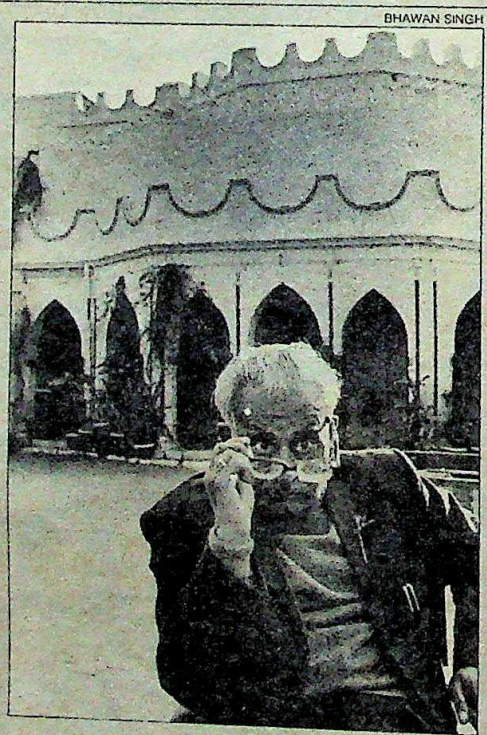
SOCIAL STATUS

Questions of Parity

THE RAM Janmabhoomi issue has revived among Muslims a chronic, deep-seated feeling of persecution. The disenchantment runs deep. Peasants, politicians, lawyers and shopkeepers recently interviewed at random in the Rohilkhand area—the Muslim heart of north India—spoke as if with one voice. While there was no indication that they are ready to plunge into precipitous radical action they are clearly a bitter, despairing lot who readily lay their misfortunes—whether real or imagined—squarely at the doorstep of communalism and discrimination. Their demands are not for the creation of a utopian holy land or for a new political party but for things far simpler—jobs, equality, better police protection, more graveyard land to bury their dead.

One senior Muslim government official explained: "In order to escape from the harshness of everyday life which they find degrading, Muslims by and large have retreated into what they consider to be an impenetrable shell of their own religion and personal laws. But now they see even this last bastion of protection crumbling under what they consider to be orchestrated assaults. They feel cornered."

BHAWAN SINGH



"Wherever the Muslims have prospered, like in Azamgarh and Tanda, there have been riots."
FAKRE-E-ALAM

Even though Muslims constitute 11 per cent of the population, their representation in all areas of government is disproportionately low. They form less than 5 per cent of the IAS and less than 0.5 per cent of high court judges. Their representation in the police has slipped from an all-time high of 33 per cent to less than 8 per cent. And there is a growing awareness among the Muslims that they have begun to slide disastrously from even the traditionally secure economic footholds on which they had once perched.

Moradabad is a city of about 11 lakh inhabitants, more than half of them Muslims. It was a relatively prosperous Muslim community with about 75 per cent of them involved in the brass and bartan trade as manufacturers, artisans and exporters boasting of a Rs 100-crore export business. But in the last few years business has fallen by more than 75 per cent. One major reason was the 1980 riots in which about 400 people were killed. The curfews and disturbances that followed led to stoppages in production and cancellation of export orders.

Today, thousands of Muslim artisans, once proud craftsmen, are driving rickshaws. It is also true that most riots have oc-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The disquiet among Muslims has taken very ominous tones. Kichachvi's criticism of his own party's government could be dismissed as a frustrated politician's anger but Congress(I) MLA's in Uttar Pradesh, who met Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh in groups and individually to voice their concern, agreed privately that the Faizabad court's decision was the result of a "government-inspired conspiracy". Singh, however, refused to comment on the issue, saying that the matter was sub judice.

TRIUMPHANT Hindu leaders moved quickly to consolidate their gains. VHP president Shiva Nath Katju asked that the temple be handed over to the Ramacharya trust so that the VHP's plans to construct a Rs 25-crore temple could move ahead. Sitting in his son's flat in Kaiserbagh colony in Lucknow, Shrish Chandra Dikshit, 60, former director-general of Uttar Pradesh police and now a VHP bigwig, said aggressively: "We feel what we are doing is for the good of the country. After all, what is good for 82 per cent of the country is good for the rest of the country, isn't it ?"

In all the din, some rational arguments got lost. In an impassioned note to the prime minister, Shahabuddin pointed out that in the controversy, a crucial point had been totally ignored. While the Hindus' claim that the shrine was the Ram Janmabhomi temple was disputed, there was no dispute about a raised platform, outside the disputed area, which was claimed to be the real janmasthan (birth-place) of Lord Rama. Quiet attempts, it was learnt, had been initiated between Hindu and Muslim leaders to work out a modus vivendi over the disputed property.

But some things may have changed irrevocably. Mushtaq Ahmed Siddiqui is a Faizabad lawyer who has five Hindu assistants. Admits Siddiqui, who is contesting the order for his client, Mohammed Hashim, in the high court: "There is an awkwardness between us that was never there. They feel conscious when somebody raises the issue of the 'Ram Janmabhoomi temple' in my presence; I am awkward when visitors mention my involvement in the Babari Masjid case." It is the strains on this trust at the one to one level that may take the longest to restore.

—AJAY KUMAR with S. PREMI in Lucknow and GHULAM NABI KHAYAL in Srinagar

curred in areas of relative Muslim prosperity, providing ammunition to politicians peddling sinister theories. Dr S. Shamim, Moradabad-based president of the state Muslim League, still continues to denounce the riots as a "conspiracy" aimed at "crushing Muslims and their independence in areas where they have greater economic strength and cannot be taken for granted as vote banks for the Congress." Adds Fakr-e-Alam, a lawyer from Bareilly and also a Lok Dal party leader: "Wherever the Ansari (weaver) Muslims have prospered, like in Azamgarh and Tanda, there have been riots."

Time was when Budaun buzzed with Muslim cloth merchants, timber merchants, and bicycle store owners. No more. The Muslims in the area have been gradually pauperised. More than 70 per cent of them are now casual labourers, weavers and mechanics. Ali Mohammed is 105 years old. He lives with his six sons, 15 grandchildren and 12 great-grandchildren in a crowded urban ghetto in Budaun. The family—all uneducated—ekes out a living grazing cattle. He is a bitter man: "Some people went from here to Pakistan. I said, let them go. When Allah gives, he will give us here. But we're treated worse than dogs. If a Muslim wants a job, he has to give a bribe. If we complain to a thana they refuse to write our reports and give us a few kicks for good measure."

Muslim peasants, rooted to their soil for millenia, may be no worse off than their Hindu counterparts but their resentment is coloured by a siege mentality. No five-year plan or 20-point programme has ever touched Manikpur village, once part of the Shekhupur Jaidad. Here live about 3,000 Muslims who collectively own less than 900 bighas of land much of it unworkable because it is waterlogged. Where not a soul from Manikpur left for Pakistan after Partition, its youngsters are now leaving in droves to look for work in Delhi and Bombay.

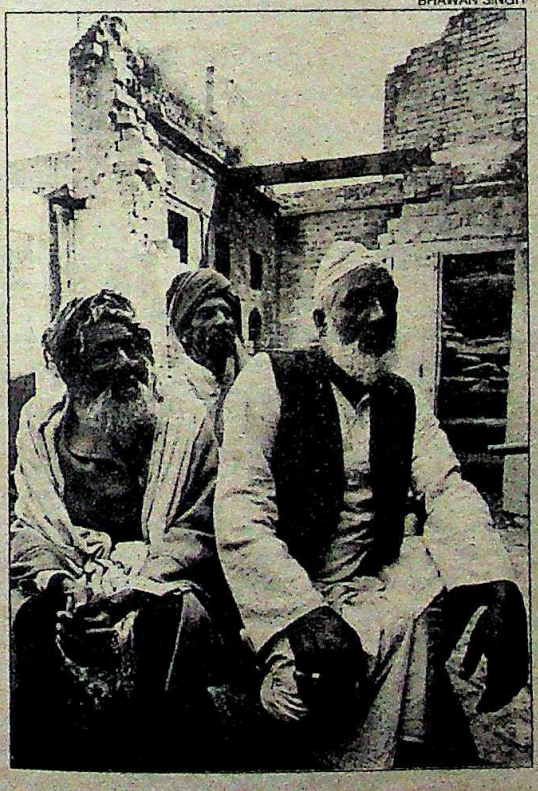
The disappearance of graveyard land has hit the village so hard that the residents are forced to bury their dead in small portions of their already cultivated fields. Says Mohammad Isaq, village contractor: "There is really nothing for us here any more. My younger brother has a high school certificate, the first to be educated in our family. But he has to do mazdoori in town just to be able to eat. Even our Muslim leaders have not helped us."

The mood of degradation and despair was summed up by Bismillah Jaan, a widow, who labours for Rs 5 a day. "The fact is we are a fallen people," she says. "If a Hindu falls down, another Hindu helps pick him up. We are left to our own devices. The Hindu community must try and understand us and pick us up."

—INDERJIT BADHWAR

Ali Mohammed (left): shattered dreams

BHAWAN SINGH



"If a Muslim wants a job, he has to bribe. If we complain to a thana they refuse to write our reports."

ALI MOHAMMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

 Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

G. PARTHASARATHI

The Resignation Story

IF THE actions of the Rajiv Gandhi Government in recent weeks have acquired overtones of a French bedroom farce, with the left hand not knowing what the right one is doing, there appears to be some justification. The most prominent pointer to the current affairs of state is the confusion caused over the fate of Gopalaswami Parthasarathi, chairman of the Policy Planning Committee in the Ministry of External Affairs (MEA). Last fortnight, the soft-spoken, veteran diplomat, better known to friend and foe as 'GP', was where he least likes to be—on the front-page of national dailies following an agency report that he had sent in his resignation to the prime minister.

The Government tried to salvage face by putting out a hasty denial through the rival agency, the Press Trust of India (PTI). But for those familiar with bureaucratic doublespeak, the denial only served to confirm the report. Instead of the normal usage of "official sources", the denial, as issued by PTI, read "according to official circles" which indicated that the issue was still questionable. The official spokesman for the ministry later stated that "the report is mere speculation" but by then the official line was more a case of wishful thinking.

INDIA TODAY has learnt that the agency (UNI) report is based on solid foundations. Parthasarati sent in his letter of resignation to the prime minister around February 11. The one-page letter, couched in polite language, requests that he be relieved of his duties. The operative paragraph reads: "I was temporarily appointed after the tragic demise of Madame Indira Gandhi. I now feel that my services should be dispensed with. However, I shall be at your disposal should you require my services."

In the event, the Government did require his services—but only to delay his resignation till the present storm rocking the Government over various recent issues, blows over. Parthasarathi himself made sure he was unavailable for comment by secluding himself in Trivandrum immediately after the UNI story appeared. But even more tragic than the Government's clumsy attempts to erect a smoke screen around the issue is the actual reasons for his resignation.

According to sources close to him, the Policy Planning Committee had been reduced to a valueless, inactive appendage of the MEA over the last six months. Parthasarathi himself, as chairman holding ministerial status, has been increasingly kept out in the cold regarding foreign policy issues. He has, for instance, not met the prime minister once in the last four months. To add insult to injury, he was not kept informed of vital foreign policy issues, particularly in matters relating to his area of expertise, Sri Lanka.

For those familiar with bureaucratic doublespeak, the denial that GP had not sent in his resignation only served to confirm the report.

The final straw came when he was informed about Foreign Secretary Romesh Bhandari's aborted visit to Colombo in the newspapers. As he reportedly confided to a friend: "What is the use of carrying on if I read about foreign policy decisions in the newspapers over my morning cup of coffee." Certainly, there were enough indications that Parthasarathi and the other senior members of the Policy Planning Committee, R.N.Kao, former head of the Research and Analysis Wing, and A.K.Damodaran, former secretary in the MEA, had been reappointed merely to give the impression of continuity—and reward for services rendered—when the Rajiv Gandhi Government swept into power, rather than play any major and active role in matters of policy decisions. But the shabby manner in which they were eventually sidelined hardly speaks well for the Government.

Parthasarathi, for instance, had not been sent a single file on foreign policy decisions for the last six weeks before his resignation. MEA sources say that he was never consulted, even on the telephone, on issues like Sri Lanka. He had in fact been originally removed from the negotiation process at the request of the Sri Lankan Government. In fact, it was evident that Parthasarathi was unhappy with the way the Indian Government was painting itself into a corner in its dealings with the Jayewardene Government. His advice, which was largely ignored, was that India should be dealing with its neighbour from a position of greater strength.

Initially, the Government made an attempt to squash the story. UNI's Chairman, G.G.Mirchandani, received a call from the prime minister's office asking that the resignation story be spiked. Mirchandani checked with the writer who confirmed that he had seen the letter and was standing by his story. Mirchandani then gave instructions for the item to be put out on the wires and informed the prime minister's office accordingly. Subsequently, the Government resorted to PTI to issue a denial.

The Government's intention is to link the Parthasarathi issue with the appointment of the new foreign secretary and the rumours that Bhandari may take over as chairman of the Policy Planning Committee. But Bhandari himself has gone on record as saying that he does not approve of the Policy Planning Committee and its "interference" in the running of the MEA. There is, however, a possibility that Bhandari might be retained as an advisor to the MEA, particularly since Rajiv is reportedly keen that Bhandari continues to represent the Government in finding a solution to the Sri Lankan problem.

There is thus considerable pressure being applied on Parthasarathi to withhold his resignation, at least till such time when it will cause less damage to the image of the Government. Being the quintessential bureaucrat, Parthasarathi might well be forced to comply, though it is clearly only a matter of time before his resignation is eventually accepted. But what is of more concern is the shabby treatment he has received at the hands of the government.

—DILIP BOBB

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If Paharpur can't meet your cooling tower needs.... your needs probably can't be met.

Over the years we've built cooling towers for steel mills and food manufacturers, process chemical plants and textile mills, petroleum refineries and automative assembly plants, electric generating stations and institutional air conditioning systems.

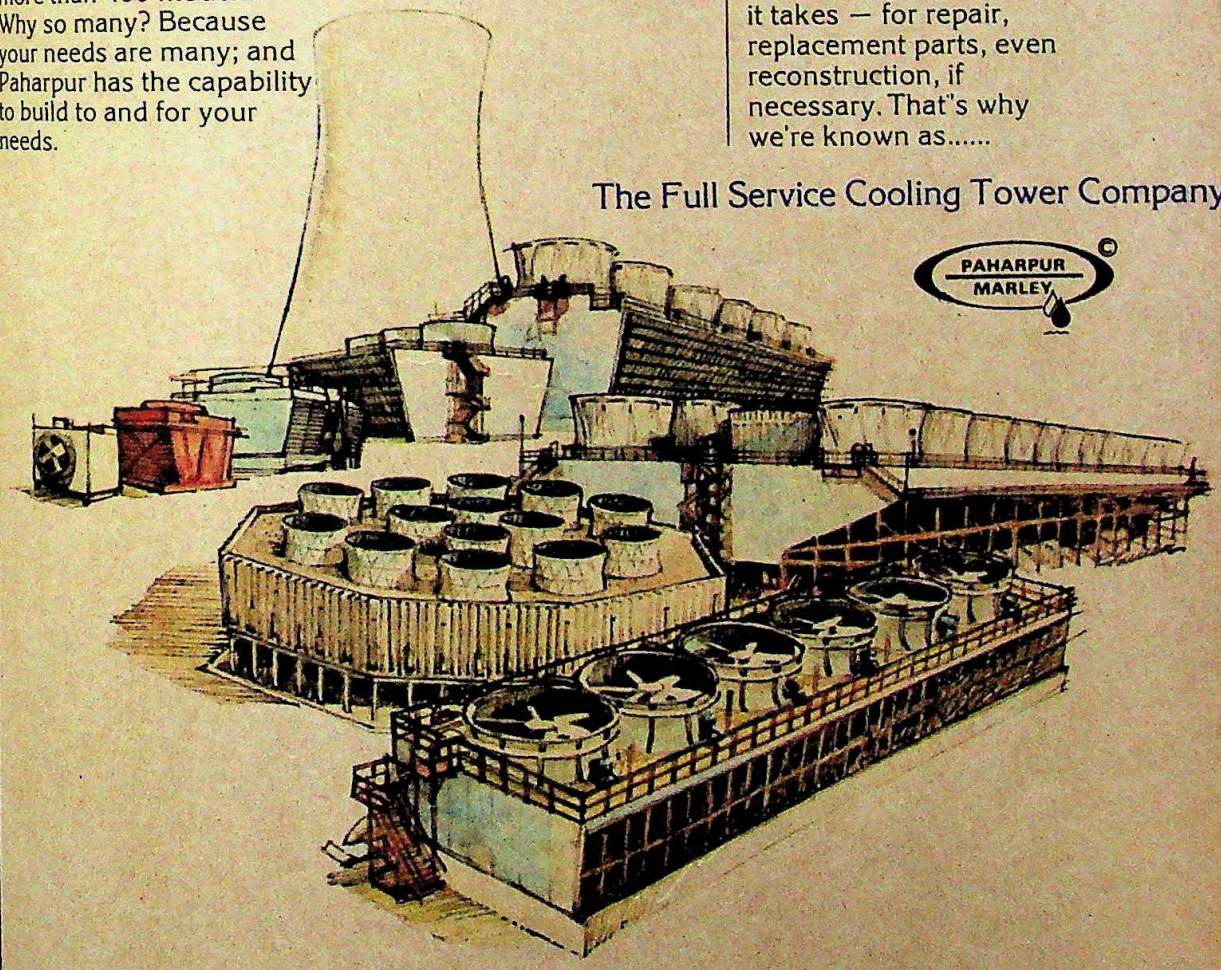
In fact, we make cooling towers for just about every category and size of industry or business — more than 400 models. Why so many? Because your needs are many; and Paharpur has the capability to build to and for your needs.

Such as data gleaned from 50 years of Marley research. More than 60 years of engineering. And from thousands of installations throughout the world. All essential to a thorough understanding of your specific cooling tower need — which is our prime concern.

That concern is reflected in the scope and quality of our operations. No matter how demanding or unusual the requirements of your next tower, Paharpur has probably faced a similar situation before. And built a tower to tackle it.

And as the years take their toll, you'll discover the value of our single-source responsibility. One call to us, and only us, will be all it takes — for repair, replacement parts, even reconstruction, if necessary. That's why we're known as.....

The Full Service Cooling Tower Company



PAHARPUR COOLING TOWERS PVT. LTD.

8/1/B, Diamond Harbour Road, Calcutta- 700 027, India
Phone: 45-8956 (3 lines) Telex. 21-3293 PCTC IN, 21-3367 PCTS IN

JETSETTERS/PC1/30/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

There're only two ways to see the world's finest one-man collection: either you happen to be a friend of Theodore Papadarakis, the Greek shipping tycoon, or you are in Hyderabad.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Salar Jang Museum in Hyderabad is one of the finest one-man collections in the world. An intriguing array of treasures, which includes Emperor Jehangir's hunting dagger and Marie Antoinette's writing table, it also has priceless collections of jade, ivory and porcelain. Exquisite furniture, clocks and paintings fill its 36 halls.

Hyderabad is not just the Salar Jang Museum. It has the Qutab Shahi Tombs — just outside the Golconda Fort; the imposing temple of Naubat Pahad by the city's Sagar Lake; and of course the Char Minar.

Wander around the quaint bazaars and you'll hear the call of the bangle sellers ... Browse for priceless pearls and Banjara gypsy jewellery in the city's old quarters. And, of course, you must taste the mouth-watering cuisine; Haleem — a pounded wheat cooked with tender meat and garnished with crisply fried onions. Traditional Biryani — spicy and sumptuous. And almond-flavoured Birinj sprinkled with rose petals.

Hyderabad can be easily reached by rail, road and air. Conducted tours for sight-seeing are available in and around Hyderabad. Hotels ranging from Rs. 325/- per day to Rs. 25/- per day, and dharamshalas, guest-houses and youth hostels welcome you.

Discover India
Discover yourself

Come as a scholar, come as a layman, come as an artist. Come as a tourist, come as a student, come even as a friend of Theodore Papadarakis. Come any way you like; Hyderabad will beguile you, intrigue you, and ultimately captivate you.

Department of Tourism
Government of India

For more information about travelling in India, write to any one of our Regional Offices at:

BOMBAY
123 M.K. Road, Churchgate,
Bombay-400 020.

CALCUTTA
'Embassy', 4 Shakespeare Sarani,
Calcutta-700 071.

DELHI
88 Janpath, New Delhi- 110 001.

MADRAS
154 Anna Salai, Madras-600 002.

In India you'll see the world.

CC-0. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection. Varanasi.

Rediffusion/DT/4

Digitized by Chennai and eGangotri

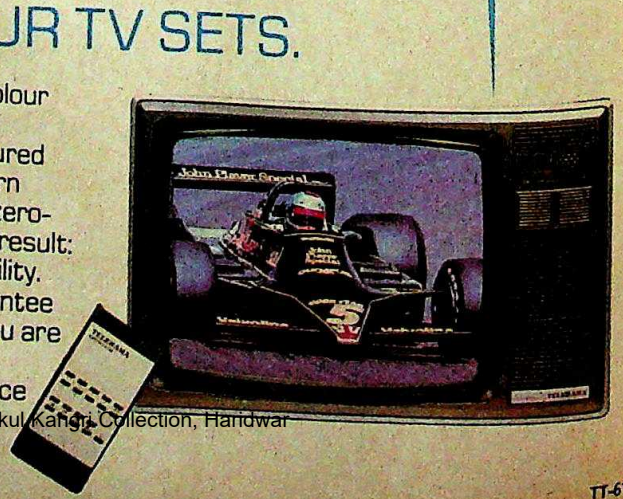
A NEW RANGE OF WORLD CLASS COLOUR TV SETS.

And that too at wonderful value for money. Choose from a range of hi-tech models including a set with wireless remote control.

Fully tropicalised with computer designed circuit, Telerama colour TVs incorporate the breakthrough-Hi-Gain colour technology. With built-in stabiliser and packed with all the features of advanced world class colour TV sets.

Each set is manufactured through the most modern technology by adopting zero-defect programme. The result: longer life, greater reliability.

With one year's guarantee including picture tube, you are assured of Telerama's prompt after-sales service and original spare parts for years to come.



CC-0. Mumukshu Bhawan Varanasi Collection, Haridwar

TT-6120

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HYDERABAD

Divisive Poll

AT ONE level, the elections to the 100-seat Hyderabad Municipal Corporation went along expected lines. At another, ominously unexpected events threatened the very elections itself. The expected part was the triumph of the Majlis-e-Ittehadul Muslimeen (MIM) (League for the Unity of Muslims), which finished with the highest tally of 38 seats. The unexpected part was the blatant attempt by the ruling Telugu Desam Party (TDP) to capture the corporation by impersonation.

The consequent furore, in which the city's police came out with flying colours, even compelled Chief Minister N.T.Rama Rao to offer a repoll and even set up an inquiry commission, but the face-saving gestures came too late. To add insult to injury, the Congress(I) which has trailed the TDP in every election since the party's rise three years ago, finished with an identical 24 seats.

After the MIM chief Sultan Salahuddin Owaisi won the Hyderabad Lok Sabha seat—which covers 33 municipal seats—the MIM's triumph could have been predicted. But Rama Rao and party General Secretary Chandrababu Naidu made the elections a prestige fight.

Rama Rao skipped work at the state secretariat for four days to don saffron trousers and shirt and rumi topi (fur cap) to woo the 15.15-lakh-strong electorate. Naidu drew up a master plan by which thousands of party workers from outside were brought to Hyderabad. The reason given was that they were needed for electioneering but when they stayed on till polling day, zooming around in cars, jeeps and buses with registration numbers of districts suspicions were aroused. When four partymen—two MLA's and two candidates—were arrested in suspicious circumstances, suspicions about the TDP's intentions were confirmed.

Legislator P.Siva Reddy was nabbed by the police after a bomb was lobbed at a gathering of voters in the Charmahal subdivision. The other MLA, Nooka Raju, was caught by the police with a group of men carrying bombs and guns. He tried to hide his identity initially but then disclosed it, fearing police brutality.

NTR campaigning; and Salahuddin Owaisi after victory: rigging drama

Ashok Yadav, the party's candidate for Himayatnagar division, tried to run away with a ballot-box and whipped out a knife when challenged by a constable. He was overpowered after the constable fired in the air. Rathod was caught when a man whom the police were chasing ran into his house, where the cops found a store of countrymade bombs.

The police were not through yet. Minor boys attempting to vote and people from outside the city with no convincing reason for their presence were rounded up. Two policemen found impersonating were promptly suspended. When state BJP Vice-President M. Venkaiah Naidu alleged that both Home Minister Vasantha Nageshwara Rao and Naidu had misused the police wireless network to send out instructions to partymen, Police Commissioner Prabhakar Rao went on leave.

The post-poll drama was equally interesting. As parties traded charges of rigging and demanded a repoll, the Corporation's Special Officer and Election Authority, C. Arjun Rao, convened a meeting before the counting began the next morning. In less than 16 hours the Congress(I), BJP, Janata and CPI withdrew their demand while the TDP said it was willing if other parties were interested. But the Majlis, confident of its position, remained silent.

When the results were announced, Naidu expectedly claimed that the other parties had recanted because they were guilty of rigging the poll. "Our MLA's, polling agents and candidates were beaten up but this did not get any publicity while we were projected as villains and this harmed our chances."

The 50 per cent decline in the BJP's voting percentage—from 20.79 last March to 14.30 this time—was the only real surprise of the results. The MIM's win in the Muslim-dominated areas of the old city was expected. Its successful forays into the newer parts of the city came about more because the non-Muslim vote was divided among the candidates of the BJP, Congress(I), TDP and the CPI-Janata team.

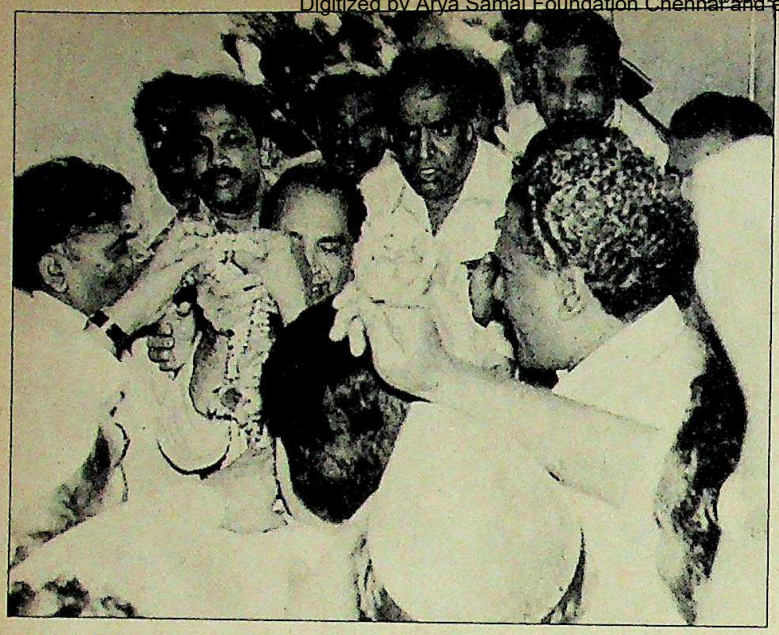
The Majlis, however, is dogged by its past. In the 1940s, members of its paramilitary shock brigade called Razakars, were instrumental in fomenting anti-Hindu terror, for which its leader, Kasim Rizvi, was arrested. When Rizvi came out of jail in 1957, he revived the party and nominated Abdul Wahed Owaisi, father of the present MIM chief Sultan Salahuddin Owaisi, as the president and left for Pakistan. It is now difficult for the party to shake off its obscurantist image.

Says Owaisi: "The MIM's task as city fathers is unenviable especially when it does not have a clear majority. We are committed to the all-round development of Hyderabad and the neglect of the old city will now end." The MIM election manifesto makes several tall promises, which might be difficult to implement in the absence of a majority, though the MIM and the Congress(I) have agreed on a working arrangement. Should the MIM fail to live up to the promise of its slogan of "Sheher hamara, mayor hamara", it could see a run on its vote bank the next time around. The TDP might yet find that its inability to win the poll was a blessing in disguise.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Supporters mob Hegde: self-preservation

KARNATAKA

Back to Business

EVEN as Karnataka Governor A.N. Bannerji laboured to read out the oath of office and secrecy in Kannada, written for him in Bengali, for the swearing-in of the Ramakrishna Hegde-led Janata Party cabinet last fortnight, he didn't have too much difficulty with the pronunciation: it was the third time he was performing the ritual in three years. Bannerji, who shed his usual suit and donned a pyjama, kurta and shawl, couldn't help making the audience guffaw when he told the would-be ministers in his usual schoolmasterish way: "All of you first say your names and repeat what I say." The ceremony, held on the lush lawns of the Raj Bhavan, brought to an end the five-day Hegde resignation drama that had all the histrionics of a third grade Kannada movie.

The return of Hegde with the same 14 cabinet ministers and 15 ministers of state with the same portfolios prompted ex-chief minister Gundu Rao to comment that it was "old arrack in the old bottle". But once the curtain went down on the drama, the high court judgement criticising the arrack bottling contracts took the backseat. The question up front was: did Hegde really resign in deference to his avowed "value-based" politics or had he "stage-managed" the entire show to transform an adversity into a triumph? Considering the crafty chief minister's past record in political wizardry, it was difficult to rule out either.

Hegde's justification for his return to his third-floor office of the Vidhana Soudha, that it was an "order" from his party and that he had "no alternative", found few buyers. While Gundu Rao dismissed the whole episode as "the best joke of the year", opposition leader in the Assembly, S. Bangarappa asked: "If the same ministry was to be sworn in again, what was the need for enacting this drama and crippling the administration for a few days?"

Hegde's response to the Opposition's barbs was a lesson in demagogic politics. Initially, he was defensive, telling a puzzled questioner during his press conference: "I have every right to change my mind." But when the Congress(I)'s criticism was brought up, he shouted at the top of his voice, much against the advice of the doctors who are treating his throat ailment: "Who are these people? I will face them either in the legislature or outside. Let them come out." Later, at a well-attended public meeting in his Basavangudi assembly constituency in Bangalore, Hegde took the fight to the Opposition's camp, charging: "I know who finances Bangarappa's Delhi trips, I know who all have financed his daughter's marriage and I know how he has swallowed land belonging to Harijans. And I also know about the land Subbaiah (A.K. Subbaiah, associate member of the Congress(I) and noted Hegde baiter) has bought in his wife's name. They have no business to talk about corruption."

While most ministers and legislators don't agree that Hegde's return to power will leave a dent in his 'Mr Clean' image, a cabinet minister close to him admitted that Hegde would have to pay a price. Conceding that Hegde's credibility would go down a few notches, he said: "If Hegde had not yielded to pressure brought on him to continue, he would have become another Jayaprakash Narayan."

Self-preservation lay at the bottom of the unprecedented pressure the Janata men brought on Hegde. They realise that the intra-party rivalry between the two dominant Vokkaliga and Lingayat communities is so virulent that only a shrewd leader who doesn't belong to either of the communities can contain and balance them in the party. No one can do this better than the Brahmin Hegde. The Public Works Minister H.D. Deve Gowda, a powerful Vokkaliga aspirant for the chief minister's chair, said significantly at the Basavangudi meeting: "Hegde has been persuaded to continue so that all suspicions that Janata's break-up in 1978 at the Centre could be repeated in the state are removed."

The chief minister went quickly back to work, showing all his old savvy. Presenting a rosy picture of the state's economy in the budget which has an uncovered deficit of Rs 38.9 crore even after Rs 40 crore of fresh levies, he boasted: "In the first year of the seventh plan, Karnataka was one of the few states to raise resources by more than Rs 100 crore."

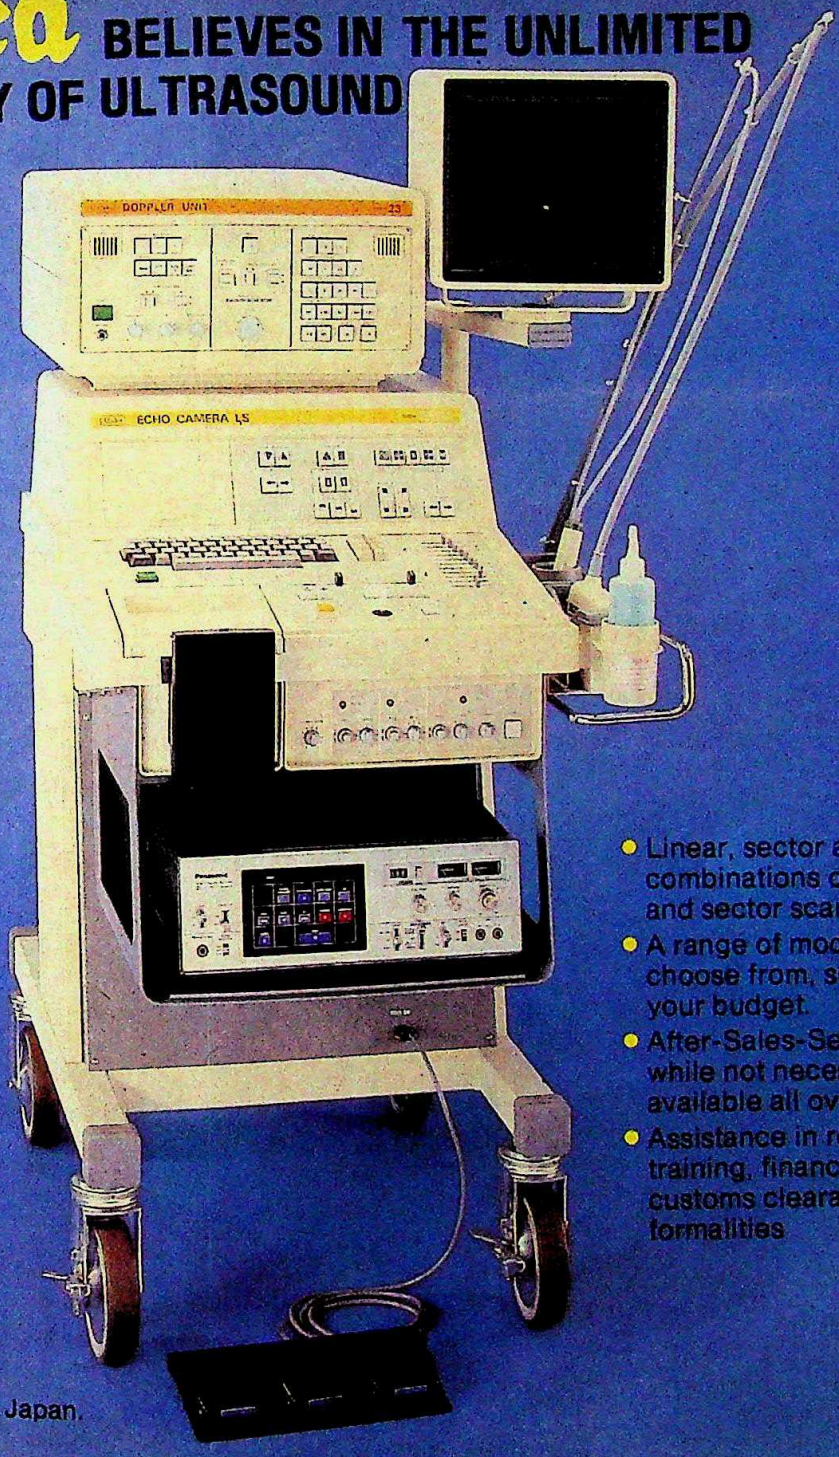
But with the Congress(I) boycotting the budget presentation, saying that Hegde had no "moral right" to continue in power, it was back to business as usual. However, there has been one significant change. When Hegde now says that he is not keen on continuing till the end of his term and he would like to leave the post for someone else ("there are some more capable than me in the cabinet"), very few people believe him.

—SRINIVASA PRASAD

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Aloka BELIEVES IN THE UNLIMITED CAPABILITY OF ULTRASOUND



- Linear, sector and combinations of linear and sector scanning.
- A range of models, to choose from, suiting your budget.
- After-Sales-Service, while not necessary, available all over India
- Assistance in respect of training, finance, import, customs clearance formalities

Made by:
Aloka Co. Ltd., Japan.

Marketed & Serviced by

MECORD

MEDICAL CO-ORDINATORS PVT.LTD

MADRAS: 14, Wellingdon Estate, 24, Commander-in-Chief Road, Madras 600105, Ph. 470654 • BOMBAY: 304, Hill View Industrial Estate, Ghatkopar (West), Bombay 400086, Ph. 588552/588553.

Also Offices at: DELHI • CALCUTTA • BANGALORE • HYDERABAD • AHMEDABAD • PUNE.

EXELADS/MC/128/85

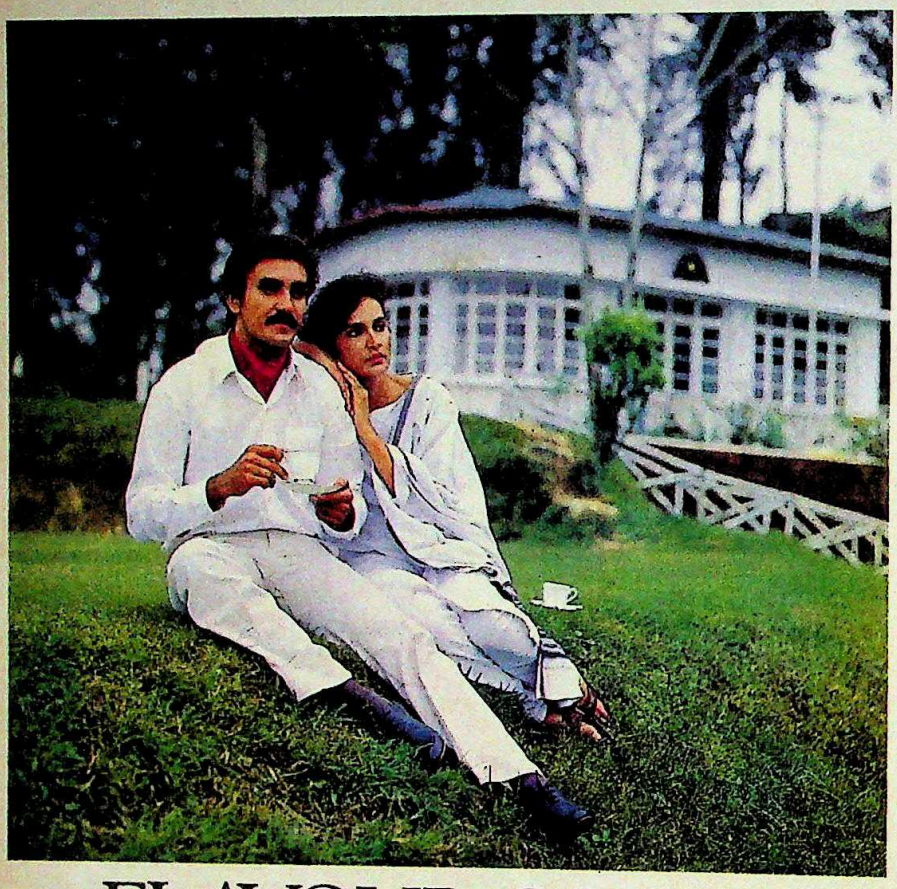
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Raymond

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



From the mist-wrapped slopes of the Darjeeling hills comes a tea so distinct, so impeccable in flavour...

Nurtured in the finest tea estates. Carefully and discerningly hand-picked. And sealed into a unique gold foil pack to retain that garden-fresh flavour.

FLAVOUR SO DARJEELING, IT DESERVES A GOLD LABEL.

Brooke Bond GOLD LABEL

The very essence of Darjeeling

BBI-1834

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

Dissident Drama

IT WAS as sudden as it was premature. As Bihar Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey prepared to face the Assembly for the budget session last fortnight, and his ministry inched towards its twelfth month, open dissidence surfaced for the first time against his government. With one dissident even challenging Dubey to prove his majority in the legislature party, matters were threatening to go out of hand when state party chief Dumar Lal Baitha finally cracked down, issuing show cause notices to three dissidents. The dissidents were in retreat but their time may still come.

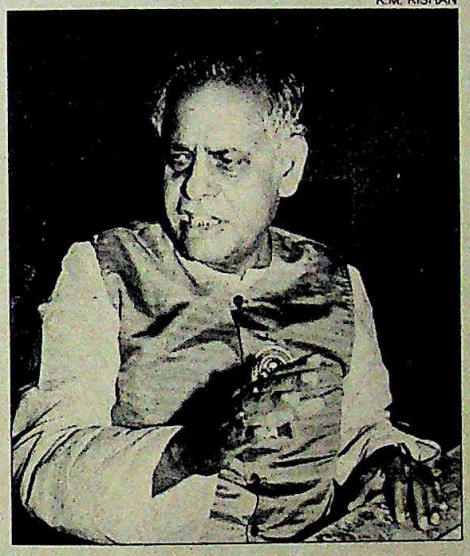
A seemingly unfazed Dubey asserted: "There is no dissidence within the party and I enjoy the confidence of the majority." But his actions showed that nervousness lurked under the facade of confidence. Party Vice-President Arjun Singh was expected to proceed to Patna from Ranchi but was apparently persuaded to skip the capital to avoid embarrassment over the Aslam Sher Khan fiasco. Looming behind it all was the figure of Jagannath Mishra, suspected by the Dubey loyalists to be behind the mini-revolt, but denying it.

The dissidents, although split into four groups owing loyalty to different leaders, made the common demand that anybody would be preferable to Dubey as he had proved to be a singularly ineffective administrator. Former minister and Harijan legislator Bilat Paswan Bihagnam, a known Mishra follower, openly challenged Dubey's claim of a majority and said: "If Dubey thinks so, he should call a meeting of the Congress(I) Legislature Party and seek a vote of confidence."

Dissident activities had first surfaced as a fallout of the February 4 ministerial expansion and reshuffle (INDIA TODAY, February 28) but once it started, it snowballed. Eventually, 127 of 240 Congress(I) MLA's and MLC's signed two sets of memoranda accusing the Dubey Ministry of corruption and nepotism and inefficiency in the implementation of the 20-point programme. One of the three ministers dropped sent a five-page letter to Rajiv Gandhi, Arjun Singh and Arun Nehru, saying that law and order had collapsed and development work had become a farce.

Bihangam called a meeting of some 50 legislators, and Jaikumer Palit, who is known to be close to AICC(I) Treasurer Sitaram Kesari, had a score of legislators over at his residence. And their demand was the same—Dubey must go.

K.M. KISHAN



Although split into four groups the dissidents made the common demand that anybody would be preferable to Dubey.

In contrast, Shyam Sunder Dhiraj, state Youth Congress(I) chief, who also invited his young colleagues to express resentment over the Government's non-performance, said later: "We are not dissidents but we have decided to launch an anti-corruption crusade at the call of the prime minister. We will highlight our grievances through the proper channels instead of going to the press." A similar rationalisation was offered by Shakil-uz-Zaman, a former secretary of the National Students' Union of India, but the two leaders were only trying to hide the fact that most of the 60-odd MLA's were sore that none of them was considered in the last reshuffle.

In the face of all these developments, the change in Arjun Singh's plans came as no surprise. Before Singh's visit, MP and former hockey hero Aslam Sher Khan, who is known to be close to Singh, was sent on a "secret mission" to assess the political situation. Explained an MP, known to have access to the party bigwigs: "Before the decision was taken to remove Jagannath Mishra in 1983, several teams of faceless MP's were sent to gauge the public mood. The Khan visit was in the same mould."

But the move backfired when young MLA's and partymen started flocking to Khan's hotel room in droves. Dubey then rang up Singh and other leaders in Delhi and got Khan recalled in a hurry, but by then he had gathered his impressions. But, Singh declared in Ranchi that he had no complaints against Dubey nor was there any plan to remove him.

Dubey's supporters charge that Mishra is orchestrating the dissidence from the shadows. Denying the charge, Mishra asserted: "I will never do anything which will either weaken the party or the Government. I am much too busy with the Jana Jagran (public awareness) campaign." But legislators owing allegiance to Mishra sent a memorandum to Central leaders listing specific charges against the Dubey Ministry.

Going on the offensive, Dubey flew to Delhi with a list of legislators creating trouble for him and Baitha issued notices seeking explanations from the three legislators—Bihangam, Jogeshwar Jha and Gunanand Jha—who had openly challenged Dubey. And while a group of legislators assured Dubey of their continued confidence in his leadership, Dubey also received assurances of support from Union Minister of State for Petroleum Chandrashekhar Singh and influential Rajput MP L.P.Sahi. But Union Minister for Urban Development Abdul Ghafoor is still known to be upset with Dubey.

Dubey's seat is safe so long as the party high command continues to back him and as yet, there is no indication that the Central leadership has lost faith in him. But once that happens the dissidents will have all the advantages.

—FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

Plateau of Terror

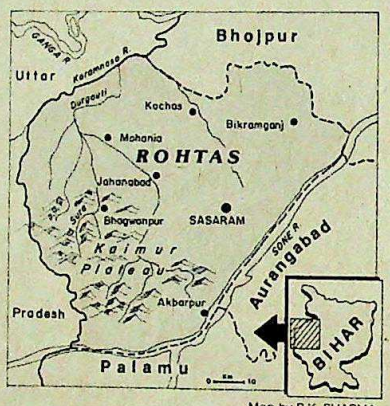
ITS MURDER-to-population ratio would put any town in the wild west to shame. The Kaimur plateau in Rohtas district, a Chambal look-alike with three rivers etching deep ravines over its mostly forested area, has only 40,000 residents but in the last 12 months as many as 183 people have been brutally murdered here.

Kaimur has long been known as a terror zone but it seems to be getting beyond control. In the last 10 months, the Bihar Government has sent two companies of the Bihar Military Police to smash the five gangs which spread terror but the crime graph has only climbed. Just as the Government prepared to launch yet another operation, three members of a gang were abducted and killed in broad daylight in Bandha village last fortnight, taking the death toll way above the 1984 figure of 142. Says a disgusted Rajeshwar Singh, college lecturer of Sasaram: "Blood is cheaper than water here and the police is either indifferent or an accomplice."

The bitterness is understandable. Last year in April the Bindeshwari Dubey Government had launched 'Operation Black Panther-II' intended to wipe out the criminal menace, with great fanfare. Coincidentally, the dreaded dacoit and uncrowned king of the Kaimur range, Mohan Bind, was killed by an accomplice around the same time. The initial operation was followed by three more operations in which 20 dacoits were killed in six "encounters" but none of the five gang leaders—Ramashis Koeri alias Dada, Ghamari Karwar, Rambachan Yadav, Triveni Kahar and Gaurik—was among them.

Official statistics concede that 199 dacoities were committed in 1985 against 134 in 1984. Says district Congress(I) vice-president Durga Prasad Singh: "The failure of the police operations has spread panic in the area. Nobody ventures out after sunset. In villages in the hills, they don't even come out in the day." Said a local resident: "How do you expect us to feel safe when the rule here is one murder and rape every alternate day?"

But the district administration does not share the pessimism. Says ex-Rohtas District police superintendent Arun Choudhary: "We don't believe that the operations have failed. Kaimur is a very tough terrain where even normal policing is very difficult. Rohtas has always been crime-infested; people kill on the slightest provocation here." Back-up statistics of the police's achievements in the last year follow: 892 criminals rounded up in the whole district, properties worth over Rs 2 lakh recovered and a big arms haul effected, including 18 rifles, 25 guns, 65 country-made guns and 60 country-made pistols. But obviously the Government was not too impressed: Choudhary was transferred last fortnight after having been here for less than a year.



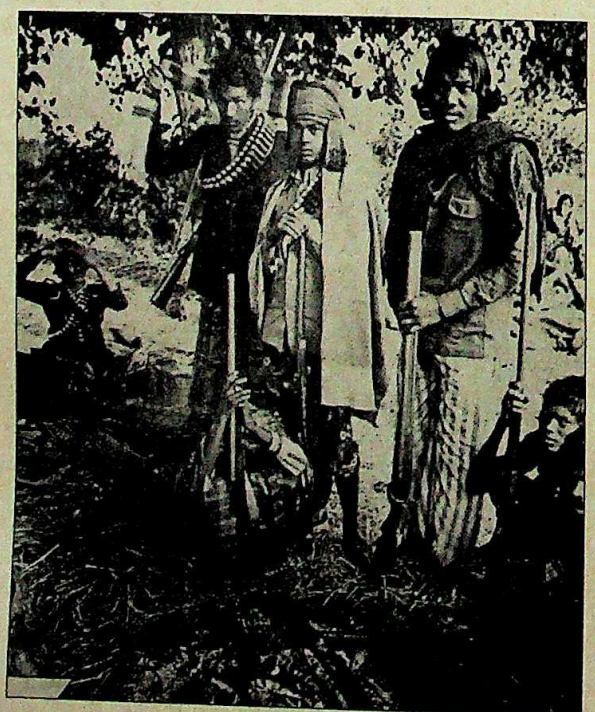
Map by B.K. SHARMA

The fact is police has had little to show. Operation Black Panther-II, which was spread over the adjoining Bhojpur district also, was followed by the more intensive "Operation Kaimur" in which the whole area was divided into six zones and not just the criminals but those who gave them shelter were made the target. Two short operations followed but the result was pitiable: only one known criminal, Nagina, killed.

Kaimur's problems, not surprisingly, stem from its extreme poverty. A lot of the people live on just salt and water for numerous days. The Government has done next to nothing: there is not an inch of paved road, no industry and no irrigation. Caste rivalries have further complicated the issue, with the neo-rich Yadavs ranged against the feudal Rajputs on the one side and the tribals on the other. Mohan Bind, with his Robin Hood image, was emerging as a rough and ready lawmaker when his murder brought back the days of internecine warfare.

Dada, the new leader, proceeded to hunt all Yadav-led gangs. The police has only looked on helplessly as the gang warfare has raged. Criminals continue to get help from forest contractors, who supply them both money and firearms, and from politicians who give them protection in return for help at election time. Till this deep-lying nexus is snapped, there is little hope for Kaimur. Says Durga Prasad: "The day when the rule of law is established here is still far away." In Kaimur 200-odd dacoits still hold sway over the might of the state.

—FARZAND AHMED



Gang of armed criminals in Kaimur: hair-trigger tension

K.M. KISHAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

When the immaculate taste of aristocracy spills beyond classic cars and stately mansions...

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...it finds colour in Aristocrat

ASP/JIL

Jagatjit Industries Limited

The Spirit of Excellence

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

For your requirement of coloured and flint glass, write to Jagatjit Industries Limited.

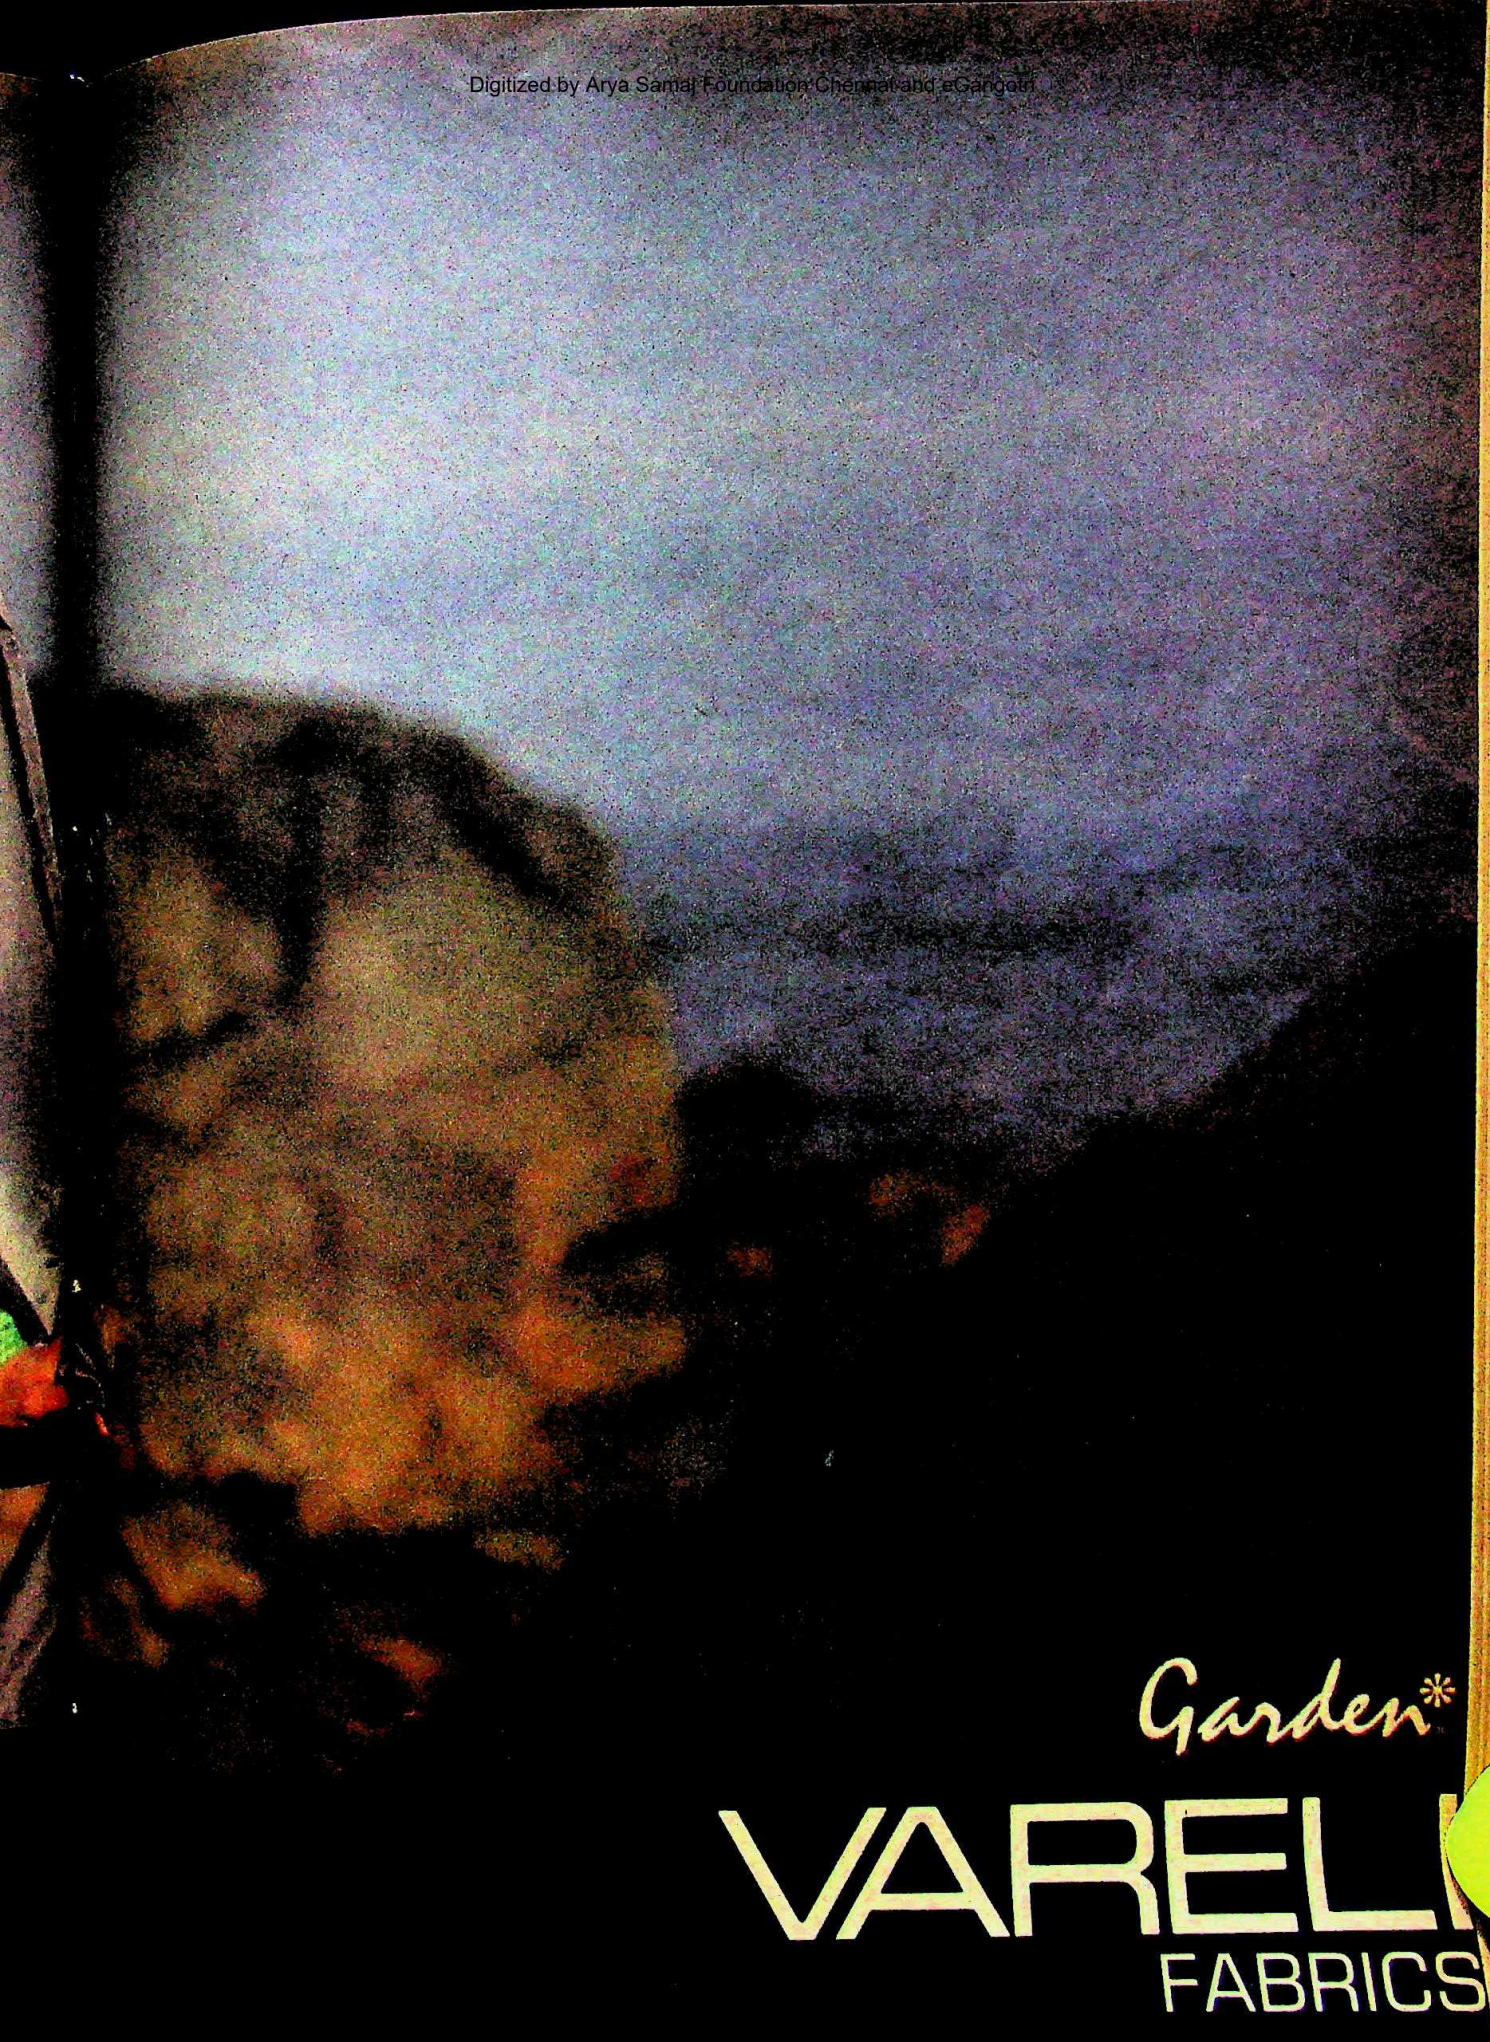
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Featuring Ms. Persis Khambatta in Vareli Fuji de Chine

The new passion...

Product of the Vareli Group of Industries in association with Garden Silk Mills Pvt. Ltd. Surat.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



...undation Chennai and eGangotri

REACH FOR THE TOP.

Top quality movies come easily with Sony's new Video 8. You don't even have to focus — a sophisticated Auto Focus system does it for you. While a highly advanced CCD Image Sensor gives you better picture resolution and improved sensitivity in low light.

Video 8 is so light and compact you can use it to make movies virtually anywhere. Up to 3 hours worth on a single cassette. And immediately review what you've shot through the unit's viewfinder. Or simply hook it up to any TV for instant playback.

And best of all, Video 8's 8mm cassette delivers a picture as impressive as that of a larger cassette.

So if it's top quality movies you're after, better start with the top video camera recorder — Sony's Video 8.

CCD-V8AF

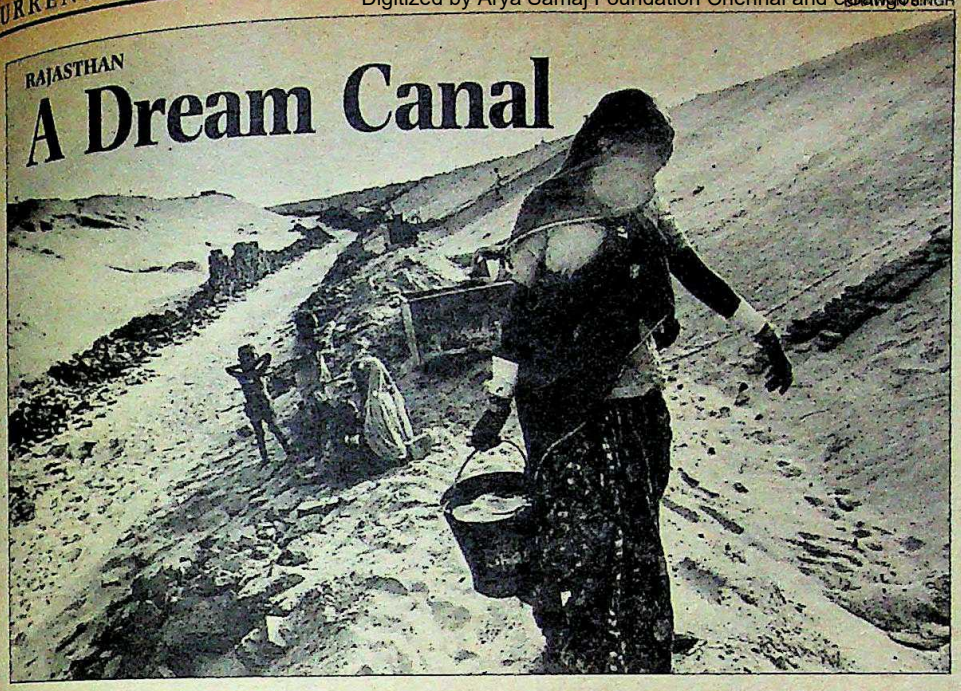
CCD-V8AF Video 8

...ain Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAJASTHAN

A Dream Canal



Workers along the canal: snail's pace

LAST month, when Rajasthan Chief Minister Harideo Joshi pleaded with Dr Manmohan Singh, deputy chairman of the Planning Commission, for major Central assistance to the Indira Gandhi Canal Project, he wasn't the first chief minister to have done so. If the massive canal is an incredible dream in this backward desert state, it is also one that has caused immense financial frustration.

Sometime in 1986, work on the 445 km-long main canal will be finished but in the absence of the subsidiary network of canals, that milestone will be little more than a propaganda victory. Officially, talk continues of completing the entire project by 1995. However, the unpalatable truth—as senior officials admit privately—is that at existing levels of funding, the project, begun in 1958, cannot be finished before 2005.

To the Rajasthani, the deadline for completing the work finally can only seem to be receding. At the outset, it was to be wrapped up by 1965 at a cost of just Rs 60 crore. But planners and political leaders have continuously increased its size and scope. For instance, the original scheme to have an earth-lined canal was dropped in favour of brick lining—this reduces water losses through seepage to a seventh but also multiplies costs manifold. In another move last year, justifiable alterations were ordered hiking the cost of the project's stage II from Rs 944 crore to Rs 1,331 crore.

The state's requests for heavy Central funding are more than two decades old. Indeed, at one point, in 1967-68 Delhi did offer to not only fund but also execute the project when the state exhibited its empty pockets. But the Centre in turn wanted the right to allot lands in the command area as it chose—and this the state Government was unwilling to concede. Since then, the entire money has come from state resources, except for Rs 40 crore from the Centre.

While it is true that when completed the project will alter the economic fortunes of vast areas of the desert (already, the irrigated area of stage I yields crops worth well over Rs 250 crore annually), there have been others who have felt that "the state has mortgaged its future to a single project".

Perhaps nothing illustrates better the awesome task that this economically backward state faces in finding money than a recent official calculation. According to it, at 1985 prices, were the entire system to be built today, it would require between Rs 3,000 crore and Rs 3,500 crore. It is an impossible sum for Rajasthan, the seventh plan size of which is just Rs 3,000 crore. More than a thousand crore still has to be spent on stage II and at an average allocation of Rs 50 crore annually, it is bound to take another 20 years.

In the late '70s and until the early '80s the pace had been slow in large part due to the erratic supply of raw materials. The task of lining suffered because the enormous quantities of cement (average annual consumption: 50,000 tonnes) and coal (40,000 tonnes) were not always available. While that problem has now been sorted out, the problem of cash remains.

Says a top-level state official: "The canal has become a back-breaking burden for Rajasthan, considering our poor resources position. Although it is the second largest state in the country area-wise, our plan size is nominally larger than tiny Haryana and smaller than Punjab. Uttar Pradesh and Maharashtra's allocations are three and a half times bigger and even Gujarat's plan size at Rs 6,000 crore is twice ours." Over the last seven years, roughly 10 per cent of the state's annual outlay has been devoted to this single project. In the outlay for 1986-87, recently announced, the canal has been allotted Rs 45 crore out of a total of Rs 525 crore or 8.57 per cent. In the current year it is Rs 50 crore of Rs 430 crore or 11.63 per cent. And in 1982-83, the percentage was 12.50—which meant that every eighth rupee spent went into the canal.

This contribution could be made only at the cost of other important programmes. In 1985-86, the amount spent on the Indira Gandhi Canal was 60 per cent of the amount spent in Rajasthan on social services: health services, providing drinking water, education, social welfare and the nutrition programme. And in 1986-87 as much will be spent on the canal as on transport, mining and industry put together.

But if the Rajasthan Government is unwilling to reduce its commitment to the canal, it is because the benefits of the first stage are all too visible. In an area where nearly nothing grew until a few decades ago, 26,000 tonnes of gram, 23,000 tonnes of groundnut, 40,000 tonnes of paddy, 68,000 tonnes of mustard, and 100,000 tonnes of cotton are now produced annually, among other things. The pot at the end of the rainbow is all too alluring; it is only the end of the rainbow that is not in sight.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

This is not the time to snap

CALL HDFC INSTEAD

And start planning your own home. Right now. Join our Home Savings Plan. Get one of the lowest interest loans available in the country today.

Your very own home. A place that belongs to you in this fast, moving, changing world. Just think. With a little planning. A little thinking ahead. You could be halfway towards owning it already.

Join our Home Savings Plan. If you save under it, we give you one of the lowest interest housing loans available today. What's more, it's made for you. Because, it's up to you to decide how much to save every month. And for how long.(A minimum of two years is what we ask). We'd like you to join our Plan. Because, we want you to have your own home.

I am interested in HDFC's Home Savings Plan.
Please send me a free brochure.

Name _____

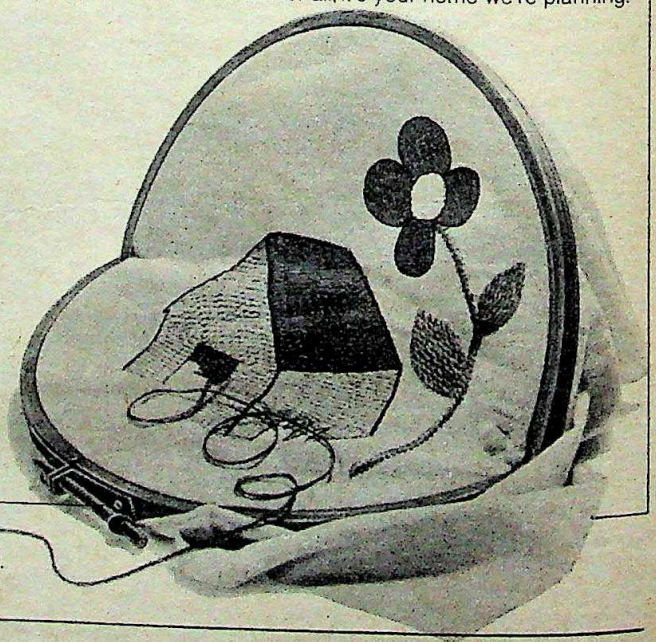
Address _____

_____

_____

H/11

Of course, you'll need to decide very quickly and call us as fast as you can. Act soon. After all, it's your home we're planning.



HOME SAVINGS PLAN

HOUSING DEVELOPMENT FINANCE CORPORATION LIMITED

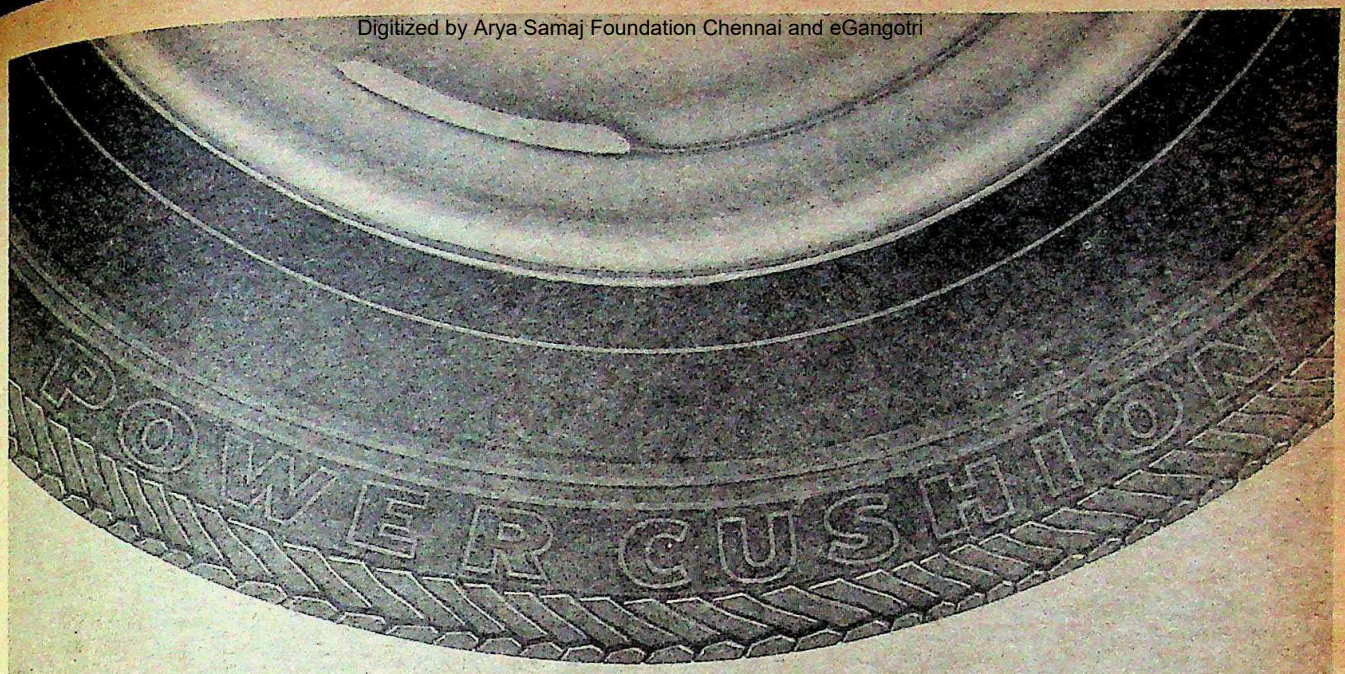
HDFC. When you're planning your future home.

Registered Office:
Ramon House, 169 Backbay Reclamation, Bombay 400 020.
Phone: 220265, 220282.

Branch Offices in:
Ahmedabad, Bangalore, Bombay (Parel), Calcutta, Cochin, Hyderabad, Indore, Jaipur, Lucknow, Madras, New Delhi, Pune.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



The strong grip of leadership Goodyear demonstrate leadership worldwide. In technology and research, innovation and quality, in popularity amongst users and performance on world race-tracks.

The largest earthmover tyre, the tyre that landed on the moon, the largest-selling car tyre in the world — each one is a Goodyear!

Right here in India Goodyear lead with Power Cushion. The tyre you have made an unquestioned leader. Well, that's Goodyear. The finest, the world over. As Power Cushion is in India.

And with all reason.

Deeper and Wider Tread: More rubber on the tread than any other car tyre. (Consumers testify to over 50,000 Kms. of non-skid safety).

Computer chips in for more mileage, more safety: Power Cushion's computer-perfected tread design ensures greater grip, more comfort, more safety as tread adjusts automatically to road profile.

Unique Arrow-Head Design: For a quicker start-stop, lower rolling resistance, more fuel saving.

'3-T' Nylon Casing: Resilient and abrasion-resistant casing that ensures more retreads.

That's Goodyear Power Cushion

GOODYEAR

LEADING THE WORLD IN TYRE TECHNOLOGY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Contract/GY-20/85

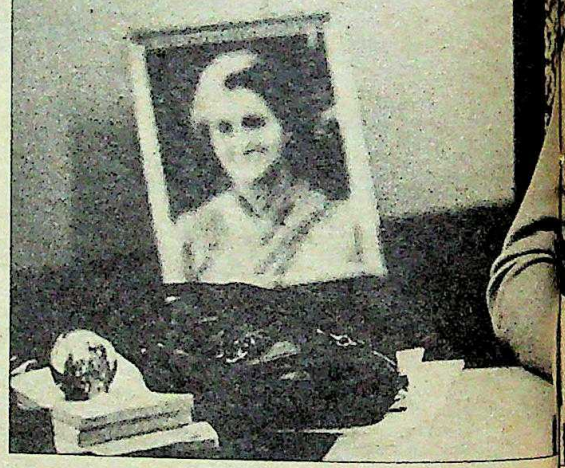
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ASSAM

The Endangered Accord

TWO MONTHS is too short a period for political debutantes to learn statecraft. But in Assam, the two months since the new, youthful Asom Gana Parishad (AGP) Government took over, the political scene has changed profoundly. The ebullience of new-found power has ebbed just a little as the rulers have become rapidly aware of the price they have to pay for it. It was one thing to shout slogans; it's quite another to give them administrative shape. The historic Independence day accord that promised so much presents particularly difficult challenges.. With the Punjab precedent at the back of their minds the AGP leadership today is mellowed, and aware that neither confrontation with the Centre nor any short-cuts can help prevent the accord going sour or solve the ethnic, linguistic and political problems as Principal Correspondent SHEKHAR GUPTA found out in the course of a six-day visit to the state. His report:

"It is so tough, tougher than we had thought. People want us to do much, much more than we can do."
PRAFULLA MAHANTA
chief minister of Assam



IN THE dark, humid plywood corridors of power in the Janata Bhawan at Dispur there is a new official nameplate that invariably catches visitors' attention. It reads: "A.K. Saikia, secretary, department of Assam accord implementation". In comparison, the others appear unimportant because nothing that the new government does today matters more than the implementation of the accord they signed with the prime minister, followed by a cathartic victory in the December 1985 poll and the new mood of euphoria and optimism not seen in Assam's contempory history. "The only reason we came to power was to implement the accord. We just cannot afford to fail the people there," says Home Minister Bhrigu Phukan, the most articulate of the AGP leaders.

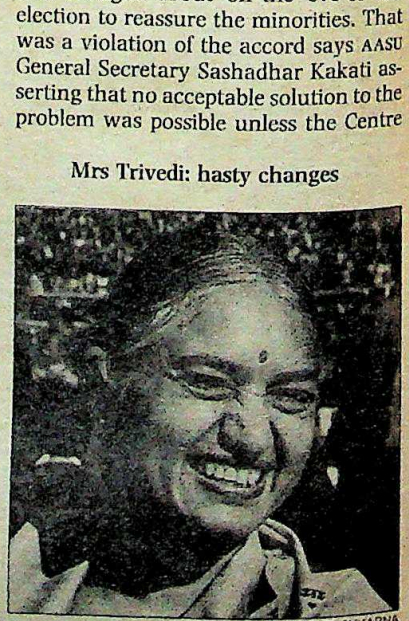
The creation of a new full-fledged department to oversee the implementation of the accord was an innovative administrative step. And the priority the Government accords to the issue is evident from the fact that it summoned from Delhi Achyut Kumar Saikia, the first-ever Assamese to be selected directly into the IAS to head the department. But more than anyone else, Saikia himself is aware of the problems that lie ahead. "I want to be an optimist. But it is not an easy thing to implement," he says, adding, "my job is to coordinate between various departments implementing the accord, set time schedules and if they fail, to catch them."

The cabinet members mark this out as the example of their downright keenness to get down to the brass-tacks on the accord. But, last fortnight, a realisation was also sinking in fast that implementation of the accord was much more than an administrative problem. "The proof of the pudding lies in the eating. It was one thing all this time to go to the judges' field and shout that we will solve the foreigners' issue. But with the ball in their court now they do not know where to look," says Golak Chandra Rajbanshi, leader of the Congress(I) Legislature Party with an obvious show of vicarious glee. Said Chief Minister Mahanta: "It is very tough, much tougher than we had thought. People want us to do so much more than we can humanly do," and adds, "yes, there are a lot of problems."

Just how formidable, is evident from a mere reading of the Assam accord draft in the perspective of the new realities. The heart of the accord is Clause 5 which, in its nine paragraphs marks out the modalities for a solution to the foreigners' problem. Officials in Dispur shudder at the very thought of having to deal with a situation where immigrants are detected and even tried at the tribunals in a substantial number. "Imagine the consequences that will have in today's communally charged situation all over the country?" asked a police official.

The AGP Government is aware of this and yet also of the fact that those who voted them to power would not buy that argument so easily. "This political conspiracy of putting one community against the other will remain in India for ever," said the new AASU President Kartick Hazarika and argued: "After all there has to be some provision for the indigenous people of Assam in their homeland." AASU is pressing the Government to repeal the amendment to the Citizenship Act that was brought about on the eve of the election to reassure the minorities. That was a violation of the accord says AASU General Secretary Sashadhar Kakati asserting that no acceptable solution to the problem was possible unless the Centre

Mrs Trivedi: hasty changes



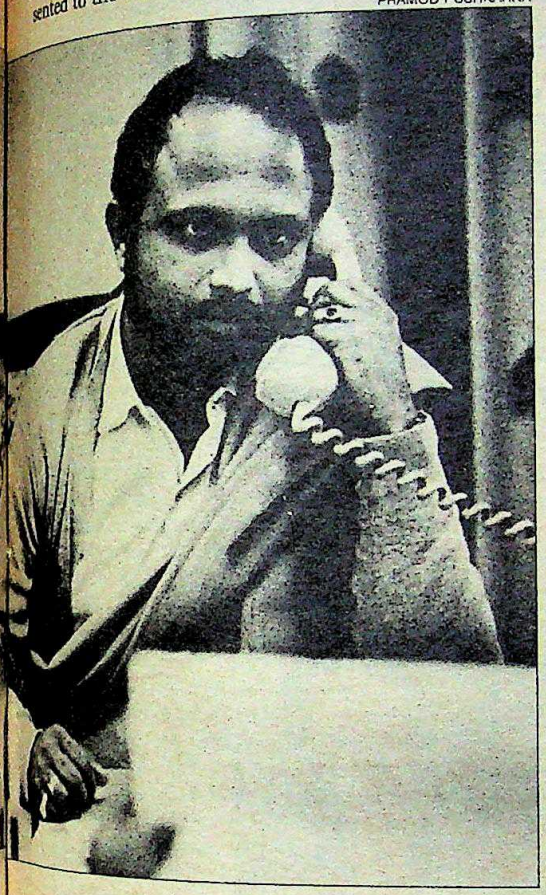
PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

also made major changes in the Illegal Migrants (determination by tribunals) Act of 1983. The state Government has finalised a draft amendment to be presented to the Centre.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA



Recent experience has already exposed the limitation of the tribunals, 20 of which are in existence in the state at the moment with just 30 judges in all instead of the required 60. The tribunals' record speaks for itself. So far, the state police has investigated only 15,000 cases in about two years. Of these only a ridiculous 380 have been brought to the tribunals for trial ending in 124 convictions. Yet again, the Act makes no provision for the deportation of these people. It only states, that they should remove themselves from India. The law would thus need amendment.

> They are still learning their first lessons in the art of governance and making mistakes such as too many, haphazard transfers of officials, leaving the whole bureaucracy in panic and suspense.

Along with the legal lacunae the Government is also becoming increasingly aware of the fact that any suggestion of overkill on the issue will not only be wasteful, it will also be purely counterproductive. Consequently, the political leaders are trying to convince their supporters, particularly the AASU, of the futility of insisting on the original suggestion that a tribunal should be constituted for each of the 126 assembly constituencies in the state, a logistical impossibility.

Many senior AGP leaders talk of the compulsions in mature terms. Said a minister: "Ultimately we have to see what is practical and possible. Ours is a situation of walking the tight-rope over a swollen Brahmaputra." It was in this quest last fortnight that the ministry was persuading the AASU to give up a proposed door-to-door census of its own.

The next, seemingly innocuous clause promising safeguards for the cultural, linguistic and social identity of the Assamese people presents an even trickier challenge. Last fortnight the Government was admitting that what looked like a juicy full-toss is indeed a treacherous googly. At a long meeting of the top-level committee at Dispur, officials and ministers spent many hours wondering how to define the term "Assamese people". This, indeed, is the most painful Assamese dilemma of all time. In the euphoria of the takeover the AGP leaders had talked in terms of a new language policy, and of making it mandatory for job aspirants to learn Assamese.

This tactical blunder upset many tribal leaders, particularly the pro-left All Assam Tribal Students Union (AATSU). "What do they mean by Assamese language and culture," asks the firebrand AATSU chief Ranauj Pegu charging the "minority government of Assamese caste-Hindus" with coveting the tribal lands and resources but not the tribal people. "What happens to the culture and language of all the tribes and backward classes?" he asked as he collected leaders of 57 organisations of these communities at Guwahati's Nepali Mandir and announced a resolve to agitate against any effort to "thrust Assamese on us". And while it is true that in the last election a sizeable number of tribals voted for the AGP, the loyalties could easily cross the fence once linguistic passions, traditionally the most intense of all in Assam, were raised again. "In our party we know that problem and so even though believe that the AATSU is being instigated by the Congress and communists we cannot take them lightly," admitted a minister. Any such ethnic polarisation would revive the demand for Udayachal, a separate tribal state. This is indeed a tricky situation for a government headed by a chief minister who had even refused to be interviewed by the Bengali service of the BBC in New Delhi on August 15 after signing the accord.

THE TIGHT-rope does not end there. Initially, the clause relating to the rehabilitation of the families that suffered during the agitation seemed to be the simplest of the lot. But now even this poses embarrassing questions. So far the Assamese leadership's idea of those worthy of such help was the families of "swahids" (martyrs). The AASU has already supplied the list of 606 such names which also figure on the student organisation's calendar for 1986. But now that they have to follow the constitutional norms of governance the AGP leaders cannot just confine the relief to the agitation martyrs. "We are trying to see how to work this out," Phukan says tentatively but officials have been warning the Cabinet of the possibility of the families of thousands of agitation violence going to the courts and demanding the same resettlement grants. Says an official: "At Rs 20,000 a family that would add up to over Rs 100 crore and no one has that kind of money. Least of all Assam where the current year's debt repayment exceeds revenue receipts."

There are similar problems elsewhere. The work on the border fence, promised in the accord, cannot begin till the MEA persuades the Bangladesh Government not to shoot at Indian fence workers; on the issue of rehabilitation of government officials victimised during the agitation there is the imposing question mark on the reinstatement of Hiranya Kumar Bhattacharya, a former police deputy inspector general. It is an emotional issue but the Centre has repeatedly pointed out

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

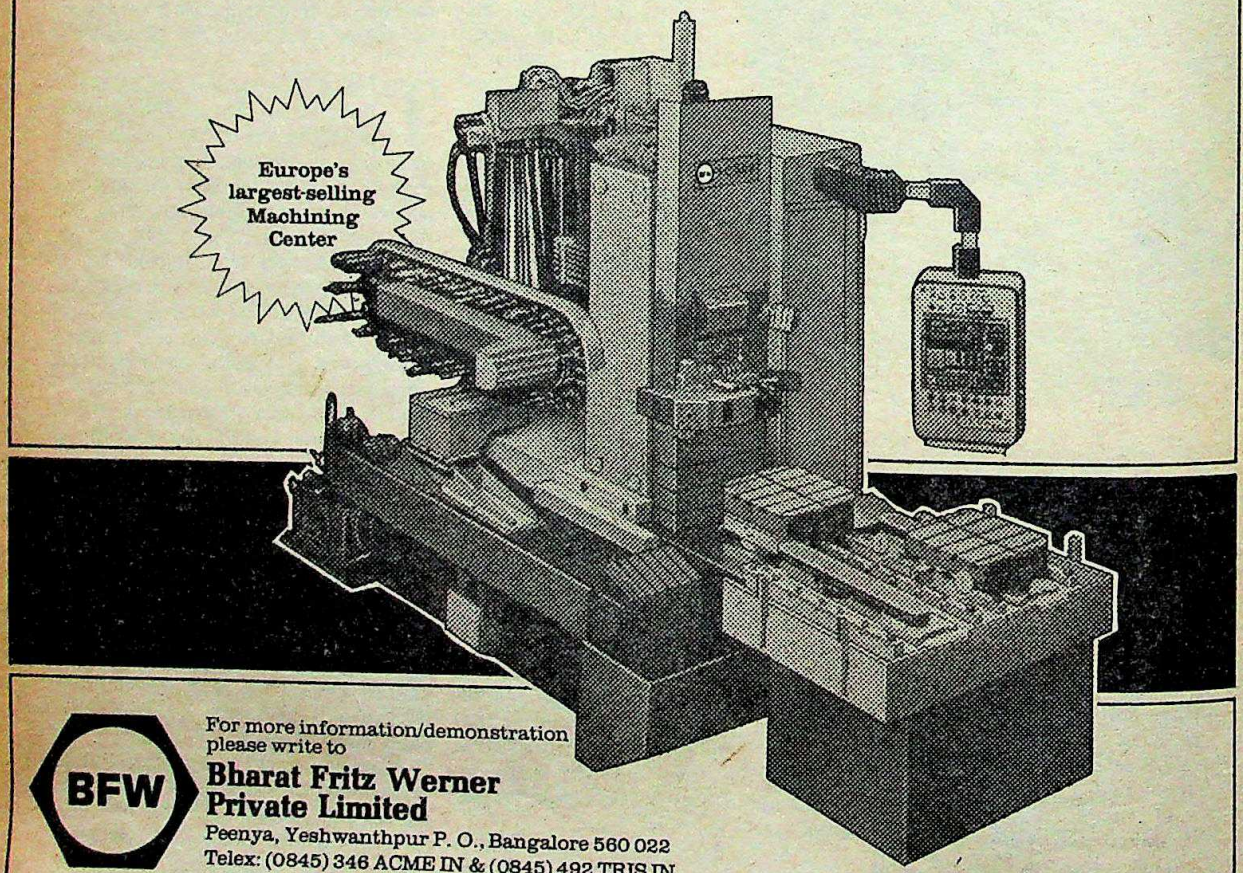
Developed by Fritz Werner in 1985, the TC 500 is the result of many years of relentless research. It's a top class machining center which meets all technical demands and can stand up to any comparison, even with the bigger machines in its class.

- Compact streamlined design – Pallet Size 500 × 500, X axis 630, Y axis 500, Z axis 630.
- Exemplary static and dynamic strength and rigidity.
- Highest precision and reliability – the machine accuracy is as per VDI, DGQ 3441. Positioning repeatability and 6 sigma : 0.015 mm. Table indexing accuracy ± 3 secs.
- Powerful spindle drive of 15 KW.
- Large range of spindle speeds – 20 to 6000 rpm.
- High rapid traverse speed of 15 metres.
- Short tool changing times of 3 secs.
- Large tool storage capacity – 40 tools standard. 60 tools optional.
- Optimum swarf and chip removal.
- Flood coolant (ring nozzle).
- Coolant through tool (optional).
- Workpiece washing system (optional).
- Short erection and commissioning times.
- Basic machine for Flexible Manufacturing Systems.
- Powerful and latest CNC System from Siemens AG – Sinumerik 3M.

The centre of attraction at the Hanover Machine Tool Fair 85!

TC 500 Horizontal Machining Center

Now made in India by BFW!



BFW

For more information/demonstration please write to

Bharat Fritz Werner Private Limited

Peenya, Yeshwanthpur P. O., Bangalore 560 022
Telex: (0845) 346 ACME IN & (0845) 492 TRIS IN Phone: 385745-8 Grams: BHARAFRITZ

Regional Offices:

• D-27, Commerce Centre, Tardeo Main Road, BOMBAY-400 034 Phone: 4945471 & 4942630 Grams: BHARAFRITZ Telex: (011) 76309 BFW B IN • 8, India Exchange Place (P. B. No. 2745), CALCUTTA-700 001 Phone: 26-9334 Grams: BHARAFRITZ Telex: (021) 5057 ACME IN • N-78, Connaught Circus, Bombay Life Building,NEW DELHI-110 001 Phone: 3315131/32/33 Grams: BHARAFRITZ Telex: (031) 2308 ACME IN • Mowbrays Flats,282, Mowbrays Road, MADRAS-600 018 Phone: 452899 Grams: BHARAFRITZ Telex: (041) 6186 ACME IN • No. 10-4-771/4/1, Sri Ram Nagar Colony, Mazab Tank, HYDERABAD-500 028 Phone: 222552. • Vikram Griha Yojana,Flat No. C 20/11,S. No. 9-10 Kothrud, PUNE-411 029 Phone: 447132

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ASP-BFW-8602

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

to the state that anything done in his case will automatically become a precedent for Simranjeet Singh Mann, the jailed Punjab police officer.

With all this at the back of their young minds the AGP leaders find themselves in a constant state of fence-sitting, damned if they do and damned if they don't. Quick action on the accord promises communal and ethnic trouble. Delay will bring in popular pressures in their valued ethnic Assamese constituency besides adding to the voice of the more hawkish elements within the AASU. "In Assam," said an intelligence official, "it is unlikely that the AASU could tomorrow become to the AGP what AISSF is to the Akalis in Punjab. Yet if there is delay on the accord, the situation could become fundamentally similar."

In this sober mood, thus, confrontation, whether within the state or with the Centre is the last thing on their minds and this new mood has been evident in more ways than one in the recent weeks. For example when a pro-AGP mob killed a woman and her young, college-going

EXTREMISTS

New Threat

GRIEF is an utterly private affair. More so in power politics as Prafulla Kumar Mahanta must be realising now. In August last year some armed men, presumably members of the United Liberation Front of Assam (ULFA) raided a branch of the United Commercial Bank in Guwahati's Silpukhuri locality. They killed the branch manager and took away the cash. The slain manager was none else than the brother of the girl Mahanta is planning to marry.

Shortly after he assumed the chief ministership Mahanta faced the inevitability of having to release all the NSA detenus and among them were the four suspected bank dacoits, Bhupen Bargohain, Mohikant Hathibarua, Anil Bharali and Budheshwar Gogoi, in spite of strong opposition from the Union Home Ministry. "He was a good friend of mine," Mahanta now says rather philosophically referring to the murdered bank manager but argues that his government could not have made an exception in just this case.

Last fortnight, however, he was reconsidering the issue all over again as a gang of hit-men shot at close range Tankeshwar Dihingia, a former Congress(I) minister, just as he was driving to the court at Sibsagar in Upper Assam. The police later recovered ULFA pamphlets from the scene and suspect that the assassins had used Chinese machine-pistols of the kind that the organisation has brought back from the training camps of the pro-Beijing National Socialist Council of Nagaland in the Burmese jungles. They also picked up for questioning none else than Bhupen Bargohain, the self-styled vice-president of ULFA released from prison only last month in Guwahati.

Mahanta's Government does not face anything of the kind Surjit Singh Barnala does in Punjab but he surely has a challenge on hand from the extremists. Any incidence of violence in the state discredits his ministry. Besides, groups like ULFA may not confine their hit-list to Congressmen. Pamphlets distributed by ULFA in Sadiya in the extreme eastern corner of Assam, threaten to "teach a lesson to the former AASU leaders for misappropriation of funds". These followed the four-page pamphlet distributed in Guwahati shortly before the elections ridiculing the accord.

> Prafulla Mahanta's Government does not face anything of the kind Surjit Singh Barnala does in Punjab but he surely has a challenge on hand from the extremists.

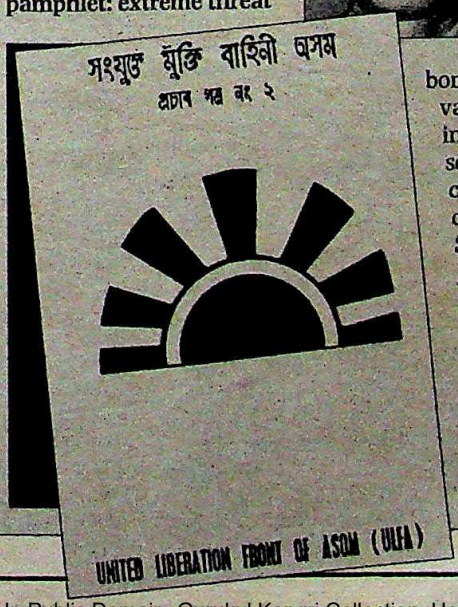
Dihingia (right); and ULFA pamphlet: extreme threat



Much of the information available to the intelligence agencies from ULFA comes from the interrogation reports of the four bank dacoity suspects. Suren Dihingia, Pradip Gogoi and Paresh Barua, three youngsters from Upper Assam first conceived of the organisation and launched it at the fertiliser town of Namrup a month later. Bhim Bargohain, a schoolteacher, was nominated "president and army commander", while Paresh Barua, reputed to be the most cunning in the pack, became the military advisor. Subsequently an ULFA delegation including Dihingia and Barua went to Imphal and contacted Angelus Shimray, the "foreign secretary" of the NSCN, to work out training arrangements. This resulted in the training of about 30 ULFA boys by the NSCN guerrillas at their Burmese hide-outs.

Police sources say the ULFA has a hard core of no more than 60-70 persons and many of these were earlier members of the extremist Asom Jatiyatabadi Yuba Chhatra Parishad (AJYCP) and were involved in cases of sabotage and bomb blasts all over the Brahmaputra valley. Assam police suspect ULFA's involvement in the recent theft of several cases of 7.62 and 9 mm cartridges from a railway wagon carrying supplies for the Border Security Force at New Bongaigaon Junction.

Many AGP spokesmen now allege that the group had been propped up by the Congress(I) to embarrass them. But that is exactly how the Akalis in Punjab always dismissed the extremist challenge till it began to threaten their very existence in power.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHAWAN SINGH

BSF on Assam border: fence-sitting daughter, related to Hiteswar Saikia at Mechagarh in Upper Assam last month, Home Minister Phukan rushed to the spot, suspended the three police officers, transferred the whole 40-man police detachment and ordered arrests. The same concern was evident in the way the Government reacted to the murder, last fortnight, of Tankeshwar Dihingia, a former Congress minister at Sibsagar (see box). Said a senior official: "Each time there is an incident of violence a complaining message promptly arrives from Delhi and no one here wants to end up the way the Akalis have done." This has led to a change in approach and last fortnight, the Government even in the face of tremendous pressure from Assamese, made clear its views and from the appropriate platform. It issued front-page advertisements in newspapers appealing to all "linguistic, ethnic and religious groups" to take the state forward without any apprehensions. The new mood of mellowed conciliation finds acknowledgement even in circles not exactly sympathetic to the Government. "Frankly, the new sense of moderation has surprised me," says Hiren Gohain, professor of English at Guwahati University who was cruelly persecuted for his persistent criticism of the agitation, and adds, "there is a mood of qualified magnanimity. Having won back power that they think they had lost earlier, the Assamese leaders are now in a more satisfied and positive state of mind."

But they have to, first of all, perfect the art of governance and they cannot afford to go on perpetuating the blunder of haphazard transfers leaving the whole bureaucracy in a state of panic and suspense. Chief Secretary Mrs P.P. Trivedi, known to be a stickler for procedure and for her integrity, was turned out ungraciously, the letter of transfer was handed to her by a junior officer. Similarly B.K. Barua, appointed secretary in the Personnel Department recently was transferred to labour while he was away. Both paid the price for urging restraint.

The demoralised bureaucracy adds a dangerous dimensions to the persistent threat of communal violence and a bankrupt economy. "We are in a strange state," says Education Minister Brindaban Goswami, rueing the fact that while people in Delhi are talking of installing computers in schools only 21 per cent of the 25,970 schools have a blackboard. In the matriculation examinations last year, the state had a pass percentage of 18 hiked to 29 with liberal grace marks. "This has to change. There is no time for confrontation," says he.

But that wish will hardly be fulfilled easily. As days pass it will become increasingly difficult to resist pressures on implementing the accord which could mean a lot of confrontation. The only solution is hastening slowly on the accord and yet pressing on with development, a near impossibility in the realm of realpolitik.

"After all there has to be some provision for the indigenous people of Assam in their homeland."

KARTICK HAZARIKA
AASU president

"What provision does the accord have for preserving the culture and languages of tribes and backward classes?"

RANAUJ PEGU
tribal student leader

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

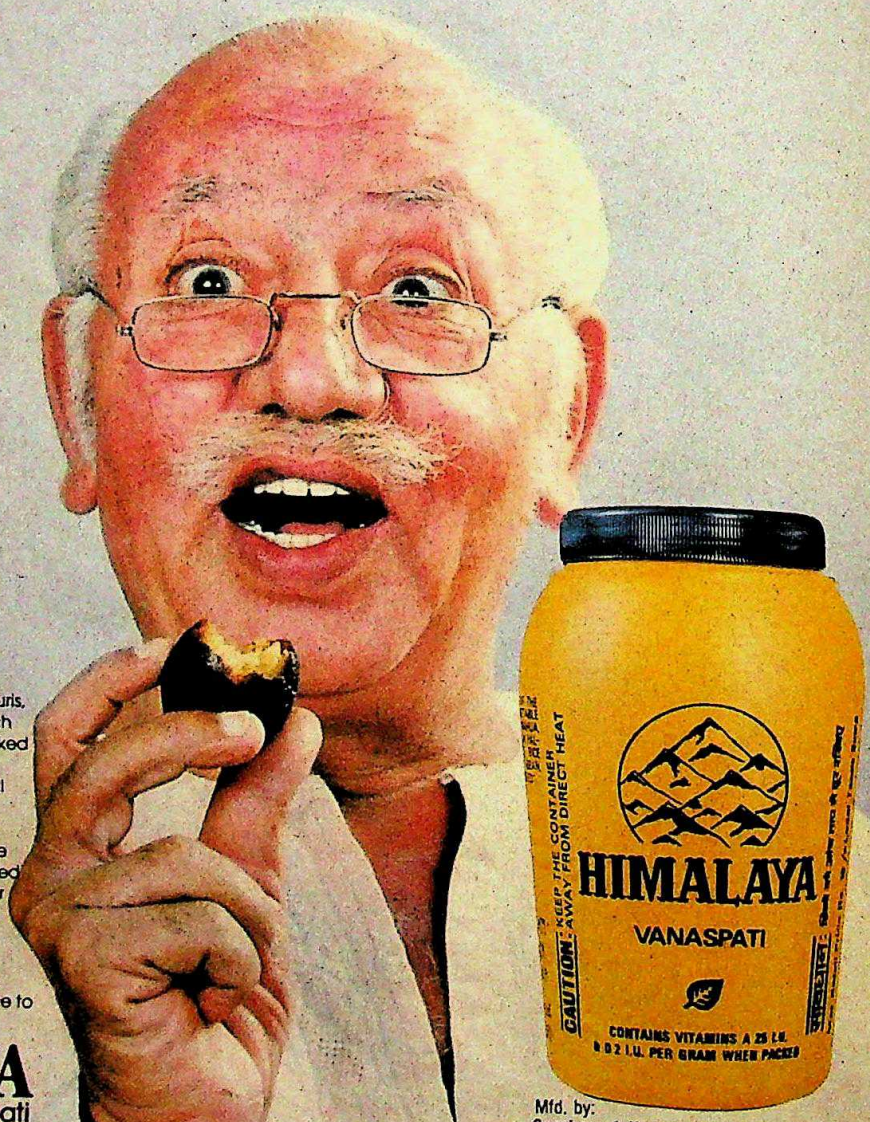
Old Spice the mark of a man

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection. Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ask your stomach what it wanted all along

Healthy food cooked in good vanaspati



Whether it be Gulab Jamuns, Puris, Kachoris or Jalebis, your stomach craves for good food that's cooked in a vanaspati that's pure and gentle. Food that will digest well and keep your system in its naturally healthy state.

Himalaya Vanaspati is made the way you have always wanted it. That Gentle Purity makes your food come through with all its natural taste—without compromising on its nutritious quality. The pure vegetable oils used, provide a healthy balance to your food.

HIMALAYA
Vanaspati

Available in 1, 2 & 5 Kg. polyjar and 15 Kg in tin under brand name of SOYA-SONA.

Gentle purity your food deserves.

Mfd. by:
Soyabean & Vanaspati Industries Complex
HALDUCHAUR (NAINITAL) U.P.
A unit of
U.P. Cooperative Federation Ltd.,
32, Station Road, Lucknow (U.P.)

a pcf product

PAC/PCF

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Come to think of it, it's very simple to be happy.

And happiness has always been an easy part of simple life.
Like yours. Natural. Warm. Simple.
And reaching out for more of the same.
Reach out for Mayur.
Mayur fabrics. A large range of Polyester blends.
For you and your family. Wholesome good looks. And pure quality.
At easy prices.
Mayur. Like everything else in your life.
Good. And easy to be happy about.

MAYUR®
Suitings • Shirtings • Sarees • Dress Material

For people who think twice before they buy.

A product of The Rajasthan Spinning & Weaving Mills Ltd. Gulabpura-311 021 (RAJ.)

A:RSW:2909A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The most envied colour TV within a stone's throw!

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ow who'd want to hurl a stone at ich a beautiful TV! Mentally, though, iany might.
ome of your neighbours for instance.
Who may have seen your new ONIDA.
nd envied its classy, futuristic looks, the ost astounding true-to-life colour, and the sharpest picture they've ever seen on a TV screen! And have been deeply regretting the fact that they're stuck with colour TVs that are obviously a generation behind!

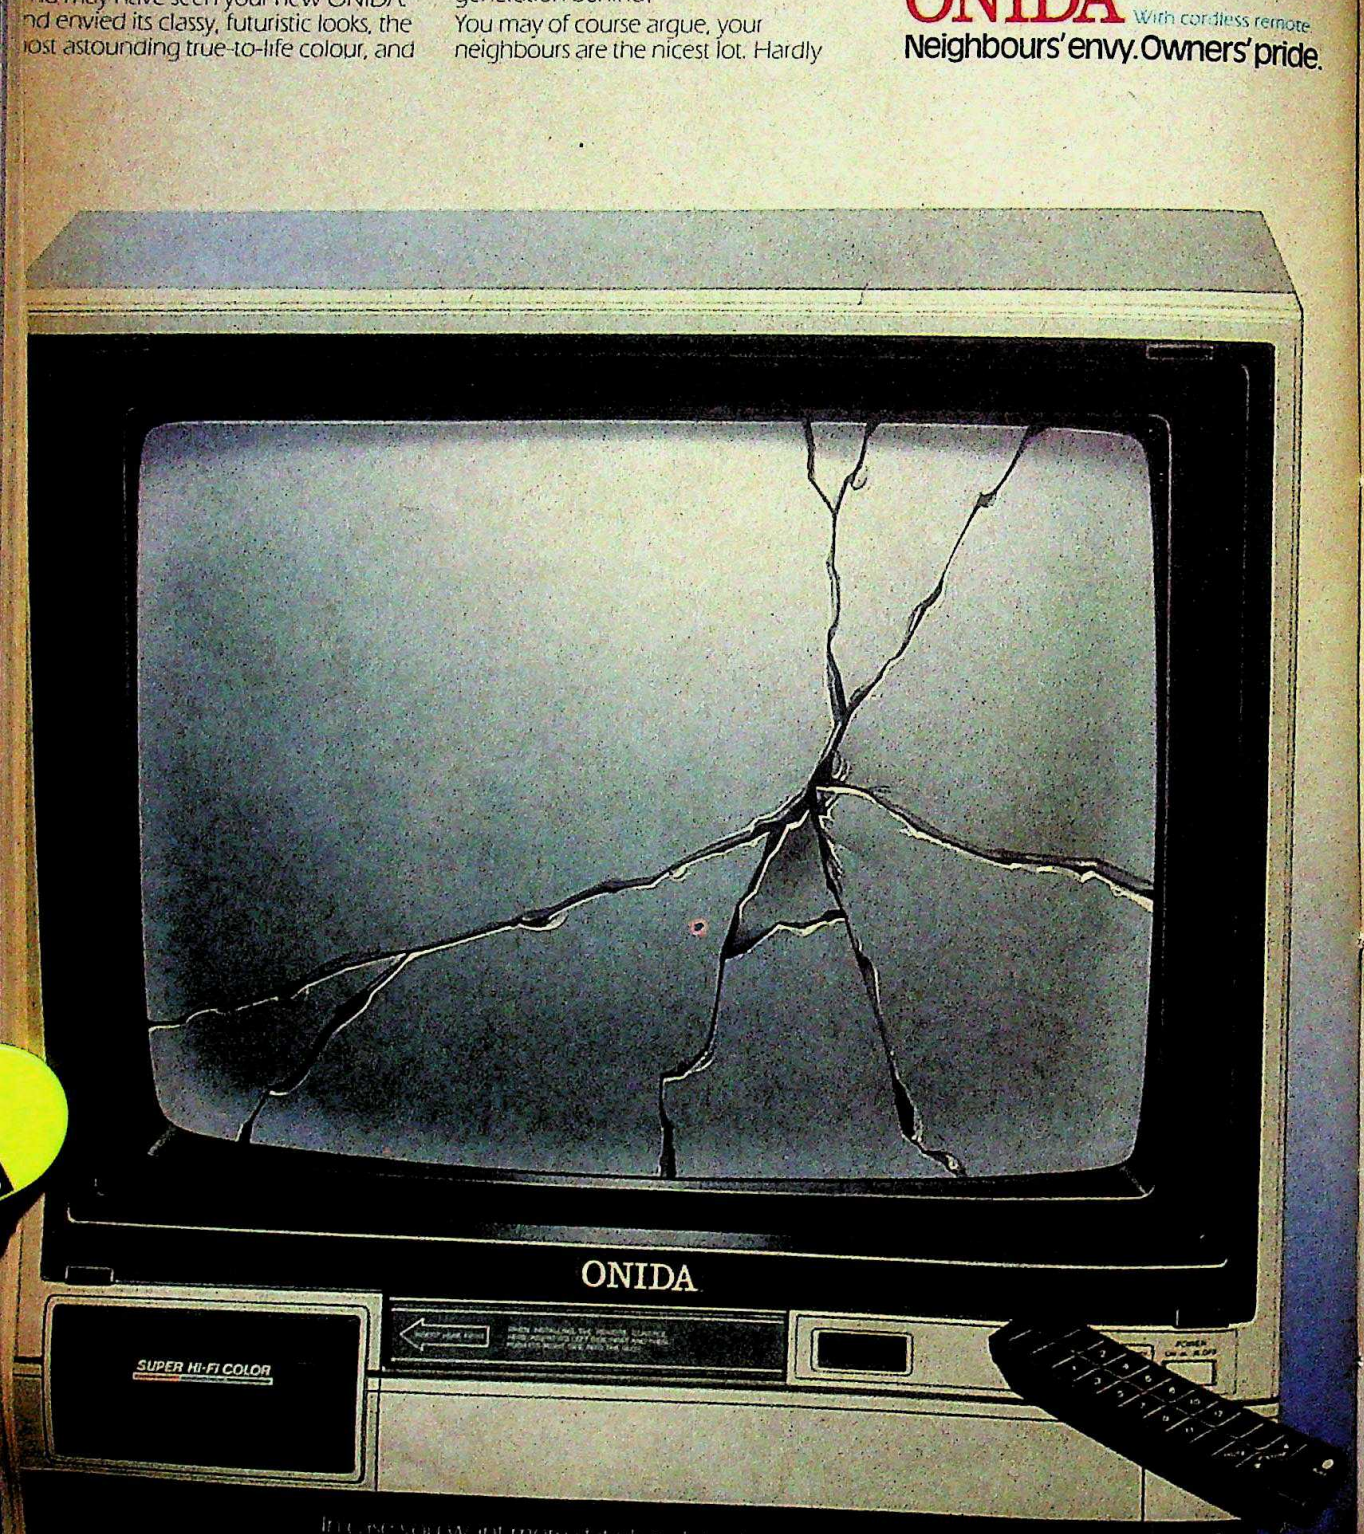
You may of course argue, your neighbours are the nicest lot. Hardly the type to stoop to violence no matter how much they envy your ONIDA TV. Well... thank heavens!

ONIDA With cordless remote

Neighbours' envy. Owners' pride.



In case you want more details rush to the nearest Dealer

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

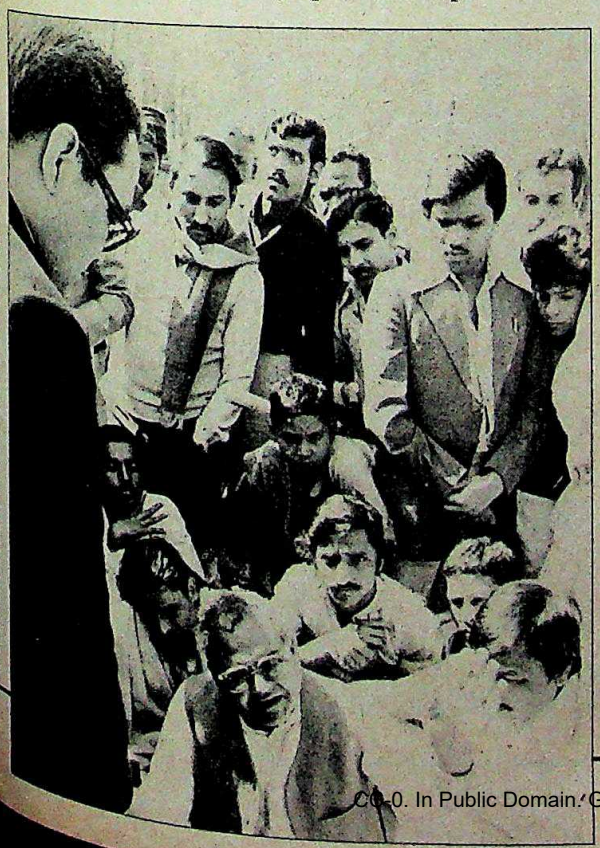
Judgement Day

CRUISING leisurely in a car down Highway No. 34 in West Bengal's Nadia district last fortnight were Calcutta High Court judges Bhagabati Prasad Bannerjee and S.K. Hazra, along with former Calcutta chief justice and sitting Congress(I) MP S.P. Mitra and municipal councillor Shiv Kumar Khanna. When suddenly, a group of men burst upon them like a hurricane, dragged them out and gave them some heavy-handed slaps and cuffs. The assailants were Congress(I) rebels and they wanted to know why Priya Ranjan Das Munshi was made the PCC(I) chief and Siddhartha Shankar Ray nominated for the Bolpur parliamentary seat. Luckily, some BSF jawans from a nearby camp heard the din and rushed to their rescue. As the judges got back into the car, they vowed never to travel with Congressmen again.

Curfew Chaos

THE POLICE too are human after all and to break the tedium of a monotonous curfew, they must have a little diversion now and then. So when Congress(I) MLA Rajni Kant Datta and some others, touched by the hunger of poor children confined by the curfew in Varanasi last fortnight, ventured outdoors and started doling out milk to them, the police acted promptly. Datta had violated the curfew, they said, and showering him with the choicest slaps and abuses, dragged him off to the police station. Of course, they didn't know then that he was an MLA. They came to know that only when Datta sat on a dharna and sparked off an outcry, as both Hindus and Muslims forgot Ram Janmabhoomi and Babri Masjid for a while and protested against the manhandling of the MLA, who is popular among both. Eventually the cops had to pay for it dearly: one of them was even suspended. And the Muslims and Hindus went back to arguing that Ram Janmabhoomi was in fact Babri Masjid and vice versa.

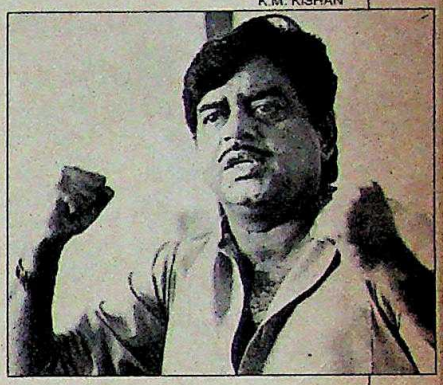
Datta on dharna with sympathisers: slap-stick



Star Struck

IT IS obviously the call of the soil that makes him return to his native Bihar from the tinsel world ever so often. But poor Shatrughan Sinha always goes back disillusioned. And one can't blame him for it. Ever since he made known his desire to join politics, there have been certain forces at work back home that make him want to regret it. And the villain of the piece, as Sinha has come to discover, is none other than the Bindeshwari Dubey Government itself. So that if the star wants to have a Shatrughan Sinha Nite in Patna, it is cancelled at the last minute. If he wants to open a charitable hospital, he finds the project ensnared by red tape. And if he arrives in Ranchi to inaugurate a homoeopathic conference—as he did last fortnight—he finds none of the usual security around. What is more, inquries reveal that the arrangements had to be withdrawn at the last minute on orders from Patna. Sinha has now written a letter to the prime minister complaining against the harassment.

K.M. KISHAN



Sinha: formidable foe

Bald Facts

IT'S NOT only deserted streets that puts our cops off. Sometimes, street-walkers do too. At a certain street corner in Vijayawada last fortnight, there were these four floozies who were slinking around and giving the come-hither to everyone who passed by. And the cops didn't like it one bit. So like true upholders of the law, they decided to dispense some instant justice: they fined them Rs 30 each, took them to the nearest police station, and called in a barber. And lo and behold, before you could say N.T. Rama Rao, those flowing tresses fell prey to the merciless snip and scrape of scissors and razor. The sight of the bald pates must have made the cops feel that they had done their good deed for the day. But the Government has its own ideas on such constabulary zeal and so it was not long before the Additional Superintendent of Police of Vijayawada urban district, Prabhakar Rao, and Sub-Inspector Rajasimha Reddy were suspended. Even though an embarrassed chief minister announced a compensation of Rs 2,000 each for the "inhuman treatment meted out to my sisters", the women have now taken the case to court. The cops, of course, don't know which way to look now.

One of the shaven-headed victims: ordeal by razor

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INFLATION

Paying t

HE WAS directly in the firing line, watched by a national TV audience that ran into millions. And the questions hurled at him reflected the mood of a country up in arms over prices. But Finance Minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh was to the manner born: disarmingly apologetic about the price increases that his government had just announced, presenting the dilemmas of his office, playing the white knight when his ministerial colleagues got into trouble, talking of the need for sacrifice.

But Anuradha Kulkarni, a 48-year-old housewife in Hyderabad wasn't convinced. Indeed, she was incensed: "What is this talk of sacrifice? Does he know that most Indians don't know what is a luxury?"

Luxury or no luxury, a country that had become increasingly taken up with colour television sets, new models of cars and new kitchen gadgets is suddenly talking of the prices of wheat, rice, sugar and kerosene. And as the sacrifices are inevitably being made, the public mood has adjusted with a shock to grim reality, a reality that cuts across income brackets, sweeping whole towns and even villages spread all over India into a new and inflammatory debate.

Bhimaiah is a sentry at the Bangalore police commissioner's office. He gets Rs 700 a month, and prices have reached a level where he has to spend almost all his money on food. But even the food runs short: "Many times our family skips breakfast. When guests come, they add to the expenditure. And when they leave, we stop taking breakfast to make up. Otherwise it's impossible."

Twenty-five-year-old Deepa Dutta, a Calcutta housewife, now experiments with candles to see whether they are cheaper than kerosene lamps when the power goes off: kerosene prices have gone up, after all. And 35-year-old Syed Hasnain Imam, who manages a transport company in the city, gets irritated if a

Angry citizens protesting against price hikes in Delhi: rising frustrations

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the Price

friend 'bums' a cigarette, because a cigarette has become so expensive nowadays, and then again he wonders when he can afford to get married.

Doraiswamy Ranganathan in Madras, a relatively prosperous consultant who drives his own car, took a bus to a concert recently: "I couldn't bear to travel by public transport before," says Ranganathan. "But I am now limiting my car's running to 10 km a day."

Even when you have the money, the times seem increasingly difficult. Nirmala Madhu's husband works in the UN's Food and Agriculture Organisation, and should not ordinarily have to worry about prices, but she does: "Even in Bombay in the early '70s, I could run the house on Rs 600 a month. But now in Madras even Rs 3,000 doesn't seem enough. To pay six or seven rupees for brinjals and ladies fingers is really cruel."

Twenty-eight-year-old G.S. Pushpalatha, a pharmacist in Secunderabad, says: "The only way I fight inflation is by doing away with a cook, and I stitch my children's clothes for them. Earlier, we used to go out every Sunday, now it is once a month."

Giving up the use of a car, skipping breakfast, doing the family's tailoring because tailors are unaffordable: sacrifice is certainly the order of the day as the country gets swept by a price debate for the first time since onion prices decided the fate of the 1980 elections. And a government economist confessed ruefully last fortnight: "May be we had sung a lullaby to the people about a rosy future and sent them to sleep. Now they have woken up to a price nightmare."

The odd thing is that this is the unlikeliest year for a public upsurge over the price issue. The Government's wholesale price index shows a rise of 3 per cent in the last 10 months, which as the annual Economic

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

V.P. SINGH

"One bandh costs Rs 450 crore"

NOTHING has changed the political temper of the country as dramatically as the recent announcement of price increases by the Government. Asked for the Government's defence of its case, Finance Minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh gave an exclusive interview to Senior Editor T.N. NINAN and Assistant Editor PRABHU CHAWLA two days before he was to present his second budget. Excerpts:

Q. Did you expect this public reaction to the recent round of price increases?

A. There had to be a reaction. Who likes a price increase? The reaction was expected.

Q. But did you expect such a strong reaction?

A. Yes, we did.

Q. If you had anticipated the reaction, why did you have to reduce the prices subsequently?

A. Because this was the party's advice, and we agreed to it.

Q. What do you think of the campaign that the Opposition has mounted on the issue?

A. Being the Opposition, they want to get political mileage out of it. But they won't get far. They won't get any permanent gains.

Q. So you think they will get temporary gains.

A. For a day.

Q. How badly do you think the poor are affected by the price increases?

A. Most people tell me a poor rural family buys five litres of kerosene in a month. The price has gone up by 14 paise for a litre. That makes 70 paise more every month for him.

Q. Haven't you alienated the middle class with these price increases?

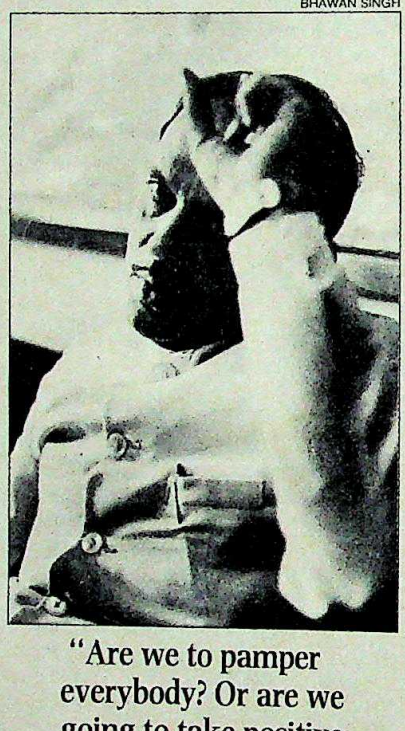
A. People will assess the Government on the totality of what it is doing for the country's progress. One bandh by the Opposition costs the economy Rs 450 crore in production; and the extra revenue we have raised from petroleum products is Rs 530 crore.

Q. What is your political strategy to meet the new situation?

A. We knew we would have to pay a price. But the question was do we try and stick to our chairs, or do we stake something when the country's progress is involved. If we had just gone by our instincts of self-preservation, we wouldn't have taken this decision. But the fact is we did.

Q. But aren't you alienating ordinary people after you have already alienated industrialists?

BHAWAN SINGH



"Are we to pamper everybody? Or are we going to take positive steps for the country's good? We can't be goody goody with everyone. If you are that timid, you can never lead the country."

A. All these questions are on the wrong track. Are we to pamper everybody? Or are we going to take positive steps for the country's good? We can't be goody goody with everyone. If you're that timid, you can never lead the country.

Q. Aren't you personally getting the flak for the pricing decision?

A. Personal flak means nothing.

Q. It could jeopardise your political career.

A. My political career has no meaning.

Q. Really? Then why are you in politics?

A. These are irrelevant issues. We never give a second thought to these things. The basic question is, was the price increase necessary?

Q. Yes, can you answer that?

A. First, this price increase is not because of the failure of the economy. The economy is in good shape. Industrial production has picked up, both railways and power are doing well, we have plenty of food stocks, and inflation is under control. Finally, we have a record buoyancy in tax revenue. So the question is, why a price increase in such a context?

People are saying that the long-term fiscal policy that we announced in December has frozen taxes, so the Government can now only resort to price increases. But they forget that this government has raised a record amount of tax. So taxes are not a limitation, and gross tax revenue during the seventh plan will total Rs 139,500 crore, as is stated in the plan document. This I can assure you.

Q. So what was the problem?

A. There are pressures and problems in three areas. One is public sector losses. Then there is the fertiliser subsidy, which has climbed 1000 per cent in the last five years, from Rs 170 crore to Rs 1,700 crore.

If food and fertiliser subsidies had gone on rising at their present trend, they would have eaten up Rs 41,000 crore during the seventh plan, and the plan provides for a total subsidy of only Rs 17,000 crore. The finance minister has to address this problem. When there are issues like this to be sorted out, why do you talk of the Opposition and this and that which are of no relevance at all.

Q. You've talked of two problem areas. What is the third?

A. The third concerns petroleum. At the end of the sixth plan, 31 per cent of our petroleum consumption was imported. We expected this import content to go to 38 per cent by the end of the seventh plan. Instead, right in the first year of the seventh plan, the import content had reached 40 per cent.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Q. You mentioned public sector losses. Aren't these because of inefficiency?

A. The fact of the matter is that the Government is borrowing money at 7 to 10 per cent interest and investing it in the public sector, which yields 2 or 3 per cent return. So one day the system will break down. Public sector surpluses are supposed to finance 52 per cent of the annual Central plan, with 48 per cent coming from budgetary surpluses. But this year the public sector contribution is only 37 per cent.

Q. What does this mean for public sector prices?

A. People fear that administered prices may be raised any time, and that they are paying the price for public sector inefficiency. So we are coming with a policy paper on administered prices in this session of Parliament. This will lay down norms of efficiency, and prices will be pegged to these efficiency levels. So people can see the reason for the price, there will be a certain objectivity to it.

Prices will be increased only if the costs of inputs, or wages or the costs of capital go up. Because if you don't do that, the public sector will be subsidising the public sector and will one day wind up.

Q. But if you peg prices to levels of efficiency, and most of your units don't come up to those levels, most of the public sector will soon be sick.

A. The budget will then bear the burden of this inefficiency. The challenge will be to prevent this. And the prime minister is monitoring the public sector efficiency programme on a fortnightly basis with ministers. In fact, the railways and power stations have done well this year. So it can be done.

Q. What exactly is he trying to do?

A. His basic game with the economy is to convert it from a high cost economy to a low cost economy. And he has identified 10 areas where action has to be taken to achieve this: factors like economies of scale, obsolescence, tax burdens and so on.

Q. What are your personal tasks for the new financial year?

A. I have placed a five-point card on my table, these points are my main tasks for the next year: balance of payments, public sector losses and administered prices, the question of subsidies vs investment, reducing the cost of administration, and customer service in banks.

Survey pointed out last fortnight is the lowest such increase in seven years. Consumer prices rose 7.5 per cent between March and November last year, but this too is normal in an economy that has got used to a 10 per cent annual price increase. Yet inflation had clearly been stoking quiet fires of discontent, and the Government was out of touch with this fact when it ignited a conflagration with petrol, diesel and cooking gas prices.

So there is little patience with the Government's price statistics. "Never mind what the Government says or what the papers say," argues 30-year-old Maruti Vishram Gurau, who works in Thane's Precision Rubber Industries. "Everything is more and more expensive day by day." And Gita, a cloth broker's wife in the Bombay suburb of Goregaon points out that a week's supply of vegetables that used to cost Rs 6 now costs Rs 15. "Who can believe the figures the Government puts out about the price rise? The middle class is being crushed out of existence."

RANGANATH Nadkarni, a 50-year-old administrative officer in Bennet Coleman in Bombay, is even more blunt about the Government statistics. "They lie," he says bitterly. "I have not been able to save anything for the last three or four years, and I have to raise the money for a flat that I have booked in Andheri."

Deepak Nagoorkar, a 28-year-old office assistant with a pharmaceutical firm that pays him Rs 1,150 every month in Hyderabad, has reduced his monthly purchase of cooking oil because he can't save on things like rent and milk. Sharad Rajadhyaksha, a 50-year-old head clerk in the Western Railway in Bombay, says he has similarly reduced his family's consumption of rice by 25 per cent, and eight years from his retirement has a grand total of Rs 2,000 in the bank as his life's savings.

Inevitably, blood pressures and the daily frustrations involved in making ends meet now match the spiralling price curve. And a suddenly rejuvenated Opposition called for an all-India bandh last fortnight to protest against the Government's latest round of price increases in wheat, rice, sugar, fertiliser, coal, petrol, diesel, kerosene, cooking gas, and their downstream effects on auto-rickshaw fares, meat, vegetables, milk and anything else you can lay your hands on, if you can afford it.

Delhi citizens can't recall the last successful bandh in protest against prices, but the one in February saw all the shops shut, and angry commuters smashing the windscreens of public buses. And in Patna, opposition leaders have forgotten bitter differences to come together and talk of an agitation like the one led by Jayaprakash Narayan more than a decade ago, since that too had been sparked off by a sudden spurt in prices.

So despite the boom in consumer goods, the euphoria on the stock-market and the rise of the middle class, and despite even the continuing scenes of expensive shops and restaurants chock full of people, the public mood has changed. A rattled government has quickly rewritten its political agenda, and the 21st century is light years away from today's battle for survival.

G. SAMPATH KUMAR

"What is this talk of sacrifice? Does V.P. Singh know that most Indians don't know what is a luxury."

ANURADHA KULKARNI
housewife, Hyderabad

A member of the Cabinet told INDIA TODAY last month: "The Rs 500 crore that we have collected from petroleum products is (politically) the most expensive Rs 500 crore that any government has ever

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRICE RISE

The Reason Why

WHY DO prices rise? There are more explanations than answers, more answers than solutions and more solutions than success stories on the anti-inflation front.

At one level, prices rise because someone somewhere decides that he can afford to charge more and still find buyers for his product—as the oil producers did in 1973 and then again in 1979-80.

At another level, governments need money and levy taxes to raise it—if the taxes are on goods, the producers of these goods pass the extra burden on to the consumers. Thus three-quarters of the price of a cigarette goes to the government as tax.

Inflation also results when governments try to spend more money than they have by printing extra currency notes. When more money chases the same quantity of goods, prices inevitably rise, as anyone who has been to an auction will testify.

There are domestic counterparts to the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries (tyre manufacturers always seem to raise their prices at the same time) and red banner counterparts to cigar-chewing tycoons. Trade unions, for example, use their bargaining power to wrest higher wages for their members and companies will pass these higher costs on to customers.

Sometimes, inflation is imported into an economy because the price of goods it buys from other countries has gone up. Sugar prices on the international market, for instance, have skyrocketed very often.

Most causes of inflation fall into two categories—'demand pull' and 'cost push'. The first is when increased demand for something encourages producers to push up prices. The second is when costs rise (as in the case of wages or power rates), so that these are passed on by downstream users. Economists tend to agree that the first kind of inflation is easier to control than the second.

One man's cost is another man's income—if sugar costs more, the sugarcane grower gets a higher price for his produce. Thus, inflation always redistributes money within the economy. Usually however, the poor tend to get the worst of this bargain and the increases in dearness allowances are never enough.

Higher costs can be neutralised through improved efficiency. It is often argued that the Indian worker is paid far less than his Japanese counterpart but the Japanese worker may produce far more in eight hours than the Indian—in an old Indian car plant, a worker produces two cars in a year; the Japanese worker produces 50. Maruti is now aiming at 25.

But the Government is keeping the worker company. It takes 15 years to complete a project for producing steel and spends Rs 3,000 crore over that period before any steel is produced—so for 15 years money has been pumped into the economy without any goods being produced and you once again have the phenomenon of more money chasing less goods.

If that is demand pull inflation, poor capacity utilisation of existing factories is a surefire recipe for cost push inflation. Any power plant in the world that produces at sub-optimal capacity will have much higher overhead costs per unit of electricity generated.

Inefficiency can lead to higher costs and prices in other ways—obsolete textile machinery will have more breakdowns and more downtime when the factory and labour are idle. Yet inflation can also drive up the cost of new machinery, so that a unit is unable to modernise.

Higher costs and prices for basic commodities cause sweeping downstream effects. Fuel, transport, basic raw materials, the cost of plant and machinery—all these have in fact made the Indian economy a 'high-cost' one, frequently unable to compete with the rest of the world. This is despite devaluing the rupee from Rs 3.30 per dollar at the time of Independence in 1947 to Rs 12 today.

The worst dangers occur if prices continue to rise and accelerate. Large number of people inevitably find it impossible to make both ends meet and the result is social unrest and political upheaval—the rising and falling intensity of the Jayaprakash Narayan-led agitation in 1973-75 could be traced directly to the rise and fall of the price index and both the agitation and the index peaked in September 1974.

Persistent inflation could also erode the value of people's savings—someone who decided in the early '70s not to buy a Premier Padmini car and instead put Rs 25,000 in a bank will find today that interest accruals have increased his bank balance to Rs 60,000. At today's

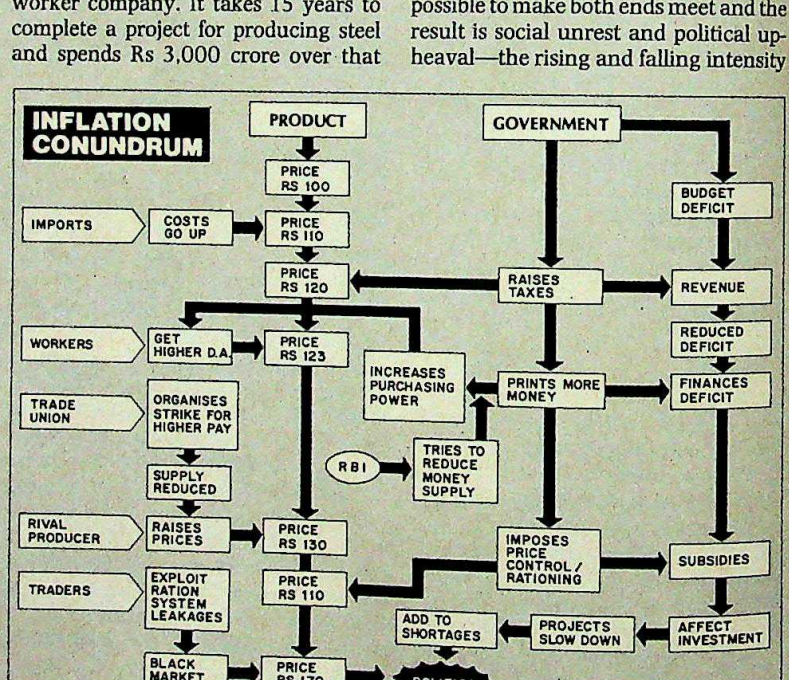


Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

prices, that can only fetch him two-thirds of a Premier. If people lose their faith in savings, money soon becomes unavailable for investing in future development.

Nevertheless, the prices of some items always tend to go up faster than others and the two safest investment bets are real estate and gold. Land prices in most major cities have shot up 500 per cent in the last five years, while gold prices have multiplied tenfold in the last 15 years. Now, company shares have joined this duo to make for a three-pile foundation on which to build fortunes.

The Government has several tools that it can use to try and bring prices under control. If the problem is too much money chasing too few goods, the Reserve Bank can impound money with the banks and reduce purchasing power. But excessive impounding of money supply curbs economic activity and brings about a recession.

If the price rise is caused by a shortage of a particular commodity (like sugar in the recent past), imports can be arranged in order to increase supplies, tame hoarders trying to make a killing and force prices down. Pressure can also be brought to bear on open market prices through the fair price shops.

In some cases, the Government can simply reduce taxes. But these tax reductions are not always passed on—the best recent example is synthetic cloth.

The final option is straight price control, which has been tried in items like steel, cement, fertiliser and paper. But if the government-fixed price begins to go out of line with true costs, a number of results occur—either the producing companies go into the red (as has happened in steel), or the goods begin to be sold in the black market (as was the case once in cement), or companies simply find it unattractive to invest in these fields, leading to further shortages (as has happened in paper). Ultimately, the Government has to resort to imports, or subsidise losses through deficit financing, which is as inflationary. Sooner or later, the Government has to allow prices to rise to reflect their true cost and market conditions.

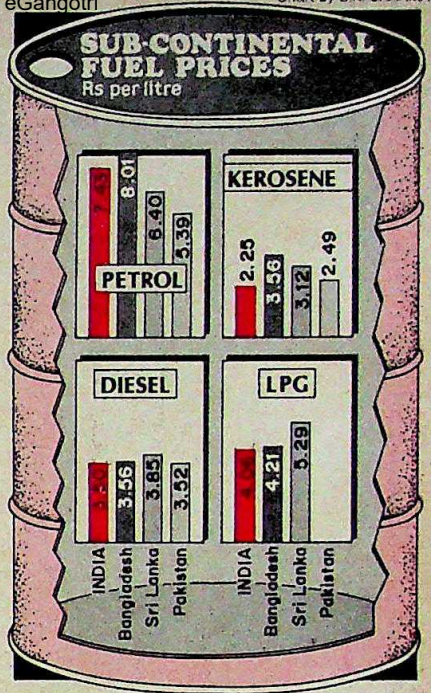
The moral of the story—market conditions and costs should be so managed as to prevent prices from going up. But governments have been trying to achieve just that since the days of Chanakya, usually without success.

—T.N. NINAN

collected. As if to make up for that, the Government was in the last rushed days before the budget struggling to cobble together a new policy package that will keep the prices of basic commodities under control, if not actually reduce them. All this bears one simple message: if the 21st century—and liberal policies aimed at getting to the end of this century's rainbow—dominated economic debate last year, what people like Bhimaiah want now is not the pot of gold at the end of that rainbow but a pot on the hearth with enough to eat in it.

Perhaps it was the accumulated problems of past price increases that made the latest round the last straw. Inflation has, after all, been accelerating steadily over the years: from next to nothing in the 1950s to a sudden burst in the mid-1960s and then further bursts in 1973-74 and 1979-80.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA



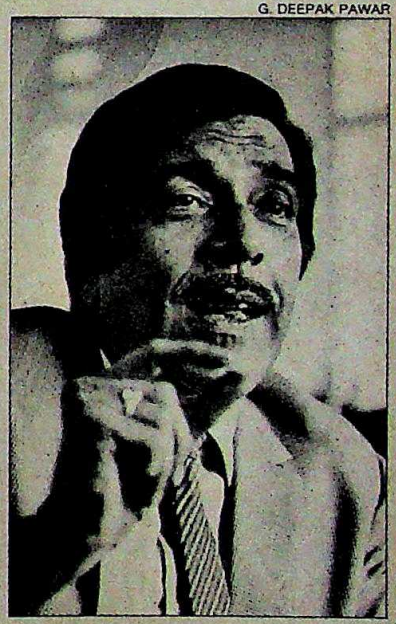
EACH fresh burst has squeezed major sections of the population further, and the anger had been building up as the mounting sums of cash had become increasingly meaningless (a middle class salary 20 years ago can be spent today in 10 minutes at the grocer's). Rising expectations had only led to rising frustrations. Ninety-three-year-old Jibantara Haldar, once a freedom fighter, recalls that he could buy 40 kg of rice in his youth for a rupee, and wishes that "young people would protest against what's going on."

But the problem goes beyond Anger, Bandhs and Consumer Dissatisfaction (the ABCD, if you will, of today's political turnabout). It even goes beyond the dearness allowance. For while wages have risen quite sharply over the years, they have invariably failed to keep pace with prices. A probationary officer joining the State Bank of India in 1974 would have got Rs 850 on his first pay cheque. A probationer today will get around Rs 2,000: an increase of under 150 per cent when inflation has shot up over 200 per cent.

Similarly, an officer in the Indian Administrative Service (IAS) who got promoted to the senior scale in the mid-1960s would have taken home Rs 750 then. Today, the pay at that level is under Rs 3,000. That seems like a lot of money, because it is after all a fourfold jump. But prices have risen sixfold in the same period.

Pensioners would have been the worst off, with no relief of any sort against inflation, if it hadn't been for a landmark legal battle fought by H.D. Shourie and his Delhi-based action forum, Common

G. DEEPAK PAWAR



"Will you raise fertiliser prices just when farmers have started using it in large enough quantities to usher in a second green revolution?"

YOGENDRA ALAGH
chairman, Bureau of Industrial Costs and Prices, New Delhi

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GOVERNMENT PRICE INDEX

Masking Inflation

THEY are the most controversial numbers going in government: two official committees have recommended major changes in how they are to be calculated, and the Government has dithered for years over revising them. Last fortnight, however, officialdom finally sprang a surprise. Finance Secretary S. Venkitaraman told journalists that a new retail price index that better reflects inflation was under consideration.

Certainly, a more accurate price index is long overdue. The Government has four indices but they are either vastly outdated or have serious shortcomings. Even the most recent one, the wholesale price index whose base year is 1970-71, is over 14 years old. The other three consumer price indices are even more creaky and ancient—going back a good 25 years.

The result of this has been predictable—price surges are understated. At the retail level, for example, the difference between prices reported to the Government last December, the latest available, and Indian Express averages for the month range from around 8 to 21 per cent for some items (see chart). Senior government statisticians insist that any discrepancies are purely the offshoot of index limitations. "Large-scale fiddles with the figures is just not possible," claims one functionary who did not want to be identified.

A consumer index is based on a selected basket of goods families buy in a given year, each item being given a "weight" in proportion to the expenditure on it. But consumers now buy goods that were not available years ago, and changes in consumption patterns mean they are buying less of what they bought earlier. Apart from the indices being unrepresentative, this implies that the weightage or the relative importance of each item in the index has become outdated, leading to distortions in the total index to that extent.

Many statisticians believe that the Government doesn't help when it uses the wholesale index to measure inflation: a consumer index would be more appropriate. R.S. Deshpande, former member-secretary to two official committees set up to review index numbers, notes that the Government uses the wholesale index to measure the rate of inflation, but the consumer index measures the cost of the common man's basket better. In fact, throughout the world, the latter is used to review inflation rates.

The Government answers this by pointing out that the wholesale index is issued weekly, while the commonly cited consumer index for industrial workers comes with a time lag of some seven weeks. Then, the wholesale index is more representative than the industrial workers' price index; the former covers both urban and industrial markets, while the latter represents hardly six million workers.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

	OFFICIAL PRICES	ACTUAL MARKET PRICES
Rice	9.66	10.85
Arhar	6.76	7.33
Urd	7.16	7.83
Vanaspati	18.94	18.50
Mustard Oil	16.44	14.40
Potato	2.00	2.00
Onion	2.90	3.17
Brinjal	2.07	2.33
Sugar	7.18	7.80

This is true enough, but the advantages may be outweighed by its drawbacks. The index's basket of 360 goods was fixed years ago, and does not account for more recent manufactures (man-made fibres, electronic items and so on). Black market rates are overlooked, manufacturers' price quotations which go into the index exclude sales tax, and H.L. Chandok who has written a book on wholesale price statistics reckons that this could contribute 7 per cent to the chasm between the official index and prevailing market rates.

Finally, the unrealistic manner in which weightage is given to some commodities tends to depress the index. The weight for sugar, for example, is based on the Government's statutory minimum sugarcane price whereas sugar factories may actually shell out more than this for cane. This is largely excluded from calculations.

Few really know the exact impact of all this on the index figures, and even fewer will hazard a guess. But most agree that the statistics understate actual price increases. This is equally applicable to the consumer price index for industrial workers. The index is important because dearness allowance payments are hitched to its swings (for every one point rise in the index, the Government shells out about Rs 70 crore to its employees).

But the index is questioned on many grounds. Some of these are common to the wholesale index, but the undue weightage given to ration shop purchases comes under fire. The industrial workers' index assumes that cardholders pick up the full quota of goods they are entitled to from ration shops, but many often shop on the open market. The index does not fix a smaller weight for the cheaper fair price shop purchases and a heavier one for more expensive items bought on the open market. An official committee had backed this but the Government has sat on the committee's report for two years.

Such delays are not uncommon. Price indices are supposed to be revised every decade, but an Industry Ministry working group set up almost four years ago to update the 1970-71 wholesale index will submit its report only by year-end. And the consumer indices of 1960 should have been set right years ago. Government officials explain the delay only partially by saying that data collection and tabulation take time, and that the delays themselves led to an official decision to opt for a more recent base year. Updated consumer indices may be out this year finally, but officials aren't too sanguine about their being able to still the popular criticism.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

cause, which got the Supreme Court to force the Government to give pensioners something approaching a fair deal. Nevertheless, a government officer who retired a decade back will today have doubled his pension while prices have trebled. As for high court or Supreme Court judges, or secretaries in government departments, earnings have shown very little increases even in nominal terms: a top-rung Indian Civil Service officer back in 1947 made virtually as much money as an IAS secretary does today, although prices have probably risen tenfold and more. Whichever fixed income group is involved, the squeeze is relentlessly there,

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

SOARING PRICES

Retail prices (in Rupees) in Delhi

	1969	NOW
WHEAT (kg)	1.05	2.90
RICE (kg)	1.67	4.00
CAL MOONG (kg)	3.30	7.00
SUGAR (kg)	2.79	7.00
MILK (litre)	1.40	4.50
VANASPATI (kg)	5.76	18.50
TEA (500 gms)	9.80	22.45
SOAP CAKE	0.68	3.00
TOOTHPASTE (100 gms)	3.40	6.90
POPLIN SHIRTING (metre)	4.50	15.00
BANANA (dozen)	1.35	5.00
GOLD (10 gms)	185.00	2130.00
SILVER (kg)	472.00	3933.00

and shows very little signs of letting up.

Inevitably, inflation has changed social values, affected life-styles and dictated new norms for the ideal family: like a double salary, for instance, since no one salary ever seems enough. Where the wife doesn't work, it has increasingly forced the breadwinner to make extra money on the side: all the cobblers' shops between Alwal and Bolarum in Secunderabad cantonment are run by cooks in the local army canteens, senior government officers in New Delhi rent out their servants' quarters for up to Rs 500 a month, and in the Western Railway headquarters in Bombay's Churchgate, the cupboards that should be full of files are often stacked with smuggled cloth that the babus sell to colleagues and their families and friends.

In the private sector, where director-level salaries have been frozen for the last decade-and-a-half, tax lawyer O.P. Vaish says it is common practice to negotiate twin pay packets: one declared and the other not. And a manager in a tea company in Calcutta complained bitterly last fortnight that his company, unlike all the others, did not hand out cash in brown envelopes every month to senior executives.

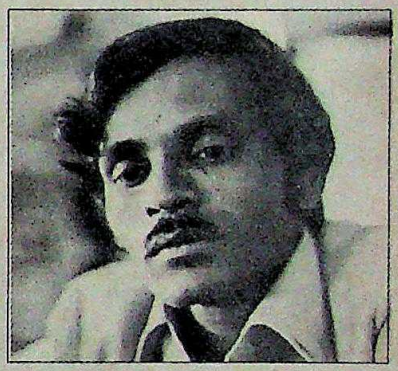
MOST of the time, what people need are not brown envelopes stashed with unaccounted money but plain inflation indexing, so that their real wages remain unaffected by inflation. And when they don't get that, moonlighting becomes the order of the day, because there seems no other way to make ends meet. Gurau of Precision Rubber in Thane works as a part-time dispenser at a doctor's for Rs 250 a month, and S.A. Kashikar, a 53-year-old clerk at Killick Nixon in Bombay, takes tuition and does other people's accounts so that he can send his three sons to college. When it isn't moonlighting, of course, it could be straight corruption, or featherbedding. An officer in the Planning Commission dismissed the effect of the latest price increases and said the commission's clerks would simply up their overtime bills.

If prices have played havoc with people, they have done worse to companies and the economy as a whole. "My electricity tariff has gone up from 53 paise per unit to Rs 1.07 in the last one year," complains an industrialist in Delhi. "But if I raise my product prices, my customers complain." Newspapers have been hit even worse by sharp increases in the prices of newsprint: the Re 1 newspaper is already a reality, and one of the country's largest publishers said last fortnight that the price of one of his newspapers might soon be Rs 2. In 1959, you could get a whole month's reading of the Marathi daily Navshakti for less than that.

Steel is a third example. There was a time when Indian steel was among the cheapest in the world. Yet, as a newspaper editorial pointed out last month, Japanese steel today is 30 per cent cheaper than India's, and the downstream engineering industry is crying foul. "How can we compete in world markets if our raw materials cost so much?" asked a spokesman of the Association of Indian Engineering Industry (AIEI).

This list could go on, and it is now a hard fact of life that the Indian economy has become a 'high cost' one: the Government subsidises both food and fertiliser by close to Rs 4,000 crore a year, yet the 29 million tonnes of foodgrain stockpiled with the Government can't be exported because India's costs are too high and exports will be at a loss: US wheat is cheaper. And inflation has taken the prices of machinery so high that hundreds of companies have simply been unable to afford the replacement costs involved in modernisation. The result: a wide swathe of industries across the country are stuck with dated technology and therefore plain inefficient, or obsolete and 'sick'—tex-

NAMAS BHOJANI



"Never mind what the Government says or what the papers say. Everything is more and more expensive day by day."

MARUTI VISHRAM GURAU
Worker, Precision Rubber Industries, Thane

tiles, engineering, jute, sugar, steel.

Industrial sickness, high cost production, profit levels: these are complex issues involving a host of factors, and simplistic statements on prices can ignore the other factors at work. In some cases, rapacious businessmen have simply milked their companies dry. In others, the plants in India are so small that economies of scale are ruled out and their costs automatically rise to levels well above international standards. And protection against imports through customs duties has meant, for instance, that the prices of many petro-chemical products in India are twice or three times the levels abroad.

Plain efficiency is another factor: a 1 per cent increase in the capacity utilisation of power plants can prevent the need

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

K.M. KISHAN

"It seems the Government does not want us to live with dignity. Am I expected to change my life-style overnight?"

MADHU KUMARI
Housewife, Patna

for investing Rs 500 crore in fresh capacity; and a 1 per cent saving on power losses in transmission can save another Rs 450 crore. Against this, consider the 33 per cent capacity utilisation achieved by the Bihar State Electricity Board, when the National Thermal Power Corporation does twice that.

Where the Government has tried to keep prices under control by refusing to allow higher returns, or stuck to archaic tax laws on depreciation, the result has been the same: companies have simply not been able to raise the money required to stay abreast of the game. Yogendra Alagh, chairman of the Bureau of Industrial Costs and Prices (BICP), says bluntly: "Many prices that the Government fixed simply ignored the cost of modernisation and replacement. Our old steel plants are still running, but they are absolute energy guzzlers."

But the uproar over prices has at least woken the Government up to the larger problem of costs. And Union Finance Minister V.P. Singh said last week (see interview) that Rajiv Gandhi himself was personally monitoring every fortnight a programme aimed at reducing costs across the board in the economy, and raising the efficiency levels in the public sector. But success cannot be easy when the problems are endemic. And as Alagh asked: "Will you raise fertiliser prices just when farmers in eastern Uttar Pradesh have started using it in large enough quantities to usher in a second green revolution?"

Some solutions are easier, like lowering taxes on products that are so hopelessly over-taxed that they price products out of people's reach. Three-quarters of the price of a cigarette is tax, so is half the price of a biscuit. And a committee of experts concluded some time ago that 84 per cent of the price of a ready-made shirt was accounted for by tax. Five years ago, the National Institute of Public Finance and Policy discovered at the end of a study that fully one-third of the spending done by a man who earns Rs 500 a month goes to the Government as taxes in one form or another. If V.P. Singh has addressed himself to some of the problems on the direct taxes front, he can certainly look at areas where indirect taxes are accountable for inflation.

MEANWHILE, other issues might be even more difficult to solve: like the increasing scarcity of natural resources. Paper companies today get charged wood royalty rates that are a

HOUSEHOLD BUDGETS

Squeezed

NOTHING sets off grandmother's tales of the good ol' days as easily as prices. Understandably so. For consider the facts:

In 1938, Mrs M.A. Phillips used to run the Aurora Guest House on Cunningham Road in Bangalore. She was a meticulous woman and kept a detailed diary of the daily expenses incurred on feeding her family and a few boarders: some 10 people in all. The good lady died in 1970, but her diary tells its tale even today. And in 1938, using just one rupee, she bought beef, green gram, flowers, plantains, vegetables, chicken and coconuts, plus dog's rice, straw and grass for animals, and 'fowl food'. If she were alive today, it would have cost her that rupee to take a bus to the market.

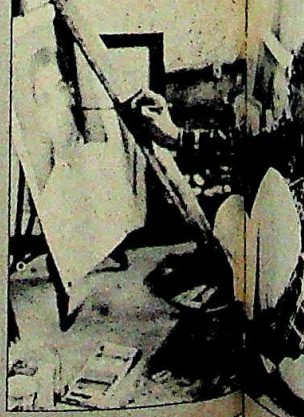
Six years later in Jaipur, 24-year-old schoolteacher Brahmanand Sharma used to get a take-home pay of Rs 27, and make another Rs 20-plus by giving tuitions. Of a total monthly income of Rs 50, he used to save anything between Rs 10 and Rs 15: up to 30 per cent of his earnings. A decade later, in 1954, inflation had begun to take its toll. For Sharma's accounts show that his monthly expenses for a joint family of seven in August that year were Rs 89: two-and-a-half times what they were a decade earlier.

But in Bombay in 1963, the picture was not much different from Sharma's nine years earlier. Thirty-seven-year-old Dalim Shanker Patil in Bombay bought her monthly grocery needs for Rs 76.55: 4 kg of vanaspati, 20 kg of sugar, 6 kg of 'sweet cooking oil', 500 grammes of coconut oil, 2 kg of jaggery, two bars of soap, one box of hing, 6 kg of toor dal, 2 kg of chana dal, 225 grammes of coffee, half a kilogramme each of dry beans, masoor and gram, one packet of laundry whitener, 10 kg of wheat and half a kilogramme of peas.

Today the same shopping basket for the shy, quiet Patil would cost at least Rs 500. "Even in 1973, prices weren't as frightening as they are now. I still think of those happy days in the '40s, '50s and '60s. Salaries weren't what they are now, but you could get a full meal at a

Patil, Sharma and Singh: Victims of an uneconomic equation

NAMAS BHOJANI



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

hundred times the levels that prevailed three decades ago because wood is disappearing. Hydel power has always been considered cheap and very economical, but as dams have to be constructed in steadily remoter and inaccessible areas, and as deforestation reduces the life of these dams, the real costs of hydel power are steadily rising too.

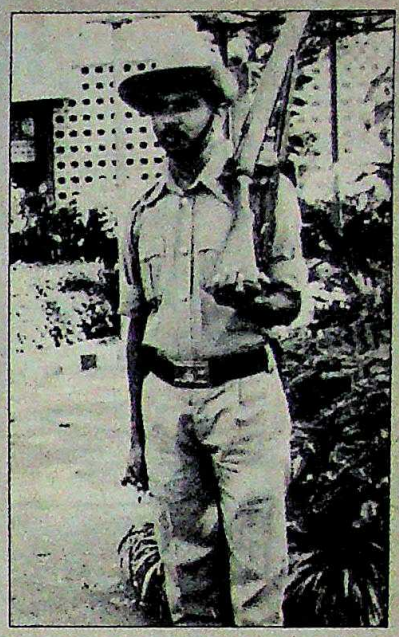
Ultimately, it all boils down to greater burdens on ordinary people. Shivajee Singh, a 60-year-old retired inspector-general of police in Bihar, said that the moment his wife heard about the new price of cooking gas, she "started shouting and virtually turned mad with anger. I didn't know how to face her. They say they are raising resources, but resources for whom and for what?"

On a longer-term basis, there was a time when a lecturer in Delhi University could afford to live a life of satisfactory comfort. But Biswamoy Pati, a lecturer in a New Delhi college, confesses that the recent book fair in the capital was the first one when he couldn't afford to buy a book. And he recounts angrily the fate of a colleague with a wife and child who has to rent the two upstairs rooms in a duplex flat, giving up virtually all privacy because he can reach his rooms only through the landlord's main drawing-room downstairs. The fact is he just cannot afford a better place to stay in, rents being what they are.

Alienation and bitterness are inevitable, leading to such statements as the Patna housewife Madhu Kumari's: "It seems the Government does not want us to live with dignity. Am I expected to change my life-style overnight?" And Kameshwar Choudhary, the 57-year-old principal of a rural college in Madhubani district, said: "This Government is forcing everyone to become corrupt. Otherwise, how can one survive?"

Neither Pati, nor Madhu Kumari nor Choudhary can be in a mood to think just now of the 21st century, let alone wonder what prices will be like in the 21st century. It isn't a thought that would have worried too many people through all the talk in 1985 of the millenium round the corner. And today, of course, the price problems are here and now, as people look for ways to cope with them, wonder what item to strike off the shopping list, fear the next hammerblow, and turn in anger, frustration and disappointment at a government that till yesterday had seemed destined to coast effortlessly all the way to the 21st century itself.

—T.N.NINAN with bureau reports



"Many times our family skips breakfast. When guests come, they add to the expense. When they leave, we stop taking breakfast to make up."

BHIMAIAH
sentry, Bangalore Police Commissioner's office good restaurant for four annas (25 paise), and a 'Brahmachari' sari for Rs 2.50. Now the expense is killing."

At 66, the now retired Sharma ("masterji") in Jaipur paints portraits to add to his pension of Rs 368. But life is difficult: "We have had a hard life right from the beginning, but the thing about today's prices is that while everyone is buying watches and television sets, food and household items have become so expensive." And there is, of course, no question of saving 30 per cent of his income, as he used to do 42 years ago.

In New Delhi, today, 49-year-old K.P. Singh has little in common with either Patil or Sharma. Patil still lives in her old Andheri home, and Sharma has not moved out of his ancestral home in crowded old Jaipur. Singh, in contrast, has a place in the capital's exclusive Jor Bagh, a comfortable job as projects adviser in DCM, and the salary and perquisites of a senior company executive. But he too feels the pinch. In 1978, he ran his household on Rs 1,380 a month. Three years later, this had gone up to Rs 2,070. Another three years later, in 1984, the monthly household budget had more than doubled to Rs 4,550, and last year it was Rs 5,500. All this excludes his house rent, expenditure on his car and driver, and official entertainment.

In seven years, Singh has had to increase his household expenses fourfold, yet he feels his life-style has suffered. His detailed household expenditure diaries show a liberal consumption of bottled drinks, big dry cleaning budgets and frequent taxi rides by family members. But he feels the pinch, he has occasionally had to draw on the money that he makes on his farm, and says he has reduced his purchases of items like fruits: "I don't live any better today than I did before, and I have to be careful before spending some money on a week-end," he says.

Singh was born when Mrs Phillips used to run her guest-house for one rupee. Today, he finds it difficult to manage on Rs 5,500 plus house, car and driver: a total bill in excess of Rs 10,000 a month, or more than Rs 350 a day. Certainly, his tastes are more expensive than her's, but life on Cunningham Road in Bangalore was pleasant enough in the old days. So if one rupee then equals Rs 350 now, the soaring price curve is a part of the simple economic (or uneconomic) equation.

SUBHASH SHARMA

HARI OM GULATI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SAVE FUEL

Install MWM diesel engine genset

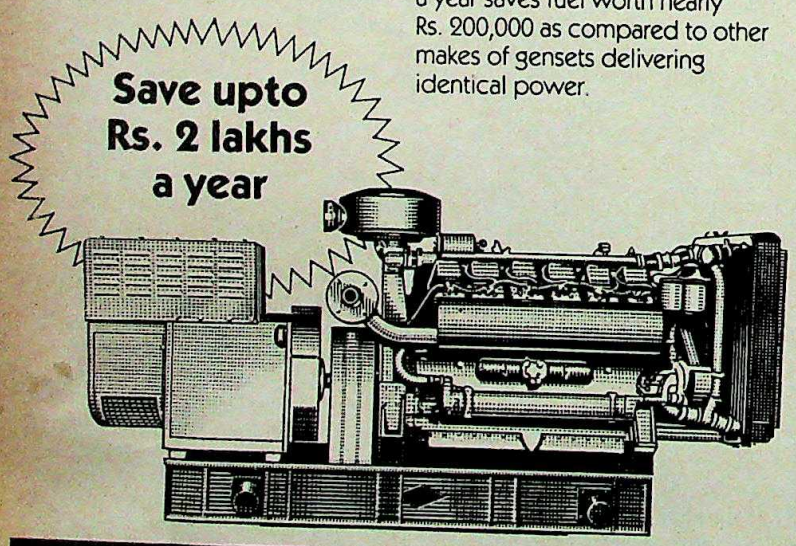
Leading organisations all over the country have confirmed our claims of spectacular fuel savings of upto 20% on MWM gensets used by them. Many of them have been running their gensets round the clock and also confirm their greater reliability and longer periods between overhauls.

In a typical industrial genset application for instance, a 300 KVA MWM genset running for 5000 hours a year saves fuel worth nearly Rs. 200,000 as compared to other makes of gensets delivering identical power.

MWM's Performance Plus

- Continuous running round the clock
- MICO-BOSCH fuel-injection system
- Cleaner exhaust resulting in less pollution
- Parts commonality in the full range to reduce user inventory

Approved by Lloyds, ABS, IRS, MMD, DGSD, Defence and others, MWM diesel gensets are now backed by an expanded service network provided by Greaves' 23 Branch Offices and dealers countrywide.



SOLD & SERVICED BY GREAVES

GREAVES COTTON & CO. LTD.
MWM Division

- 1, Dr. V.B. Gandhi Marg, Bombay 400 023.
- Thapar House, 25 Brabourne Road, Calcutta 700 001.
- Express Building Annexe, 9/10 Bahadur Shah Zafar Marg, New Delhi 110 002.
- 13, Second Line Beach, Madras 600 001

Alfred Allan 3545

Superior fuel efficiency ... the MWM advantage

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PETRO-DOLLAR INFUSION

THE FINANCIAL problems that had engulfed the Indo-Gulf Fertilisers and Chemicals Corporation (INDIA TODAY, January 31) have been sorted out, but the Southern Petrochemical Industries Corporation (SPIC), which had hoped to get a stake in the prestige project, has finally been edged out despite getting support from officials in the Finance Ministry. Senior officials of the State Bank of India are understood to have come in the way of SPIC. Instead, arrangements have been worked out for financial contributions by an Arab sheikh in Dubai so that the promised inflow of petro-dollars will in fact materialise. Earlier, the co-promoter of the project, the Dubai-based A.M. Bukhatir, had been unable to make the promised financial contributions in time, throwing the Rs 700 crore-plus project in jeopardy. But now things are expected to go smoothly.

FRIES AND SOFTWARE

WHAT is possibly the country's first major French fries plant is slated to come up in Maharashtra. In a major expansion and diversification drive, Indian Organic Chemicals is moving into French fries and computer software, and stepping up polyester filament yarn capacity at its factory in Tamil Nadu from 3,500 tonnes to 11,500 tonnes a year. The French fries project involves a collaboration with the Dutch firm Avico, one of Europe's biggest French fry companies, and an investment of Rs 5 crore in the plant. Around 2,500 tonnes of French fries a year will be turned out initially, half of which will be exported. India is the fifth largest potato producer in the world, and the company sees a huge market in Asia. The chemicals firm has also tied up with Lotus Corporation of the US on software and expects to market some 8,000 packages a year through Computer Point, the computer and software retailer. Some of the software is meant for schools.

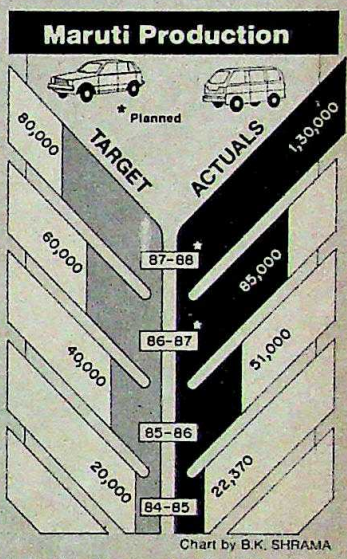
CUTTING RED TAPE

GOVERNMENT-sponsored committee set up last month has submitted a report to the Industry Ministry recommending major reductions in paperwork for small-scale units. Small firms are required by Central government laws to maintain almost 140 forms and registers, and provide often overlapping information to around 38 government inspectors at any given time. The committee has therefore proposed that fewer forms be filled and the laws be amended if necessary for this, and that units be allowed to submit certificates from chartered accountants that they are complying with legal formalities. This would also reduce the number of visits by inspectors. Finally, the committee has recommended excise exemption for units with annual turnovers of under Rs 50 lakh. Since this would include over half the 7.89 lakh small units in the country and involve a sizeable revenue loss, it remains to be seen whether the Government will oblige.

TEMPO TRENDS

THE FIRODIA-owned Bajaj Tempo group is expanding substantially into lasers, solar cells, high-tech electronics and advanced welding equipment. Jaya Hind Sciaky Ltd, an associate welding equipment company, has tied up with a Japanese collaborator on a robots project, and is talking to US and Japanese firms for the laser and solar cells venture. The total investment will be around Rs 20 crore.

MODEL PLANS



THE STATE-owned Maruti Udyog will not produce almost 7,000 vehicles from mid-March to the third week of April. In a planned shutdown during this period, Maruti Udyog's plant in Haryana will expand production capacities from 40,000 to one lakh vehicles a year, two years ahead of schedule. The company has orders in hand for almost two lakh vehicles, and so plans on producing 30,000 vehicles in excess of capacity by 1987-88 by achieving better productivity. A more expensive car model will also hit the roads (the old model is to be phased out) once the factory reopens, but it will be more streamlined, roomier, and 15 per cent more fuel-efficient.

PEGGING PRICES

THE GOVERNMENT has been so rattled by the response to recent price increases in items like petroleum products and foodgrains that it has decided on a new policy that will keep the prices of all basic goods pegged at their existing levels, if not reduced. This includes even such items as fertilisers, cement and steel. Since a number of the public sector companies producing these items are in the red and would like higher prices for their produce, the Government is now embarking on a major programme aimed at reducing costs and achieving improved efficiency.

Going still further, the Government is trying to prune its own administrative expenditure. Apart from the 5 per cent cut that already exists for non-development expenditure, the Cabinet has decided to abolish various non-productive wings of the Government, and unnecessary wings of certain departments. A move in this direction was initiated some months ago, but various ministers had been dragging their feet in taking action. Now they are being left with no choice in the matter, for their administrative outlays in the new budget are being reduced.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Alfred Allan 3545

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SHAW WALLACE

The Mystery Unfolds

THE SHAW Wallace mystery is finally unravelling. Government agencies say they are close to establishing a link between Bangalore-based liquor tycoon Vijay Mallya and Dubai-based M.R. Chhabria in the controversial purchase of the 38.7 per cent of Shaw Wallace shares held overseas. And in the search for the conclusive piece of evidence, the Finance Ministry last fortnight asked the State Bank of India (SBI) and the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) to order separate in-depth probes into the role of SBI officials in advancing loans worth $10.3 million to the Singapore-based Tentura Pvt Ltd, managed by Vijay Mallya's United Breweries International (UBI). The loan, government officials suspect, may have been used by Mallya to partly finance the Shaw Wallace acquisition.

Mallya had told INDIA TODAY last month that the loan had nothing to do with the Shaw Wallace deal, and that he himself had not participated in the share transfer. But the Government decided to launch investigations into the loan soon after the Enforcement Directorate informed the Finance Ministry that it felt SBI's loan may have in fact been used by Mallya for the Shaw Wallace acquisition.

The 38.7 per cent overseas shareholding of Shaw Wallace changed hands in January last year for $26.4 million, and Chhabria had subsequently claimed that he was the new owner of the overseas shares. But newspaper reports had persistently linked Mallya with the deal.

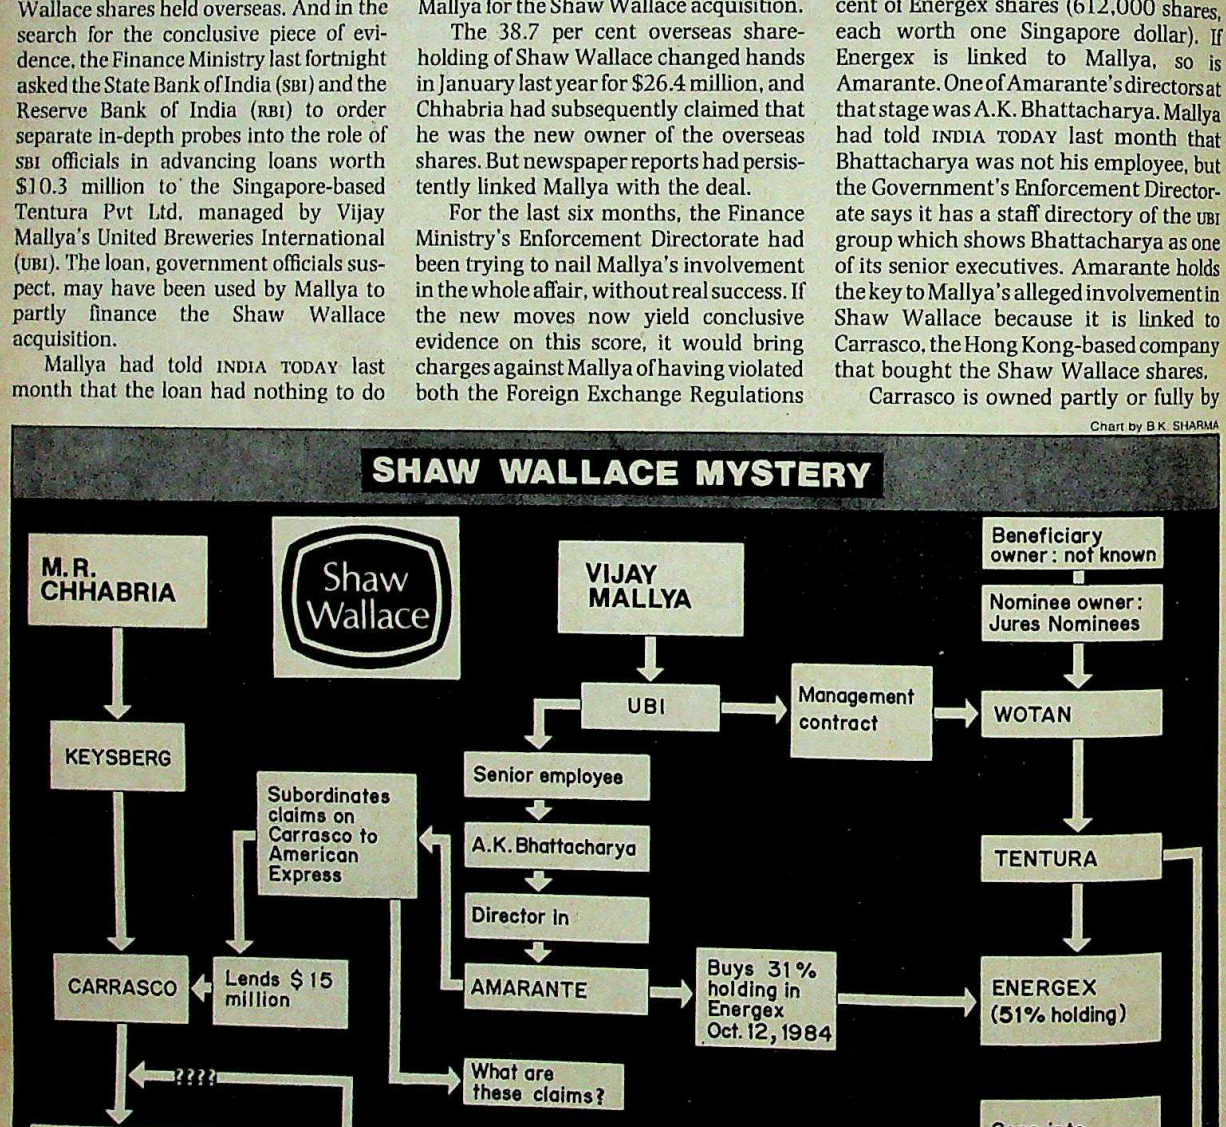
For the last six months, the Finance Ministry's Enforcement Directorate had been trying to nail Mallya's involvement in the whole affair, without real success. If the new moves now yield conclusive evidence on this score, it would bring charges against Mallya of having violated both the Foreign Exchange Regulations Act (FERA) and the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices (MRTP) Act.

The new evidence hinges on the existence of a hitherto unknown company based in Singapore, called Energex Pvt Ltd. Fifty-one per cent of Energex shares are owned by none other than Tentura, the Mallya-managed firm that got the SBI loan in late November 1984, at which point the Shaw Wallace shares were up for grabs.

On October 12, 1984, the Hong Kong-based Amarante Company bought 30 per cent of Energex shares (612,000 shares, each worth one Singapore dollar). If Energex is linked to Mallya, so is Amarante. One of Amarante's directors at that stage was A.K. Bhattacharya. Mallya had told INDIA TODAY last month that Bhattacharya was not his employee, but the Government's Enforcement Directorate says it has a staff directory of the UBI group which shows Bhattacharya as one of its senior executives. Amarante holds the key to Mallya's alleged involvement in Shaw Wallace because it is linked to Carrasco, the Hong Kong-based company that bought the Shaw Wallace shares.

Carrasco is owned partly or fully by

Chart by B.K. SHARMA



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

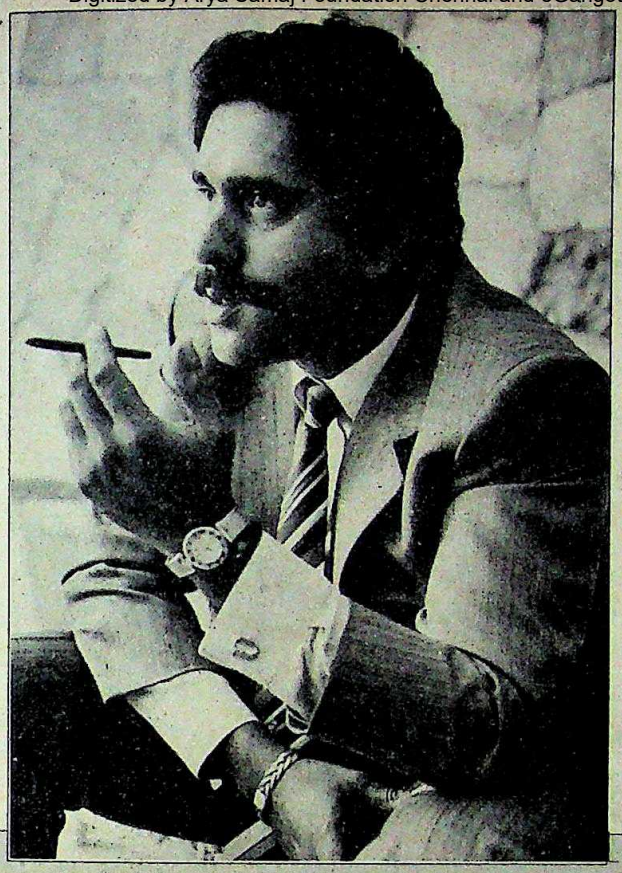
Chhabria, and it had taken a $15 million loan from American Express to finance the $26.4 million Shaw Wallace deal. Amarante entered the picture here because when Carrasco took the loan, Amarante formally subordinated its claims on Carrasco to American Express.

What these claims on Carrasco are is not known, but enforcement officials suspect that Amarante had provided the $11.4-million balance needed by Carrasco to buy the Shaw Wallace interest, and that some of this money could have come from the SBI loan to Tentura, which was linked to Amarante since October 1984 through Energex: a link that was not known of before.

Mallya had told INDIA TODAY last month that 90 per cent of the SBI loan to Tentura was in the form of letters of credit, and that very little cash loan was therefore involved. But government officials say they have documents which suggest that there might be more to the loan question.

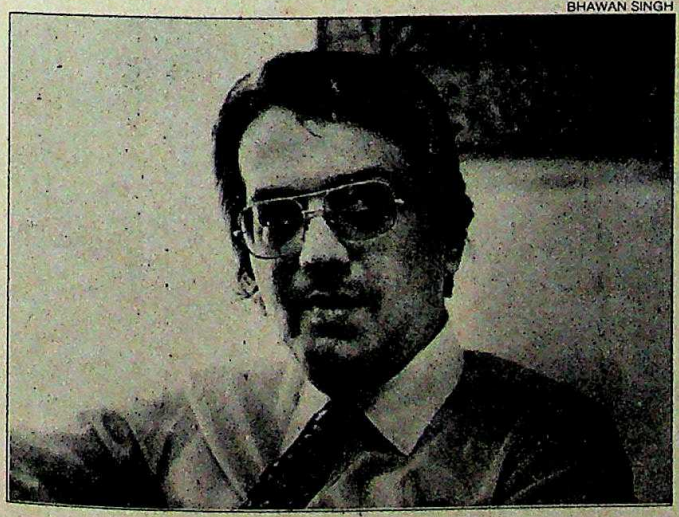
The directorate officials conclude from these documents that most of the loan was not given in the form of letters of credit, as claimed by Vijay Mallya. According to statements of accounts issued by the Registrar of Companies and Businesses, Singapore, on January 31, 1986, both Tentura and its parent company Wotan Pvt Ltd created charges on their assets to SBI. They were created on November 30, 1984, when SBI gave the loan to Tentura.

Meanwhile, the odd part of the acquisition of Energex shares by Amarante was that Amarante had just been formed in Hong Kong, and Energex had just gone into receivership when the share transfer took place. It is a mystery as to why anyone would be interested in the shares of a company under receivership. But a senior banker offered a possible explanation: Energex's parent company Tentura was taking a loan from SBI, and the acquisition of Energex shares by Amarante just before the loan might enable Amarante's assets to be offered in mortgage for the Tentura loan. This would be in the same manner that both Tentura and its own parent company, Wotan, mortgaged themselves to the bank for the loan. If this were indeed the case, and if Amarante's assets were to include a part of Shaw Wallace's shares (or at least the money advanced to Carrasco to buy the Shaw Wallace shares), the complicated transaction would begin to make business sense.



The Government decided to launch investigations into the loan soon after the Enforcement Directorate informed the Finance Ministry that it felt SBI's loan may have in fact been used by Mallya for the Shaw Wallace acquisition.

BHAWAN SINGH



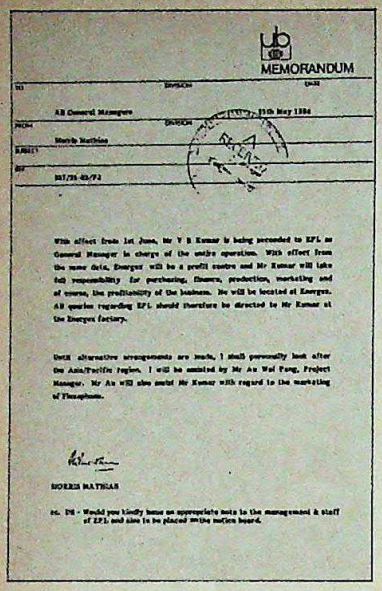
Mallya (top) and Chhabria: trapped in a controversy

At the moment, of course, the Government has not yet got the clinching evidence on how exactly the loan money was used. But several details that are known of what had been going on at the time make for an intriguing picture. Energex was incorporated in Singapore in 1978 for carrying out wholesale and retail business with a paid-up capital of half a million Singapore dollars. While no details about its activities between 1978 and 1984 are available, one of UBI's general managers, V.S. Kumar, was formally put in charge of Energex in June 1984. Morris Mathias, UBI chief and the head of Mallya's operations abroad, circulated an internal memorandum on May 25, 1984, saying that Kumar would look after Energex. Wrote Mathias: "Energex will be a profit centre and Kumar will take full responsibility for purchasing, finance, production, marketing and of course, the profitability of the business. He will be located at Energex."

But Kumar's transfer to Energex proved disastrous for the company. Within five months, the Singapore branch of Indian Bank, which had advanced loans to it, placed the company under receivership on October 4, 1984. Energex's assets had a book value of 250,000 Singapore dollars but its liabilities were estimated at four times its current assets. The purchase of Energex shares by

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



UB
MEMORANDUM

To: All General Managers — Division: — Date: 25th May 1984

From: Morris Mathias — Division: — Ref: —

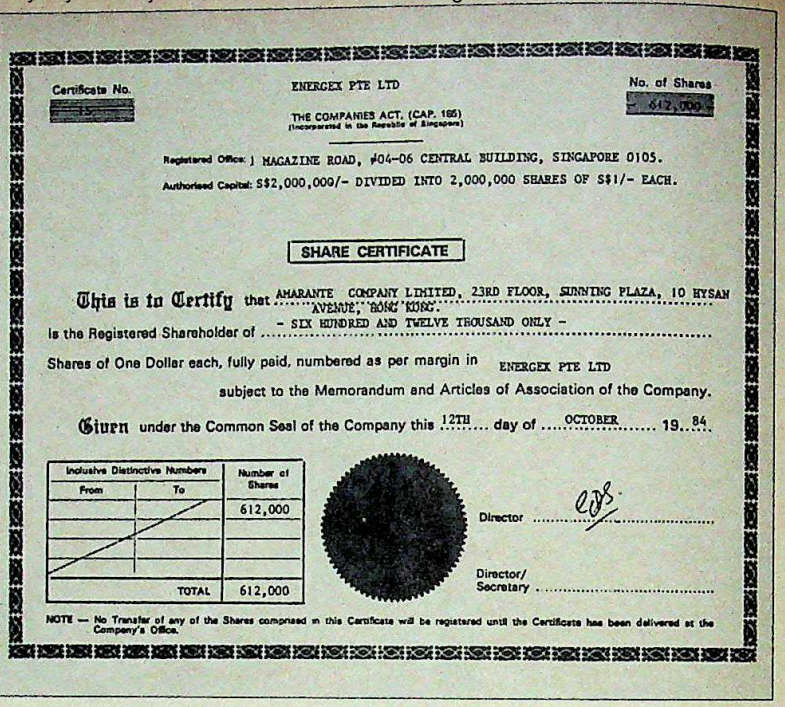
Ref: MM/84-85/92

With effect from 1st June, Mr Y B Kumar is being seconded to EFL as General Manager in charge of the entire operation. With effect from the same date, Energex will be a profit centre and Mr Kumar will take full responsibility for purchasing, finance, production, marketing and of course, the profitability of the business. He will be located at Energex. All queries regarding EFL should therefore be directed to Mr Kumar at the Energex factory.

Until alternative arrangements are made, I shall personally look after the Asia/Pacific region. I will be assisted by Mr Au Wai Pang, Project Manager. Mr Au will also assist Mr Kumar with regard to the marketing of Phosphate.

MORRIS MATHIAS

cc. PM - Would you kindly have an appropriate note in the management & staff of EFL and also to be placed on the notice board.



Certificate No. [redacted] — ENERGEX PTE LTD — No. of Shares 612,000

THE COMPANIES ACT, (CAP. 185)
(Incorporated in the Republic of Singapore)

Registered Office: 1 MAGAZINE ROAD, #04-06 CENTRAL BUILDING, SINGAPORE 0105.

Authorised Capital: S$2,000,000/- DIVIDED INTO 2,000,000 SHARES OF S$1/- EACH.

SHARE CERTIFICATE

This is to Certify that AMARANTE COMPANY LIMITED, 23RD FLOOR, SUNNING PLAZA, 10 HYSAN AVENUE, HONG KONG.

is the Registered Shareholder of - SIX HUNDRED AND TWELVE THOUSAND ONLY -

Shares of One Dollar each, fully paid, numbered as per margin in ENERGEX PTE LTD subject to the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company.

Given under the Common Seal of the Company this 12TH day of OCTOBER 19 84

Inclusive Distinctive Numbers		Number of Shares
From	To
		612,000
TOTAL		612,000

Director

Director/ Secretary

NOTE — No Transfer of any of the Shares comprised in this Certificate will be registered until the Certificate has been delivered at the Company's Office.

Office memo showing UBI connection with Energex and share certificates of Energex with Amarante: links with Shaw Wallace.

Amarante took place eight days after Energex was placed under receivership. One of Energex's directors, G. Dhana Sekharan, issued the share certificate to Amarante, so that 30 per cent of Energex's authorised share capital passed on to Amarante.

A directorate official described the latest bits of information as a "breakthrough". But he added that the Government would be able to nail UBI down only if it got cooperation from SBI and Indian Bank on information concerning the loan. So far, the banks have refused to divulge any details on the plea that this would amount to violation of Singapore's banking laws. But the inquiries ordered last month suggest that the full details of the story might finally be known.

Surprisingly, SBI gave the loan to Tentura although its subsidiaries were either losing money or were under liquidation. Among the various subsidiaries, Chuan Kah Food Manufacturing had suffered a loss of 0.5 million Singapore dollars, UBI Computers Services 0.75 million Singapore dollars, United Distributors had ceased operations after running up losses of 2 million Singapore dollars, Distillery Industries had also ceased operations and Energex itself had gone into receivership after suffering a loss of 3 million Singapore dollars.

Enforcement officials suspect that Amarante had provided the $11.4 million balance needed by Carrasco to buy the Shaw Wallace interest, and that some of this money could have come from the SBI loan to Tentura.

SBI officials in Bombay, however, maintain that the loan was fully secured, but they refuse to divulge the amount outstanding against the loan. However, if as Mallya claims the loan was granted in the form of letters of credit in 1984, the bank should have recovered its money after the letters of credits were honoured. But an SBI spokesman in Singapore told a newspaper two months ago that the loans were fully secured, and by implication still not repaid.

Since SBI has not disclosed the purpose for which the loan was advanced, the directorate officials charge that the money was finally used for partially financing the Shaw Wallace purchase.

If the details of the SBI loan hold the key to unlocking the Shaw Wallace mystery, another key will be provided by establishing the ownership of the various companies involved in the complicated transactions. Chhabria had told the enforcement officials who questioned him last year that he would provide them the full details of how he raised the $26.4 million that he used to acquire the Shaw Wallace shareholding. But he has not yet done this. He had also promised to provide the full details of the ownership of Carrasco and its holding company, Keysberg. These details have not been provided either.

The ownership of the other companies are also a secret. Energex is owned by Tentura, which is owned by Wotan, which is owned by Jures Nominees, which is held in trust by a lawyers' firm. So the beneficiary owner of this chain of companies remains unknown. Similarly, the beneficiary owner of Amarante remains unknown. If the identities of these various owners are disclosed, the Shaw Wallace mystery will finally be solved.

Mallya, meanwhile, pleaded time beyond INDIA TODAY's deadline for answering questions concerning Energex, and said he would have to get the full details. Meanwhile, the Government's wheels had already started moving. The ultimate outcome in this celebrated case still remains uncertain, but one thing is certain: there will be more disclosures in the coming weeks. —PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Traditionally Hindon
Contemporary in style

HINDON

Suitings, Shirtings, Dress Materials and Sarees in cotton, blends and 100% polyester.

DCM TEXTILES

Available at over 550 DCM retail stores around the country and at all leading general textile stores near you.

AKSHARA/HRM-1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Nerolac paints protect. Beautifully.

At Goodlass Nerolac we believe that a paint must do more than just coat a surface beautifully. So we've taken our paints one step ahead. To give your painted surfaces the best protection against the corroding effects of weather and time.

Protection offered by India's largest-selling industrial paint company. Protection that's enjoyed by 2 out of every 5 scooters and mopeds and sought for many more industrial applications everyday.

Protection already trusted by many reputed clients, including Godrej, Maruti Udyog, Bajaj Auto, Telco, Kelvinator, Mahindra & Mahindra and OGI.

Protection constantly being perfected in our R & D labs... to give you the technological edge. In industry. And in more and more beautiful homes too.

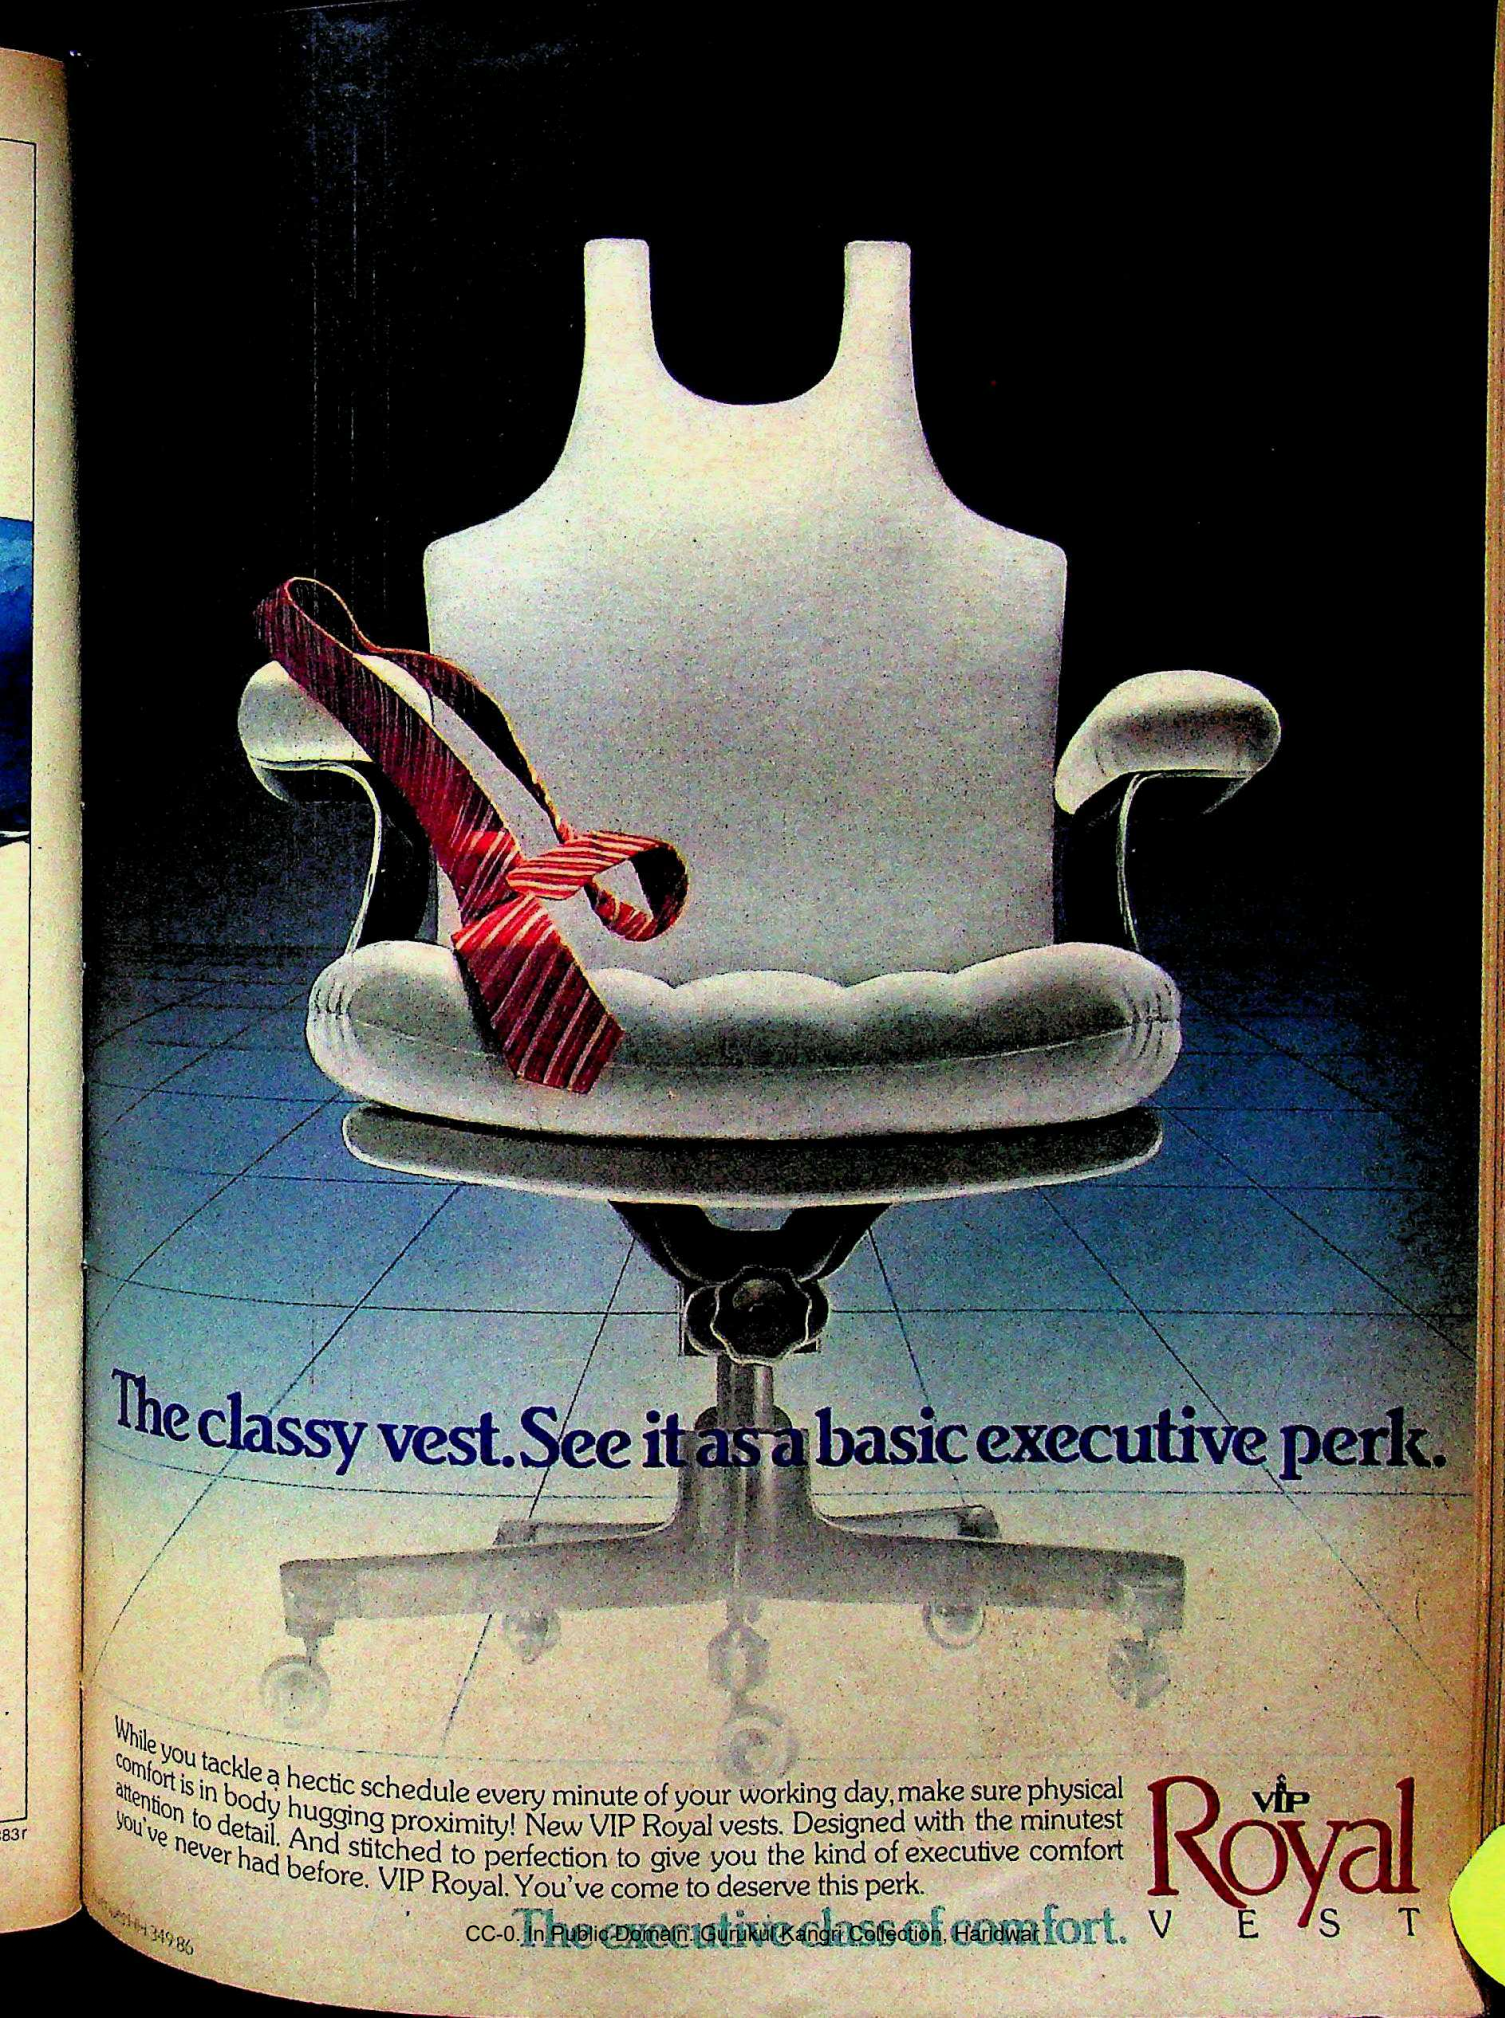
Decorative Paints: Emulsions. Enamels. Distempers.

Specialised Industrial Paints & Pigments.

NEROLAC PAINTS Technologically too, always a shade better.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

everest/85/GNP/383r



CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

An essential feature of your modern kitchen !

PEARLPET®

Jars ● Bottles ● Containers

The only unbreakable and food-grade kitchen containers.

UNIVERSAL ACCEPTANCE

PEARLPET jars, bottles and containers are made from Polyethylene Terephthalate, the safest food-grade polymer used the world over for packaging and storing all kinds of liquids and foodstuff such as edible oil, soya sauce, honey, sherbet, juice, pickles, biscuits, cereals, sugar, dryfruits, confectionary, etc., and now available in India for the first time.

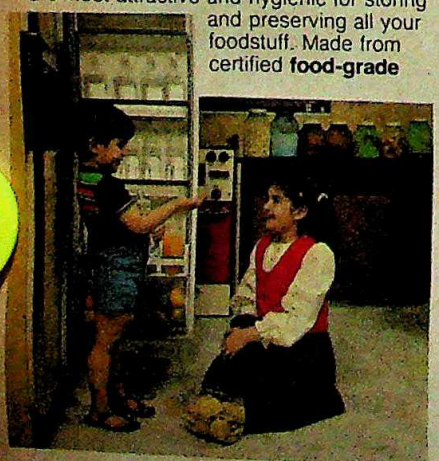
HYGIENIC AESTHETICS

PEARLPET jars, bottles and containers are most attractive and hygienic for storing and preserving all your foodstuff. Made from certified food-grade polymer they are absolutely non-toxic to ensure your family's health and safety. Food stored in PEARLPET is safe from rust, corrosion and contamination by pests and rodents.



GUARANTEED UNBREAKABLE

Unlike glass, PEARLPET never breaks. Unlike plastic, PEARLPET never cracks or splinters. PEARLPET lasts a life time, because it is really unbreakable.

NO ODOUR PROBLEMS

No more problems of "plastic" smell or taste in your food stuff. PEARLPET containers neither absorb nor impart any odour, whatever be the food stored in them.
For days the flavour and taste remain fresh and natural.

LIGHT AS FEATHER

Tough, sturdy and 15 times lighter than glass, PEARLPET containers are convenient and easy to handle. So light that you can yourself carry, store and remove them from the kitchen shelves.

TRANSPARENT AS CRYSTAL

PEARLPET containers are crystal clear, transparent and yet colourful. The clarity remains the same even after years of use. And what's more PEARLPET does not discolour or loose its sparkle even after storing pickles, spices, etc.
PEARLPET jars, bottles and containers come in a variety of sizes, colours and shapes.

PEARL Polymers

704 Rohit House, Tolstoy Marg, New Delhi - 110001
Phones : 3317033, 3317250, 3317213 Telex : 031 - 65493 PARL-IN Bombay : 316 Mahim United Industrial Premises Co-op. Ltd.

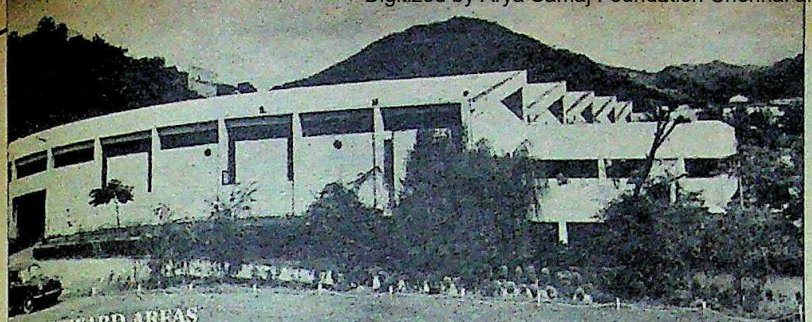
370 Mughal Lane, Mahim, Bombay - 400016. Ph : 465620.

PEARL PET is a Registered Trade Mark.

AKSHARA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Factory in backward Parwanoo in Himachal Pradesh: no infrastructure

BACKWARD AREAS

Reverse Gear

MAHENDRA Jhawar is not a man given to stubbornness. But the chairman and managing director of the Usha Telehoist group of companies is adamant on one point—his group will never again set foot in what the Government classifies as a no-industry district. The group launched a tractor chain links factory in Karnataka's Kolar district, but the Rs 7-crore venture was plagued with problems almost from day one and Jhawar has had enough. "If the Government is serious about developing industrially backward areas, it must first create the infrastructure in such places. The backward area policy's purpose is not being served," declares Jhawar.

That sentiment is echoed by a widening spectrum of businessmen, chambers of commerce and even some economists who are beginning to question the way the Government is going about attracting investment to industrially backward regions. Says economist Isher Ahluwalia, who works for New Delhi's Centre for Policy Research: "I have a hunch that the policy is not working—or workable. I'm not against the objective of regional dispersal of industry, but you must have the infrastructure first." And the Association of Indian Engineering Industry (AIEI) has gone on record to suggest that companies scrambling for manufacturing licences have occasionally gone into backward areas on a half-hearted basis, establishing assembly operations but not full-fledged production facilities. AIEI Executive Director Tarun Das argues: "A whole lot of people who are not keen on moving to backward areas try to technically implement their licences but not in the real spirit, because there is really no other way of getting a licence."

Clearly, the official programme to reshape the landscape in industry-starved regions has only partially taken off. Three years ago, the Government revamped its scheme, tagged on 118 regions which had no large or medium-sized industrial units ("no-industry" districts) to the existing 168 backward districts (the tally is now some 300) and pepped up the incentives for firms to move to such areas. These included investment subsidies, soft loans and concessions. A key inducement was a virtual assurance of a licence for companies willing to shift to no-industry districts.

This was followed up in January 1985 when the Government freed firms covered by the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices (MRTP) Act from licensing requirements for around 22 items, on condition that they manufacture these in backward areas.

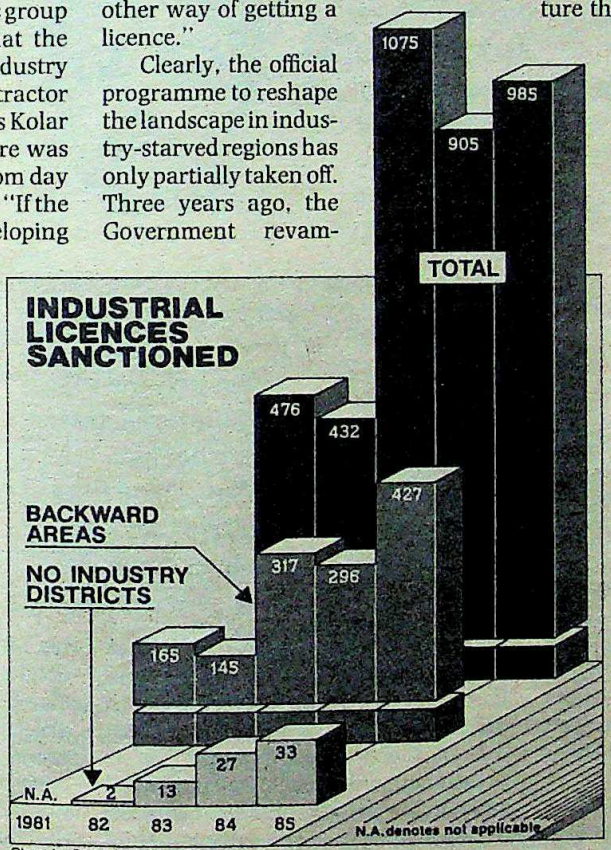


Chart by B.K. SHARMA

Few quarrel with the programme's goals—correcting regional imbalances and dispersing manufacturing concerns to undeveloped parts of the country. But the first target still remains elusive, while the second has been only partially met.

The rub lies in the reluctance of businessmen to invest in areas where infrastructure does not exist. Industrialists complain that they have to foot much of the horrendously heavy bills for basic facilities such as housing for the staff, schools for their children, roads, power and transport arrangements. Raw materials have to be ferried miles from urban centres to plant sites, skilled employees have to be cajoled with fatter salaries to shift there and project costs spiral. These are not fully covered by the incentives, and many of those who decide to take the plunge seem to acquire second thoughts, if the number of letters of intent that are not turned into licences is anything to go by.

But the Government has finally woken up to the problem. A committee headed by Planning Commission Secretary C.G. Somaya is now reviewing the backward area scheme's impact. Says a committee member: "The terms of reference include assessing the impact of the scheme and suggesting modifications in it if

"If the Government is serious about developing industrially backward areas, it must first create the infrastructure."

MAHENDRA JHAWAR
managing director, Usha Telehoist group

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

necessary." Before March-end, the committee would submit a report to the Government recommending an overhaul of the programme, if not an alternative approach altogether.

The latest initiative itself follows an earlier salvage operation. Some months ago, officialdom earmarked Rs 600 crore for infrastructure in 99 no-industry districts, to be spent over the next five years. As a first step it picked 11 "growth centres" spread over six or seven states: Rs 6 crore is to be funnelled to each of them through the Industrial Development Bank of India for investment in housing and other facilities.

No one would question the wisdom of these moves. For no-industry districts have not been a roaring success. While around 18 per cent of the total number of letters of intent the Government granted were for ventures in such districts, very few of them were translated into licences (see chart). A senior bureaucrat in the Industry Ministry, however, contends that it takes a minimum of two to three years for projects to come up. That is true, but the trend is disquieting.

The picture is brighter on the backward district front. A study by the Urban Development Ministry's Town and Country Planning Organisation suggests that the number of backward district projects registered with the Directorate-General of Trade and Development climbed sharply in the six years ending in 1983. These are mostly for small ventures that do not require a licence. But even here, exactly how many of them actually became factories on the ground is not clear. A senior government official privately reckons that the figure may not exceed a third of the projects registered.

There is more disquieting evidence. The Government and the financial institutions have sanctioned a whopping Rs 7,120 crore in backward area subsidies and aid, but some of these projects have remained on paper. Only 69 per cent of the total institutional aid sanctioned in the last 15 years has actually been utilised. The statistics also suggest that more projects took off the ground in states with a better track record of providing infrastructure than in other states. The obverse of this is that four states in the first category hogged over 37 per cent of the total aid. Obviously, more has to be done to rectify regional industrial imbalances.

MUCH of this confirms what several businessmen have been saying all along: at the ground level, the problems are daunting enough to keep companies away from backward areas. Many state governments drag their feet in handing out subsidies. "We were eligible for subsidies on power generating sets for a project in Punjab but got them after 8 or 10 years," recalls Parvindar Singh, managing director of Ranbaxy Laboratories.

Even when incentives are handed over, they don't fully offset the 10 to 25 per cent higher project expenditures that firms fork out in backward areas. Argues Subodh Bhargava, chief executive of the tractor company Eicher Goodearth, which has three backward area or no-industry district ventures: "The concessions granted to companies to go to backward areas are in no way adequate for the costs." Modi Cement is putting up a cement plant in a backward area 100 km from Raipur, and industrialist Yogendra K. Modi says that the company spent Rs 20 crore more than estimated, half of it on a 23-km railway line to bring in coal to the plant site.

There are other horror stories. Bringing in skilled staff from outside triggers off local pressures on companies to absorb sons of the soil. Says one businessman: "Our factory was the only major unit in the area and became a focal point for local politicians who exerted pressure on us to take on unskilled sons of the soil." And firms such as Modi Cements, Eicher and the JK group's Straw Products Ltd employ couriers to transmit messages to their head offices because telexes and telephones do not function. Straw Products set up a paper mill in a backward area in Orissa some 23 years ago. "But," says company president Shailesh Chandra Jain, "if the phones don't work you have to go 200 km to Vishakhapatnam to make a phone call."

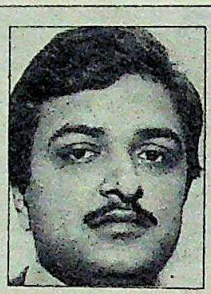
Finally, questions still remain as to how quickly development takes place and how widespread it is in backward districts. Some company executives, however, insist that their backward area units provide spinoffs to surrounding localities. Jain of Straw Products says that its paper mill in Orissa directly employs 3,000 people and indirectly provides a livelihood to another 25,000.

There have been a few successes too in the backward area story such as Dhar in Madhya Pradesh and Hosur in Tamil Nadu. But the first is close to Indore and the second offers adequate infrastructural facilities, suggesting that the failures have been due to the lack of an adequate infrastructure.

"The scheme will take off. Give it a little more time," argues a senior Industry Ministry bureaucrat. With the Government on the verge of changing course, he could be right. For backward areas provide the elbow room to big corporations to expand, which developed zones do not, as P.M. Sinha, Hindustan Lever's vice-president for corporate affairs, points out. Moreover, the scheme presents an opportunity to firms to escape high wage, high cost islands like Bombay. Deep C. Anand, chairman of the Gabriel India group of companies, defends the backward area faith because "there are more problems in cities like Bombay where the infrastructure has broken down."

In the final analysis, it makes sense for firms to eye backward areas. And firms will move there—if they do not have to dig too deeply into their coffers to do so. With the Government doing a rescue act, a scheme that has floundered for long may finally get going.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI
with bureau reports

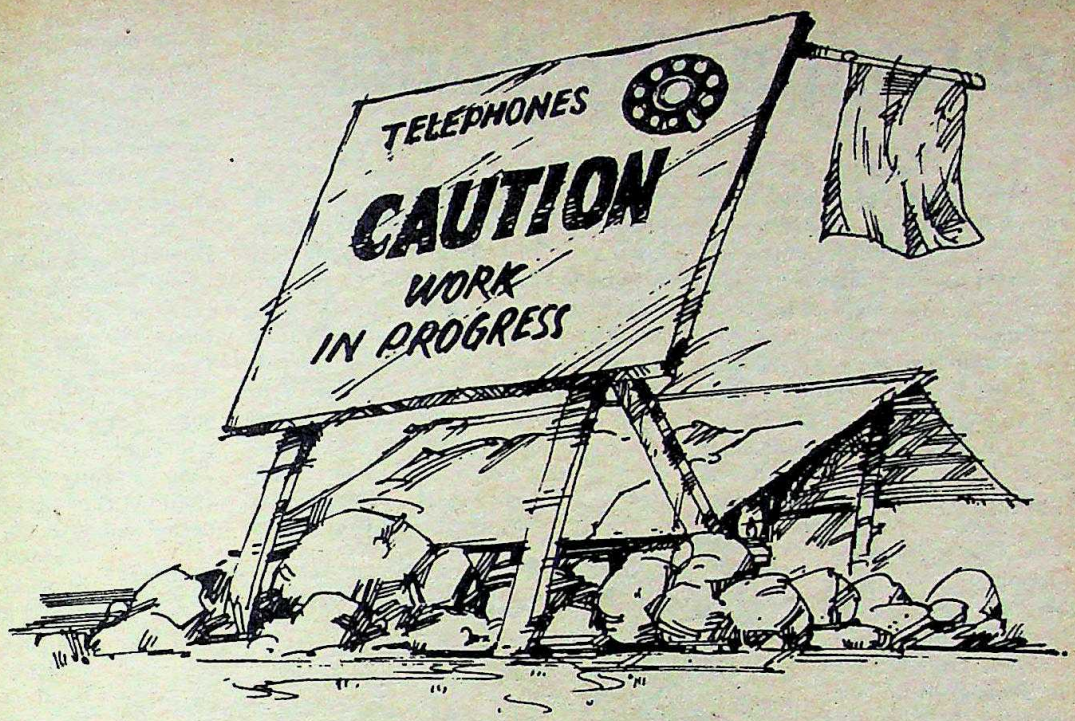


Y.K. Modi complains they have spent Rs 20 crore more than originally estimated, about half of it on a rail line.

Deep C. Anand, of the Gabriel India group feels there are more problems in cities like Bombay where the infrastructure has broken down.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Why not precaution?

Very often, no sooner is the road re-laid,a new problem with the telephone cable arises. Redigging is therefore inevitable.

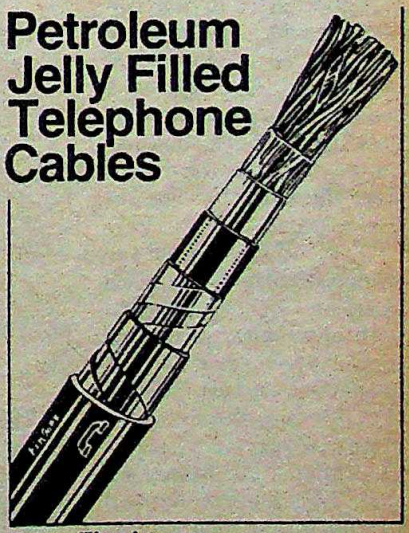
In tropical India, rainwater seepage is a major threat. Besides, power carrying cables almost always, run alongside the underground telephone cables.

It's time telecommunication in India put such hurdles behind it.

Finolex has the answer– Finolex petroleum jelly filled telephone cables. An exclusive insulation compound gives the cable a longer life. The petroleum jelly acts as an effective moisture barrier and resists seepage during handling or laying. Also, to prevent electrical interference from outside, the cables are provided with special screening.

Now P&T's computerized exchanges, sleeker telephone instruments and a wider communication network, have Finolex cable efficiency to match.

Petroleum Jelly Filled Telephone Cables



From Finolex, the leaders in cables. In technical collaboration with United Technologies/ Essex Group Inc. USA.

Finolex Cables Limited
26/27, Bombay-Pune Road,
Pimpri, PUNE-411018.

Finolex gets people together

Finolex 659-88 English

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAX RAIDS

Tightening The Bonds

FRAUD, tax evasion, laundering black money through shares, flouting foreign exchange rules—the charges were serious enough. But when paraded across the front pages of newspapers and linked with some of the most respected names in the Indian corporate world, the rumblings were inevitable.

Last fortnight, the Government continued to swoop down on companies in a blaze of media publicity. In dramatic raids over the last few weeks, tax officials hit the offices and factories of Bata India, Voltas, Brooke Bond, Nagarjuna Fertilisers and Chemicals, and Computerade (a sister concern of J.M. Financial and Investment Consultancy Services Pvt Ltd). Company employees were grilled, sometimes into the early hours of the morning, top executives (the managing director and a non-resident director in Bata's case) were arrested, mountains of files seized and the residences of senior officials searched.

Any action on that scale was guaranteed to raise corporate hackles. And last fortnight, in an unprecedented closing of ranks, companies seemed to be readying to hit back. One financial daily reported that quite a few firms were thinking of sueing the Excise Department.

Some of those caught in the latest storm have in effect charged the Government with impropriety in rushing to the press since the tax allegations related to sums that were in dispute. In a press release, Bata India Chairman M.M. Sabharwal said: "It is unfortunate that the matter has been given so much adverse publicity before any allegations could be established." And, Voltas Chairman A.H. Tobaccowala issued a detailed rejoinder prominently published in the newspapers: "The manner of the investigation and the subsequent arrests raise issues of public policy."

The Directorate of Revenue Intelligence charged Bata with illegally claiming almost Rs 1 crore in customs duty drawbacks (tax rebates that the Government gives on exported items). The Government says that the firm actually used natural rubber in the soles of shoes it exported, but claimed that it used synthetic rubber. Duty is leviable on the first but not on the second and any duty refund claimed on a non-dutiable item would clearly be fraudulent. The company has denied this, saying that it had been talking to government agencies on the matter, the amount under dispute was "just a few lakhs" and not Rs 1 crore, that exports form around 2.5 per cent of its annual turnover of Rs 200 crore and the Government could have had for the asking any documents it wanted instead of raiding the firm.

In another export-related issue, Brooke Bond is under a cloud for allegedly under-invoicing tea exports, but company officials were unavailable for comment. The issue of the Rs 5-crore excise evasion charges levelled at Voltas may be more damaging. Tax fiddles by at least some refrigerator-manufacturing companies are common knowledge, but the Tata company had gone to the Bombay High Court on tax demands relating to a period ending in 1983. If Tobaccowala is to be believed, the excise man zeroed in on a subsequent 17-month period on essentially the same grounds that the company has questioned in court. The Government is well within its rights to do this, but it could more properly have awaited the outcome of the case.

The most curious tale of all is the Nagarjuna affair. The high-flying steel, cement, coated tubes and leasing company group had privately placed a Rs 10-crore equity issue for its Rs 600-crore fertiliser project. The issue was managed by J.M. Financial, a heavyweight with over 200 clients including the Tatas and Birlas. Income tax officials raided Nagarjuna premises in Hyderabad and J.M.'s sister share registrar firm Computerade, as well as the homes of Nagarjuna and J.M. directors and claimed to have unearthed evidence that massive amounts of number two money had gone into the Nagarjuna shares in benami transactions. Tax officials indicated that "this is probably the largest share market swindle we have unearthed so far".

That remains to be seen, but the officers had amassed quite a bit of so-called evidence. On one side were a pile of share certificates with the names and the number of

A.H. TOBACCOWALA
chairman,
Voltas

"The manner of the investigation and the subsequent arrests raise issues of public policy."

K.V.K. RAJU
promoter,
Nagarjuna group

"None of the Nagarjuna group has a single bogus or benami share anywhere in the country."

M.M. SABHARWAL
chairman,
Bata India

"It is unfortunate that the matter has been given so much publicity before any allegations could be established."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation

shares allotted neatly typed in. On the other were the application forms, still to be sent out to the people who had already got the shares and one official says that "quite a few application forms appear to have been filled in by two or even three different people." It was at first sight the classic scam.

Namesh Kimpani, managing director of J.M. was not available for comment, even as the income taxmen camped in his offices. K.V.K. Raju said there was nothing to the allegations: "None of the Nagarjuna group of companies has even a single bogus or benami share anywhere in the country." And an executive of the group pointed out that the Government had made enquiries eight weeks ago and the company had plenty of time to suppress evidence if it was so inclined.

However, market sources tell a curious story. It begins when Nagarjuna decided to ask for Rs 10 crore from the market, part of the Rs 60 crore that the directors would need in hand when they went asking for loans for their Rs 600 crore project. But they wanted private placements—this meant that they wouldn't have to issue a prospectus—without sending out application forms. The company decided to go ahead with this informal money-gathering operation on the advice of their lawyers.

The money management firm called in a broker who was asked to contact about 70 brokers who in their turn were supposed to call up 35-odd people each and request them to buy 5,000 shares, costing Rs 50,000. There was no premium and payment to the brokers was, a source confirmed, strictly by cheque. The brokers are said to have been over enthusiastic and got six times as many people as they should have—in all 12,000.

This was when J.M. appears to have been rather unwise. After they received a list of the applicants, they sent out application forms to each one in an issue which was meant to be privately placed. About this time somebody complained to the Income Tax Department.

While the knotty question of whether Nagarjuna was on the right side of the law in asking for money on such a word-of-mouth basis remains, the Government seems unfazed by the mounting flak on its continuing raids. Indeed, one senior Government functionary hinted last fortnight that more raids were on the cards. If these do materialise, a right royal legal battle could erupt in a blaze of publicity. And then, so to say, the boot will be on the other foot.

—JAGANNATH DUBASHI with bureau reports

GURPREET SINGH

Crossed Wires

GURPREET SINGH, 52, is not your screwdriver technologist looking for a fast buck in electronics. His 21-year-old Continental Devices India Ltd is one of the top half a dozen manufacturers of electronic components in the country, and he himself—educated at Doon School and St Stephens College before he did industrial engineering and an MBA at Washington University in the US—is one of the acknowledged spokesmen of the country's fastest growing industry. Though supportive of the Government's steps to promote the use of electronics, he remains a severe critic of the picture that he sees in a frontier industry. He spoke to Senior Editor T.N. NINAN in New Delhi last fortnight on his hopes and frustrations:

THE BEST thing that happened to the electronics industry three years ago was that the Government set itself a goal: of increasing electronics production tenfold to Rs 10,000 crore by 1990. The trouble is that there was no detailed working paper or strategy to work towards this target. So nothing very much happened. Then Rajiv Gandhi came on the scene. Being an electronics buff, he talked of the 21st century, and so electronics became a buzzword. And in March last year, the Government announced that various areas of electronics were being de-licensed, and that licences were being broad-banded.

These were wonderful announcements, but I had to point out at a meeting with the industry minister six months later that the notifications had not been issued to make the new policy effective. It still took another five weeks, and the notifications are still incomplete. If I ask about the procedure for broad-banding, they don't even know the procedure. I don't expect electronics output in 1990 to be more than Rs 6,000 crore, but even that will be an achievement.

In any case, what does the Government mean by de-licensing? I still have to go to the Government for approval of my phased manufacturing programme, for clearance of capital goods imports, for the location of my factory, for clearing my collaboration agreement, for clearance by the controller of capital issues if I want to raise money from the public, and submit my proposal to detailed scrutiny by the Directorate-General of Technical Development if I want imports at the lower of the rates that the Government specifies. So what have you changed? Just two things: I don't have to fill in a form with 18 copies, and there is no limit to the number of entrants in any field. I don't think this is de-licensing, at least not in the terms that either the Oxford or Webster dictionary would understand it. You can't undo 20 of 200 knots tying me up and ask me to run.

You must remember that electronics is a very fast moving field, with rapid obsolescence. A product's life cycle is often no more than two years, sometimes just six months. So if it takes a year to get a licence, arrange for the infrastructure and then another two years to productionise something, you will always be producing obsolete items.

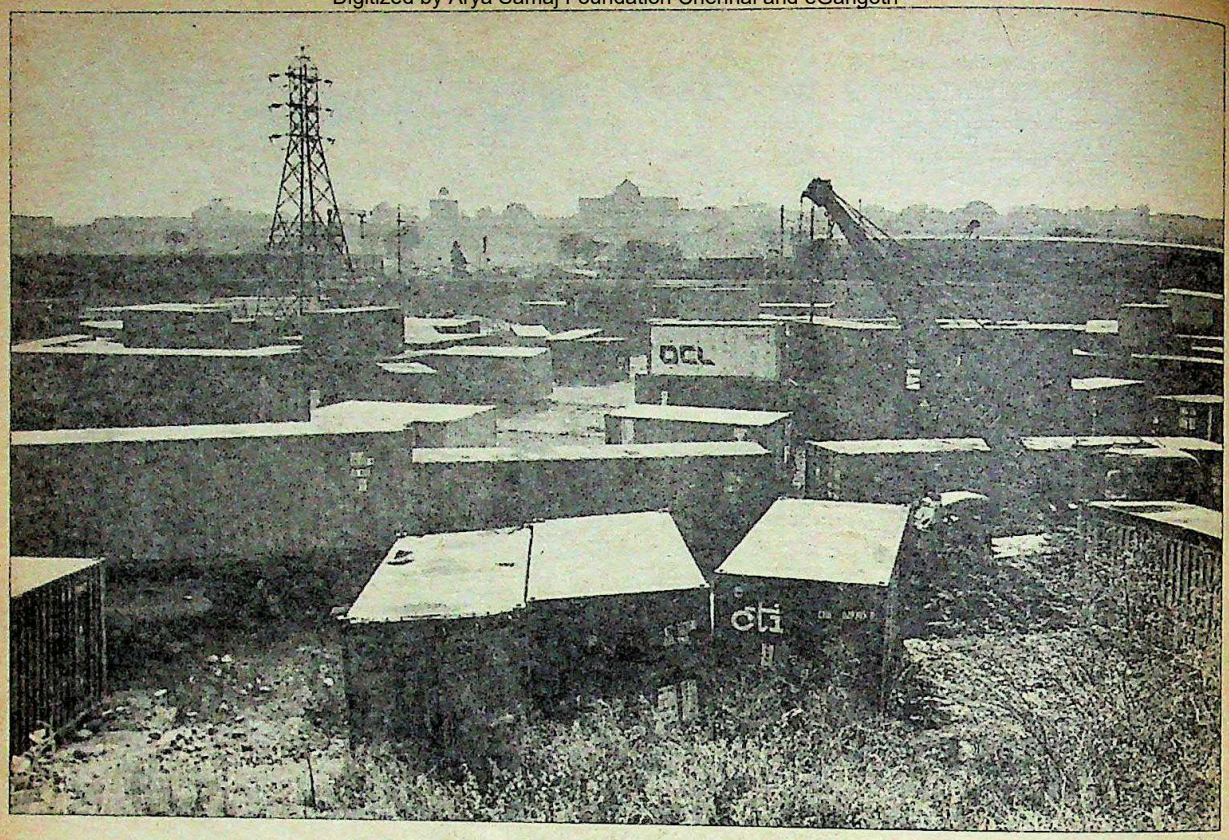
The Government's aims are well-meaning: it wants faster growth, fresh technology and contemporary products. The first has happened only modestly, the second will still take time, and the third seems impossible until we develop mass markets and get economies of scale. The Government now encourages me to produce as many components as I want, but where is the market for their use in end products? The TV market has dried up, and a mass market has not developed in either radios, electronic watches, telephones or even calculators.

Exports is the other option, but my basic costs are too high. If you take a TV set from Delhi to Faridabad, the octroi is Rs 250, and the sales tax Rs 500. Then how can you cut costs? The tax on a colour TV set priced at Rs 7,500 is Rs 3,250.

I would like to see genuine de-licensing so that I don't need any permissions from the Government. I must be allowed to acquire technology at commercial rates, the cost of inputs must be dramatically lowered, and the Government must develop a mass market so that we can remain contemporary.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Containers strewn about the yard at the Delhi depot: soured dreams

INLAND CONTAINER SERVICE

The Derailed Depot

DELHI'S Inland Container Depot (ICD), established two years ago as an extension of Bombay Port, has fallen prey to gross mismanagement and abuse. Traders using the facility complain that they suffer incalculable losses on account of excruciating delays, missed shipping connections and cancellation of export orders. It is in essence, a headless organisation with little or no built-in system of accountability. Despite its potential of playing a vital role in the efficient movement of thousands of crores of rupees worth of exports and imports in and out of Delhi, the entire operation has degenerated into a trader's nightmare. Features Editor INDERJIT BADHWAR reports on how a system integral to the smooth operation of international trade and crucial to earning foreign exchange is being rapidly derailed:

THREE steel containers packed with Bata shoes being exported to 17 different buyers in the UK were recently Customs-cleared at Delhi's inland container depot and despatched by rail to Bombay Port to catch a ship sailing on January 29. One container made the ship. The other two didn't. For two weeks, the railways—which freighted the containers to Bombay—had no idea where the missing goods were. They were ultimately tracked down by a shipping agent.

Haryana Minerals Ltd, a state government undertaking that exports about Rs 7 lakh of slate stone mined in Narnol, to Australia, Belgium and Holland each month sweated out a similar frustration. A recent consignment of the material delivered to the facility was cleared for shipment to Bombay after lying in Delhi for nearly three months because containers could not be loaded in time. The Haryana Government was able to save its letters of credit, but wound up risking the loss of several future orders.

These are but two results of bureaucratic bungling, ineptitude and turf battles which are cutting a wide swathe of sabotage through the Government's intention of establishing Delhi's ICD as a pivotal building block designed to help facilitate international trade in northern India—estimated at about Rs 2,000 crore—and make exports from this region more competitive and aggressive in foreign markets. Delays, shoddy equipment, inefficient railway services and an apparently underhanded effort by a community of vested interests in the Bombay Port area who seem determined to strangle the new operation with red tape in order to prevent a loss in their own business, are playing havoc with users, many of whom now threaten to boycott the facility altogether.

After several years of brainstorming, ICD was born two years ago so that traders from the capital's export-rich hinterland could send out or import goods in containers and have all their formalities, paperwork and packing done in Delhi, instead of faraway Bombay, while simultaneously taking belated advantage of the container revolution that had swept through much of the world. "It made, and still makes eminent sense," says R.C. Dubey, director of transportation in the Commerce Ministry, and one of the pioneers of the concept "to make the Delhi ICD an extension of the Bombay Port...It would also help decongest the roads from truck traffic, reduce the need for expensive wood that is used in crating, and provide a more fuel-efficient method—the railways—for surface transportation to Bombay." Currently Bombay handles about 160,000 import and export containers annually, of which about 9,000 originate from or are destined for Delhi. This accounts for only 10 per cent of Delhi's actual potential in light of the fact that nearly half the containerised trade handled at Bombay emanates from Delhi's hinterland but does not use the ICD facility.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

As of now, good intentions are all that pave the railroad track from Delhi ICD to Bombay Port. As Ashok Mehra, president of the North India Steamer Agents Association, who helped persuade some 25 foreign shipping lines to use the new facility, puts it: "This ICD serves India's heartland. I was involved with its creation during the very early difficult days. But seeing its operation now I cannot help but feel alarmed and frustrated."

That frustration is only natural. The movement of goods from Bombay to Delhi or back is so delayed that exporters miss shipping connections and importers are forced to close their factories for want of components or raw materials. Ideally, the ICD is supposed to function like a conveyor belt with no restrictions or stoppages en route. But the various authorities running Bombay Port have apparently refused to recognise Delhi as an extension of their own facilities, and have hobbled the system with myriad byzantine, duplicative controls and regulations.

Authorities involved in running Bombay Port require a container to undergo a staggering and seemingly interminable 22-step approval process before it is allowed to go by rail to Delhi. Exporters who have already undergone Customs formalities in Delhi are subjected to similar red tape in Bombay. The upshot is that an average round trip between Delhi and Bombay that should take no more than six days by rail now takes close to 22 days.

Ed Norton, import manager for Bata UK who bought nearly (PS) 2 million worth of footwear for export to European markets from India during 1984-1985, and is the single largest user of the Delhi ICD, says: "We've missed umpteen shipping connections. We get orders cancelled all the time from our customers. This is unfortunate because they've begun to think of Indians as unreliable. Some of my competitors think I'm mad to do business in India. Things get held up all the time, and by the time you get through arguing, the bloody boat's gone."

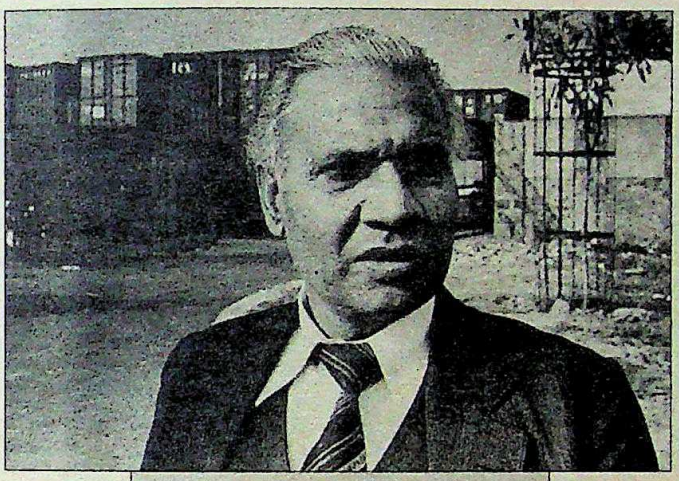
One of the most harrowing examples of harassment in Bombay that traders relate is "the broken seals racket". When a duly inspected container leaves Delhi for Bombay with an export consignment, it is affixed with a railway seal and a Customs seal. The Customs seal is usually a flimsy wire contraption with a paper attached to it. With unnerving regularity these seals come mysteriously undone in the Bombay Port area. Even if the railways seal is intact and the container is still securely padlocked, Bombay Customs insist on reopening it, recalling all the paperwork from Delhi for new verification, and re-examining the entire cargo. In the time lost, the vessel for which the container is destined has often sailed. In some cases the Bombay authorities will detain the container for months, claiming that there are no guidelines to deal with the issue of broken seals, thereby consigning the fate of the export cargo to bureaucratic limbo.

"We know those seals are deliberately broken in Bombay," one senior government official confided, "but it is very difficult to prove unless you catch the culprits in the act." The official said that Bombay "vested interests" lose a lot of money for every container handled in Delhi. One source estimated that for every 1,000 containers handled in Delhi, Bombay labour organisations, police, clearing agents, Bombay Port Trust, Customs officials, gatemen and crane operators lose about Rs 60 lakh each month in income from handling charges, fees, brokerage commission and kickbacks. In fact, when the Delhi ICD was first being organised, the dock labour threatened to hold up all containers going into or out of Delhi. Finally the Government agreed to pay Rs 3.50 to the Bombay Dock Labour Board for every container handled in Delhi.

The promises of economy and convenience that attracted—and still attract—traders to the ICD have degenerated into a dismal list of horror stories:

► In June 1985, Escorts imported 25 containers of Yamaha motorcycles. They were first held up in Bombay for want of certain documents. After they arrived in Delhi they were suddenly transferred from the depot to an adjacent storage area meant only for empty containers. This was because the depot was being "spot cleared" in anticipation of a visit from Minister of State for Railways Madhavrao Scindia, who was to arrive there on an inspection to investigate charges that the depot was unbearably congested. The containers were cleared on September 23—but not before Escorts had been charged nearly Rs 10 lakh in detention and ground rent charges. The additional cost, passed on to the consumers, was an extra Rs 530 per motorcycle.

► As of mid-January this year, some Rs 40 lakh worth of goods for export to Hamburg, Tilbury, Rotterdam and Marseilles were waiting for as long as six weeks in ICD sheds for containers. Agents for Overseas Containers Ltd, which needs about 50 empty containers each month, had received barely 20 between November and January. Because of a shortage of railway flat wagons which carry containers, and a reluctance on the part of the railways to carry empty containers and



"The Railways are the number one culprit in this mess. They delay movement of goods, they delay movement of documents. The handling equipment is poor and the cranes hardly ever work."

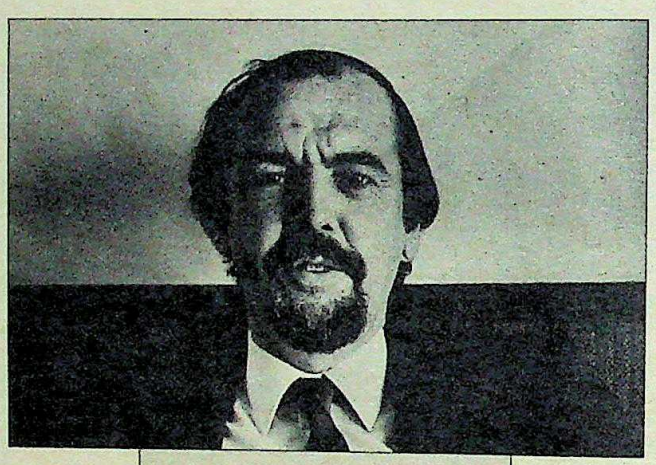
S.D. DUGGAL
clearing agent and managing partner, Manilal Patel & Co.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

interminable delays in carrying them, goods languish in storage at Delhi often missing as many as three ship connections from Bombay to other international ports.

Delhi's Renasonic Enterprises was awaiting a shipment of electronic imports worth Rs 3 lakh from Hong Kong. The shipment arrived in Bombay on August 20, 1985 and languished there for almost four months resulting in net losses, company officials said, of nearly Rs 7 lakh. Bombay Customs officials had refused to clear the consignment because, they said, the documentation to forward the goods to Delhi was incomplete. Shipping agents for the company made out a fresh application. The Bombay authorities lost the papers and asked the agents to file them again. But now, finally, when the papers were found to be in order, Customs informed the agents—four months after the goods had arrived in Bombay—that the container seals were missing and a police investigation would have to be ordered.



"We've missed umpteen shipping connections. We get orders cancelled from our customers. By the time you get through arguing, the bloody boat's gone."

ED. NORTON
Import manager Bata (UK)

Shipping agents and their customers complain that they are forced to pay ground rent, detention and demurrage charges to the railways when containers arriving in Delhi are not cleared within a specified time even when the fault is clearly not theirs. According to one estimate the railways rack up nearly Rs 30 lakh each month from these charges. After a week's grace period the railways charge escalating fines—starting at Rs 200 a day—for containers which have not been cleared even though the railways are sometimes themselves the culprits causing the delays. Last January, several containers of waste paper intended for some 20 factories which had closed operations for lack of this raw material were delayed for more than 20 days at ICD facilities even though Customs formalities and payments had been cleared within a record 48 hours. Result: the customer was asked by the railways to shell out nearly Rs 25,000 in ground rent and detention charges.

S.D. Duggal, a clearing agent and managing partner of Manilal Patel and Co says: "The railways are the number one culprit in this mess. They delay movement of goods, they delay movement of documents. They allow the stuffing or emptying of containers only up to 4.30 p.m. After that they close shop and nothing can happen. But it is impossible to handle the containers within this time because the handling equipment is poor and the cranes hardly ever work. The roads of the storage complex are not paved and so the area handles far fewer containers than its capacity."

IN ADDITION to making money from detention and demurrage charges, the railways earn an estimated Rs 2 crore annually from the freight charged on containers moving in the Delhi-Bombay circuit. Railways acquired the ICD complex for free from the Trade Fair Authority. Instead of investing in its improvement, the railways operate the facility through a convoluted system of subcontracting. A customer pays the railways Rs 175 per container for grounding, opening and handling charges.

But the railways do not perform this function directly. They contract it to the Shipping Corporation of India (SCI) for Rs 150 per container, keeping the remaining Rs 25. The SCI in turn contracts the handling job to United Lines Agency (ULA) for Rs 130, keeping the balance of Rs 20. ULA further subcontracts the work to a subsidiary called Shift-And-Lift for Rs 125 per container, again keeping the remaining Rs 5. On each container, therefore, the railways, SCI and ULA make Rs 50 without doing any work. And Shift-And-Lift—in this pass-the-buck operation—is left with a payment that does not enable it to buy new equipment or modernise.

A senior railways official who was contacted for comment said that the current system of contracting would be changed by April when negotiations for a new contractor with modern equipment will get underway. He readily admitted that the ICD facility is congested, the stacking and unloading areas inadequate, and the handling equipment of poor quality. "But in fairness to us," he said, "you must realise that we had a sudden increase in container traffic. Until August we were handling about 600, 20-foot containers a month. That figure jumped to more than 1,000 within a short period. We were simultaneously paving and redoing our storage facilities to handle things with greater efficiency. There was naturally a disruption during that period."

The official added that the Railways Department was aware of the problems and had done much to cut down on transit time. He also noted that delays in loading or unloading were often because of Customs formalities, or customers not taking timely delivery of their goods.

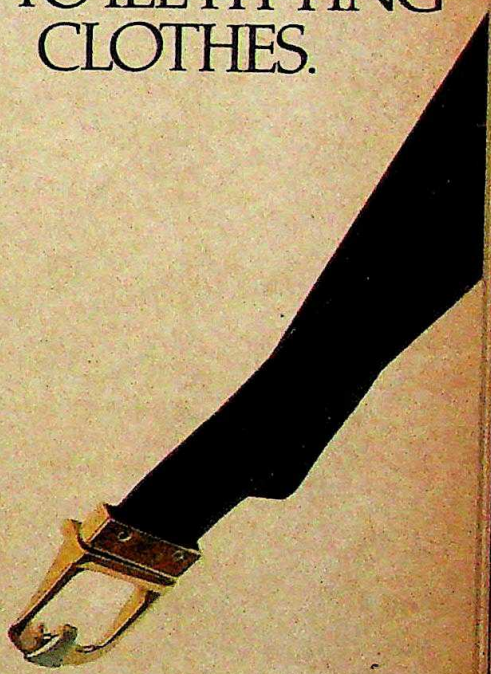
J.K. Shakdher, manager for Forbes Forbes Campbell shipping division argues that the situation creates interminable buckpassing because ICD is essentially a headless organisation without a budget or centralised authority. "If you complain about anything," he says, "everybody blames everybody else because no one seems to be in charge."

ICD is run by a standing committee consisting of representatives of the Railways, SCI, Commerce Ministry and Bombay Port Trust. The railways have finally appointed two divisional railway managers in Bombay and Delhi charged with improving matters. And further the Railways Reforms Committee has recommended creation of an independent container corporation.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

EVER SINCE I DISCOVERED RAYMOND'S READYMADES, IT'S GOODBYE TO ILL-FITTING CLOTHES.



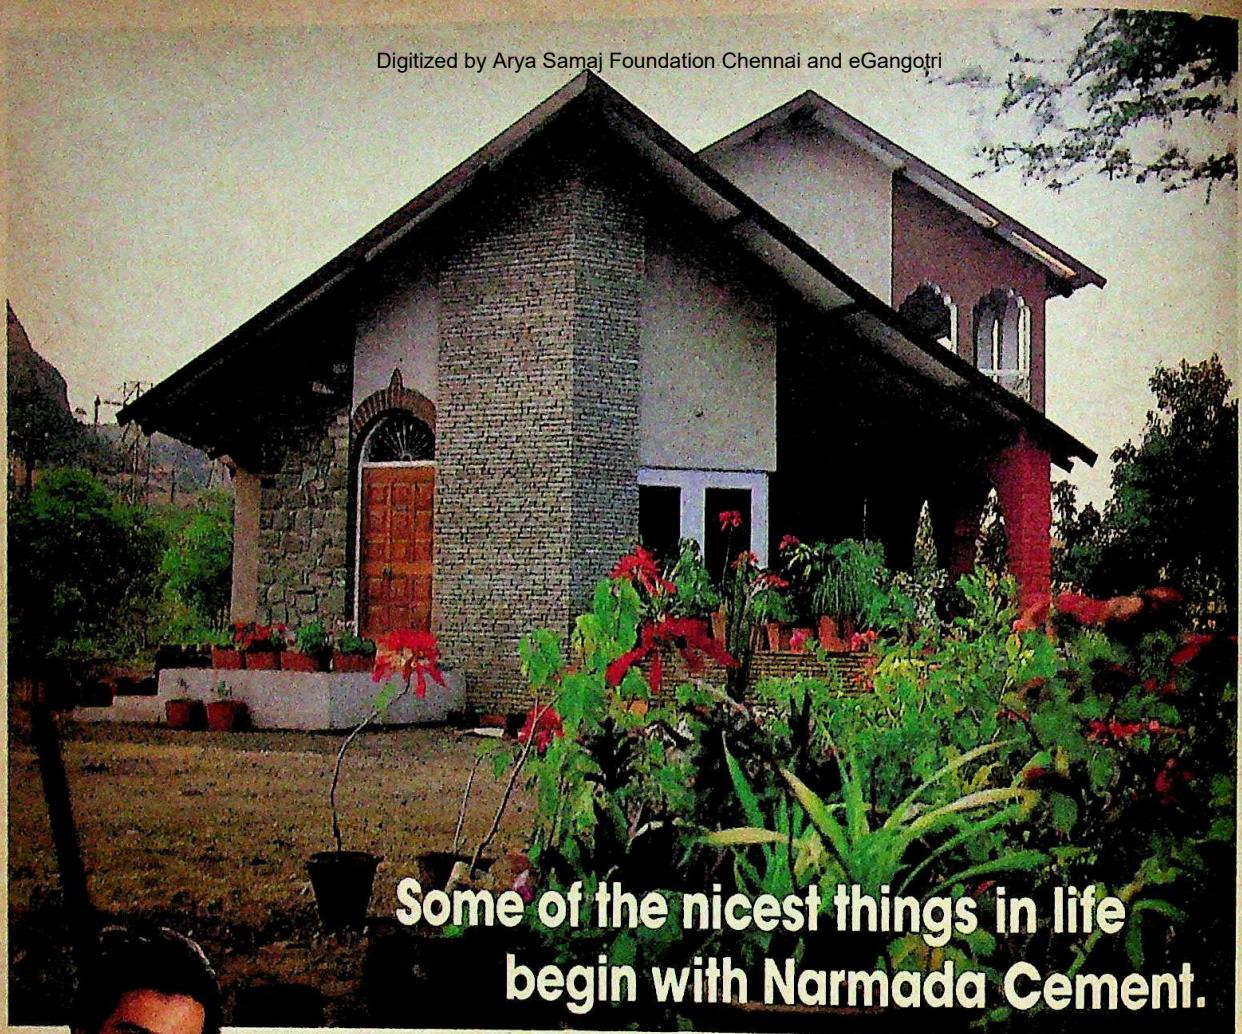
Trousers
•
Safaris
•
Shirts
•
Suits
•
Blazers

Raymond's Mens Wear

Location courtesy: The Taj Mahal Hotel, Bombay.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Some of the nicest things in life begin with Narmada Cement.

Most happy scenes have a home in the background.
But homes are not built in the air. They need a firm foundation. Like a truly good cement.

Some of the happiest families have built their dreams on Narmada Cement. Its superior quality has been the cornerstone for many a never-say-die construction.

Along with long life, Narmada's finely grained cement brings another guest to stay at your house for good. Grace — it's reflected in the smooth finish of the floor, the roof — and everything in between.

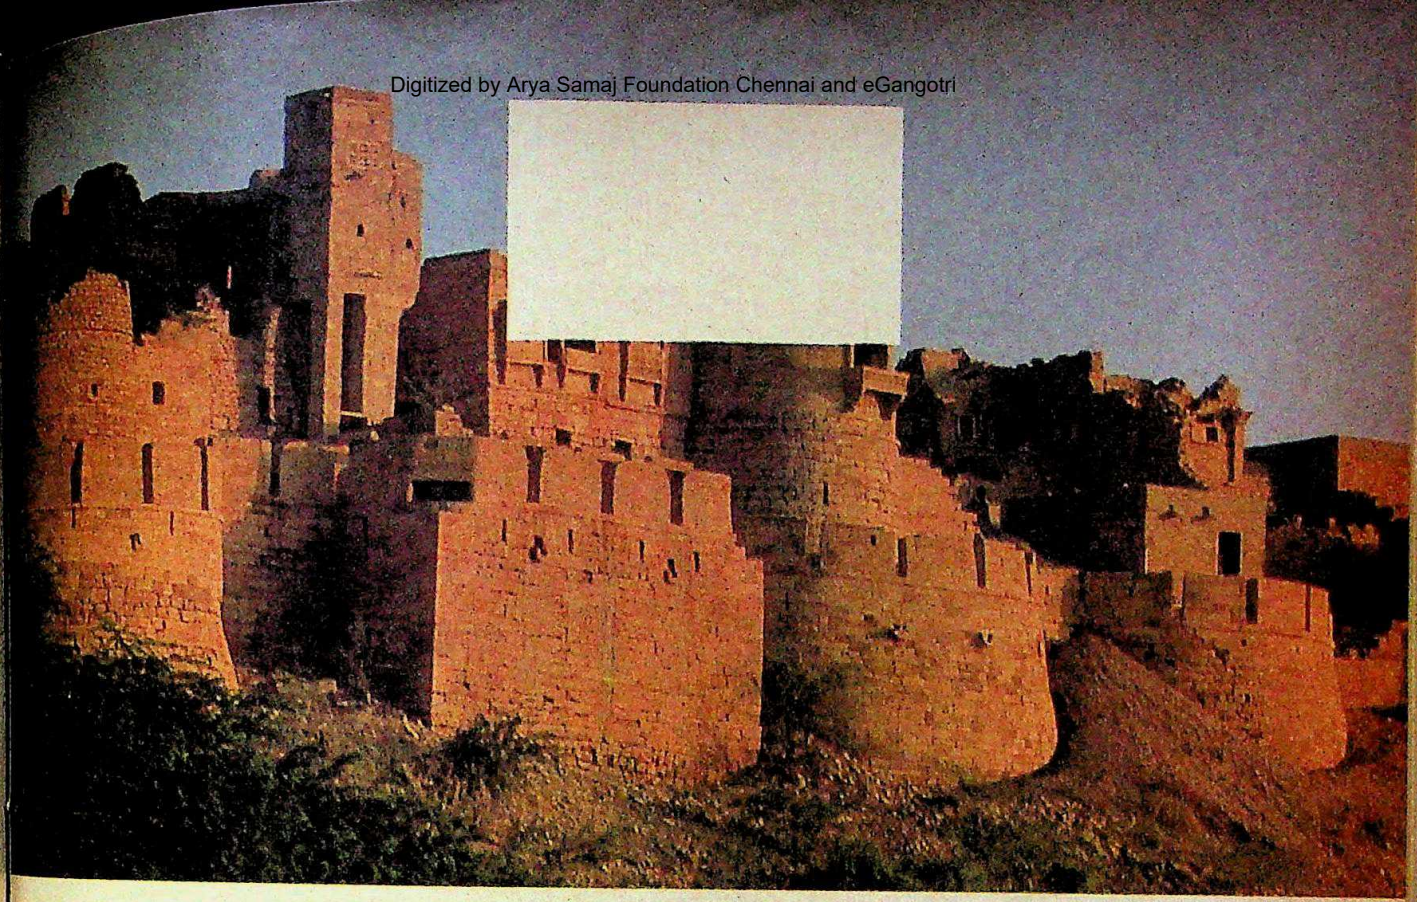
The years will tell narmada cement

Bakhtawar, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021.

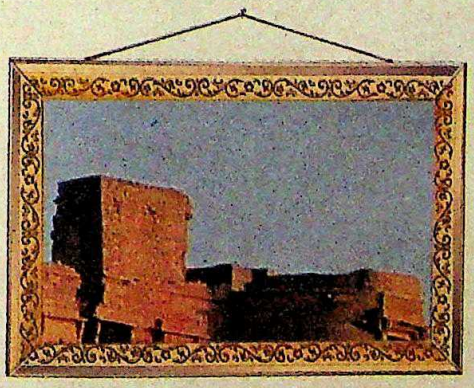
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SANKALP/NC/63/85

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri



Capture a divine moment. Take it home.



With every arrangement so we taken care of, all you have to do i your next sightseeing tour is se the sight

Vayudoot, India's only feeder airline, offe you the holiday of your lifetime. Wi fabulous package tours ranging from mere Rs. 495 to Rs. 2150 per perso

Here's a preview of the destinations th range from popular places to lesser know and exotic lands: The magical and mystic Kulu Manali. The pink city of Jaipur built the likeness of the 'tone of the autum sunset'. Jaisalmer, with its historical relic preserved inside a rugged stone wall thre miles round. Cherrapunji, the wettest plac on earth. And Shillong, with one of th most beautiful golf courses in the worl

The package includes to-and-fro airfar hotel accommodation, and of cours transportation between the airport and th hotel, and to all the local sightseeing spot

For more information on these packag tours, contact a leading travel agent. Or ar one of Vayudoot's offices listed belov

Discover India Discover yourself

वायुदूत Vayudoot

Vayudoot Package Tours. There's one for everyon

Vayudoot Limited, Safdarjung Airport, New Delhi 110 003 Tel: 693851, 693892, 699272. Airbus Wing, Terminal-I, Bombay Airport, Santa Cruz, Bombay 400 099 Tel: 6121405, 6121397. Esso Substation Bldg., Dum Dum Airport, Calcutta 700 052 Tel: 447062 First Floor, Terminal Bldg., Begumpet Airport, Hyderabad Tel: 70171 Ext. 263.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Rediffusion/DT/454

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Ever thought of consulting a doctor about hair loss?

I did!"

It is reassuring to know that the scientific formula of Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer has been tested and approved by a panel of doctors.

It was found that Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer provides all the proteins, vitamins and coenzymes essential for a healthy scalp condition.

Read this research report:

"66.66% of the cases gave excellent and 33.33% gave good result with complete disappearance of dandruff and nearly cent per cent stoppage of hair loss... So, success rate with Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer may be stated to be cent per cent."

(Indian Medical Gazette 118 223, 1984)

KEO-KARPIN

HAIR VITALIZER

The proven scientific way to prevent hair loss.

This is not a toilet preparation

Dey's Care you can trust

CLARION C DMHV-1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SPORTSWEAR

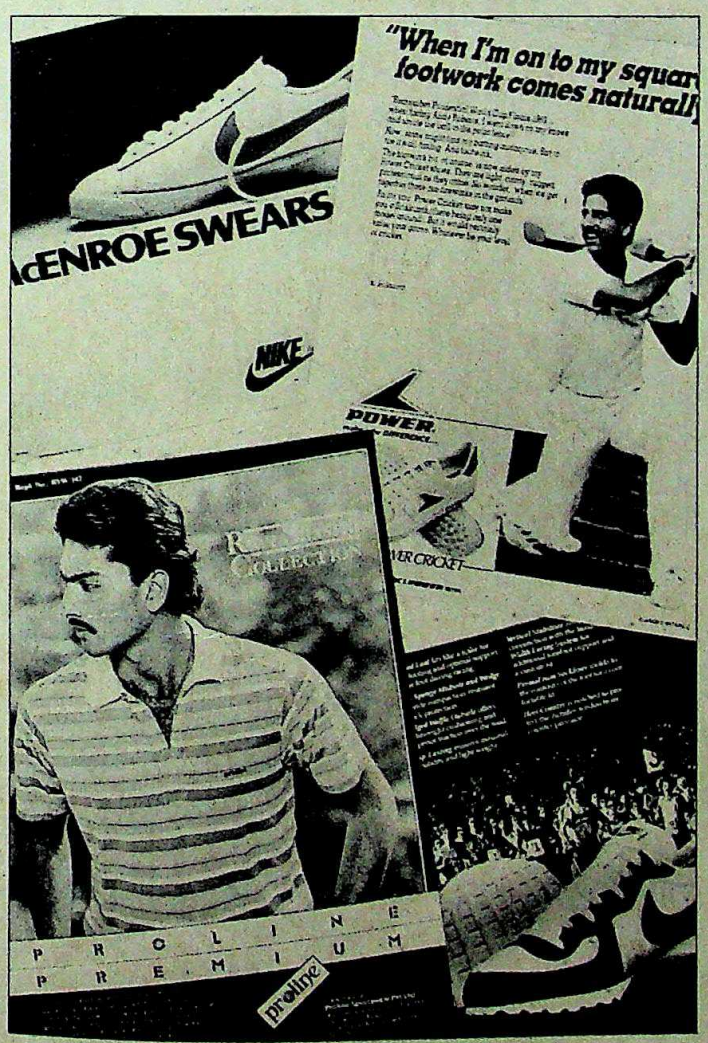
Getting into Stride

AMERICAN multinational Nike promises to kick off an altogether new ball game in the fledgling Indian sportswear industry if its application for a licence comes through. The company plans to team up with Burroughs Wellcome India Ltd to set up a sophisticated plant in Goa to manufacture quality sportswear. And if the buoyant state of the market is any indication, established smaller companies are in for a hefty dose of competition.

Burroughs Wellcome (India), with a turnover of Rs 45 crore, had been looking around for new areas of investment after diluting its foreign holding under the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act. Its tie-up with Nike (pronounced Naikey)—the world's second largest sportswear and sportsgear manufacturer after the West German Adidas—raised quite a few eyebrows since it was a totally unfamiliar field and the risks in an untested market like India were considerable. But Sudeepto Datta, Nike's representative in India who operates from a room crammed with Nike products and promotional material at the Wellcome head office in Bombay, is optimistic: "Nike was set up 11 years ago soon after health consciousness gained ascendancy in the US," he says. "I can see the same interest in keeping fit picking up in India. There's a big market for quality sportswear. Now we should stop treating sports as a hobby, it's a business."

His optimism is not entirely misplaced. For a long time the sportswear industry was synonymous with the ubiquitous canvas shoe from Bata and cotton T-shirts from Dawn, Fred Perry and Symonds. But Bata—perhaps the first to sense the shift towards a more sporty life-style—launched its Power range of sportswear and sportsgear in 1982 and hit the jackpot. Annual sales accelerated from Rs 50 lakh in the first year to over Rs 6 crore by the end of 1985. And Deepak Deshpande, Power brand manager, happily admits: "There's a 60 per cent increase in demand every year. We can't make as much as we can sell."

The entry of Nike will pose a direct challenge to Power since the former is likely to introduce a similar product range—running and specialised sports shoes, T-shirts, shorts, jogging and track suits and equipment for various sports and games. Nike will also bring in sophisticated, computerised product design and hi-tech manufacturing tech-



Collage of sportsgear advertisements: competitive edge

Gurus Deshpande, however, remains unfazed by the spectre of Power's domination coming under threat: "Bata can match Nike's high-tech inputs," he says, adding: "Anyway, competition can only raise the standard of the industry."

Sunil Gavaskar seems to concur. In fact, Gavaskar who had spotted the trend two years ago and opened "Sunny's Boutique" in Pune, pointed out that clothing quality is now comparable to what is available in the West. But based on his experience with the boutique, "a lot needs to be done as far as footwear is concerned. A wider range with different kinds of shoes for different requirements is needed. Nike could show the way".

The most visible trend in sportswear has been the improved quality and popularity of the T-shirt, which now comes in polyester cotton, and has virtually replaced the cotton bush shirt as the sine qua non of casual wear. Smash and Proline (with its Ravi Shastri ads) are the two brands that have done the most to make the Indian T-shirt respectable. Apeego's Anil Goel, who introduced Smash against strong opposition from dealers in 1981, said that there had been a hundred per cent expansion of the market in the last four years. "It is still too early to talk of a boom but a manufacturer can easily expect to sell 1 lakh T-shirts every year."

Established small companies in the field have benefited substantially from the market's expansion. V.G. Manke, who set up Fred Perry in collaboration with the British company of the same name in 1956, does Rs 14 lakh worth of business every year and N.R. Bhandarkar, regional manager in Bombay of the Allahabad-based Symonds, said that sales have shot up to Rs 35 lakh from less than Rs 1 lakh ten years ago. But sportsgear is still Symonds main product line (Rs 1.5 crore annually) and Bhandarkar admits that while the increase in sportsgear sales have not matched the rising demand for sportswear, it has still gone up by 10 to 25 per cent over the last four years. Dealers like S. Jagtiani of Bombay Sports and Sportique confirm this. The difference in demand for sportsgear and sportswear lies in the fact that Indians are more attracted to the idea of a sporty look rather than active participation in any game or sport.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The coming of Nike is bound to add that much more aura to the sporty lifestyle but Bhandarkar voiced the misgivings of the smaller manufacturers when he said that the Government should keep multinationals out to protect small companies. And Power's Deshpande added a note of caution when he pointed out that a clear picture had yet to emerge on the market for sports products in India—there has been no research worth the name and the market is very sensitive to product pricing. But Nike's entry is certain to add a competitive edge to the industry and put it firmly on the fast track.

—M. RAHMAN

ISLAMIC BANK

Interest Free

ISLAMIC banks are increasingly common across the Muslim world. Now secular India has joined the club, with the launching in Bangalore of the Al-Ameen Islamic Financial and Investment Corporation (India) Ltd (AIFICIL). Incorporated three months ago with an authorised capital of Rs 1 crore, the path-breaking venture began operations last fortnight in the two-storeyed Millia building on the city's busy Narasimha Raja Road—but not before it ran into unexpected hitches.

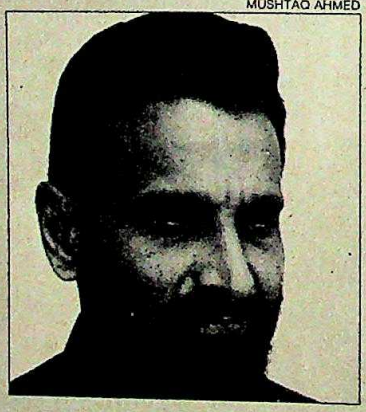
The Reserve Bank of India does not permit non-interest charging banks, so the promoters—including a Congress(I) member of the state legislative council—found a way around the hurdle; the bank would be registered under the Companies Act and would then collect deposits and give loans without offering or charging interest.

So, technically, AIFICIL is not a bank but a non-banking financial company. "But this is the nearest we can get to an Islamic bank," said K. Rehaman Khan, the Congress(I) MLC who is the corporation's managing director. The Koran expressly prohibits usury and so devout Muslims needed a nation-wide financial institution that follows Islamic principles, he argued.

Interest-free financial institutions run by Muslims already exist in the country, but these are either cooperative societies with limited resources and member-clients or bayatal-mals (public treasuries), small, unregistered, mutual help societies. So AIFICIL is touted as India's first commercial Islamic banking institution, and is getting set to open branches in Hyderabad, Madras and Calicut as the first steps in reaching for a national network.

SUBASH P. BAJAJ

MUSHTAQ AHMED



The bank's offices (above); and Mumtaz Ahmed: path-breaking

The brain behind the venture is the 45-year-old Mumtaz Ahmed Khan, the founder of the Al-Ameen group which runs a string of educational institutions, hospitals and an interest-charging Amanath Cooperative Bank. Having toyed with the idea of an Islamic Bank for many years, Ahmed Khan finally made up his mind after attending a world conference of Islamic Banks held in Islamabad in 1984. He suspects that he was invited to the conference only because the organisers mistook his bank for an Islamic one, but the opportunity helped him get invaluable information on Islamic banking. "Convinced that the idea was feasible I returned to India with plenty of literature and began work," said a clearly buoyant Ahmed Khan.

By last fortnight the corporation had collected Rs 40 lakh from non-resident Indians towards the authorised capital. The rest was being collected as equity shares of Rs 10 each, to be subscribed through small private placements but not by a public issue.

AIFICIL's key to survival, as in the case of other Islamic Banks all over the world, will be the principle of profit-sharing. Instead of getting interest on their deposits, the depositors will share the profits of ventures set up with AIFICIL's interest-free loans. The organisers point out that sharing profits is not the same thing as giving or taking interest. "Islam does not ban sharing of profits at all. We may also have to share the losses of a venture," Rehaman Khan pointed out. But he was confident that the idea would click as "we will be quite choosy about whom we give loans."

—SRINIVASA PRASAD

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

sakura film's famous quality now comes in a new box with our new name

Konica

COLOR FILM/CAMERAS/AUDIO & VIDEO TAPE
Konishiroku, Tokyo, Japan

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

GCEL

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Dom... Kurukangri Collection, ...

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Happy Landings aren't just good wishes any more.

Rain or shine, foggy winter or sunny summer, aircrafts don't stop landing. And, while airborne all you do is keep your seat in an upright position for landing, the pilot has his hands full.

Because a slight miscalculation in the descent rate can result in Hard Landing jolting you out of your upright seat. Or, a late touchdown making the aircraft overshoot the runway.

Happy Landings need help.

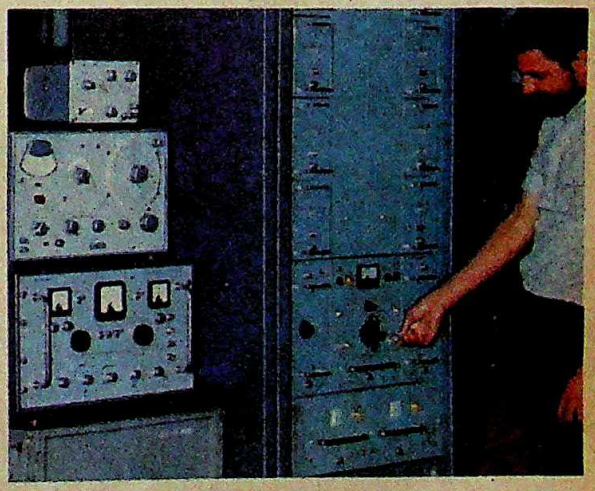
GCEL's Navigational Aids

At GCEL, we have developed a hi-sensitive Instrument Landing System, as part of our Navigational Aids. To guide aircrafts to happy landings, whatever maybe the weather conditions. And however bad the visibility is. Strong, even VHF signals reaching across to provide the pilot with azimuth and elevation guidance. So it's Happy Landings anytime. Also Direction Finders. To ensure safe landings in remote, narrow airports. For passenger and Air Force aircrafts.

The GCEL-built Instrument Landing System is in successful, happy operation at India's major National Airports. Designed and installed by GCEL. According to each airport's requirements. Because at GCEL we mould and shape technology.

The Better Technology of GCEL

At Gujarat Communications and Electronics Ltd., our objectives are clear. And simple. Since 1975. That India's future is hi-tech. And every Indian should be part of it. Wherever he or she is in India. So at GCEL, we develop technology that's better and relevant. To help every Indian live a little better.



GCEL

Gujarat Communications & Electronics Ltd.

Regd. Office: Third Floor, Anurag Commercial Centre, Race Course Road, Baroda 390 005.

Live better. The better technology is here.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mudra:A:GCEL:2999

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Why Only ESPL

ESPL has the latest features : VME-BUS, INDUSTRY STANDARD IEEE 696 BUS, MC-68010 & MC-68020 PROCESSORS, UNIX SYSTEM-V, UNIFY DATA BASE, MICRO FOCUS COBOL for MINI/MICRO Computers and Distributed Processing Technique for Data Acquisition & Control Systems & abillty to adopt the LATEST TECHNOLOGY available in International markets and more.... CMC, after evaluating all Mini-Computers in the country has placed ESPL on TOP to meet Banking Computerisation requirements.

The most sophisticated facilities for Inhouse R&D, Production, Testing and Quality Control include Fairchild LSI Board Tester, Wave Soldering Machines, CAD/CAM Systems, Peripheral Testers/Exercisers, Static Dynamic Burn-in Systems, Microprocessor Development Systems, Logic Development station, etc. The Systems are located in an Electrostatic Discharge Environment.

ESPL is backed by a team of qualified professionals trained abroad with proven Track record.

"You Name it And We have It" claims ESPL Offering the widest range of Computers for any type of application.

COMPUTERS

Super Micro Series 16/32, Bit Computers, Based on IEEE 696 BUS.

Super Micro-32V-Based on VME BUS.

Super-PC-The Personal Computer.

Super Chip — The IMB-PC/XT and AT Compatibles.

DATA ACQUISITION & CONTROL SYSTEMS in collaboration with Westinghouse Electric Corporation, USA, for use in the large Thermal Power Plants, Process Industries like Cement, Steel, Fertilizers, Refineries, etc.

AGRO DAIRY INSTRUMENTS :

Microprocessor based Milk Analyser, Grain Analyser & Soil Analyser being developed as a part of a project aided by UNDP.

SERVICES include not only After-Sales-Service but also Software Support, Customer Training Programmes, technical expertise on Turn-Key basis, not to mention the various application packages available.

THAT IS WHY ESPL has successfully taken care of the computer needs of various Technical Institutes, R&D Centres, Defence Establishments, Banks,Business Houses, Govt. Departments etc.

ESPL

Electronic Systems Punjab Limited

B-81, Phase VII, Industrial Area, S.A.S. Nagar, Chandigarh-160 051
Phones : 87392, 87492 Telex : 0395-391 ESPL Gram : Systems, Mohali

NEW DELHI

Flat No. 114 & 115, 1st Floor, Block C-11, Shopping-cum-office Complex, Safdarjung Residential Scheme, (Aurbindo Place) New Delhi
Ph. : 605481, 604035, Telex : 031-62419

BANGALORE

Sri Venkatesh, IInd Floor, 24/1, Race Course Road, Madhav Nagar Post Office, BANGALORE-560 001
Ph : 74658

ESPL-Keeping pace with tomorrow... Today

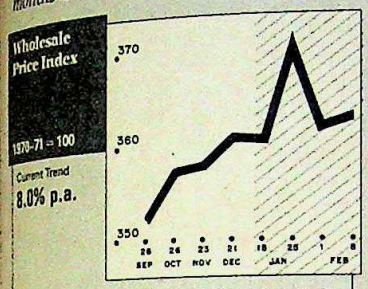
INTERADS/CH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

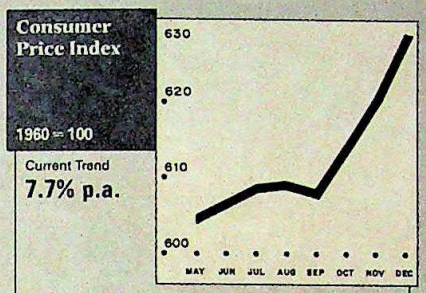
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE ERA of price stability is rapidly coming to an end. Exports are falling precipitously and imports are rising at a decidedly high rate and the trade gap was near Rs 799 crore in September. Money supply has risen marginally, but bank credit has tightened. The share-market rules steady while gold seems to be going out of fashion.

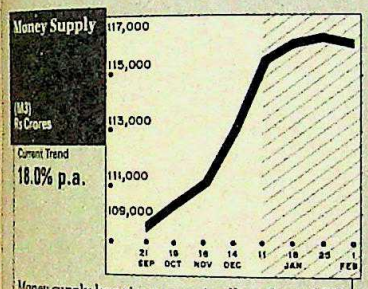
All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trends are computed on the basis of the last six months data to which regression are fitted.



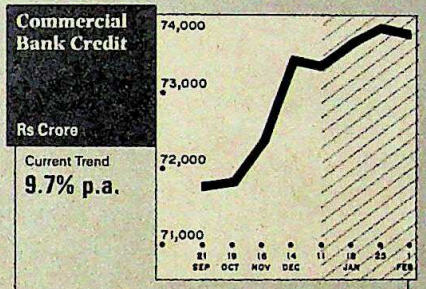
Wholesale prices have begun rising alarmingly, and these figures have not taken the new fuel prices into account.



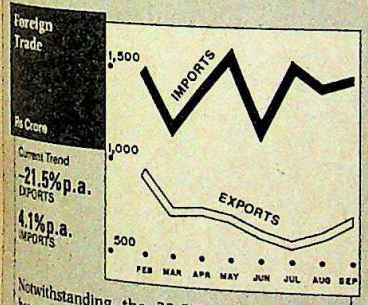
The picture in consumer prices is no better. The consumer price index has risen steadily and the increase is accelerating.



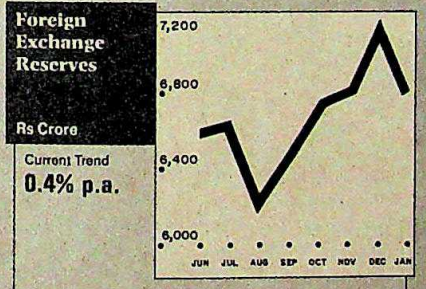
Money supply has risen marginally—from 17% to 18%. This is one variable that the Government seems to be keeping under tight control.



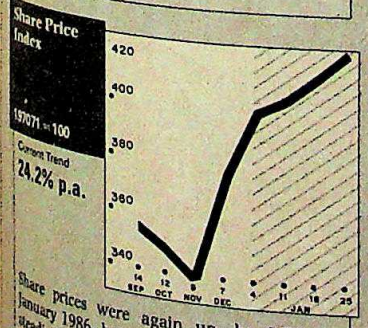
Commercial bank credit continues to tighten, from 11% to under 10%. This is largely due to a reduction in credit for foodgrain procurement.



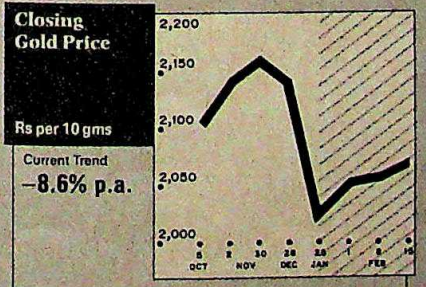
Notwithstanding the 23.5% rise in exports between July and September, exports are falling by 21.5% while imports are growing by 4%.



There was a 5% fall in foreign exchange reserves between December and January, reversing the growth between August and December.



Share prices were again up—by 5.7%—in January 1986, but the market seems to have steadied after its earlier frenetic pace.



An upturn in gold prices in February—by 0.8%—has done little to stop its slide. Savings may be moving out of gold, into other assets.

WHOLESALE PRICES

Growth of Items in January, 1986

	%Growth
Cycles	31.50
Onions	19.75
Zinc	19.18
Tapioca	16.72
Coal	11.24
Gur	6.61
Groundnut Seeds	6.11
Steel Furniture	4.32
Atta	4.13
Maize	3.07
Rape & Mustard Seed	3.06
Pesticides & Insecticides	3.03
Cotton Raw	2.88
Transformers	2.57
Mustard Oil	2.57
Tobacco Raw	2.48
Bajra	2.22
Jute Textiles	2.18
Milk	2.06
Mining Machinery	1.98
Masoor	1.95
Eggs	1.89
Copra	1.78
Ragi	1.56
Utensils	1.06
Tyres	0.96
Bars & Rods	0.95
Pig Iron	0.95
Rails	0.93
Formulations	0.92
Cotton Seed	0.88
Semis Billets	0.86
Nitrogenous Fertilisers	0.86
Camel Back	0.85
Aluminium	0.84
Tractors	0.82
Jowar	0.79
Boilers	0.78
Steel Structurals	0.78
Industrial Instruments	0.77
Machine Tools	0.74
Sewing Machine	0.73
Plates & Sheets	0.72
Radio & T.V.	0.70
Electrical Motors	0.64
Tubes	0.64
Petrol	0.63

Of the 139 series considered, 77 of them with a total weight of 45.286 had a positive growth and 62 of them with a total weight of 41.34 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1986	1985
Coal
Thousand Tonnes, January	15686	14803
Saleable Steel
Thousand Tonnes, January	708	697
Cement
Thousand Tonnes, January	2866	2666
Crude Petroleum
Thousand Tonnes, January	2761	2635
Petroleum Refinery Products
Thousand Tonnes, January	3772	3043

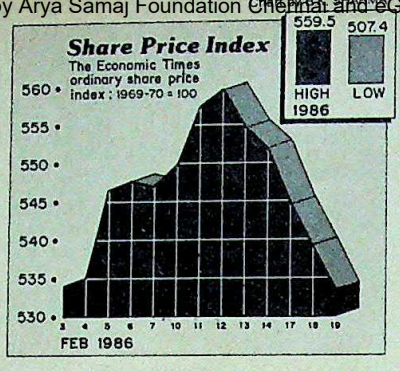
Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Blue Mood



WITH the time for the Union Budget having come around, the stock-markets finally began to show signs of nervousness last fortnight. The widespread reaction to the Government's recent price hike announcements dampened the mood further, while the disclosure that the Government had rejected the applications of several companies for producing cars resulted in shares like TELCO taking a nosedive while Escorts dropped by Rs 7 to Rs 74. Both shares are now close to their lowest points in the year.

Inevitably, bulls began to unload their holdings and shares registered losses on a wide front. Among the big losers were Baroda Rayon, Blow Plast, Brooke Bond, Cyanamid, Garware and National Organic. Gujarat State Fertiliser, which had been drummed up the previous fortnight on the expectations of a bonus issue, fell back by Rs 65 to Rs 1,505. However, some other counters—like SPIC and Premier Automobiles—came in for fresh buying on expectations of bonus issues. And TISCO improved following the Government decision to reduce the import duty on sponge iron from 70 per cent to 40 per cent; although the decision was meant to help mini-steel units, TISCO will also benefit. Real staying power was, meanwhile, displayed by Reliance whose share remained steady at its dizzy height of Rs 326 despite its mercurial chairman Dhirubhai Ambani, being hospitalised.

More unexpected were the developments on the new issues market, where half a dozen companies that floated shares in mid-February met with a poor response from the investing public. This may well have been because numerous share, debenture and bond issues have got crowded into the last quarter of the financial year, including large issues by some public sector giants. Nevertheless, the prices of some newly-listed shares also fell back, indicating a new mood among investors who had earlier been so enthusiastic about everything on offer that they seemed unable to distinguish between blue chips and potential duds.

The immediate future in terms of share price trends clearly depends on what Finance Minister V.P.Singh will have unveiled on February 28. His last budget had been noted for an absence of incentives meant specially for the investing community. For instance, the capital gains tax still dogs share investors and often comes in the way of financial institutions unloading their holdings. And the leading lights of the stock-market have argued vehemently for doing away with the deduction of tax at source on dividend payments. Marketmen were hoping last fortnight that if the finance minister gave concessions to industry last year, he would offer something to investors this time round.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1986 HIGH	LOW	CLOSE 19.2.86	Change on Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	45.00	39.50	39.50	0.50 –
Associated Bearings	990.00	775.00	955.00	75.00 +
Associated Cement	386.00	346.00	372.00	2.00 –
Atlas Copco	92.50	77.00	88.50	3.00 –
Bajaj Auto	2280.00	1950.00	2260.00	246.00 +
Ballarpur	65.50	55.00	56.00	6.50 –
Baroda Rayon	490.00	410.00	420.00	50.00 –
Bata India	82.50	72.00	73.00	1.00 +
Bayer	680.00	445.00	640.00	70.00 +
Best & Crompton	106.00	84.00	102.50	0.50 +
Bharat Forge	86.00	67.00	69.00	5.00 –
Blow Plast	160.00	105.00	120.00	20.00 –
Blue Star	110.00	90.00	90.00	15.00 –
Bombay Dyeing	120.00	86.00	91.00	2.50 –
Brooke Bond	95.00	74.00	87.00	8.00 –
Ceat Tyres	450.00	240.00	450.00	65.00 +
Century Spinning	1690.00	1430.00	1635.00	5.00 –
Chloride India	122.00	99.00	103.00	2.00 –
Citurgia	65.00	50.00	50.00	9.00 –
Colgate	262.50	220.00	235.00	5.00 –
Cyanamid	100.00	70.00	84.00	9.00 –
DCM	58.50	41.50	43.00	3.50 –
Dunlop	74.50	49.75	68.00	2.00 +
Elecon Engg.	117.00	82.50	95.00	nil
Escorts	94.00	70.50	74.00	7.00 –
Food Specialities	270.00	235.00	252.50	7.50 –
Garware Nylon	61.50	41.00	43.00	6.00 –
Glaxo	87.00	68.00	76.00	1.00 +
G.E. Shipping	36.00	26.50	27.00	5.00 –
Gujarat St Fertilisers	1700.00	925.00	1505.00	65.00 –
Gwalior Rayon	88.00	80.00	82.50	2.50 –
Hindustan Lever	160.00	127.50	146.00	9.00 +
Hindustan Motors	128.50	120.00	124.50	nil
Indian Explosives	84.50	69.00	76.00	5.50 –
Indian Hotels	140.00	115.00	137.50	7.50 +
Indian Organic	90.00	78.50	81.50	3.50 –
Indian Rayon	151.00	119.00	134.00	10.00 +
Indrol	390.00	285.00	375.50	32.50 +
Ind. Suzuki	81.00	58.00	69.00	2.00 –
Ingersoll-Rand	480.00	360.00	420.00	25.00 –
ITC	69.25	53.00	66.00	2.50 +
J K Synthetics	132.00	106.00	122.00	4.00 +
Kinetic Engineering	325.00	280.00	290.00	10.00 –
Kirloskar Cummins	715.00	590.00	590.00	70.00 –
Lakme	195.00	172.50	187.50	2.50 +
Larsen & Toubro	204.00	180.00	190.00	2.50 –
Lipton	69.00	46.50	63.50	3.00 –
Lohia Machines	70.00	60.00	62.00	4.00 –
Mahindra & Mahindra	86.00	72.00	73.00	6.00 –
Motor Industries	910.00	735.00	745.00	45.00 –
National Organic	777.50	585.00	692.50	80.00 –
Nirlon	77.00	57.00	59.00	12.00 –
Orkay Silk Mills	167.00	125.50	153.00	2.00 +
Peico Electronics	104.50	68.50	69.00	15.00 –
Premier Auto	745.00	632.50	692.50	25.00 +
Ranbaxy	160.00	115.00	141.00	11.50 –
Raymond	97.00	82.00	82.00	4.50 –
Reliance Industries	340.00	226.00	326.00	1.00 +
Sandoz	88.00	62.00	84.00	3.00 –
Shriram Fibres	88.00	71.00	81.00	2.50 +
SPIC	169.00	129.50	167.00	24.00 +
Tata Steel	1425.00	1142.50	1360.00	35.00 +
Telco	910.00	780.00	815.00	75.00 –
Vulcan Laval	162.50	85.00	142.50	7.50 +
Wimco	98.00	62.00	87.00	5.00 +
20th Century Leasing	77.50	55.00	63.00	1.00 +

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	8.8084	8.7674
Austria	Schilling	100	77.1121	76.3045
Bahrain	Dinar	1	32.9930	32.8770
Bangladesh	Taka	100	41.6719	41.0132
Canada	Dollar	1	8.8847	8.8497
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.4581	1.4548
Egypt	Pound	1	15.1020	15.0913
France	Franc	1	1.7513	1.7482
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.5938	1.5888
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	1.1130	1.0932
Iran	Rial	100	15.0092	14.8330
Italy	Lira	100	0.7817	0.7732
Japan	Yen	100	6.8965	6.8618
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7717	0.7706
Kuwait	Dinar	1	41.6332	41.1530
Malaysia	Dollar	1	5.0497	5.0164
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.8801	0.8732
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.6092	0.6001
Netherlands	Guilder	1	4.7922	4.7725
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7810	0.7803
Singapore	Dollar	1	5.7899	5.7608
Spain	Peseta	1	0.8420	0.8310
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4330	0.4229
Sweden	Kroner	1	1.6930	1.6856
Switzerland	Franc	1	6.4866	6.4539
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.7660	0.7559
Thailand	Baht	100	47.4400	47.3291
UK	Pound	1	17.9517	17.9163
USA	Dollar	1	12.3875	12.3650
UAE	Dirham	1	3.3932	3.2717
USSR	Rouble	1	12.5253	12.4839
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	5.4466	5.4347

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 20.2.86.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The rich, regal look of Featherlite
Your home deserves nothing less

Lucky's Featherlite® Sponge Leather

Soft • Supple • Luxurious

Available in a stylish range of single and double shades in the various textures of textiles and leather. The perfect upholstery material for furniture that looks distinguished, feels luxurious. Also ideal for car seats, footwear, handbags, gloves, jackets, kiddies' garments and more. Featherlite is as beautiful as leather but cheaper and more practical, too — can be wipe cleaned.

From India's most modern plant. With technical assistance from Stork X-Cel of Holland.

Manufactured by Lucky Plast [illegible]

Incentive

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sigma and ships?
Sure!

We've gone full steam ahead with a fleet of marine paints. Protecting them against the ravages of fouling. Sheltering them from the onslaught of the elements.

In fact, where there is a surface there is Sigma. Feeling top of the wall at home. Working overtime in offices. Coating steel furniture with shining armours. Dressing up heavy machinery with durable coats.

SIGMA PAINTS

We give surfaces a good start.

And a great finish.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

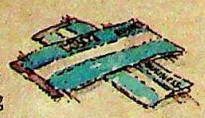
Renora/SP/186

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"A winner all the way via Amsterdam?"

"Yes! KLM has just announced their 'Win-on-the-Way' Bonanza!"

Bonanza is right!
Because a KLM flight to Amsterdam could easily mean a flight to the end of the rainbow. A treasure trove awaits you there. Come! Be a raider of the lost ark!



A Contest that could be a walkover for you! Try us.

If you're over 18 and flying KLM Royal or Business Class on an intercontinental flight with a same day transfer at Amsterdam, you will be eligible for this fabulous offer upto 22 March 1986. From Holland Promotion Foundation.

Look what you Win-on-the Way. It's simply, WOW!

5 Volvo 740 Turbo Estate Cars
The luxury car with more room, motoring comfort, quality and safety! What's more, it will be delivered in the country of the winner.

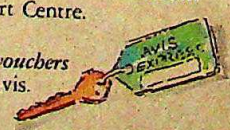
10 "Luxury Holland Holidays" for two Including: Royal/Business Class flight, 4 nights in Amsterdam and 3 nights in a castle!

150 sparkling diamonds
From the world-famous Amsterdam Diamond House of "Samuel Gassan"!

100 Tax-free shopping vouchers
To spend in the Amsterdam Airport Centre.



100 Avis car rental vouchers
Free car-hire from Avis.

A surprise awaits those who do not win the above prizes.

It's so simple, you just can't miss!

At the airport, along with the boarding pass, collect your Exchange Coupon and the Winner Brochure.
So, when booking, schedule your itinerary so as to avail of this tempting offer!

Come! Win-on-the-Way (WOW). Over and over again.

Contact your travel agent, or call us at:

Ahmedabad 77677, Bangalore 28703, Bombay 221013, Calcutta 441221, Cochin 39165, Delhi 343998, Goa 2298, Hyderabad 36042, Jalandhar 76088 Madras 86356, Patna 25437, Pune 61358, Kathmandu 214895 and Dhaka 250357.

The Reliable Airline

KLM
Royal Dutch Airlines

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

VAYUDOOT

Taking Off

IT STARTED out as the airline industry's poor cousin, using small aircraft to link remote towns often hard to reach by rail and road. But the way it has grown, the 'third airline' Vayudoot is edging its bigger brother, Indian Airlines (IA), out of a large part of the growing aviation market. In the last three years the fledgling feeder airline has added 42 stations to its original network of eight, and another 25 are to be included this year including Daman, Diu, Dhanbad, Agartala, Ajmer, Calicut, Jalandhar, Shimla, Thanjavur, Ganganagar, Gangtok and Konark.

Much of this growth has been at the cost of IA, which is giving up both aircraft and routes on its existing air map. Vayudoot started out by using borrowed turboprop aircraft to fly to small stations shunned by IA, often using staff borrowed from the domestic air industry's mother goose. The general manager at that time—an IA pilot concurrently looking after Vayudoot—was quite content to play second fiddle to IA. The result was that Vayudoot did not grow beyond its subsidiary role during this period.

Two developments have forced Vayudoot to emerge from under IA's wing—the appointment as chief executive of Air-India executive Harsh Vardhan, who had his own ideas on how to develop the third airline, and the recommendations of the Government-appointed Billimoria Committee, which suggested that Vayudoot take over the entire turboprop fleet of IA and routes with traffic below 50 per day.

Alongwith that came the decision to equip Vayudoot with basic commuter aircraft. Five new Dornier 19-seaters have already arrived and another five are expected by end-1986. The transfer of IA turboprops to Vayudoot starts this month with four aircraft being handed over. Eventually almost the entire 17-plane fleet of HS 748 Avros and Fokker F 27s is to be transferred, along with some of the turboprop routes.

But among the several disputes dogging all this is one over price: Vayudoot wants the planes to be transferred at book value—which is 1 per cent of the purchase cost—while IA wants the much higher price. Another is IA's complaint that the engineering and maintenance staff currently looking after the turboprops will stay with it while the revenue will be reduced. IA has asked that some of Air-India's routes be transferred to it to compensate for the loss of revenue from the routes being handed over to the third airline.

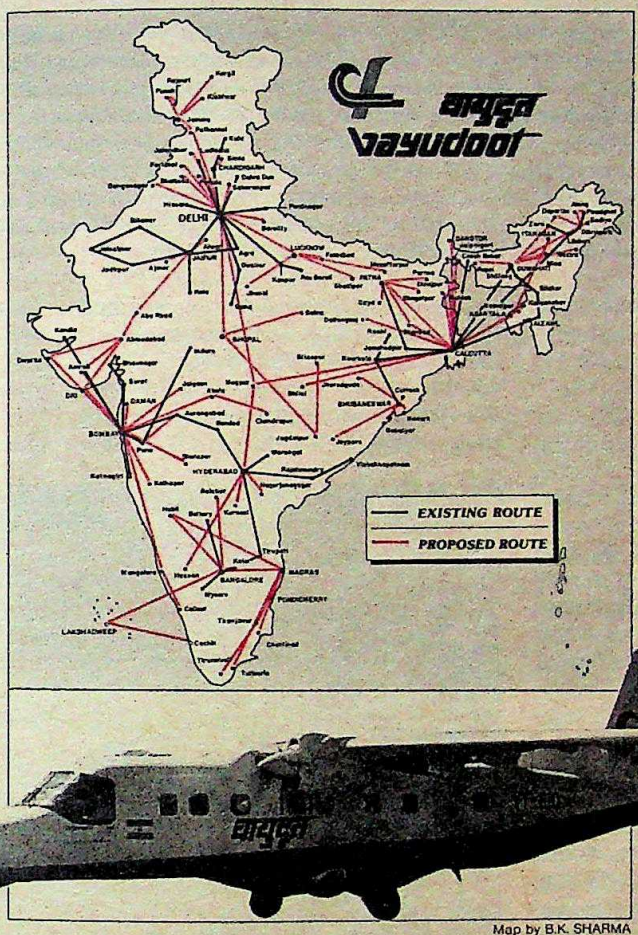
Vayudoot's desire to avoid expanding its staff infrastructure is understandable—it has so far managed to make a profit from the turboprops. Says Vardhan: "Our low overheads, which includes crew and maintenance costs come to only 5 per cent compared to around 30 per cent in IA. This is our saving grace." This enables Vayudoot to make money from the same turboprops which rang up a loss of Rs 13 crore in 1983-84 for IA. But the breakneck expansion that is on the cards may force Vayudoot to increase spending on infrastructure and enter the same overheads spiral which afflicts IA.

Nevertheless, this leaves IA with a problem of surplus staff. But an aviation specialist argued that this should be temporary: "The airline will be receiving a new type of aircraft, the Airbus A 320, in three years and it should pay attention to training its staff for it."

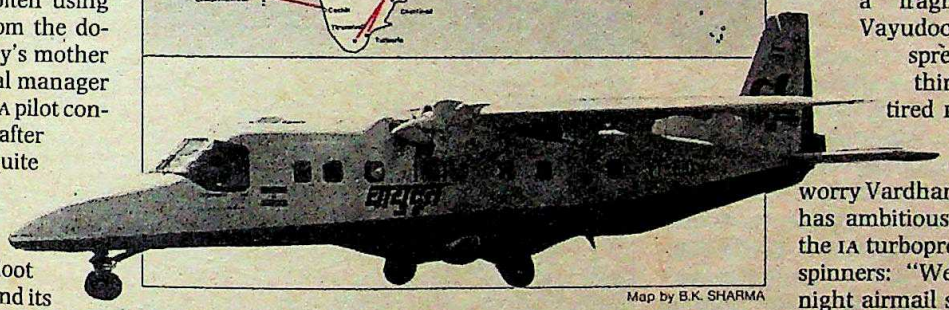
Vayudoot may be ecstatic about the turboprop windfall, but there are some doubts as to whether its skeleton organisation—with a staff strength of only 400—will be able to absorb the additional planes. "It's a fragile structure, Vayudoot has already spread itself quite thin," said a retired IA official. But doubts like these do not worry Vardhan, who already has ambitious plans to use the IA turboprops as money-spinners: "We will start a night airmail service for the P&T Department which will fetch us a profit of Rs 2 crore on a revenue of Rs 9 crore and also introduce the 40-seater turboprops on routes where traffic has grown." With that, he hopes his airline will make a "modest profit of Rs 1 crore in 1986-87", an improvement over the Rs 60 lakh loss in the current year.

Meanwhile, Vayudoot is already looking ahead of the present phase and setting up an aircraft evaluation committee to select turboprop replacements. The aircraft under consideration are the 50-seater Fokker F 50 (an extended version of the F 27), the 47-seater Aerospatiale ATR 42, the 62-seater British Aerospace ATP (an extended, re-engined version of the HS 748) and the 36-seater Saab Fairchild 340. If all these plans work out well, the 'third level airline' that had just five years ago been dismissed as unviable will have proved its critics completely wrong.

—RAMINDAR SINGH



Map by B.K. SHARMA



The Dornier 228: spreading wings

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HEROIN ADDICTION

Hitting New Highs

THE MYTH that drugs went out of fashion along with long hair and hippies has been unobtrusively exploded in India. An epidemic of heroin addiction is sweeping through the country. Even as psychiatrists and officials watch in horror, the plague has spread with amazing rapidity and hit almost every section of society—students, young professionals, taxi-drivers, petty vendors and even government officials. Hospitals in the major cities, ill-equipped to deal with the problem, have only now started recording the toll. The problem has acquired more dangerous dimensions with the large-scale influx of heroin into India leading to inexpensive availability. To analyse the dimensions of the problem Prinicipal Correspondent RAJ CHENGAPPA spent several days in Delhi and Bombay talking to a number of addicts, psychiatrists, social workers and drug enforcement officials, while bureau reports from Calcutta, Madras and Bangalore added a national perspective of the problem. His report:

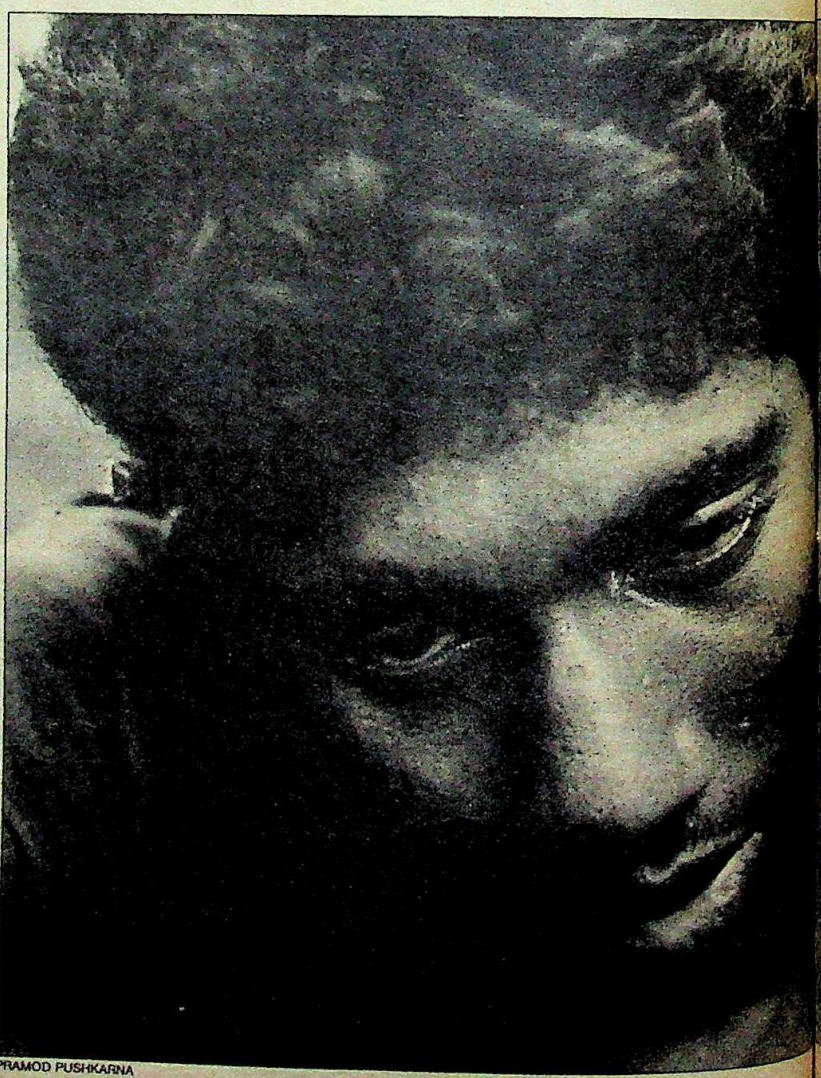
KANWAR Sandhu, an air force officer in Delhi, had no idea what the packet of brown chalklike powder lying under his 17-year-old son Prithi's mattress was. "Nothing dad, just some stuff," was the reply to his innocent query. Two months later Sandhu, leafing through an article in a magazine, realised what it was—an impure form of heroin called smack or brown sugar. By then Prithi had been taking it for two years and is now being treated in a private clinic for severe withdrawal symptoms of heroin addiction. Prithi will be missing his 12th standard examinations.

Nor did Narayan Das, 22, a fish monger in Calcutta's busy Park Circus Market know what smack was when a friend offered him a cigarette containing heroin almost a year ago. He just knew that it made him forget all his worries. A fortnight later when his friend stopped giving it to him his body ached, his eyes and nose watered and he felt listless. Only when he inhaled smack did relief come. Ever since then he has been hooked on to the drug and spends his daily earning of Rs 40 on smack. Says Narayan Das: "My mother often cries and my father begs me to leave it and take to liquor instead. But I just can't give it up."

When friends gave Ashok, 25, a Bombay taxi-driver, smack two years ago they told him it would give him "nasha" (intoxication). He likes it so much that he now spends Rs 70 daily on smack and when he ran out of money, he sold his taxi and even hawked his wife's mangalasutra. His brother brought him to K.E.M. General Hospital in a delirious state last fortnight.

Three years ago hardly anyone heard of smack addicts. But today it has become the number one problem concerning officials and psychiatrists combating drug addiction in the country. Bombay psychiatrist Anand Nadkarni of K.E.M. General Hospital, which treated 812 addicts last year, says: "Heroin addiction is spreading like some kind of guerrilla movement. It hasn't made a frontal attack but the deeper you go into the problem the more you realise how much it is entrenched in the country." Adds a worried C.B. Sujaya, joint secretary, Union Social Welfare Ministry: "Even before we could get down to doing something about the problem it has already assumed massive proportions."

Major hospitals in the country have already begun recording the toll:



PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

▸ In four major government hospitals in Delhi—which treated only 50 patients in 1982—almost 3,000 addicts came for treatment last year and 1,000 of them had to be refused admission because of lack of beds.

▸ Three government hospitals in Bombay treated 2,500 addicts last year. However, only 1,000 could be admitted for treatment.

▸ While in Calcutta an estimated 200 addicts sought treatment, reports from the neighbouring north-eastern states is perhaps the most worrying. In the state of Manipur alone, 256 people, many of them girls in their teens, had to undergo intensive treatment for smack addiction last year.

▸ The problem has spread even to the southern states and hospitals in Madras and Bangalore have treated over 200 addicts in the past year.

But these figures are only the tip of the iceberg because researchers estimate that only one out of every 10 addicts come for treatment. Police intelligence puts the number of addicts in the country at a conservative 1 lakh which is increasing at the rate of 15,000 every year and psychiatrists are already talking of a heroin plague sweeping the country. At the All India Institute of Medical Sciences (AIIMS), which treated a record 1,044 patients last year—up from 325 in the previous year—psychiatrist Davinder Mohan said dolefully: "What we are seeing is an epidemic that is growing in geometric progression. And it is still to peak."

The epidemic is not immediately apparent because it has no stereotype addicts—like the jeans-clad, long-haired hippie who symbolised the drug subculture in the West. In India heroin with its deadly addictive qualities has become the great leveller, enslaving students like Prithi, auto-rickshaw and taxi-drivers like Ashok and petty vendors like Narayan. It has not spared factory workers, young professionals, government officials and businessmen either.

Xavier, 19, has been taking heroin for the past three years. He dropped out of school and now works as a car mechanic to have his daily dosage of a gramme of smack costing Rs 40. He has been admitted to hospital several times but just cannot kick the heroin habit.

"It's like having one foot on a banana peel and the other in the grave. All I need is a push."

In Delhi and Bombay, where heroin addiction has reached serious levels, studies show that the problem has hit all sections uniformly. In Calcutta it is the lower income groups like petty shop owners, taxi-drivers and vendors who have been badly affected while students are now getting hooked on to the smack bug too. But in Madras it is mostly students who come for treatment. What is alarming is that a majority of the addicts coming for treatment are males in the age group of 16 to 25—in the prime of their youth. Trapped in heroin's acrid fumes, they have been reduced to the level of zombies willing to resort to anything, even crime to pay for their daily fix.

Unlike in the US where the heroin plague swept the country in the '60s as an avant garde phenomenon, psychiatrists are hard put to explain the dramatic rise in addiction levels. At G.B. Pant Hospital, New Delhi, which treated 910 addicts last year, psychiatrist G.C. Munjal has a simple answer: "Availability and low prices." Munjal has a point. In most major cities smack, the impure form of heroin, has become as easy to buy as an aspirin tablet.

IN DELHI'S congested Paharganj, almost every bylane has a hut where both men and women will sell a "quarter" (quarter gramme of smack) for Rs 15. The slums of Dhongri, Tardeo and Dharavi in Bombay have any number of pushers peddling drugs in the streets and the code word is either "powder" or "smack". Calcutta police raided a number of paan shops recently after it was rumoured that they were adding small quantities of brown sugar in zarda paans. Smack is openly sold in the streets of West Anna Nagar and First Line Beach in Madras and in Bangalore, the crowded bylanes of City and Russel Markets are the key centres.

Falling prices—from Rs 50 for 25 milligrammes two years ago to a low Rs 10 to Rs 15 now—is what attracted Shreekant Godbole, 30, a small restaurant owner in Bombay's dockside. Godbole, a heavy drinker, found that heroin was cheaper and more intoxicating than alcohol. An added advantage was that his breath did not smell and his parents couldn't easily detect his new addiction. Like Godbole a majority of those who tried heroin had no idea about its addictive potential or its harmful effects and psychiatrist L.P. Shah of K.E.M. Hospital says: "Most of them take to it innocently and are ignorant about its dangers."

But if smack is so freely and cheaply available it is mainly because India has become a major transit centre for heroin smuggling. Narcotics officials estimate that every year 3,000 kg to 5,000 kg are smuggled into India from Pakistan's North West Frontier Province through the porous borders of Punjab and Rajasthan and then smuggled out again to Europe from Bombay and Delhi. India's experience is beginning to match that of other transit countries which sooner or later became centres of high drug addiction. In 1980, Pakistan, one of the principal trafficking centres had no addicts.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Today it has five lakh. Sufficient warning for India which first 'discovered' smack barely four years ago.

However, not everyone is convinced that the heroin plague is caused mainly by availability and low prices—especially the poor. Shah's colleague Nadkarni, who treated 57 cases of slum children addicted to heroin, found that most of them exhibited a fierce independence unusual for their age.(see box) The parents were too busy slaving it out for a living to worry about their children, who anyway worked at various odd-jobs and had money to spend. With traditional social controls and values breaking down and exposed to an unusual degree of stress at a tender age, these children took to tobacco, alcohol and finally drugs like heroin in an attempt to lighten the load. The adult addicts seem to have grown up in a similar environment singularly bereft of hope and Nadkarni says: "This is the price we have to pay for urbanisation."

Sheikh Nawaz Khan, 27, of Calcutta whose dreams of becoming a photographer are slowly evaporating took to smack three years ago to kill "my boredom". Ever since then he has done a lot of jobs to support his addiction—like driving taxis, working on ships and even being a nightwatchman. His family has disowned him but Khan says:"I just can't live without smack and I have no money for treatment."

But among college students where a drug subculture always existed, the major reason for being hooked onto smack is, as psychiatrist Alan D'Souza of Bombay's J.J. Hospital puts it: "Intense peer group pressure." While in the '70s it was ganja, hashish and LSD that were the rage among students, in the '80s with the prices of heroin dropping to about that of a bottle of beer smack is the in-thing. "It has become fashionable for students to smoke heroin," laments Moonis Raza ,vice-chancellor of Delhi University.

Raza reports that heroin addiction is "acquiring serious proportions" in the more prestigious colleges in Delhi and the habit is beginning to trickle down to other colleges. Bombay University found that heroin addiction among students had become so acute that the authorities have formed a drug addiction cell to chalk out programmes to educate students about its ills and declared January 28 as anti-drug day. In Madras, student councillors estimate that at least 15 per cent of the students had tried smack at some time or the other and at least 7 per cent have become regulars.

One such victim is Rajiv, 22, a commerce student who used to smoke grass alongwith his friends and tried smack because it was easily available and, as he put it, to "feel elitist." Within a year he was so completely hooked that he had to drop out of college. Madras-based psychiatrist S. Vijayakumar says: "Initially they smoke in groups but later it becomes a totally individual addiction. Then their grades in college come plummeting down."

Most parents find out about their children's addiction to smack a good year after they first started smoking it and the discovery is also accidental—they find that the child suddenly shuns all company, borrows plenty of money and sometimes steals articles from the house. Sandhu, the air force officer, had no clue that Prithi was taking it because there seemed to be no obvious physical symptoms. He began to suspect something only when Prithi began to spend hours in the bathroom—a favourite smoking place for addicts.

"Most of them took to it without knowing its harmful effects."
DR I.-P. SHAH
K.E.M. Hospital, Bombay

But for others like Sunita, wife of autorickshaw-driver Devinder Kumar of west Delhi's Kirtinagar, the experience could be far more traumatic. Initially the only signs was that Kumar preferred to stay alone in his room all day and did not play with their two children. But things got worse when he stopped giving her money to run the house. Then he started selling her jewellery and finally sold his autorickshaw saying that he was not earning enough. He usually flew into a rage when Sunita protested. "It had reached such a stage that I wondered what was going to happen to my children and I wanted to commit suicide," she said. Fortunately her father-in-law intervened and Kumar was admitted to the Ram Manohar Lohia Hospital for treatment last fortnight.

So powerful is the craving for heroin that addicts stop at nothing to get their daily dose. Stan, a 19-year-old Bombay school drop out, steals coconuts from trees in neighbouring residential colonies and sells them to pay for his daily dose. He has already been arrested thrice for being in possession of drugs and been in prison for 10 days. Deepak, 24, a former Delhi export firm representative, shamefacedly remembers that he used to pilfer money from bus conductors bags.

Many of the addicts turn peddlars too like Mohammad Daoud, a taxi-driver who was arrested in January by the Bombay police for allegedly selling heroin. Daoud has been on heroin for the past two years and he started ped-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When he first took smack Ashwini Shukla, 25, a Delhi sales executive thought: "I wouldn't be dumb enough to get hooked on to this stuff." A year later he was borrowing from friends, selling his watch , his tape recorder and even his sweater to buy the stuff. His mother is disgusted with him. Ashwini,who lost his job recently,now says:"No one trusts me anymore. There is no where I can go for help."

ding the stuff after he found that his income of Rs 40 a day just could not meet his expensive habit as well as feed his five children. Jail authorities in Imphal, the capital of Manipur, have appointed a psychiatrist to their panel of medical specialists after two addicts—arrested for peddling drugs—committed suicide in jail because they could not get their daily dose. And in Delhi, police say that a third of the petty robberies in the capital are committed by smack addicts with chain-snatching being their specialty.

It is only when they run out of money, start borrowing and stealing or their health fails that most addicts seek medical help. Unfortunately what most of them do not realise is that facilities for treating addicts in the country are woefully inadequate. Treating an addict not only involves first putting the patient under two weeks of detoxification but also a follow up for at least six months to rehabilitate the patient completely.

Delhi's four government hospitals treating addicts have only 40 beds as a result a majority of the 3,000 addicts last year had to be treated as outpatients. Psychiatrist R.C. Jiloha of G.B. Pant Hospital which has only four beds to offer to the 350 addicts who came for treatment last year, says dejectedly: "What we do in hospitals is only count heads. There is no proper follow up and rehabilitation of patients and as a result relapse rates are high." In Bombay's J.J. Hospital, which gets an average of 100 patients a month, D'Souza reports that the relapse rate was a high 75 per cent.

More important than the detoxification programme is the rehabilitation therapy which involves not only giving time for the patient to recover physically but also hold group therapy sessions with other recovering addicts so that they could face the world again. Most addicts who have been on heroin for more than three years lose weight rapidly, suffer from congested lungs and heart trouble—all requiring prolonged intensive care which is simply not available in government hospitals.

Consequently, private de-addiction clinics have mushroomed especially in Delhi and Bombay. They are expensive and meant only for the middle and upper income groups. Most of them charge around Rs 2,000 for a course of treatment and then ask the patient to visit them once a week for counselling spread over six months. Each sitting costs Rs 50 and in all including medicines, an addict's family might have to spend around Rs 5,000 for getting him out of the habit.

Costs such as these are beyond the reach of most addicts and even for those who could afford it the chances of a complete cure are slim. Calcutta psychiatrist D.N. Nandy, who runs a de-addiction clinic, says: "The important factor is motivation and if there is a person—a psychiatrist, friend or a person of the opposite sex who empathises with the addict—the cure is almost automatic."

But that is easier said than done because most of the addicts have borrowed heavily from their parents and friends, stolen articles, broken off friendships and in general isolated themselves from society. Most of them have lost their jobs and few are willing to employ an ex-addict.

Looking for ways to tackle heroin addiction psychiatrists are beginning to stress the need for exclusive rehabilitation centres for smack addicts relying on former addicts as cousellors. One such centre was started two years ago by Sahara, a private voluntary organisation in Delhi's Greater Kailash Extension. The centre, run by social workers Neville and Elizabeth Selhore, admits addicts for a minimum period of six months charging them Rs 1,000 a month. Says Neville: "You won't find white coats and spotless corridors here. We don't treat our inmates as junkies. We treat them like friends and make them feel as if they belong. It is almost like home."The addicts are put on a regimen which includes exercises and group therapy under the guidance of former addicts and are taught to live a disciplined and responsible life.

While rehabilitation centres like Sahara are steps in the right direction, many more are needed to cope with the flood of addicts. The Union Government would have to be involved in a big way but so far it has done precious little to alleviate the problem. Its approach is more preventive than rehabilitation. In a belated move to study the magnitude of the problem, the Welfare Ministry has sponsored a survey in nine major cities in the country. While the results are likely to be out by summer, the Union Gov-

"What is lacking is a national effort to halt the trend."

DR D. MOHAN
AIIMS, New Delhi

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

 Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TEENAGE ADDICTION

Starting Young

AT THEIR age they should have been expending their energy in the playgrounds or the classroom. Instead Suresh Gangurde and his friend Anil Devpude, both 12 years old, spend their time lolling listlessly near their ramshackle huts in the slums of Ramabhainagar on the dusty Thane highway in Bombay. Their glazed eyes, emaciated frames and stunted growth tell their own pitiful story—for well over two years they had been addicted to smack and when they gave it up barely two months ago, the withdrawal effects nearly killed them and they had to be admitted to hospital.

They had been introduced to smack by an older boy working in one of the many illicit liquor stills in the slum. "It was a strange, peaceful experience," Anil recalls, "I forgot about everything and felt the world was a lovely place." They began buying the drug at Rs 5 a vial from Kishan Jhagde, 40, the local charas dealer. They were soon hooked onto the stuff and dropped out of school.

They are not the only ones. In Bombay's teeming slums and elsewhere across the country, reports and social research indicates the most frightening aspect of drug addiction—the abnormally large number of teenage addicts. Hospitals report that at least a quarter of the addicts coming for treatment to hospitals are in their teens. In Delhi psychiatrists G.C.Munjal and R.C.Jiloha of G.B. Pant Hospital, who made a study of adolescent drug addicts recently found that a disturbing 21 per cent of the total addicts who had come to the hospital for treatment were under 19 years of age with a staggering 40 per cent of them being school dropouts. Warns a worried Munjal: "It's a dangerous sign and it is likely to degenerate to more grave levels if the prevailing trend continues."

When Bal Varsha Prathisthan (BVP), a local social work organisation began work a year ago in Ramabhainagar it was shocked to find that more than 200 of the slumchildren were hooked on brown sugar and most of them had taken to petty crime to pay for their daily fix. A nearby transit camp offered mute testimony to their situation—houses in the camp had been stripped completely off its asbestos roofs, drainpipes, doors, windows and even water taps by boys from the slum to buy brown sugar. Addicts had also taken to pilfering goods from loaded trucks parked on the highway at night.

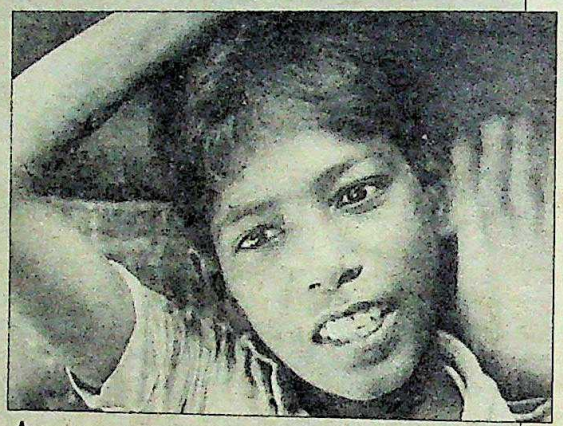
While initially Anil and Suresh did oddjobs for bootleggers to pay for their smack needs, later they took to petty crime. Says an unabashed Anil: "We used to steal whatever we could lay our hands on from shops—saris, groceries everything."

Other boys have equally traumatic tales to narrate. Gautam Yeshwante, 15, who lives nearby got hooked onto smack two years ago and dropped out of ninth standard. His father, a welder in a pipe company, tried to use force to stop him. "He tied me to a post and beat me black and blue in front of everyone. But I still couldn't give it up," says Gautam.

As a first step BVP decided to send the children for detoxification. Since November last 40 boys, including Anil, Suresh and Gautam, have been treated at the K.E.M. General Hospital nearby. Psychiatrist Anand Nadkarni of K.E.M. who treated them recalls: "Anil's withdrawal was severe. His blood sugar level dropped dangerously and he was close to death." Even when he was delirious Anil kept moving his fingers as if he was rolling a cigarette filled with smack—indicating how badly the boys had been hooked onto the stuff.

The boys now undergo group therapy sessions in a tin-roofed shack which also serves as a Bal Wadi. During these sessions addicts discuss their personal experiences, play indoor games and go on excursions. Both Anil and Suresh have been off smack since the last two months but the battle is far from won. Peddlars continue to sell drugs freely and the BVP has ample reason to fear danger to rehabilitation programmes. Says a dispirited BVP Executive Director Rajeev Kanitkar: "There very little hope for the child addicts. Many of them have lost their psychological balance and employers and schools are not willing to take them back. If these boys cannot find work or go back to school they will slip back again."

—M. RAHMAN



At 12 most children are bubbling with life but Suresh Gangurde of Ramabhainagar in Bombay looks glazed. Onto smack since he was 10, Devpude, son of a domestic servant soon dropped out of school. He took to stealing to get money to buy smack and almost died of severe withdrawal symptoms of heroin addiction.

"It's a dangerous sign and it's likely to degenerate."

DR G.C. MUNJAL
G.B. Pant Hospital

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ernment is taking measures to combat the menace. It has set up an inter-ministerial group consisting of officials from the health, welfare, education, finance and home departments to chalk out ways of checking the heroin spiral.

So far it has come up with very few answers. The Health Department had sent circulars too all government hospitals to convert a part of their psychiatric wards into de-addiction clinics but only few of them have taken heed because there are not enough beds for patients suffering from other afflictions. The Human Resources Development Ministry has asked schools and colleges all over the country to launch campaigns against drug abuse but has met with little success. The Welfare Ministry has sponsored seven de-addiction cells in Delhi where addicts can seek help.

But the government's efforts seem to be concentrated in Delhi where ministers are more liable to ask questions. Hardly any effort is being made to combat the problem in the other cities. Says Davinder Mohan: "Right now everyone seems to be only worried about keeping their own backyards neat. What is lacking is a national effort to halt the trend."

Fortunately prevention of drug peddling is at last getting the attention it deserves. In Delhi the police upgraded its narcotics cell by putting an assistant commissioner in charge alongwith six sub-inspectors and 10 constables. And action was not long in coming. Arrests of smack peddlars jumped up dramatically from 1,313 in 1984 to 2,559 last year. Bombay police too arrested 920 peddlars last year compared to a measly 250 in 1984. And in distant Imphal, the drug enforcement cell with a police superintendent in charge arrested 419 peddlars last year as compared to 79 in the previous year. But police all over catch only the small peddlars and not the big fish.

And even as measures tightened up, the peddlars became more professional and organised. A worried Delhi Police Commissioner Ved Marwah said: "There seems to be a growing nexus between narcotics and organised crime and terrorism." His worst fears about smack financing terrorism was confirmed when five months ago police arrested Jagdish Singh Narielwala, who is allegedly involved in the Delhi transistor bomb case, in a lodge in Paharganj whose owner is a well-known heroin smuggler. In Bombay Additional Commissioner of Police T.S. Sengarvel says: "Many of the traditional criminals like robbers and conmen are getting into the drug peddling business."

SYMPTOMS

Tell Tale Signs

NOTHING summarises the feeling heroin users get as the word smack itself. When its acrid fumes are inhaled either through a cigarette filter or by 'chasing' it—a fascinating technique by which powdered smack is placed on a silver foil and heated and its vapours inhaled through a pipe–the user feels an immediate "rush" of exhilaration. He may then go "on the nod" fluctuating between alertness and drowsiness.

Initially heroin gives the user a feeling of well being and even increases his sexual appetite. But within six months its ills start manifesting itself. There is a tremendous loss of weight and general weakness. Lungs could become congested, the heart lining is infected and gastric problems are frequent. Sexual appetite diminishes considerably. An overdose of heroin can lead to death.

It is difficult to detect a heroin addict except that the pupils of his eyes remain pinpoints even at night. But there are marked changes in his behaviour. An addict usual becomes an introvert, preferring to live in his own fantasy world, spends long times in bathrooms where usually most of them have their morning and evening doses and become restless and irritable when the effects of the drugs wear off.

While initially less than a quarter of a gramme could give a user the required high as tolerance grows he might need as much as one gramme. Once hooked a user has to have his daily dose otherwise he would suffer severe withdrawal symptoms. These symptoms, known as 'cold turkey', leads to the addicts' eyes watering, profuse sweating and severe body pain.

Treatment involves first detoxification by putting the patients on a week long regimen of tranquilisers to control the withdrawal symptoms. But the more crucial part is the follow up and rehabilitation because the craving for heroin can continue for as long as five years.

Psychiatrists are concerned and Delhi's Avdesh Sharma says: "If we don't cut down its availability then we would be just banging our heads on walls."

In a determined effort to curb peddling of smack in the country and check smuggling, the Central Government pushed through in record speed the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act last November. The long-awaited legislation strengthened the powers of enforcement agencies and introduced harsher penalties for drug traffickers.

While previously a convicted narcotics smuggler would get a maximum of three years imprisonment, under the new Act for the first offence itself he could incur a prison sentence of not less than 10 years up to a maximum of 20 years and a fine of Rs 1 lakh. For the second offence one could get upto 30 years. The Act has also given more powers to enforcement agencies like the Directorate of Revenue Intelligence (DRI), Customs and Excise Departments, Narcotics Commissioner and the Central Bureau of Investigation. Previously these agencies could only make arrests in exit points like ports and airports but under the new Act they can seize heroin and arrest offenders anywhere in country.

Already these measures have started paying dividends. In the past four months the various narcotics agencies have already seized 1,000 kg of heroin which is more than the total of 880 kg seized in the last three years. Much of this was contributed by the haul of 615 kg of heroin worth six crores made by the DRI from from an abandoned farmhouse in Talasari near Bombay in early January. It is now acknowledged as the world's largest ever and the DRI is thinking of submitting a claim to the Guinness Book of Records. But while seizures have risen dramatically, the enforcement agencies have not been able to arrest the big fish so far and till they do that there is unlikely to be any let up in the trafficking.

But among most officials combating drug trafficking, a sense of resignation about heroin has already set in. Says B.V.Kumar, DRI director-general: "We can probably curb heroin trafficking but we can't stop it altogether. We can only make it more difficult for smugglers to operate." And much the same thought is reflected by psychiatrist Davinder Mohan when he says: "The current steep rise of heroin may drop if checked but it would then reach a plateau and whether we like it or not heroin addiction is here to stay." And for India there couldn't be worse news.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA with bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UNITED KINGDOM

Making News

ONE of the most enduring images on television screens in Britain in recent weeks have been that of small knots of people gathered in the lancing wintry chill outside a barbed wire fortress protected by the police.

Night after night, viewers watched as blurred figures walked past the coils of barbed wire and crossed into 10-foot electronically controlled gates covered by swivelling security cameras. Police, supported by private security men, guard the entrance. There are ramps to block vehicles, searchlights, shadowy, half-visible men photographing visitors from an empty factory next door.

This is no high-powered East-West exchange of spies on the Berlin border. The men, hunched up against the drizzle, are journalists of The Times and The Sun entering their new high-tech plant branded "Fortress Wapping" or "Fort Murdoch". The protesters are printers—some of the 5,000 sacked by the Australian press baron Rupert Murdoch when he decided to move his four titles—The Times, The Sunday Times, The Sun and the News of The World—which constitute 35 per cent of Fleet Street's output—to his low-cost, high-tech east London citadel at Wapping signalling a revolution in Britain's print media.

However, the man actually responsible for destroying 80 years of Fleet Street tradition was not Murdoch but a newspaper proprietor named Eddy Shah, 42, whose audacious methods in defying the print unions showed the way for Murdoch.

Shah made national headlines in Britain three years ago when as proprietor of a small chain of newspapers in the North-West he fought, and won, a much-publicised battle with the hubristic unions. He showed Fleet Street's crusty and weak-kneed managements that there was a new way of dealing with arrogant unions. He also refused to join proprietors' associations. This month (March 4) Shah will launch his eagerly-awaited and aptly-named tabloid Today without traditional manning agreements with the unions—a launch that many predict will be one of the most far-reaching journalistic events in Britain.

Whether Today, priced at only 18 pence and in full colour, succeeds or fails, Shah has ensured that 1986 for Fleet Street is the year that will blow the clanking and often primitive national newspaper industry into the electronic age. The unions had tried to boycott Shah hoping to murder Today in the womb. But Shah ignored them and went to the electricians who offered him a single-union agreement.

The Guardian

Eddy Shah in his new plant with a dummy of his proposed tabloid

For a man who is one of the country's most talked about, little is known about his early past. Born in Cambridge, Eddy Shah's real name is Selim Jehane Shah. During his battles with the unions, Shah says the union bosses kept calling him Selim Jehane—"a tactic designed to make me sound like a dodgy trader".

Shah's father—Moochool Shah was a direct descendant of the First Aga Khan, Ali Shah. The First Aga Khan had revolted in 1838 against the Shah of Persia and had been subsequently chased out of Persia with his wife and family. He had helped the British General Charles Napier in Afghanistan and had been rewarded with asylum in India. Eddy Shah's grandfather opted for something more rewarding and became a surgeon. He went on to become the Dean of Grant Medical College in Bombay.

Shah's father worked for Associated Press of Pakistan and finally became a barrister. He married Hazel Strange—a daughter of a boat building family in Cambridge. Eddy Shah spent his initial childhood in India and then went on to Gordounstoun. He later worked for the BBC and Granada before he set up his own newspaper company in 1974.

Shah's Today is anticipated with excitement by readers and advertisers but with mounting palpitation by its competitors. Shah has laid down 13 governing principles for his staff and the paper. Most are unexceptional, a virtuous and seraphic guide to ethical journalism. Shah wants his paper to avoid sex and financial scandals that sensationalise and titillate. It will protect people from irresponsible intrusions into their privacy. It will not be influenced by extremists of the right or the left. Facts and comments will be kept separate. He wants to prove discriminating popular journalism can be lively. Shah's market research has discovered young readers aged 20-40 in social classes who would buy a middle-brow quality tabloid.

Whether these sterling, edifying qualities are attained is a moot point, but new technology does give Today a production edge over its competitors. As many as 21 of its 44 pages can be changed through the print-run so that late news will be included. Widespread use of colour especially in graphics and tables will give it a classy look. Foreign reporters are virtually non-existent with the paper relying on agencies and stringers. The staff of Today—1,500 journalists reportedly applied for 125 jobs—are young with the city editor just 38.

Shah himself has adopted a truculent air. He told reporters: "I have newspaper photographers following me around. Dossiers are being compiled on my board members. I have the establishment against me. Intimidation is the only language those people seem to understand. Why do they see me as a threat? I'm just bringing provincial technological know-how on to the national scene. The result will be to expand the newspaper market, not to reduce it."

—RAMESH CHANDRAN in London

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

2.1 kg of Pure Fun

VideoMovie

JVC

VHS C

AUTO FOCUS

- VHS-C compactness
- VHS compatibility
- Auto-Focus convenience

JVC's VideoMovie with auto-focus makes home video recording easy, exciting and really fun. No experience necessary. Just load a cassette, point, shoot and enjoy great VHS recordings of your family and friends right on television in full color, immediately after you record.

Everything you need is together in one single, lightweight (2.1 kg) unit.

But, best of all, VideoMovie recordings are made with 1/2" VHS tape, the most popular video system in the world. Recordings, with a cassette adapter, can be played back on any VHS recorder, so you can share them with your friends and family.

HR-D141EM VHS

VIDEO CASSETTE RECORDER

- PAL/MESECAM* dual-system recording and playback
- Multi-voltage adaptability: 110/127/220/240 V AC, 50/60 Hz
- Shuttle search, still and frame advance

*Applicable to the Middle East.

HR-D257MS VHS

VIDEO CASSETTE RECORDER

- PAL/SECAM/MESECAM*/NTSC 3.58/NTSC 4.43 5-system recording and playback with PAL/MESECAM built-in tuner
- Double-Azimuth 4-head (DA-4) system for field stills and flicker-free slow motion at 4 different speeds
- Automatic voltage switching to 110 – 240 V AC, 50/60 Hz

ONIDA

JVC Authorised Service Centres in India

NEW DELHI MONICA ELECTRONICS PVT. LTD. TEL. 632143, 636293, 631351
BOMBAY MIRC ELECTRONICS PVT. LTD. TEL. 6042134, 6321133, 6300228
CALCUTTA MONICA ELECTRONICS PVT. LTD. TEL. 265886
MADRAS MIRC ELECTRONICS PVT. LTD. TEL. 443331

COCHIN BIONIX TEL. 369422, 351595

JVC Authorised Distributors in the Middle East

UNITED ARAB EMIRATES OASIS ENTERPRISES DUBAI TEL. 283171
SAUDI ARABIA SAID EL-AJOU TRADING CORP. TEL. JEDDAH. 6609780, 6606456, 6606080, RIYADH. 4763039, 4763040, 4763044, AL-KHOBAR. 8641347
SULTANATE OF OMAN JUSBANI STORES, MUTTRAH. TEL. 772407, 734587, SALALAH. 460251
KUWAIT AL-ALAMIAH ELECTRONICS. TEL. 2414140, 2414141, 2414142,
QATAR NASIR BIN ABDULLAH & MOHD. SIDDIQ TRADING CO. DOHA. TEL. 321466, 424249
BAHRAIN GAJRIA ELECTRONICS W.L.L. TEL. 253453, 258396, 272477

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

"We're warming up for Rasna!"

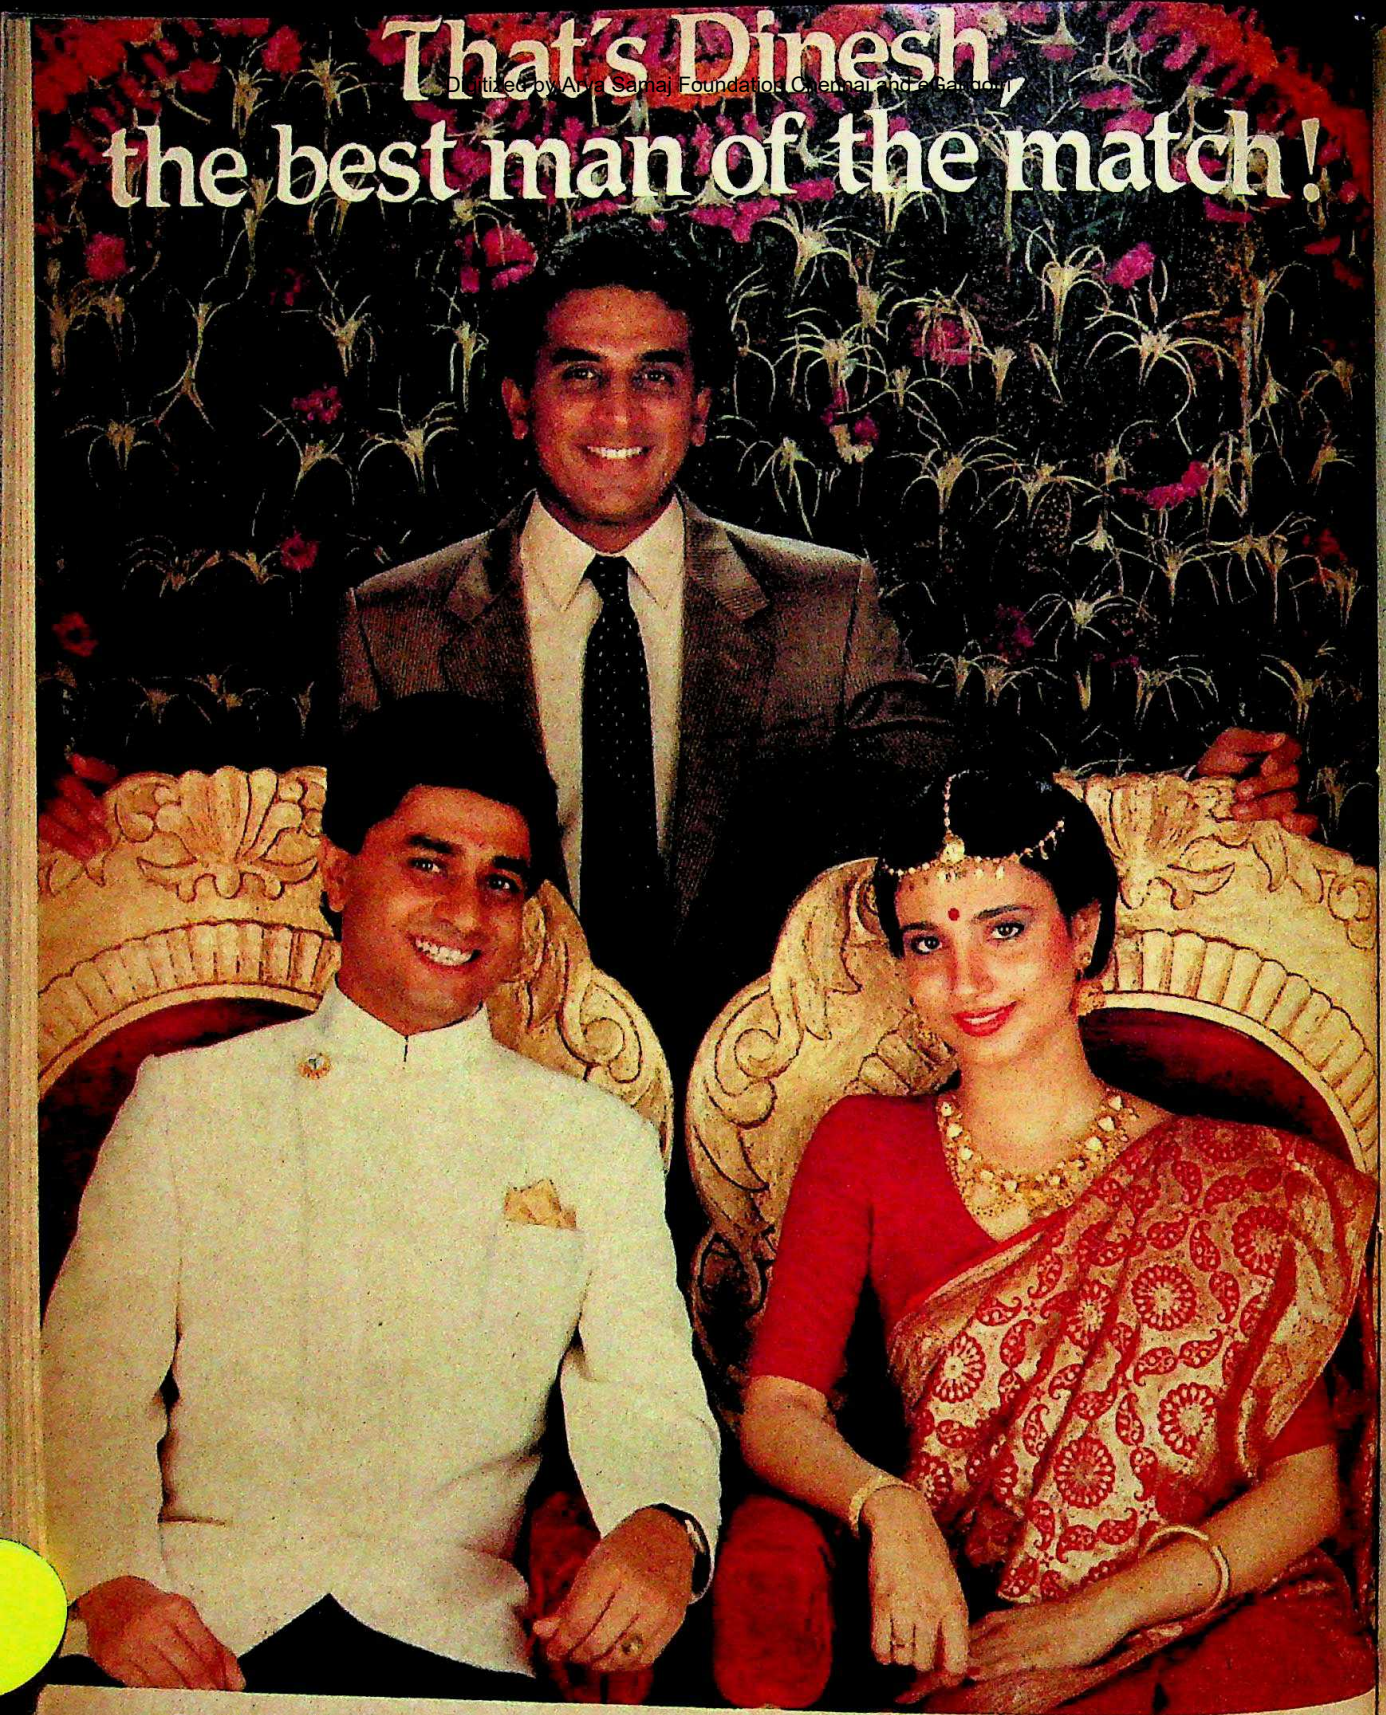
Mudra:A:Pl:2953

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

That's Dinesh, the best man of the match!



Sunil Gavaskar would settle for nothing less. Because ever since he got together with Dinesh Suitings, it's been one long and happy relationship.

Dinesh Suitings. Designs and shades to match the happy moments.

dinesh Suitings

Give you a distinct identity.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SRI LANKA

The Secret War

THE CURRENT joke doing the rounds in Colombo is a remark attributed to President Jayewardene. "I have had 43 years of practical experience in politics. Rajiv Gandhi is not yet 43 years old." Despite the obvious truth of that statement, it has now acquired a macabre mien. While Colombo continues to keep stalling New Delhi on its supposed quest for peace proposals and a political solution to Sri Lanka's ethnic problem, the septuagenarian Sri Lankan President's security forces are already halfway through implementing a military solution in the eastern province which has left hundreds of innocent civilians dead and an equal number missing.

Jayewardene's secret war was launched last November when the Sri Lankan security forces escalated their offensive in the eastern province against Tamil militants, with one crucial difference—this time the targets were all Tamil youths between the ages of 14 and 40. The most visible scars of the new assault are to be seen in the small, decrepit town of Batticoloa, which today resembles a war zone with trenches dotting the main roads and machine gun emplacements at street corners.

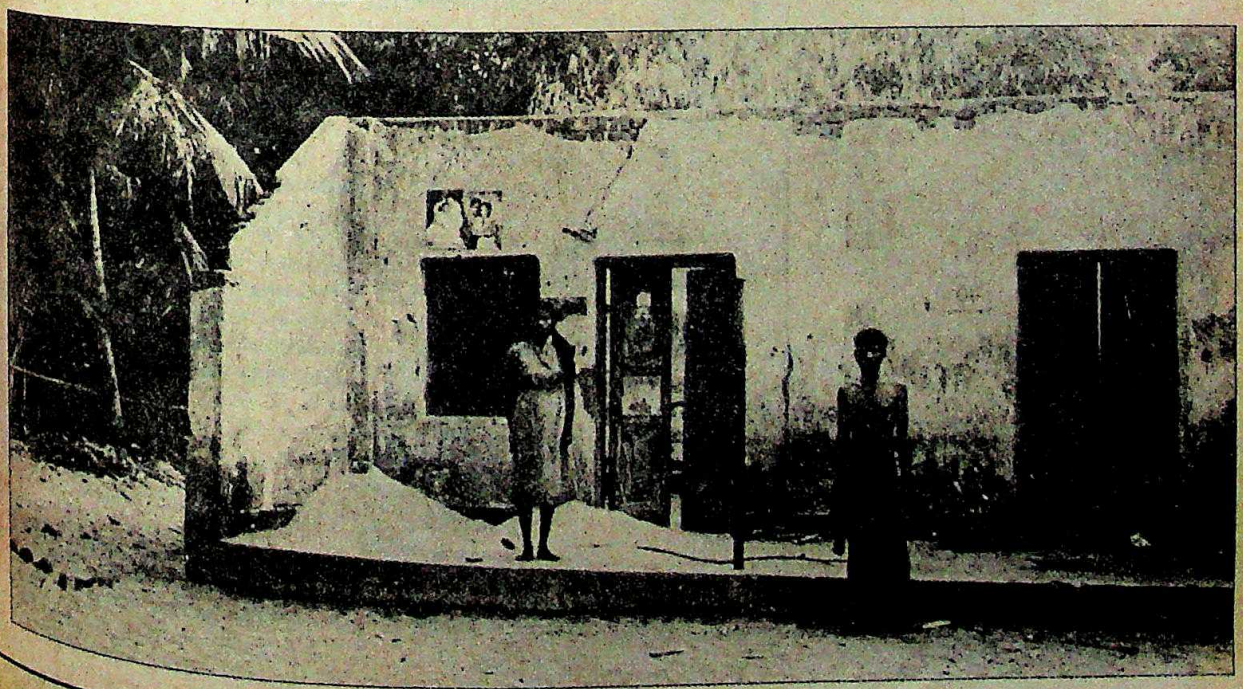
It is clearly a one-sided encounter. Under the state-of-emergency facade, all Tamil houses in the vicinity of the air base have been bulldozed overnight and their occupants herded into shacks. They were given compensation of a niggardly Rs 2,000 even though most of the houses were worth several hundred thousand Sri Lankan rupees. Further, all garden walls in the town have been demolished on the excuse that they could provide potential cover for an ambush, and replaced with barbed wire.

The body of schoolboy Jude (right); and houses gutted in Batticoloa: visible scars

Simultaneously, the security forces have launched a two-pronged offensive that is nothing short of barbaric. Any retaliation by Tamil militant forces is a signal for a sweeping search and cordon operation in the area. Security forces cordon off the area and swarm through all the houses in the vicinity and pick up any Tamil who is in the 14-40 age group.

The sequel is described in the words of a government employee from Trincomalee: "They took us to the army camp and made us stand in a queue according to age and occupation. Then a man with a sack on his head who they said was an informer but looked like a member of the security forces pointed to youngsters who were made to stand in a separate line. One of them was my nephew who had just finished his studies at a technological college and obtained a job with a Japanese firm. They said he was a terrorist and they were taken away to the detention centre at Boosa."

What happens there is anybody's guess. There is not a single family in the eastern province which has not had a brother, son or husband taken away to the detention centres. Sam Thambimuthu, head of the citizen's committee in Batticoloa, says that an average of two or three women come to him every day to report a missing relative in the Batticoloa area alone. "We

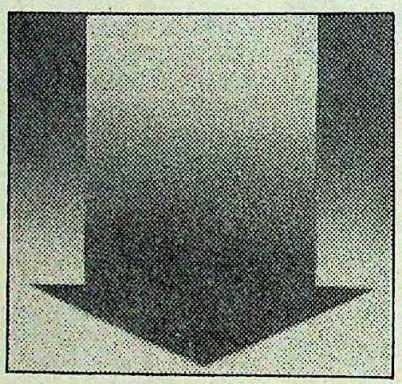


CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For the first time in the country, ten years ago, Polyspin thought of a better idea – to pack cement in HDPE woven

Silver Sacks



Ten years ago, Polyspin introduced its HDPE woven Silver Sacks, undoubtedly a superior alternative to conventional packing materials.

Today, they're used to pack a number of products: cement, fertilisers, chemicals and even food grains.

Polyspin HDPE woven Silver Sacks, your guarantee of safe packing.

Silver Sacks

